The Court-Party, who were for preſerving the old Standard, urg'd, after Mr. Locke, That the Worth of Money was relative, and to be rated by the Meaſure of ſuch Goods, Labour, Advice, Skill, or other Aſſiſtances as could be purchaſed from another by our parting with it: That among People that liv'd under different Municipal Laws, it was intrinſic, and conſiſted in its Weight and Fineneſs: That common Conſent had given it this Value, for the common Conveniency of ſupplying one another's Words: That the Weight and Fineneſs was the only Worth that other Nations regarded in our Coin, as we in theirs; A. D. 1695. all Money being between Subjects of different Governments, of no greater Value, excepting the Workmanſhip, than ſo many Pieces of uncoin'd Bullion: That, therefore, ſhould our Standard be alter'd, we ſhould ſtill be upon the ſame Foot with our Neighbours: For if we were to pay them for their Goods, or exchange our Money with theirs, whatever Denomination we gave our Money, they would in their Change ever reduce it to an Equality with theirs, and proportion the Quantity and Goodneſs of their Commodities, to the Weight and Fineneſs of the Money they were to receive for them; ſo that, in Reſpect of our Foreign Commerce, there was no Reaſon to alter our Standard. At Home, they ſaid, That if the Standard was raiſed, great Confuſions would attend it; the Landlord would be defrauded of a great Part of his Rents, and the Creditor of his Debts: That the Seaman and the Soldier would be wrong'd in their Pay, and many the like Injuries and Inconveniencies would happen: That it was no Anſwer to ſay, they might buy as much Goods and Conveniencies of Life with this Coin, rais'd above its Standard, as they could before; becauſe, by Degrees, the Seller would infallibly raiſe the Price of his Goods, in Proportion to the new rais'd Standard; and that of this there was an Inſtance before them, all Commodities being greatly rais'd in their Price, while Guineas were paid for Thirty Shillings: That whereas it was alledg'd, That the Price of Bullion was riſen to ſix Shillings and three Pence, and therefore the Standard of the Silver Coin ought to be rais'd likewiſe: It was reply'd, That it was a thing impoſſible that the Price of Silver could riſe and fall in reſpect of itſelf; that it was an unchangeable Truth, than which no mathematical Demonſtration could be clearer, that an Ounce of Silver would ever be worth another Ounce of the ſame Fineneſs, and no more; allowing ſome inconſiderable Diſparity upon the Account of the Coin, if one Ounce be in Money, and the other Ounce in Bullion. That 'twas true, indeed, that the People commonly gave ſix Shillings and three Pence for an Ounce of Bullion; but that they gave only clipt Pieces, that had no more than the Sound of Shillings and Pence, but were by no means the Things themſelves; that is, they were not the Standard-Shillings of due Weight and Fineneſs, and were no more ſo in the juſt Senſe of the Word, than an Ell is an Ell, when the Third Part of it is cut off: That the Caſe was ſo plain, that when they demanded of thoſe that affirm'd an Ounce of Bullion was worth ſix Shillings and three Pence, whether they meant ſix mill'd Shillings and three Pence, they knew not what to reply; for this Alteration of the Value of Bullion, was meerly in Relation to diminiſh'd Money: And to make it yet more evident, they urg'd, it was then Matter of Fact, that after the Rate of five Shillings and two Pence of new mill'd Money per Ounce, they could buy as much Bullion as they pleas'd; whilſt thoſe who bought it with clipt

A. D. 1695. clipt Pieces, paid six Shillings and three Pence. That whereas it was urg'd, That the raising the Standard would prevent the Exportation of Money, it was answer'd, That there was no other way possible to keep our Money at Home, than by Out-trading our Neighbours; that is, by sending them more Commodities, or of greater Value than those we receiv'd from them: For if upon the Balance we were found in their Debt, there was no way left but to pay it in Coin or Bullion. And that, therefore, what nominal Value soever we gave our Coin, we should be oblig'd to send it Abroad, if our Exports would not pay our Debts at the Rates, and according to the Standard of foreign Markets: And that as to all the other Arguments for raising the Standard, they would fall to the Ground, in case these two, on which the rest were built, had no reasonable Foundation.

A Recoinage voted.

And these were the Arguments that prevail'd: For upon the Issue it appear'd to be the Sense of the Committee, That the clipp'd Money should be re-coin'd, according to the establish'd Standard of the Mint, both as to Weight and Fineness: And that the Loss upon such clipp'd Money to the Revenue, should be borne by the Public.

Other Resolution in relation to the clipp'd Money.

In consideration also of the Inconveniencies which were likely to be the Result of this Measure, by an Interruption of Payments and of Commerce, and that the Operation might not be so sudden and violent as to produce a total Stagnation, the Committee farther resolv'd, 1. That a Day be appointed, after which no clipp'd Crowns or Half-Crowns, as also any Money clipp'd within the Ring whatsoever, should be allow'd in payment or to pass, except only to the Collectors of his Majesty's Revenues and Taxes, or upon Loans or Payments into the Exchequer. 2. That a Day be appointed after which no clipp'd Money, of any sort, should pass in any Payment whatsoever. 3. That a Day be appointed for all Persons to bring in their clipp'd Money, to be recoin'd into mill'd Money, after which no Recompence should be made for the same. A. D. 1695.

Address for a Proclamation thereon.

On the (c) 10th of December these Resolutions were reported to the House, and agreed to: On the 14th the Form of an Address to his Majesty to issue a Royal Proclamation, agreeable to the said Resolutions, was also reported by Mr. Montagu, and agreed to: On the 17th, the same Gentleman inform'd the House, That his Majesty would issue the Proclamation desir'd with all convenient Speed: And on the 19th it was issued accordingly. But such was the Effect, that what with the Fears of some, and the ill Practices of others, all Payments were for some

(c) The same Day the House having taken into consideration, That the maintaining an Army Abroad occasion'd the Exportation of the Coin, which could not be prevented but by supplying the said Army with Necessaries out of this Kingdom, order'd an Address to this Effect, "That his Majesty would be pleas'd to procure, that all Commodities and Provisions that should be transported from England for the Use of the Forces in his Majesty's Pay Abroad, might be exempted from any Duty or Excise throughout the Spanish and united Netherlands." To which the King answer'd, "That what the Commons desir'd, had been done in a great Measure for several Years; and that he would see what could be farther done in it." But in the Interstice against the Dutch, this Matter is treated as follows.

"And the tyrannous Projects and Designs which King William hath contrived and harboureth in relation to these Kingdoms, as well as our own Madness and Folly in concurring and co-operating to promote them, are equally manifest, and both of them apparently evident by this; namely, That even upon the Supposition that it was needful and just to begin, continue and uphold this War: Yet much of that Money which hath been sent Abroad from hence, to subsist and pay our Troops, might, tho' a very small Care, and friendly Conduct of the Prince of Orange in our Behalf, and tho' the least Measure of Discretion, Wisdom, Justice, Equity and Compassion of those Assemblies stiled our Parliaments to the Kingdom, have been preserv'd in the Nation, and have remained to circulate among ourselves for the Support and Increase of our Manufacture, and for the Protection and Enlargement of our Trade and Navigation: And the Ways, Means, and Methods in and by which it might have been done, are both so various and plain, That had there not been a Conjunction of Malice in King William, and of Treachery in our Senators towards England, it would not have escap'd the being undertaken, pursued, and effected long ago: For why might not we with as much Ease, and with more Justice, have carried all the Provisions from hence for the subsisting the Confederate Army, or at least our own Troops, and those of other Nations under our Pay, as that the Dutch should have the Privilege of furnishing it, and to be encourag'd, as well as suffer'd, to go away with the Gain? Nor can any other Reason be assign'd of the Conduct we have been under in this Matter, but that William intends to bring us first to Beggary, and then into Thraldom; and that too many amongst ourselves are, thro' Folly and Knavery, willing both to assist and justify him in the effecting of it. Had we not Ships enough (I am sure we had before we lost so many thousands of them, as we have done since the Revolution, and the Commencement of this War, which was the unhappy Off-spring of it) to have carried over to Flanders our Grain, Butter and Cheese, Iron, Bread, and all Things else that are necessary unto, or consumable by an Army, but that the buying of all those here, and the transporting them thither, should, in a manner, be given up and entirely consign'd into the Hands of the Dutch? Whence we are justly become the Derision and Contempt of the World, that being stor'd and furnish'd (without purchasing of other Nations) with all the Productions either of Art or Nature that an Army can need or use, and the Dutch having scarce any thing of their own Growth, and little of their own Manufactures, to answer the Occasions and Exigences of so vast a military Body; yet that they should engross to themselves the supplying them with all they want, and we not only tamely connive at it, but like People who have lost their Senses, and forfeited their Understandings, as well as abandon'd the Care of their Country, do approve it. With what Facility might it have been disputed and provided for, at our first Entrance into the Confederacy, or retriev'd and recover'd to us since, upon renewing of our Alliances with those whom we are become engag'd to assist in this War, that all those Supplies necessary for Troops which England could afford, should be apply'd to that End; and that as they should be transported by none but ourselves, so they should be expended and laid out not only upon our own Troops, towards the saving the Remission of Money, but taken off from us, and accepted by our Allies in lieu of those vast Sums we have disbursed upon them: Nor will ever England vindicate itself from the Dishonour and Ignominy brought upon it, in that, during all this time wherein we have been waiting our Men and Treasure to defend the Dutch Barrier, and protect the Provinces of others, and to make Conquests for them, we should never have contracted for a Port, where we might unload what we pleas'd towards the premis'd Use and Ends, without being liable to the Payment of Customs, or any other Duties of that kind which use to be exacted; which the present House of Commons seems to be sensible of by their Vote of December 10. But tho' the said Vote doth sufficiently intimate their Sense of King William's Infidelity, as to the Trust reposed in him under the Quality and Stile of King of England, and his Treachery to this Nation, in not having contracted and stipulated with those Allies for the forementioned Privilege and Immunity; yet the Treaties between him and these Confederates being already consented and ratify'd, without the Mention or Specification of any such Freedom and Advantage to be allow'd us; all the Effect and Operation which this Vote of the House of Commons can have, is to proclaim them to be pragmatical, weak and insolent, in assuming a Power and Authority over the Rights of foreign Princes and States; and that contrary unto, as well as without Regard to Articles, adjusted between King William and those States in the fresh Alliances which have been lately renewed, made and ratified. Nor can any thing now, after the aforesaid Vote, preserve the House of Commons from the

A. D. 1695. some time at a Stand, and the whole Community wore a Face of Confuſion. The [Account of the Proceedings of the Commons in Relation to the Recoinage.] Enemies of the Recoinage gave out, That this was owing to the ſhortneſs of the Time aſſign'd in the Proclamation for the Continuance of the old Currency; and made Mr. Montagu, in particular, anſwerable for it; ſuggeſting, That it had been done by his Advice againſt the Opinion of the major Part of the Council: But the Advocates for that Miniſter maintain, notwithſtanding, That the Advice was good, and for the Honour of him who gave it; It being evident, ſay they, That the more ſpeedily the clipp'd Money was call'd in, the ſooner good Money would be current, without Danger of Diminution: And had the Meaſure been permitted to operate, according to its natural Courſe, no doubt the whole Effect would have been much ſooner obtain'd, and the Shock would have been ſcarce perceptible.

Confuſion it caus'd.

[Reflections on a ſcandalous Libel.]

But the Truth of the Caſe ſeems to have been this: From the time that the Coinage was taken into Conſideration, only the lighteſt and baſeſt Species had been current; and theſe the People had been forward enough to part with for Cuſtoms, Exciſes, and other public Demands: But when theſe Demands were ſatisfy'd, and that Vein of Circulation began to be exhauſted, either out of a Diſtruſt of the Government, (which to thoſe who recollected the Bankers Affair in the Reign of Charles II. was but too natural) or elſe in conſequence of wicked Combinations, they lock'd up all the reſt, and by an almoſt national Selfiſhneſs brought the Nation into the utmoſt Danger.

The Malcontents, in the mean while, were not backward to aggravate the Ferment, by all the Artifices in their Power; and it muſt be own'd, that without uncommon Firmneſs, and uncommon Addreſs, it would not have been poſſible for the Miniſters to have got the Better of the Prejudices and Clamours of their Opponents; which however they were not able to do at once, without departing, in ſome Things, from their own better Reaſon and Judgment.

Miniſters forc'd to depart from many Points.

Thus after the Houſe had receiv'd, conſider'd, amended, and paſs'd a Bill which the Chancellor of the Exchequer had brought in for regulating the Coinage, and ſent it up to the Lords, and the Houſe had come to a Reſolution to raiſe 1,200,000 l. for making good the Loſs on the clipp'd Money by a Duty on Glaſs-windows, the Apprehenſions of the Public were thought worthy the Attention of the Legiſlature; and the Force of Reaſon and Argument having been vainly try'd for ſeveral Days together, to bring the Majority to their Opinion, they were forc'd to give way to the following Reſolutions, 1. That the Recompence for ſupplying the Deficiency of clipp'd Money ſhould extend to all clipp'd Money which was Silver, altho' of a coarſer Alloy than the Standard. 2. That the Collectors and Receivers of his Majeſty's Aids and Revenues, be enjoin'd to receive all ſuch Monies. 3. That a Reward of five Pounds per Cent. be given to all ſuch Perſons as ſhould bring in either mill'd or broad unclipp'd Money, to be apply'd in Exchange of the clipp'd Money throughout the Kingdom. 4. That a Reward alſo of three Pence per Ounce be given to all Perſons who ſhould bring in wrought Plate to the Mint to be recoin'd. 5. That for the ſooner bringing in the clipp'd Money to be recoin'd, any Perſons might pay in their whole next Year's Tax of four Shillings in the Pound in the ſaid clipp'd Money, at one convenient time to be appointed for that Purpoſe. 6. That Commiſſioners be appointed in every County to pay and diſtribute the mill'd and broad unclipp'd Money, and the new coin'd Money, and to receive the clipp'd Money. A. D. 1695-5.

On the 9th of January theſe Reſolutions were report.d; and the ſame Day a Committee was appointed to prepare and bring in a Bill agreeable thereto. 1695-6.

On the 21ſt this Bill was read a ſecond time, and committed to a Committee of the whole Houſe: The Malcontents ſeem'd to have got the Direction into their own Hands: And the Miniſters, in hope to gain time, or make a Diverſion, were forc'd to move, That it might be an Inſtruction to the ſaid Committee to conſider the Price of Guineas, which alſo paſs'd in the Negative.

Now, therefore, if ever, all the Arts of Government were allowable, to moderate that Violence which, in the wrong Place, threaten'd to bear down all before it: Theſe they had recourſe to; and by the Aſſiſtance of them, made a Shift to poſtpone the Committee for ſeveral Days. And here it is fit to remember, that the Lords having taken the Coinage Bill into conſideration, thought fit to make two remarkable Amendments to it, viz. 1. That the Deficiencies of all clipp'd or diminiſh'd Money might be aſcertain'd in order to the making them good at the public Charge. And, 2. That after the 2d of February until the End of the next Seſſion, it ſhould be lawful to export any coin'd Money, without paying any Cuſtoms or Duties for the ſame, on making due Entries thereof, as of other Merchandizes.

Have no Reſource but to ſuſpend the Committee.

Amendments made by the Lords to the Coinage Bill.

With theſe Amendments the Bill was return'd to the Commons, who refus'd to admit them: And to avoid the Formality of giving Reaſons, as alſo the Cavils which Conferences might produce, dropt the Bill, and brought in another without the ſaid Clauſes, which they paſs'd and ſent up to the Lords; where they were again propos'd by thoſe who not admitted by the Commons.

---

the Deriſion, Scorn and Contempt of Mankind, but their declaring thoſe Alliances to have been contracted and confirmed to the Prejudice of England, and therefore not to be ſupported by any Taxes to be levy'd upon the Subjects of this Kingdom: And that the ſaid Houſe will grant no Money towards the Confederacy, till ſuch other Agreements are made and enter'd into between this Crown and thoſe neighbouring States which may correſpond with, and come up to the Opinion of the ſaid Houſe, as they have declar'd it in the foreſaid Vote; and by the Printing thereof they have publiſh'd it to the World, as the unanimous Opinion and Judgment of the Repreſentative Body of the whole Commons of England. Encroachments and Depredations, p. 41, 42, 43.

A. D. 1695-6. who had carry'd them before: But without Effect: For the Question being put on each Head, both were severally over-rul'd; on which occasion the Lords Rochester, Marlborough, Kingston, and Clifford, and the Bishop of London enter'd their Dissent to the first for the following Reason.

Two Protests entered.

"Because we conceive, that tho' in the Bill for new regulating the Coin of this Kingdom, the Commons have taken Care to make good the Deficiencies of such clipp'd Monies only, as were to be paid to the King on the Account of his Majesty's Revenues or Taxes, it was agreeable to common Equity and Honesty, that Provision should be made to supply the Deficiencies of all other clipp'd Money whatsoever that were to pass in Payments among the Subjects of this Kingdom; and therefore we could not consent to the leaving out this Clause that had been added to the Bill by the Lords, which had so impartially taken care of the Benefit and Advantage of his Subject in general, so much for the Honour and Justice of the House of Peers." And to the Latter, the Lords Rochester and Marlborough only for this. "Because we conceive it inconsistent with the Rules of common Prudence, when the Bill for new regulating the Coin of this Kingdom provides, That all the clipp'd Money should be re-coin'd up to the old Standard of the Mint, there should not be a Liberty granted by Law to export the Coin of this Kingdom, whilst the Occasion lasts of supporting so great an Expence for the Armies Abroad; and so long as the Exportation of Bullion is permitted, and that of Coin prohibited, it seems to us undeniable, that the Coin must be melted down again into Bullion, which, we conceive, will be more prejudicial to the Nation, and not so easy to be drawn back by a Balance of Trade, as if that Wealth were preserv'd in the Coin of this Kingdom."

Bills pass'd.

On the 21st of January this Bill receiv'd the Royal Assent; as did also another for enlarging the Time for purchasing Annuities, and for continuing the Duties formerly charg'd on low Wines, without any other Appropriation than a general one, for the carrying on the War against France: And as both these might be call'd Court Laws, so they were balanc'd by two others, which profess'd to regard only the Safety and Interest of the Subject: The first was the Bill of Trials, in the Preamble of which it is declar'd, "That nothing is more just and reasonable than that Persons prosecuted for High-Treason, and Misprision of Treason, whereby the Liberties, Lives, Honour, Estate, Blood and Posterity of the Subjects might be lost and destroy'd, should be justly and equally try'd; and that Persons accus'd as Offenders therein, should not be debarr'd of all [for any, it must be understood] just and equal Means for Defence of their Innocency in such Cases." And the Second was call'd, An Act for preventing Charge and Expence in Elections of Members to serve in Parliament; but was apparently levell'd against undue Means of procuring Elections: For the Preamble runs in these emphatical Words, Whereas grievous Complaints are made, and manifestly appear to be true, in the Kingdom, of undue Elections of Members to Parliament by excessive and exorbitant Expences, contrary to the Laws, and in Violation of the Freedom due to the Election of Representatives for the Commons of England in Parliament, to the great Scandal of the Kingdom, dishonourable and, may be, destructive to the Constitution of Parliaments, Be it enacted, &c. And by the enacting Clauses it is provided, That the giving, or promising to give, directly or indirectly, any Present, Reward, or Entertainment, as a Consideration for any Man's Vote, such Person should be held incapable to sit, and his Return void. A. D. 1695-4.

Preamble to the Bill of Trials.

And to prevent mercenary Elections.

At this Crisis also another notable Affair, which personally affected the King (and which for that Reason, we must suppose, is not so much as mention'd by Bishop Burnet) was brought before the House of Commons, and met with such a Reception, both within Doors and without, as shew'd the Popularity he had boasted of in his Speech, to be not over-deeply founded.

A Grant of the Revenues of Wales to Lord Portland.

The Earl of Portland, his Majesty's Favourite, had obtain'd a Grant of the Lordships of Denbigh, Bromfield, Yale, &c. in the County of Denbigh, to him and his Heirs for ever: And his Majesty, before he went last abroad, had order'd the Lords of his Treasury to make out a Warrant accordingly.

Of this Grant the Gentlemen of Denbighshire had receiv'd early Intelligence; and while the Warrant was yet depending, resolv'd to oppose it, thorough all the Offices, with all the Vigour in their Power.

Oppos'd by several Welsh Gentlemen.

The Names of these Gentlemen were, Sir Thomas Grosvenor, Sir Richard Middleton, Sir John Conway, Sir Robert Cotton, Sir William Williams, Sir Roger Pulleston, Edward Vaughan, Edward Brereton, and Robert Price: And as to the Effect of this Opposition, it was, perhaps, as great as they could reasonably expect, in a Case of so much Delicacy, Indeed, the Lords of the Treasury thought fit to pass the Docket to the Privy-Seal, a Month before they granted the Petitioners a Hearing; and even then they took care to have Mr. Secretary Trumbal present, for fear it might be thought they were any way wanting in their Observance of his Majesty's Royal Will and Pleasure, or any way officious in disappointing his Favourite's Purpose.

Lord Godolphin also ask'd the Petitioners, Whether Queen Elizabeth had not made the like Grant to Robert Earl of Leicester? By which Question he meant to insinuate, That there was a Precedent in point to authorise the very Thing they complain'd of: But Sir Robert Cotton making answer, That her Grant was limited to the Lordship of Denbigh only: That the Subjects of those Parts were so aggriev'd by it, that they had recourse to Arms; among whom were several of his own Family, who were hang'd for stepping beside the Laws and undertaking to right themselves: That notwithstanding this severe Example, the Earl was glad to compound the Quarrel, and resign his Grant, &c. His Lordship acknowledg'd, "They had offer'd many

A. D. 1695-6. ny weighty Reaſons, and ſaid, he would not fail to repreſent them to his Majeſty."

The Lord Privy-Seal (Pembroke) having alſo given them a candid and patient Hearing, made them the like Promiſe; and, as it is preſum'd, was as good as his Word: For the Affair was afterwards ſuffer'd to lye dormant: But not being recall'd in form, the Petitioners were induc'd to make their Appeal by a like Petition to Parliament, which was introduc'd by Mr. Price, with a Speech, afterwards (d) printed, that was equally bold and bitter: For having premis'd, That the Petitioners were not actuated by their own Intereſt, but the Honour of the Crown, and the Welfare of the Nation, he proceeded to ſay, "That if he could conceive that theſe could be maintain'd by a poor landleſs Crown, and a miſerable neceſſitous People, he ſhould conclude the King was well adviſ'd in granting away all the Revenues of the Crown; and that both his Government and his People would be ſafeſt when they had little or nothing left; and that, as on the contrary, the Seperation of the Revenues from the Crown had, in all Ages, been the Means of rendering the Crown precarious, the Petitioners, with a dutiful Deference to his Majeſty, had, in order to prevent it, made this neceſſary Repreſentation to the Wiſdom of Parliament."

Their Petition brought into a Parliament.

A bold and bitter Speech thereon.

He then proceeded to open the Caſe; ſaid, The whole Grant comprehended not only the three Lordſhips, but alſo a farther Extent of Land to the Value of near 3000*l.* a Year: That the Amount of the Whole was at leaſt 100,000*l.* That the reſerv'd Rent was but 6*s.* and 8*d.* a Year: That part of this Revenue having been granted away in the Fourth of Queen Elizabeth, and that Grant having created great Diſturbances, the Tenants, on one Hand, gave large Compoſitions for a Reſumption, and the Queen, on the other, confirm'd their Rights.

That theſe Lands and Lordſhips having been ſettled by King James on Prince Charles, and the Heirs apparent of the Kings of England, other Grants were again made by him to ſome of his Servants, which were again redeem'd by another Compoſition of 10,000*l.*

That there is a great Duty lies upon the Freeholders of theſe Lordſhips upon the Creation of a Prince of Wales; they pay the Prince 800*l.* for Mizes, which is ſuch a Duty, Service, or Tenure, that is not to be ſevered from the Prince of Wales: And how this Tenure could be made reconcileable to this noble Lord's Grant, would be a great Difficulty: That if they are to pay theſe Mizes to this noble Lord upon this Grant, then he was qualify'd as a Prince of Wales, for the Duty was never paid to any other: But if it was to be paid to the Prince of Wales, and likewiſe to this noble Lord, then they are doubly charg'd; but if it was to be paid to the Prince of Wales, when he has no Royalty left in that Dominion, and not to be paid to this noble Lord, (who by this Grant was to have the whole Lordſhip) it created a Repugnancy in the Tenure of their Eſtates. A. D. 1695-6.

But I ſuppoſe, added he, this Grant of the Principality is a Forerunner of the Honour too; and then I ſhall fancy we are returning to OUR Original Contract: For, as Story tells us, that we were firſt brought to entertain a Prince of Wales, by recommending him to us as one that did not underſtand the Engliſh Tongue; and our Fore-fathers thence inferr'd, that he muſt be our Countryman, and no Foreigner, and one that underſtood the Brittiſh Language: How we were deceiv'd herein, is palpable: I ſuppoſe this Lord doth not underſtand our Language, nor is it to be ſuppos'd that he will come among us to learn it, nor ſhall we be fond of learning his: But ſince, added he, I have minded you of our Welſh original Contract, which is of ſo long ſtanding, I would not have you forget another Contract made not above ſeven or eight Years ſince, which is the Foundation of our preſent Government; I mean the Bill of Rights and Liberties, and ſettling the Succeſſion of the Crown, which is ſo much forgot in Diſcourſe and Practice, that I have not heard it nam'd in Parliament, but once the laſt Parliament, and I find it is as much forgot in the Adminiſtration: I would gladly know from thoſe that are better vers'd in prerogative Learning than myſelf, whether his Majeſty can, by the Bill of Rights, (without the Conſent of Parliament) alienate or give away the Inheritance or abſolute Fee of the Crown Lands? If he can, I would likewiſe know to what Purpoſe was the Crown ſettled for Life, with a Remainder in Succeſſion; if the Tenant for Life of the Crown, can give away the Revenue of the Crown, which is incident to the Crown? Or can the King have a larger Eſtate in the Revenues, than he has in the Crown to which it belongs? Far be it from me to ſpeak or think any thing in Derogation of his Majeſty's Honour or Care over us: It cannot be expected that he ſhould know our Laws, who is a Stranger to us, and we to him, any more than we know his Counſels, which I wiſh we did; I mean thoſe new immediate Adviſers and Miniſters, thro' whoſe Hands this Grant did paſs, by adviſing the King to grant what by Law he could not: Theſe Miniſters are guilty of the higheſt Violation of the Laws and Liberties of England, and ſtrike at the very Foundation of the Succeſſion, and tear up the Bill of Rights by the Root: It was their Province and Duty to have acquainted the King of his Power and Intereſt, That the antient Revenue of the Crown is ſacred and unalienable in time of War, and the Peoples Neceſſities. By the old Law it is part of the Coronation Oath of the Kings of England, not to alien the antient Patrimony of the Crown without Conſent of Parliament: But as to thoſe Oaths of Office, moſt

(d) Under the Title of Gloria Cambriæ: Or, The Speech of a bold Briton againſt a Dutch Prince of Wales.

A.D. 1695-6. most Kings have Court-Caſuiſts enough about them to inform them, that they have a Prerogative to diſpenſe with thoſe Oaths, eſpecially when their Intereſt (as it generally does) goes along with their Council. It has been the peculiar Care of Parliaments in all Ages, to keep an even Balance betwixt King and People; and therefore when the Crown was too liberal in its Bounties, the Parliaments uſually reſum'd thoſe Grants, which was very frequent: For from the Reign of Henry III. of England, to the Sixth of Henry VIII. there was one or more Bills of Reſumption of all that was granted from the Prince of Wales in all that Principality; yet thoſe Acts were not look'd upon by thoſe Kings (of whom ſome of them were both good and great) as any leſſening or diminution of their Prerogatives; it being conſider'd, that Kings have their Failings as well as other Men, being cloath'd with frail Nature, and apt to yield to the Importunities of their Favourites and Flatterers; therefore it becomes neceſſary, that the great Council of the Nation ſhould interpoſe for the Intereſt of the King and People: The Commons of England always entertain'd an honourable Jealouſy of their Prince, when they perceiv'd their Expences at Home and Abroad, their Gifts and Boons to their Favourites to be too large or exorbitant, and have therefore, by their Petitions and dutiful Applications to the Crown, advis'd the Kings of England to retrench their Expences, and not to alien and give away the Revenues of the Crown, leſt they ſhould become burthenſome to the People and chargeable to the Common-wealth, and that they would live upon their own Revenue. Theſe were their juſt and equal Ways in elder Times, to repair the languiſhing State of the Crown: And as we are an Iſland, and ſubject to Invaſion, ſo the Parliament of England were very watchful, that other Countries ſhould not outdo them in Trade and naval Strength: That Foreigners ſhould have no more Footing, or Strength, or Settlement in England, than was conducing to carry on the Trade and Commerce of the Nation; and whenever Princes entertain'd Foreigners as their Council or chief Advicers, the People of England were reſtleſs and uneaſy until they were remov'd out of the King's Council; nay, out of the Kingdom: And Inſtances are many in Hiſtory and Parliament Rolls, that great Men and Favourites, being Foreigners, were baniſh'd the Land, for procuring to themſelves ſo large a Proportion of the Royal Revenue, eſpecially in Times of War and the People's Neceſſities. [Here he introduc'd a great Variety of Inſtances.]

I muſt needs confeſs that my Thoughts are troubled with ſtrange Apprehenſions of our deplorable State: We are in a Confederacy in War, and ſome of thoſe Confederates our Enemies in Trade, tho' planted amongſt us; ſome of the King's Council, ſome in the Army, and the common Traders have poſſeſs'd themſelves of the Out-ſkirts of this great City: We find ſome or other of them Naturaliſ'd, and others made Denizens: Every Parliament we find Endeavours for a general Naturaliſation, and that warmly ſolicited from Court: We ſee our good Coin all gone, and our Confederates openly coining baſe Money of Dutch Alloy for us: We ſee moſt Places of Power and Profit given to Foreigners: We ſee our Confederates in Conjunction with the Scotch, to ruin our Engliſh Trade: We ſee the Revenues of the Crown daily given away to one or other, who make Sale of them, and tranſmit their Eſtates elſewhere: We do not find any of them buy Lands or Eſtates amongſt us; but what they can get from us, they ſecure in their own Country: How can we hope for happy Days in England, when this great Lord, and other Foreigners, (tho' naturaliſ'd) are in the Engliſh, as alſo in the Dutch, Councils? If theſe Strangers, tho' now Confederates, ſhould be of different Intereſts, as moſt plainly they are in point of Trade, to which Intereſt is it to be ſuppos'd thoſe great foreign Counſellors and Favourites would adhere? So that I foreſee, that when we are reduc'd to extreme Poverty, (as now we are very near it) we are to be ſupplanted by our Neighbours, and become a Colony to the Dutch. I ſhall make no ſevere Remarks on this great Man, for his Greatneſs makes us little, and will make the Crown both poor and precarious: And when God ſhall pleaſe to ſend us a Prince of Wales, he may have ſuch a Preſent of a Crown made him, as a Pope made to King John, who was ſurnam'd Sans Terre, and was by his Father, King Henry II. made Lord of Ireland; which Grant was confirm'd by the Pope, who ſent him a Crown of Peacock's Feathers in Deriſion of his Power, and the Poverty of his Revenue. I would have us to conſider, that we are Engliſhmen, and muſt, like good Patriots, ſtand by our Country, and not ſuffer it to become tributary to Strangers. We have rejoyc'd that we have beat out of this Kingdom Popery and Slavery, and do now, with as great Joy, entertain Socinianiſm and Poverty; and yet we ſee our Properties daily given away, and our Liberties muſt ſoon follow.

A.D. 1695.

Thus I have repreſented to you the Nature of this mighty Grant to this noble Lord, the ill Conſequences that muſt attend the Public, and more particularly this County by paſſing it: The Remedies that our Forefathers took to cure thoſe Ills, are well known.

I deſire more Redreſs than Puniſhment; therefore I ſhall neither move for an Impeachment againſt this noble Lord, nor the Baniſhment of him; but ſhall beg he may have no Power over us, nor we any Dependance upon him; and ſo conclude with this Motion, That an Addreſs be made to his Majeſty to ſtop the Grant that is paſſing to the Earl of Portland, of the Lordſhips of Denbeigh, Bromfield and Yale, and other Lands in the Principality of Wales; and that the ſame be not granted but by Conſent of Parliament.

This was the Subſtance of the Speech; and what Palliatives ſoever were apply'd in Anſwer to it, the Houſe unanimouſly agreed to the Prayer of the Petition, and the Motion founded thereon: And in their Addreſs, after a ſuitable Preamble, humbly laid before his Majeſty, "That the ſaid Manors, with the large and extenſive Regalities, Powers, and Juriſdictions to the ſame belonging, are of great Concern to your Majeſty and the Crown of this Realm: And that the ſame have been uſually annex'd to the Principality of Wales, and ſettled on the Princes of Wales for their Support: And that a great Number of your Majeſty's Subjects in thoſe Parts, hold their Eſtates by royal Tenure, under great and valuable Compoſitions, Rents, Royal Payments, and Services to the Crown and Princes of Wales; and have, by ſuch Tenure, great Dependance on your Majeſty and the Crown of England, and have enjoy'd great Privileges and Advantages with their Eſtates under ſuch Tenure.

A. D. 1695 6. An unanimous Address to stop the Grant.

We, therefore, moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſty, to put a Stop to the paſſing this Grant to the Earl of Portland, of the ſaid Manors and Lands; and that the ſame may not be diſpos'd from the Crown but by Conſent of Parliament: For that ſuch Grant is in Diminution of the Honour and Intereſt of the Crown, by placing in a Subject ſuch large and extenſive Royalties, Powers, and Juriſdictions, which ought only to be in the Crown, and will ſever that Dependance, which ſo great a Number of your Majeſty's Subjects in thoſe Parts have on your Majeſty and the Crown, by reaſon of their Tenure, and may be to their great Oppreſſion in thoſe Rights which they have purchas'd, and hitherto enjoy'd with their Eſtates, and alſo an Occaſion of great Vexation to many of your Majeſty's Subjects, who have long had the abſolute Inheritance of ſeveral Lands (comprehended in the ſaid Grant to the Earl of Portland) by antient Grants from the Crown."

How the King was affected by this Addreſs, and the Speech which gave Riſe to it, may be eaſily gather'd from the Elements he was made of: And tho' his Anſwer has a Shew of Temper, the Purport of it manifeſtly is, That he would enrich his Favourite in ſpite of their Teeth.

His Words were theſe.

King's Anſwer.

"Gentlemen,

I have a Kindneſs for my Lord Portland, which he has deſerv'd of me by long and faithful Services: But I ſhould not have given him theſe Lands, if I had imagin'd the Houſe of Commons could have been concern'd: I will therefore recal the Grant, and find ſome (e) other way of ſhewing my Favour to him.

And now we are again at Liberty to reſume the grand Affair of the Coin, which was no farther ſettled by the Bill above ſpecify'd, except as to the Recoinage, Weight, Standard, &c. than this, That till the fourth Day of May next enſuing, all the Receivers of the Revenue were authoris'd to take clipp'd or debas'd Monies in Payment of Taxes: That till the 24th of June, the Tellers of the Exchequer were, in like manner, authoris'd to take the ſame for Loans on the Funds aſſign'd for his Majeſty, unleſs in caſe of a ſpecial Proviſo to the contrary: That after the 10th of February it ſhould be current in no other Payment: That all hammer'd Money that was unclipp'd, was ſtill to be current, if ſtruck thro' about the Middle with a ſolid Punch, that ſhould make a Hole, without diminiſhing the Silver: And that Six-pences of any ſort were ſtill to be current as before.

A. D. 1695 6. The Affair of the Recoinage reſum'd.

Much, therefore, remain'd to be done; and both Parties were equally in Pain for the Iſſue: The Malcontents, in particular, who ſeem'd to have the Tide with them, and who were, therefore, the more impatient of the Interruption they had met with, made their court to the People; or, as their Antagoniſts gave out, to the Clippers; by moving, on the 4th of February, for an Inſtruction to the general Committee, (when they ſhould ſit again, muſt be underſtood) to conſider of a farther Encouragement to be given for bringing in Plate to be coin'd, and broad Money, in order to be exchang'd for clipp'd Money: And, again, on the 6th, for another Inſtruction to prepare a Clauſe, for prohibiting the Uſe of Plate in public Houſes, under a Condition, that the Money coin'd out of it, ſhould alſo be exchang'd for clipp'd Money.

The Courtiers, on the other Hand, (who had reſpited the Progreſs of the Committee, only for the ſake of renewing their Attack on the Guineas, on a Footing of Popularity as well as Reaſon) ſpirited up a Party of Merchants and Traders to preſent a Petition to the Houſe, praying, That the Difficulties and Loſſes in their Trade and Payments, by the enhanc'd Price of Guineas, might be taken into Conſideration.

This was receiv'd on the 8th; and produc'd an Order for a Bill to be brought in, for taking off the Obligation and Encouragement of coining Guineas for a certain time, which was become ſo gainful a Trade by the exorbitant Advance upon their Value, that one Refiner alone had, in a very ſhort Courſe of Time, coin'd no leſs than 100,000.

A Bill to take off the Obligations, &c. of coining Guineas.

Nor was this all; for on the 12th, the Courtiers found themſelves once more ſtrong enough to carry a Vote, That the Houſe would (e) Which accordingly was done; and the May after, the following Grant was made to the ſaid Earl, in Recompence for the Revenues of the Principality of Wales, viz. Of the Manor of Grantham, in the County of Lincoln; Honour of Penrith, in the County of Cumberland; Manor of Dracklow and Rudneth, in the County of Cheſter; Manor of Terrington, in the County of Norfolk; Manors of Partington, Briſtelcomb, Honſey, Thoring, Burroſſy, and Lewes in the County of York; all Parcel of the antient Revenue of the Crown of England; and of the Manor of Pevenſey in the County of Suſſex; Parcel of the Duchy of Lancaſter, and of all the Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments thereunto belonging, to have and to hold the ſame to the ſaid Earl and his Heirs; as alſo of his Majeſty's Manor of Eaſt Greenwich, in the County of Kent, under the Rent of 4*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.* payable at Lady-Day Yearly: And ſuch Clauſes, Powers and Proviſo's are inſerted, as were directed by Warrant under his Majeſty's Royal Sign Manuel. There was likewiſe granted to the ſaid Earl of Portland, all the little Remainder of the Fee-Farm-Rents, worth to be ſold, 24,000*l.* as alſo of mere Bounty, 25,000*l.*

A. D. 1695-6. would, the next Day, resolve itself into a Committee to consider the Price of Guineas: And from thence had good Reason to conclude, That they should have the best of the Debate.

But tho' they had thus far recover'd a Majority, they knew it was not to be altogether rely'd upon, unless the Strength of their Arguments should authorise a Division in their Favour: It appears, however, by what has been transmitted to us of the Controversy, that Reason was wholly on their Side, and Clamour only on the other: For the Substance of what the Latter alledg'd consisted in this, That the People were already uneasy and displeas'd at the Apprehensions they had entertain'd of a Purpose to lower the Guineas: That all those Individuals, on whose Hands the Guineas should be left, would be great Losers, which would raise great Complaints, and, perhaps, great Disturbances in the Nation; and that, therefore, it ought to be seriously consider'd, whether, at such a Juncture, it would be prudent to impose any additional Grievance on the People, already such grievous Sufferers by the Expences, Losses, and other Calamities of the War.

The Courtiers, on the other Hand, set out with a suitable Regard for these Considerations, admitted, that the Necessities of the Times ought to pass for Arguments in favour of the Currency of Guineas, at an advanc'd Rate, but not at so unreasonable an Advance, nor for any longer time, than was requisite for the Mints to issue the new Coin, and thereby to restore the Circulation of Silver: That, nevertheless, there was a pressing Necessity to lower them immediately somewhat nearer the Standard, that the extravagant Profits which dextrous Men had in their Power to make, by passing their clipp'd Money thro' the Mint, and laying out the new Coin in foreign Gold, might not deprive the Public of the new Coin as fast as it was issued: And that, upon the whole, the Mischiefs to be apprehended from the Continuance of so great an Evil, as Experience had shewn such a Disproportion between the intrinsic Value of Silver and Gold, to be, would infinitely over-balance Those in the other Scale.

But how unanswerable soever their Arguments were; and tho' they consented to admit of what they call'd a very moderate Temperament, viz. That Guineas should still pass in Payments at 24*s.* each, such was the Obstinacy of their Antagonists, and so dubious many of their Friends, that all they could obtain upon the Issue was, That Guineas should not pass in any Payment, above the Rate of 28*s.* each.

Guineas lower'd to 28s.

Nor could they obtain even this, without the utmost Difficulty: Once the Committee was broke up, and the Speaker resum'd the Chair: And when the Committee was re-obtain'd, and the Question came to be put, Mr. Palmer, the Chairman, (who had been of the Country Party, but apostatis'd for so valuable a Consideration as a Teller's Place for his Son) was reprimanded by his old Friends, for not putting it fairly, with more Noise and more Bitterness than was consistent with the Decorum, which one would think Gentlemen-Senators could never depart from. A. D. 1695-6.

But tho' the Courtiers found it thus difficult to carry so small an Advantage, when their Opponents would have insisted on a Law to force the Acceptance of Guineas at 28*s.* they met with a total Defeat: And thus the Affair hung till the 26th, when the Court having obtain'd additional Strength, by an unforeseen Incident, (to be explain'd in its Place) which might have been fatal to it, made a Shift to carry another Vote, after another long and perplex'd Debate, That Guineas should not pass in Payment at a higher Rate than 26*s.* But then it was under an Assurance, That they would not insist on any farther Reduction: An Assurance that prov'd to be no more than an Artifice, to qualify the Ferment of the Day: And by a Course of the like Artifices, they gradually prevail'd with the House, to drop all the Clauses which related to the Exchanging with the People broad or mill'd Money for clipp'd Money, and to alter the Title of the Bill, conformable to the Contents. For whereas it was at first call'd, A Bill to encourage the bringing in of mill'd, broad, or unclipp'd Monies, to be exchang'd by Commissioners in the several Ports of this Realm, with the common People for their clipp'd Money; and for the encouraging Persons to bring Plate into the Mint to be coin'd: All the Former Part of the Title was left out on the 10th of March; and from that time it took its Denomination from the Latter only, with this Addition, And for the farther remedying the ill State of the Coin of this Kingdom.

And again to 26s.

All the Clauses for exchanging clipp'd Money dropt.

Nor was this all: For on the 19th Lord Conningesby prefer'd a Clause for lowering the Currency of Guineas to 22*s.* grounded on this Proposition, That the uncertain Value of coin'd Gold had been highly prejudicial both to the Trade and Landed Interest of the Kingdom. The Sense of the Majority seem'd to be for accepting it; and all the Favour the Malcontents could obtain, was to post-pone the Consideration of it till the next Day, when they inveigh'd so fiercely against the Courtiers for departing from the Assurance they had given on that Head before, and rais'd such a Spirit of Resentment against them on that Account, that the Clause was rejected: But notwithstanding this Defeat, at the Third reading of the Bill, Lord Conningesby produc'd his Clause again; the same Arguments, Clamours and Abuses were ply'd with the same Vehemence as before; but not with the same Success: For after a Debate, which lasted many Hours, the Clause was admitted by a Majority of 205 against 174: And the (e) Bill finally pass'd, to the infinite Guineas reduc'd to 22s. and the Bill passed.

(e) The principal enacting Clauses, besides that in relation to Guineas, were, To prohibit the Use of Plate in public Houses, on penalty of forfeiting double the Value: To prohibit the Exportation of Bullion, except upon Oath, That it was foreign Bullion: And to prohibit the Currency of clipp'd Money, after the 4th of May, on penalty of forfeiting double the Value.

A. D. 1695-6. infinite Mortification of thoſe who had been at once ſo unexpectedly and ſo completely diſappointed by it, and who reſolv'd to make their Appeal, when Time ſhould ſerve, to the People, in hope, by their Means, of being fully aveng'd.

And now, inſtead of following this Bill to the Lords, where it was ſure to meet with a warm but ineffectual Oppoſition, it is time to touch upon another popular Out-cry, which the Malcontents had artfully rais'd, and in which they were join'd by the general Voice of the People.

Proceedings on the Scots African Company.

His Majeſty, it may be remember'd, in his Speech from the Throne, had call'd upon the Commons to ſhew a particular Regard to the Eaſt-India Trade, leſt it ſhould be loſt to the Nation: And for fear this Shew of Tenderneſs ſhould have ſome Weight with the Public, the Malcontents had given out, That it was affected merely; that the main Purpoſe of it was to ſilence the Complaints of the Eaſt-India Company, for the Loſs of their Ships on the Coaſt of Ireland, which were the richeſt that had ever been freighted from thoſe Parts to England; and the Fall both of their Stock and Credit upon it; as alſo to prevent any Enquiry into the Occaſion of it: For that, in caſe of ſuch Enquiry, it would be found the true Source of the Misfortune, was the Treachery of the Dutch Miniſters, who were in the Secret of all our Councils; and of their Creatures, who made a Trade of betraying them. And as a Proof that the Trade of England had, in Truth, no Share of his (the King's) Regard, they reſolv'd to bring forward the late Tranſaction in Scotland, in relation to the Eſtabliſhment of an African and India Company there, which was underſtood to be incompatible with any ſuch Profeſſions.

Dutch Encroachments and Depredations, p. 17.

Burnet, Vol. II. p. 163.

The oppoſing Lords began with it firſt, and ſet forth the Miſchiefs to be apprehended from it, in ſuch ſtrong and lively Colours, that the Courtiers, who had not as yet acquir'd the Confidence to juſtify or ſtifle every Government-Job of every kind, were not only forc'd to give way to what was call'd an Addreſs, but was, in Truth, a Remonſtrance againſt it, but to a Reſolution, that the Commons ſhould be invited to concur with them in it.

Accordingly, the Commons having been invited to a Conference, the ſaid Addreſs was imparted to them; and on the Report, approv'd by the Houſe, who alſo put in for their Share of Popularity in the Proſecution of ſo popular a Subject, by appointing a Committee to examine, What Methods had been taken to obtain the Scots Act for erecting the ſaid Company? Who were the Subſcribers to it? And who were the Promoters and Adviſers of it?

A joint Addreſs of the Lords and Commons againſt it.

As to the Addreſs, it ſet forth in the Name of both Houſes, "That having taken into their Conſideration the State of the Trade of this Kingdom, they found that, beſides many other Diſadvantages and Difficulties it now lay under, an Act of Parliament, that had lately receiv'd his Majeſty's Royal Aſſent in his Kingdom of Scotland, for erecting a Company trading to Africa and the Indies, was like to bring many great Prejudices and Miſchiefs to all his Majeſty's Subjects, that were concern'd in the Wealth or Trade of this Nation: That the ſaid Act did provide, That all Ships, Merchandize, and other Effects whatſoever, belonging to that Company, ſhould be free from all manner of Reſtraints or Prohibitions, and of all Cuſtoms, Taxes, Seſſes, Supplies, or other Duties impos'd, or to be impos'd by Act of Parliament, or otherwiſe, for the Space of twenty-one Years: And further, that the ſaid Company, whoſe Members, Officers, Servants, or others belonging thereto, ſhould be free both in their Perſons, Eſtates, and Goods employ'd in the ſaid Stock and Trade, from all manner of Taxes, Seſſes, Supplies, Exciſes, quartering of Soldiers tranſient or local, or levying of Soldiers, or other Impoſitions whatſoever, during the Space of twenty-one Years. That by Reaſon of the great Advantages granted to the Scotch-Eaſt-India Company, and the Duties and Difficulties that lay upon that Trade in England, a great Part of the Stock and Shipping of this Nation would be carried thither; and by this Means Scotland might be made a free Port for all Eaſt-India Commodities; and conſequently thoſe ſeveral Places in Europe, which were ſupply'd from England, would be furniſh'd from Scotland, much cheaper than could be done by the Engliſh; and therefore this Nation would loſe the Benefit of ſupplying foreign Parts with thoſe Commodities, which had always been a great Article in the Balance of their foreign Trade. Moreover, that the ſaid Commodities would unavoidably be brought by the Scotch into England, by Stealth, both by Sea and Land, to the vaſt Prejudice of the Engliſh Trade and Navigation, and to the great Detriment of his Majeſty in his Cuſtoms: And that when that Nation ſhould have ſettled themſelves in Plantations in America, the Engliſh Commerce in Tobacco, Sugar, Cotton, Wool, Skins, Maſts, &c. would be utterly loſt; becauſe the Privileges of that Nation, granted to them by this Act, were ſuch, That that Kingdom muſt be the Magazine for all Commodities, and the Engliſh Plantations, and the Traffic there, loſt to this Nation, and the Exportation of their own Manufactures yearly decreaſed: That beſides theſe, and many other Obſtructions that this Act would unavoidably bring to the general Trade of this Nation, another Clauſe in the ſaid Act, whereby his Majeſty promiſed to interpoſe his Authority to have Reſtitution, Reparation, and Satisfaction made, for any Damage that might be done to any one of the Ships, Goods, Merchandize, Perſons, or other Effects whatſoever belonging to the ſaid Company, and that upon the Public Charge, did ſeem to engage his Majeſty to employ the Shipping and Strength at Sea of this Nation, to ſupport this new Company, to the great Detriment even of this Kingdom."

A. D. 1695-6.

Such was this remarkable Paper; and as it was thus ſtrong both in Matter and Manner, ſo to give it the more Weight and Significancy, it was preſented to his Majeſty by

A. D. 1693-6. by both Houſes: And inſtead of enflaming the Matter by vindicating it, or taking Shelter under the Obligations which lay upon him as King of Scotland, his Majeſty was pleas'd to ſignify by way of Anſwer, "That he had been ill ſerv'd in Scotland; but that he hop'd ſome Remedies might be found to prevent the Inconveniences which might ariſe from the Act."

The King's Anſwer.

The Commons did not, however, give over their Perſuit: On the contrary, having been quicken'd by a Petition from the Eaſt-India Company, and having receiv'd the Report of their own Committee, together with a Copy of an Oath de Fideli, taken by the Directors of the Scots Company, as alſo of the Journal of the ſaid Directors, they took the whole Matter into Conſideration, and, on the 26th of January, came to the following Reſolution: "That the Directors of the Company of Scotland, trading to Africa and the Indies, adminiſtring and taking here in this Kingdom, an Oath de Fideli; and under Colour of a Scotch Act of Parliament, ſtiling themſelves a Company, and acting as ſuch, and raiſing Monies in this Kingdom, for carrying on the ſaid Company, were guilty of a high Crime and Miſdemeanor; and that the ſaid Directors [Here their Names were inſerted] be impeach'd of the ſaid high Crimes and Miſdemeanors."

Reſolution to impeach the Directors.

A Committee was alſo appointed to draw up Articles in form againſt the ſaid Directors: But while they were thus employ'd, a new Incident happen'd, which ſhew'd plainly enough, that the Endeavours on one Side were counter-work'd by Thoſe of the other.

One Roderick Mackenzy had hitherto furniſh'd the Houſe of Commons with the moſt material Points of Evidence, which they had founded their Impeachment upon; but now, when he was call'd upon to aſſiſt in making good that Impeachment, by bringing his Evidence home to the Perſons of the Directors, he not only endeavour'd to retract ſome of the Particulars which he had advanc'd before, but being alſo order'd into Cuſtody thereupon, found means to make his Eſcape.

It is true, the Houſe apply'd by Addreſs to his Majeſty, for a Proclamation to apprehend him, and ſuch a Proclamation was iſſued accordingly: But then it being feebly worded, and unſupported with any Promiſe of Reward, it had no effect, and conſequently the Proſecution fell to the Ground.

Burnet's Reflections on this Affair.

Biſhop Burnet, who ſums up this whole Proceſs in theſe few Words, "Great Complaints were made in both Houſes of the Act for the Scots Eaſt-India Company, and Addreſſes were made to the King ſetting forth the Inconveniences that were like to ariſe from thence to England;" with the Addition of his Majeſty's Anſwer, proceeds to qualify all, as he thinks, by ſaying, That ſoon after his Majeſty turn'd out both the Secretaries of State (for Scotland) and the Marquis of Tweedale; as alſo, That great Changes were made in the whole Miniſtry of that Kingdom, both high and low: But then he undoes all again, by adding, "No Enquiry was made, nor Proceeding order'd concerning the Buſineſs of Glenco: So that furniſh'd the Libellers with Colours in aſperſing the King, as if he muſt have been willing to ſuffer it to be executed, ſince he ſeem'd ſo unwilling to let it be puniſh'd." As alſo, "But when it was underſtood in Scotland, that the King had diſown'd the Act for the Eaſt-India Company, from which it was expected, that great Riches ſhould flow into that Kingdom, it is not eaſy to conceive, how great and how general an Indignation was ſpread over the whole Kingdom. The Jacobites ſaw what a Game it was like to prove in their Hands; they play'd it with great Skill, and to the Advantage of their Cauſe, in a Courſe of many Years."

A. D. 1695-6.

And, indeed, it was ſcarce poſſible to have furniſhed them with a better: For the Scots had as much Reaſon to complain of the King's ſacrificing them to his Engliſh Subjects, as the Engliſh of his gratifying the Scots with ſuch great Exemptions and Privileges, when They were every Year more and more oppreſs'd with the two-fold Burden of the War, and the Taxes neceſſary for its Support. It was no Wonder, therefore, that the Jacobite-Emiſſaries in each Kingdom, found Matter enough to enflame the Diſcontents of Both; and as each was before divided within itſelf, to work up ſuch a reciprocal Reſentment, as ſhould bid fair to embroil them with each other.

The ſame Prelate alſo admits, That the Loſſes of the Merchants gave great Advantages to thoſe who complain'd of the Adminiſtration: And after a ſlight Attempt to ſhew with what Malignity and Injuſtice thoſe Complaints were manag'd, proceeds to ſay, "That in the End, when all the Errors with Relation to the Protection of our Trade, were ſet out and much aggravated, a Motion was made to create by Act of Parliament, a Council of Trade,"

An Attempt to ſet up a Council of Trade by parliamentary Authority.

But this Trait is not ſufficient to explane the Fact. The Complaints and Petitions of the ſuffering Merchants were, at this time of Day, thought one of thoſe Points which moſt deſerv'd the Attention of the Legiſlature: And agreeable to this Sentiment, the Houſe reſolv'd itſelf into a general Committee, to conſider the State of the Nation in Relation to Trade, which took up much of their Time, and produc'd a Variety of Reſolutions, which ſeem'd, at leaſt, to have the Welfare of the Community for their Foundation.

It was from a full Conviction of the Neglects and Omiſſions of the Government, that this Notion of a Council of Trade had its Riſe: And it was for fear of a Continuance of the ſame Miſmanagement, that it was to be put under a parliamentary Direction.

But, unhappily, thoſe who recommended this Expedient, proceeded on ſuch Principles, as had a natural Tendency to render it unſucceſsful: For it was reſolv'd, 1. That a Council of Trade ſhould be eſtabliſh'd by Act of Parliament, with Powers for the more effectual Preſervation of the Trade of this

A. D. 1695-6. this Kingdom. 2. That the Commiſſioners conſtituting the ſaid Council be nominated by Parliament. 3. That none of the ſaid Commiſſioners ſhould be of the Houſe. 4. That the ſaid Commiſſioners ſhould take an Oath, acknowledging King William to be rightful and lawful King of this Realm; that the late King James had no Right or Title to the Crown; and that no other Perſon had any Right or Title to the Crown, otherwiſe than according to the Act of Settlement, made in the firſt Year of his Majeſty's Reign, &c.

Now, if the Undertakers for this Eſtabliſhment were not artfully led, which is not improbable, to raiſe it on this impolitic Baſis, it muſt be ſuppos'd, That they hop'd to reconcile the Court to the Former of theſe Clauſes, by the Means of the Latter: But no gilding could make ſuch a Doſe go down: The King was as much a Bigot to the Prerogative, as the moſt bigotted of his Predeceſſors: And thoſe who were diſſatisfy'd with the Plan, on account of the ſpecific Acknowledgment requir'd in it, that King William was rightful and lawful King, or what follows it, could ſafely oppoſe one Part of it under the Umbrage of another; and did it ſo effectually, that they procur'd that Clauſe to be rejected.

Burnet's Account of it. Biſhop Burnet ſtates it as an Attempt to change our Conſtitution in a very eſſential Point: "The executive Part of the Government, ſays he, was wholly in the King: So that the appointing any Council, by Act of Parliament, began a Precedent of their breaking in upon the Execution of the Law, in which it could not be eaſy to ſee how far they might be carried: It was, indeed, offer'd, That this Council ſhould be much limited as to its Powers; yet many apprehended, that if the Parliament named the Perſons, how low ſoever their Powers might be at firſt, they would be enlarged every Seſſion; and from being a Council to look into Matters of Trade, they would be next impower'd to appoint Convoys and Cruizers: This, in time, might draw in the whole Admiralty, and that Part of the Revenue or Supply that was appropriated to the Navy; ſo that a King would ſoon grow to be a Duke of Venice: And, indeed, thoſe who ſet this on moſt zealouſly, did not deny that they deſign'd to graft many Things upon it.

The King was ſo ſenſible of the ill Effects this would have, that he order'd his Miniſters to oppoſe it as much as poſſibly they could: The Earl of Sunderland, to the Wonder of many, declar'd for it, as all that depended on him promoted it: He was afraid of the Violence of the Republican Party, and would not venture on provoking them: The Miniſters were much offended with him, for taking this Method to recommend himſelf at their Coſt: The King himſelf took it ill, and he told me, if he went on, driving it as he did, that he muſt break with him: He imputed it to his Fear; for the unhappy Steps he had made in King James's Time, gave his Enemies ſo many Handles and Colours for attacking him, that he would venture on nothing that might provoke them. A. D. 1695-6. Here was a Debate, plainly in a Point of Prerogative, how far the Government ſhould continue on its antient Bottom of Monarchy, as to the executive Part; or how far it ſhould turn to a Common-wealth: And yet, by an odd Reverſe, the Whigs, who were now moſt employ'd, argued for the Prerogative, while the Tories ſeem'd zealous for public Liberty: So powerfully does Intereſt biaſs Men of all Forms!"

Of the fourer Sort of Whigs, and their being a Part of the national Compoſition, in this very Parliament, we have heard from this Hiſtorian-Prelate before: But of a Republican Party, we have ſcarce heard a Syllable ever ſince the Diſſolution of the Convention-Parliament: And if they were numerous enough to deſerve the Name of a Party, it is certain they were leſs numerous than even the Papiſts themſelves: Beſides, the King, tho' advanc'd to the Throne by their Aſſiſtance, and in part on a Republican Footing, had more Charity even for the Jacobites than for them: And as they were thus odious at Court, as they were equally odious to each Party, and their Principles were not ſo much as known to the People, ſo it is utterly inconceivable, that the Earl of Sunderland, who had been ever in the very Boſom of his Majeſty, ſhould ſee Cauſe to be afraid of them. Jacobites diverted upon.

Again: If it ſhould be admitted, that a Handful of them had Seats in the Houſe of Commons at this time, it is certain they had not the Lead there; and none but ſuch as were of the firſt Claſs in point of Ability and Authority, could have carry'd this Matter ſuch a Length as it was carry'd: In which Caſe we may farther aſk, How it is poſſible to ſuppoſe, That ſuch Perſons ſhould be ſo indiſcrete as to ſuffer their own Secret to eſcape, by any Inſinuation of any kind, That they deſign'd to graft many Things upon this Expedient of a Council of Trade.

Then, as to what his Lordſhip has been pleas'd to ſuggeſt concerning the Conſequences to be apprehended from this Bill, namely, That it would in Time draw in all the Powers of the Admiralty, &c. and that the King would ſoon grow to be a Duke of Venice, Experience has ſhewn, that Republican Plants are ſo far from being quick of Growth in our Climate, that they will ſcarce be induc'd to take Root in the Soil: And the Parliament had many Times before appointed Commiſſioners to take and ſettle Accounts, diſband Armies, and diſpoſe of public Monies, which are all Parts of the Executive Power, without any Detriment to the Prerogative, or Change in the Conſtitution.

Laſtly: In the Reign of King Charles II. the whole Body of the Whigs could lay the parliamentary Ax to the Root of the Succeſſion, without any fear of being mark'd with the Brand of Republicaniſm: And, therefore, it ſeems ſo much the more ſtrange, that an Advocate for thoſe very Whigs ſhould maintain, That, in the Reign of King William III. (a parliamentary King!) when a Jealouſy, not altogether unreaſonable, obtain'd, That our national Commerce was not

A. D. 1695-6. under a national Direction, an Attempt to place it under such a Direction, was Anti-monarchical and unconstitutional.

But of what Nature or Tendency soever the Bill was, according to the Prelate last quoted, it was going on, and probably would have pass'd both Houses, if the Discovery of a Conspiracy (which was the Incident above alluded to) had not turn'd Mens Thoughts quite another way: "So that all angry Motions, continues his Lordship, were let fall, and the Session came to a very happy Conclusion, with greater Advantages to the King, than could have been otherwise expected."

A Plot discover'd.

What this Conspiracy was, by whom it was contrived and conducted, how the Discovery was made, and after what Manner it was prosecuted, is what we have next to explane: But by way of Preparative, it is necessary to premise, there are no less than three Narratives of the whole Transaction, viz. One call'd, An Impartial Account, which contains little more than the several Articles of Intelligence which were communicated to the Public, in their natural Order: A Second, (which has been often cited already in the Course of the Lancashire Affair) call'd, The History of the late Conspiracy against the King and the Nation, with a particular Account of the Lancashire Plot, &c. extracted out of the original Informations of the Witnesses and other authentic Papers. And a Third call'd, A true and impartial History of the Conspiracy against the Person and Government of King William III. of glorious Memory, in the Year 1695.

Three several Narratives of it extant.

The two first are anonymous; but the last was the Work of Sir Richard Blackmore, M. D. whose Name stands in the Title-Page, and who declares in his Preface, That he was engag'd in it by the Lord-Keeper Somers: That, in order to make himself Master of his Subject, he was admitted to several Conferences with his Lordship, as also with the Duke of Shrewsbury and the Earl of Portland: That he was furnish'd with authentic Copies of the several Depositions and other Papers, from the Secretary's Office: That it was perus'd and amended by the Lord-Keeper and the Duke: That having undergone a second Correction by his Grace, it was ready for the Press: And that finally, upon what Views and Reasons of (f) State, he could not pretend to determine, his Grace thought fit to delay the Publication of it so long, that the Negotiations for a Treaty of Peace with France intervening, it was then judg'd improper to let it go abroad.

In all these several Tracts, and in all our Histories, which are, indeed, little more, than Transcripts from one another, there is an Agreement, that one Captain Fisher was the first Discoverer. On the 10th of February, says the Author of the History of the late Conspiracy, he waited on the Earl of Portland, and inform'd him of the intended Enterprize, without specifying Time, Manner, or Circumstances, which were not as yet settled; and at his Departure promis'd to be more particular, as soon as he had gain'd more particular Information. A. D. 1695-6.

Capt. Fisher the first Discoverer.

Blackmore's Account is much the same with this: Only he places the Discovery on the 10th instead of the 11th; and adds, that he mention'd the Names of several of the Conspirators: But neither of them specify what the Amount of this his first Information was: And to supply that Defect, as well as it can be supply'd, we must have recourse to a subsequent Deposition of Fisher's before Mr. Secretary Trumbal, which contains the following Particulars, viz. That on or about the 3d of the same February, he was introduc'd to Sir George Barclay by one Johnson, alias Harrison, a Monk, at a public House in Bow-street, who said to the said Sir George, This is the Gentleman I was to bring to you; you may trust him and speak freely to him. That hereupon Sir George ask'd him, Whether he would be engag'd to be one of those that should seize the Prince of Orange? That he answering in the Affirmative, Sir George put him on giving his Opinion, where and how it should be done; and then propos'd his own, which was to fall upon the Guards, Sword in Hand, at Hyde-park Gate, as he came from Kensington to Chapel at St. James's: That on the 5th Sir George and he again discours'd about seizing the King in Kensington-House, in the Night, by scaling the Garden-Wall with Ladders; as also about setting the House on fire, in case they could not find the King; and at the same time seizing the Field-pieces and Guards about Whitehall: That on the 7th or 8th he discours'd with Major Lowick at the same public House, on the same Design: That on the 9th Sir George sent him to take a View of the Tower, and the Strength of the Guards on Duty there, in order to the seizing it for King James: And that on the making his Report, it was thought convenient to desist from that Enterprize, and to prosecute the Former, which in the Course of the Deposition is more circumstantially explan'd; but in a Method so irregular and disorderly, as is extremely remarkable: For whereas this was all that he had to communicate at his first Visit to the Earl of Portland, and his second was on the 13th, the very Words of the next Section of his Deposition was as follows. "Hereupon, after several other Meetings between the Deponent, the said Sir George Barclay, and the said Johnson, alias Harrison, and one other Person, whom this Deponent knoweth not, (and yet he names Lowick in the Passage, which stands last in his Deposition, tho' in order of Time it should have been plac'd as it stands above) it was at last concluded, on or about the 13th

His Deposition.

(f) If the Reader will be at the Trouble to compare Sir Richard's Work with That immediately preceding it, he would probably see cause to conclude, That Reasons of State had no Share in his Grace's Determination.—But whatever his Reasons were, in the Year 1725, Sir Richard publish'd his Book, that the Discontented of those Times (as we understand from his Preface) might beware of diminishing the Honour of the King, and speaking reproachfully of his Person and Government.

A. D. 1695-6. 13th Inſtant of February, to execute the ſaid Deſign of ſeizing the Prince of Orange; and, in caſe of Oppoſition from the Guards, to kill him; and in order to this, Spies were ſent to Kenſington, who waited there all Night." Now both the true and impartial Hiſtorian, Blackmore, and the Hiſtorian anonymous agree in this, That he made a full Diſcovery of the Time, Place, and Manner of executing the Deſign at this Viſit: And yet he names but three Perſons, of whom himſelf was one; and as to Place and Manner, he mentions neither, till afterwards, when he proceeds thus. " But the Prince of Orange not going abroad as he us'd to do, on the Day following, being the 15th Inſtant, the Deſign aforeſaid was put off for ſome Days: And on the Monday following (the 17th that is to ſay) they met again at the Sign of the Cock in Bow-Street, to diſcourſe of the ſaid Deſign; but that Meeting ſoon ended, and they appointed to meet next Day at the Sign of the King's Head in Holbourn, where the Deponent only meeting the ſaid Johnſon, alias Harriſon, they two went to the old Griffin, not far off, to which Place the ſaid Johnſon, alias Harriſon, brought the ſaid Sir George Barclay, who coming in ſaid, Captain Fiſher what muſt we do now? The Deponent anſwering, What you will. Then Sir George Barclay ſaid, What do you think of ſeizing the Prince of Orange between Brentford and Turnham-Green, as he ſhall come next from hunting in the Evening; or, perhaps, we may have an Opportunity of ſeizing him at Mr. Lattin's Houſe in Richmond, when he would be very weakly guarded; for we reſolve to fall upon him Sword in Hand, and for that Purpoſe ſtrong puſhing Swords will be better than cutting Swords: And if we fail theſe ways, we reſolve to do it on Sunday next, as he, the ſaid Prince of Orange, ſhall be coming to St. James's, by ſhooting one of the leading Horſes, ſo as to ſtop the Coach in Hyde-Park-Gate. Whereupon the ſaid Johnſon, alias Harriſon, ſaid, And ſhoot alſo one of the Wheel Horſes, and then they are both ſtopt: And then the ſaid Sir George Barclay, alias Bartlet, ſaid, This would be no Rebellion or Aſſaſſination; for he was no King."

After all this comes the Account of the general Deſign, as follows, " Which ſaid Deſign of ſeizing the Perſon of the Prince of Orange was to be follow'd with a general Inſurrection in England and Scotland, and by an Invaſion from France; the Ships being ready, and the Men to embark with King James at the Head of them, as the ſaid Sir George Barclay and the ſaid Harriſon inform'd this Deponent: and the ſaid Johnſon told him, this Deponent, That King James had ſent Orders for executing the Deſign aforeſaid; and that the ſaid Sir George Barclay had brought over the ſaid Orders from King James with him, he being then lately come from France. And this Deponent farther ſaith, That he has been credibly inform'd, that one Major Lowick, alias Jackſon, George Porter, Captain Chernock, Captain Stowe, Captain Valbank, Captain James Courtnay, Thomas Barttam, and Sherburn, and ſeveral others whom this Deponent knoweth not, to the Number of forty or more, were engag'd in the ſaid Deſign of ſeizing and aſſaſſinating his Majeſty, whom they call'd the Prince of Orange, in the Manner aforeſaid, together with the ſaid Sir George Barclay, and the ſaid Johnſon, whom this Deponent knoweth to be guilty of this Conſpiracy, in the Manner before declar'd." A. D. 1695-6.

Laſtly, in yet another ſubſequent Part of his Depoſition (after having declar'd, that Saturday the 15th had been appointed for the Attempt) he proceeds thus, " And this Deponent farther ſaith, That in order to the carrying on the ſaid Deſign, he was to provide five Horſes and Arms to be in readineſs for himſelf and four others, whereof Henry Fitzpatrick was one, and then to meet the ſaid Sir George Barclay, Major Lowick, and two others, whoſe Names this Deponent knoweth not. The Deponent farther ſaith, That the firſt Horſmen who ſhould be ready to execute this Deſign, were to be lodged at the King of Bohemia [meaning the Sign ſo call'd] near Turnham-Green; and the reſt, as they came, to be in other Inns thereabouts, the greateſt Number in one Inn not to be above ſeven or eight, and there to be ready till the King ſhould return in the Evening."

Thus it does not appear, that there had been any Rendezvous or Muſter of this Troop, or that he had actually procur'd the Horſes and Arms he had undertaken for; tho' he limits the Number of Horſes to be five, the Party he was to be of, viz. himſelf, Fitzpatrick, Barclay, Lowick, and the two others unnam'd made ſix: And tho' he deſcended to theſe Particulars in his Depoſition of the 25th, neither in his firſt or ſecond Viſit to the Earl of Portland could he be prevail'd upon to ſpecify any Names at all, which induc'd his Majeſty to believe, that the whole was a Forgery, and to reſolve to go to Richmond on the 15th as uſual.

Thus on the 14th, Fiſher's two Informations had produc'd no Effect: But Lord Portland, going late that Evening to his Lodgings at Whitehall, to give Audience to a Perſon he had appointed to meet him there, on a private Affair, found an unknown Perſon waiting in his Anti-chamber, who deſired to ſpeak with him about a Matter of the higheſt Importance, which could not be deferr'd till another Time; and being left alone with him, accoſted him in theſe Words, My Lord, perſwade the King to ſtay at home To-morrow; for if he go abroad to hunt, he will be aſſaſſinated. Pendergraſs comes in. Hiſt. of the Conſp. p. 155.

He then proceeded to give a particular Account of the Conſpiracy, it is ſaid, with almoſt the ſame Circumſtances which had been already recounted by Fiſher: But this we muſt take on the Credit of the Hiſtorian; for among the Depoſitions preſerv'd by Blackmore, there is none in the Name of Pendergraſs, who was this ſecond Diſcoverer, to furniſh out a Compariſon with the Former.

To

A.D. 1695 6. To his Informations concerning the Conſpiracy, whatſoever they were, he added, That he was an Iriſhman and a Catholic: That Captain Porter had ſent for him out of the Country, without acquainting him with the Buſineſs: That when it was propos'd to him, he was ſtruck with Horror at it, and immediately reſolv'd to diſcover it: That his Religion was accus'd of authoriſing and encouraging ſuch Actions; but that he, for his Part, abhorr'd ſuch Principles, tho' in all other Reſpects he was a true Catholic.

Here our Hiſtorian throws in the following Remark, which ſerves to exemplify both the Policy and Moderation of the King. "Thus his Majeſty, ſays he, began to receive the juſt Reward of his Clemency and Moderation; for he is, and always has been, equally remarkable for his ſtedfaſt adhering to his own Religion, and his Indulgency to thoſe of another Perſuaſion. When he accepted of the Crown of Scotland, he declar'd, That he would not be a Proſecutor; and all his Actions are ſo many illuſtrious Teſtimonies of the Sincerity of that Declaration: Never any Papiſt that was willing to live in Peace, ſtood in Need of an Interceſſor with him: He protected them in Ireland againſt the angry Councils of ſome over-zealous Proteſtants: He favour'd them as much as he could, without injuring the reſt of his Subjects; and treated them, upon all Occaſions, with an Indulgency that ſurpriz'd thoſe who are not acquainted with the native Goodneſs of his Temper. 'Tis true, this may, perhaps, be reckon'd, in ſome Meaſure, an Effect of his Complaiſance to the Family of Auſtria, with whom he has entertain'd a long and intimate Friendſhip, which has been endear'd by reciprocal good Offices; and is confirm'd and made neceſſary to them both, by the Intereſt of their mutual Preſervation. But tho' the Papiſts were depriv'd of ſuch powerful Interceſſions, his Virtue alone would ſupply this Defect, and ſufficiently recommend them to his Favour and Protection. And we have reaſon to believe, that GOD is pleas'd with his Mildneſs and Clemency to the Roman-Catholics in general, and to the Iriſh in particular, ſince by a wonderful Providence he made an Iriſh Papiſt the Inſtrument of ſaving his Life."

Thus ends this extraordinary Tranſition: And for the reſt of Pendergraſs's Information, as ſumm'd up by theſe two Authors, it conſiſted only of this, That if he had not been afraid of being ſeen and taken Notice of by the two orderly Men, whom the Conſpirators kept on Duty at Kenſington, he would have made his Diſcovery to the King in Perſon: And that ſince the Nature of the Buſineſs required all poſſible Diſpatch, he had, in the next Place, thought it moſt adviſable to impart it to his Lordſhip, as the Perſon whoſe Zeal and Fidelity were fitteſt to be rely'd on.

But neither would he be prevail'd upon to diſcover the Names of the Conſpirators, tho' we are told no Means were left unattempted to perſuade him to do ſo: And to all the Arguments of that Nature urg'd by his Lordſhip, his conſtant Reply was, That no Conſideration ſhould induce him to betray thoſe to whom he had been formerly oblig'd. A.D. 1695 6.

So much Time, it ſeems, was taken up in this Conference, that Lord Portland could not reach Kenſington before the King was retir'd; and all the neceſſary Orders had been given for his Richmond-Party the next Day. His Favourite, however, had acceſs to him at all Hours; and having communicated all that had paſs'd between him and Pendergraſs, prevail'd with him, tho' not without much Difficulty, as we are told, to alter his Reſolution of Hunting on the Morrow.

Thus far the two Hiſtorians, employ'd to recite this Tranſaction by Authority, agree pretty well; but in the next Stage they differ in an Eſſential: For whereas Blackmore is poſitive, That one de la Rue was the next Diſcoverer who came in, the Other ſuggeſts, that a third Perſon, whom he does not name, ſtept in between Pendergraſs and de la Rue, and gave ſuch Information to Mr. Secretary Trumbal, as convinc'd him of the Reality of the Plot, though he, the ſaid Informer, could not acquaint him with the Circumſtances of it: The ſame Author adds, That the Secretary having already receiv'd Advices, That the French were bringing together a great Number of Tranſport-ſhips, and making all the neceſſary Preparations for ſome extraordinary Deſign, which, it was believ'd, was againſt England, and comparing theſe Advices with the Information before him of a Plot againſt his Majeſty's Perſon, found they confirm'd each other, tho' he could hardly look upon either of them as probable, when he conſider'd them ſingly.

Of the Deſign from abroad, we ſhall be farther inform'd preſently; and as to de la Rue, he made his firſt Application (for what Reaſon is not ſpecified) to Brigadier Lewſon, and was by him referr'd to Sir William Trumbal, who did not take his Depoſition in form till the 26th of February. Both our Hiſtorians, however, maintain, as doth alſo the Hiſtorian of his own Times, that all theſe ſeveral Stories of de la Rue, Pendergraſs, and Fiſher, did exactly, or in all material Particulars, agree: And that we may judge whether they did or not, as well as we can, without the Help of Pendergraſs's Depoſition, which, as before obſerv'd, was never made public, an Abſtract of de la Rue's will be abſolutely neceſſary.

He began then with a Diſcourſe of certain Meetings which had been held between Sir William Perkyns, Porter, Charnock, Goodman, and Stow, in the Year 1694-5, to contrive how to carry the King's Perſon alive to King James in France, which, as Porter had told him, they had offer'd that Prince to do, if he would ſend them a Commiſſion for it, which was expected a long time; and that their Deſign was, if they could not carry him away alive, to kill him, and pretend it was done by a Random-ſhot in firing at the Guards: As Porter alſo told him, the ſaid Commiſſion not coming, they reſolv'd De la Rue's Depoſition.

A. D. 1695-6. to do it without, being provided with Horſes and Men, but all came to nothing for want of a Veſſel to carry them off: And all this he delivers upon Hear-ſay, except, That he was three or four times in company with Perkins, Porter, and Stow, when the ſaid Deſign was talk'd of.

He then proceeds to the Particulars of another wicked Deſign againſt his Majeſty's ſacred Perſon, which, ſays he, was to have been put in Execution on the 15th of February, at the King's Return from Hunting, by forty-five or forty-ſix Perſons, moſt of them Officers under King James, if it had not been prevented by ſome Impediments and Oppoſitions in their Cabals, &c.

By the way this Et Cætera, (however ſtrange it may appear that an Et Cætera ſhould be ſworn to) is in the Depoſition: And in the next Paragraph we find, that the ſame Execution, which was prevented by the Diſagreement of thoſe concern'd, was alſo prevented by the King's not going to Richmond.

He then ſpeaks of Barclay, Charnock, and Parker, (ſtill on Hear-ſay from the Latter) as the principal Conſpirators: Says, Barclay was the Commander in Chief, having brought over from France a Commiſſion from King James, which, as they told him, the Deponent, was to attack the Prince of Orange's Perſon in his Winter-Quarters; which Commiſſion was interpreted by a Council of War, held at St. Germains, to take off the King by what Means they could. He farther ſays, It was for that End he came to England, with one Rookwood, a Brigadier of King James's Guards, a Sub-Brig, and ſixteen choſen Men out of the two Troops: That he was recommended to Porter and Charnock as fit Perſons to conſult and adviſe with, They having laid a Scheme, and contriv'd the Matter laſt Year: That he was ſeveral Times invited to accompany them in viewing the Roads, in order to pitch upon the fitteſt Place to attack the King's Perſon and Guards, but always evaded it: That the Place at laſt agreed upon, was Porter's old Place, at the End of the Lane coming into Turnham-Green: The Time of Night, when the King ſhould be on his Return: And that Barclay, with Eight more, (of which Number was Pendergraſs) was to attack the King's Coach, and aſſaſſinate every Body in it; as alſo in the other Coach, together with the Officer of the Guards, and the two Troopers in the Van-Guard; while Charnock and Porter, with their ſeveral Parties, which were to be poſted on each Side of the Lane, attack'd the Party of Guards which brought up the King's Rear.

This is the Amount of his Depoſition, as far as relates to the Deſign, down to Saturday the 15th. And that there ſhould be ſo regular a Diſpoſition made, notwithſtanding the Impediments and Obſtacles in their Cabals, which prevented the Execution of their Purpoſe that Day, is not more extraordinary than the ſeeming Irregularities and Improvidencies which he diſcourſes of afterward.

For with reſpect to the Execution of the A. D. 1695-6. ſame Purpoſe, on the next Saturday, viz. the 22d, it appears by the ſubſequent Part of his Depoſition, That Porter did not ſend to him till Friday Night, to conſult and prepare every thing for the Morrow: That not meeting each other that Night, theſe Conſultations and Preparations could not be carry'd on till the Morrow at Eight o'Clock, when he repair'd to Porter's Lodgings, and was told by him, That all Parties were ready to march in the Afternoon, in caſe the King went abroad, which they ſhould ſoon know from their orderly Men at Kenſington, who were Durant and Chambers.

To theſe Lodgings of Porter's, came alſo Cranburn, Pendergraſs, Keys, and King, the Latter with a Meſſage from Barclay to Porter, who, on his Part, ſent Cranburn, as his Quarter-Maſter, with a Liſt of his Men to Charnock, with a Requiſition of Horſes and Arms to be made ready for them; which verifies what has been ſaid above, concerning the unprepar'd Condition they were in for ſo deſperate an Enterprize, almoſt at the Moment of Execution.

Cranburn, at his Return, brought News from Chambers, That the King was to go on his Hunting-Party that Morning, between Ten and Eleven o'Clock, which it is ſaid Porter communicated to the Company with a great deal of Joy.

He farther depos'd, that, on comparing Charnock's Liſt of Men which Cranburn had brought back, at the Foot of Porter's, he obſerv'd that Both did not exceed eighteen; of which complaining to the Latter, he urg'd in his Excuſe, that he had been diſappointed of five or ſix; but withal ſignified, That Barclay's Party would make up the Number forty, (which King ſaid, was enough of all Conſcience to do the Buſineſs) and aſk'd the Deponent, de la Rue, whether he could not ſupply him with ſome more.

This furniſh'd de la Rue with a Pretence for abſenting himſelf to go in queſt of Recruits; which it ſeems they agreed to: A public Houſe, in Spring-Gardens, was appointed for their next Place of Rendezvous; where they were to dine: They met accordingly, de la Rue bringing with him a new Man, who, for aught that appears, was admitted by the Company without any Difficulty.

Of their next Meaſure we muſt ſuppoſe, they had not time to diſcourſe: For by what follows in the Depoſition, we learn, That about Eleven or Twelve o'Clock they had Notice from Chambers, That the King did not go: That Keys alſo came in with a Confirmation of this News, with an Addition, That the Guards were return'd foaming, together with the King's Coaches; as alſo, That the People wonder'd the King ſhould diſpenſe with his uſual Diverſion for two Saturdays together; upon which the Company fell into a Conſternation, and talk'd of Treachery; but ſtaid nevertheleſs to drink Confuſion to the King before they diſpers'd.

As to the reſt of the Depoſition, it conſiſted of diſjointed Hear-ſays, which in order

A. D. 1695-6. of Time ſhould have been ſpecified before: As, That Porter had told him, that Sir William Perkins had acquainted him [Porter] he had a Commiſſion to raiſe a Regiment of Horſe; that he had bought thirty Horſes already; and that he was to aſſiſt the Party which was to aſſaſſinate the King with ſome of them: That the ſaid Porter had alſo told him, King James was at the Head of a good Party of Men upon the Coaſt of France, ready to embark for England; and that the Duke of Berwick had been here, but was gone back again: That King had given him the ſame Information as to the Duke; and that, talking with Charnock, about the 18th or 19th, concerning the Affair in Hand, he found him very cloſe; his Anſwer being, That the Zeal of Thoſe engag'd in it was become ſo cool, it had been communicated to ſo many, ſo much Time had been loſt, and from the King's late Behaviour it was ſo reaſonable to think, it had taken Air, that he believ'd it was given over: But then he added, with Frankneſs enough, That he might rely on it, the great Affair, meaning the Deſcent, would take Place very ſoon.

Laſtly: He (the Deponent) gave in a Liſt of Fourteen of the Names, which he had read in Porter's and Charnock's Liſts; and depos'd, not only that Pendergraſs was to be one of the Eight appointed to attack the Coach, but that Porter had told the ſaid Pendergraſs aloud, He had a ſpecial Piece for him, which would carry eight Balls: And King at the ſame time ſaying, He hop'd he would not fear breaking the Windows; Pendergraſs reply'd, No; I'll have a Finger in him.

Thus it appears that Pendergraſs, the Man of ſuch Delicacy of Sentiment, who, according to Biſhop Burnet, hated a baſe Action, would have no Reward for his Diſcovery, had no other Motive for making it but the Point of Honour, and who nam'd the Perſon that was fix'd on to ſhoot the King, was himſelf the Perſon, and conſequently one of the moſt deſperate Undertakers in it.

F. 167.

But in giving this Abſtract of de la Rue's Depoſition, we have paſs'd over ſome material Circumſtances, which in point of Time were previous to it, and which are thus ſet forth by the firſt of our two Court-Hiſtorians.

Hiſtory of the late Conſpiracy.

"The King, convinc'd by ſo many concurring Informations, and perceiving that all the Accounts he had receiv'd, agreed exactly with one another, began to believe the Truth of the Diſcovery. He order'd the Earl of Portland, and Sir William Trumbal, to make a more particular Enquiry into the Progreſs and Circumſtances of the Deſign; the Former as having receiv'd the firſt Advice of the Conſpiracy againſt his Perſon, and the Latter as having been firſt acquainted with the Plot againſt the Nation.

"Twas a very difficult Taſk to manage ſo nice an Enquiry; for tho' they had four Witneſſes, they could not produce one legal Evidence. They could not ſtifle the Informations they had receiv'd, without expoſing his Majeſty's Life to the brutiſh Fury of Aſſaſſins, who would ſoon find another way to execute their deteſtable Project: Nor could they publiſh a Diſcovery which they could not prove, without running the Hazard of being charg'd with the firſt Invention of it: And beſides, the divulging of theſe Advices, would have encourag'd the Conſpirators to carry on their Deſign, and, perhaps, made them haſten the Execution of it, leſt they ſhould at laſt be entirely diſcover'd, and receive the juſt Reward of their Crimes. A. D. 1695-6.

In the mean time the King reſolv'd to expoſe his Life to all the Dangers that threaten'd it, if it could not be ſecur'd without violating the uſual Forms of Juſtice: So that we were like to periſh by thoſe very Laws that were contriv'd and eſtabliſh'd for our Preſervation, if the Earl of Portland had not found out an Expedient to ward off the Blow, without having recourſe to any indirect or unwarrantable Stratagem: He conſider'd, that Pendergraſs and de la Rue might be perſwaded to diſcover the whole Myſtery, if the King himſelf ſhould ſpeak to them; and that even, tho' they ſhould refuſe to yield to his Majeſty's Solicitations, the Information they were willing to give, might ſerve to convict the Conſpirators, if it were deliver'd in the Preſence of unexceptionable Witneſſes, who might depoſe it at their Trials.

The King in Perſon examines Pendergraſs and de la Rue.

The King himſelf could not be an Evidence; and therefore it was neceſſary that there ſhould be at leaſt two Witneſſes preſent, when he diſcours'd with them. He ſpoke to Pendergraſs and de la Rue ſeparately; to the firſt, before the Earl of Portland and the Lord Cutts; and to the ſecond, in the Preſence of the ſame Earl and Brigadier Leviſon. After he had aſſur'd them, That he eſteem'd their Perſons, and was extremely pleas'd with their Proceedings, he told them, That he own'd himſelf oblig'd to them for the Care they took to preſerve his Life; but deſir'd them to conſider, That the Service they had done him, by diſcovering the Conſpiracy, could be of no Uſe to him, ſo long as they conceal'd the Names of the Conſpirators: That he could neither puniſh, nor ſo much as convict the Criminals: That the People would never be perſwaded to believe that ſeveral Perſons had diſcover'd a Conſpiracy, which they either could not, or would not, juſtify: That, on the contrary, they would imagine that he had invented a ſham Plot to deſtroy his Enemies, which would render him odious to all the World: That ſo general and imperfect a Diſcovery, would expoſe his Honour, without ſecuring his Life, &c. Theſe Arguments produc'd the deſir'd Effect, and conquer'd the Obſtinacy of the Diſcoverers: They could not reſiſt the awful Eloquence of an injur'd Monarch, and were at laſt prevail'd with to make an Atonement for their Guilt, by diſcovering their Fellow-Criminals." and probably were then to appear as Witneſſes.

It was Friday the 21ſt, when theſe Practices were try'd on Pendergraſs and de la Rue, with the Effect ye have ſeen: And on the Tueſday before, according to the

A. D. 1695-6. King James comes to Calais, in order to make a Defcent with a French Army on England.

London-Gazette, (g) (No. 3162) King James had ſet out in a Poſt-Chaiſe from St. Germains, on his way to Calais, whither Orders were alſo ſent from the French Court to embark the Troops which were quarter'd along the Coaſt, under the Conduct of M. de Boufflers, and make all the neceſſary Diſpoſitions for ſetting Sail at a Moment's Warning; on what Service, we are told, was ſo little a Secret, that it was publicly diſcours'd of in Paris: And Biſhop Burnet is expreſs, That King Lewis had order'd his Deſign of invading England, to be communicated to all the (b) Courts in which he had Miniſters: "And continues his Lordſhip, with equal Candour and Policy, They ſpoke of it with ſuch an Air of Aſſurance, as gave violent Preſumptions, That the King of France knew of the Conſpiracy againſt the King's Perſon, and depended upon it; for, indeed, without That, the Deſign was impracticable, conſidering how great a Fleet was at Spithead: Nor could any Man of common Senſe have entertain'd a Thought of it, but with a View of the Confuſion, into which the intended Aſſaſſination muſt have caſt us."

Various Advices of the French Preparations.

However this may be, the Motions of the French Troops, and the aſſembling of Ships in all the Ports along the Coaſt, gave the Alarm to the States, the Elector of Bavaria, and the Duke of Wirtembergh, who had the Command of the King's Forces Abroad; and all of them ſent Advices over to England of their Apprehenſions: But the Latter did more than ſend Advice; for he ſtopp'd all the Veſſels in the Harbour and Canal of Oſtend and Bruges, and took all the neceſſary Meaſures for throwing over ſuch a Body of Forces, as might be ſufficient to withſtand the Efforts of the Enemy, in caſe they ſet Foot on Shore.

On the 22d the Duke of Wirtembergh's Advices were receiv'd; and as they agreed with the Intelligence which Mr. Secretary Trumbal had receiv'd before, and the Depoſitions of the Conſpirators, it was thought adviſable to communicate the Diſcovery which had been made to the Cabinet, the Privy-Councils, the City and Parliament: And in the mean time Mr. Ruſſel was directed to conſult firſt with the Admiralty all the Meaſures neceſſary for collecting a ſtrong Fleet, with the utmoſt Expedition, and then to put thoſe Meaſures in Execution, as Commander in Chief.

Mr. Ruſſel order'd to collect a Fleet for the Defence of the Coaſt with all poſſible Diſpatch.

The ſame Day the Meſſengers of State, eſcorted by Lord Cutts, and ſome Parties of the Guards, were commanded to uſe all poſſible Diligence in apprehending the Conſpirators; The Guards were doubled at all the ſeveral Poſts: The Lord Mayor of London was ſent for to Court, and charg'd to raiſe the Trained Bands for the Defence of the City; and a Proclamation was prepar'd, containing ſuch Orders and Inſtructions, as were fit to be obſerv'd, at ſuch a Conjuncture, by the whole Kingdom. A. D. 1695-6

[Burchet.]

Theſe were the Proceedings of Saturday and Sunday the 22d and 23d; and on Monday his Majeſty, in a Speech not over-accurately drawn up, thus expreſs'd himſelf to both Houſes of Parliament.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

I am come hither this Day upon an extraordinary Occaſion, which might have prov'd fatal, if it had not been diſappointed by the ſingular Mercy and Goodneſs of God, and may now, by the Continuance of the ſame Providence, and our own prudent Endeavours, be ſo improv'd, as to become a ſufficient Warning to us, to provide for our Security againſt the pernicious Practices and Attempts of our Enemies. King's Speech on the Diſcovery of the Plot.

I have receiv'd ſeveral concurring Informations of a Deſign to aſſaſſinate me; and that our Enemies at the ſame time are very forward in their Preparations for a ſudden Invaſion of this Kingdom, and have therefore thought it neceſſary to loſe no Time in acquainting my Parliament with theſe Things, in which the Safety of the Kingdom and the public Welfare are ſo nearly concern'd, that I aſſure myſelf nothing will be omitted on your Part, which may be thought proper for our preſent or future Security.

I have not been wanting to give the neceſſary Orders for the Fleet; and I hope we have ſuch a Strength of Ships, and in ſuch a Readineſs, as will be ſufficient to diſappoint the Intentions of our Enemies.

I have alſo diſpatch'd Orders for bringing home ſuch a Number of our Troops, as may ſecure us from any Attempt.

Some of the Conſpirators againſt my Perſon are already in Cuſtody, and Care is taken to apprehend ſo many of the reſt as are diſcover'd; and ſuch other Orders are given, as the preſent Exigence of Affairs does abſolutely require at this Time for the Public Safety.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

Having now acquainted you with the Danger which hath threatned us, I cannot doubt of your Readineſs and Zeal to do every thing which you ſhall judge proper for our common Safety: And I perſwade myſelf we muſt be all ſenſible how neceſſary it is in our preſent Circumſtances, that all poſſible Diſpatch ſhould be given to the Buſineſſes before you."

What Particulars were thought neceſſary to be added, by way of Supplement, to this Declaration from the Throne, were ſupply'd in (g) According to the ſame Gazette, the French King took Leave of him the Night before: And being come to St. Denys, he ſign'd an Inſtrument or Deed in the Preſence of a Public Notary, which was afterwards diſpatch'd to the French Court, and by which it was ſaid he oblig'd himſelf to repay the Expences they had been at on his Account.—It is alſo ſaid, he met the Duke of Berwick on the Road.—But this ſeems to be very crude Intelligence.

(b) In particular that of Savoy, with whom he was then privately treating, by the Canal of the Duke of Orleans; and to that of Sweden, by his Ambaſſador reſiding there, who had expreſs Information, "That his Maſter's Troops were marching to the Coaſts, and ready to embark, as ſoon as the News of an Inſurrection in the Kingdom ſhould confirm the Advices he had ſo often receiv'd, viz. That the Nation was in general diſſatisfy'd with the Prince of Orange's Government."

A. D. 1695-6. in each Houſe by a Cabinet-Miniſter, who ſeverally enlarg'd on the Conformity and Credibility of the Evidence, and from thence inferr'd the Reality of the Plot, and the Neceſſity of taking all poſſible Precautions againſt the malevolent Purpoſes of the common Enemy.

An Addreſs ſuitable to the Occaſion was immediately voted in each Houſe, and as the ſame Sentiments prevail'd in both, the Form which was agreed to by one, was adopted in the other.

But tho' no Oppoſition could be decently made to ſuch an Addreſs, on ſuch an Occaſion, thoſe particular Expreſſions in it, which declar'd a Reſolution, in caſe his Majeſty ſhould come to any violent Death, to revenge it upon all his Enemies, and their Adherents, were objected to as unchriſtian, and not over conſiſtent with ſuch a Regard to a Government by Laws, as became the Character of Law-Makers. The principal Objec- [Burnet.] tors, we are told, were Seymour and Finch, among the Commons, and the Earl of Nottingham among the Lords. But ſuch Gloſſes were ſet on the Matter, and ſo exaſperated was the Spirit of the Times, that all Objections were over-rul'd, and the Clauſe was confirm'd in all its Strength: Another more exceptionable Paſſage, which preſum'd, That the Fate of theſe Kingdoms depended on the ſlender Thread of his Majeſty's Life, was admitted without any Exception at all; and both Houſes in a Body, with their two Speakers, waited upon his Majeſty at Kenſington with it, between the Hours of Seven and Eight in the Evening of the ſame Day.

The ſaid Addreſs was conceiv'd in the following Terms.

Addreſs of both Houſes. "We your Majeſty's moſt loyal and dutiful Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, having taken into our ſerious Conſideration what your Majeſty hath been pleaſed to communicate to us this Day, think it our Duty, in the firſt Place, to give your Majeſty moſt humble Thanks, for having acquainted your Parliament with the great Danger your ſacred Perſon hath been ſo nearly expos'd to, and the Deſign of an Invaſion from our Enemies Abroad: We heartily congratulate your Majeſty's happy Preſervation, and thankfully acknowledge the ſignal Providence of God in it; and at the ſame time declare our Deteſtation and Abhorrence of ſo villanous and barbarous a Deſign. And ſince the Safety and Welfare of your Majeſty's Dominions do ſo entirely depend upon your Life, we moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſty to take more than ordinary Care of your Royal Perſon: And we take this Occaſion to aſſure your Majeſty of our utmoſt Aſſiſtance to defend your Perſon and ſupport your Government, againſt the late King James, and all other your Enemies, both at Home and Abroad; hereby declaring to all the World, That, in caſe your Majeſty ſhall come to any violent Death, (which God forbid) we will revenge the ſame upon all your Enemies, and their Adherents: And as an Inſtance of our Zeal for your Majeſty's Service, we will give all poſſible Dis- A. D. 1695-6. patch to the public Buſineſs: And we make it our Deſire to your Majeſty, to ſeize and ſecure all Perſons, Horſes and Arms, that your Majeſty may think fit to apprehend upon this Occaſion."

To which his Majeſty reply'd as follows.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

I thank you heartily for this kind Addreſs; on my Part you may be aſſur'd that I will do all that is within my Power for the Preſervation of this Kingdom, to which I have ſo many Obligations: I will readily venture my Life for preſerving it, and recommend myſelf to the Continuance of your Loyalty and good Affections."

Nor were theſe the only Tranſactions of this remarkable Day: For the Commons order'd in a Bill to authoriſe his Majeſty to ſeize and detain all ſuſpected Perſons, according to the Deſire of the Addreſs; as alſo a Second, by which the Parliament in Being at the Death of the King, ſhould not be diſſolv'd thereby, but ſhould continue (under the Reſtriction of the Triennial Act) till the Succeſſor ſhould diſſolve the ſame: They alſo directed an Addreſs to be prepar'd for baniſhing Papiſts, by Proclamation, out of the Cities of London and Weſtminſter; and, laſtly, they drew up the Form of an Aſſociation, which was order'd to lye on the Table to be ſign'd by the Members of the Houſe, in the following Terms.

An Aſſociation propos'd. "Whereas there has been a horrid and deteſtable Conſpiracy, formed and carried on by Papiſts, and other wicked and traiterous Perſons, for aſſaſſinating his Majeſty's Royal Perſon, in order to encourage an Invaſion from France, to ſubvert our Religion, Laws, and Liberty, We whoſe Names are hereunto ſubſcrib'd, do heartily, ſincerely, and ſolemnly profeſs, teſtify, and declare, That his preſent Majeſty, King William, is rightful and lawful King of theſe Realms: And we do mutally promiſe and engage to ſtand by and aſſiſt each other, to the utmoſt of our Power, in the Support and Defence of his Majeſty's moſt ſacred Perſon and Government, againſt the late King James, and all his Adherents: And in caſe his Majeſty come to any violent or untimely Death, (which God forbid) we do hereby farther freely and unanimouſly oblige ourſelves to unite, aſſociate, and ſtand by each other, in revenging the ſame upon his Enemies, and their Adherents; and in ſupporting and defending the Succeſſion of the Crown, according to an Act made in the Firſt Year of the Reign of King William and Queen Mary, intitled, An Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and ſettling the Succeſſion of the Crown."

This, we are told, was immediately ſign'd by above four hundred Members, tho' till now a Majority could never be obtain'd to acknowledge King William in the Words Rightful and Lawful King before: And Debates thereon. when it appear'd three Days after, that ſeveral Members had abſented themſelves, purpoſely to avoid the ſigning it on that Account, an Order was obtain'd for all Members either

A. D. 1695-6. ther to ſign it, or declare their Refuſal, notwithſtanding any Leave of Abſence, on or before the 16th of March: Which was certainly a Procedure not over candid; as it reduc'd thoſe affected by it to this untoward Dilemma, Either to ſacrifice their Scruples to their Convenience, or to expoſe themſelves both to the Diſpleaſure of the Court, and the Odium of the People. The Diſtinction of a King de facto and a King de jure, was reviv'd upon this Occaſion; and all the Ability of the Party was exhauſted in their Endeavours to ſhew both from Authority and Argument, That they ought not to be preſs'd on this Head; and that Compliance or Non-compliance ought not to be eſteem'd the Teſt of a good Subject.

How ſtop'd by the Lords.

Beſides: The Debates which aroſe in the Houſe of Lords, alſo ſerv'd to countenance the Scruples of the Party on this Occaſion: For the Words Rightful and Lawful, were there ſo warmly attack'd, that an Expedient was offer'd and admitted in their Room, in theſe Words, "That his preſent Majeſty King William hath a Right by Law to the Crown of this Realm; and that neither King James, nor the pretended Prince of Wales, nor any other Perſon, hath any Right whatſoever to the ſame."

A Proclamation offering 1000 l. Reward for the apprehending the Conſpirators.

What the Event was, we ſhall ſee in its Place: On Monday the 24th, at Night, the Proclamation was publiſh'd for apprehending the Conſpirators: Thoſe nam'd in it were the Duke of Berwick, Sir George Barclay, Major Lowick, George Porter, Captain Stow, Captain Walbank, Captain James Courtney, Lieutenant Sherburne, Brice Blaire, Dinant, Chambers, Boiſe, George Higgens and his two Brothers, Davis, Cardel Goodman, Cranburne, Keys, Pendergraſs, Bierly, Trevor, Sir George Maxwell, Durance, (or Durant) Chriſtopher Knightley, Holmes, Sir William Perkins, and Rookwood: A Reward of 1000 l. was offer'd for the Diſcovery and apprehending of theſe or any of them; and his Majeſty's Pardon, and the like Reward of 1000 l. was promis'd to ſuch of them as ſhould diſcover and apprehend any of their Accomplices.

It ought not to be forgot, that Pendergraſs, after his Confeſſion to the King on Friday Night, not only made one of Porter's Party the next Day, but brought a Recruit with him, and accompany'd Porter to Epſom, whither he made his Retreat on Saturday, for fear, as they ſaid, a Diſcovery ſhould follow their ſecond Diſappointment: And we cannot help inferring, that he was licens'd to do ſo, in order to decoy his Aſſociates yet farther into the Snare: For what is ſtill more remarkable, as ſoon as the Proclamation was public, both theſe Perſons ſurrender'd themſelves, as it may be ſuppos'd together: De la Rue, who, it may be alſo ſuppos'd, had been furniſh'd with proper Inſtructions at Kenſington, alſo did the ſame; and was follow'd by Boiſe, Harris, Goodman, and Bertram; Charnock, King, Keys, Sherburne, Knightley, and ſeveral others, were taken: And the Proceeding which follow'd next of courſe, was to ſtrengthen the Depoſitions already made, by the Evidence of ſuch others of the Conſpirators, as thought Life worth holding on the infamous Terms of betraying their Aſſociates. Of theſe, Porter was the Foremoſt, whom we find a voluntary Witneſs, on Thurſday, March 3, before Mr. Vernon, and depoſing as follows, viz. A. D. 1695-6.

Several of them ſurrender themſelves.

That he knew Barclay: That he had heard him ſay, He came over to put in Execution a Deſign upon the King's Perſon: That Charnock had told him, the ſaid Barclay had 800 l. given him by Mr. Caryl, Secretary to King James, for providing Men and Horſes for the ſaid Deſign: That He, the Deponent, had heard Barclay complain of the ſmallneſs of the Sum: That the ſaid Barclay had told him, He intended to buy forty Horſes; but finding ſome already provided, he would buy but twenty: That Charnock had farther told him, Barclay had a Commiſſion from King James for an Attempt on the King's Perſon; Sir William Perkins had read it; the Commiſſion was all of King James's Hand-writing; and it ran for raiſing and levying War upon the Perſon of the King: That he ſaid Sir William had own'd to him, the Deponent, his having ſeen the ſaid Commiſſion; and the ſaid Barclay his having ſuch a Commiſſion: That beſides the twenty Horſes provided by Barclay, Charnock had undertaken for Eight, Perkins five, He, the ſaid Deponent ſeven, and Major Lowick three, for himſelf and two others, of whom Bertram was one, as he had heard Charnock ſay: That three of Sir William Perkins's Horſes were to be mounted by Chambers, Lee, and a Servant of the ſaid Sir William's: That Sir William's two other Horſes were to be mounted by two Perſons of the Deponent's providing: That he had heard Barclay ſay, twenty or twenty-two Perſons were come from France, who had been Officers, and were to be concern'd in the Deſign: That ſeveral Conſultations had been held as to the Manner of attacking and aſſaſſinating the King: That theſe Conſultations were held ſome at this Informant's Lodgings in Norfolk-Street, others at the Globe Tavern in Hatton-Garden, at the Sun Tavern in the Strand, and at the Nag's Head in James-Street, Covent-Garden: That at the Former were preſent Barclay, Holmes, Charnock, and the Deponent: That at the reſt, beſides theſe four, were preſent, Sir William Perkins, Rookwood, King, and Knightley; and that theſe ſeveral Conſultations had been held within three Weeks or a Month, or thereabouts: That two Ways had been propos'd for aſſaſſinating the King; the one by an Ambuſcade of Foot to be laid in a Wood, nor far from the Lodge near Richmond; the other by a Number of Horſe, who were to attack his Majeſty and his Guards, on their Return from Richmond, SOME SATURDAY: That this latter way was beſt approv'd of and agreed to: That ſome Days before Saturday the 15th, he, the ſaid Deponent, King, and Knightley, went to view the Ground at Turnham-Green and about Richmond, and gave an Account thereof the ſame Night to Barclay and others at the Nag's-Head: That a Day or two after Du-

Porter's firſt Depoſition.

A. D. 1695 6. rant went to Turnham-Green and Brentford, and took a Liſt of the Stables and Inns in and near theſe Places: That Barclay told him, two orderly Men were appointed to wait at Kenſington, to give Notice when the King went on hunting: That theſe orderly Men were Chambers and Durant: That the Perſons employ'd in this Deſign were to be divided in three Parties; two of which were to attack the Guards with their Swords only, and the third the King's Coach: That Rookwood was to command one of the two former Parties, and the ſaid Deponent the other: That Barclay was to be at the Head of eight or ten Men, who were to attack the King's Coach; and that it was ſaid and agreed among them, that they would cut off his Majeſty, and all that were with him in the Coach: That he, the Deponent, told Pendergraſs, he ſhould have his Muſquetoon, which carry'd above ſix Bullets: That Barclay had told him, he had poſted a Man at Kew-Ferry, to give Notice of the King's Return, that every Body might be ready: That it was agreed among them, that when Notice was brought of the King's going to Richmond, all concern'd ſhould ſlip out of Town, by three or four in a Company, and ſet up their Horſes in the Inns mark'd out at Turnham-Green and Brentford, till they had Notice of his coming back: That it was an Expreſſion us'd among them, he could not recollect by whom, That the aſſaulting the King in this Manner, was no more than attacking him at his Winter-Quarters, or than killing him as he was paſſing from one Town to another in Flanders: That Knightley, King, Holmes, Durant, and Bertram, were to be of Barclay's Party; and, as Charnock told him, Counter, who was lately come from France: That the Higgens's had refus'd to be engag'd in the Attempt: That he, the Deponent, had engag'd Cranburn, Keys, and Kendrick, as well as Pendergraſs, in it: That the Day before he went to view the Ground, he din'd at the Nag's-Head, with Barclay, Perkins, Friend, Ferguſon, and Holmes: That Charnock and Harriſon, alias Johnſon, came in after Dinner, and that they diſcours'd there privately, among one another, of the Deſign upon the King's Perſon; and publicly, of the Preparations making along the Sea-Coaſt of France: That the Perſons who talk'd of the Deſign in private, were Barclay, Perkins, Charnock, and himſelf: That Friend, obſerving theſe Whiſpers, ſaid, He deſir'd to be fairly dealt with:—He was as ready to ſerve the King as any Man:—And that he found ſomething was behind the Curtain which was conceal'd from him: That it was then Barclay inform'd the Deponent, in a Whiſper, that the Duke of Berwick had been here; with this Addition, That he would not have told him of it, if he had not been gone again: That he, the Deponent, engag'd Kendrick and Sherburne in the Buſineſs: That Keys, who had liv'd with him a Year and a Half, was acquainted with it, and had hir'd Horſes for Saturday the 15th, and enquir'd after other Horſes for Saturday the 22d: That he had alſo ſent for Pendergraſs and Plowden out of Hampſhire: That they Both agreed to go with him on the firſt of theſe Days; but that Plowden had ſince abſented himſelf: That on Friday the 21ſt, He, the Deponent, had a great deal of Diſcourſe with Barclay, Perkins, and Charnock, at the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, about the Diſappointment of the Saturday before, and the Poſſibility from thence of a Diſcovery: That, however, it was agreed among them to proſecute their Purpoſe on the former Plan, in caſe the King ſet out for Richmond on the Morrow; of which Barclay told the ſaid Deponent, Notice would be brought him: That Kendrick, Keys, and Cranburne came to him to the ſaid Tavern, and were by him appriz'd, That the Deſign would be put in Execution the next Day: That Kendrick having hurt his Arm by a Fall into a Cellar, expreſs'd his Sorrow that he was diſabled from attending him: That He, the Deponent, enquiring for Sherburne, Kendrick anſwer'd, That he, Sherburne, had aſk'd ſo many Queſtions, that he did not much like him, and therefore had let him alone: That on Saturday the 22d, Perkins had ſent the Deponent Word, That if he wanted three Horſes, Mr. Lewis, Gentleman of the Horſe to Lord Feverſham, would furniſh him: That Perkins formerly told him, the ſaid Lewis had provided him thirty or forty Saddles, under the Colour of buying them for the Marquis de Miremont, as the ſaid Perkins believ'd: That on Saturday the 22d, Pendergraſs and Bierly brought each of them a Man, that were to go along with them that Day: That the ſaid Perkins had told him, He had a Commiſſion from King James for a Regiment of Horſe: That the ſaid Perkins and Charnock had alſo told him, Friend had a like Commiſſion, which Blaire had procur'd for him, who was to be his Lieutenant-Colonel; and that Friend had own'd this himſelf, and declar'd he would be in a Readineſs: That Charnock was Colonel Parker's chief Correſpondent, and had told him 300 l. was paid for his Eſcape: That Friend had advanc'd 100 l. of the Money: That Mr. Tempeſt, of Durham, had a Commiſſion from King James to raiſe a Regiment of Horſe, and had every thing in readineſs: That he, the Deponent, was to have the firſt Troop in King James's Regiment of Horſe, whereof Parker was Colonel: That Parker had brought him over the Commiſſion, as alſo Commiſſions for his Lieutenant and Cornet, which, however, he had never deliver'd out: That Goodman had alſo a Commiſſion from King James for a Troop in Parker's Regiment, which he, the Deponent, had given to him, [illegible] and was provided with Arms and Saddles [illegible] the ſaid Goodman and the Deponent had had Diſcourſes two years ago, about a Deſign to ſeize and carry off the King; and that they acquainted Barclay with it, who was then going to France, that he might propoſe it to King James: That Durant did bring [illegible] News on the 15th, that the Guards were gone out: And, laſtly, that Barclay had propos'd to them, That when the Aſſaſſina-

A. D. 1698

2

tion

A. D. 1695-6. tion should be over, they should keep together till they came to Hammersmith; after which they were to disperse, and get into Town by different ways, in small Companies, and lie conceal'd till the Invasion, which was suddenly expected.

This is the Amount of Porter's Deposition, which loose and desultory as it is, nominates him to have been a Ring-Leader, if not a Decoy, in this horrid, frantic Design from the very Beginning; consequently a Wretch who deserv'd a much worse Character than that bestow'd on him by Bishop Burnet; namely; "A vitious Man engag'd in many ill Things: —Very forward and furious in all their Consultations:—A Man of Pleasure, who lov'd not the Hardships of a Prison, and much less the Solemnities of an Execution."—In short, as nothing but such an Excess of Prepossession as extinguishes the Use of Reason, and absorbs the Obligations of Principle in the Convenience of Party, could embark a conscientious Man in so shocking a Service, so nothing but an Excess of Meanness and Baseness could have converted Assassins into Witnesses: And with this draw-back on their Characters, it is impossible to have that Regard for their Evidence in all Respects, which it would otherwise deserve.

The Deposition of Bertram. The Depositions of Bertram follow next in order of Time, who was examin'd first by a Committee of Council on the said 3d of March, as we have seen Porter was: And again on the 5th by Mr. Vernon.

On the first of these Occasions, he depos'd, That Major Lowick, on the 4th or 5th of February, ask'd him, If he would go upon a Business, without asking any Questions? To which he answer'd, That he would: That Charnock, about the 8th or 9th, having invited him to his Lodgings, and taken him into his Closet, ask'd him, If he would undertake a Business that would answer his Expectations? Which Business, as he explan'd it, was to go out with some Company he knew, to see if they could kill the King, or Words to that Effect: That he neither consented to the Proposal, nor did he refuse it: That Charnock then told him to be in the way, or if he went out, to leave Word where he might be found: That after this they remov'd into another Room, where was a good deal of Company drinking Wine: That among them were Sir William Perkins and Chambers, whom he knew, as also one Trevors, who he believes knew nothing of the Business: That Charnock was often call'd out, and that many came to him whom he discours'd in private: That on Friday the 14th, going to Lowick's Chamber, Lowick told him, he must be ready against the Morrow, and provide himself with Boots and other Necessaries, for which he gave him a Guinea, and requir'd him to meet him at the Peri-House in Hart-street by Six in the Morning; adding, That he believ'd they should attack the King, and that a Horse should be provided for him: That nevertheless, he did not meet Lowick, it not being his Intention to be concern'd in the Business: That meeting Lowick on Sunday the 16th, he check'd him for not coming the Day before; saying, So it would have been if the King had been in the Field; meaning, as he, the Deponent, thought, King James, [which by the way is utterly irreconcilable with his own Evidence, unless it can be suppos'd, which is impossible, that he was retain'd by the Guinea he receiv'd on Friday to attack a Prince who was not on this Side the Water, and whom he had always been in the Interest of] That he himself ask'd Grymes, whether he had a Mind to a Country-Journey, in company with thirty or forty more? And that Grymes answering, He would go as far as this Informant; as also, He believ'd it was on account of the Little Man, he told him, He must ask no Questions: That meeting Charnock on Saturday the 22d, at Lincoln's-Inn back Gate, and being alarm'd with a Notion, That Warrants were out against several of them, Charnock propos'd a Meeting in half an Hour, saying, They had as good do the Business, and be chac'd about for something as nothing; which Business he understood to be killing the King; and that he knew Leigh, Durant, and Blaire. A. D. 1695-5.

Of his second Examination, nothing need be said, because it contain'd nothing material: And of the several Examinations and Depositions of Blaire, which are no less than eight in Number, so much the less need be said, because they are none of them direct to the Affair before us, tho' he puts his Memory to the Torture, in order to recollect every minute Circumstance which might qualify him to be a Witness, and thereby entitle him to the Mercy of the Government. Blaire's Depositions.

Blaire, (who was examin'd first, on the 9th of March) was a Scot, and had been bred a Presbyterian, but turn'd Roman-Catholic, and serv'd in Lord Dunbarton's Regiment in France, and afterwards as Captain-Lieutenant in the Regiment commanded by Sir Edward Hales: Father Harrison, alias Johnson, who was one of King James's Managers in England, had retain'd him in that Prince's Service, according to Blaire's own Deposition, ever since the La Hogue-Affair had been in Agitation; And some Time about the Beginning of February, the said Harrison, being in Discourse with him at Somerset-House, ask'd him, Whether he knew any Soldiers, or Men of Courage? For something might be done in a little while, which might be an Introduction to King James's Restoration, or something to that Effect: Blaire reply'd, He knew few such Men: But desir'd to know how they were to be employ'd: Harrison, after some Pause, mention'd the burning the Victualling-Office, as a Means to retard the fitting out the English Fleet; by which the French would have so much the more Time for their Preparations: Blaire declar'd the Design to be impracticable; and Harrison, proceeding to say, He had been told by a Gentleman, and a very good Officer, That if he were but sure of a Hundred good Horses, he would end the War in a Fortnight's Time, was a second time repuls'd by Blaire, who said, The Gentleman might know more

A. D. 1695-6. know more than He; but that it could not be done by a regular War, nor according to the Rules of Honour or Arms, but by ſome other Means, which he was afraid to harbour in his Thoughts: Upon which Harriſon ſhrunk up his Shoulders, and ſaid no more. Blaire alſo depos'd, That going to ſee Harriſon again at Somerſet-Houſe, about the 20th of February, in the Evening, the ſaid Harriſon told him, Warrants were out againſt Bertram, Grymes, Leigh, and ſome more, whoſe Names he had forgot; with this Addition, That if that Buſineſs miſcarried, it would hinder King James from coming: That Harriſon did not ſpecify the Buſineſs he meant; but that he underſtood it to be either ſeizing or aſſaſſinating the King; he having heard from Fiſher (the firſt Diſcoverer) that ſuch a Thing was in Agitation; and being confirm'd in it by the Language us'd by Harriſon, in relation to the ſpeedy ending of the War: That He, the Deponent, reply'd, They had brought their Hogs to a fine Market; for now they were all ruin'd: That he farther proceeded to blame the Deſign, as having no Authority either from God or Man: That Harriſon reply'd, There was an Authority or Warrant, to the beſt of his, the Deponent's Remembrance, from King James, which Harriſon had ſeen, tho' it was not fit that every Body ſhould ſee it: That his Anſwer was, He did not think it was in his Nature, meaning King James: That having reported to Sir John Friend, what he had heard from Fiſher, concerning the Aſſaſſination, Sir John ſaid, he had heard of it, and was ſorry for it, becauſe he was afraid it would ruin King James's Affairs, and all his Friends: That He, the Deponent, had once come to a Reſolution to diſcover what he knew of the Plot by Letter, but did not carry it into Execution: That, however, meeting Fiſher the next Day, after the Diſcourſe between him and Harriſon, he deſir'd him to make particular Enquiry after King James's Warrant, which I thought, continues he, might prove to my Advantage, upon any future Danger, which I then plainly did foreſee; and told him, "Now, dear Fiſher, if you ſhould come to "be examin'd upon this Account, you will "not deny but I have had an Abhorrence "of this damn'd Buſineſs all along." That, as he was innocent of the Aſſaſſination, ſo he was alſo ignorant of the intended Invaſion; as alſo of the Duke of Berwick's being in Town; and that Fiſher could make it appear, if he pleas'd, That Sir George Barclay had told him, He was poſitively enjoin'd, not to acquaint Blaire with any thing that paſs'd among them.

Thus, it ſeems, that as to the Plot in general, he was but an immaterial Witneſs; but then, as he was ſo very willing to make his Court at the Expence of his Party, and was ſo particular in his Evidence againſt Sir John Friend, as will be made appear in the Sequel, it was thought proper to leave him within the Reach of Grace.

But, indeed, the Miniſters, by this Time, were ſo much at Eaſe, as to general Proofs, that the main Scope of their Examinations, A. D. 1695-6. from henceforward, ſeems to have been directed againſt Inviduals.

Thus we find Porter brought forward again on the 14th of March, and having better recollected himſelf, it muſt be ſuppos'd, ſetting forth a new Depoſition before the Lords of the Council, which begins with an Account of a Meeting at a Tavern in the City, in the May or June preceding, where were preſent the Earl of Ayleſbury, Lord Montgomery, (Eldeſt Son of the Marquis of Powis) Sir John Friend, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Fenwick, Charnock, Cooke, the Deponent, and after Dinner, Goodman: And in which he farther proceeds to ſay, That ſeveral Things were talk'd of, before Dinner, concerning the beſt way of bringing back King James: That after Dinner, ſeveral Propoſals having been made, it was agreed by the whole Company to ſend Charnock to King James, to deſire him, in all their Names, to borrow 10,000 Men of the King of France, viz. 8000 Foot and 2000 Horſe and Dragoons: That to enforce this Requeſt, it was ſaid, If the King of France meant well to King James, he could not refuſe him ſo ſmall a Number of Men: That few Forces were left in England, many People diſſatisfy'd, and therefore no fitter Time could be choſen: That Charnock accepted the Commiſſion, but ſaid, He did not care to go on a fooliſh Meſſage, and therefore deſir'd to know, what he might aſſure King James of from them: That thereupon the above-mention'd Perſons anſwer'd, They could make at leaſt 2000 Men among them; and riſing up, did authoriſe Charnock to aſſure King James, That upon Notice from him, where he intended to land, they would be ſure to meet him with that Number of Horſe: That at another Meeting, held about a Week after, at a Tavern near Fenwick's, all the ſaid Perſons, except Lord Montgomery, being preſent, Charnock deſir'd to know if they kept to the ſame Reſolution; to which they all anſwer'd in the Affirmative; and moreover deſir'd Charnock to beg of the King to make what Haſte he could: That Charnock told him, the Deponent, He would go away in two or three Days: That he did not ſee him afterwards till he, Charnock, was committed for being concern'd in a Riot: And, laſtly, That on his being enlarg'd, he came to ſee him, the ſaid Deponent, and told him he had been in France, had ſeen the King, whoſe Anſwer was, That he took their Propoſal very kindly, but could not do any thing that Year: And that he had brought ſeveral Meſſages from the King to Lord Ayleſbury, Sir John Fenwick, and ſeveral other Perſons of Quality, whom he did not name.

The Depoſitions of one Stover and one Ewebanks, the Latter a Groom, and the Former a ſort of Bailiff or Steward to Sir W. Perkins, fell next in order; but as the ſame Perſons gave in the ſame Teſtimony at the Trial of Perkins, it will not be neceſſary to ſpecify it till we come to that Tranſaction.

Knightley and Harris, who came forward next, viz. March 21, ſeem to have been equally

A. D. 1695-6. equally frank and minute in their Confeſſions; which is ſo much the more remarkable, becauſe the Evidence of the Former has a Tendency to exculpate King James from the Guilt and Infamy of ſo baſe a Deſign, and that of the Latter, to faſten it upon him.

Knightley ſets out with ſaying, That about nine Weeks before, he met Sir George Barclay, for the firſt Time, by Appointment in Covent-Garden, in the Dark: That the ſaid Sir George told him, He had done the Buſineſs his Maſter had ſet him about; but that he had had ſomething put into his Head, by which he could do the King farther Service: And then aſk'd him, If he could get him half a Dozen of honeſt Fellows; which Expreſſion he ſo explan'd, as to make Knightley believe he meant Gentlemen: And afterwards he is expreſs, That he had left St. Germains ten Months before; the King (James) having told (i) them, He could ſubſiſt them no longer.

As to the reſt of his Evidence, he acknowledg'd, That he undertook for King and Durant; that he nam'd Boyſe to Sir George at the Recommendation of King: And that Sir George talk'd in general at firſt; but by degrees gave him to underſtand, that the Buſineſs was to attack the Prince of Orange at the Head of his Guards, in order to facilitate the King's landing: He confirm'd the Circumſtance of Barclay's Uncertainty, as to making the Attack by Foot or Horſe; the viewing the Ground both on Turnham-Green, and for the Ambuſcade near Richmond: The Meetings at the Nag's-Head: The Reſolution to make the Attempt on two ſucceſſive Saturdays: And, after giving the moſt explicit Anſwers to all the Queſtions put to him, in relation to Meetings, Perſons, &c. he added, That Sir George ſaid, Thoſe who mounted his Horſes were to meet the King when he landed; but in the mean time they were to ſhift for themſelves; which he inſinuated would be no very difficult Matter, the People being pretty well inclin'd; and he hoping, that, as ſoon as the Affair was done, they would all be of his Opinion: That he was brought into it before he was appriz'd what it was: And that being engag'd he went on, upon a Punctilio of Honour, tho' it was not to his Liking, that no Care was taken for a Retreat.

Harris. Harris, having premis'd, that he had ſerv'd King James in Ireland as an Enſign of Foot, and ſince in France as one of his Second Troop of Guards, proceeded to depoſe, That about the 14th of the preceding January, N. S. King James ſent for him and Hare, his Comrade, and being with him in the Queen's Bed-Chamber, he told him, "He had now an Opportunity of doing ſomething for him, being very ſenſible he had ſerv'd him well: He ſhould ſend him to England, where he was to follow Barclay's Orders; in which caſe he would take Care of him:—He had order'd them Money for their Journey, which they were to receive of Caryl, his Secretary:—They would find Barclay every Monday and Thurſday Evening, between Six and Seven o'Clock in Covent-Garden-Square, and might know him by a white Hankerchief hanging out of his Coat-Pocket:—Then pulling a Liſt out of his Pocket, he ſaid, they were to go by the Names of Jenkins and Guinney, while in England." That Colonel Parker, who was preſent all this while, went with him, by the King's Order, to his Secretary; who gave them ten Louis d'Ors a piece; ſaying, That would be enough to carry them over; and if they were Wind-bound, the Preſident, Joſſe, would ſubſiſt them at Calais: That arriving at that Place, the ſaid Preſident did accordingly ſubſiſt them while they remain'd there, and did alſo procure them a Paſſage on board a Chaloupe, which us'd to go to and fro for Intelligence, under the Command of one Gill: That Gill landed them in Kent, near the Houſe of one Hunt, and alſo went aſhore with about fifteen of his Men: That having met with Barclay, Holmes, and Berkenhead, they were order'd to keep cloſe, till there was an Occaſion for their Service, and put on a ſort of Eſtabliſhment at Five Shillings a Day: That the Perſons he remembers to have come from Paris, within the laſt three Months, were Barclay, Holmes, Caſſels, Richardſon, Counter, Maxwell, Bierly, Rookwook, Bernardi, Hungate, Blackbourne, Handford, Baily, and Thorold; all Officers, except the two laſt, and order'd to go by falſe Names; as alſo, to act under the Command of Barclay: That at an occaſional Meeting with Caſſel, Richardſon, Hare, and Maxwell, the Latter acquainted the Company, That Notice having been taken at St. Germains of ſo many Perſons going to England, accompany'd with ſome Expreſſions of Wonder at the Cauſe, King James came to hear of it, and thereupon declar'd at his Levee, That whoever ſhould be known to take any ſuch Notice, or expreſs any ſuch Inquiſitiveneſs again, ſhould be ſeverely puniſh'd, and never receiv'd into Favour any more: That on the Saturday the Aſſaſſination was to be effected, as he underſtood afterwards, repairing to Brigadier Rookwood's Lodgings, and finding both him and Bernardi in a Hurry, he aſk'd, What they were going about? But was directed by the Latter to go to Counter's Lodgings for Information: That going thither accordingly, he found the ſaid Counter at home, accompany'd by Holmes, Knightley, and King: That Counter told him, He had Orders from Barclay for him and his Comrade Hare, which were, To be ready inſtantly, and go to the Wool-Pack at Turnham-Green, (as near as he could remember) That Holmes told him, his, the Deponent's, Horſe, as alſo Hare's and Hungate's, ſtood at Somerſet-Houſe: That Barclay then coming in, declar'd, Theſe were his Janizaries; adding, That

A. D. 1695-6.

(i) Who beſides Knightley were thus diſmiſs'd, he does not explane.

A.D. 1695-6. That he hop'd they would bring him the Garter; and talking ſomething about Attacking, which very much ſtartled the Deponent, who till then had heard nothing of the Matter: That ſoon after Durant came in, and told them, The Prince of Orange did not go out that Day: That Barclay, nevertheleſs, order'd Holmes to deliver to them their Horſes: That they were deliver'd to them accordingly the ſame Day: That being at an Ale-houſe in James-Street, Covent-Garden, with Hare, Caſſels, Richardſon, Handford, Melárun, and Maxwell, the Night before, Counter came in, and deliver'd to each of them a Caſe of Piſtols: That either on the Saturday Night, or next Morning, meeting Captain Rookwood, he aſk'd him, Whether they were to be the Murderers of the Prince of Orange? Adding, That if ſo, they had ſerv'd to a fair Purpoſe, to be ſent over on ſuch an Account: To which Rookwood reply'd, He was afraid They were engag'd in it: But if he had known for what Purpoſe he had been ſent over, he would have begg'd his Majeſty's Pardon for refuſing to come: That at another Time, walking in Red-Lion Fields, with Lowick, Bernardi, and Rookwood, and conſidering what a barbarous Thing they had to do, Lowick ſaid, He would obey Orders; and farther, Sure Sir George Barclay would not undertake it without Orders: Upon which Rookwood often repeated, The King had ſent him to obey Barclay's Orders; and both Bernardi and the Deponent acknowledg'd, They lay under the ſame Obligation: That tho' the Deponent, and his Aſſociates, had ſeveral Meetings in the Courſe of the Week, they did not talk about the Buſineſs till the Friday following; when being at the two Black Poſts in Maiden-Lane, Counter came in, and told them to be in readineſs againſt To-morrow Morning; upon which Caſſel ſwore, He would have the Plunder of the Field, &c. King ſaid, If it did not do To-morrow, he would think of it no more. Handford aſk'd, How they ſhould make their Eſcapes after it was done? And Caſſels reply'd, They muſt ſtay with the Party they were order'd with: That on Saturday the 22d, Major Holmes came to him and his Comrade Hare, told them to get ready, refer'd them to Counter for Orders, and gave each of them a Guinea to pay for their Horſes: That the Deponent going to Counter accordingly, he found Rookwood with him: That Counter told him, the Deponent, he was to be of Rookwood's Party: That Rookwood gave him a Liſt of Names, ſaying, with a Laugh, He would make him his Aid de Camp: That theſe Names were Harris, Hare, Handford, and Blackburne, with Rookwood's own at the Top: That Rookwood deſir'd him to go and get theſe Gentlemen ready, which he did: That then going to Rookwood for farther Orders, he told him, Sir George Barclay ſaid, The Prince of Orange did not go out that Day: That the Party hearing of Informations lodg'd againſt them at the Council-Board, about this Buſineſs, then thought it Time to ſhift for themſelves: And that the Deponent ſhifted about from Place to Place, till, hearing his Name was in a Proclamation, he thought fit to ſurrender himſelf.

A.D. 1695-6.

Chamberlain and Allen, the one Poſtillion and the other Coachman to Lord Feverſham, and one Maſcall, verify'd the Facts ſworn againſt Lewis, his Lordſhip's Gentleman of the Horſe, in relation to his procuring Horſes for the Conſpirators, and lodging them in Lord Feverſham's Stables.

James Hunt, of Romney-Marſh, Yeoman, at whoſe Houſe Harris and Hare were landed, and who had been employ'd by the Party in all their Correſpondence with France, as well by Perſons as by Letters, for ſome Years, depos'd, That Captain Berkenhead was the Perſon who engag'd him in that Correſpondence: That the Letters which paſs'd and repaſs'd, were bury'd, till a Boat from France, or a Meſſenger from London, (Berkenhead's Nephew) came to fetch them: That among the Perſons who had gone to France, was the Earl of Aylesbury, who went over about three Years before, and having ſtaid about twelve Days, return'd: That both going and coming he ſtopt at his Houſe; one way about a Week, waiting for a Wind, the other, about five or ſix Hours only, to refreſh himſelf: That during the laſt Interval, he confeſs'd both to the Deponent and his Wife, that he had ſeen King James and his Queen at St. Germains: That he came laſt from Boulogne, where he had been with the Duke d'Aumont: That Berkenhead inform'd him who he was: That he ſince waited upon the ſaid Earl, twice at his Houſe in Leiceſter-Fields, once at Tunbridge, where he met with him accidentally, and again at his Lodgings at Southborough, where his Lordſhip gave him a Letter, which he ſaid was for the Queen, deſiring him, the Deponent, to forward it to one Mr. Pigaut, at Calais, who was to addreſs it to her: That Pigaut acknowledg'd the Receipt of this Letter: That the Earl, accompany'd by Berkenhead, came down to his Houſe in Romney-Marſh, about June or July laſt, and enquir'd for Gill (the Maſter of the Advice-boat which ply'd between England and France) and that they waited two or three Days at Dime-Church, in Expectation of the ſaid Gill; but he not coming, they then return'd to London.—He then ſpecify'd ſeveral other Perſons, who had paſs'd or repaſs'd between the two Kingdoms; but without any other Circumſtances which could affect them materially: And, coming down to the Portion of Time immediately before us, depos'd, farther, That Barclay and Holmes came over together, ſome time in January; That much about the ſame Time, about ſixteen or eighteen Perſons more came over, all of them unknown to him, except Colonel Parker, Lord Caſtlemain, and one Mr. Brown: That about the Beginning of February, a tall, young Gentleman, who was particularly recommended by Pigaut, came over alone: That he furniſh'd the ſaid Perſon with Horſes; and that Berkenhead's Nephew, who carried the Letters backwards and forwards, conducted him to his Uncle: That the ſaid Perſon return'd within a Week from London, accompany'd by Berkenhead

A. D. 1695-6. head himſelf: That they came in to Tucker's at Sandway, while He, the Deponent, and Parker, (who was newly come from France, and was going to London) were there: That meeting thus with this Perſon, Parker return'd with him to the Sea-Side, and both of them embark'd together the ſame Night, the Boat having Orders to attend every Night till the ſaid Perſons return'd: That he had heard ſince, and did believe the ſaid Perſon to be the Duke of Berwick: That Berkenhead himſelf went to France, in the December before: That he believ'd he return'd with Barclay and Holmes: That a little after the Diſcovery of the Plot, the ſaid Berkenhead went to Deal, to take an Account of the Ships then lying there; and that he ſent the ſaid Account to France, (by a Boat then waiting for Intelligence) together with a printed Liſt of the Names which were afterwards in the Proclamation, which Liſt he receiv'd from the Deponent, who had it from London.

And Goodman. Laſtly: Goodman, having depos'd ſeveral Things concerning a Commiſſion from King James to Parker, for levying Men, and granting ſubordinate Commiſſions for a Regiment of Horſe, one of which he himſelf accepted; and alſo concerning an Invaſion from France, as ſoon as the two grand Fleets from Toulon and Breſt ſhould be join'd, which was to be countenanc'd by a Riſing in the (k) North, proceeded to depoſe farther, That, ſome Time before the King's going to Flanders, (in 1695, muſt be underſtood) Charnock came to him, and having ſaid he had ſomething to propoſe to him, carry'd him to one Mr. Waw, who ſaid, He expected a Commiſſion from King James to ſeize King William: That at another Meeting at his, the Deponent's, Houſe, at which were preſent Charnock, Porter, Waw, one Major Matthews, and one Mr. Donelagh, the Subject of the Diſcourſe was about the ſurprizing and ſeizing the King, as he came from Richmond: That after ſeveral ways had been propos'd, he, the Deponent, ſaid, Suppoſe the King was in our Power, what then? For ſome Regard was to be had to the End of ſuch an Undertaking, and he was not willing to offer any thing to his Perſon: That Waw anſwer'd, He might be carry'd off in a Coach, and that he was aſſur'd of a Fort, (to the beſt of his Remembrance, that of Deal) which might ſhelter the Undertakers, till they could ſhip him off for France: That he, the Deponent, nevertheleſs remain'd unſatisfy'd ſtill, as to the Probability, or rather Practicability, of ſuch an Attempt; nor could believe, that Waw would ever receive any ſuch Commiſſion as he ſeem'd to expect: "For (continued he, (in theſe very Words) about two Years ſince, I remember I ſaw Sir George Barclay, with Colonel Fountain and Mr. Porter, Sir George was then going A. D. 1695-6. to France, and it was the only Time I ever ſaw him; and then Captain Porter and I did deſire, That if King James deſir'd any ſuch thing as ſeizing King William, he would ſend over a Commiſſion and a Pardon withal, in caſe of an Accident; which Meſſage Sir George carry'd over, and King James refus'd to ſend it." He, moreover depos'd, That they had afterwards another Meeting, upon which Occaſion Waw brought with him one Hayes, who undertook to furniſh a Ship, to tranſport the Party to France, after they had ſeiz'd the King; but He made ſuch exorbitant Demands, that it was impoſſible to comply with them: That, beſides, no Order or Commiſſion being produc'd by Waw, He, the Deponent, Porter and Matthews, refus'd to meddle: That Porter and the ſaid Deponent, however, ſtill talk'd of having a Veſſel, and of ſending de la Rue and Charnock about it: That they had a Meeting with Sir William Perkins, when the ſame Affair was again talk'd of, but without coming to any Concluſion: That the King went away ſuddenly; no Commiſſion ever came; by Letters from Fountain in France, he was inform'd, King James was angry that they had us'd his Name to what he had not promis'd; and He, the Deponent, wrote over by Order, the Truth of the whole Matter: That ſome Time after this, Porter, Lord Ayleſbury, Sir John Friend, Sir W. Perkins, Sir J. Fenwick, Lord Montgomery, and Mr. Cooke, met, about ſending over ſome Propoſals to King James, in order to expedite an Invaſion: That on Captain Porter's engaging for the Deponent, he alſo was admitted: That the Reſult of this Meeting, was the ſending Charnock to France with the Meſſages, and with the Succeſs formerly explan'd: That as often as he ſaw Lord Ayleſbury afterwards, he us'd to aſk, What News he had heard? As knowing his Lordſhip had been in France, which he did not deny, and believing he knew what was intended: That the better to facilitate an Invaſion, Fenwick us'd to ſend over a Liſt of the Forces, and an Account of their Diſpoſition: That his Intelligence not being accurate, Parker did, by Letter, deſire him, the Deponent, to procure better, if poſſible; and that he did accordingly procure ſuch, by the Means of one Gibſon, a Clerk in the War-Office, and ſent it over from Time to Time.

Thus we have before us a fair and impartial Summary of all the written Evidence the Miniſters thought fit to produce, in the Order of Time it was given in: And what remains, is to add ſuch a Sketch of the Trials which follow'd upon the ſaid Evidence, as will enable us to judge preciſely of the whole Tranſaction.

Charnock, King, and Keys, being the Perſons Trial of Charnock, King, and Keys.

(k) Meaning, as we are to ſuppoſe, the Lancaſhire Plot, above diſcours'd of: For in the next Paragraph he ſays, That during theſe Tranſactions, Porter, (who was to be a Captain in the ſaid Regiment, and who, together with Goodman, had taken a Houſe in ſome Chace, with proper Stables, &c. for the Reception of Horſes) complain'd to him, That ſomething he was ſending to Lancaſhire had miſcarry'd; and withal deſir'd him to take care of two Boxes for him, which he ſuppos'd to be Arms: But if this was true, it is ſomewhat ſtrange, that Porter, who was ſo willing a Witneſs, did not recollect theſe Circumſtances himſelf.

A. D. 1695-6. ſons againſt whom there was the greateſt Variety of poſitive Evidence, were brought forward firſt; and poſſibly ſo early as the 11th of March, that the Lawyers might have ſo much the leſs Trouble from the new Act for regulating Trials, which did not come into force till the 25th: One Indictment ſerv'd for all: Compaſſing the Death of the King, and ſubverting the Government, were the Crimes alledg'd; and the Attorney-General, Sir Thomas Trevor, prepar'd the Court, as uſual in the like Caſes, with a Deduction of the Facts that his Witneſſes were to prove: But Charnock altogether as artificially, on the other Hand, endeavour'd ſo to impreſs the Jury, that they might be induc'd to think, at leaſt, that he had hard Uſage: For he demanded a Copy of his Indictment, and the Benefit of Counſel, agreeable to the Tenor of the new Act; and when told his Demand could not be admitted, for the Reaſon above-mention'd, he urg'd the Declaration in the Preamble of the ſaid Act, which pronounces what he aſk'd to be reaſonable, and inferr'd, That if ſo, what would be reaſonable a Fortnight thence, would be reaſonable then: He alſo mov'd for farther Time to prepare for his Trial, as alſo for the Aſſiſtance of a Solicitor: And having ſo many various Proofs againſt him, it is really Matter of Wonder, that the Bench did not gratify him in one of his Requeſts, whatever Reaſons, drawn from their own Convenience, they had to thwart him in the other.

The Witneſſes againſt the Priſoners were Porter, de la Rue, Pendergraſs, Bertram, or Bertham, and Boyſe: And the Teſtimony of the three Former was not only agreeable to their written Depoſitions, but, in general, what was advanc'd by the one, was confirm'd by the other. Porter, however, having, in the Courſe of his Evidence, forgot to mention Keys, Care was taken on the Side of the Proſecutors to ſupply that Omiſſion, by aſking him, Which of the Priſoners were preſent at the Conſultations? To which he anſwer'd, That Charnock and King were at all of them: As alſo, that Keys, who had been his Servant a Year and a Half, was at moſt of them; and had not only hir'd Horſes to be employ'd in the Buſineſs, but agreed to be an Actor in it: And this Hint made ſuch an Impreſſion on de la Rue and Pendergraſs, that Both of them took Care to make ſuch Mention of Keys, as involv'd him in the Charge and the Sentence. Bertram level'l his Atteſtations at Charnock only, as Boyſe did his at King: And as Each had his ſeveral Aim, ſo King was not ſo materially affected by the one, as Charnock by the other: For Bertram was expreſs, That Charnock propos'd to him to be one of the Party to Take off the Spark; whereas Boyſe declar'd, That King only told him, there was a great Undertaking in Hand; and aſk'd him, If he would make one, on Condition of being furniſh'd with a Horſe, and twenty Shillings to buy Boots, &c. which he agreed to.

Charnock's Defence. Charnock being firſt in the Indictment, was firſt put on his Defence, which in the Opinion of all Men, was ſuch as did Honour to his Abilities, tho' it tended little to his Exculpation: For he diſcover'd and made his own Uſe of every Weakneſs, both of Matter and Manner in the Charge againſt him; and inſiſted ſtrongly, That thoſe who had forfeited their Lives by their own Confeſſion, and had no other way to ſave them, but by ſwearing away the Lives of others, if legal, were not good Witneſſes: He obſerv'd, that Porter himſelf acknowledg'd, He, the Priſoner, had not ſeen the Commiſſion from King James: That he did not ſpecify the Men who were to be of his Party: That as to the Liſt of Names, written with his own Hand, which Porter ſaid, He, Charnock, had ſent to him, he did not ſay, he ſaw him write it; and Similitude of Hands had not been allow'd to be good Proof in criminal Caſes: And that no Proof at all was offer'd, of their providing Arms or Horſes, or of any other Overt-Act, to verify the Charge of an intended Aſſaſſination, except what Porter confeſs'd had been contriv'd and carry'd on by himſelf. That the Evidence of de la Rue was but Hear-ſay, of what was in its own Nature improbable; as the Scheme was of carrying the Prince of Orange alive to France: That there was a Contradiction in the Teſtimony of thoſe two Witneſſes: For, whereas Porter ſaid, That he and the Priſoner were to attack the Guards together, de la Rue ſaid, The Priſoner was to attack the King with Barclay: That, on the other Hand, the Latter did not ſay he had talk'd to him of killing the King, but in general of the Affair: That it appear'd he, de la Rue, was ſent to trepan him, which imply'd Malice: And that according to the Opinion of Sir Robert Aſkins, which he cited, He that acknowledg'd himſelf an Accomplice in a Crime, for the Sake of becoming a Witneſs, muſt be a bad Man, and more eſpecially if it appear'd that the Perſon he witneſs'd againſt, had been trepann'd by him: Shall ſuch a one (ſays Sir Robert) be a credible Witneſs, and believ'd againſt the Priſoner? GOD forbid! That the Evidence of Pendergraſs was Hear-ſay only: That as to Bertram, it was highly improbable he ſhould communicate ſo great a Secret to a private Trooper: That no body could tell what to make of thoſe Words, Take off the Spark, &c. That he, therefore, hop'd the Court would be of Opinion, That the Evidence produc'd againſt him was frivolous and weak: That if true, it conſiſted only of Diſcourſe: That they were forc'd to ſupply with Words, what was wanting in Fact: That he did inſiſt upon it they had produc'd nothing but Preſumptions, inſtead of Proofs: That he deſir'd the Judges to tell the Jury plainly what was legal Evidence and what was not; as alſo, what was ſufficient Proof of any one Overt-Act or Species of Treaſon, &c. That it was a ſtrange ſort of Conſpiracy for forty Men, in divided Bodies, having none to ſupport them, no Fortreſs to fly to, no poſſibility of eſcaping, to attack treble their Number, ſo much better arm'd and provided: That ſuch a Mixture of Folly and Madneſs, deſerv'd rather Pity

A. D. 1695-6. Pity than Puniſhment: That Perſons ſo infatuated, ought rather to be ſent to Bedlam than Newgate, &c.

King's Defence. King, when it came to his Turn, inſiſted, That there was nothing in the Evidence againſt him which verified the Charge in the Indictment: That the Witneſſes did not ſo much as alledge any ſuch Words as the killing the King, had paſs'd between them: That when he rode out to view the Ground, as Porter alledg'd, it was only to take the Air: And that the utmoſt of their Teſtimony amounted to no more than this, That they had talk'd of the Deſign, the Matter, without ſpecifying what the Matter or the Deſign was: And that as to the Nature of Treaſon, and the Evidence requir'd by the Law to prove it, he left it to the Court, to inform the Jury.

Keys's Defence. Poor Keys came laſt, and contented himſelf with ſaying, That he was Servant to Mr. Porter, who was now Witneſs againſt him, and that he did nothing but by his Orders and Perſuaſion: Which ſhort, ſimple Plea had ſuch an Effect, if not on the Bench, at leaſt on the Public, That Biſhop Burnet not only acknowledges Porter was much reflected on, but proceeds in theſe Words, "It was ſaid that Servants had often been Witneſſes againſt their Maſters; but that a Maſter witneſſing againſt his Servant, was ſomewhat new and extraordinary."

Upon the whole, as the Charge from the Bench went againſt them, ſo the Verdict of the Jury was conformable to it: Sentence was pronounced upon them the ſame Day; and the 18th following was appointed for their Execution: And according to the Right Reverend Hiſtorian laſt quoted, "Endeavours were us'd, in that Interval, to perſuade Charnock to confeſs all he knew; for he had been in all their Plots from the Beginning: His Brother, [meaning, perhaps, Haywood, the Evidence his Brother-in-Law] continues the ſame Author, was employ'd to deal with him; and he ſeem'd to be once in ſuſpence: But the next Time his Brother came to him, he told him, He could not ſave his own Life, without doing That which would take away the Lives of ſo many, that he did not think his own Life worth it. This ſhew'd a Greatneſs of Mind, that had been very valuable if it had been better directed.—Thus this Matter was underſtood at the Time: But many Years after this, the Lord Somers gave me a different Account of it. Charnock, as he told me, ſent an Offer to the King, of a full Diſcovery of all their Conſultations and Deſigns; and deſir'd no Pardon, but only that he might live in ſome eaſy Priſon; and if he was found to prevaricate in any Part of his Diſcovery, he would look for the Execution of the Sentence: But the King apprehended, that ſo many Perſons would be found concern'd, and thereby render'd deſperate, that he was afraid to have ſuch a Scene open'd, and would not accept this Offer."

As the Biſhop himſelf delivers the laſt of theſe Paſſages, with more than ordinary Diffidence, probably ſo much the more Regard is due to the firſt: But if we ought to complement the King at the Expence of the Conſpirator, it is to be lamented, that his Hiſtorian ſhould aſcribe that to Fear in the One, which he aſcribes to Magnanimity in the Other. A. D. 1695-6.

All, however, were executed on the Day appointed, in the uſual Manner; and All left Papers behind them, in the Hands of the Sheriffs, to be made public, if they thought convenient: At leaſt Charnock thought fit to place that Confidence in their Diſcretion, and made his Confeſſion in the following Words. They are all executed.

"As concerning an Invaſion pretended by King James upon England, that there was certain Intelligence of it from Abroad, I preſume every body was ſatisfy'd; and to the facilitating of which, I own, that myſelf, and ſome others, did agree upon the Undertaking, to attack the Prince of Orange and his Guards, for which I am now to ſuffer: But I think myſelf oblig'd, by all the Ties imaginable, both of Conſcience and Honour, to declare, That, as for any Order or Commiſſion of King James's for aſſaſſinating the Prince of Orange, I never ſaw nor knew of any; but have had frequent Aſſurances of his having rejected ſuch Propoſals, when they have been offer'd. Charnock's laſt Paper.

I confeſs I did hear that there was a Commiſſion arriv'd for levying War, and which was natural to believe, if the King was in ſuch a Readineſs to come over, as was reported: But if there was any ſuch Authority as that, I declare I never ſaw it.

As to what regards the Body of Roman Catholics, I muſt do them this Juſtice, and which I dare be poſitive in, That they had no manner of Knowledge of this Deſign: Nor do I believe it was communicated to any other Party, of ſuch as are reputed the King's Friends, but carry'd on merely, by a ſmall Number, without the Advice, Conſent, or Privity of any Parties whatſoever."

King, alſo, with the ſame Ingenuity, acknowledg'd, That he was brought to the Place of Execution by the juſt Hand of God, in puniſhment of all his Crimes, but particularly of That, for which he was about to ſuffer: After which he proceeded as follows.

"And that I may find his Mercy, I think myſelf oblig'd to do Juſtice to my Neighbour, that, ſo, none may ſuffer wrongfully on my Account: And, therefore, as I am ſoon to anſwer the Truth of what I ſay before the Tribunal of God, This, I declare, That I never ſaw any Order or Commiſſion for King James's promoting the Aſſaſſination, for which I am condemn'd; neither do I know of any ſuch Order or Commiſſion: 2dly, That this Deſign was not undertaken with any general Knowledge or Approbation of any Body of Men, either Catholic or Proteſtant: Laſtly, That I did not engage in it on Preſumption of any King-killing-Principles that could juſtify ſuch an Undertaking, but was drawn into it by my King's Paper.

A. D. 1695-6. own Raſhneſs and Paſſion; for which, and all other Sins, I heartily beſeech God to forgive me."

As to Keys, who knew nothing, he had nothing to confeſs but his Sins in general, and the juſt Judgment they had brought upon him: The Expreſſions he made uſe of were ſimple and natural, and his Reſignation ſuch, as equally became a Soldier and a Chriſtian.

They all dy'd Roman-Catholics; and having refus'd the Aſſiſtance of any Proteſtant Divine, Charnock perform'd the laſt Offices for himſelf and his Fellow-Sufferers.

Friend's Trial.

On the 23d following, Sir John Friend was brought to Trial: Sir John was a Citizen and Brewer of London; had held a beneficial Place in the Exciſe, under the late King; was rich; had more Gratitude or Loyalty to his old Maſter, than Wiſdom and Conduct; and was a more zealous Adventurer in political Matters, than Men of Wealth and Buſineſs uſually are, in the vain Hope of a Revolution: Compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King was the Crime laid to his Charge: And for Overt-Acts, it was urg'd, That on 1ſt of July, and at divers other Times, he had conſulted with Charnock, and others, to procure Forces from France for the intended Invaſion of this Kingdom, and to levy Forces here to join the Invaders: That he had ſent the ſaid Charnock to France, to procure the ſaid Forces: That he had traitorouſly accepted a Commiſſion from the late King James, to be a Colonel of the Forces to be ſo levy'd here: That he had actually rais'd, liſted, and kept in Pay divers Officers and Soldiers; and that he had provided Horſes, Arms, &c.

Porter and Blaire Witneſſes againſt him.

Porter and Blaire were the only Witneſſes againſt him: The Former ran thro' the Depoſitions above recited, in which Friend is charg'd with being preſent at the two ſeveral Conſultations when Charnock was ſent to France; and in which he is alſo charg'd with having been once at the Nag's-Head, in James-Street, when the Conſpirators diſcours'd there privately, one among another, of the Deſign upon the King's Perſon: But as in the ſaid written Depoſitions, ſo alſo in open Court he acknowledg'd not only That Friend was not in the Secret, but that he complain'd of his being left out of it: But what was defective in his Evidence, Blaire took care to make up: For he ſwore poſitively, he had ſeen the Commiſſion Friend had receiv'd from King James; as alſo ſeveral Letters to him from Lord Melford and Secretary Caryll: That he, the Deponent, had Friend's Promiſe to be his Lieutenant-Colonel: That he had liſted Men for him, and had receiv'd Money of him to ſpend upon them, &c. Then producing, laſtly, a Letter to himſelf from Sir John, deſiring a Meeting at Jonathan's Coffee-Houſe, in order to his being furniſh'd by him with Money, he ſaid, That at the ſaid Meeting, he receiv'd an Order for twenty Pounds accordingly: And being aſk'd by the Court, What Uſe this Money was to be apply'd to? Anſwer'd, "It was to drink with the Men that were "to ſerve in his Regiment; to cheriſh them "and keep them together."—Here the Priſoner interpos'd to this Effect, That Blaire having been recommended to him for a very honeſt Man, came to him ſeveral Times, telling him his Neceſſities were very great, he was ready to ſtarve, he had a great Charge, and begging for God's Sake he would beſtow ſomething on him to relieve his Diſtreſſes: That in Compaſſion he had given him Money ſeveral Times, but never for any other Uſe than Charity. And then making his Appeal to Blaire himſelf, deſir'd him to declare the Truth, Whether he had not ſeveral Times written theſe Words to him, I am ready to ſtarve; I beg you would relieve my Neceſſities? Blaire, on the other Hand, acknowledg'd Friend had given him Charity; but added, He had ſpent ſo much Money in his Buſineſs, as reduc'd him to the Want of it: That he had brought in ſeveral Officers, particularly Captain Fiſher, (the firſt Diſcoverer of the Plot) one Symmons, one Ridley, and one Richardſon: And that the Priſoner had promis'd Fiſher, in his Hearing, He ſhould be his Eldeſt Captain, upon Condition he brought in a Troop.

The Priſoner, on the other Hand, with more Ingenuity than Diſcretion, own'd he was at the Meeting in Leaden-Hall-Street; but deny'd that any thing was ſaid there, of the Government, or of raiſing Men: Urg'd, That the Witneſſes being Papiſts, were not legal Witneſſes againſt Proteſtants; and call'd one Courtney, a Priſoner in the Gate-Houſe, who teſtify'd, That Blaire had declar'd before him, and ſeveral others, That he knew nothing of a Plot; and that reading a News-Paper to him, in which it was alledg'd, That the ſaid Blaire was to be Lieutenant-Colonel to the Priſoner, had receiv'd a great deal of Subſiſtance-Money from him, &c. Blaire ſaid, He knew nothing of any Regiment or Commiſſion: And that at another Time, Blaire appear'd in an Agony, and under great Remorſe of Conſcience, becauſe he was to be an Evidence againſt Friend: On which Occaſion his Wife ſaid, He would not do it, but in order to ſave his own Life. The Priſoner produc'd alſo ſeveral other Witneſſes to prove, That both Porter and Blaire were reputed Papiſts; and that he himſelf was a Proteſtant, and that he had a fair Character: Among Theſe, one Lupton, the Curate of Hackney, who officiated as Chaplain in the Priſoner's Houſe, depos'd, That, after the Revolution, he us'd to pray for King William, and that he had often heard Sir John ſay, "Tho' he could not comply with the preſent Government, he would live peaceably under it, and had no Concern'd in a Plot againſt it:" And Mr. Hadley, Father of Doctor Hoadley, the preſent Biſhop of Wincheſter, added, That the Priſoner was a good Proteſtant, and us'd to expreſs himſelf with great Deteſtation of King-killing Principles, and aſſaſſinating crown'd Heads. Laſtly, the Priſoner for himſelf inſiſted, That a Conſultation to levy War

A. D. 1695-6. War, was not Treason; and that the being at a treasonable Consult, was but a Misprision of Treason.—Thus for want of Judgment, he took his Cause out of the Hands of the Jury, and threw himself on the Mercy of the Bench: For had he laid a proper Stress on the Insufficiency of the Evidence against him: Had he urg'd, That there was but one Witness to one pretended Fact: That even that one Witness acquitted him of any Concern in the Assassination: That the other, Blaire, did not verify his Testimony by producing a single Man of the Four he had nam'd, as Persons engag'd by him to serve in the Prisoner's Regiment: That he had acknowledg'd he had receiv'd Charity from him: And that as to the Article in the Indictment, relating to the providing of Horses and Arms, it was not countenanc'd by any Testimony at all: Had he laid a proper Stress on these Circumstances, which concluded so much in his Favour, it is possible at least, that he might have been acquitted: Whereas, by resting the Merits of his Defence on the mere Matter of Law, he put it into the Power of the Bench to interpret his Life away.

Lord Chief Justice Holt, who presided on this Occasion, has, in general, the Character of an upright Judge: But almost all Lawyers have narrow Minds, and by the whole Drift of their Studies, find themselves biass'd to adhere to the King against the Prisoner.

Thus, in the present Case, the great Statute of Treason of 25 Edward III. being read, Holt maintain'd, among other Perplexities, That, tho' a bare Conspiracy or Design to levy War, was not within this Law Treason, yet if the Design or Conspiracy be either to kill the King, or to depose or imprison him, or put any Force or Restraint upon him, (on any Pretence, such as to procure some Reformation in the Church or State) and the Way propos'd to affect any of These is by levying War, there, the Consultation and Conspiracy to levy War is High-Treason, tho' no War be actually levy'd: So that the Inference lay as strong against the Authors and Instruments of the Revolution itself, as against the Prisoner at the Bar: And as to Magna Charta, it was but a dead Letter, which the Subject might still be permitted to glory in, but never to avail himself of.—Magna Charta is a Pact between Sovereign and Subject, which was the Work of Heroes, not of Lawyers; consequently, not being a formal Law in its original Institution, we are not to expect the Mercenaries of that Profession, to espouse its Authority against the Craft they live by. And as to the Revolution, it rather exceeded the Description given by Holt, in his Comment on the Treason-Act; because the Subjects concern'd in it, not only levy'd War against the King, under Pretence of Reformation, but call'd in a foreign Force to be their Co-adjutors: So that if the Subject, when overwhelm'd with Oppressions, either with Law or against it, had not a Right in Equity to appeal to, even the very Deliverance which had obtain'd the Sanction of so many Laws, was to be esteem'd a Triumph over the Law itself. A. D. 1695-6.

But to resume the Course of our Narrative.—The Jury, as it must be suppos'd, proceeding on the Notoriety of the late Conspiracy, rather than the particular Evidence against the Prisoner, after a short Demurr, brought in their Verdict, Guilty.

The next Day Sir William Perkins was brought to the Bar; and before the Trial was open'd, demanded, That a Chest of Plate, which had been sent to him by his Wife, and had been taken from him by Mr. Sheriff Buckingham, might be returned to him; which was order'd accordingly. But the Bench did not manifest the same Complaisance, when he desir'd his Trial might be put off for one Day, that he might have the Benefit of the late Trial-Act; tho' he urg'd, that some of his Witnesses were absent, whose Names he would give in. Sir William Perkins Trial.

His Case was very different from Friend's: For he was involv'd both in the Invasion and the Assassination. Porter swore he was at the Leaden-Hall-Street-Meeting, as well as at several of Those in which the Manner of attacking the King's Person was debated: And more particularly, that he had not only agreed to furnish five Horses, three of which were to be mounted by Men of his own, but that, when the Witness, Porter, signify'd, that two of his were unfit for Service, he undertook to send to Mr. Lewis, (Lord Feversham's Gentleman of the Horse, beforemention'd) for two more; and accordingly did send two more from the said Lewis the next Morning, with an Intimation, that Lewis could furnish still two or three more: And on his, Porter's, asking him, Whether he had seen King James's Commission for that Enterprize? He not only affirm'd, He had seen it, but added, That, because the King would not trust any of his Ministers, it was written with his own Hand; and the Purport of it was, For levying War on the Person of the Prince of Orange. Sweet depos'd, That the Prisoner had several Times assur'd him King James would land in England: That there was a Party ready to join him whenever he did so: That he had never been so positive in his Assurances as since Christmas last, when, as he said, he had it under the King's own Hand he would come: That he was, therefore, making Preparations to meet him: That he had provided Saddles and other Furniture: That his own Troop was compos'd of several good Horse-Officers, who were Volunteers, and the rest of old Soldiers: That the Prisoner having made a Journey into Leicestershire, told him, at his Return, he had seen his Friends, and the West was as well inclin'd to the King's Interest as the North: That about the 11th of February the Prisoner sent for him to Town, but when he came, told him, On second Thoughts he was not fit for the Business he had design'd to employ him in, because of his family: That he, the Witness, then resolving to return home immediately, Sir William enjoin'd him, to cause three

A. D. 1695-6 three of his Strongeſt Horſes to be ſent up to him: That having again ſummon'd him to Town, he aſk'd him, If he had made any Proviſion for his Family? And having anſwer'd No, he ſaid, in Paſſion, You might as well then have ſtaid at home: And that he dining the ſame Day with the Priſoner, Charnock, and Chambers, the Latter ſaid, He was come that Morning from Kenſington; and that William kept as cloſe as a Fox in his Hole.

Ewebank, the Priſoner's Groom, depos'd, That on Friday, the 14th of February, he came to Town from Buſhy with three Horſes, which he put up at the George Inn, Holbourn: That there were three other Horſes ſtanding at the ſame Inn, which his Maſter ſaid belong'd to ſome Friends of his, and order'd him to feed: That his Maſter gave him two Saddles for two of thoſe Horſes: That on the Monday following his Maſter, one Mr. Holmes, and himſelf, return'd to Buſhy: That on the Friday following they came to Town again, with four Horſes, furniſh'd with Piſtols: That when they came to the George Inn, his Maſter order'd him to get his own Pad ready by Five o'Clock the next Morning; and to procure another Horſe as eaſy as that, by the ſame time, for two Gentlemen, who would come for them: That his Maſter alſo gave him a Note, which he was to carry to Kenſington, to one Mr. Brown, who belong'd to the Kitchen; and to tell him he came from the Gentleman who lodg'd at a Confectioner's in Holbourn: That he went to Kenſington accordingly, and was told by the ſaid Brown, He had nothing to ſend; but who, nevertheleſs, took the Witneſs's Almanac, and writ in it, That he would be in Town in two Hours: That going then to the Gentleman at the Confectioner's, (who, it ſeems, was Sir George Barclay) he ſhew'd him the Almanac, and he tore out the Leaf, bidding him tell his Maſter, He would be ready at his Chamber: That his Maſter, on the Receipt of this Meſſage, bid him get the Horſes ready, for he deſign'd to go home by and by: That returning to the Inn, he found the two Gentlemen were come for the Horſes: That they rode out upon them, and return'd in two or three Hours: That when he ſaw his Maſter for the laſt Time, which was at the Inn, about three or four o'Clock in the Afternoon, he bid him go back to Buſhy, with his fellow Servant, and three of the Horſes: That he did go to Buſhy accordingly: That on the Monday following, he receiv'd a Letter from his Maſter, incloſing another to one Evans, another Servant of Sir William's, who had the Care of his Houſe in Warwickſhire, which he was order'd to carry to him: That he did carry it accordingly: That in Conſequence of it, Evans and he fetch'd ſix Boxes from a neighbouring Tradeſman, (one Haywood, or Hayward, who had marry'd a Siſter of Charnock's) which they bury'd in the Orchard: And that he had ſince heard thoſe Boxes were fill'd with Arms, tho' he was not appriſ'd of it at the Time of burying them.

Haywood himſelf, and three other Perſons, A. D. 1695. confirm'd this laſt Circumſtance: And one of them, viz. the Conſtable who ſeiz'd the Arms, in the Place where they were depoſited, inform'd the Court, That they conſiſted of four Dozen of broad, Two-edged Swords, without Hilts, and a Box of Hilts, thirty-two Carbines, and twenty-five Brace of Piſtols.

But the Landlord and the Hoſtler of the George Inn, tho' they confirm'd what had been ſworn by Ewebank, concerning the Horſes he brought up, the Piſtols, &c. in ſome reſpects weaken'd the Force of thoſe ſeveral Circumſtances: For they depos'd, That the Horſes were all under-ſiz'd: That the Priſoner had often three or four Horſes ſtanding there at a Time: And that he uſually travell'd with Piſtols.—Beſides, Turton, the Landlord, farther depos'd, That Sir William had never been at his Inn ſince Friday the 21ſt, which was the Night before he came laſt to Town: Whereas Ewebank, as we have ſeen, ſwore he was there at Four in the Afternoon, on Saturday; which is ſo much the more extraordinary, becauſe, in his written Depoſition, he ſwears, That he went from Barclay, at the Confectioner's in Holbourn, to his Maſter, at his Lodgings in Norfolk-Street, who bid him go back to the Inn, and ſtay there till he ſent for him: That about Three or Four o'Clock, he did ſend for him accordingly: So that here is a flat Contradiction: For the Priſoner could not be in two Places at once: And in the ſame Depoſition he alſo ſwears, That it was at Twelve o'Clock his Maſter came back to the Inn; which if not impoſſible, appears altogether unlikely, if we conſider that Ewebank had then but juſt deliver'd Barclay's Meſſage to him; and he muſt have follow'd him cloſe at his Heels, only for the Sake of clearing up a Point, which, in the Circumſtances of the Conſpirators at that Time, it is not to be conceiv'd any one of them would have gone a Step out of his way to meddle with: For it ſeems, Sir William was accompany'd to the Inn, at Noon Day (when they were in a manner convinc'd their Affair was blown up) by Lewis, Lord Feverſham's Gentleman of the Horſe; and their only Buſineſs there was, to convince the Latter, that he had furniſh'd but twenty-two Saddles, inſtead of twenty-four.

The Priſoner had been bred a Lawyer, The Priſoner's Defence. and his Defence was agreeable to his Education: He maintain'd, That there was but one Witneſs to any one Overt-Act, whereas the Law requir'd Two: That as to the Arms he was poſſeſs'd of, it was no Treaſon to have them in his poſſeſſion: That the Witneſſes did not pretend to ſay for what Purpoſe they were provided: That in Truth he had found them in his Houſe when he came to his Eſtate, as he could have prov'd, if he had been allow'd Time to ſend for his Witneſſes: That he had order'd them to be bury'd, becauſe it was a troubleſome Time, and they might have drawn him into Suſpicion, as it was known, he was well affected to King James: That as to his Horſes, he had

A.D. 1695-6. had bought none these two years: That they were too small for the Service it was presum'd they were provided for: That as to the Pistols, he had travell'd no otherwise than he us'd to do: That it did not appear he had a Troop, or a single Trooper; for not one was either produc'd or nam'd: That if he had foolishly bragg'd he had a Troop, when he had none, Folly was no Treason: That he beg'd his Life might not be interpreted away: That the rising in Arms against a King, and conspiring to take away his Life, were two Species of Treason: That they had seen a King depos'd, who was still living: That his Lordship had known him many Years: That he had been educated to the Gown, not the Sword: That having, in his Youth, liv'd a peaceable Life, it was not to be suppos'd, in his old Age, when lame with the Gout both in his Hands and Feet, he should be engag'd in such a Business as this: That Porter, who was become a Witness to save his own Life, and, therefore, ought not to be credited, was the only positive Witness against him: That Sweet prov'd nothing but Words; and Words were not Things: Lastly, That all the rest was Presumption only.

The Chief Justice's Charge. The Chief Justice, on the other Hand, in summing up the Evidence, allow'd no Weight to any of these Pleas, nor suffer'd the Prisoner to hope, for a Moment, that there was any Cranny through which he might make his Escape: According to him, it was manifest by the whole Course of the Evidence, That the Purpose of the Prisoner, and his Associates, was the restoring of King James: That the Assassination of King William, and the Invasion and Rebellion they had projected, were but different Ways to the same End: That to invade the Realm, and depose or assassinate the King, were the same Species of Treason: That to conspire in order to any of these Purposes, was an Overt-Act; for it was a compassing and imagining his Death: That of this there were other Witnesses besides Sweet: That the providing Arms, and burying them just as the Plot broke out; the Purchase of Saddles; the sending up the Horses and Pistols, at the Instant of Execution, &c. were so many Overt-Acts: That as Words related to Things, when Mens Words explan'd their Actions, Words were Proofs: That it was lawful for a Man to buy a Pistol; but if it could be prov'd out of the Buyer's Mouth, that he design'd to make an unlawful Use of it, the buying became an Overt-Act: And that, therefore, the Prisoner having told Sweet, The late King would come; that he had a Troop of old Soldiers; and such a Quantity of Arms having been found in his Possession, there was ample Proof for what Purpose he had provided them, &c.

Thus the Evidence receiv'd all the Sanction which the Voice of the Bench could give it: And the Jury, after a short Space of Consultation, brought in a Verdict agreeable to it. The same Day Both the Prisoners, Friend and Perkins that is to say, receiv'd Sentence; on the 3d of April following they were executed at Tyburn; and the Papers they severally left behind them with the Sheriff, were to the following Effect, viz.

A.D. 1696. Friend and Perkins executed.

Their last Papers.

Sir John Friend, having in the most solemn Manner profess'd, that what he was about to say, was from his very Soul, proceeded to declare, That, according to the best and utmost of his Knowledge and Information, he believ'd the Cause he was going to suffer for, was the Cause of God and true Religion, and agreeable to the Laws of the Land, which, he had evermore heard, did require a firm Duty and Allegiance to our Sovereign, indispensable by any foreign or domestic Power: That as it was altogether new and unintelligible to him, that the King's Subjects could depose or dethrone him on any Account, or constitute any that have not an immediate Right in his Place; so when it had been done, surely it was the Duty of the Subject to assist him in the Recovery of his Right: That as for any sudden Descent of his Majesty on these his Dominions, in order to the Recovery of them, he had no certain Knowledge of it, nor could he tell what Grounds there was to believe it: So little Reason had he to be in a present Preparation for it: That he suppos'd it was not expected he should clear himself from the Assassination, since it was not alledg'd against him: That he forgave all those who had been any way instrumental in taking away his Life: That he profess'd himself to be an unworthy and unprofitable Member of the Church of England: Of that Church (the Nonjuring) which at present suffer'd so much for a strict Adherence to Loyalty, the Laws, and Christian Principles: [To which he added this strange Expression, For THIS I suffer, and for THIS I dye] That he had a perfect Charity for People of all Professions, having met with a great deal of Uprightness and Sincerity among some People, of very different Opinions in religious Matters: That he hop'd it would not be taken as an uncharitable Censure, or undue Reflection, that he had objected to the Legality of Popish Evidence, he having been advis'd so to do for his better Security, upon the Foundation of a Statute-Law: That having own'd himself a Member of the Church of England, he begg'd all the Royalists of that Church to be very constant and serious in all religious Offices, without being deterr'd by the Dangers attending it; but withal to be very careful and circumspect in all their Actions, Behaviour, and Conversation: That he thank'd God he had a great deal of Satisfaction in his present Sufferings: And, lastly, that he laid down his Life with all Chearfulness and Resignation.

The material Part of Sir William Perkins's Paper was in these Words: "I thank God I am now in a full Disposition of Charity; and therefore shall make no Complaints either of the Hardships of my Trial, or any other Rigours put upon me: However, one Circumstance I think myself oblig'd to mention: It was sworn against me by Mr. Porter, That I had own'd to him, that I had 1696.

A. D. 1696. seen and read a Commiſſion from the King to levy War upon the Perſon of the Prince of Orange. Now I muſt declare, That the Tenour of the King's Commiſſion, which I ſaw, was general, and directed to all his loving Subjects, to raiſe and levy War againſt the Prince of Orange and his Adherents; and to ſeize all Forts, Caſtles, &c. which I ſuppoſe may be a cuſtomary Form of giving Authority to make War; but I muſt confeſs I am not much acquainted with Matters of that Nature: But as for any Commiſſion particularly levell'd againſt the Perſon of the Prince of Orange, I neither ſaw nor heard of any ſuch.

It is true, I was privy to the Deſign upon the Prince, but was not to act in it; and am fully ſatisfy'd, that very few, or none, knew of it, but thoſe who undertook to do it."

The Remainder conſiſted of ſome ſtrong Aſſertions of the Juſtice of the late King's Cauſe; and a Declaration, That he dy'd in the Communion of the Church of England: As alſo, That he freely forgave, and deſir'd to be forgiven by all the World.

Some Remarks on Burnet.

It is remarkable, that Biſhop Burnet, (who ſeems to rely on the Account he had from Lord Somers, before ſpecify'd, concerning the King's Refuſal to receive Charnock's Confeſſion of all he knew concerning the Plot, becauſe he was afraid, it would involve too many Perſons in it) nevertheleſs aſſerts, That great Endeavours were us'd to make both Friend and Perkins confeſs all they knew: For why ſhould thoſe Endeavours be repeated, which his Majeſty did not think it adviſable to avail himſelf of? But what is ſtill more remarkable, in the ſame Section he expreſſes himſelf as follows, " He (Perkins) confeſs'd, He had ſeen King James's " Commiſſion: The Words (of Perkins's " Confeſſion, it muſt be ſuppos'd, he means) " differ'd a little from thoſe which Porter " had told: But Porter did not ſwear that " he ſaw it himſelf: He only related what " Charnock had told him concerning it; yet " Perkins ſaid, They were to the ſame " Effect." A Commiſſion to raiſe and levy War againſt the Prince of Orange, with whom King James was certainly in a State of War; and a Commiſſion to levy War againſt the Perſon of the Prince of Orange, which was what Porter ſwore Perkins himſelf had told him he had ſeen, were, in Truth, different Commiſſions; and inſtead of confeſſing, That they were to the ſame Effect, Perkins, with his laſt Breath, explanes the Difference; and while he frankly confeſſes the one, as explicitly denies the other.

Perkins and Friend abſolv'd at Tyburn by three nonjuring Prieſts.

The Execution of theſe Delinquents was alſo productive of another Incident, which the Prelate laſt quoted, calls a Strain of Impudence that was as new as it was wicked; Collier, Snatt, and Cook, three Nonjuring Clergymen, waited on them to Tyburn; "And all the three, (ſays his Lordſhip) at the Place of Execution, join'd to give them public Abſolution, with an Impoſition of Hands, in the View of all the Populace, tho' they dy'd owning the ill Deſigns they had been engag'd in, and expreſſing no Sort of Repentance for them; whereby thoſe Clergymen made an (l) open Declaration of their allowing and juſtifying the Crimes for which they ſuffer'd."

A. D. 16

But, tho' it ſhould be acknowledg'd, that a more ſeditious Uſe could ſcarce be made of the prieſtly Office, there was more of Paſſion than Policy in the Methods taken to puniſh theſe Men for this Miſdemeanor: Where there is no Law, it is generally underſtood there is no Tranſgreſſion: And yet the Grand Jury were prevail'd upon, by a Remonſtrance from the Bench, exhibited by Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, to preſent the ſaid Clergymen, for having countenanc'd the Treaſon by abſolving the Traitors, and thereby given great Encouragement to other Perſons to commit the like Treaſons, to the Scandal of the Church, and the Diſturbance of the Peace of the Kingdom: The Court hereupon, order'd an Indictment to be prefer'd againſt them; and Cook and Snatt were committed to Newgate, on Suſpicion of High-Treaſon and treaſonable Practices: Collier abſconded; but ſet forth a Defence of his Conduct; in which, after complaining, That ſix or eight Perſons had ruſh'd into his Lodgings, broke open his Trunks, and ſeiz'd his Papers, he proceeds to ſay, That what he had done, he had done at the Requeſt of Perkins, who had given him a State of his Conſcience, and whom he had not been permited to viſit, from Wedneſday Morning, April the 1ſt, to Friday, the Day of his Execution: And that the Impoſition of Hands, which had been complain'd of as a Novelty, was ſo far from being ſuch, that it was the general Practice of the primitive Church, &c. On the other Hand, The two Archbiſhops, and twelve other Biſhops, (among whom were Crew of Durham, Mew of Winchester, and Sprat of Rochester) ſet forth a Paper, which was call'd, A Declaration of the Senſe of the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, now in and about London, &c. concerning the irregular and ſcandalous Behaviour of certain Clergymen at the Execution of Sir J. Friend, and Sir W. Perkins: Wherein they " Cenſur'd the Performance of this Office of " the Church, (the Abſolution was That us'd " in the Viſitation of the Sick) without a " previous Confeſſion made, and Abhorrence " expreſs'd by the Priſoners, of the hainous " Crimes for which they dy'd, as extremely " inſolent, and without precedent in the " Manner, and altogether irregular in the " Thing itſelf: It being a manifeſt Tranſ" greſſion of the Churches Order, and pro" fane Abuſe of the Authority of Chriſt; " ſince Mr. Collier, Mr. Snatt, and Mr. Cook, " muſt look on the Perſons abſolv'd as Im" penitents or Martyrs." Collier, however,

The ſaid Perſons are preſented by the Grand Jury.

London Gaz. No. 3173.

Two of them committed.

Collier abſconds; ſets forth a Defence of his Conduct.

A Cenſure paſs'd upon them by fourteen Biſhops.

Collier's Behaviour

1 did

(l) Biſhop Kennet ſpeaking of the ſame Fact, contents himſelf with ſaying, " That it ſeem'd to ſavour " the Conſpiracy, and to recommend the Treaſon."

A. D. 1696. did not ſubmit to this Cenſure; but, on the contrary, maintain'd, That it was wholly unſupported: And that the Abſolution was every way defenſible, as to Matter, Manner, Perſons and Occaſion: And in his Concluſion obſerves, That the very ſame Form was obſerv'd in the Caſe of Aſhton, executed in January, 1690, without any Offence given, or Complaint made, either at Lambeth or Whitehall.—The Diſpute laſted ſome time; but without Conſequences: For, whether it was, that the Offenders were not within the Reach of the Law, or that the Law was not put in Force againſt them, "Such was the Lenity of the Government, ſays Biſhop Kennet, that no manner of Puniſhment was inflicted on them:" So that eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, Impriſonment in Newgate, &c, it ſeems, were no Puniſhment at all.

But it appears the whole Body of Nonjurors were, at this Time, violently, and, according to Biſhop Kennet, not unreaſonably, ſuſpected of having been involv'd in this Affair: For Intelligence having been receiv'd, That the depriv'd Biſhops had made a Collection of Money, by Brief, amongſt their Friends and Followers, for the Relief of their Brethren, and their Families, who were reduc'd to extreme Want, they were accus'd of having rais'd a Fund for the Cauſe, and oblig'd to juſtify themſelves before the Privy-Council.

Rookwood's Trial. Rookwood, Cranborne, and Lowick were brought to their Trials next: The two Former on the 21ſt of April, the Latter on the 22d: They were try'd by ſpecial Commiſſion in the KING'S-BENCH; and all of them had the Benefit of the new Law concerning, Trials for Treaſon; tho' under ſome ſuch Reſtrictions, as were ſcarce reconcilable to the Senſe of the Law-Makers. Rookwood was indicted, for compaſſing and conſpiring the Death of the King, the Subverſion of the Government, and the Subjection of the People to the Dominion and Slavery of the French King; in order to which, he had conſulted and agreed to aſſaſſinate his Majeſty, had provided Horſes and Arms, &c.

The Witneſſes againſt him were Porter and Harris: Porter ſwore, The Priſoner was one of thoſe who, at the Globe Tavern in Hatton-Garden, conſulted of the beſt Manner to aſſaſſinate the King: As alſo, that having ſcrupled at firſt to engage in ſo deſperate a Deſign, Barclay told him, He ſhould command the Party; upon which he reply'd in French, There's an End of it: And Harris ſwore, as in his written Depoſition, above inſerted, That the Priſoner had acknowledg'd to him the Nature of the Buſineſs in hand, had declar'd he would obey Orders, had given him a Liſt of Names, &c. The Counſel for the Priſoner, on the other Hand, alledg'd, That the Law requir'd two Witneſſes to each Overt-Act, whereas in this Caſe, there was but one to each: That according to ſome Opinions, (meaning thoſe of the Solicitor-General Howles, and Sir Robert Atkins, on the ſeveral Caſes of Lord Ruſſel, Sydney, &c.) the being at a treaſonable Conſult was but miſpriſion of Treaſon: That there was no Evidence of the Priſoner's agreeing to the Matter conſulted upon: That the late Law having enacted, that no Overt-Act ſhould be given in Evidence that was not expreſſly laid in the Indictment, the giving the Liſt of Names to Harris, could not be given in Evidence; and they had Witneſſes ready to prove, That Porter had been a Clipper, a Highway-Robber, and was infamous for every Vice. A. D. 1696.

But the Bench ruled (as the Term is) That no Evidence ought to be admitted of any particular Crime a Witneſs had been guilty of, unleſs by Record of his Conviction: And the Chief Juſtice, in ſumming up the whole of the Caſe for the Direction of the Jury, was pleas'd to obſerve, That if the French Expreſſion made uſe of by the Priſoner to Barclay, amounted to a Conſent or Agreement to be of his Party, it was plainly an Overt-Act: That his naming Harris to be his Aid de Camp, and giving him a Liſt of Names, was another Overt-Act: That tho' the late Act did exclude the giving Evidence of any Overt-Act not laid in the Indictment, it did not exclude ſuch Evidence as was proper to prove the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment: That, therefore, the Queſtion was, Whether the giving that Liſt, did not prove ſome Overt-Act in the Indictment: That an Agreement to kill the King was laid in the Indictment: That if the giving the ſaid Liſt was a Proof of that Agreement, no doubt it was proper to be given in Evidence: That if by the new Statute, no one Act could be given in Evidence to prove another, then not only the Overt-Act, but alſo all the Evidence of that Act muſt be expreſs'd in the Indictment, &c.

Cranborne's Trial. The Indictment againſt Cranborne, was little different from that againſt Rookwood; except, that he was particularly charg'd with carrying a Liſt of the Conſpirators from one to the other. Porter, de la Rue, and Pendergraſs, were the Witneſſes; who agreed ſo well in the Particulars of their Teſtimony, eſpecially in the Priſoner's being at their Meetings, in the carrying the Liſt of Names, and his joining with Porter in drinking To the ſqueeſing the rotten Orange, that the Court had little Trouble, and the Priſoner leſs to complain of; unleſs it was of the Treachery of his Accomplices.

But the Caſe of Lowick was not altogether ſo manageable: He was indicted, for having, together with Knightley, Rookwood, Cranborne, and others, conſulted and agreed to aſſaſſinate and murder his Majeſty; but without any Specification of Time or Place, except of the 10th of February; to which was added, with divers other Days and Times, as well before as after; and of the Pariſh of St. Paul's, Covent-Garden; or of any Overt-Act, except the providing Horſes and Arms.

Harris, Bertram, and Fiſher, were the Witneſſes; for, it ſeems, neither Porter, Pendergraſs, or de la Rue, tho' the moſt extenſive Diſcoverers, had any Thing to depoſe concerning him; whence a ſort of negative

Proof

A. D. 1696. Proof aroſe in his Favour, That he had never attended any of thoſe Conſultations, where the Undertaking was primarily reſolv'd on.

Harris recapitulated the ſeveral Points in his written Depoſition given above, which related to the Priſoner; ſuch as the ſeeing him at the Confectioner's in Holbourn, where Barclay lodg'd, on the firſt Saturday; the Diſcourſe he had with him in Red-Lion-Fields, before the next, touching the Barbarity of the Deſign they were engag'd in, in which the Priſoner declar'd, He would obey Orders: His telling him afterwards, The Thing was diſcover'd: That his Name, amongſt others, were given, and adviſing him not to lye at his Lodgings: And, laſtly, another Diſcourſe which had paſs'd between them on the Second Saturday, to this Effect: The Priſoner ſeeing Harris in a Sweat, and aſking the Occaſion, the Latter told him, He had been getting Rookwood's Party ready: To which the Priſoner reply'd, "You may "well do it; for you have ſix Shillings a "Day, and I have nothing, and yet brought "a (m) Couple of Men at my own Charge; "and their Horſes cannot be diſcharg'd un-"leſs I go." And it being aſk'd by the Court, Why they were to be diſcharg'd that Day? Harris anſwer'd, Becauſe Rookwood had told Lowick, The Prince of Orange did not go out that Day.

Bertram ſwore alſo to ſuch of the Circumſtances in his written Depoſition, as regarded the Priſoner, viz. His aſking him, Whether he would engage in an Affair that might be for his Advantage, without aſking any Queſtions: His requiring him on Friday the 14th, to be ready againſt the nex Morning: His telling him, he believ'd they ſhould ride out of Town in a little Time: His ſaying, he believ'd the King would be ſeiz'd in his Coach: His giving him a Guinea to furniſh himſelf with Neceſſaries: His appointing to meet him the next Morning, at the Purl-Houſe in Hart-Street; and his upbraiding him when they met next for his Breach of Promiſe, in theſe Words, So it would have been if the King had been in the Field. The Witneſs being then aſk'd, If he was not told the Deſign, his Anſwer was, The Major did not tell him of any other Deſign than he mention'd; for he believ'd he knew it: Being farther aſk'd, If the Guinea he receiv'd was not given to him in Charity; he anſwer'd, The Major had given him Money ſeveral Times; they being Townſmen, and near Relations: And again, by a Juryman, If he underſtood what the Major meant by riding out ſuddenly; he reply'd, He believ'd it was about ſeizing and killing the King: Laſtly, The Priſoner himſelf demanding, If Bertram ever knew him guilty of any bloody Thing? He ſaid, He had known him theſe twenty Years: He had always the Character of a good Man, ready to ſerve any one in Neceſſity: He had been bred a Soldier; had ſerv'd King James in Ireland, and ſav'd the Lives of many a Priſoner taken there by the Enemy, as he had been inform'd by the Priſoners themſelves, A. D. 169

Theſe Queſtions having been thus diſpatch'd, Fiſher, the firſt Diſcoverer, who, according to Biſhop Burnet, never appear'd more, becauſe he had Aſſurances given him, That he ſhould not be made uſe of as a Witneſs, was brought forward, to make up the Defects of the Teſtimony already given, by throwing in the laſt Article of his own written Depoſition, which has been already touch'd upon, and which ſeems to have been the Fruit of Recollection, and laid up to anſwer this very Purpoſe: But then he was not ſo direct in his Evidence before the Priſoner's Face, as in That which he gave to the Secretary of State: For whereas in the One, he is expreſs, That he met with the Priſoner on the 7th or 8th at the Cock in Bow-ſtreet, who there told him, He would do his Beſt to carry on the ſaid Deſign (of ſeizing the King) and would be ready on all Occaſions; in the Other, he only charges the Priſoner with ſaying, He would be ready to ſerve his Maſter, King James, to the utmoſt of his Power: And yet the right Reverend Author laſt quoted, is pleas'd to ſay, in order to blaſt yet farther the new Act of Trials, "That Theſe (Trials) held long; for their (the Priſoner's) Counſel ſtuck upon every Thing:—But the Evidence was now more copious: For Three other Witneſſes came in; the Government being ſo gentle as to pardon even the Conſpirators who confeſs'd their Guilt, and were willing to be Witneſſes againſt others." But the great Point to be anſwer'd by Fiſher, and which in neither of his Teſtimonies he loſt Sight of, was to account for the Defect of Matter againſt the Priſoner, by obſerving, That he had made it a Maxim to diſcourſe of the Affair, but with one Perſon at a Time; becauſe nothing could affect a Man's Life, according to the late Act, but what could be verify'd by the Teſtimony of Two.

Sir Bartholomew Shower was the Priſoner's Advocate; and the Drift of his Diſcourſe was to ſhew, That Fiſher's Evidence was of no Weight at all: That the Evidence of Bertram and Harris, inſtead of being clear and poſitive, as the Law requir'd, was circumſtantial, trivial, and inconcluſive: That no Overt-Act was prov'd: And that the general Character of the Priſoner, from the known Innocency and Regularity of his Life, was alone ſufficient for his Vindication, as would be manifeſted to the Court by unexceptionable Witneſſes.

Theſe Witneſſes were then call'd; and unanimouſly declar'd him to be an honeſt, well-natur'd, virtuous Man, free from Paſſion and Malice: And the Priſoner himſelf concluded his Defence with the moſt ſolemn Proteſtations of his Innocency.

The Attorney-General, however, thought a Reply neceſſary; and as if it was the Duty of his Office to talk a Man out of his Life, whether (m) In the written Depoſition, which was alſo upon Oath, he ſays Three.

A.D. 1696. whether within the Law or not, aggravated Matter of Suſpicion into Matter of Evidence; and Preſumptions into plain, poſitive Proofs, which would admit of no Qualification.

A.D. 1696.

Nor was the Lord Chief-Juſtice himſelf wholly free from the ſame Rage of Proſecution: For tho' he was pleas'd to caution the Jury againſt any forced or violent Conſtruction of Words in caſe of Life, he nevertheleſs proceeded to ſay, That if the Evidence was plain and clear, though the Priſoner did not ſay in expreſs Words, He deſign'd to aſſaſſinate his Majeſty; yet if, upon the whole of the Diſcourſe that paſs'd between Bertram and him, it appear'd plainly and ſatisfactorily to them, that he did conſent and agree to this Deſign, or was engaged in it, then Bertram was another Witneſs to prove him guilty, beſides Harris, which was as much as the Law required.

All brought in guilty.

In ſhort, the whole Court were of a Mind: For the Jury were ſo heated with the Zeal of the Times, that they had no Leiſure for Diſcrimination: And thus Lowick was brought in guilty, as Cranburne and Rookwood had been before. His Friends, however flatter'd themſelves, that the Government, would ſtill ſhew him Mercy; and if it had been ſo extremely gentle, as it has been deſcribed, probably thoſe Hopes of theirs would not have been ill grounded.—"Great Interceſſion (ſays B. Kennet) was made by ſome Noblemen for the Life of Lowick; and Cranburne, petition'd to be tranſported; but Both to no Purpoſe:" And on the 29th of April all Three of them were executed at Tyburn together. Cranburne, it is ſaid, read a Paper, ſpoke much to the Spectators, ſaid he ſuffer'd for his Loyalty; inſiſted, That the Enterprize he had been engag'd in, was no more than his Duty, and died in a Tranſport of Fury: But this Paper of his we are to preſume, was ſuppreſs'd; for we ſcarce meet with a Trace of it in any of our Hiſtorians: Thoſe of Lowick and Rookwood, on the contrary, being of a leſs provoking Nature, have been preſerv'd, and ſo far at leaſt as relates to the Plot, deſerve to be remember'd.

Their Behaviour at Tyburn.

Lowick's laſt Paper.

Lowick, having firſt declar'd himſelf a Roman-Catholic, proceeds to complain, That, as to the Charge brought againſt him for which he was to dye, no Proof had been offer'd of his having had a Horſe; the two Men he had provided, were not produced; nor, continues he, had I any on that Account; nor was I at any of their Meetings, when they ſettled any ſuch Thing: And as for any Order or Commiſſion from King James, I never ſaw any ſince I came laſt to England, which is now about five Years; and I am confident none that knows King James will believe he gave any ſuch Order.

Indeed, I muſt confeſs, I believe King James was coming to aſſert his own Right; and I ſhould, if on Shore [meaning if that Prince was landed] have done any thing in my Power to have aſſiſted him; and in order to that, I ſhould have been very glad to have had a Horſe, but never had any: And as for being concern'd in any bloody Affair, I never was in my Life; but have done my Endeavour to prevent it as much as I could on all Occaſions: And if the killing the moſt miſerable Creature in the World, or the greateſt Enemy, would now ſave my Life, reſtore the King, and make me one of the greateſt Men in England, I firſt would chuſe to dye, becauſe againſt the Laws of God. If any who are now Sufferers on this Account, think I have been too forward, and a Promoter to this Deſign, I do now declare, it was never my Inclination to do any raſh Thing: However, I beg their Pardons, and of all the World, if I have offended in Thought, Word, or any Action whatſoever, &c.

Rookwood ſaid, He once thought to have dy'd in Silence; but that ſecond Thoughts of his Duty to others, and chiefly to King James, had mov'd him to leave a Paper behind him, which proceeded thus. "I do therefore, with all Truth and Sincerity, declare and avow, That I never ſaw or heard of any Order or Commiſſion from King James for the aſſaſſinating the Prince of Orange, and attacking his Guards; but I am certainly inform'd, He, the beſt of Kings, had often rejected Propoſals of that Nature, when made unto him: Nor do I think he knew the leaſt of the particular Deſign, ſo much talk'd of, in which I was engag'd as a Soldier, by my immediate Commander, much againſt my Judgment: But his Soldier I was; and as ſuch, I was to obey and act, according to Command. Theſe twelve Years I have ſerved my true King and Maſter King James, and freely now lay down my Life in his Cauſe. I ever abhorr'd Treachery, even to an Enemy: If it be Guilt to have complied with what I thought, and ſtill think to have been, my Duty, I am guilty: No other Guilt do I own. As I beg all to forgive me, ſo I forgive all from my Heart, even the Prince of Orange, who, as a Soldier, ought to have conſider'd my Caſe, before he ſign'd the Warrant for my Death: I pray God may open his Eyes, and render him ſenſible of the much Blood, from all Parts crying out againſt him: So to prevent a heavier Execution hanging over his Head, than what he inflicts on me."

And Rookwood's

Among the general Depoſitions concerning the Plot, inſerted above, we have ſeen one in the Name of Knightley. This Man had been taken among the firſt of the Conſpirators that were taken, as he was endeavouring to make his Eſcape in Woman's Apparel: Both Porter and de la Rue had involv'd him in their Diſcoveries; ſo that there was no want of Evidence againſt him: And yet, tho' Charnock, King, and Keys, were try'd on the 11th, no Proceſs was iſſued againſt him: To account, therefore, for this Tardineſs with Reſpect to him, we muſt ſuppoſe he was all that Time under practice to turn Witneſs: His Depoſition, we muſt alſo ſuppoſe, was the Reſult of that Practice: But then we have Reaſon to conclude notwithſtanding, that it was not Satisfactory; as well becauſe of the Inſinuation he ſets out with, Knightley's Caſe.

A.D. 1696. with, which tends to the Vindication of King James, as becauſe it did not, perhaps, anſwer the Expectations of the Court, as to Others, tho' it was ample enough as to himſelf: Certain it is, that of all the Depoſitions, This was the only one left unſign'd; and it is plain, He might have ſtrengthen'd the Evidence againſt Lowick, if he had been ſo diſpos'd: For in his Confeſſion, he not only ſays, He had met Lowick at Barclay's Lodgings, in Company with ſeveral other Conſpirators, but alſo, That he, Lowick, had told him, He had engag'd Bertram: But whatever was the Purpoſe of the Court, with regard to him, whether to make him a Witneſs or an Example, when he was firſt indicted, they could not proceed againſt him, becauſe they had call'd him Alexander, whereas his Name was Chriſtopher: And according to the uſual Courſe of Practice, that Miſtake ought to have exempted him from any farther Proſecution for the ſame Crime: But inſtead of allowing him the Benefit of it, he was again indicted on the 30th of April, pleaded Not Guilty, was remanded to Newgate, and, being brought up once more on the 20th of May, retracted that Plea, and acknowledg'd himſelf guilty; In Conſideration of which, he was afterwards pardon'd; tho' one Hiſtorian, againſt the concurrent Teſtimony of all the reſt, ſays, He was executed at Tyburn.

Salmon.

Cooke's Trial. Mr. Cooke, Son of Sir Miles Cooke, one of the Six Clerks in Chancery, was put upon his Country next: The Charge againſt him was for compaſſing the Death of the King, and adhering to his Enemies: And for meeting and conſulting with Charnock, Friend, Perkins, &c. how to raiſe a Rebellion: His ſending the ſaid Charnock to France, to ſpirit up an Invaſion; and his buying up Horſes and Arms, in order to promote the ſaid Rebellion and Invaſion, were laid as the Overt-Acts requir'd by Law in Proof of the ſaid Charge. Porter and Goodman were the Witneſſes againſt him: The Former depos'd, That the Priſoner was at both the Meetings at the King's-Head in Leadenhall-ſtreet, and at the Tavern near Fenwick's Lodgings (mention'd in Porter's ſecond Depoſition:) And that Charnock demanding of the Lords and Gentlemen then preſent, ſeverally, Whether he might aſſure the King (James) that they would join the French Troops at their landing with 2000 Horſe, which they had agreed to raiſe? He remember'd Cooke was kneeling upon a Chair, and anſwer'd in theſe Words, Yes; you may. And the Latter (Goodman) having premis'd, as Porter had done in his written Depoſition, That he did not join the Company till after Dinner, ſwore to the ſame Expreſſions, and the ſame Poſture; except, that he was rather more particular; for he added, Cooke had his Elbows on the Table, as well as his Knees on the Chair.

Porter and Goodman the Witneſſes againſt him.

And thus if ſuch a Conſultation, and ſuch a Reſult were proved capital Treaſon, there was ſufficient Evidence to prove it, if that Evidence could be depended upon: But the Priſoner undertook to ſhew, by the Means of a Record, which was produc'd in Court, That one of them, Goodman, was not to be depended on: For by the ſaid Record it appear'd, That Goodman had been convicted of hiring one Alexander Amadeo to poiſon the Dukes of Grafton and Northumberland, had been adjudg'd to pay a Fine of 1000 l. and to be committed to the Marſhalſea till it was paid; as alſo, to find Security for the Peace. A.D. 16[illegible]

One Edwards alſo, on Behalf of the Priſoner, depos'd, That he being confin'd in Newgate, together with Goodman, the Latter had told him, That He and Porter were to be Witneſſes againſt Cooke: That Cooke had alſo ſworn againſt him, Goodman, but could not obtain a Pardon, becauſe he would diſcover no body elſe: Adding, "He or I muſt ſuffer; "but it is a fooliſh thing to be hang'd: All "that is ſaid of a Man is, That he hang'd "handſomely, or dy'd bravely." Counter Evidence in Behalf of the Priſoner.

Cock, the Landlord of the King's-Head, having admitted, That the Lords Ayleſbury and Montgomery, Sir William Perkins, Fenwick, Friend, Charnock, Porter and Cooke, did dine at his Houſe about a Year before, was nevertheleſs poſitive, That the Lords went away before Four o'Clock: That the reſt of the Company ſtay'd till Eight or Nine: That Goodman, he believ'd, was not there at all, for he had never ſeen him till that Trial: But that he could ſwear he was not there till after the two Lords went away, becauſe he had been in the Room half a Dozen Times after Dinner; and in particular, juſt before the Lord Ayleſbury went away, and juſt after, when no more Perſons were preſent than had din'd there.

Two Drawers of the ſaid Tavern moreover depos'd, That they had never ſeen Goodman there at all; but One of them was rather more peremptory than the Other: For the firſt, like his Maſter, ſeem'd to be moſt certain, that he was not there till after the two Lords went away; whereas the laſt, who ſaid, he had waited on that Company only, was expreſs, That neither Goodman, nor any body elſe, join'd the Company after Dinner: That he had never ſeen him in his Life till that Day: And that there were no Orders for their being in private; for all the Drawers went backwards and forwards as uſual.

Three other Witneſſes depos'd, That the Priſoner had never abſconded; that he was taken in his Father's Houſe; and both they and ſeveral others gave him the beſt of Characters for Religion and Virtue.

On the other Hand, to take off the Credit of Edwards, who had given ſuch a Shock to that of Goodman, the King's Counſel brought in Porter and de la Rue to vouch, That he was to have had his Part in the Aſſaſſination: But then it is equally certain, that his Name is not to be found in the written Depoſitions of thoſe Worthies, and that he was not proſecuted afterwards for his Concern therein; which after this Provocation, it is ſcarce to be ſuppos'd, would have been the Caſe, if their Evidence againſt him had been well founded. The Evidence on both Sides confronted.

Goodman was then call'd for again, in order to confront Cock; admitted the two Lords

A. D. 1696. Lords left the Company firſt, but not before he was introduc'd by Porter: And to convince Cock he could not but know him, tho' he had vouch'd the contrary, ſaid, He had din'd at his Houſe four or fives Times with French; and that once in particular, not being well, he went down to the Bar for ſome Brandy, which he had from Cock himſelf; and thinking it the beſt he had ever taſted, would have bought a Quantity of it, but was told by Cock, he had but little for himſelf.

Cock, however, perſiſted in his Aſſertion, That he had never ſeen him before; and could recollect nothing of the Circumſtances he mentioned.

For fear, therefore, his Perſeverance ſhould make an untoward Impreſſion on the Jury, Porter was again referr'd to; and, like a Man determin'd not to be out-done in his new Vocation, ſtiffly maintain'd, That Goodman having ſent up his Name, (Burnet ſays, ſent him a Note) and he (Porter) having anſwer'd for his Honeſty and Devotion to the Cauſe, he was admitted by the Conſent of the Company: That this was two Hours before the Lords went away (for he was admitted about Four, and they did not go away till near Six) That they diſcours'd the whole Buſineſs after Goodman came into the Room: And that he remember'd, when Lord Ayleſbury was going out, Goodman bow'd and took his Leave of him.

And yet of the three Witneſſes, who were all ſo equally poſitive, That Goodman was not in the Company till Lord Ayleſbury left it, (viz. Cock and his two Drawers) one ſwore he came down from my Lord, juſt before he went away; a Second, that he follow'd him out of the Room; and Cock himſelf, that he met him at the Head of the Stairs, as he was on his Departure.

Shower's Plea. Sir Bartholomew Shower, who was Counſel for the Priſoner, now enter'd on his Province, and addreſſing himſelf more particularly to the Jury, gave them to underſtand, in the firſt Place, That they were not to be determin'd either by their private Opinions, or public Fame; by former Verdicts, or the Confeſſions or dying Speeches of Criminals, who had already ſuffer'd the Law, but by Matter of Evidence deliver'd by two credible Witneſſes: He then proceeded to ſhew, That Goodman, one of the Witneſſes againſt the Priſoner, was not a credible Witneſs; inſiſted, that the Record prov'd him to be one of the worſt of Men; and that the oppoſite Evidence of three irreproachable Witneſſes, ought to deſtroy the Validity of his; in which Caſe Porter would ſtand alone, and no Conviction could legally follow upon it, even if it were admitted that his Teſtimony were true: Laſtly, he left it to the Jury to conſider, Whether a Man ſhould be executed for Treaſon, who had never fled for it, who had never been charg'd with any Treaſon or treaſonable Practices before; and whether three Witneſſes, againſt whom no Objection lay, ſhould not be believ'd rather than two, againſt one of whom ſuch Objections did lye?

The Priſoner himſelf then clos'd his Defence, with the moſt ſolemn Proteſtations, That he was ever averſe to the Introduction of foreign Forces; that he did not ſo much as hear of the intended Invaſion, till it was common Talk; and that he had never ſeen Goodman at the King's-Head: He alſo added, That deſigning ſoon to receive the bleſſed Sacrament, he wiſh'd he might periſh, in the Inſtant, if he now ſpoke an Untruth; or if he had ever bought Arms for the promoting any ſuch Purpoſe as he was charg'd with: And that he might deſerve ſo much the more Credit from the Court, he produc'd one Mr. Hammond, who teſtify'd, That he heard him declare his Abhorrence of the Plot, and of a French Force: That he heard him wiſh Succeſs to the Engliſh Fleet againſt it; and that he never heard him ſpeak diſreſpectfully either of the King or Government. A. D. 1696. The Priſoner's Proteſtations.

Mr. Solicitor-General Hawles, the Patriot-Commentator on the State-Trials of the two former Reigns, was to play his Part next; which, inſtead of being that of an Advocate for the Subject, as in the former Caſes, was now that of another Jeffreys; to be as void of Senſibility and Ingenuity on the Side of the Priſoner, and as determin'd to make any Sacrifice that Power or Policy requir'd. Accordingly, in his Reply to Shower, he inſiſted, That they had two poſitive Witneſſes againſt the Priſoner: That theſe Witneſſes told the ſame Story with the ſame Circumſtances: That they were legal Witneſſes as well as poſitive Witneſſes; not only becauſe the Judgment againſt Goodman was ſatisfy'd the very next Term, and the Satisfaction acknowledg'd on the Record itſelf, but becauſe the Priſoner and his Counſel knew well enough the Exception extended only to the Credit, not the Legality, of his Evidence: That if Guilt of any kind diſqualified a Man from being a Witneſs, Treaſon was a higher Species of Guilt than Murder: That Porter, by his own Confeſſion, was guilty of Treaſon; and therefore no Objection on that Account having been laid againſt him, Goodman might be credited, tho' guilty of the Crime objected to him: That as to the Allegations of Edwards againſt the ſaid Goodman, they amounted to nothing; for it was plain Goodman had forfeited his Life, and being oblig'd to do ſomething to ſave it, could not do a better Service to entitle himſelf to the King's Mercy, than to diſcover his Accomplices: That as to the Drawers, one had gone farther than the Priſoner's Counſel would have had him, and yet not ſo far; farther, becauſe, inſtead of proving that Goodman was not there while the Lords ſtay'd, he ſaid he had not been there at all; and yet not ſo far, becauſe he had acknowledg'd he had waited on other Companies; ſo that Goodman might have been there, and he not know it: That as to the Other, who ſaid he had waited on the Company all the Time they were at Dinner, that ſignify'd nothing; for both Porter and Goodman had ſworn, the Latter was not there till afterwards; and that as to his coming in and going out of the Room afterwards, he might do ſo, The Solicitor-General's Reply.

and

A. D. 1696. and yet not ſee him, tho' he was there: That as to Cock, tho' he gave much the ſame Evidence in effect as his Servants did, he had ſtrained his Credit, in being ſo poſitive that Goodman was not there while Lord Aylesbury ſtaid, when he could not be poſitive he was not there afterwards: That ſuch Circumſtances as theſe, could not take off the poſitive Evidence of Goodman and Porter, &c.

And here Mr. Solicitor had recourſe to a very extraordinary Artifice to influence the Jury: For he gave them to underſtand, That if on the Counter-Evidence of the Tavern-Maſter and his Servants, they falſify'd the Evidence of Goodman, this would falſify that of Porter too, which was the ſame he had given againſt Friend; and in ſuch caſe they ought to acquit the Priſoner, becauſe they had no Evidence in Law againſt him.

Thus they were to infer, That in acquitting the Priſoner, they would, in one Inſtance at leaſt, draw the Juſtice of the Kingdom into queſtion: And very few Men have Firmneſs enough to ſet the Dictate of Conſcience in oppoſition to the Clamours of the Times.

The Solicitor alſo took all the Care in his Power, That the good Character of the Priſoner, his Virtue, his Honour, his Religion, his declar'd Abhorrences of the French and the Plot, ſhould be of no Service to him; and concluded with ſaying, "That if the Witneſſes were legal Witneſſes, (as he made no doubt their Lordſhips, the Judges, would pronounce them to be) then, with Submiſſion, he thought, there was no Room for the Gentlemen of the Jury to doubt, but that the Priſoner was as guilty of the Crime laid to his Charge, as any Others that had been try'd and condemn'd for the ſame."

Lord Chief-Juſtice Treby's Charge

Treby, ſo famous for his Patriotiſm when Recorder of London; or, in other Words, for countenancing every Anti-Court-Meaſure, which was then the Sum of popular Merit, and who now preſided on the Bench as Lord-Chief-Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, here took the Word; and, inſtead of ſpecifying either the Matter of Law, or the Matter of Evidence, confin'd himſelf to Generals only; ſaid, There were ſeveral Circumſtances, ſome of which were very pregnant.—It was agreed on all Hands the Priſoner had din'd at the Houſe with the other ſeven Perſons above nam'd; and ſo had been for a long Time a Companion of three Traitors (meaning Friend, Perkins, and Charnock) for as to the other four, they were not at Liberty to conclude concerning them: The Meeting itſelf was ſo much the more ſuſpicious, becauſe the Occaſion of it had not been ſpecify'd; for tho' it had been ſaid Lord Aylesbury propos'd to treat about a Hogſhead of Wine, that was but a caſual Circumſtance, and what concern'd him only.—The Manner of meeting was alſo ſuſpicious; the Lords both came and went away in a Hackney-Coach, and the reſt did not ſeperate till it was dark: Even the very Houſe was ſuſpicious, for it had been us'd by Sir J. Friend, and by none of the Company beſides; whence it was probable, that he had beſpoke the Place, and brought the Reſt to it:—And this made it ſo much the more probable, that there was ſuch a Treaſon there to be hatch'd, as had been evidenc'd by the King's Witneſſes.—It was to be remember'd, that the ſaid Sir J. Friend was indicted and attainted, not for the Aſſaſſination, but the Treaſon, for which the Priſoner was then upon his Trial: It, therefore, Sir J. Friend was chiefly acquainted with this Houſe, and brought the Company together, it was very probable it was about the Buſineſs in which Sir J. Friend was ſo concern'd:—That he was attainted for it, appears by the Record, which ſhould be read; but that the Counſel for the Priſoner were ſo far ſatisfy'd in it, that they would not arraign the Verdict; nay, had acknowledg'd there was a Plot; and there was no doubt of it: There was ſuch a Plot.

A. D. 1696.

This is the Deduction, This the Reaſoning of this Patriot-Judge:—And let a Patriot of any Denomination, who is ſuch upon Principle, who is acquainted with the Rights of an Engliſhman, the Doctrines which prevail'd among the Whigs before the Revolution, the Duty of a Chief-Juſtice, the Oath of a Juryman, the Spirit of the Law, and the common Uſe of common Senſe, read this Rhapſody without Indignation if he can! The Priſoner is to be condemn'd on Suſpicions and Probabilities; and becauſe another Man had been condemn'd on the ſame Evidence; which by the way is not true; for Blaire, not Goodman, was the Second Witneſs againſt Friend; and even the Matter of Evidence deliver'd by Blaire, was as defective as the Character of Goodman was reproachable: Beſides; Biſhop (n) Burnet has been ſo frank as to tell us, That Cooke's Trial was conſider'd as introductory to the Earl of Aylesbury's; and nothing could be more unfair, or, indeed, more illegal, than to involve him thus prematurely in all the Concluſions that could be drawn againſt Cooke from the Conviction of Friend.

Therein.

But to reſume our Thread—The Chief-Juſtice having reduc'd the whole Matter to theſe two Propoſitions, that it had been admitted on all Hands, There had been ſuch a Meeting; and that it had been poſitively ſworn by two Witneſſes, that the Treaſon laid in the Indictment, had been committed there, with an affected Candor, concluded in theſe Words, "You have heard what has been objected to their Credit [the Credit of the Witneſſes] They have deliver'd their Teſtimony

(n) The ſame Author farther ſays, Porter and Goodman were two Witneſſes againſt Cooke; which leaves the Reader at Liberty to ſurmiſe, that there were more Witneſſes than theſe two. And, that the Evidence of Goodman might not be affected by the Counter-Evidence, he adds, "And then it was certain the Servants of the Houſe were not in that conſtant Attendance; nor could they be believ'd in a Negative againſt poſitive Evidence to the contrary: Their Credit was not ſuch, but that it might be well ſuppos'd that for the Intereſt of their Houſe, they might be induc'd to make Stretches."

A. D. 1696. Teſtimony upon their Oaths; and ſo, Gentlemen, are you upon your Oaths: If you are ſatisfy'd and can take it upon your Conſciences, that theſe Two Witneſſes are, or any one of them is, forſworn (if ſuch Diſtinction can poſſibly be made in this Caſe) then you are to acquit the Priſoner: But if you are ſatisfy'd, and think they have ſworn true, you are to find him Guilty."

And ſo ſtrong was the Force of Prepoſſeſſion, that after a Demur of about three Quarters of an Hour, the Jury return'd into Court, and brought in their Verdict, Guilty.

Biſhop Burnet adds, "That he obtain'd many ſhort Reprieves upon Aſſurances, that he would tell all he knew." So that the Court was ſometimes for extending their Diſcoveries, and ſometimes refus'd to hear them; as in the Caſe of Charnock: But thoſe made by Cooke, would not, it ſeems, ſerve their Turn: For tho' his Life was at ſtake, it was viſible, ſays the ſame Author, he did not deal ſincerely. Such Paſſages, however, occur'd in the Courſe of theſe Temperings, that the Court did not think it adviſable to execute him; and having baniſh'd him, were complemented as if they had perform'd an Act of Clemency, when in Truth it was but an Act of Prudence.

An uſe on the whole Affair.

Thus we have now before us all the Evidence, general and particular, that was brought forward during this Seſſion concerning the Plot; and upon the whole, we are now in a Capacity to pronounce, That an Invaſion had been actually meditated: That a Connection had been actually form'd between the Court of St. Germains, and ſome of their Partizans in England: That theſe Partizans of theirs had enter'd into Engagements to furniſh the Invaders with a Body of Horſe: That a Number of Officers were ſent from France to forward their Preparations: That theſe Officers, and the Undertakers they were to be joyn'd with here, were furniſh'd with Commiſſions to levy War againſt the King: That a Deſign was actually form'd to ſurprize him in his Quarters: That ſuch as had enough of the Ruffian in their Compoſition, to engage in ſuch a Deſign, would have made us little Difficulty of killing him, as of carrying him off alive: And that ſuch a Deſign was juſtly puniſhable by the Laws of God and Man.

But then, as in the Caſe of the Rye-Conſpiracy, we ought to diſtinguiſh between Thoſe who were for reſtoring their old Maſter, by the Interpoſition of a Power that was at open War with their new Maſter, and Thoſe who were for taking off the Latter, by any Means, how baſe and bloody ſoever. A. D. 1696.

The Right of Reſiſtance, which had been ſo ſtrenuouſly maintain'd in all the Court-Writings of all Sorts, if not from the (o) Bench, could not be the Property of any one Party: The Malcontents of this Reign had many plauſible Allegations to urge in their Excuſe, as well as the Malcontents of the laſt: And like them they knew, That, according as they ſucceeded or miſcarry'd, ſo they ſhould be conſider'd as Patriots or Traitors.

But, ſuppoſing neither their Principles nor their Practices were ſuch as would admit the leaſt Extenuation, certainly the Degree of their Guilt ought be meaſur'd, not by Paſſion and Prejudice, but by Fact and Evidence: And thoſe in Power ought to have allow'd them all the Advantages which, in ſimilar Circumſtances, they had demanded for themſelves: Such, however, was the Rage of Recrimination, the Perverſeneſs of ill-judging Policy, and the malignant Eagerneſs of returning Meaſure for Meaſure, that They, as their Adverſaries had done in the Rye-Affair, made but one Article of the Aſſaſſination and Invaſion; made King James himſelf anſwerable for Both; talk'd of all the Conſpirators as all guilty alike; and thence hop'd either to blot out the Memory of their own Reproach, or to faſten the like Reproach on thoſe who had faſten'd it on them.

Laſtly: The Proſecution was carry'd on with the ſame diſingenuous Spirit: For thoſe who had the Direction of it, practis'd all the Rigours they had once ſo bitterly complain'd of; and thereby authoris'd the contrary Party to pronounce, That either thoſe former Complaints of theirs were without Ground; or, if not, They were of all Offenders the moſt unpardonable, as having acted againſt their own Conviction.

And now, we may, if we pleaſe, weigh the Fears of the Government againſt the Danger: We may examine whether it became the two Houſes of Parliament, and, after their Example, all the corporate Bodies of the three Kingdoms, to enter into ſo ſolemn a Confederacy againſt ſuch a contemptible Band of brainleſs Deſperadoes;

(o) Soon after the Trial of Cooke, the following very extraordinary Paſſages were inſerted in the London-Gazette, No. 3186.

"Whereas in Folio 34, of the late Trial of Sir John Friend, for High-Treaſon, printed and publiſh'd by Brotherton Aylmer, there are inſerted the Words following, as ſpoken by the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, viz.

There is a levying of War without Treaſon, as aiming at the Death of the King; for if a Number of Men appear in a warlike Manner, and this is not againſt the Perſon of the King, nor with a Deſign of his Death and Deſtruction, but for a general Reformation of the State, and to have better Laws, and to prevent thoſe Abuſes that they are offended at; this War now to be levied, not being to compaſs and deſign the Death of the King, this is not High-Treaſon.

Which Words were not ſpoken by the ſaid Lord Chief Juſtice, nor any Words to that Senſe or Purpoſe; but the ſame are altogether diſown'd by his Lordſhip, and declar'd to be contrary to Law: And the ſaid Brotherton Aylmer being fully ſenſible of his Error, and of the Injury and Diſhonour done to the Lord Chief Juſtice, by miſrepreſenting his Words and Senſe in this Manner, hath made his humble Acknowledgment and Submiſſion to his Lordſhip, and beſought him in regard of the ſame, and that the Miſtake is rectify'd in the printed Trial, licenſed by his Lordſhip, to forgive him for this Offence: Signed by the ſaid Brotherton Aylmer, and atteſted by Sir Robert Clayton, Sir Thomas Stamp, and Sir Richard Levet, Knights and Aldermen of London.

And on Saturday the 16th Inſtant, the ſaid Brotherton Aylmer did, in open Court, at the Guild-Hall, before the ſaid Lord Chief Juſtice, make a further Submiſſion to his Lordſhip, who was thereupon pleaſed freely to declare he did forgive him.

A. D. 1696. Deſperadoes; and whether the Agitation that the whole Nation was thrown into upon it, was not rather the Effect of a political Management, than of national Conviction?

Of the Aſſociation voted by each Houſe, and the expreſs Order for all Members to ſign it by a certain Day, or declare their Refuſal, mention has been already made: And when the Day came, and the Names of the Abſentees call'd over, ſuch as accompany'd their Excuſes for Non-Attendance, with a Signification, That their Purpoſe was to ſign it, were excus'd: But as to ſuch who kept themſelves ſtill on the Reſerve, either in Town or Country, the Speaker had Orders to preſs the Laſt by Letter, and the Clerk of the Houſe to attend the Firſt: In conſequence of which, moſt of the Defaulters thought it Prudence, ſays Biſhop Kennet, to yield to the Times, and either to ſubſcribe, or promiſe to do ſo, when they came next to the Houſe; tho' it was againſt the Inclinations of Some, and, perhaps, againſt the Principles of Others.

A Liſt, however, is ſtill extant of ninety-two Commoners, thirteen temporal Lords, and two Biſhops (Sprat of Rocheſter, and Watſon of St. David's) who refus'd to ſign it at all: And without any regard to the Extenuations that Candour might, and Charity would, admit in their Favour, Party-Rage has treated that Refuſal as an inexcuſable Crime.

The Commons in a Body wait upon the King with the Aſſociation.

On the 3d of April, however, by which time it appear'd impracticable, to make it the unanimous Act of the Commons of England, the Aſſociation was preſented to his Majeſty at Kenſington, by the Houſe in a Body, together with a ſolemn Requeſt, "That he would order both that and all other Aſſociations by the Commons of England, to be lodg'd among the Records in the Tower, there to remain as a perpetual Memorial of their Loyalty and Aſſociation to his Majeſty." And on the other Hand, his Majeſty, to manifeſt as much Concern for his Lieges, as they had manifeſted for him, was pleaſed to reply, "That he took this as a moſt convincing and acceptable Evidence of their Affections; and that as they had freely aſſociated themſelves for his and their common Safety, ſo he did heartily concur in the ſame Aſſociation, and would be always ready with them, and the reſt of his good Subjects, to venture his Life againſt all who ſhould endeavour to ſubvert the Religion, Laws, and Liberties of England:" That he comply'd with their Requeſt, in ordering the Aſſociation they brought, and all other Aſſociations to be lodg'd in the Tower, will be inferr'd of courſe; ſince it concern'd him at leaſt as much as them: And that Miniſters ſhould derive all the Advantages they could from this Overflow of Loyalty, is altogether as naturally to be expected.

His Majeſty's Reply.

Great Aſſemblies very rarely have a Motion of their own: And all the Art lies in concealing the Springs by which they are moved.

The Aſſociation, tho' calculated to demonſtrate the Loyalty of thoſe who made it, was liable to ſome legal Objections, as it was founded on a hoſtile Principle, and made a Proviſion for having recourſe to Violence, which the Law in all Inſtances affects to abhor: When therefore the King was become a Party to it, and the Lords had agreed to a ſimilar Inſtrument, tho' not the ſame Inſtrument, to prevent all Controverſy concerning it, a Queſtion was put the next Day, and a Reſolution taken upon it, "That whoſoever ſhould, by Word or Writing, affirm, that the Aſſociation enter'd into by any Member of this Houſe (of Commons) or any other Perſon, was illegal, ſuch Perſon ſhould be deem'd a Promoter of the Deſigns of the late King James, and an Enemy to the Laws and Liberty of this Kingdom."

Their Vote againſt ſuch an illegal Queſtion its Legality.

Having alſo, about this Time, receiv'd a Report from one of their Committees, appointed to examine Friend and Perkins in Newgate, That the Latter had own'd his being privy to the intended Aſſaſſination: That he gueſs'd he could have been able to have brought in to the Number of a Troop: But that he would never redeem his own Blood, at the Expence of theirs he had drawn in, &c. The ſaid Report was order'd to be enter'd in the Journal; and it was unanimouſly reſolv'd, That a Bill be brought in for the better Security of his Majeſty's Perſon and Government, under theſe Heads; 1ſt, That ſuch as ſhould refuſe to take the Oaths to his Majeſty, ſhould be ſubject to the Forfeitures and Penalties of Popiſh Recuſants convict. 2dly, To inflict a Penalty on ſuch as ſhould, by writing or otherwiſe, declare, That King William was not lawful and rightful King of theſe Realms; or that the late King James, or the pretended Prince of Wales, or any other Perſon, than according to the Act of Settlement of the Crown, had any Right to the Crown of theſe Realms. 3dly, To ratify and confirm the Aſſociation enter'd into by all his Majeſty's good Subjects, for the Preſervation of his Majeſty's Perſon and Government. 4thly, That no Perſon ſhould be capable of any Office of Profit or Truſt, Civil or Military, that ſhould not ſign the Aſſociation: And, 5thly, That the ſame Penalties be inflicted on ſuch as come out of France, as upon thoſe that go thither.

Bill for the Security of his Majeſty's Perſon and Government.

In the Courſe of this Bill, ſeveral other Clauſes were added; one, for Example, to make it lawful to detain in Cuſtody, without Bail or Mainprize, any Perſon who was, or before the laſt Day of Trinity Term, ſhould be, committed upon Information upon Oath, for High-Treaſon, till the firſt Day of December: Another to oblige every Perſon, who, after the Determination of the preſent Parliament, ſhould be choſen a Member to ſubſcribe the Aſſociation, on pain of Diſability: And a Third, to (p) oblige all Perſons, who ſhould be admitted into the Service

(p) All the Commiſſions of the Peace of the Lieutenancy were alſo review'd about this Time; and ſuch as had not voluntarily ſign'd the Aſſociation, were turn'd out.

A.D. 1696. vice of the Prince and Princeſs of Denmark, to ſubſcribe the Aſſociation.

And this laſt Clauſe was ſo much the more remarkable, becauſe it had been acknowledg'd in the Gazette, That their Royal Highneſſes had not only given particular Directions for tendering the Aſſociation to all their Servants, but that they had ſign'd it accordingly; and that the Inſtrument ſo ſign'd by them, had been preſcrib'd to his Majeſty by the Lord Berkely, and other of their principal Servants.

It may alſo be ſuppos'd, that this Forwardneſs of their Highneſſes, to countenance ſo grateful a Meaſure, was properly conſider'd at Court; for the young Duke of Glouceſter, their only Son, who was then in the Seventh Year of his Age, was about this Time elected a Knight of the Garter, tho' he was not inſtall'd till the Anniverſary of his Birth-Day, which was the 24th of July; poſſibly that the King might be excus'd from the Fatigue of aſſiſting at the Ceremonial.

It is taken by the whole Kingdom in general.

But to draw towards a Cloſe on this Topic: The Example of the two Houſes, and of the Royal Family, was follow'd by all the great Officers of State, the ſeveral Regencies of Scotland and Ireland, the City of London, the two Univerſities, the Clergy, the Lawyers, the Seamen and Soldiers, and in general, all the Societies and Corporations in the Kingdom; in ſo much, that the Gazette, for many Months together, was, if poſſible, more crowded with Liſts of Aſſociators, than ever it had been with Addreſſes to King James on the Defeat of the Duke of Monmouth, the Birth of the Pretender, or any other Court-Occaſion.

And, laſtly, that no Circumſtance might be wanting which had a Tendency to convince the Nation of the ineſtimable Value of the King's Life, and the Intereſt they had in his Preſervation, the Houſe of Lords, in a ſolemn Addreſs, beſought his Majeſty to appoint a Day of national Thankſgiving to Almighty God, for having manifeſted his Power and Mercy in diſcovering and delivering him from a horrid and barbarous Conſpiracy of Papiſts, and other traiterous Perſons, to aſſaſſinate and murder his Royal Perſon; and from an Invaſion intended by the French, for the total Subverſion of the Government, Religion, Laws, and Liberties of this Realm, &c. And a national Thankſgiving was appointed accordingly; which was obſerv'd with as much outward Shew of Zeal and Devotion, as if there was no ſuch Thing as a Remnant of Diſaffection or Diſſatisfaction left in the Nation.

For what remains: While the Inſtruments of the Government had full Employment in exploring every Meander of the Plot, as alſo in making ſuch Examples of the Plotters as they thought fit, and the Government itſelf was ſo induſtrious in making a proper Uſe of ſo favourable a Criſis, Admiral Ruſſel hoiſted his Flag on board the Victory in the Downs; and having, with incredible Diligence, collected a ſtrong Fleet, ſtood over to Graveline, and from thence ſtretch'd along the Coaſt to Calais; in which Port he diſcover'd between three and four hundred ſmall Veſſels, drawn up cloſe under Shore: As alſo about ſeventeen or eighteen Men of War, great and ſmall, lying among the Sands of Dunkirk, which were to have taken the Tranſports under their Protection. A.D. 1696.

But the very Appearance of the Engliſh Fleet had put an End to that Deſign: For the Enemy, who believ'd a few half-mann'd Guard-ſhips was, at that Time of the Year, all the Force they had to apprehend, were alike ſurpriz'd and confounded to ſee their Ports block'd up in the Courſe of a few Days with ſuch a (q) Multitude of Ships: And inſtead of continuing their Preparations for a Deſcent on the Coaſt of England, became anxious only for their own.

For Ruſſel, not ſatisfy'd with barely preventing the Deſigns of the Enemy, ſent in Shovel, who was known to be a Man of Enterprize, with a ſuitable Detachment to explore every poſſible Method of deſtroying the Men of War at Dunkirk; and when it appear'd, that what he was willing to undertake, the Dutch Pilots were either unwilling or unable to conduct, came to a Reſolution of beſtowing another Bombardment on Calais, tho' the laſt had prov'd ſo ineffectual: Freſh Inſtructions were, however, neceſſary for an Attempt of this Nature; and an Augmentation of Bomb-Veſſels, Stores, &c.

Calais again bombarded.

In order, therefore, to be properly furniſh'd with both, having left a Squadron of Obſervation to hold the Enemy in check, he return'd to the Downs: And ſoon after Shovel again ſtood over to Calais, and threw about three hundred Shells into the Town, more to the Terror than Hurt of the Inhabitants: For tho' the Place took fire in three or four Places, it was ſoon extinguiſh'd; and even the very Tranſports eſcap'd without any conſiderable Damage: But on the other Hand it is confeſs'd, That the Bomb-Veſſels and Brigantines ſuffer'd much; that ſeveral of the Frigates were very roughly handled; that all the Mortars but two were diſabled; and that the Wind freſhening the next Day, it was thought convenient to return to the Downs; tho' ſtill under the former Precaution of keeping a proper Strength at Sea, to obſerve the Motions of the Enemy.

But if it was Matter of ſome Conſolation to France, to find her Ports inacceſſible to an exaſperated Enemy, that Conſolation was not of ſufficient Weight to balance the Diſappointments ſhe had met with, and the Loſs ſhe had elſewhere ſuſtain'd: For, in confidence that a Diverſion would be made in England, at leaſt for ſome time, ſhe had eſtabliſh'd

(q) Burchet ſays, That on the Admiral's firſt coming into the Downs, he found but one Firſt Rate, two Thirds, ſix Fourths, and two Fifths, with one Fire-ſhip, a Ketch, and a Brigantine: And all the reſt that were in pay, lay in Places remote from one another; poorly mann'd and worſe provided: And yet by the Beginning of March he had no leſs than fourſcore Sail, ſmall and great, Engliſh and Dutch, under his Command.

A. D. 1696. eſtabliſh'd a vaſt Magazine at Givet, at an immenſe Expence, in order that when the Allies were ſufficiently enfeebled, by the Draughts made from Flanders to repel King James, ſhe might be in a Condition to draw her Troops out of their Cantonments early in the Spring, and ſnatch the Fruits of a Campaign, before they could be able to make Head againſt him. On this Magazine the Allies, on the other Hand, kept a watchful Eye: And no ſooner was it confirm'd on all Hands, that the French Project of a Deſcent had totally fail'd, than the Earl of Athlone, and M. de Coehorne, with the Concurrence of the Duke of Holſtein-Ploen, who had the chief Command, took their Meaſures to deſtroy it: For all the Horſe that could be draughted out of Bruſſels, and the neighbouring Garriſons, having been detach'd to amuſe the Enemy in Charleroy, Nivill, &c. the two Generals above-mention'd march'd out of Namur with forty Squadrons, thirty Battalions, fifteen Pieces of Cannon, and ſix Mortars: After which, ſeperating again, Athlone, with the greateſt Part of the Horſe, and ſome Foot, inveſted Dinant, while Coehorne, with the Foot and the Train, advanc'd to Givet, which he began to bombard at Seven the next Morning (March 16, N. S.) with ſuch Succeſs, that in three Hours time the whole Place was on Fire; and by Four in the Afternoon it was wholly deſtroy'd, together with the Magazine it contain'd: After which the two Generals re-join'd each other, and return'd to Namur, without any material Interruption; the whole Expedition having coſt them not above nine or ten Men.

The French Magazine at Givet burnt by the Allies.

Thus having diſpatch'd all ſuch incidental Matters, as neceſſarily interſected the ordinary Courſe of the Seſſion, it is incumbent on us to reſume the Thread, and perſue it to a Period: And as the two firſt Court-Bills that were paſs'd in it, were accompany'd with two popular ones, ſo when the Land-Tax-Bill (which was 4 s. in the Pound) was paſs'd on the 13th of February, the Laity were complemented with a Bill for the farther Security of Elections, by new Expedients to prevent, and new Penalties to puniſh, falſe and double Returns: And the Clergy with the Prolongation of another for the more eaſy Recovery of ſmall Tythes.

Account of ſeveral Bills.

The ſame equal Spirit is alſo viſible if not uniformly prevalent even in the Land-Tax-Bill itſelf: For, as on the one Hand, it contains a Clauſe of Loan of 1,800,000 l. at 6 per Cent. and provides for the Deficiencies on Annuities, and ſuch Monies as had been borrow'd on the Credit of the Exchequer in general, ſo on the other, the Proviſion was continued, for the proper ſtationing forty-three Cruiſers for the Protection of Trade, and obliging the Admiralty to exhibit an Account thereof to Parliament.

But then it muſt be obſerv'd, that this Courſe of Equity and Moderation laſted no longer than the Diſcovery of the Conſpiracy: For as we have already been told by the Hiſtorian of his own Times, tho' in more ſpecious Terms, the Current from that Time ran all one way.

Thus when his Majeſty came next to the A. D. 1696. Houſe, which was March 7, all the public Bills preſented to him for the Royal Aſſent, were Offerings to the Throne: The firſt was for the Continuance of the Impoſition on Wine, Vinegar, and Tobacco (granted 1690) to the 29th of September, 1701, with a Clauſe of Loan of 1,500000 l. at 5 per Cent. The Second empower'd his Majeſty to apprehend and detain ſuch Perſons as he ſhould find Cauſe to ſuſpect were conſpiring againſt his Royal Perſon and Government. And the Third was, That for taking off the Obligation and Encouragement for coining Guineas for a certain Time; before ſpoken of.

Thus alſo when the King came next to the Houſe, to officiate in his legiſlative Capacity, the Acts which receiv'd the Royal Sanction, were as follow, viz.

1. The Act for granting to his Majeſty ſeveral Rates or Duties upon Houſes, for making good the Deficiency of the clipp'd Money; with a Clauſe of Loan for 1,200,000 l. at 7 and 8 per Cent. An Act that deſerves ſo much the more Notice, becauſe the new Government, on its firſt Eſtabliſhment, had arrogated ſo much Merit to itſelf, for the Repeal of the Hearth-Duty; becauſe, under the leſs obnoxious Name of a Duty upon Houſes, it impos'd a Tax on Day-Light and Sun-Shine; and becauſe tho' impos'd and tolerated, only for the Sake of ſo great and neceſſary a Service as the Reformation of the Coin, it is a Burden and a Reproach to the Nation at this Day.

2. The Act to encourage the bringing Plate into the Mint to be coin'd; and for the farther remedying the ill State of the Coin; which notwithſtanding its Title, ſet out with a Clauſe of Prohibition to all Publicans to uſe any wrought or manufactur'd Plate, except Spoons, on Pain of forfeiting the ſame, or the full Value thereof.

3. An Act for granting additional Duties on French Goods, that is to ſay, 25 l. on every Tun of Wine, 30 l. for every Tun of Brandy, 15 l. for every Tun of Vinegar, and 25 l. per Cent. ad valorem, on all other French Commodities: And in the Cloſe of it was added a Clauſe prohibiting the Exportation of Stocking-Frames, or Engines for weaving Stockings.

4. The Act for continuing, meeting, and ſitting of the Parliament in being, in caſe of the Death of the King, under the Reſtraint of the Triennial Bill.

5. The Act for puniſhing Mutiny and Deſertion, falſe Muſters, &c.

6. An Act for raiſing the Militia.

7. An Act for preventing Frauds and regulating Abuſes in the Plantation Trade.

8. An Act for requiring the Practitioners of the Law to take the Oaths, and ſubſcribe the Declaration therein mention'd.

It is true, the Act for the Encreaſe and Encouragement of Seamen (in the Preamble) which, it is acknowledg'd, That the Strength and Safety of his Majeſty's Dominions did very much depend on the furniſhing and ſupplying his Majeſty's Navy with a competent Number of able Mariners and Seamen,

A. D. 1696. Seamen, who might be in a Condition at all Times for that Service: And, farther, That the Seamen of this Kingdom had diſtinguiſh'd themſelves throughout the World by their Induſtry and Skilfulneſs, their Courage and Conſtancy, manifeſted in Engagements for the Defence and Honour of their native Country; and by which the Palace and Manor of Greenwich was beſtow'd on them for an Hoſpital, in conſequence of a Donation by Letters Patent of King William and Queen Mary) receiv'd the Royal Aſſent at the ſame Time: As did alſo another Act for the farther regulating Elections of Members to ſerve in Parliament; and for the preventing irregular Proceedings of Sheriffs and other Officers (by which it is ſaid, as well the Freeholders as others in their Right of Elections; as alſo, the Perſons by them elected to be their Repreſentatives, had heretofore been greatly injur'd and abuſed) in the electing and returning ſuch Members.

King refuſes to paſs a Bill for regulating Elections.

But then there was another Bill with a ſimilar Title, which had paſs'd thro' both Houſes, and yet had a Negative put upon it from the Throne: A Power which the King might legally, but could ſeldom graciouſly exerciſe, as his Majeſty had more than once experienced: Nor did the Malcontents overlook the Advantage: For on the fourth Day afterwards, the Affair was taken up with great Warmth in the Commons, and the Queſtion put, That whoſoever adviſ'd his Majeſty not to give the Royal Aſſent to that Bill, was an Enemy to the King and Kingdom: But the Time was at preſent more favourable to ſuch Adviſers than to ſuch Oppoſers; and it was thought more prudent to countenance the Former than the Latter: Accordingly on a Diviſion it appear'd, that the Noes were 219 to 70: And as if to make ſome Amends to the Throne for the Difficulty they had brought upon it (if Sovereigns ought ever to make a Difficulty of gratifying the reaſonable Demands of their Subjects) the Speaker was order'd to print the Queſtion in the Votes of the Day; together with the Numbers on the Diviſion, That the whole Nation might be convinc'd, they thought it wiſer at that particular Criſis to act like good Courtiers, than like good Engliſhmen.

Bills which were not carried thro'.

Nor was this the Sum total of their Complaiſance: Two old Whigs (if the firſt who had temporis'd with King James could be ſo call'd) Sir William Williams, and Herbert Earl of Torrington, had each of them a Bill depending: That of the Former was for reverſing a Judgment given againſt him, 2 Jac. II. for what he had done as Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, by Order of the Houſe; and for aſcertaining the Rights and Freedom of Parliament: And that of the Latter was for Confirmation of the Grant he had receiv'd from King William, of the royal Manor of Oatlands in Surry: Williams's Bill was not only reaſonable in its own Nature, but concern'd the Honour, Dignity, and Independency of the Houſe, full as much as it concern'd the Intereſt of him who brought it in: And as to Torrington's, it was no otherwiſe exceptionable, than as it ſeem'd A. D. 1696. to authoriſe a Queſtion which was now become a very tender one, viz. Whether the Crown had a Right or Power to alienate its Poſſeſſions? But as both Torrington and Williams were obnoxious alike, their Bills had the ſame Fate; which was, to dye of Neglect.

There was alſo a Third Bill which ſeem'd to have the Warrant of the Times in its favour; namely, a Bill to prevent Papiſts from diſinheriting their Proteſtant Heirs: But tho' the Edge of the Proclamation for a general Thankſgiving was turn'd againſt them, they had nevertheleſs Intereſt enough remaining to ſecure themſelves from this Reſtraint.

And if it ſhould be objected, That theſe Bills, being of a private Nature, were of little Importance, ſeveral others remain to be nam'd in this Liſt of Miſcarriages which regarded the Public almoſt fundamentally; namely, a Bill for ſettling and regulating the Eaſt-India Trade; another to regulate the African Trade; a Third to prevent Stock-jobbing; (which began already to be held a Grievance of the firſt Claſs) and two others to veſt in the Crown all forfeited Eſtates in England and Ireland, and to vacate all Grants made thereof: But Reſumption was a Sound which his Majeſty would not liſten to: The Stock-Jobbers had Friends at Court who maintain'd, They were a very uſeful Body of Men: Then as to the Neceſſities and Importunities of our Commerce, ſuch was the Din of Arms, and ſuch the Attention paid to it, that they could not be heard in the Manner they deſir'd: And, upon the whole it muſt be ſaid, That all the Recompence the Nation had for the Loſs of ſo many national Points, conſiſted in this, That a Bill which had been officiouſly brought in to regulate Printing and Printing Preſſes, was loſt together with them.

Acts paſſed at the Cloſe of the Seſſion.

Some others, however, which were not obnoxious to the ſame, or the like Court-Objections, were permitted to paſs: Of theſe were, 1. An Act for enforcing the Laws which reſtrain Marriages without Licence or Banns, and for the better regiſtering of Marriages, Births, and Burials. 2. An Act for the more effectual preventing the Exportation of Wool, and for encouraging the Importation thereof from Ireland. 3. An Act for encouraging the Linnen Manufactures of Ireland, and bringing Flax and Hemp into, and making Sail-Cloth of, in this Kingdom. 4. An Act for the Eaſe of Jurors, and the better regulating of Juries. 5. An Act for taking away the Cuſtom of Wales, which entitled Widows and younger Children to what was call'd a reaſonable Part of their Parents and Husbands perſonal Eſtates, and hinder'd them from diſpoſing of them by Will. 6. An Act for the Encouragement of charitable Gifts and Diſpoſitions. 7. An Act for the better Encouragement of the Greenland Trade. 8. An Act of Indulgence to the People call'd Quakers, That their ſolemn Affirmation and Declaration ſhould be accept-

A. D. 1696. ted inſtead of the Oath in the uſual Form; and an Act for continuing certain other Acts that were near expiring.

But then even Theſe had their way ſmooth'd by the Act for the better Security of the King's Perſon and Government, and two others, which completed the Demands of the Year under the Head of Ways and Means, viz. An Act for laying ſeveral Duties upon low Wines and Spirits of the firſt Extraction; and an Act for continuing certain Duties upon Salt, Glaſs Wares, Stone and Earthen Bottles, for granting ſeveral new Duties on Tobacco-Pipes, and other Earthen Wares; for eſtabliſhing a national Land Bank, and for taking off the Duties upon Tonnage of Ships and upon Coals, which had been complain'd of in ſeveral Petitions as injurious to Trade, and had been found grievous to the Public.

By the firſt of theſe Money-Acts the 500,000*l.* for the Civil Liſt, and the 15,000*l.* for the French Proteſtants; and the laſt, which was for raiſing 2,564,000*l.* by the Means of a national Land-Bank, was for carrying on the War with France.

Account of the Land-Bank.

Of This one Mr. Briſcoe was the (r) original Projector, tho' it has been aſcribed to Dr. Chamberlain, ſo famous in his Profeſſion of Midwifery; Mr. Robert Harley, the Speaker Foley, and the reſt of the Tory Leaders, were the Patrons of it in the Houſe; and, according to Burnet, it was by the Influence of Lord Sunderland, who now labour'd hard to make his Peace with that Party, the King himſelf was prevail'd on to conſent to it, or rather to deſire it, tho' he was then told by many of what ill Conſequence it would prove to his Affairs.

Who theſe Many were, he does not ſpecify: But no doubt they were all that the Bank already eſtabliſh'd, could influence: For tho' there was no expreſs Clauſe of Excluſion in that Act, to any other Eſtabliſhment of the like kind, ſuch an Excluſion was imply'd: And preſuming they had the Spirit, if not the Letter of the Law, the Merit of Service, and the Weight of their own Importance, on their Side, they would not ſuffer the Court itſelf to explane their Pretenſions away: On the other Hand, it was alledg'd, That as they bank'd on perſonal Security, and theſe new Undertakers were to bank only on Land Security, the Schemes were eſſentially different; conſequently the one might be authoris'd without any Injuſtice or Iniquity to the other: The Bank, nevertheleſs, maintain'd their Hold; and upon their Petition, were heard by their Counſel at the Bar of the Houſe: But notwithſtanding all the Arguments they could urge, and the Intereſt they could make, were defeated in their main Purpoſe: For the Bill was carry'd againſt them, tho' not without ſome ſuch Clogs and Reſtrictions, as gave them very reaſonable Ground to hope, that the Oppoſition without Doors, would prove more ſucceſsful than it had prov'd within. The Sum to be advanc'd to the Government, was to be rais'd by voluntary Subſcription; for which, at the Rate of 7 per Cent. Intereſt, they were to be allow'd 179,480*l.* out of the Product of the Duties ennumerated, and aſſign'd over to them in the Act: But if the ſaid Subſcription was not full by the 1ſt of Auguſt, the Powers and Authorities granted in the ſaid Act were to ceaſe and determine: A Fourth Part of the Sum ſubſcrib'd, was to be paid down at the Time of ſubſcribing, and the Reſidue before the 1ſt of January, 1696:—They were not to advance or lend at Intereſt, any Sum or Sums of Money, upon any Pretence whatſoever, unleſs to his Majeſty into the Receipt of the Exchequer, and on ſuch Funds only on which a Credit of Loan had, or ſhould be granted by Parliament; or unto the Subjects of this Realm upon Mortgages of Land, Tenements, Rents or Hereditaments, and not otherwiſe. The Intent of incorporating the ſaid Subſcribers, was declar'd to be in order to enable them to lend Money on Land Security at low Intereſt:—That Intereſt was fix'd at Three and a Half per Cent. if paid Quarterly, and Four, if paid half Yearly: They were to lend out 500,000*l. per Annum*, at the leaſt, over and above what they lent to their own Members: And no Proprietors or Servants of one Bank, were to be Servants or Proprietors of the other. A. D. 1696.

And as to the Appropriations of the Money to be rais'd, 560,000*l.* was to be apply'd to the Payment and Diſcharge of the Remainder of 564,700*l.* together with the Intereſt due thereon, which had been lent on the former Glaſs-Act; 140,000*l.* for making good the Rate and Duties of Tonnage upon Ships, granted in the 5th and 6th of the King: 140,000*l.* to make good the Duties upon Salt (which ſaid Duties on Salt, Glaſs, &c. were for the future to be levy'd by this Act, as the Tonnage and Coal Duties were to be redeem'd by it) 1,816,972*l.* for the Services of the Navy, and Ordnance for Sea-Services, over and above 700,000*l.* out of the Land-Tax: And the Reſidue (except the running Caſh, reſerv'd for Payment of Bills on demand, and the other Reſerves in the Act for Intereſt-Money, Charge of Management, &c.) was appropriated to the Payment of the Land-Forces, and other Charges incident to the War.

But whereas the whole of theſe Appropriations, being 2,656,972*l.* amount to more than the Act was given for, it is fit the Reader ſhould know, That the Funds of two other Acts, viz. That for continuing the Duties on low Wines, and That for continuing the Duties on Wine, Vinegar, &c. were farther aſſign'd, to complete the Navy Appointment.

Theſe Acts were the laſt of the Seſſion; which, on the 27th of April, his Majeſty was (r) As appears by ſeveral Tracts of his ſtill extant.

A. D. 1696. was pleas'd to put an End to, with the following Speech from the Throne.

King's Speech.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

You have ſhewn ſo great Concern for my Perſon, and Zeal for my Government, and have done ſo much for the Preſervation of the one, and for the Strengthening of the other, by the good Laws which have been made, and by the Supplies you have provided for the ſeveral Occaſions of this Year; that the late Deſigns of our Enemies are, by the Bleſſing of God, like to have no other Effect, than to let them ſee how firmly we are united, and to give me this Occaſion to acknowledge your Kindneſs, and to aſſure you of all the Returns which a Prince can make to his People.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The Neceſſity of Affairs requiring my Abſence out of the Kingdom for ſome Time, I do earneſtly recommend to you, That in your ſeveral Stations, you will be aſſiſting to thoſe whom I ſhall leave to adminiſter the Government; and that you will be careful in preſerving the public Peace of the Kingdom."

His Majeſty did not, however, ſet out immediately for Holland, but devoted a few more Days to ſuch Affairs as were ſtill depending: Such as, The Reception of the Venetian Embaſſadors, being the firſt which that cautious Republic had ſent to England ſince the Revolution: The appointing a Council of Trade, that the Parliament might no longer have any Pretence to ſet up a Conſtitution of their own: The creating two new Peers, viz. Sir John Lowther, by the Stile and Title of Baron Lowther of Lowther, and Viſcount of Lonſdale; and Sir John Thompſon, Baron Haverſham of Haverſham: The adding Sir Thomas Littleton to the Board of Treaſury: And the conſtituting a Regency of the following Perſons, namely, Teniſon Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Somers Lord-Keeper, Pembroke Lord Privy-Seal, Devonſhire Lord Steward, Shrewſbury Secretary of State, Dorſet Lord Chamberlain, and Godolphin firſt Commiſſioner of the Treaſury.

Of the Socinian Controverſy between thoſe two famous Rabbies Dr. Sherlock and Dr. South; and the Proclamation to ſilence all ſuch vain, fruitleſs, and perplexing Controverſies, thoſe Authors who profeſs both Divinity and Hiſtory, are the fitteſt to treat: And of the ſeveral Knights and Baronets, made in Acknowledgment of their Zeal and Loyalty in procuring and preſenting Aſſociations, no doubt the Heralds keep a faithful Record.

His Majeſty's Departure for Holland.

It was the 2d of May when the King ſet out from Kenſington; and the 7th before he landed at Oranje Polder; having been eſcorted as uſual, by a Squadron of Engliſh and Dutch Ships, under the Command of Vice-Admiral Aylmer: The famous du Bart, with a Squadron of eight clean, light Ships, was ſtill at Dunkirk: And as the late Conſpiracy had eſtabliſh'd a Belief, that his Majeſty's Perſon was always in danger from the Deſigns of the Enemy, the News of his ſafe Arrival was impatiently expected: But du Bart did not think fit to venture out againſt four Engliſh Third Rates, which lay in wait to intercept him: And Burchet gives it as his Opinion, That there was little Reaſon for the Apprehenſions entertain'd by the Public at this Time: "For, ſays he, at the Beginning of the War, he did not think fit to attempt it, although his Majeſty had with him no other than foul Ships of any Strength; whereas du Bart had ſeveral juſt come out of Dunkirk clean, with which he lay by for ſome Time, not much beyond the Reach of Gun-ſhot, without daring to gain himſelf the Reputation of giving our Ships one Broadſide, although he might, at pleaſure, have run round them, without expoſing himſelf to any great Danger."

A. D. 1696.

The Hiſtory of the Cabinet, during ſuch a Period as this, would be a Work of as much Curioſity, and perhaps of more Utility, than the Hiſtory of the War: For in order to judge rightly of Effects, we ought to be acquainted with their Cauſes: But without a proper Clue, that Labyrinth cannot be approached; and if we conjecture happily of the Interior, it is all that can be expected from us.

General Conduct of France.

France was, by this Time, enfeebled and embaraſs'd, but far from being reduc'd: And the Meaſures ſhe took were equally calculated to divide the Confederates, to detach ſuch as were wavering, to diſturb and perplex ſuch as were obſtinate, to purchaſe ſuch as were mercenary, and to defend herſelf againſt all, if all perſever'd in their Deſigns againſt her.

What Practices ſhe try'd, and Means ſhe us'd to find Employment for England, we have already ſeen: At Conſtantinople ſhe maintain'd her Aſcendancy againſt the Maritime Powers as abſolutely as ever; ſo that all the Offers they made by their Miniſters, and the Inſtances they were accompany'd with, to facilitate a Peace, came to nothing: In Poland, the Queen was ſtill her Penſioner; and tho' ſhe had not Intereſt enough to carry all her Points, ſhe had enough to traverſe and defeat thoſe of the Allies: At Rome, Venice, and, in general, all the Courts of Italy, where the Contributions for Winter-Quarters, levy'd by the Imperialiſts, were ſeverely felt and bitterly complain'd of, ſhe eſtabliſh'd a Credit, and obtain'd a ſuitable Degree of Confidence, by profeſſing a Concern for the Balance, Independency, and Repoſe of that divided Kingdom: In every Court of Germany ſhe had her Agents, fully inſtructed to make a proper Uſe of all thoſe rival Pretenſions, and interfering Intereſts, which alone hinder the Germanic Body from being of itſelf an over Match for France: Of her politic Advances to the Court of Turin, and their Succeſs, we ſhall hear in their Place: In that of Spain, where ſhe began now to be ſolicitous to eſtabliſh an Intereſt, in hope to be more a Gainer by her Addreſs, than even by her Arms, ſhe had both her Spies and her Penſioners, who loſt no Opportunity either of making Diſcoveries, or improving

Her Advances towards a Peace.

A.D. 1696. improving them: To the King of Sweden, the Language ſhe us'd was ſuch as ſeem'd to argue, that a Peace under his Mediation, and on the moſt equitable and ſolid Footing, was the only Object of her Wiſhes: And at the Hague, knowing that the Loeveſtein Party would be always ready to ſecond any Propoſals of that Nature; and that a trading People in their Senſes, would be glad to embrace the firſt Opportunity of getting rid of a burdenſome War, on any tolerable Terms, ſhe renew'd her Applications on that Head from Time to Time, with rather more Condeſcention than was conſiſtent with her Haughtineſs on other Occaſions.

The States, on the other Hand, lent a willing Ear, and, in all Probability, would have open'd their Arms as willingly, if they durſt have follow'd their Inclinations: For they had done ſo in the Treaty of Nimeguen, without any Regard to the Inſtances of their Stadtholder, or of their Allies: But he that was then their Servant, was now a King; and in a Condition to play the Dictator: Without his Concurrence therefore, and that of the other Parties concern'd, they could not make the neceſſary Advances; and when that was obtain'd, they proteſted againſt any Negotiation, which had not for a Fundamental, the Acknowledgment of the Prince of Orange as King of England. But this could not be comply'd with: For his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty would not make that the Price of a Treaty, which he intended ſhould be the Price of a Peace: And to remove all Difficulties on that Head, till the Purpoſes on both Sides were fully known, the Temperament propos'd and admitted, was of the ſame kind with that (t) before propos'd by M. d'Avaux to the Court of Stockholm, namely, That in caſe the Affair of England was not ſettled to the Satisfaction of the ſaid Prince, the whole Negotiation ſhould be void.

Burnet, in order to ſhew the Neceſſity France was, at this Time, reduc'd to, of ſoliciting Peace, acknowledges they were now making Steps towards one: And adds, "The Court was very uneaſy under ſo long and ſo deſtructive a War: The Country was exhauſted: They had neither Men nor Money: Their Trade was ſunk to nothing, and public Credit was loſt: The Creation of new Officers, which was always conſider'd as a Reſource never to be exhauſted, did not work as formerly: Few Buyers or Undertakers appear'd: That King's Health was thought declining: He affected Secrecy and Retirement; ſo that both the Temper of his Mind, and the State of his Affairs diſpos'd him to deſire a Peace." And yet notwithſtanding this Chriſtian Diſpoſition of his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, and all the ſeveral Preſſures that gave riſe to it, if we believe this right Reverend Hiſtorian of ours, he was not ſincere in his Endeavours to gratify it: "That Spirit of Chicane and Injuſtice, A.D. 1696. continues the Biſhop, that had reign'd ſo long in that Court, did ſtill appear in every Step that was made: For they made uſe of equivocal Terms in every Paper that was offer'd in their Name."

The Truth, however, is, That the Arts of Negotiation were equally practis'd on both Sides: And the only fair and equal Inference that can be made, is, That the French having but one Intereſt to conſider, and one Purpoſe to perſue, were thereby in a Condition to manifeſt themſelves the moſt happy if not the moſt dextrous Practitioners of the Two.

The Court which had moſt Reaſon to complain, was that of Stockholm: The Mediation of Sweden had been accepted by France in form, tho' not by the Allies: And the opening this new Channel, was, in effect, the taking the Affair out of his Hands.

Beſides: When the Imperial and Dutch jointly requir'd his Swediſh Majeſty, to demand farther Explanations from the French Miniſter, as to the entire Re-eſtabliſhment of the Treaties of Weſtphalia and Nimeguen (which were to be the Baſis of the Negotiation) without the leaſt Exception or Reſerve, on which Terms their Maſters were ready to accept his Mediation; and his Swediſh Majeſty did make that Demand accordingly, the Anſwer preſented by M. d'Avaux, in his Maſter's Name, was in theſe Words, "That his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty deſir'd no other Alterations in the ſaid Treaties, than his Swediſh Majeſty ſhould himſelf find expedient for their Confirmation:" And this Anſwer was accompany'd with a Declaration of his ſaid Majeſty's to this Effect, "That he ſhould never think it expedient to make the leaſt Alteration in the Tenour of the ſaid Treaties; and that, therefore, he hop'd the Allies would apply themſelves in earneſt to expedite both the Mediation and the Peace."

But tho' the ſaid Miniſters profeſs'd to underſtand the ſaid Declaration as, in the fulleſt Senſe, expreſſive of his Majeſty's Intention, not to admit of any one Item to the Prejudice of thoſe Treaties, they did not think fit to make any Advance upon it: On the contrary, in their Reply, They inſiſted, That the Convention of Nuremberg, ought to be added to the Treaty of Weſtphalia: And that as to the Treaty of Nimeguen, to which he had acceded by expreſs Treaty, both as a Party and a Guaranty, the Allies had much more to require of him; in as much as he was thereby oblig'd to furniſh a Body of Auxiliaries to his Imperial Majeſty, and alſo to the States-General, till France, which had began the preſent War, had reſtor'd all the Places ſhe had taken, and made full Satisfaction both to his Catholic Majeſty and the ſaid States, in caſe the French were the Aggreſſors: That, as it was on this ſole Conſideration

(t) See Page 582

A.D. 1696. ſideration the ſaid Treaty of Acceſſion was made, ſo it was certain, with regard to it, his Majeſty had no Managements to keep with France: That theſe were Things which they the ſaid Miniſters had conſtantly put his Majeſty in mind of, in all their Memorials, in the Name of the high Allies, who had alſo reſerved to themſelves the general Liberty, of enlarging their Demands on France for Reparations, and for ſuch other Matters as ſhould appear reaſonable for their reſpective Intereſts: That hence it was they had hitherto inſiſted, and on all future Occaſions ſhould inſiſt, that the Dukes of Lorrain and Savoy, who were not comprehended in the ſaid Treaties, ſhould be ſo comprehended, to the End, that all the high Allies ſhould be joint Parties in one and the ſame general Peace: That for all theſe Reaſons, the ſaid Miniſters found themſelves indiſpenſably oblig'd, to requeſt a more preciſe Declaration of his Majeſty's Intentions on this Head, in order to evince, that he had no ſuch Reſerve as might ſerve for a Pretence to prejudice, in any Manner, any other Pretences that any of the Allies had to make in virtue of that Treaty; becauſe ſuch a Procedure would be, of itſelf, a Contravention of the ſaid Treaties; and becauſe all the Inſtances they could urge to their Maſters, in conſequence of what his Majeſty had recommended to them, without ſuch a preciſe Declaration, would be to no purpoſe: That it was on theſe Conſiderations they had till then deferr'd the ſending their Diſpatches to their Principals, in hope of ſuch a Declaration, which they ſtill waited for with equal Earneſtneſs and Reſpect: And that when their ſaid Requeſt was granted, and the neceſſary Aſſurances obtain'd of the Sincerity of France, they, the ſaid Miniſters, repeated their Promiſes, to make him a Tender of the Mediation, on the Part of their Maſters, and to place their Intereſts in his Hands; to the End that, under his Auſpices, a Peace ſo ardently deſired by all Europe, might be ſo much the ſooner concluded, &c.

Thus it appears, that while France propos'd on one Hand, the Allies preſcribed on the other; that, while they inſiſted peremptorily on having what Reſerves they pleas'd, they would ſuffer France to have none at all; and that while France advanced, they retreated; which is ſufficiently accounted for by a Paſſage of Biſhop Kennet's, wherein he ſays, "The King of France addreſs'd himſelf to the Dutch, becauſe he ſuppos'd that they could not but be weary of a tedious War, which had almoſt ruin'd their Trade, the only Spring of their Riches and Subſtance; and would, therefore, ſooner hearken to Peace, than the Emperor or King of England, whoſe Power and Authority daily encreas'd, at leaſt among their reſpective Subjects, by the Continuance of the War."

In this Suſpence, however, Things remain'd during the whole Summer: For tho' France was really deſirous of Peace, ſhe was determin'd not to give more for it than it was worth: She was ſtill able to cover what ſhe had acquir'd, againſt the ſtrongeſt of her Enemies; againſt the weakeſt, ſhe had taken her Meaſures to act offenſively with as much Vigour as ever: And ſhe had a reaſonable Proſpect of improving their Diviſions, very much to their Diſadvantage, if not to their Deſtruction. A.D. 1696.

The Miſunderſtanding between the two Courts of London and Madrid, on account of Scomenburgh the Jew, who had reſided at the laſt, in Quality of Agent to King William, as Prince of Orange, and then as Envoy to the States, had left a bitter Farewell behind it in Both: Beſides; the Account of reciprocal Obligations was not eaſily balanc'd: His Majeſty had his Reaſons to conclude, That the Spaniards were oblig'd to him for the Defence of the Netherlands: The Spaniards, in their Turn, concluded, That he was, in ſome Degree, oblig'd to them for his Crown: His Majeſty thought, That in ſending firſt Ruſſel, and then Rooke, to cover their Coaſts, at a vaſt Expence, and without any Equivalent to England, he had acted like the Guardian, if not the Saviour, of the Spaniſh Nation: And they, on the contrary, inferr'd, That in recalling the Latter ſo ſoon, and leaving them wholly expos'd, he had cancell'd the Obligation: For Rooke did not arrive at Cadiz till the 16th of October, and was to have been reinforced with as many more Ships, as would have render'd his Strength at leaſt equal to that of the Enemy: But inſtead of being ſo reinforc'd, towards the latter End of January, Orders were diſpatch'd for his Revocation, unleſs he had good Intelligence, That the French did not deſign to put early to Sea, or with a Strength ſuperior to his own: And theſe Orders he obey'd about the Middle of March following. (Burchet.)

Thus France had a moſt inviting Opportunity to practiſe both on the Reſentments and the Fears of the Spaniſh Court: And if the Deſign ſhe had entertain'd, about that Time againſt England, had not been the principal Object of her Attention, ſhe would certainly have made uſe of it accordingly.

But imagining her whole Force would be neceſſary, to deal with the whole Force of the Maritime Powers, which ſhe had reaſon to think that Deſign would bring againſt her, ſhe ſent Orders to the Marquis de Chateau-Renault, who had the Command of the Toulon-Squadron, to prepare his Ships with all poſſible Expedition, and to ſet ſail for the Ocean, as ſoon as the Weather would give Leave: But notwithſtanding all his Diligence, it was the 16th of March before he could ſet ſail; by which Time the Alarm had been taken in England, the Deſign was blaſted; and one of the firſt Concerns of the Engliſh Admiralty, was, to ſend out a ſufficient Force to intercept him.

Rooke, on his Return from Cadiz, had been appointed Admiral and Commander in Chief of the Fleet: And this Service was allotted to him; but under all the Diſadvantages and Diſcouragements imaginable: The Ships he had brought with him from the Streights, were not in a ſailing Condition, and were, beſides, in want both of Proviſions

A.D. 1696. and Stores; and the reſt were ſo poorly mann'd, that they wanted between three and four thouſand Hands of their allow'd Complement. On the 2d of May he nevertheleſs receiv'd preſſing Orders, to procede to the Soundings, which he thought fit to communicate to a Council of War firſt; wherein it was determin'd, To ſail with the very firſt Opportunity, after they had been ſupply'd with what was abſolutely neceſſary to enable them to keep the Sea: But that, in the Interim, the State of the Fleet (which conſiſted in all but of thirty-ſeven Engliſh, and twenty Dutch of the Line; the other ſeventeen, appointed at firſt for this Expedition, having been detach'd on other Services) ſhould be repreſented to the Lords of the Admiralty. This Repreſentation was made accordingly; and follow'd by a Second, the Reſult of a Second Council: For the Admiral's Inſtructions were to procede immediately to Sea, and place himſelf in ſuch a Station, as ſhould be held moſt convenient for intercepting the Toulon Squadron: And it being reaſonably enough apprehended, that by lying in wait for one, he might fall in with both Squadrons in conjunction; he thought it of Importance to ſignify, That in ſuch Caſe, the Enemy would have greatly the Superiority, and he muſt expect to be treated accordingly.

(Burchet.)

Repreſentations to the Admiralty of the ill State of the Fleet.

Rooke ſets Sail.

On the 5th he nevertheleſs ſet ſail from St. Helens; and on the 14th following came to his Station on the Coaſt of Uſhant, where he ſoon after learn'd, by the Captain of a French Man of War, taken by Captain Norris, That the Toulon Squadron had got into Breſt, the very Day he departed from St. Helens; being forty-ſeven Ships of the Line, beſides four which had been oblig'd to put back, by reaſon of the Damage they had receiv'd in the Mediterranean.

The Admiral was now at Liberty, according to his Inſtructions, to return to Torbay: But having call'd a Council of Flag-Officers, it was reſolv'd to lye as near the Rendezvous as poſſible, in Expectation of the Reinforcements which were to follow them from England, as long as the Winds hung Eaſterly or Northerly; but on the firſt Shift to Southerly or Weſterly, to return. Thus when the whole Fleet was aſſembled, and which then conſiſted of ſixty-ſeven Engliſh, and forty-eight Dutch, whereof eighty-five were of the Line, and the Wind veer'd as above, the Signal was given for making homewards; and on the 23d following the whole Fleet (except certain Cruizers ſtation'd between Uſhant and the Iſle of Bas, and along our own Coaſts) came to Anchor at Torbay; to the infinite Joy of the ſick Seamen from the Streights, who, on their Return from thence, had only been tantaliſ'd with a Sight of the Shore, they had been forbid to touch.

Returns to Torbay.

Thus far then it appears, That neither Party had any great Reaſon to plume themſelves on their Conduct at Sea: But if that of France was not altogether conſonant to their uſual Policy, that of England ſeems to have had little better Direction than what the Stream of Faction gave it, which was itſelf in a perpetual Fluctuation. Burnet touches on this, but in a Manner ſo obſcure, that ſcarce any Benefit can be deriv'd from his Information: For having obſerv'd, in one Place, That the Court was in Pain for Rooke, while he continued at Cadiz (where by the way he had taken the beſt Precautions imaginable, againſt being either forc'd or ſurpris'd) becauſe a Series of contrary Wind had prevented his being re-inforc'd, as was intended; and in another, That on his being order'd home, the Toulon Fleet was alſo order'd to come about; and having met with rough Weather, and been long in their Paſſage, might have been attack'd to Advantage, in caſe a ſufficient Squadron had been ſtation'd before Breſt, time enough to intercept them: He adds, "But the Fleet was ſo divided, that Faction appear'd in every Order, and in every Motion: Nor did the King ſtudy enough to remedy this, but rather kept it up, and ſeem'd to think, That was the way to pleaſe both Parties."

A.D. 1696.

Burchet is yet more reſerv'd on this Head than Burnet; which is ſo much the more to be regretted, becauſe he was a Maſter of Facts, tho' not qualify'd, perhaps, to account for them: And we have nothing but Circumſtances to rely on; which, nevertheleſs, may help us to conjecture, if not to decide. Now it is certain there was not a Man in the Kingdom who thought higher of himſelf than Ruſſel; and it is natural to think, that he roſe in his Pretenſions as he roſe in his Importance: Poſſibly, therefore, he aſpir'd to be one of the Regency during the King's Abſence, as well in Acknowledgment of his Services, as in Right of his Poſt, being at the Head of the Admiralty; and having met with a Repulſe, turn'd occaſional Malcontent upon it: Poſſibly it was by the King's expreſs Appointment, that Rooke, who did not arrive in the Downs from Cadiz till the 25th of April, was promoted to the chief Command of the Fleet: For Rooke was the Favourite of the Tories, as Ruſſel was of the Whigs: And the only Blemiſh the Latter, at this Time of Day, can be prevail'd upon to acknowledge in the King's Character, was the occaſional Regard that Policy requir'd him to ſhew the Former. His Majeſty had alſo found Rooke a much more practicable Man than Ruſſel: And both as a King and a Soldier, he lov'd Obedience better than Advice: And this being allow'd, it will ſcarce be wonder'd, that while the Direction was in a Leader of one Party, and the Execution in a Leader of another Party, Rivalſhip ſhould deſtroy Service.

But, which confirms all This, Rooke was ſcarce come to Anchor, before he was re-call'd by the Lords of the Regency, and Lord Berkeley was appointed to take the Command in his ſtead. Burchet contents himſelf with ſaying, He was order'd to return to his Duty at the Admiralty Board: But Rooke's own Behaviour at his Return, and what follow'd upon it, will beſt ſhew the Nature and Purpoſe of his Revocation.

Rooke is re-call'd, and Lord Berkeley appointed to [illegible]

Our naval Affairs under the Dominion of Faction.

Before he ſtruck his Flag, he had receiv'd Advice from Commiſſioner St. Loe, at Ply- mouth,

A. D. 1696. mouth, to this Effect, viz. That one of our Scouts, having look'd into Camaret-Bay, and a little above it, had counted seventy Sail of French Men of War, all ready to set Sail, with four Flags flying; and in the Bay itself, five small Ships more; and this Advice he forwarded by Express to the Admiralty-Board. But the Scheme he form'd upon it, he not only kept in reserve, but on his Arrival in Town, chose to impart it to the Duke of Shrewsbury, Secretary of State, rather than to his Brethren of the Admiralty, in whose Province it more particularly lay.

His (Rooke's) Scheme to attack the French in Brest.

This Scheme, as reported by Burchet, was deliver'd in these few Words, "That the "Body of the Fleet should lye in Camaret "and Bertheaume-Bays, and a Detachment "be made to sustain the small Frigates and "Bomb-Vessels, while they went in to do "what Mischief they could. It was his "Opinion, That by thus blocking up the "Enemy's Fleet in their principal Port, in-"sulting their Coasts, and burning their "Towns at the same Time, it would ex-"pose them to the World, make them very "uneasy at home, and give Reputation to "his Majesty's Arms: And this he believ'd "might be done, if speedily undertaken, "with the Assistance of some small Frigates, "which were much wanted."

Thus being depriv'd of an Opportunity he panted for, of making a great Attempt in Person, he put in for the Merit of recommending a great Attempt to others: But as the Cabinet Lords would not take upon them, in the Absence of the King, to decide on a Measure so important as This, and it would have been highly impolitic in Russel, to have rejected it by his sole Authority, it necessarily fell under the Consideration of the Flag-Officers on board the Fleet, having [Burchet.] Lord Berkeley, their new Commander in Chief, at their Head, to whom it was referr'd: And they giving it as their Opinion, That it was not practicable to attempt the French in the Harbour of Brest, their Excellencies, the Regents, conceiv'd so high a Notion of their Judgment, That they directed his Lordship to consult with them farther, how the Fleet might be otherwise employ'd during the Remainder of the Summer: And their Determination was, 1. That if the French did not disarm, it would be advisable to procede to the Coast of France, for the Space of fourteen or fifteen Days: Because, that in such Case, if they had not an Opportunity of destroying their Ships, they should nevertheless spread an Alarm among them, and not only oblige them to draw out their Militia, but also to weaken their Armies, by large Detachments from their regular Troops. 2dly, That upon Advice receiv'd of the Enemy's sending out any Squadrons to molest our Trade, an equal Strength should be sent on our Side to oppose them. And, 3dly, That when they did disarm their Ships, it would be advisable to divide ours, some to bombard their Towns, and others on necessary Services; and yet to make such a Disposition of the whole, as that the whole might be re-united upon any Emergency. A. D. 1696.

Declar'd impracticable as a Council of War.

Whether, however, these Determinations of theirs were not satisfactory to the Regency, or that their Excellencies had some Relentings in favour of Rooke's Project, Orders came on the 16th of June to the Fleet, requiring a Council of War to be held, touching the Fleet lying in Bertheaume and Camaret Bays (these are Burchet's Words) and a P. 547. Squadron's being sent with the Bomb-Vessels, to destroy some of the French Towns: And, continues the same Historian, tho' it was judg'd, that the Fleet could not ride in either of those Bays out of Bomb Shot, yet it was resolv'd to sail when Weather would permit, and look thereinto, and endeavour to destroy what Ships they might meet with there.

Their inconsistent Conduct.

Thus when the Question was, Whether the French Ships might be destroy'd, they resolv'd to bombard their Towns; when to destroy the Towns, they resolv'd to attempt their Ships.

And as to the Execution of this their last Resolve, when they had (t) clear'd the Channel, and receiv'd Advice by a French Privateer (who had fallen into their Hands, and who had sail'd from Brest a Fortnight before) That all the great Ships were up in the River; and that there were about thirty Sail in Brest Water, clean'd and going out in two Squadrons, one under the Command of M. de Chateau Renault, and the other of M. de Nesmond; instead of looking into those Bays, they re-determin'd to sail with the Fleet to Belle-Isle, and from thence to detach ten Ships to cover the Bombardment of St. Martins and Ollonne.

Two or three little Islands laid waste, &c.

Thus while the French at Brest, who had not the least Conception that so vast a Fleet (for it still consisted of a hundred and forty Sail, of which seventy were of the Line) could be directed against a Place of less Importance, were hourly in Expectation of an Attack, and making the best Preparations they could for a vigorous Defence, the Storm fell on two or three inconsiderable Islands; and, even as the Story is told in our (u) Gazettes, we have sufficient Reason to be asham'd of our own Savage Success.

Belle-

(t) They sail'd for the first Time on the 18th, but were forc'd back the next Day by contrary Winds, when the Dutch Admiral receiv'd Orders from his Majesty to send home eight Ships of the Line; and on the 24th put to Sea again.

(u) From on Board the Britannia off Ushant, July 16. On the 3d Instant my Lord Berkeley sent his Majesty's Ships the Barford, the Newcastle, and a Fire-ship to Grey, with Orders to land on that Island; and at the same Time some of our small Vessels were sent along Shoar. On the 4th the Fleet came to an Anchor about two Leagues off Belle-Isle; and our Barges and Pinnaces were immediately mann'd, and order'd to land upon Houat, one of the Islands call'd the Cardinals, which they did without any Opposition, made themselves Masters of the whole Island, and burnt the Town of Houat: They afterwards did the like upon the Island of Hedicke; and kill'd and brought off much Cattle from both. There is upon each of the Cardinal Islands a Fort with a deep Ditch and a double Wall, to which the Inhabitants and some Soldiers retir'd; but their Fortifications not hindering us from doing all the Mischief we thought fit, we did not attempt them. The 5th, the Kent, the Boyne, the Torbay, and

(*u*2

A. D. 1696.

Belle-Isle, the Principal of them, and the Reduction of which might have been an Exploit of some Merit and some Utility, they did not attempt; and the Reason assign'd for it by Burchet is, That the Enemy had twenty-five Companies of the Regiment of Picardy there: That the Islanders capable of bearing Arms were 3000: And that of the Troops on board the Fleet, all but 240 were already on Duty in the Bomb-Vessels.

But Burchet himself could not help passing a sort of Censure on those Proceedings, by calling them little Enterprizes: And if the Admiral had been so dispos'd, Belle-Isle might have been attack'd first, with his whole Strength: Besides, even Burnet admits, in his uncouth Phrase, The Loss the French MADE was not considerable in itself: And tho' he adds, by way of Salvo, "But it put their Affairs in great Distraction, and the Charge they were at in defending their Coast, was much greater than ours in attacking it;" his Knowledge in these Matters, was not sufficient to constitute an Authority: It is agreed on all Hands, That our former Attempts on St. Malo and Calais, &c. had put the Nation to a vast Charge; and yet we read but of 500 Shells and Carcasses bestow'd on Calais, and 900 on St. Malo's: Whereas Burchet, who seems to grudge the Expence of those Attempts, admits, that almost 2000 were bestow'd on This; which, however, is far short of the true Account.

However this may be, the next Motion of the Fleet was back to their Station off of Ushant, where they receiv'd Advice, That M. Nesmond, with a Squadron of nine Sail, had put to Sea from Brest a few Days before, to cruize off of Cape St. Vincent, in hope of intercepting the Spanish Flota from the West-Indies: But if that had really been the Case, as it was not, the Fleet was in such want of Provision of all Sorts, and so many of the Dutch in particular detach'd as Convoys, that it was no longer in the Admiral's Power of making a Disposition to follow them: But having made a hard Shift (says Burchet) to victual ten Third Rates, two Fourths, and two Fireships to cruize in the Soundings, for the Protection of the Trade he expected home, he made the Signal for returning to Torbay, where he came to Anchor before the End of July, and where he receiv'd Advice by a Sloop taken from the Enemy, That Monsieur Chateau-Renault sail'd from Brest about a Fortnight before with sixteen Men of War and two Fire-ships, which had been victuall'd for five Months, but on what Design was not known.

A. D. 1696.

The Fleet returns to Torbay.

Thus, with an Exception to the Squadron left in the Soundings, under the Command of Vice-Admiral Mitchel, the whole Ocean was open to the Designs of the Enemy: And tho' Burnet is pleas'd to say, "Our Affairs at Sea went well, with Relation to Trade; all our Merchant-Fleets came happily home; we MADE no considerable Losses; on the contrary, we took many of the French Privateers; they now gain'd little in that way of War which in some of the former Years had been very advantageous to them." This unusual Success seems to have been rather the Effect of our good Fortune than our Providence: For when Mitchel, while yet upon his Station, receiv'd Advice from the Admiralty, first, That the East-India Company desir'd the Squadron might cruise 300 Leagues West from Ireland; and again, That some Care was to be taken of the Portugal Trade, which was daily expected home, he found himself unable to comply with either of these Instances: For having kept at Sea till the 15th of September, when he had but a few Days Provision left, he was forc'd to return to Spithead, where he receiv'd special Orders from the Admiralty, to dispatch another Squadron of ten Ships to the same Station, under the Command of Captain George Meeze, himself being indispos'd, which was done accordingly: But even this Commander had no better Success than the last: Neither the Portugal nor East-India Trade fell within the Reach of his Protection; and want of Provision forc'd him also to return, without any other Proof of Service, than three of the Enemy's Privateers, which had fallen into his Hands, which two Dutch Men of War, with the Long-Boats of divers other Ships, and 700 Soldiers and Marines, were sent to join the Barfleur and Newcastle at Gray, who finish'd what Captain Fitzpatrick had begun, having destroy'd there above twenty Villages; and in all we have burnt on these several Islands above 1500 Houses, kill'd and brought away at least, 300 Head of black Cattle and Horses, and taken twenty Boats and small Vessels. We gave the Enemy a very great Alarm all along their Coasts, where they are forc'd to keep great Numbers of Horse and Foot for their Defence, to the great Charge of the Country, and hindrance of their Harvest. The 6th my Lord Berkeley detach'd several Men of War, and the Bomb-Vessels, under Captain Mees, to bombard St. Martins in the Isle of Re: On the 8th we heard great firing from thence: On the 10th the Fleet sail'd from Belle-Isle: The Medway retook the Roe Ketch, which was taken by a St. Malo's Man of War: The 14th the Severn brought in a French Banker of ninety Tun, and twenty-two Men, laden with Fish: On the 15th the Content re-took a West-India Ship laden with Sugar from Nevis: This Day appear'd in sight of our Fleet four French Men of War, suppos'd to be Nesmond's Squadron; some of our Frigates gave them chace, and the Enemy made all the Sail they could, to get back to Brest. Captain Mees is not yet return'd to the Fleet, nor have we yet any Account of what he has done at St. Martins.

A Squadron left in the Soundings.

---

Whitehall, July 25. On the 3d Instant my Lord Berkeley detach'd from the Fleet Sir Martin Beckman, with the Bomb-Vessels, and a Squadron of ten Men of War under the Command of Captain Mees: The 5th they arriv'd before St. Martins in the Isle of Re, going in with French Colours, which they took down when they anchor'd: In the Evening we began to bombard the Town, and continued to do so that Night and the following, firing 2230 Bombs and Carcasses, which did such Execution, that the greatest and richest Part of the Town (where they had their most considerable Warehouses) was burnt down, or shatter'd in Pieces by the Bombs: The Front of the Town, towards the Sea, is in a small Time, and fortify'd with several Works, on which may be planted 120 Pieces of Cannon; but the Fortification was not finish'd with Cannon in all Places: On the 6th we saw them bringing Cannon from other Parts of the Town, with several Mortar Pieces, which they fired against us, but did us little Harm. From hence we sail'd to Ollonne, fifteen Miles to the Main, where we arriv'd the 7th in the Evening, and began immediately to bombard that Place, which was continued till the next Day: The Enemy had a Battery of four Guns upon a Point of Land going into the Harbour, but fired them very seldom after the first Hour: Our Bombs dismounted some of them; but a Shot from thence kill'd Captain Trevor, Commander of the Society: We fired here 1050 Bombs and Carcasses, which had all the Effect that could be expected.

1

A. D. 1696. which was moreover qualify'd by a melancholy Piece of Advice he receiv'd in his way, by a Ship from Newfoundland, viz. That a Squadron of the like Privateers, in Number eight, one of fifty Guns, three of forty, one of thirty-six, and the reſt of leſs Force, together with two Fire-ſhips, had deſtroy'd ſeven Settlements in that Colony, and forc'd the Crew of the Saphire, a fifth Rate Man of War, to ſet her on fire, to prevent her falling into the Enemy's Hands.

Several Settlements at Newfoundland deſtroy'd by the Enemy's Privateers.

Theſe were the Tranſactions of the Summer to the Weſtward; and to the Eaſtward, Benbow, now made a Rear-Admiral, was ſtation'd off Dunkirk, in order to hold du Bart, who lay out in Flemiſh Road with nine Ships, all ready to ſail, in check, and thereby ſecure the Commerce of that Side: But notwithſtanding all the Precautions he could take, that dextrous Commander gave him the Slip in a hazy Night; and when the Admiral would have follow'd him towards the Dogger-Bank, where he had been diſcover'd on a Cruiſe, and between which Place and the Texel he apprehended he would continue to ply, the Dutch refus'd to accompany him, for want of Orders. What remain'd, therefore, was to take the Eaſt-Country Trade under his Convoy, and proceede with them on their Voyage: But being in Yarmouth Road, he receiv'd Advice, That du Bart had fallen in with the Dutch Trade from Norway and the Baltick, amounting to almoſt 200 Sail, under the Convoy of five Dutch Men of War, had taken the Latter after an obſtinate Reſiſtance, and about Thirty of the Former; but being interrupted by the Approach of another Dutch Fleet, Northward bound, under the Convoy of thirteen Men of War, ten of which immediately made up towards him, while the reſt proceded with the Trade, he burnt all his Prizes except one, which had the Priſoners aboard, and which was retaken, and made his Eſcape.

Du Bart ſlips out of Dunkirk.

This induc'd him, Benbow, to leave the Trade at Anchor in the ſaid Road, and to go once more in queſt of this dangerous Enemy: Accordingly having made Sail, he fell in with five Dutch Men of War, with the Merchant-Men from Hull, who not only inform'd him they had diſcover'd eight Sail to the South-Eaſt that Morning, but on a Preſumption that it was du Bart's Squadron, agreed to accompany him in his Search; which, nevertheleſs, prov'd a fruitleſs one: No Enemy was to be found; nor any farther Intelligence to be got concerning him. Returning, therefore, to Yarmouth, he reſum'd his Charge, and proceeded to Gottenburgh, where he was inform'd by a Daniſh Ship from the Cow and Calf in Norway, That he had left du Bart there with ten Sail, cleaning and watering, under the Protection of certain Batteries which he had rais'd on Shore.

Admiral Benbow goes in queſt of him.

And here Burchet allows, there was a favourable Opportunity of doing Service: But then he adds, Our Ships were not in a Condition to make the Attempt, for want of Proviſions and many other Neceſſaries, which conſtrain'd the Admiral to return to the Downs, where having been ſupply'd, his next Care was to cover the Hamborough Trade, which had only two Frigates for their Convoy: But hearing in his Paſſage that they were out of Danger, he once more went in queſt of du Bart: On the 15th of September he met with ten Ships, which at firſt he took for the Enemy; but falling in with them, found they were a Dutch Squadron from the North, bound to the Maes: Three Days after he fell in with three Engliſh and eleven Dutch India-Men, which had come North about by way of Precaution, under the Convoy of one ſingle Man of War the Ruby: And the very next Day came in ſight of du Bart, with his Squadron, who, it now appear'd, had narrowly miſs'd, by miſſing thoſe India-Men, one of the greateſt Advantages that Fortune could have thrown in his way: But if he fail'd of this Booty, neither could Benbow, with all the Canvas he could ſpread, come up with him: Such and ſo great Proficients were the French already become in the Arts of building and working Ships: And ſo little was it in our Power to force them to an Engagement, when they thought proper to avoid it. A. D. 1696.

But finds it impoſſible to overtake him.

For the laſt naval Incident which belongs to this Summer-Service, mention is made of a Piece of Intelligence, which the King, about this Time, receiv'd, That the French were making great Preparations at Breſt, for a Deſcent on theſe Kingdoms; which met with ſo much Credit, that Sir Cloudeſley Shovel, with a ſtrong Squadron, was ſent to look into that Port towards the End of the Year; but came too late: For tho' it was a falſe Alarm as to a Deſcent, the Enemy had actually ſent a Squadron to Sea, on a very important Errand; of which we ſhall hear abundantly more in its Place.

And now to return to the Continent: Tho' the Coaſts of Spain were, for this Year, exempted from the Inſults they dreaded from the French Fleet, when depriv'd of the Protection of the Engliſh, no ſooner had the French Court ſet all their Engines at work, to procure a ſeperate Peace on the Side of Italy, with ſome Appearance of Succeſs, than the Duke of Vendome, who had the Command in Catalonia, was order'd to open the Campain, in hope that a ſenſible Blow on that Side, together with the ill News his Catholic Majeſty was likely to receive, in the Courſe of the Summer, from the Court of Turin, would diſpoſe him to think more favourably than he had hitherto done of a Plan of Accommodation; which Hope was ſo much the more reaſonable, becauſe the Queen-Mother, a Princeſs of the Houſe of Auſtria, and an irreconcilable Enemy to France, was juſt dead of a Cancer; by which Incident, one of the moſt inſurmountable Obſtacles was remov'd out of the way.

Agreeable to theſe Orders, M. de Vendome having paſs'd the Tar on the 30th of May, and receiv'd Advice, That the Prince of Heſſe Darmſtadt, lay encamp'd with about 4500 Spaniſh Horſe, at the Diſtance of two Leagues from the Foot, reſolv'd to fall upon that the next Day in their Camp, which was advantageouſly poſted in a Plain, having

The Spaniards worſted in Catalonia.

A. D. 1696. a Wood in Front, thro' which there was but one narrow Paſſage. The Prince, on the other Hand, made a proper Diſpoſition to receive the Aſſailants, and could not have been forc'd, if the Foot had been near enough to have come in to his Support: The Squadrons that began the Attack, were repuls'd; but being flank'd on each Side, by a Body of Grenadiers, ſoon rally'd, and after another Charge or two, carry'd the Lines; the Spaniards making good their Retreat to their Foot at Oſtalric, tho' not without conſiderable Loſs.

The Action, however, was far from being deciſive: The Spaniards, both Horſe and Foot, were now cover'd by the Cannon of Oſtalric: About the ſame Time, alſo, they were re-inforc'd by 2000 Veterans from Malaga, and by all the Miquelets or Militia of the Province: So that the Name of a Victory was all that M. de Vendome had to boaſt of.

But that he was ſuffer'd to keep the Poſt he had won, without Moleſtation, till he had conſum'd all the Forage within his Reach; that he was ſuffer'd to diſlodge in the ſame Manner, and to demoliſh all the Fortreſſes he had held; and that the whole Summer ſhould paſs over, without the leaſt Thought of making a ſuitable Repriſal, furniſh'd abundant Proof, That tho' the vindictive Spirit of the Spaniſh Court remain'd, the Vigour which us'd to accompany it, was, in a Manner, worn out.

About the ſame Time alſo that M. Catinat began to act in Piedmont, more as a Miniſter than a General, the Marſhal de Choiſeul, who was appointed to ſucceed M. de Lorges in the Command upon the Rhine, receiv'd Orders to collect his Forces, and make the neceſſary Diſpoſition to paſs the Rhine, that the Germans might be ſo much the leſs at leiſure to traverſe the Meaſures that were taking with reſpect to Italy.

The French paſs

Accordingly on the 19th and 20th of June, he paſs'd that River at Philipſburgh, with thirty-ſix Battalions, and above a hundred Squadrons of Horſe and Dragoons; and having ſecur'd the Paſſes at Bruchſal, and the Poſt of Cocſheim, he encamp'd the 23d within a League of Eppingen, where the Imperial Army, as it was call'd, tho' not above a Moiety was come up, was ſtrongly entrench'd, under all the Precautions that could be taken, to prevent their being forc'd into an Engagement.

And theſe Precautions had all the Effect imaginable; for the Marſhal having waſted above a Month in facing the Prince, without daring to attack him, or incurring any Danger of being attack'd by him, at laſt decamp'd, and re-paſs'd the Rhine: After which he ſent a large Detachment of Horſe to Flanders, and diſtributed the reſt of his Troops along the Banks of that River at Spires, Frankendahl, Worms, Oſtofen, &c. as well to be at hand in caſe the Imperialiſts return'd the Viſit, as to conſume the Forage.

and repaſs the Rhine.

The Prince, on the other Hand, who was not as yet ſtrong enough to make any Attempt on the Marſhal in his Retreat, contented himſelf with diſpoſing ſtrong Parties in all the neighbouring Paſſes, in order to prevent the Incurſions of the Enemy, and interrupt their Foragers. A. D. 1696.

In the Beginning of the Seaſon, the Allies had given out, That the Germans would have two Armies in the Field; that is to ſay, one of near 22000 Men upon the Meuſe, under the Command of the Landtgrave of Heſſe-Caſſel, which was to be employ'd either in Flanders or on the Rhine, as Neceſſity ſhould require; and the other of upwards of 40000, under the Prince of Baden: But tho' all the neceſſary Stipulations had been made accordingly, it was the Beginning of Auguſt before the laſt of theſe Armies was fully aſſembled, and almoſt the Middle before any ſuch Diſpoſition could be agreed upon, as ſeem'd to argue a Purpoſe to act offenſively any where.

At laſt, however, a Plan having been form'd for the Junction of the two Armies, in the Neighbourhood of Mentz, and a Body of 10000 Men, together with the Militia of Franconia and Swabia, having been poſted near Wiſeloch, under the Command of General Thungen, for the Security of the Country on that Side. Both, about that Time, advanc'd with all poſſible Diligence towards each other.

But, as might have been eaſily foreſeen, Motions ſo extraordinary, communicated a ſuitable Alarm to M. de Choiſeul, who had Time to call in the Marquis de Harcourt, with a large Body of Troops from the Country of Luxemburg to his Aſſiſtance; to poſt himſelf very advantageouſly between Philipſburg and Mouſtadt, with the River of Spirebach between him and the Enemy; and to take all the neceſſary Precautions for the Security of his Lines.

The Germans do the ſame.

It was the 31ſt of Auguſt before the Prince of Baden paſs'd the Rhine at Cocſheim and Mentz: It was the 10th of September before the two Armies join'd near Haſeloch; and when they encamp'd in Sight of the Enemy the next Day, they found it altogether as impracticable to force the French Camp, as the French had found it to force theirs in the Beginning of the Campaign.

That, however, there might be ſome Appearance of Purpoſe and Action, after ſo many long and fatiguing Marches, ſeveral Batteries were rais'd, and both Armies amus'd themſelves with cannonading each other for ſeveral Days together; in which Interval, the Prince of Baden order'd General Paſſi, on one Side, to make an Incurſion into the Enemy's Country, with all the Huſſars of the Army, which he did almoſt as far as Metz; and on the other, directed General Thungen, with all the Forces left under his Command, to advance towards Straſburg, as if with a Purpoſe to paſs the Rhine, and to loſe no Opportunity of raiſing Contributions: But theſe Motions, which were calculated principally to perplex and embarraſs the Enemy, had no other Effect than to cauſe ſuitable Counter-Motions on their Side: The Count d'Uxelles had Orders to coaſt the Rhine with a flying Army, in order to obſerve

A. D. 1696. serve M. Thungen; and several other Parties were detach'd to do their best to cover the Country from the Outrages of M. Palsi.

In short, the only Acquisition the Germans, thus united, were able to make, was of the little Castle of Wiczengen, which they carry'd by Assault; but with so much Ease, that it coit them but two Men: And having thus wasted about three Weeks in an unprofitable Bravade, on the 4th of October they decamp'd, and on the 6th and 7th pass'd the Rhine at Worms, while the greatest Part of the French Army did the same at Philipsburgh, in hope to surprise General Thungen in the Neighbourhood of Strasburg, against whom a strong Detachment was forwarded with the utmost Diligence, for that Purpose: But the General having been timely warn'd of the Prince of Baden's Purpose, and foreseeing the Use the Enemy would make of it, was already dislodg'd, and by the 8th, was again safely posted in his old Entrenchments at Eppingen: Soon after which both Armies broke up, and were severally distributed in their Winter-Quarters.

to no little Purpose.

The Campaign equally inefficient in Flanders.

The Campaign in Flanders was of the same inefficient kind: The French were first in the Field, as usual, with two Armies, viz. one posted between Mechlen and Deynse, under the Command of M. de Villeroy, and the other between Fleurus and Sombref, under the Command of M. de Boufflers: The Forces of the Allies were also divided in the like Manner: The King having the Command of one Army at Mariekirke, near Ghent, and the Elector of Bavaria of another at Ysche, near Louvain. But tho' it was the 6th of June before his Majesty took the Field, the Enemy took no Advantage of his Absence: And afterwards the whole Season was spent in Feints and Amusements, which were of so ambiguous a Nature, that it was hard to pronounce, whether they were calculated to invite or evade an Action.

This, however, is certain, that no Attempt was made, nor did any Incident happen on either Side, worth remembering.

What Bishop Burnet says on this Occasion, is, however, so much the more worthy of Notice, because it is copy'd, Word for Word, as Matter of Authority, by Others: "The King (says his Lordship) had no Money to pay his Army, so they were in great Distress, which they bore with wonderful Patience: By this Means the King could undertake nothing, and was forc'd to lye on the Defensive: Nor were the French strong enough to make an Impression in any Place: The King had a mighty Army, and was much superior to the Enemy; yet he could do nothing: And it pass'd for a happy Campaign, because the French were not able to take any Advantage from those ill Accidents, that our want of Specie brought us under; which, indeed, were such, that nothing but the Sense All had of the late Conspiracy, kept us quiet and free from Tumults. It now appear'd, what a strange Error the King was led into, when he accepted of so great a Sum to be rais'd by a Land-Bank: It was was scarce honourable, and not very safe at any Time: But it might have prov'd fatal at a Time, in which Money was like to be much wanted, which Want would have been less felt, if Paper-Credit had been kept up: But one Bank working against another, and the Goldsmiths against Both, put us to great Streights: Yet the Bank supply'd the King in this Extremity, and thereby convinc'd him, that they were his Friends in Affection as well as Interest."

[Tindal.]

The Fault laid on the Land-Bank by Burnet.

A. D. 1696.

So the King was supply'd, it seems, tho' he could undertake nothing for want of a Supply: The Bank supply'd him out of Affection, tho' they had oppos'd the Land-Bank with all their Might (on the Success of which the Levy of so great a Sum depended) out of Interest: The great Error of accepting so great a Sum to be rais'd by the Latter, was now made apparent, tho' the want of Specie caus'd the Difficulty: And it was to be esteem'd a happy Campaign, because the French were not in a Condition to make it otherwise.

Such notorious Inconsistencies have Party Leaders the Effrontry to prescribe, and the Herd the Stomach to swallow and digest.

But if it be true, as it is, that the Land-Bank did wholly fail, and that the Failure did greatly encrease the Difficulties of the Government, sufficient Care had, nevertheless, been taken to exempt the Land-Service from any considerable Share of those Difficulties: For as we have already seen, in the several appropriating Clauses of the Money to be rais'd by the Land-Bank, the Main of the Product was assign'd to the replacing other Funds, and to the Service of the Navy. Tho' it be also true, That the calling in the whole Currency at once, in order to the putting an End to the Clipper's Profit, by putting an End to his Trade, did cause a Stagnation in the Kingdom; because the several Mints could not supply the Necessities of the Public fast enough, it does not absolutely follow, That the Stagnation reach'd the Camp: That our Specie is occasionally exported to defray our foreign Expence, will not be disputed: But while Bullion is to be got at an easy Rate, there is no Necessity for such Exportation: Now all the Cash of the Kingdom, was at this Time converted into Bullion: That Bullion which, as appears by the Mint-Books, amounted in Tale, after the Recoinage, to 6,435,039 l. 14 s. 9 d. ½ was all in the Hands of the Government: About five Millions of clipt Money, according to the same Right Reverend Author, was brought into the Exchequer: He also admits, that not above 80,000 l. was coin'd a Week: And if the Ministers would not have recourse to any Managements to supply the King's Necessities, by the Means of so vast a Deposite, it must be allow'd they were abundantly more scrupulous than Ministers usually are.

But however this may be, it is highly probable, that the Inaction of the Year was not so much owing to the Want of Specie, or the Failure of any particular Fund, as, in the first Place, to the Precautions taken on both Sides, not to expose themselves unnecessarily,

But was owing to other Causes.

A. D. 1696. rily, when Both had reaſon to think, that a Peace was not far off: And, Secondly, To the Negotiation between the Courts of France and Savoy, more than once alluded to already.

Secret Negotiations between France and Savoy.

Between theſe two Courts there had, all this Time, been a Family Correſpondence; and in the Courſe of it, ſuch Things had occaſionally dropt, as diſcover'd plainly enough, That each had his Views in reſerve with reſpect to the other: This was not unknown to the Italian Powers, whoſe Intereſt it was to get rid of the Germans at any Rate; and they made uſe of all the Refinements that Policy could furniſh, to improve thoſe reciprocal Views to their own Advantage: For as Negotiations are never ſo eaſy, as when both Parties expect to find their Account in them, ſo Mediations are never ſo ſincere, as when the Mediators themſelves are intereſted in their own Succeſs.

The whole Proceſs was, however, conducted with the utmoſt Secreſy and Circumſpection: For the War which equally impoveriſh'd France on the one Hand, and the Maritime Powers and Spain on the other, enrich'd Savoy: And the Duke was altogether as deſirous of making the moſt of his preſent Contract, as eager to enter into another.

It is ſaid the firſt Sketch of a Treaty was drawn at Lorretto, whither the Court of Turin took occaſion to repair, under the Pretence of Devotion: And it is reaſonable to think, that the whole Affair was ſettled with the Count de Teſſé, who was the intermediate Agent between his Royal Highneſs and M. Catinat, at Turin, long before it was ſuſpected abroad: But whatever Suſpicions were ſecretly entertain'd, nothing could be prov'd: And the Allies were abundantly too prudent, to furniſh the Duke with a Pretence to break thro' his Engagements, by a premature Suggeſtion, That he had broke thro' them already: As, on the other Hand, his Royal Highneſs took care not to be wanting in any kind of Profeſſions, that could make them the Dupes of their own Credulity.

Thus the Spring was ſpent, as uſual, in making Preparations for an early Campaign: And as his Royal Highneſs was more importunate than uſual, with the Imperial Court for their Recruits, and with the other Confederates for their Subſidies, unuſual Care was taken to furniſh him with Both, that he might have no reaſonable Cauſe of Complaint.

As the French gave out, That they deſign'd to open the Campaign much ſooner, and with a greater Force, than they had employ'd on that Service before, ſo the Allies were altogether as expreſs, That they ſhould be ready as ſoon, and with a Strength ſufficient to break their Meaſures. And for ſeveral Weeks together, every Article that related to the Affairs of Italy, was turn'd in the moſt ſpecious Manner poſſible, for the more effectual Amuſement of the Public.

But when M. Catinat came down with his Army into the Plains of Turin, which on the 20th of May he was ſuffer'd to do, without the leaſt Interruption, inſtead of making any Diſpoſition to face him, all the advanc'd Parties were withdrawn behind the Po; and every ſubſequent Meaſure ſeem'd to indicate, That inſtead of carrying the War into France on that Side, according to the original Purpoſe of inviting the Duke into the grand Alliance, France was on the Point of turning the Tables upon Italy: For to ſecure ſuch Places as were moſt expos'd, to throw up Lines defended by ſtrong Redoubts, lin'd with Artillery, to poſt their Troops under the Cover of them, and to make ſuch Preparation for the Security of Turin, as if a Siege or a Bombardment, at leaſt, was unavoidable, was the whole Employment on one Side; and, on the other, the Arrival of their Cannon, ſeem'd to be all that was wanting to render all thoſe Precautions uſeleſs. A. D. 1696.

Still, however, the Stile of our Gazettes was as confident as ever: And to manifeſt the Firmneſs of the Duke, while this Storm was hovering over him and his Country, it is particularly ſaid, That M. Catinat having ſent to his Royal Highneſs to let him know, That he would hang up all the Peaſants he ſhould find in Arms; his Anſwer was, That in ſuch Caſe he would hang up all the French Soldiers he took.

Acknowledging farther, That the Enemy, on the 2d of June, had remov'd from Volllane, and had taken up their Head Quarters at Rivalto, about two Leagues from Turin, which left their Purpoſe altogether as uncertain as before; and that a Council of War had been held thereon; what follows is to this Effect, viz. That the Enemy being ſtronger than the Allies, it was probable this Motion of the Former, was made with a View to draw the Latter into the Plains: That the Opinion of our (the Confederate) Generals ſeem'd to be, to maintain their preſent Poſts; to wit, The Foot to guard the Lines which cover'd the City; and the Horſe the Paſſage of the Po, near Moncalier, by which they propos'd to gain Time, in hope the Enemy would be waſted by Sickneſs, want of Proviſions, Deſertion, and the Deſtruction made of them by the Country People. That on the 6th, M. Catinat had ſignify'd by Letter to the Marquis de St. Thomas, the Duke of Savoy's chief Miniſter, That the King, his Maſter, had order'd him, for the laſt Time, to offer his Royal Highneſs a Peace, and in caſe he perſiſted in refuſing it, to deſtroy his Country with Fire and Sword: That his Royal Highneſs had communicated this Letter to the Miniſters and Generals of the Allies that were about him, and had expreſs'd his Reſolution, not to enter upon any Treaty without their Concurrence; but to do what his Honour and his Engagements oblig'd him to: And, laſtly, That the Allies were then in ſo good a Poſture to receive the Enemy, that they were no longer apprehenſive, That they could bombard the City.

No. 3173.

A public offer of Peace from M. Catinat to his Royal Highneſs.

Such was the Account of Things laid before the Nation: But the Matter of Fact really

A.D. 1698. really was as follows: The Criſis being now come, when it was proper for the contracting Parties to lay aſide the Maſk, and the Manner of doing it fully concerted, M. Catinat did, indeed, ſend ſuch a Letter to the Marquis de St. Thomas, on the very Day above ſpecify'd: But then the ſaid Offer, and the ſaid Menace, were not the whole of that Letter: On the contrary, it conſiſted of as many Colours as Joſeph's Coat: Something to be abated on their Side: Something that the Duke himſelf could not comply with for his own Sake: Something that he was to make a Shew of refuſing, on the Point of Honour to his Allies: And, ſomething by way of Hint of Favours in reſerve, in caſe of Compliance, to create a Perſuaſion in the Allies, that his Royal Highneſs had hitherto never made any Advance towards a Negotiation.

In ſhort; the Peace was offer'd on the general Condition of a Reſtitution of all the Places and Territories which had fallen into the Hands of France during the War, in the State they were in at that Time: But then his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty ſtipulated for a free Paſſage thorough the ſaid Territories, for carrying the War into the Milaneſe; as alſo, for the Supply of his Armies in that Paſſage with all Neceſſaries at a reaſonable Price: And by way of Security for the Performance of theſe Stipulations, inſiſted on holding the Caſtle of Nice and Villa Franca, till the Concluſion of a general Peace, when his ſaid Majeſty was to give his Word to the Pope and Republic of Venice for their Reſtitution: And, laſtly, in caſe his Royal Highneſs conſented to become a joint Adventurer with him, in his Endeavours to reduce the Milaneſe, that Spain might be compelled to reſtore the Peace of Italy, he offer'd him ſuch farther and greater Advantages, as ſhould not only ſatisfy but ſurprize him.

This is a true Abſtract of the ſaid Letter, which, having been conſtructed purpoſely to be imparted to the Miniſters and Generals of the Allies, was imparted to them accordingly, with what Effect, may eaſily be imagined: There is ſomething in the Air of communicating ſuch Matters as theſe, which is even more expreſſive than Words: And Endeavours to palliate and conceal, oftentimes make the broadeſt Diſcoveries:—Thus the real Diſpoſition of the Court of Turin became apparent at once, and all the Conſequences to be expected from it, were at once foreſeen: But according to the uſual Artifices of Politicians, the Affectation of Sincerity on one Hand, was to produce an Affectation of Confidence and Security on the other, that the Duke might have ſo much the more Difficulty to break thro' his Engagements, and to excuſe it when done.

That, however, theſe Generals and Miniſters fail'd to mingle Arguments with Complements, in order to convince his Royal Highneſs, that he was under no poſitive Neceſſity to ſubmit to the Inſtances of France; and that he might, if he pleas'd, defend himſelf and his Country againſt her Menaces, cannot be imagin'd: But how cogent ſoever theſe Arguments were, that the Duke and his Miniſters had not only the Dexterity to evade the Force of them, but even to make a Merit of his not accepting the Offer of France with regard to the Milaneſe, is demonſtrable from M. de St. Thomas's Anſwer to M. Catinat, which was in Subſtance as follows. A.D. 1696.

His Anſwer. That the Duke, his Maſter, having maturely conſider'd the Contents of his Letter, and the Circumſtances which gave riſe to it, had order'd him, after he had communicated it as above, to let him know, That no body could be better acquainted than He, M. Catinat, himſelf, with the ſtrange Fatality which had oblig'd him to take the Meaſures he had taken, to ſecure himſelf from the Oppreſſions he had been threaten'd with: That if, thro' the Neceſſity which had forc'd him to take up Arms againſt his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, he had loſt any Part of the Honour of his Friendſhip, he nevertheleſs flatter'd himſelf, that he had gain'd as much in his Eſteem by it, which, he believ'd, he ought to forfeit irrecoverably, if he was capable of turning his Arms into the Milaneſe, againſt the King of Spain and the Emperor, who had been his principal Succour during his Misfortunes, and who had Both almoſt the ſame Intereſt in that Duchy: That from this Conſideration, He, M. Catinat, would be able to judge, how unworthy ſuch an Action was of a Prince, made and accompliſh'd like his Royal Highneſs; and conſequently, how impoſſible it was for him to engage in it: And that to diſpoſe of himſelf and his own Eſtates, was all that was in his Power.

Another Letter from M. Catinat. This Anſwer was dated the next Day after the Receipt of the Letter, and produc'd another from M. Catinat, which was again anſwer'd by M. de St. Thomas, as appears by a Third Letter from the Latter to the Former: For theſe two intermediate Diſpatches have not been preſerv'd; and from the rapid Advance of the Negotiation, it is eaſy to gather how well the two Parties underſtood one another before.

"It was not in my Power, ſays the Marſhal, ſooner to ſatisfy the Curioſity of his Royal Highneſs, touching the Advantages which the King was diſpos'd to grant to his Royal Highneſs, in caſe he thought fit to concur with his Majeſty in procuring the Repoſe or Neutrality of Italy; becauſe I had been order'd to wait for his Pleaſure therein, as I had the Honour to obſerve to you in my two former Letters: But on the Recital, which I had the Honour to make to his Majeſty, of the Anſwers I had receiv'd from you, he has authoris'd me to give you a full Explanation in writing, unuſual as it is to commit ſuch Matters to Paper; and more eſpecially as it is viſible his Royal Highneſs communicates every thing that paſſes to his Allies without reſerve; tho' it ſeems to me, that This is of Importance enough to be conducted with more Diſcretion: But however that may be, in addition to what I have writ already, I am authoris'd to add, That his Majeſty will reſtore

A.D. 1696. ſtore Pignerol to his Royal Highneſs, with all its Dependencies, formerly belonging to the Houſe of Savoy, under this ſpecial Proviſo, That the Fortifications ſhall be ras'd: That in caſe the Houſe of Auſtria abſolutely refuſe to agree to a Neutrality, nor will ſuffer Italy, or in particular, the Eſtates of his Royal Highneſs to be in Repoſe, Meaſures ſhall be taken to oblige them; in which Caſe his Royal Highneſs ſhall co-operate with his Majeſty, under ſuch Precautions for the King, as ſhall be held reaſonable: His Majeſty willing to give yet farther Marks of his Friendſhip to his Royal Highneſs, deſigns my Lord the Duke of Burgundy, for Madam the Princeſs of Piedmont, to receive her in France, to perform the Marriage-Contract now, to fulfill it when the Parties ſhall be of Age; and to gratify his own Generoſity, by beſtowing on her both a Portion and a Settlement, without the leaſt Charge to his Royal Highneſs. Theſe Effects of his Majeſty's Goodneſs, will be alſo accompany'd with other Advantages to his Royal Highneſs, in caſe he makes a proper Uſe of the Opportunity, in the next Diſpatch that you ſhall write by his Command:—But if not, I aſſure you, his Majeſty will be ſo provok'd at the Neglect of his Bounties, that his Royal Highneſs muſt never expect the like Offers again, even tho' the King ſhould be forc'd to make a more conſiderable Sacrifice another way:—But I am perſuaded his Royal Highneſs will make ſuch Reflections, as an Affair of ſuch Importance to his Intereſts deſerves, &c. &c."

This Letter was dated the 29th of June, and on the 3d of July following, M. de St. Thomas reply'd as follows.

The Duke deſires Time to acquaint his Allies, which is granted.

"His Royal Highneſs is in the beſt Diſpoſition imaginable, to accept the favourable Offers ſpecify'd in the laſt Letter, which I had the Honour to receive from you: But then he is oblig'd to communicate them to his Allies, particularly to their Imperial and Catholic Majeſties; and their Anſwers, or at leaſt that of his Catholic Majeſty, cannot be expected in leſs than forty Days, unleſs you will accommodate me with a Paſſport for two Couriers, one for the Uſe of his Royal Highneſs, and the other for the Marquis de Leganes, to paſs and repaſs through France: Which being allow'd, his Royal Highneſs, during that Time of Expectation, will reſtrain his own Troops, and thoſe of his Allies, to this Side of the Po, provided you will, in like Manner, reſtrain yours to the other Side, ſo as that they may attempt nothing againſt the ſaid Troops or Places of his Royal Highneſs; who is alſo perſuaded, that, during the ſaid Interval, you will cauſe ſuch Meaſures to be obſerv'd in the Article of ſubſiſting your Troops, as will be in all reſpects conformable to the Sentiments you have done me the Honour to impart to me."

Thus we are to underſtand, that this was the whole Proceſs between the two Courts of France and Savoy, from the Time that Turin was firſt menac'd with a Bombardment, to the Admiſſion of a Truce. But this was only the Gloſs ſet upon an Action which could no otherwiſe bear the Light: The two Parties were, by this Time, come to a thorough Underſtanding: And what alone was ſufficient to prove it, on the very Day this laſt Letter was writ, M. Catinat, to ſhew his Regard to what was recommended to him in the laſt Clauſe, remov'd his Camp from the Neighbourhood of Turin, nearer to Pignerol; which convinc'd the whole World, that the Suſpicions they had ſo long entertain'd, were but too well founded:—The next Day the Duke of Savoy made a Repreſentation of the miſerable State of his Affairs, and of the Neceſſity he was under to accept the Offers of France, to his ſacred Cæſarean Majeſty, in a Stile which would hardly have became the meaneſt Vaſſal of the Empire: For in his Preamble he took care to ſay every thing that Flattery and Servility could ſuggeſt to gratify the Cæſarean Pride; and having made that Sacrifice, his next Endeavours were to excite Compaſſion, by ſuggeſting, That it was utterly impoſſible for his Majeſty's moſt generous Soul to inſiſt on the utter Ruin of his miſerable Country; or even to regard his Loſſes with an indifferent Eye: Then reſuming the Politician and Courtier, he ſtrengthens his Plea by urging, That his Hopes were ſo much the better founded, becauſe all his Advantages were agreeable to the Intereſts of his Majeſty; or if otherwiſe, he ſhould never eſteem them Advantages.—Having then, in the moſt humble and ſubmiſſive Manner, beſought a favourable Audience for his Embaſſador, he proteſts to his Cæſarean Majeſty, That the Obligations he had conferr'd on him, ſhould remain eternally engrav'd in his Heart: And that among the firſt of theſe he ſhould ever rank the Conceſſions now made to him, which he conſider'd as the moſt ſignal Effects of his Imperial Protection:—And he concludes with a home Declaration, That his Concern for his own Intereſts, ſhould never weaken the firm and inviolable Attachment which ſhould hold him for ever devoted to the Intereſts of his Cæſarean Majeſty, &c.

A.D. 1696.

His ſubmiſſive Letter to the Emperor.

But what Degree of Sincerity there was in theſe Profeſſions, or the Declarations contain'd in M. de St. Thomas's firſt Letter to M. Catinat, concerning the Attack of the Milaneſe, will appear in his Letter to the Pope, which was dated but two Days after; and in which, after a Hint or two of the Offers of France, he procedes to ſay, That if the Houſe of Auſtria will not be induc'd to conſent to the propos'd Neutrality, by the Exhortations of his Holineſs and of the Republic of Venice, his Purpoſe was to join his Forces to thoſe of France, in order to compel them to come in: On the very ſame Day he alſo writ to the States General, in Terms full of Acknowledgments of the generous Aſſiſtance he had receiv'd from their High and Mighty Lordſhips, and as full of Perſuaſions, That they would ſuffer his Miniſter the Preſident de la Tour, to convince them, That in embracing the Offers of France, he had done no more than what was right.

Another very different to the Pope.

The

A. D. 1696. The ſame Courier was moreover charg'd with Inſtructions to the ſaid M. de la Tour for his Conduct in breaking the Affair to King William: For it is worthy of Remark, that tho' he writ with his own Hand both to the Elector of Bavaria and the Elector of Brandenburgh, he did not condeſcend to pay the ſame Complement to his Majeſty; poſſibly becauſe Lord Galway, who commanded the Troops in Engliſh Pay, as ſoon as he had obtain'd inconteſtable (w) Evidence of the Intrigue carrying on between the two Courts, had, by his Maſters Orders, made the moſt lively Remonſtrances againſt it, as a Breach of Faith, which it was not in the Power of Words to excuſe or palliate: And it is yet farther worthy of Remark, that tho' in M. de St. Thomas's Letter to M. Catinat, the Length of Time neceſſary for the Reception of an Anſwer from Madrid, is urg'd to ſhew the Neceſſity of a forty Days Truce, it was the 10th before he writ to his Catholic Majeſty: But then his Letter was accompany'd with a Sketch of the good Bargain he was to make; in which appear'd certain Items not mention'd before; ſuch as, The ceding to the moſt Chriſtian King the Valley of Barcelonetta, in Exchange for Pignerol, demoliſh'd: His ſaid Majeſty's obliging himſelf to pay him four Millions of Livres by way of Recompence for the Loſſes he had ſuſtain'd during the War; as alſo, to aſſiſt him with 8000 Foot and 4000 Horſe, in the Pay of France, in caſe he was attack'd by any other Power: And the Proviſion reciprocally made, That the Pope and the Venetians ſhould be the Guarantees of the ſame.

Conditions of the Treaty.

A Truce proclaim'd.

What follow'd was the Exchange of Hoſtages on the 12th; the Proclamation of the Truce, to continue thirty Days from that Time; and the making all the neceſſary Regulations for the due Obſervance of it.

The News, in the mean Time, flew to every Corner of Europe, as if the very Winds had carry'd it: And in an Article of the London-Gazette, from the Confederate Camp in Flanders, dated the 19th, we are told, the Preſident de la Tour was already there, and had already made the beſt Apology he could for the Duke his Maſter; but without Effect: For as no Arguments could induce his Royal Highneſs to prefer his Obligations to his Intereſt, ſo the Princes who had been at ſuch Expence to retain him in their Cauſe, could not be induc'd to abſolve him, becauſe he was to be alſo a Gainer by deſerting them. On the contrary, they were all Reſentment and Indignation; and in their firſt Tranſports, talk'd of nothing leſs than of taking Vengeance on him for his Perfidy: To reclame him, by fair Means, if poſſible, became, however, at laſt the Expedient, on all Hands agreed to: And as he ſeem'd to ſtand moſt in Awe of the Emperor, it was alſo propos'd, that the great Effort ſhould be made by him. Whether the Ceſarean Pride would bend on That, or any other Occaſion, was the Queſtion: But from what Motive ſoever, or at whoſe Inſtance ſoever, bend it did: Count Manſfeldt was poſted to Turin to out-bid M. Catinat, by making an Offer to his Royal Highneſs, of advancing his Daughter to the Bed of the King of the Romans; as alſo, of every Degree of Favour and Diſtinction that the Imperial Court could ſhew him: And thus a Prince, who in his Letters had diſcours'd of himſelf as if in the Jaws of Ruin, had the ſupreme Pleaſure, of ſeeing his Alliance courted by the moſt illuſtrious Families in Europe; and by deciding, in effect, the Fate of a War, which the Oppreſſions of France had driven him into, of manifeſting, in the moſt effectual Manner, his own Importance.

A. D. 1696.

Manſfeldt ſent to Turin with Counter-Offers.

On the other Hand, what a Shock did the Ceſarean Pride receive, when a Vaſſal of the Empire gave Manſfeldt to underſtand, That his Engagements with France were too far advanc'd to be retracted; and that he had obtain'd a Truce on the ſole Conſideration of prevailing with his Allies, to accept a Neutrality for Italy, till ſuch Time as a general Peace ſhould be re-eſtabliſh'd? Manſfeldt was not, however, ſo piqu'd with the Repulſe he met with, as to forbear any farther Importunity: On the contrary, he return'd again and again to the Charge, being, no doubt, ſuitably ſupported by all the other Miniſters of the Allies; tho' ſtill in vain: The Duke would hear of nothing but equal Advantages, and Indemnifications in all reſpects, which he knew neither could nor ought to be comply'd with: So much Complaiſance, however, he ſhew'd to the Count and his Commiſſion, that, whereas he did not arrive in the Camp of the Allies at Chivas till the 10th of Auguſt, and the Truce was to expire the next Day, he ſolicited and obtain'd a Prolongation of it till the 20th.

Without Effect.

The Truce prolong'd.

The two Armies, in the mean Time, remov'd yet farther aſunder; that of France retreating nearer Pignerol, and that of the Allies towards the Duchy of Milan, whither the Marquis de Leganes had already repair'd, in order to make the beſt Diſpoſition he could for the Defence of the Frontier, in caſe the current of the War ſhould be directed, as in all Probability it would, that way: For the Language of the Allies was as lofty as before; and the Public was taught to believe, that they would make greater Efforts againſt France, notwithſtanding the Loſs of Savoy, than ever.

London-Gaz. No. 3206.

But if They were obſtinate on one Hand, the Duke was altogether as obſtinate on the other: And in proportion as he became more accuſtom'd to Complaints and Expoſtulations, became more harden'd againſt them: That, however, he might preſerve Appearances as well as poſſible, he procur'd the Truce

(w) According to Bevy, from King William himſelf: But if his Majeſty had ſuch inconteſtable Evidence, the Marquis of Leganes, Governor of Milan, had the ſame, and imparted it immediately to all the Allies, as appears by his Apology for ſigning the Treaty of Neutrality, addreſs'd to the Spaniſh Miniſter at the Hague.

A.D. 1695. Truce to be again prolong'd to the 1ſt of September: And in the fourth Article of the Treaty, wherein he expreſſly renounces all his preſent Engagements with the Enemies of France, and puts himſelf under the Protection of France, as expreſſly provided (no doubt by way of particular Complement to King William) That he might be at Liberty to obſerve all the Obligations of Decency and Decorum towards each of them, and receive and entertain their Miniſters at his Court, without giving any Umbrage to the King his new Protector.

The Treaty ſign'd. Having alſo ſign'd this Treaty in form on the 29th of Auguſt, and receiv'd a Viſit from M. Catinat in Perſon, he, as a laſt Favour, obtain'd a Third Prolongation of the Truce

Ibid. 3220. to the 15th of September: But then it was under a Reſtriction, That it ſhould extend only to the Milaneſe, and not to Montferrat: And when Manſfeldt rejected the Neutrality on one Hand, and on the Other having receiv'd freſh Diſpatches from his Court, and being accompany'd by the Spaniſh Reſident, would have perſuaded him not to ratify his Treaty with France, but to return to his firſt Engagements, he gave him to underſtand, in effect, That he ſhould not only adhere to France, but that he ſhould put himſelf at the Head of the French Forces, together with his own, and endeavour to evince the Expediency of the Meaſure propos'd, by invading the Milaneſe: Which Menace of his was ſo highly reſented by the Imperialiſts, that the young Prince de Commerci, who was in the Imperial Service, ſent him a Challenge upon it, which he was too prudent, and too well adviſ'd to accept.

The Duke joins his Troops to thoſe of France. What follow'd, however, was the Performance of his Menace, by joining his Troops with thoſe of France, and taking upon himſelf the ſupreme Command, tho' it is reaſonable to think, not altogether in the ſame way that ſome Authors have alledg'd: For having touch'd on that extraordinary Circumſtance of the ſame General's commanding two adverſe Armies in the ſame Campaign, they procede to ſay, That his Royal Highneſs, before the Allies departed his Territories, gave the Orders to Them, and at the ſame Time to the French, A.D. 1696. both Parties acknowledging him for their Chief: Whereas the Truth is, That the Forces of the Allies paſs'd out of the Duke's Territories, into Montferrat, the very next Day after the Peace was ſign'd; and it is equally inconceivable, That he ſhould have the Command of the French one Day, and that of the Allies the next.

[Boyer, Tindal.]

But whether this was ſo or not, no ſooner was the Moſt Chriſtian King inform'd of the extreme Backwardneſs of the Allies, to give over their Game in Italy, and the Likelihood of a Prolongation of the War on that Side, than he ſent Orders to his Reſident at Genoa, to inform the Republic in full Senate, That if they furniſh'd any Supply, of any Kind, to his Enemies, either for paſt or future Conſiderations, he ſhould expect them to furniſh his Troops in like Proportions: And it may be preſum'd, that he caus'd the ſame Declarations to be made, wherever there was the ſame Occaſion.

Before the Truce expir'd, there was yet another Conference between Count Manſfeldt and the Marquis de St. Thomas, concerning the Neutrality of Italy, which ending like the Former, the laſt Reſort, as uſual in the like Caſes, was to the Sword. Now averſe as the Duke had appear'd to invade the Milaneſe, he had nevertheleſs ſtipulated, that what Acquiſitions ſoever were made by the united Army, ſhould belong to him: And the Hope that ſome ſuch Acquiſitions might be made, by an Army ſo formidable as that actually was, in a Country ſurpris'd into a War, and conſequently little provided for Defence, having got the better of all his pretended Scruples, the very next Day after the Truce expir'd, he took the Command upon him as Generaliſſimo, and, as it is ſaid, exerted himſelf with more Zeal and Vigour than even M. Catinat himſelf, to bring his late Friends and Allies to Reaſon: He had now no Indiſpoſition, real or pretended, to embarraſs ſuch Meaſures, or retard ſuch Motions as were thought neceſſary to be made; nor did he expoſe himſelf to the leaſt Suſpicion of carrying on any clandeſtine Correſpondence with the Enemy (x).

On

(x) In a Tract publiſh'd ſoon after his Acceptance of a ſeperate Peace, call'd, Memoirs of the Tranſactions in Savoy during the War, his Royal Highneſs is charg'd, among other Particulars, with the following.

"You muſt know, in the firſt Place, that in all the Councils of War held at Turin, from the very firſt Campaign, down to the laſt, the Duke of Savoy, and his Miniſters, would never admit any of thoſe of the Allies, but whom they thought fit; and excluded the beſt affected, ſuch as the Proteſtant Generals, and other wiſe Officers, who might otherwiſe have been able to baffle their Deſigns, and detect their Treacheries: Whence it comes to paſs, that all the Reſolutions taken in thoſe Councils of War, have been in favour of the Enemy.

Secondly, the ſlow Proceedings of the Court of Turin were partial, the Indian Generals never caring to be in the Field, till they had given ſufficient Time to M. Catinat to rally his Army, and receive Recruits, which were ſent him from ſeveral Parts of France. Hence it comes, that he was always firſt in Action, and poſſeſs'd himſelf of the moſt advantageous Poſts: For being ſuperior in Number, and having the Field at liberty, he might very eaſily effect whatever he undertook, they never offering to oppoſe him till he had done his Buſineſs, or at leaſt, was in a fair way to do it: I paſs by the frequent Intelligences by Spies between the Generals, that nothing might be acted but by common Conſent.

In the Third Place, the Care the Court of Turin took to eſtabliſh Magazines and Markets, where the French were permitted to come and buy whatever Subſiſtance they had occaſion for, at a Time, eſpecially, when moſt of their Provinces were reduc'd to the extremeſt Want; and, which ought to be look'd upon as a juſt Scourge ſent by God, to humble that haughty Power: This Want, I ſay, muſt neceſſarily have forc'd the French forthwith to have re-paſs'd the Mountains, had not his Royal Highneſs, and his Council, timely provided for their Relief, by cauſing all ſorts of Commodities to be brought from Milan, and other Parts of Italy, to regale their Enemies: This was all done in ſight of the Allies; and whenever any Complaints were made, the Senate of Turin was dumb, or anſwer'd only by Riddles, after the Indian Manner. All this while his Royal Highneſs crowded his Coffers with French Louis d'ors; and M. Catinat, who knew well his Temper, was not at all ſparing of them.

The Honour of France, and Preſervation of an Army, which was juſt then ready to periſh, gave way for no Parſimony. I mention nothing but what is notoriouſly known; and I appeal to the Generals of the moſt Serene Allies, who then commanded in Italy, if they have not been Eye witneſſes to all I affirm.

But

A. D. 1696. And lays Siege to Valentia.

On the contrary, ſo forward was he with his Preparations of all Sorts, that, on the 24th, he open'd his Trenches before Valentia, ſituated on the Frontiers of Montferrat, and made his Approaches in ſuch a Manner, as convinc'd the whole World that he was indeed in (y) earneſt. The Place, on the other Hand, was defended by a ſtrong Garriſon, who behav'd as if they partook of the Reſentments of their Maſters, with an Intrepidity that is ſeldom the Effect of mere Duty and Diſcipline. But tho' for ten Days together they repuls'd the Beſiegers on all Sides, and Rains almoſt continual greatly incommoded the Latter in their Approaches, ſo unwilling were the Spaniards to riſque the whole Duchy on the Fate of this ſingle Place, and it did, in a good Degree depend upon

A. D. 1696.

But let us proceed to other Practices, which are no leſs remarkable than the Former: Namely, the Permiſſion that his Royal Highneſs gave to ſome Fellows diſguiſed like Peaſants, and ſent incognito by M. Catinat, to ſubborn and liſt the Proteſtant Soldiers of the Regiments of Miremont and Montauban, whom they intended to carry off to the French Army, to the end that by their Deſertion the King of England's Forces might be ſo much the more weakened, and their own augmented. This, no doubt, was with deſign to favour the French King; who, if he could but get thoſe Proteſtant Enemies into his Power, thought himſelf ſecure of his Project, by the Intelligence he all along had with his Royal Highneſs. This Relation is ſo much the leſs to be queſtion'd, as it was verify'd by the Surprizal of ſeveral of theſe diſguiſ'd Traytors by the Officers of theſe Regiments, who taking them in the very Act, after having debauch'd above five and twenty Soldiers, immediately complain'd of them to his Royal Highneſs, who remitting them to a Council of War, the Officers went away very well ſatisfy'd, believing they would be puniſh'd according to the Enormity of their Crimes: But, would you think it, inſtead of doing ſo exemplary a Piece of Juſtice, they quite frankly ſuffer'd them in their Eſcape: Of all which, to comply with the Reader's Curioſity, we will give the ſeveral Particulars.

M. Catinat, every Market-day, ſent a Piedmontese, diſguiſ'd like a Peaſant, into the Proteſtants Winter-Quarters, where this Traytor was wont to debauch by Money or fair Promiſes, about twenty five or thirty at a Time, and ſend them by Night with a Guide to Pignerol. Herewith the Officers of theſe Regiments, being at length inform'd by means of ſome Deſerters who had been taken, reſolv'd to pretend to be liſted themſelves, that they might the better diſcover the Villain who took upon him to liſt: For this Purpoſe they put on their common Soldiers Clothes, and by means of one of thoſe Deſerters who had been taken, they were conducted to the counterfeit Peaſant's Quarters, who receiving them with a great deal of Joy, immediately gave them Money, and told them the Names of the Regiments and Captains that waited for them at Pignerol. The Day of their Departure being come, the Peaſant promis'd to go along with them; when they being between twenty and thirty in all, as well Officers as Soldiers, began to ſet forward: But their Piedmontese Captain was ſoon ſurpriz'd by a Preſent of Irons being brought him to carry him before the Governor, who promis'd the ſevereſt Juſtice on ſo villainous a Deſign. Some time after ſix Officers of the ſame Regiments went and poſted themſelves in the Night-time, in a Place where they knew the Deſerters muſt needs paſs, with deſign to diſcover more of theſe Villains, who were ſent to ſeduce their Men to the Enemy. For this Purpoſe they got up into ſeveral Trees, that they might keep themſelves the better from being diſcover'd. Whilſt they lay thus concealed, there came a Peaſant from the Town, whom they preſently ſeiz'd, and diving into his Pockets, found a Letter from the Governor, in whoſe Hands they had left the firſt Traytor. This Letter was an Anſwer to one of the Duke of Savoy's, whereby he gave his Highneſs to underſtand, that according to his Commands, he would continue Maſters ſo, that the Piedmontese Priſoner ſhould eſcape without having any Harm done him. The Peaſant, upon demand who gave him that Letter, anſwer'd, it was the Governor himſelf; which ſufficiently laid open the ſecret Intelligences the Court of Turin had with the Enemy, in order to ruin the Proteſtant Regiments. The original of this Letter is ſtill to be ſeen in my Lord Galloway's, Hands, as a Monument of the Treachery and Baſeneſs of the Generals and other Officers of his Royal Highneſs.

His Royal Highneſs ſaw all this with his own Eyes; nothing eſcap'd his Knowledge: Nevertheleſs every Thing was paſs'd by in profound Silence and Neglect: The poor Officers only of theſe Regiments, might murmur and complain as long as they pleas'd, to ſee themſelves in a fair way to be ruin'd by thoſe repeated Deſertions: To this Remark we may farther add, the Deſign his Royal Highneſs had to ſell theſe Regiments by an uſurp'd Authority to the Venetians, to go and ſerve in the Morea, which they muſt undoubtedly have yielded to, had not they ſo vigorouſly oppoſ'd thoſe Propoſals, affirming they belong'd only to his Britannick Majeſty, in whoſe Power it was alone to diſpoſe of them in that Nature. Theſe Matters being thus tranſacted in the Sight of all Europe, ſhall his Royal Highneſs's flattering Miniſters for the future dare to boaſt their Maſter's Sincerity without a juſt Reproach.

In the next Place comes the Conduct of his Royal Highneſs towards ſeveral French Refugees; who being oblig'd to paſs thro' this Prince's Army, inſtead of receiving them civilly, as he ought to have done, on the contrary, caus'd them all to be arreſted; and moreover order'd them to be bound Hand and Foot, and ſent to M. Catinat as Deſerters from his Army; and this, altho' ſeveral Letters were writ him from France, that they had never been in any Service, but were the Sons of ſeveral rich Merchants, whom their Fathers thought fit to ſend out of that Kingdom. I believe there was never the like Cruelty thought on; and, which ſufficiently demonſtrates, how little his Royal Highneſs ſeem'd to value the King of England, who had all along declar'd himſelf their Protector, whilſt his Earneſtneſs to comply with France was thereby unqueſtionably made appear. Of this Action I myſelf was an Eye-witneſs, as well as all the Officers of the Auxiliary Forces.

Laſtly, the Marquis of Bagnoſpar, chief Favourite to the Duke of Savoy, and firſt General of his Forces, reſolv'd, by his Highneſs's Conſent, to rid himſelf of all the Proteſtants; and having try'd ſeveral ways to deſtroy them, which prov'd all ineffectual, through the Prudence and Wiſdom of their Commanders, endeavour'd at laſt to put his deteſtable Deſign in Execution, by ſeparating them from the reſt of the Army. This happen'd at the Camp of Demont, where the innocent Blood of ſo many brave Men was to be ſpilt, by as barbarous and cruel a Slaughter, as ever was the Bloody Maſſacre of St. Bartholomew.

The only Regiments of Proteſtants that were then in the Army, were thoſe of Lillemarais and Montauban, commanded by the Marquis of Montauban: Theſe two Regiments were therefore ſeparated from the reſt of his Highneſs's Troops, by the Orders of General Bagnoſpar, to their great Surprize and Aſtoniſhment at a Thing ſo unuſual and barbarous. The Night being over, the Officers of thoſe Regiments perceiv'd, at Break of Day, General Bagnoſpar, at the Head of fourſcore Officers, making towards them, with their Piſtols ready cock'd in their Hands: They were follow'd by a great Detachment of choice Men to ſupport them. Bagnoſpar went preſently up to Monſieur de Montauban, with deſign to ſhoot him, which was to be a Signal for his Highneſs's Troops, who were in order of Battle, to make a Diſcharge upon the two Regiments of Proteſtants: But the Marquis of Montauban's Prudence, ſecur'd the Lives of his Men; becauſe inſtead of making any Shew of ſtanding upon his Defence, which was all that General Bagnoſpar deſir'd, the better to cover himſelf and colour his Treachery, he was contented openly to proteſt againſt the Violence done him, and ſaid he would make his Complaints to the Duke of Savoy, and to his Maſter the King of Great Britain; adding, that this was a Violation of the Right of Nations, and an Abuſe offer'd to the Honour of his Maſter, of which he would be reveng'd.

General Bagnoſpar, who thought the Proteſtants would have fir'd upon his Men, was quite out of Countenance by this unexpected Conduct, and return'd to his Army mad with the Sting of the Diſappointment: The Marquis of Montauban highly reſented this Violence, and the abuſive Language Bagnoſpar gave him, to provoke him to make Reſiſtance, which he could not do at that Time, without expoſing his Men to be cruelly daughter'd at the firſt Diſcharge, ſince Bagnoſpar's Party was above two to one: Therefore he prudently diſſembled his Reſentment for the preſent, expecting a favourable Opportunity to be reveng'd.

The Marquis of Montauban being come to the Court of Turin, made his Complaints to his Royal Highneſs, and gave him the Particulars of the Treachery and Barbarity of his General. The Duke of Savoy was ſo far from eſpouſing the Quarrel of oppreſs'd Innocence, that on the contrary he excuſ'd Bagnoſpar, and made appear, in the Sequel of this Affair, that he authoriz'd all that his General had done; to the great Diſſatisfaction of all the Officers of the Auxiliary Troops, who highly commended the Marquis of Montauban's Prudence upon this Occaſion.

(y) According to Boyer, who aſſerts farther, That M. Catinat having private Orders from the King his Maſter not to obey the Duke farther than was ſuitable to his Intereſt, retarded the Progreſs of the Siege as much as poſſible. And Burnet ſays, it was not much preſs'd; but erroneouſly adds, That it laſted ſeven Weeks.

A. D. 1696. The Neutrality accepted.

upon it, that they conſented all at once to accept the Neutrality and a Ceſſation of Arms, which was ſign'd and proclam'd on the 7th of October, (as it is declar'd in the Preamble) upon the reiterated Repreſentations and Solicitations of the Duke of Savoy; and thro' the Goodneſs of their Imperial and Catholic Majeſties (for Both were Parties in the Inſtrument) who were laid to be touch'd with Compaſſion for the State of the Country, which had ſuffered ſo greatly by the War.

The Subſtance of it.

The Subſtance of this Convention was, "That there ſhould be a Neutrality or Suſpenſion of Arms in Italy till a general Peace: That the Imperial and French Troops ſhould depart out of Italy, and return into their own Countries: That in lieu of Winter-Quarters, which the Princes of Italy were otherwiſe oblig'd to allow the Imperialiſts, they ſhould furniſh them with 300000 Crowns; that is to ſay, one Third before their Retreat, and the Remainder at a Time preſix'd, upon ſufficient Security: And that as ſoon as the Imperialiſts ſhould begin to march off with ſome Part of their Troops, the French proportionably ſhould do the like."

Thus the War on this Side was brought to an End, very much to the Satisfaction of the Princes and Powers of Italy, the Advantage of Savoy, and not only to the Relief, but even to the Triumph of France, as may be gather'd from the Letter of the Moſt Chriſtian King to the Archbiſhop of Paris, requiring a ſolemn Te Deum to be ſung in the Church of Notre Dame, by way of Thankſgiving for the ſame: For therein he ſets forth, "That having ſingly ſuſtain'd a nine Years War againſt all Europe in Confederacy, with no other View than to defend Religion and avenge the Majeſty of Kings, God had protected his Cauſe, conducted his Deſigns, and ſeconded his Enterprize: That the Succeſſes of his Arms were no otherwiſe agreeable to him, than as they flatter'd him with a Hope of being ſo much the more able to re-eſtabliſh Peace: That all the Uſe he had made of them, was to offer his Enemies more advantageous Terms than they could have wiſh'd, even if They had obtain'd the ſame Superiority over him, which he had preſerv'd over them: That believing he ought to omit nothing which might contribute to the Happineſs of Europe, he had left no Means untry'd to convince his Brother, the Duke of Savoy, with what Ardor he deſir'd to have the good Underſtanding, which the Ties of Blood and of Friendſhip had produc'd and continued for ſo many Ages between them, reſtor'd, and which nothing but the Artifices of their Enemies could have interrupted: That his Prayers had been heard: That that Prince was come to the Knowledge of his own true Intereſts, and of his upright Intentions: That the Peace was concluded: That it was to be hop'd, the Princes of the Confederacy, affected by their Example, and more ſo by the Calamities of their People, would procede to imitate it; or if they rather chuſe to perſue their own Meaſures, they would be made more ſenſible than ever, That nothing was impoſſible to Troops enur'd to Conqueſt, and led to it by the Deſire of Peace."

King Louis orders a ſolemn Te Deum to be celebrated.

The ſame Deſire of Peace was alſo manifeſted in the Devices and Emblems of the Fire-works before the Town-Houſe of Paris; tho' not without the Intermixture of a Sacrifice to the Vanity both of the French King and the French Nation: For of thoſe Devices the Principal was, Alexander cutting the Gordian Knot, with an unneceſſary Motto, by way of Explication.

The Knot of the Confederacy which this alluded to, was now, indeed, in a fair way of being divided: — The detaching of Savoy, had produc'd the Detachment of Milan; and the Detachment of Milan, tho' the Effect of Compulſion, was altogether as ſenſibly felt as that of Savoy: What was a Convenience to one Power, was an Inconvenience to another: If Milan was reſcu'd, M. Catinat's Army was now at Liberty to repaſs the Alps: And Thoſe who were moſt concern'd in preventing the French from having a Superiority in Flanders, would not have been ſo much diſpleas'd at the Loſs of Milan, as they were at the Neutrality, which put an End to all Diverſion on that Side.

The ſaid Neutrality of ill Conſequence to Flanders.

How, or in what Manner this Diſpleaſure was expreſs'd, does not, indeed appear; but that ſome Expreſſion of it was made, may be gather'd from one of our own Writers, who from the Prejudices of the Times only, could be induc'd to call it, as he has done, a precipitate Step; adding, "That if the Spaniards had ſtay'd a little longer, the great and continual Rains, which began to fall as ſoon as the Treaty was ſign'd, would certainly have oblig'd the French to raiſe the Siege, and forc'd his Royal Highneſs to give them Winter-Quarters in Piedmont." [Boyer.]

The Marquis de Leganez's Apology for it.

But that the Marquis de Leganez, tho' countenanc'd in all he had done by the Concurrence of Count Manſfeldt, the Emperor's Miniſter, ſhould be under a Neceſſity to ſend an Apology for his Conduct to the Hague, is one of the ſtrongeſt Proofs that can be requir'd, That it was complain'd of.

And in that Apology, among a Variety of other Matter, he ſets forth, That ſo long ago as the preceding May, by repeated Expreſſes he inform'd the King of Spain, the Emperor, the King of England, and the States-General, That the Duke of Savoy was indubitably in Treaty with France; and demanded the Recruits of Men and Money, as alſo the Squadron of Ships which had been promiſ'd him, as the only probable Means of holding his Royal Highneſs to the Obligations he had enter'd into; or in caſe of his Deſection, to defend the State of Milan againſt him: That theſe Sentiments of his had the King his Maſter's Approbation: That he renew'd his Applications to the Princes and Powers his Allies, by his expreſs Command: That he laid the expos'd Condition of the Country before them, and the Neceſſity of immediate Succours; and that he had alſo his Majeſty's Orders to conform in all Things to their Inſtructions: That whereas in the Beginning he had good Reaſon to expect a Reinforcement of 6000 Men from

A. D. 1696. from his Imperial Majesty (towards the Expence of which he had undertaken to furnish 100000 Crowns) and that his Britannic Majesty and the States-General, would have both augmented the Number of their Troops on that Side, and also furnish'd the Squadron of Ships agreeable to their Engagements, it so fell out, notwithstanding, that tho' it was above four Months since the Duke of Savoy had reconcil'd himself to France, he had never, in all that Time, receiv'd any of the expected Succours: That he should not take upon him to examine the Cause of his Disappointment, which, however, had no Influence on his Conduct: For knowing how religiously his Master had resolv'd to swerve in nothing from the Sentiments of his Allies, and how much they were interested in his Affairs, he had left no Method untry'd either to reclaim the Duke, or to gain Time for new Expedients, in hope to retrieve their Affairs: That of all this Count Mansfelt, and all the Generals of the Army, were Eye-Witnesses: That having waited till Hope itself was at an End, till the united Army had enter'd his Master's Territories, had sack'd and pillag'd the whole Frontier, to the incredible Damage of the miserable Inhabitants, and laid Siege to Valentia; being neither strong enough to keep the Field against the Enemy, nor having either Provisions or Ammunitions for the Subsistance of the Troops in Garrison; and, lastly, being destitute of Money, (the last Supply from Spain having been all expended in Loans to the Troops of the Allies, and in the Purchase of Corn, Forage, Bread, &c. which those, in particular of the Emperor, England, Brandenburgh, and Bavaria could no otherwise be supply'd with) he had found himself utterly unable to conduct so vast a Machine any longer, and could do no other than accept the Neutrality, which he had done against his Will, and under the Pressure of a Necessity no longer to be withstood, unless with the Loss of the whole Duchy; whereas, if he had accepted it at first, his Master would have been at least a Million and a half of Pattacoons in Pocket; and that poor Country would have been exempted from the Storm which had fallen upon it; but of which however it was too late to complain, since the Evil could not be remedy'd, &c.

Thus it appears that Spain's Acceptance of the Neutrality, was in truth an Act of Necessity: And that the Marquis de Leganez both justifies his own Conduct, and recriminates on his Master's Allies together.

Death of King John of Poland.

The Death of John Sobiesski, King of Poland, which happend in this Interval, was also another Event which help'd to increase the Ferment of Europe, tho' he had outliv'd his Fame, as well as his Abilities and his Importance: The Confederates on one Hand, and France on the other, immediately interfer'd in the Cabals that were form'd among the Grandees, for supplying the Vacancy with a Prince after their own Heart, and set all their Engines at work accordingly: But as to the Scene of Action on that Side, it was scarce worth a Place in the Annals of the War: To continue a sort of flying Camp of Observation in the Neighbourhood of Caminiecz, without hope of ever reducing it, was all the Poles seem'd to have in View; and to relieve the Garrison from Time to Time, and afterwards to make an Incursion into the Polish Frontier, was the sole Purpose of the Tartars: They did so this Year, with their usual Violence and usual Success: For having laid all waste while unresisted, they were no sooner oppos'd by the Crown-General and his Forces, than they retir'd in Confusion.

A. D. 1696.

But that Diversion which the Divisions of the Poles, and the Dotage of their King, would not suffer the Confederates to create in that Quarter, they deriv'd more unexpectedly from another. The Czar of Muscovy, at the Head of a mighty Army, laid Siege to Asoph, a Place of great Importance on the Turkish Frontiers, situated on the Tanais or Don, and having defeated a great Convoy sent to its Relief, oblig'd the Garison to surrender by Capitulation: On the Credit of which Success, the Court of Vienna thought it worth their while to enter into Alliance with him; and all the Princes of Europe began, for the first Time, to entertain a respectful Idea of the Power and Importance of the mighty Empire under his Dominion.

The Czar retakes Asoph.

The Campaign in Hungary.

In Hungary, in the mean while, very little Advantage was taken of an Incident so considerable in itself, and likely to be productive in future, of such great Consequences: It is true, the Imperial Army took the Field much earlier than usual: For a good Body of Troops was at their Rendezvous near Buda, about the Middle of May; and the Elector of Saxony himself, resum'd the Command before the End of the Month: Prince Charles of Vaudemont had secur'd the Passes into Transylvania: A Disposition was made for the Junction of the Forces in that Province, with the main Army in Hungary; and proper Measures having been taken for the Security of Peter-Waradin, the Army, after several Removes, took Post in the Neighbourhood of Segedin, with a Design to pass the Theysse, and as it was given out, lay Siege to Temeswaer: But tho' they did pass that River, and had no Enemy to oppose them, they did not form that Siege: on the contrary, having provided for the Security of Titul, they took Post at Chonad, on the River Marosch, and continued there till the 19th of July, without making any Attempt of any kind at all; it appearing, that the only Purpose they had, was to wait for the several Reinforcements which were still on their March to join them, even so late in the Year as the Beginning of August, and to prevent the Grand Signior from penetrating into Transylvania. That, however, they might be so much the surer of their Measure, they made a Feint of attempting Temeswaer, but gave it over, and march'd towards Betzkerck, in his way to Belgrade, as soon as they were advis'd that the Grand Signior was making his Approaches to Titul: On the 21st of August, the two Armies met, some

A. D. 1696. somewhat ſooner than the Imperialiſts expected, in a Plain near the River Beque; and even while the Latter were forming, the Turkiſh Horſe, in great Numbers, not only made an Attempt on their Cannon, but fell three ſeveral Times on the Foot of the Right Wing, who by the Help of their Chevaux de Friſe, and a very briſk Fire, made a Shift to repulſe them as often, tho' not without conſiderable Loſs: But the Uſe made by the Turks of the Time gained by theſe ſeveral Onſets, balanc'd the ill Succeſs of them: For in this Interval, their Foot entrench'd themſelves in ſuch a Manner between two Moraſſes, one bordering on the River Beque, and the other on the River Temes, and cover'd their Front with ſuch a Number of Cannon, that they were unapproachable: Which being diſcover'd by the Imperialiſts the next Day, it was thought adviſable to make a Shew of retreating, in hope of drawing them from ſo advantageous a Poſt. Accordingly on the 23d, the whole Army retreated in Order of Battle, and were follow'd on the 24th by the Enemy's Foot; but with ſo much Caution, and under ſo wiſe a Direction, that no ſooner did the Imperialiſts begin to make a Diſpoſition to engage them, than they entrench'd themſelves as ſecurely as before. On the 25th, therefore, the Imperialiſts continued their Retreat; and on the 26th receiv'd Intelligence, that the whole Ottoman Army was in motion; ſo that, believing their Feint had taken effect, they fac'd about, and advanc'd in Battalia to engage them: But there being a little Wood between the two Armies, and the Paſſes being ſomewhat difficult, the Ottomans had once more Time enough to poſt themſelves between the Imperialiſts and Temeſwaer, having the Beque behind them, a thick Wood on their Right, a Moraſs on their Left, and their Front cover'd with a triple Entrenchment, compos'd of their Waggons chain'd together: Concluding, therefore, that under whoſe Conduct ſoever the Enemy march'd, they would always march under the like Precautions: And that a vigorous Effort was moſt likely to ſucceed, before the Troops were worn out with Fatigue, ſix Battalions, ſupported by two Regiments of Dragoons, commanded by General Heuſler, had Orders to march into the ſaid Wood, and fall upon the Ottomans in flank, which they perform'd with great Bravery, and at firſt beat the Janizaries from their Poſt; but were oblig'd to retire in their Turn, before the Enemy's Horſe, which alſo overpower'd and bore down two other Regiments of Dragoons under the Command of the Prince of Vaudemont, who was himſelf wounded and carry'd off: At the ſame Time, alſo, the Ottomans, perceiving that the Imperialiſts had completed their Diſpoſition, no longer kept on the Defenſive only, but order'd their Horſe to iſſue from their Entrenchments and attack them, which they did with ſo much Fury, that about 12000 of them broke quite thro' two Saxon Battalions, and diſorder'd the whole Line: But other Troops coming up, they were at laſt repuls'd, and the Line cloſ'd by the ſame Saxons; which, however, was no ſooner done, than another Body of Horſe not only broke thro' it again, but attack'd the ſecond Line of the Imperialiſts with ſo much Intrepidity, that for ſome Minutes all ſeem'd to be in Danger. The Latter, however, tho' far inferior in Point of Numbers, behav'd as if Valour was ſure to be invincible; and as if the Lives that were loſt were to beſtow Victory on the Reſt: No Quarter was either given or taken; he that fell was ſure to riſe no more; and he that was firſt in Command from the Nature of the Service, was moſt expos'd; it being concluded on both Sides, That if the Officers were once ſubdued, the Soldiers would be an eaſy Prey: Hence it was, that the Generals Heuſler, Poland, and ſeveral other gallant Officers were kill'd, and Numbers more were dangerouſly wounded.

A. D. 1696.

The Turkiſh Horſe attack the Imperialiſts, but are repulſed.

The Imperialiſts attack the Turks, and ſuffer greatly.

But if one brave Man fell, another ſupply'd his Place; and when the Ottoman Horſe endeavour'd to break the ſecond Line, General Roſes, with the Squadrons under his Command, had the Honour to turn the Fate of the Day: For having at the firſt Shock ſtemm'd the Torrent, it was not long before he turn'd it on the Enemy; and having once put them in rout, he gave them no Time to rally, but drove them before him for two Miles together.

That, however, a partial Advantage, for it was no more, might not give the Enemy an Opportunity to retrieve all again, Roſes receiv'd an Order to reſtrain the Ardor of his Men, and give over the Purſuit: But tho' a Retreat was ſounded, ſome other Squadrons continued the Chace to the very Entrenchments of the Enemy; how indiſcretely, they were ſoon convinc'd; for being overpower'd with freſh Troops, They were driven back in Confuſion, which they had alſo communicated to all the Troops they had fallen in with, if General Roſes had not advanc'd with the Regiment of Caprara, and taken the Enemy in flank, which oblig'd them once more to retire, having left above 1000 of their Companions dead behind them.

And now the whole Front being again re-eſtabliſh'd, and the Enemy again poſted behind their Entrenchments, the Imperialiſts made a Shew of renewing the Attack; but contented themſelves with that Shew: For Night coming on, they took the Advantage of it to refreſh their Troops, as well as their expos'd Condition would admit, and take care of their wounded: But tho' they laid claime to a Victory, neither did they return to the Charge the next Day; in excuſe of which it was alledg'd, That the Ottomans had thrown up ſuch Works in the Night, as render'd it impracticable to force them: To account for their decamping firſt, it is alſo ſaid, That their Proviſions began to fail; and if they were forc'd to leave ſeveral Pieces of Cannon behind them, it was ſaid to be, becauſe their Carriages were broke to Pieces, and their Horſes kill'd during the Action: But why they choſe to retire at Midnight, the next Day after the Action, is not accounted for at all.

but claime a Victory.

The

A.D. 1696. The Truth of the Matter however is, that both Parties were Lofers alike; and being alike difabled from making a new Attempt, feperated as if by Content; and in this one Action comprehended the whole Buſineſs of the Campaign.

But if the Imperialiſts made but a feeble Campaign in Hungary, the Venetians made no Attempt at all that deſerves mention, much leſs Remembrance; perhaps becauſe they were in the Secret of France; and found it more for their Intereſt to obtain the Neutrality of Italy, than to exhauſt themſelves any farther in endeavouring to make any Acquiſitions from the Turks, which they might not ſucceed in, or might not be permitted to hold.

And now having thus wound up the Thread of foreign Affairs, ſo far as relates to the Military at leaſt, it is Time to return to our own.

[May 30.] Death of Lord Capel. Capel, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, once ſo eminent for his Patriotiſm in the Houſe of Commons, dy'd this Summer at Dublin: And no Proviſion having been made by the King to appoint a Succeſſor, the Privy-Council of that Kingdom, by Authority of an Act of Parliament made in the 33d of the Reign of Henry VIII. elected Sir Charles Porter, the Lord-Chancellor, who had form'd ſo great a Faction againſt Capel, to adminiſter the Government, till his Majeſty's Pleaſure ſhould be known: And the Parliament of Ireland meeting by Adjournment ſome little Time after, both Houſes waited on him in form, with their Complements on his Elevation to that Dignity; which, together with the Expulſion of the only Member who refus'd to ſign the Aſſociation, was the only Buſineſs they were ſuffered to fit for: Two Proclamations, one for a general Faſt, and the other for apprehending Rapparees, are the only public Acts on record of Porter's Vicegerency: And in the Beginning of July following, the Earls of Montrath and Drogheda were aſſociated with him.

Lord Murray, Secretary and King's Commiſſioner for Scotland, holds a Seſſion of Parliament there. In Scotland, a new Seſſion of Parliament was held this Summer, if not to remove the Grievances of the People, to ſupply the Wants of the Government. The Lord Murray, eldeſt Son of the Marquis of Athol, who had been appointed Secretary of State in the Room of Dalrymple, was alſo appointed the King's Commiſſioner, and created Earl of Tullibardine; poſſibly, that his Rank might be the more ſuitable to the high Character he was to ſuſtain: On the 8th of September the Seſſion was open'd, and the Duke of Hamilton, ſo obnoxious to the Government while Earl of Arran, with ſeveral other Malcontents, took the Oaths, and ſign'd the Aſſociation: Call'd to that Service, ſay the Writers of their own Party, by the Oppreſſions of their Country; and deſigning, ſay Thoſe of the other Side, to undermine and ſubvert that Government, which now, for the firſt Time, They ſwore to uphold and defend.

The Duke of Hamilton takes the Oaths in order to diſtreſs the Government.

[Lockart's Memoirs.]

[Members of N. Britain.]

The King's Letter was alſo read the firſt Day of the Seſſion: And both the Lord-Commiſſioner, and the new Lord-Chancellor Polwarth, made Speeches as uſual: A Supply was granted for the ſtanding Forces, and other military Purpoſes: But then it was only for one Year's Service, that the Court might be under a Neceſſity of holding another Seſſion within that Term: They were alſo induc'd to form an Act of Security after the Engliſh Model, in caſe his Majeſty ſhould come to an untimely Death; and to oblige all Perſons in public Truſt to ſign the Aſſociation: But tho' Biſhop Burnet, by making uſe of theſe Words, In a very thin Houſe, every thing that was aſk'd was granted, would tempt us to conclude, there was no Oppoſition, the contrary is apparent even in our own Gazettes; for when the Act which provided for the ſitting of the Parliament in being, in caſe of the King's Death, was under Conſideration, a Debate aroſe upon a Clauſe in it, relating to military Commiſſions, which occaſion'd a Diviſion of the Houſe, tho' not the Loſs of the Clauſe: And an Act, That no Law ſhould paſs at the firſt Reading, which was apparently calculated to prevent a Surprize, did actually receive the royal Sanction. A.D. 1696. A Supply granted.

But what the Biſhop farther obſerves, That Scotland was fallen under great Miſery by reaſon of two ſucceſſive bad Harveſts, which drove away great Numbers of the Inhabitants to Ireland, is a Truth ſo unqueſtionable, that the Council had been forc'd to ſet forth a Proclamation to invite and encourage the Importation of Proviſions, contrary to expreſs Laws; and were now by an expreſs Law indemnify'd for ſo doing.

That however the ill State of the Country might not have Time to operate on the ill Humour, which had ſhewn itſelf in Parliament, the Seſſion was clos'd on the 9th of October, having laſted in all but thirty-one Days.

Abſences, towards a Peace. All this while, and indeed ever ſince it appear'd, that the Duke of Savoy was irrecoverably loſt to the Confederates, the Negotiations between Mr. Dykvelat and M. Callieres, the one on the Behalf of France, and the other of the States-General, with the Concurrence of King William, for laying the Baſis of a general Peace, had been proſecuted with much ſeeming Sincerity on both Sides: Towards the End of Auguſt his Majeſty had left the Army under the Command of the Elector of Bavaria, and repairing to Loo, divided his Time as uſual, between the Pleaſures of the Chace and the Cares of the Cabinet; but not as uſual, when in the laſt of thoſe Places, by giving his whole Attention to the Means and Manner of continuing the War: On the contrary, the Defection of Savoy, the Difficulty his own Miniſters found in making the neceſſary Remittances, the Diſpoſition of the States-General to caſe their Country of a Burden they could ill bear, the Miſchief to be apprehended from Poland, in caſe the French Party ſhould prevail in the enſuing Election, and, above all, the Jealouſy which began now to prevail among the Confederates, leſt other Powers ſhould incline to follow the Example of Savoy, made it a very ſerious Queſtion, Whether ſuch a Criſis was not come, as made it

A. D. 1696. highly expedient to ſheath the Sword? And France appearing diſpos'd to grant all that was demanded by the Imperial Court, with relation to the Treaties of Weſtphalia and Nimeguen, without any reſerve, it was ſcarce a Queſtion, Whether ſuch a Co-incidence of Circumſtances, would not render a Peace unavoidable?

So early as the 21ſt of Auguſt M. Dykveldt, with his Majeſty's Approbation, had communicated the whole Proceding to the States-Deputies for Foreign Affairs: On the 3d of September following it was reported to the States-General, who came to a ſolemn Reſolution the ſame Day, That, in conſequence of the Conceſſions of France to the Imperial Demands, Matters were now brought to ſuch a Criſis, that, in concert with their Allies, the Mediation of Sweden might be accepted: And in the ſame Reſolution they return'd Thanks to his Majeſty and M. Dykveldt for their good Offices therein; and order'd a Tranſcript of it to be diſpatch'd to all the ſeveral Courts of their ſaid Allies.

Approv'd by the States.

But coldly received by the Emperor himſelf.

But tho' the Maritime Powers were thus ſeemingly agreed in the Expediency of opening a Negotiation on the Strength of thoſe Conceſſions, neither Spain nor the Emperor were ſatisfy'd with them: And yet, ſo cautious was the Imperial Court in their Conduct on this Head, that They would give no other Anſwer to the Memorials of the Engliſh and Dutch Miniſters at Vienna, than by Word of Mouth; which Anſwer conſiſted of the old Complaints, That the Declarations of France were not yet ſufficiently explicit: That the Intereſts of Spain and the Duke of Lorrain were not imply'd: And of this one Advance merely, That ſince France, in thoſe her Declarations, ſeem'd to approach ſomewhat nearer the Mark, his Imperial Majeſty would cauſe it to be ſignify'd to the King of Sweden, That, in caſe his Swediſh Majeſty would give his Aſſurance to the Allies, That the whole of the Treaty of Weſtphalia ſhould be re-eſtabliſh'd, agreeable to the Receſs of Nuremberg, and that in caſe all the Re-unions and Encroachments, made ſince the ſaid Receſs and Treaty, ſhould be annull'd and aboliſh'd, his Mediation was at that Inſtant accepted; under this farther Reſtriction, however, That, in caſe France ſhould break thro' this Stipulation, either before or after the opening of the Congreſs, the Mediation ſhould be immediately ſuſpended, and his Majeſty of Sweden ſhould be obliged to join his Troops to thoſe of the Allies, agreeable to his Guaranty.

Thus, whether by the mere Motion of the Imperial Court, which every way found its Account in the Continuance of the War, or whether by any clandeſtine Management with ſuch other Powers as were in the ſame Predicament, the Negotiation was again directed into the remoteſt Channel it could paſs thro'; and of conſequence ſubjected both Parties to the Neceſſity of making the like Proviſions for the enſuing, as had been made for the current Year.

Affairs at Home.

This was the State of Things Abroad at the Cloſe of the Campaign: And at Home, the two great Points which the Regency had to labour, was, firſt, the Re-coinage, which occaſion'd inexpreſſible Difficulties and Uneaſineſſes all over that Kingdom: And, 2dly, the Plot, which it was thought adviſable to take up at the Rebound, and to keep in Motion, as well for the Amuſement of the Public, as to render all Oppoſition in Parliament unpopular, if poſſible. A. D. 1696.

Sir John Fenwick taken.

In the Beginning of June, Sir John Fenwick had been taken at New Romney, in Company with one Webber, an Attorney, with whom he lay in wait for an Opportunity to make his Eſcape to France; Captain Waugh, another of the Conſpirators, had been taken at Canterbury: A Proclamation had been ſeveral Times repeated for the apprehending of Berkenhead; and nothing was omitted that could ſerve to create a general Perſuaſion, That till every one of the Offenders was brought to Juſtice, the King was not out of Danger; with what Effect, may be gather'd from the following officious Paper, which was deliver'd in the Name of the Citizens of London, to their Repreſentatives in Parliament.

Officious Paper of the Citizens of London to their Members.

"We the Citizens of this City, conſidering that the Parliament is ſuddenly to meet, and ſeriouſly reflecting upon the continual Endeavours of a bloody and diſcontented Party, who truſting upon the King's Clemency, and the Impunity they have hitherto met with, conſpir'd to aſſaſſinate his Majeſty's royal Perſon, and to overturn the Government, in order to ſubject us under the Yoke of France; the Dread of which has made an incurable Wound in the Credit of this Nation, and has had a fatal Influence upon our Trade, we thought we could no longer keep Silence upon ſo important an Occaſion, while we behold our Religion, our Eſtates, our Liberties, and all that is moſt dear to us, in evident Danger; but that it was our Duty to declare and teſtify our great Zeal and Affection for the King, and our firm Reſolution to aid and aſſiſt him with our Lives and Fortunes againſt his Enemies, and the Enemies of the Nation, and to uſe our utmoſt Endeavours to eſtabliſh his Glory and our own Happineſs.

And becauſe we have reaſon to believe, that the beſt, or rather the only, Means to preſerve the King's Perſon, and ſettle the Government, is thoroughly to examine, in full Parliament, the laſt Conſpiracy, we make it our earneſt Requeſt, That you will uſe your Endeavours, ſo ſoon as the Parliament ſhall meet, to procure the Examination of this deteſtable Plot, to the End the Conſpirators, who have hitherto made it their Buſineſs not only to hold Correſpondence with our Enemies, that ſo our Effects and Merchants-Ships might fall into their Hands, but alſo to betray his Majeſty's Counſels, in order to undermine and ruin the beſt of Governments, may be diſcover'd: Without which, we preſume to tell ye, that all other Expedients for the Security of his Majeſty's Perſon and the Kingdom, will produce but little Effect.

Then

A. D. 1696. Then as to the Difficulties and Uneaſineſſes ariſing from the Re-coinage, we find them thus repreſented by a Writer of thoſe Times in the Service, if not in the Pay of the Government. "The main Thing that vexes and turmoils this Kingdom is the Misfortune of our Coin: A deep and long-ago-conſulted Piece of Miſchief, that like Aqua-fortis upon Iron, has been many Years inſenſibly corroding the Bowels of the Nation; and which ſpread itſelf to ſuch a Degree, becauſe not dived into at firſt: 'Tis true, that Want is inſupportable, eſpecially to the poorer Sort, and labouring People, who have only from Hand to Mouth: Nor is the Confuſion leſs in all Families, which redoubles the Cries of all Conditions, and makes them over-haſty for Redreſs."

[Month Mer. for June, 1696.]

Expedients in regard to the Re-coinage.

We are however aſſur'd by the ſame Writer, That the Government left no Expedient within the Limits of their Authority untry'd, to remedy the Evil: And over and above all Thoſe already mention'd, we find, that an Advertiſement was ſet forth in the Gazette of Auguſt 31, importing, that clipt Money would be taken into the Exchequer, upon the following Terms; that is to ſay, Every Sum of ſuch clipt Money, brought in before the 29th of September, was to be told and weigh'd, and the Deficiency noted down: After which the Proprietor was to be allow'd 5*s.* and 8*d. per* Ounce, according to its Weight: The half thereof to be paid back in mill'd Money, ſo ſoon as it could be re-coin'd and return'd from the Mint: And the other Half to be ſecur'd by a Tally on the general Credit of the Exchequer." But then this Advertiſement was neither dated nor ſign'd; nor, which is equally ſtrange, repeated: And on the 24th of September, the Lords-Juſtices came to a Reſolution to ſet forth alſo in the Gazette, That the new Money furniſh'd by the Lords-Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, to the ſeveral Country-Mints, for the Exchange of clipt Money or Plate, at the ſame Rate of 5*s.* and 8*d.* an Ounce; and the good Management of Thoſe appointed to conduct that Exchange, having given great Eaſe and Satisfaction to the ſeveral Counties, and occaſion'd the bringing in conſiderable Quantities of Plate and clipt Money, their Excellencies in Council had that Day order'd the ſaid Lords of the Treaſury, to furniſh ſuch other Sums as ſhould be found ſufficient for continuing the ſaid Exchange, till the 24th of November then next enſuing: As alſo, That the ſaid Lords-Commiſſioners, having mov'd their Excellencies, at the Deſire of ſeveral Merchants, who had conſiderable Quantities of Gold Bullion by them, which they could not export without great Loſs, becauſe the Courſe of Exchange was at that Time ſo much againſt them, for Liberty to coin the ſaid Bullion, the ſaid Merchants paying the Charge thereof, their Excellencies had approv'd the ſaid Motion, and granted the ſaid Liberty on the Condition propos'd. A. D. 1696.

The ſame Day that this Order was made, a Proclamation was iſſued for the Meeting of Parliament on the 20th of October, for the Diſpatch of divers weighty and important Affairs: And his Majeſty, accompany'd by the Duke of Zell, having paid a Viſit of Ceremony to the Court of Brandenburgh at Cleves, and receiv'd a ſuitable Acknowledgment from the electoral Prince, at Loo, having alſo appointed Mr. Robinſon to be his Reſident at Stockholm, with Inſtructions ſuitable to the preſent Criſis, and finally adjuſted all the Meaſures and Diſpoſitions for the next Campaign with the States, embark'd for England on the 4th, arriv'd at Margate on the 6th, between One and Two in the Morning, from whence he proceeded forthwith to Kenſington, and was receiv'd by the Inhabitants, and complemented by the Magiſtracy of London, as uſual.

King lands at Margate from Holland.

What Councils were held, what Debates aroſe, what Opinions were maintain'd, whoſe Influence prevail'd, and what Reſolutions were taken with reſpect to the Seſſion, we can no otherwiſe be inform'd of, than by the Buſineſs of the Seſſion itſelf, which was thus beſpoke in the following notable Speech from the Throne to both Houſes, on the 20th of (z) October, being the Day appointed by the Proclamation.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

His Speech to both Houſes.

I have call'd you together as ſoon as was poſſible; and I think it a great Happineſs that this Year has paſſed without any Diſadvantage Abroad, or Diſorder at Home, conſidering our great Diſappointment in the Funds given at your laſt Meeting, and the Difficulties which have ariſen upon the Re-coining of the Money.

This is ſo convincing a Proof of the good Diſpoſition of my Army, and of the ſteady Affections of my People, that I cannot but take Notice of it with great Satisfaction.

Our Enemies have not been without Hopes, that ſuch a Conjuncture might have prov'd fatal to us: But as they have fail'd in thoſe Expectations, ſo I am fully perſuaded that your unanimous Proceedings, in this Seſſion, will make them for ever deſpair of an Advantage from any Diſagreement among ourſelves.

It muſt be confeſs'd, that the Buſineſs which you have before you will be very great, becauſe of the Neceſſity of ſupplying former Deficiencies, as well as making Proviſion for the next Year's Service.

And upon this Occaſion it is fit for me to acquaint you, that ſome Overtures have been made, in order to the entering upon a Negotiation for a general Peace: But I am ſure we ſhall agree in Opinion, That the only way of treating with France, is with our Swords in our Hands: And that we can have no Reaſon to expect a ſafe and honourable Peace, (z) Biſhop Burnet, chuſing to follow his own Memory rather than the Records, places the opening of the Seſſion in November.

A.D. 1696. Peace, but by ſhewing ourſelves prepar'd to make a vigorous and effectual War: In order to which, I do very earneſtly recommend to you, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, that you would conſider of raiſing the neceſſary Supplies, as well for maintaining the Honour of Parliaments, in making good the Funds already granted, as for carrying on the War the next Year; which I think ought not to be leſs than what was intended to be rais'd for that Purpoſe the laſt Seſſion.

I muſt alſo put you in mind of the Civil-Liſt, which cannot be ſupported without your Help; and the miſerable Condition of the French Proteſtants, does oblige me to mention them to you again.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

It may deſerve your Conſideration, whether there do not ſtill remain ſome Inconveniencies relating to the Coin, which ought to be remedied: And I hope you will find out the beſt Expedients for the Recovery of Credit, which is abſolutely neceſſary, not only with reſpect to the War, but for carrying on of Trade.

I am of Opinion, that there is not one good Engliſhman who is not entirely convinc'd, how much does depend upon this Seſſion; and therefore I cannot but hope for your Unanimity and Diſpatch in your Reſolutions, which at this Time are more neceſſary than ever, for the Safety and Honour of England."

The next Day this Speech being taken into Conſideration by the Commons, the Houſe duely conſidering the Preſſures both of Government and People, wiſely and honeſtly ſuſpended all Feuds and Animoſities, and unanimouſly agreed to the following Reſolutions, which anſwer'd to the great Points of his Majeſty's Speech, viz. 1. That They would ſupport his Majeſty and his Government, againſt all his Enemies, both Abroad and at Home: And that they would effectually aſſiſt him in the Proſecution and carrying on the War againſt France. 2. That they would not alter the Standard of Gold or Silver in Fineneſs, Weight, or Denomination. And, 3. That they would make good all parliamentary Funds ſince his Majeſty's Acceſſion to the Crown, that had been made Credits for Loans from the Subjects.

Unanimous Reſolutions of the Commons.

They alſo reſolv'd, That an Addreſs ſhould be prepar'd agreeable to the firſt of theſe Reſolutions: And ſuch an Addreſs was prepar'd accordingly (by Montagu Chancellor of the Exchequer) which tho' not wholly unexceptionable, yet nevertheleſs expreſs'd a Degree of Firmneſs and Magnanimity ſo uncommon, that it deſerves to be inſerted verbatim.

Their Addreſs.

"May it pleaſe your moſt Excellent Majeſty,

This is the Eighth Year in which your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Commons in Parliament aſſembled, have aſſiſted your Majeſty with large Supplies for carrying on a juſt and neceſſary War, in Defence of our Religion, Preſervation of our Laws, and Vindication of the Rights and Liberties of the People of England; which we have hitherto preſerv'd, and by the Bleſſing of God on your Majeſty's Conduct and good Government, will ſtedfaſtly maintain and entail on our Poſterity. A.D. 1696

This has coſt the Nation much Blood and Treaſure; but the Hopes of accompliſhing ſo great and glorious a Work, have made your Subjects chearfully ſupport the Charge: And to ſhew your Majeſty, and all Chriſtendom, That the Commons of England will not be amus'd or diverted from their firm Reſolutions of obtaining by War a ſafe and honourable Peace, we do, in the Name of all thoſe we repreſent, renew our Aſſurances to your Majeſty, That this Houſe will ſupport your Majeſty and your Government againſt all your Enemies both at Home and Abroad: And that they will effectually aſſiſt you in the Proſecution and carrying on the preſent War againſt France."

The King's Anſwer partook alſo of the ſame Spirit; for it was conceiv'd in the following Words.

"Gentlemen,

The Continuance of your Zeal and Affection, is the Thing of the World I value moſt; and I will anſwer it by all the Ways I can think of; and will make your Good, and the Safety of the Nation, the principal Care of my Life." The King's Anſwer.

The Lords too, tho' ſomewhat more ſlowly (for it was ſome Days before they were ready with their Offering) having been prevail'd upon to entertain a like Senſe of the Criſis, and the apparent Neceſſity of reflecting all poſſible Luſtre on the Government, took their Opportunity to declare, That They could not enter on the Buſineſs of the Seſſion any way ſo well as by an Addreſs to his Majeſty, teſtifying their Zeal for his Service, and their Forwardneſs to apply themſelves to what his Majeſty had lately propos'd from the Throne: "And being entirely ſatisfy'd (continued their Lordſhips) That the Liberty of Europe is concern'd in the Reſolutions of this Parliament, and that the Welfare of your Majeſty's Subjects does depend upon your Safety, and the Succeſs of your Arms: We beg Leave to aſſure your Majeſty, we do, and ever ſhall, conſider all the Diſappointments you meet with, and the Obſtructions laid in your way, as our greateſt Misfortunes, and thoſe that create and promote them, as Enemies to the Public. The Lord's Addreſs.

And as with the utmoſt Sincerity, we give your Majeſty theſe Aſſurances, ſo we think it becomes us to deal as plainly with your Enemies; and therefore, that they may not believe your Majeſty's loyal Subjects can ever wiſh for Peace, or think of it, but upon thoſe ſafe and honourable Terms, which may make it laſting and ſecure: We farther aſſure your Majeſty, we ſhall endeavour to overcome all Difficulties to ſupport you at the Head of ſo juſt and glorious a Cauſe; and ſhall never be wanting or backward on our Part, in what may be neceſſary to your Majeſty's Honour, the Good of theſe Kingdoms, and the Quiet of Chriſtendom."

And

A. D. 1695. And that the great Uſe and Purpoſe of theſe unanimous Proceedings might not be loſt, either Abroad or at Home, for want of a proper Index, his Majeſty, in his Anſwer, expreſs'd himſelf as follows.

The King's Anſwer.

"My Lords,

I am extremely pleas'd with an Addreſs ſo full of Affection to me, and Zeal for the Cauſe in which we are all engag'd; and I ſhall always think, that the beſt Security againſt our Enemies of all Sorts, is to be thus happily united and reſolv'd amongſt our ſelves."

Pamphlets cenſur'd and burnt by the common Hangman.

The Seſſion opening with ſo favourable an Aſpect, the Miniſters had the Wiſdom and Addreſs to derive ſome Advantages from it to themſelves: For the Malcontents having ſet forth a Pamphlet during the Receſs, call'd, An Account of the Proceedings in the Houſe of Commons, in relation to the re-coining the Clipp'd Money, and falling the Price of Guineas, in Anſwer to a Letter out of the Country, in which their Malevolence had exceeded all Bounds; not only by Falſifications and Forgeries, but the moſt wicked (a) Incentives, to ſtir up the Rage of the People againſt the Perſons and Houſes of the Members: They took occaſion to bring it before the Houſe of Commons, who were ſo juſtly incens'd againſt it, that they reſolved, Nemine Contradicente, That it was falſe, ſcandalous, ſeditious, and deſtructive of the Freedom of Parliament: That it ſhould be burnt by the common Hangman: And that his Majeſty ſhould be addreſs'd to iſſue out his Proclamation, offering a Reward of 500 Guineas for the Diſcovery of the Author, and a Pardon to any Perſon concern'd who ſhould make that Diſcovery, except the ſaid Author: And as well to that Pamphlet as to another, call'd, A ſummary Account of the Proceedings on the happy Diſcovery of the Jacobite Conſpiracy, a Liſt of Yeas and Nays, on dividing the Houſe, being annex'd, it was farther reſolv'd, two Days after, That the printing the Names of the Members, and reflecting on them for their Proceedings in Parliament, was a Breach of their Privileges, and deſtructive of the Freedom of Parliament. A. D. 1696.

Vigorous Reſolutions.

That their Proceedings might alſo have their intrinſic Value, as well as a ſpecious Exterior, they firſt pledg'd the Faith of the Houſe, That a Supply ſhould be granted to his Majeſty for the effectual carrying on the War againſt France; as alſo for making good the Deficiencies of parliamentary Funds: and then apply'd themſelves with uncommon Diligence and Ability, to find the neceſſary Ways and Means to anſwer ſuch immenſe Demands; as alſo, at the ſame Time to reſtore public Credit, which was in a manner ruin'd, in conſequence of thoſe Deficiencies, (for Bank-Notes were at 20 per Cent Diſcount, and Exchequer-Tallies at 40, 50, and 60.) and to remove the Stagnation which the Want of Currency had occaſion'd.

Amount of the Eſtimates.

According to the Eſtimates laid before them, above two Millions and a Half was neceſſary for the Sea-Service, including the Ordinary for the Navy, Ordnance, two Regiments of Marines, 40,000 Seamen, &c. And above Two Millions ſeven hundred thouſand Pounds for the Army, containing in all 87,440 Men: It appear'd alſo by the Accounts laid before the Houſe, that an Arrear of 421,080 l. was due to the Navy, 1,850,197 l. to the Army, 58,321 l. to the Ordnance, and 480,544 l. for Tranſports: But then there was an Over-charge on the laſt Article to the Amount of almoſt 90,000 l. And when the Deficiencies of former Funds came to be ſtated, the Amount was no leſs than (b) 6,000,459 l. 14*s.* 9*d.* ½: A Sum in thoſe Days deem'd impoſſible to be rais'd; or if poſſible, what the Nation, till that Time unus'd to ſuch heavy Burdens, would not have ſubmitted to!

In

(a) Vix. "And this brings me to the other Branch of your Letter, viz. "That the Country feeling theſe Effects, are provok'd to very great Anger againſt the Parliament; and can hardly reſtrain their Hands from offering Violence to the Perſons and Houſes of the Members. Now, Sir, I muſt plainly confeſs to you, on this Head, that I think in the general, the Country are in the Right, and have plac'd their Wrath on a right Object."——This Pamphlet was alſo cenſured, as well as cenſur'd, in another Tract, call'd, Reflections on a ſcandalous Libel, &c. the Author of which tell us, in Explication of the Folly and Madneſs of the Times, That a mighty Noiſe being made where aſſembled to threaten the Houſe of a Parliament-Man, if he did not change their clipt Money, and their Money being demanded for that Purpoſe, Half a Crown was all they could produce.

(b) According to the following State.

An Account of the DEFICIENCIES &c.					l.	s.	d.
Land-Tax ——	1ſt 4*r.*	4 W. M.	Intereſt	7 per Cent.	55,622	10	05
	3d 4*r.*	6 W.	——	5 ——	407,572	00	03
	4th 4*r.*	7 W.	——	6 ——	917,101	13	02½
Quarterly Poll ——	——	5,6 W.	——	6 ——	80,275	13	04
½ Cuſtoms ——	——	2 W. M.	——	6 ——	213,447	15	09
Land Bank ——	——	7,8 W.	——	7 ——	1,711,500	00	00
½ Exciſe ——	——	2 W. M.	——	7 ——	100,000	00	00
Impoſitions 1697 ——	——	4,5 W. M.	——	8 ——	445,177	07	04
Vellum, Paper, &c. ——	——	5,6 W.	——	8 ——	224,114	07	08½
Cuſtoms for 3 Years—	——	6 W.	——	7 ——	142,666	07	03¾
Marriages, Births, &c. ——	——	6,7 W.	——	8 ——	648,000	00	00
Wines and Vinegar — Tobacco —— Eaſt-India Goods, &c.	——	7,8 W.	——	5, 6, 7, 8—	146,180	19	05½
Joint Stocks ——	——	4,5 W. M.	——	8 ——
Low-Wines ——	——	7,8 W.	——	6, 7 ——
Glaſs, Stone Ware, &c.	granted	7,8 W.	——	l. 560,000
Tonnage on Ships——	——	Ditto	——	140,000
Duties on Salt——	——	Ditto	——	140,000
					840,000	00	00
					6,000,459	14	09½

A.D. 1696. In the Manner of their Proceding, however, they did not fail to beſpeak the Favour of the Public by ſuch an Appearance of Regard for the Difficulties they labour'd under, and of Concern for the Weight they were oblig'd to lay upon them, as ſeem'd to argue, that the Patriot was not wholly loſt in the Courtier.

Further Proceedings on the Coinage. Thus taking the great Affair of the Coin once more into Conſideration, they reſolv'd, That all the hammer'd Silver Money of the Kingdom, ſhould be receiv'd in Payments by Weight only, at the Rate of 5*s.* 2*d.* an Ounce: That, nevertheleſs, all the ſaid hammer'd Silver Money ſhould be receiv'd at the ſeveral Mints, and by his Majeſty's Collectors and Receivers, till the 1ſt of January next enſuing, at the Rate of 5*s.* and 6*d. per* Ounce: That the like Allowance ſhould be made on all Loans and Plate brought to be coin'd till that Time: And that a Bill ſhould be brought in accordingly.

Supplies voted. While this Affair was depending, they alſo granted 2,372,197*l.* for the Service of the Navy, inſtead of 2,523,954*l.* the Sum demanded: And 2,507,831*l.* 19*s.* 11*d.* (whereof 500,000*l.* was given expreſſly for the extraordinary Service of the Office of Ordnance, for the Pay of General Officers, Tranſports, Hoſpitals, Contingencies, and all other Extraordinaries) for the Land-Service, inſtead of 2,709,713*l.* 12*s.* 10*d.* demanded.

A Vote of Loan. And the Government being at that very Inſtant under Difficulties to anſwer the preſſing Demands of the Fleet and Army, they farther reſolv'd, That whatſoever Loans, not exceeding the Sum of 600,000*l.* ſhould be made on the Credit of the Exchequer in general, ſhould be transferr'd to the Aids next to be given by Parliament.

Ways and Means. On the 25th of November, the Deficiencies of parliamentary Funds being taken into conſideration, the Houſe reſolv'd, That a Supply ſhould be granted for making them good: And on the 2d of December, they farther reſolv'd, in conformity to their Reſolutions in Committee, That towards the ſaid Supply, The Act for granting to his Majeſty a Subſidy of Tonnage and Poundage, and other Sums of Money payable upon Merchandizes exported and imported:

The Act for continuing ſeveral Duties, granted by former Acts, upon Wine and Vinegar, and upon Tobacco and Eaſt-India Goods, and other Merchandize imported:

The Act for granting certain additional Impoſitions upon ſeveral Goods and Merchandize:

The ſeveral Duties upon Paper, Vellum, and Parchment:

And the Rates and Duties upon Marriages, A.D. 1697.
Births, and Burials, &c. ſhould ſeverally be continued to the 1ſt of Auguſt, 1706.

And that the ſeveral Rates and Duties upon Houſes, for making good the Deficiency of the clipt Money, ſhould be continued to the 1ſt of Auguſt, 1710.

They alſo call'd for an Account of the annual Product of the ſaid Funds, which by a Paper preſented to the Houſe by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, appear'd to be (c) 1,043,542*l.* and they appointed a Committee to conſider and ſtate to the Houſe, the Nature of the ſaid Deficiencies, and of the ſeveral Duties already voted, and how the Former might beſt be provided for.

Bills paſs'd. But the Bills firſt diſpatch'd were, One for repealing an Act for taking off the Obligation and Encouragement of coining Guineas for a certain Time, the Reaſon which occaſion'd it, viz. the high and unuſual Price of Guineas, being ceas'd; and for importing and coining Guineas and Half-Guineas: A Second, for the farther remedying the ill State of the Coin, agreeable to the Reſolutions before ſpecify'd: And a Third to explane that Part of the Act paſs'd the Seſſion preceding, for laying ſeveral Duties on low Wines and Spirits of the firſt Extraction, &c. which related to the Payment of Tallies, and the Intereſt thereof: All which receiv'd the Royal Aſſent on the 3d of December.

Ways and Means. That, however, the general Committee had as yet made no farther Progreſs in the great Work of Ways and Means, was poſſibly owing to the Vote of Loan, which ſerv'd for a preſent Relief; as alſo, to the Diverſity of Opinions, which could not but ariſe, when the Object was ſo immenſe; and every working Brain in the Kingdom had a Method of his own to propoſe, which he preferr'd to every other: But this Diverſity of Opinions being at laſt reconcil'd, on the 21ſt Sir Thomas Littleton, the Chairman of the Committee, made his Report to the Houſe of Twelve Reſolutions they had come to, and which were all on the Queſtion ſeverally agreed to, as follow, viz.

That towards raiſing the Supply granted to his Majeſty, for carrying on the War againſt France for the Service of the Year 1697, a Duty be laid upon all Perſons, according to the true Value of their real and perſonal Eſtates, their Stock upon Land and in Trade, and their Income by Offices, Penſions, Profeſſions, Employments, or otherwiſe.

That a Duty of One Penny per Week, for one Year, be laid upon all Perſons not receiving Alms.

That over and above the ſaid Duty of One

The Account of the Failure of the Land-Bank, given to the Houſe by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, according to Order, was, That after all Manner of Expedients had been propos'd by the Commiſſioners (for taking Subſcriptions to the National Land-Bank) to render their Project palatable to the Public, the Books were open'd at Exeter Change, June 5. when the Lords of the Treaſury ſubſcrib'd 5000*l.* on the King's Behalf: That 2100*l.* more was all ſubſcrib'd, between that and the Expiration of the Term limited by the Act for taking the ſaid Subſcriptions: And that the ſaid Commiſſioners aſcrib'd the Cauſe of their ill Succeſs to be the large Intereſts allow'd upon all Securities, both public and private, at the ſame Time that they were limited to 5 per Cent.

(c) On a Medium of Three Years, as follow, viz.

Tonnage and Poundage	377,267
Wine and Vinegar	139,621
Tobacco	128,380
Eaſt-India Goods	149,754
Additional Imports	49,820
Do. on Paper and Parchment	50,000
Marriages, &c.	50,000
Windows	100,000

A. D. 1696. One Penny per Week, a farther Duty of a Farthing per Pound per Week be laid upon all Servants receiving 4 l. per Annum Wages, and upwards to 8 l. per Annum inclusive.

That over and above the said Duty of One Penny per Week, a farther Duty of One Halfpenny per Pound per Week be laid upon all Servants receiving Wages upwards of 8 l. per Annum to 16 l. per Annum inclusive.

That over and above the said Duty of One Penny per Week, a farther Duty of One Penny per Pound per Week be laid upon all Persons receiving Wages upwards of 16 l. per Annum.

That over and above the said Duty of One Penny per Week, a farther Duty of One Penny per Pound per Week be laid upon all Persons receiving any Salaries, Pensions, or other annual Payments, not charg'd upon Land.

That over and above the said Duty of One Penny per Week, the like Duty of One Penny per Pound per Week be laid upon the Profits of all Offices, Employments, and Professions, not otherwise charg'd.

That over and above the said Duty of One Penny per Week, a Duty of One Farthing per Pound per Month be laid upon all Persons, for their Money.

That over and above the said Duty of One Penny per Week, a Duty of one Halfpeny per Pound per Month be laid upon all Persons for their Stock in Trade.

That over and above the said Duty of One Penny per Week, a Duty of Twelve Pence per Month be laid upon all Persons for every 100 l. Stock upon Land.

That the Children (under Sixteen Years of Age) of all such Persons who are charg'd with One Penny per Week, only be excluded from paying the said Duty.

And that an Aid of Three Shillings in the Pound for one Year be laid upon all Lands, Tenements, and Hereditaments, according to the true yearly Value thereof.

So low did the House of Commons think it advisable to stoop at this Time, that all who were concern'd in the Fate of the Commonwealth, might assist in supporting the Load which the War had brought upon it.

The same Day it was order'd, That a Bill or Bills should be brought in agreeable to these Resolutions: Such a Bill was brought in accordingly by Mr. Lowndes, January 8; and 1696-7. a Provision was made in it, That hammer'd Money should be receiv'd in the Payment of these Duties at 5*s.* and 8*d.* an Ounce, which otherwise was to be receiv'd but at 5*s.* and 2*d.*: All the Deficiencies on Annuities and Monies borrow'd on the Credit of the Exchequer in general, were moreover transferr'd to this Aid: And by two other Clauses, the Treasury was enabled to borrow 1,500,000 l. at 8 per Cent. and also to circulate Exchequer Bills to the Amount of 1,500,000 l. more; for the cancelling of which the Surplus of all the Supplies of this Year were appropriated, the 3*s.* Aid excepted. A. D. 1696-7.

Capitation and Land-Tax Bill pass'd.

In three Weeks Time this Bill, complex as it was, pass'd thro' both Houses, and receiv'd the Royal Assent, under the soft Title of, An Act for granting an Aid to his Majesty, as well by a Land-Tax, as by several Subsidies and other Duties, payable for one Year, to raise (d) Three Millions; which being in general Terms, comprehended the ungracious Clauses of Capitation or Head-Money, without expressing them: And it is observable, that in the Edition of the Statutes at large, set forth in the Year 1706, it is not so much as nam'd: As, also, That on the 9th of February, the Commons, by express Vote, resolv'd, That the Aids, Subsidies, and other Duties granted thereby, was to be estimated or computed at Three Millions, towards the Supply for the Year 1697.

Bills to encourage the Coinage.

In the same Interval, they also voted 125,000 l. for making good the Deficiency in recoining the hammer'd Money, and the Recompence for bringing in Plate to the Mint to be coin'd at 5*s.* an Ounce; and in the Committee of Ways and Means, came to the following Resolutions for raising the said Sum, viz.

That a Duty of Sixpence per Ounce be laid upon all wrought Plate that shall not so be brought in.

That a Duty be laid upon all Paper, Pasteboard, Vellum, and Parchment.

That the said Duty upon Paper, Pasteboard, Vellom, and Parchment, made in this Kingdom, be 20 l. per Cent. according to the true Value thereof, to be paid by the Maker.

That the said Duty upon Paper, Pasteboard, Vellum, and Parchment, imported, be 25 l. per Cent. according to the true Value thereof, to be paid by the Importer.

That the said Duties be granted for two Years.

That a Duty be laid upon all Paper, Pasteboard, Vellum, and Parchment which any Person or Persons have in Stock for Sale.

That the said Duty be 17 l. 10*s.* 0*d. per Cent.* according to the true Value, to be paid by the Merchant and Retailer.

To the first of these Resolutions some Opposition was made: And when the Bill that was founded upon them was under consideration, a Motion was made for leaving out that Clause, which was so well supported, that the House divided upon it; but without Effect; for the Majority were still of Opinion, That the Necessities of the Public being extraordinary, they required as extraordinary Remedies.

At the same Time also, another Bill was before the House for the better Encouragement of such Persons who should bring in their Plate to supply the Coinage at 5*s.* and 4*d.* an Ounce; for which Purpose the Treasury was empower'd to issue 50,000 l. as part of the 125,000 l. granted by the preceding Bill: And yet another, which is unmention'd (d) This last Particular was omitted in the Article of the London-Gazette, which gave an Account of the passing these Bills.

A. D. 1696-7. mention'd in the Statute Books, for continuing certain additional Impoſitions (viz. of 1692-3) from the 1ſt of March, 1696, to the 17th of May, 1697, for the Repayment of certain Loans for the Uſes of the War: All which ſeveral Acts receiv'd the Royal Aſſent on the 8th of March.

Further Proceedings on the deficient Funds, Bank, &c.

Nor did they, in this Interval, loſe Sight of the Proviſion they began to make, for the Deficiencies of former Funds: On the contrary, taking the Services of the Bank into Conſideration, the languiſhing Condition it was in, and the preſſing Neceſſity of retrieving its Credit, in order to retrieve that of the Public in general, they call'd firſt for the (e) Account current of the ſaid Corporation; and, having ſpent many Days in a general Committee on ſuch a Complication of Difficulties and Perplexities, on the 3d of February came to the following Reſolutions, viz.

That the Bank of England be enlarged by new Subſcriptions.

That the ſaid Subſcriptions be made by four Fifths in Tallies ſtruck upon parliamentary Funds, and one Fifth in Bank-Bills, or Notes.

That an effectual Proviſion be made by Parliament, for the Payment of the Principal of all ſuch Tallies as ſhall be ſubſcribed into the Bank, out of the Funds agreed to be continued.

That 8 l. per Cent. per Annum be allow'd and provided for all ſuch Tallies ſo to be ſubſcribed and brought in, and for all Tallies remaining in the Bank, to the Amount of ſuch Bills or Notes as ſhall be ſubſcribed with the ſaid Tallies.

That the Continuance of the Bank of England be enlarg'd until the 1ſt of Auguſt, 1710.

That all Aſſignments of Orders on Tallies, ſubſcribed into the Bank, be regiſtred in the Exchequer by the proper Owner thereof.

That before the Day be fixed for the Beginning the new Subſcriptions, the old Stock be made 100 per Cent. and that what ſhall excede that Value, ſhall be divided among the old Members.

That all the Intereſt due on thoſe Tallies, which ſhall be ſubſcribed into the Bank Stock, at the Time appointed for Subſcriptions, to the End of the laſt preceding Quarter on each Tally, be allow'd as Principal.

That Liberty be given by Parliament, to enlarge the Number of Bank Bills to the Value of the Sum which ſhall be ſo ſubſcrib'd, over and above the 1,200,000 l. provided they be oblig'd to anſwer ſuch Bills and Demand; and in default thereof, to be anſwer'd by the Exchequer, out of the firſt Money due to them.

That no other Bank, or any other Conſtitution whatever, in the Nature of a Bank, be erected or eſtabliſhed, permitted or allowed by Act of Parliament within this Kingdom, during the Continuance of the Bank of England. A. D. 1697.

That on ſuch new Settlement, the Bank of England be exempted from all Manner of parliamentary Tax, Aſſeſſments, and Impoſitions whatſoever.

That no Act of the Corporation ſhall forfeit the particular Intereſt of any Perſon concerned therein.

That Proviſion be made for the effectual preventing the Officers of the Exchequer, and all other Officers and Receivers of the Revenue, from diverting, delaying, or obſtructing the Courſe of Payments to the Bank.

That Care be taken to prevent the altering, counterfeiting, or forging any Bank Bills or Notes; as likewiſe, againſt the defacing, raſing, or altering any Indorſements upon any ſuch Bill or Note.

That the Eſtate and Intereſt of each Member in the Stock of the Corporation, be made a perſonal Eſtate.

That no Contract, Bargain, or Agreement made for any Bank Stock to be bought or ſold, be good or valid in Law or Equity, unleſs the ſaid Contract or Agreement be actually regiſtered in the Books of the Bank within ſeven Days, and actually transferred within fourteen Days next after the making ſuch Contract or Agreement.

And that a Bill or Bills be prepar'd and brought in upon the ſaid Reſolutions, and upon the Reſolutions for continuing the Duties of Tonnage and Poundage upon Wine, Vinegar, and Tobacco, &c. reſolv'd by the Houſe the 2d of December laſt.

Such a Bill was accordingly prepar'd and brought in under the Direction of the Chancellor of the Exchequer: And it being found, that the Funds already nam'd were not ſufficient to anſwer the Deficiencies comprehended in it, which amounted in the whole to 5,160,459,14 l. 9*d.* 3 d. it was farther reſolv'd, on the 18th of March, That for making good the Intereſt of all Tallies on the Deficiency of parliamentary Funds, a farther Duty of Two-pence a Gallon ſhould be laid on all foreign Salt, and a Penny on all Engliſh Salt, for two Years and three Quarters: A ſeperate Bill was alſo order'd on theſe laſt Reſolutions; but the Subject Matter being of a Piece with the other, it was at laſt inſerted therein; and all the ſeveral Branches made a general Fund (ſince call'd the general Mortgage) without Prejudice to their former

---

(e) Which they reduced to the following Compendium, and the Houſe was ſatisfied with, viz.

Dr.	l.	s.	d.
To ſundry Perſons for ſealed Notes ſtanding out	193,800	00	0
To Notes for running Caſh	765,196	10	6
To Monies borrowed in Holland (for the Army it muſt be preſum'd)	300,000	00	0
To Intereſt due upon Bills ſtanding out	17,876	00	0
	1,276,872	10	6

Cr.	l.	s.	d.
By Tallies on ſeveral parliamentary Funds	1,784,576	16	5
By Half a Year's Deficiency of the Funds of 100,000 l. per Ann.	50,000	00	0
By Mortgages, Pawns, Caſh, &c.	266,610	17	0
	2,101,187	13	5

A. D. 1696-7. former Appropriations: The Tallies, which had hitherto born ſo great a Diſcount, and which were thus carefully reſcued from the Diſcredit they had fallen into, were to carry 8 per Cent. And it was farther provided, that from the 10th of June, 1697, for five Years, no Præmium or Diſcount upon them ſhould be taken, nor more than 6 per Cent. Intereſt, under Forfeiture of treble the Value, and the Penalty which common Extortioners were liable to: If the general Fund thus conſtituted did not produce ſufficient to pay the whole of the Intereſt charg'd upon it, every individual Proprietor was to receive his Proportion of the Product: What was deficient, was to be made good out of the next Aid: And if the ſaid Fund produc'd more than the Intereſt, the Surplus was to operate as a Sinking Fund for the Diſcharge of the Principal.

This Act was paſs'd April the 1ſt, together with another for completing and adorning St. Paul's Cathedral, and for repairing Weſtminſter-Abbey: And with regard to the Deficiencies of 840,000 l. which had aroſe by the Failure of the Land-Bank, on the Duties laid upon Salt, Coals, and Culm, and the Tonnage of Ships, and alſo for paying the Annuities on Lotteries, it was reſolv'd, That ſome new Duties ſhould be laid in their Stead: And accordingly a new Duty was laid upon Leather, for three Years, after the Rate of 15 per Cent. ad Valorem, to be paid by the Tanner and Dreſſer thereof; and of 15 per Cent. on all Leather imported, over and above the Duty already payable: But it being computed, that the Product of this new Duty would not exceed 560,000 l. it was farther reſolv'd, That for raiſing the Remainder, the Times ſhould be enlarg'd for Perſons to come in and purchaſe the Annuities payable by ſeveral former Acts, and obtain farther or more certain Intereſts in ſuch Annuities; and in default thereof, for admitting other Perſons to purchaſe or obtain the ſame, for carrying on the War againſt France: And that in caſe the ſaid Remainder be not rais'd thereby, then it ſhould be made good out of the firſt Aids to be granted in the next enſuing Seſſion.

Remedies provided by two Acts.

Thus by theſe two Acts all Clames and Demands on the Government were provided for; and the Credit of fictitious Wealth, in Tallies, Paper, &c. which began now to form a new Circulation through the Body-Politic, and was in time to repleniſh thoſe Ducts and Veſſels, which had before been occupy'd by Specie and Bullion only, was put on the beſt Footing that any thing ſo unreal could reſt on: Nor did that enterprizing Spirit, which now animated the State-Undertakings in Parliament ſtop here: For when theſe great Matters were in part perform'd, and the Proſpect of a Completion lay before them, they brought a Meſſage from his Majeſty, ſignifying, "That finding himſelf under very great Difficulties for want of Money to ſupply the Occaſions of the Civil-Liſt, he thought it neceſſary to remind the Houſe of that Part of his Speech which related to that Head, and deſir'd that ſpeedy Care might be taken to make effectual Proviſion for it." This produc'd a Motion for a ſuitable Supply; and ſome Days after the following Reſolutions were taken upon it, viz. That a Sum not exceeding 515,000 l. be granted for the Support of the Civil-Liſt for the Year 1697. That a Duty of 6 d. per Buſhel be laid upon Malt, to be paid by the Maker, for that Service: That, over and above the Duties already payable, a farther Duty of 4 s. per Hogſhead be laid on all Cyder and Perry, for two Years and a Quarter, to be paid by the firſt Buyer or Retailer: That, over and above the Duties already payable on Mum and Sweets, a farther Duty of 12 s. per Barrel on the Latter ſhould be paid by the Maker thereof, for two Years and a Quarter, and 10 s. on the Former.

A. D. 16.6-7.

Civil-Liſt ſupply'd.

They alſo reſolv'd, That a new Duty of 12 l. 12 s. per Tun ſhould be laid on all Wines, and 10 per Cent. ad Valorem, on all Goods made of, or mix'd with, Wool, Silk, or Hair, to be charg'd on the Maker, and paid by the firſt Buyer thereof: And the like Duty on the like Goods imported, to be paid by the Importer.

But theſe two laſt Meaſures appearing to be extremely detrimental to Commerce, and as extremely unpalatable without Doors, they were both dropt: And it was reſolv'd, That towards the Supply, inſtead of the Duty upon Wines, the Duties of the old Subſidy of Tonnage and Poundage upon Goods imported, dying Drugs excepted, according to the Book of Rates ſettled in the Year 1660, ſhould be doubled for two Years and three Quarters; and that an additional Aid of 1 s. in the Pound ſhould be laid on Land, &c. as an Equivalent for the Duty of 10 per Cent. on the ſaid mix'd Goods.

On theſe ſeveral Reſolutions, two Bills were form'd: The Firſt comprehended the additional Duties on Malt, Mum, Sweets, Cyder, and Perry; and alſo made Proviſion for the raiſing 1,400,000 l. by Lottery: The Tickets of this Lottery were at 10 l. each, and bore a Farthing a Day Intereſt; and 14 per Cent. was allow'd for prompt Payment, which might alſo be made in hammer'd Money at ſix Shillings an Ounce. In this Bill the general Appropriation of the Money granted this Seſſion, was contain'd; and as to the Product of the Money granted by this Bill in particular, 200,000 l. was in the firſt Place to be taken out of the Contributions to the Lottery for the Civil-Liſt: And for the 315,000 l. remaining, one Half of the ſaid Product was appropriated for the Payment thereof, and the other Moiety for the Service of the War: And in caſe the whole Number of Tickets were not purchas'd, thoſe remaining were, by the Managers of the Lottery, to be deliver'd into the Exchequer; from thence to be iſſued for the Uſes aforeſaid; and the Bearers were entitled to Chances, as if they had been original Contributors.

The Second was confin'd to the additional Subſidies and additional Land-Tax only: But, whereas in the Act for making good the Deficiencies of parliamentary Funds, and for

A. D. 1696-7. enlarging the capital Stock of the Bank, &c. it was provided, That Exchequer-Bills ſhould be receiv'd in all Payments to the Crown, except the Land-Tax: And the Bank (as if to proclaim, That from thenceforth They were to be the Money-Factors in ordinary for the Government) had offer'd to give their Specie Bills in exchange for Exchequer-Bills and Tallies; the Treaſury, by this Act, and on the Credit of it, were farther empower'd to iſſue 1,200,000 l. more in Exchequer Bills, bearing Intereſt Five-pence a Day for 100 l. and for Circulation 10 per Cent.

Farther Proviſion for the Tranſport Debt.

And that there might not be one ſore Place left unſearch'd or unprovided for, yet another Money-Bill was brought in to oblige Hawkers and Pedlars to take out Licences at certain Rates, as a farther Proviſion for the Intereſt of the Tranſport-Debt for the Reduction of Ireland, which the Duties on Coffee, &c. had not prov'd ſufficient to anſwer.

All theſe ſeveral Money-Bills receiv'd the Royal Aſſent on the ſame Day: And in a printed Pamphlet, publiſh'd at the End of the Seſſion, and ſtill extant, Mr. Montagu, Chancellor of the Exchequer, is extoll'd to the Skies; not only as the great Contriver and Conductor of them, but as the leading Genius of the Times: To his Zeal and Addreſs, his Sagacity and Activity, his Application and Reſolution, the Reſcue of the Government out of ſo many Difficulties, the Re-eſtabliſhment of the public Credit, and the Redreſs of that univerſal Grievance ariſing from the adulterate State of our Coin, and the manifold Miſchiefs it was almoſt every Hour bringing forth, was aſcrib'd; in ſo much, that the King was not more eſteem'd the Saviour of the Nation, than He of the Government.

But great as theſe Services really were, when conſider'd in a miniſterial Light, and deſervedly valuable as ſuch a Miniſter was in a Reign of Expedients, it is not wholly unſuppoſable, that both the Man and his Merits were ſomewhat over-rated in theſe Party-Legends: In the extraordinary Proviſions of this Seſſion, there might be at leaſt as much Cunning and Job-work, as Wiſdom and Uprightneſs: The Re-coinage was a neceſſary Undertaking; but the Fine paid for it was enormous: And while the Nation was leaſing out to Extortioners and Uſurers, thoſe Blood-ſuckers, and their Confederates of all Ranks and Degrees, acquir'd Eſtates of ſuch a Size, and in ſo ſhort a Time, as, ſince the Diſſolution of the religious Houſes, had never in this Country been ſo acquir'd before.

Nor was this the worſt Conſequence of this extraordinary Practice on a Conſtitution, that now, for the firſt Time, appear'd to have the Symptoms of a conſumptive Habit upon it: For the Succeſs taught other Practitioners to go ſuch Lengths in the ſame way, and to make ſuch Experiments on the Commonwealth, as if they believ'd it was never to be exhauſted; as if Oppreſſion would rather tame than provoke the People; as if the only Uſe of private Property was to feed public Profuſion; and as if by a peculiar Interpretation of the Boaſt in the Panegyric on Mr. Montagu and this Parliament, firſt quoted, namely, That They had laid a good Foundation for Paper Money to ſupply the Place of Silver Coin, all the Functions of the Commonwealth could be diſcharg'd by Paper-Money only. A. D. 1696-7.

Caſe of Sir John Fenwick.

But to return:—For ſome Part of the Time that theſe great Money-Matters were in Agitation, the Caſe of Sir John Fenwick, which had ſomething very alarming in it, and the Proſecution of whom the Court ſeem'd to have much at Heart, was brought before the Parliament:—At whoſe Inſtance, by what Management, and for what Purpoſe, the Courſe of our Narrative will in a good degree explane; tho' for want of more preciſe Documents, not ſo fully as may be wiſh'd.

Sir John, when firſt apprehended at New Romney, had, with a black Lead Pencil, writ a haſty Letter to his Lady, but directed to her Woman; in which he ſaid, Nothing could ſave his Life but the Endeavours of the Lord Carliſle, his Brother, the Family of the Howards, &c. or elſe the ſecuring a Jury: This Letter he gave in charge to Webber, who had accompany'd him; but in its Paſſage to London, it fell into the Hands of the Mayor of Canterbury, who tranſmitted it to the Lords-Juſtices; and the Conſequence was, that Sir John being examin'd by their Excellencies, and ſtoutly denying all that was alledg'd againſt him, the Letter was produc'd, with a Signification, That he was of another Mind when he wrote it; the Surprize of which had ſuch an Effect upon him, that he could not conceal his Dismay and Confuſion, or behave any longer before them but as a Criminal Self-convicted: Upon which, and upon hearing a Bill had been found again him by the Grand-Jury, he was led to petition for a Delay of his Trial, and to enter into a ſort of Treaty with the Court, by the Interpoſition of the Duke of Devonſhire, for his Life: He offering, upon Honour, to reveal all he knew, provided he might have a Pardon, and be excus'd from acting the Part of an Evidence: His Propoſal was taken in writing, and forwarded to the King in Flanders, who, as Biſhop Burnet expreſſes it, "refuſed That, and would have it left to himſelf to judge of the Truth and Importance of the Diſcoveries: So, continues his Lordſhip, He reſolving to caſt himſelf on the King's Mercy, ſent him a Paper, in which, after a bare Account of the Conſultations among the Jacobites (in which he took care to charge none of his own Party) he ſaid, That King James, and thoſe who were employ'd by him, had aſſur'd them, That both the Earls of Shrewſbury and Marlborough, (his Lordſhip might have added Granville Earl of Bath too) the Lord Godolphin, and Admiral Ruſſel, were reconcil'd to him, and were now in his Intereſts, and acting for him. This was a Diſcovery that could ſignify nothing, but to give the King a Jealouſy of thoſe Perſons: For he did not offer the leaſt Shadow or Circumſtance, Enters into a Treaty with the Court.

Burnet's Account of his Confeſſion.

A. D. 1696-7. ſtance, either of Proof or Preſumption, to ſupport this Accuſation. The King, not being ſatisfy'd herewith, ſent an Order for bringing him to a Trial, unleſs he made fuller Diſcoveries: He deſir'd to be further examin'd by the Lords Juſtices, to whom he, being upon Oath, told ſome more Particulars; but he took care to name none of his own Side, but thoſe againſt whom Evidence was already brought, or who were ſafe and beyond Sea: Some few others he named, who were in Matters of leſs Conſequence, that did not amount to High Treaſon: He own'd a Thread of Negotiations, that had paſs'd between them and King James, or the Court of France: He ſaid, the Earl of Aylesbury had gone over to France, and had been admitted to a private Audience of the French King, where he had propos'd the ſending over an Army of 30,000 Men, and had undertaken, that a great Body of Gentlemen and Horſes ſhould be brought to join them: It appear'd by his Diſcoveries, that the Jacobites in England were much divided; [as we have ſeen the Court of St. Germains alſo was, under the Earls of Middleton and Melfort] ſome were call'd Compounders, and others Noncompounders: The Firſt Sort deſir'd Securities from King James, for the Preſervation of the Religion and Liberties of England; whereas the Second Sort were for truſting him upon Diſcretion, without aſking any Terms; putting all in his Power, and relying entirely on his Honour and Generoſity.

Fenwick put all this in writing, upon Aſſurance, that he ſhould not be forc'd to witneſs any Part of it: When that was ſent to the King, all appearing to be ſo trifling, and no other Proof being offer'd for any Part of it, except his own Word, which he had ſtipulated, ſhould not be made uſe of, his Majeſty ſent an Order to bring him to his Trial: But as the King was ſlow in ſending this Order, ſo the Duke of Devonſhire, who had been in the ſecret Management of the Matter, was for ſome Time in the Country: The Lords Juſtices delay'd the Matter till he came to Town: And then the King's coming was ſo near, that it was reſpited till he came over: By theſe Delays, Fenwick gain'd his main Deſign in them, which was to practiſe upon the Witneſſes."

Now it was ſo much the more neceſſary to give the very Words of this Prelate, be-[Tindal.] cauſe a late Writer, who for the general tranſcribes him whole, as if he had told all the Truth, and nothing but the Truth, aſſerts, That it was by the Suggeſtion of the Earl of Monmouth (Mordaunt, afterwards Earl of Peterborough) that he was induc'd to ſet up a Counter-Plot, by impeaching ſeveral of the King's beſt Friends; whereas the Biſhop does not introduce that Nobleman as taking a Part in this Affair, till after Fenwick had made his Confeſſion, as we ſhall ſee in its Place, and is moreover expreſs, That he, Fenwick, ventur'd upon that Practice, only to gain Time.

But if it cannot be admitted, that the Aſſurances he and other Jacobites had receiv'd, concerning the King's beſt Friends, had any ratio- A. D. 1696-7.
nal Foundation, it muſt be concluded, That he was led into that Snare by the King's Anſwer, by which he found, That his Diſcoveries were to be important as well as true, if he expected to live: And having no more Truth to reveal, than had been reveal'd already, he thought it the leaſt criminal Courſe he could take, to bid for his Life at the Expence of Thoſe who could not be hurt.

So extremely miſtaken, however, was he in this Meaſure, that in making ſo many powerful Enemies by it, he ratify'd his own Ruin: And when he found himſelf endanger'd by the Recoil of his own Piece, he had recourſe to thoſe Practices on the Witneſſes, of which we are next to ſpeak.

Thoſe were Porter and Goodman, on whoſe Practices to take off the Witneſſes againſt him diſcover'd by Porter.
Evidence Cooke had been condemn'd, and who having been kept in hand, to be forthcoming againſt all who were preſent at the ſame Meeting, it was obvious to every Body acquainted with the cruel Maxims of Courts, That whenever they were brought forward again, no Practice would be left untry'd to procure a Verdict ſuitable to the Former: For in this Reign, as well as thoſe preceding it, the King's Witneſſes were not to be diſgrac'd; and the Acquital of Fenwick, would have drawn into queſtion the Condemnation of Cooke, and moſt probably indemnify'd all the reſt of the Conſpirators.

Both of them were Men of infamous Characters and no Principle; conſequently, were obvious to Corruption: And as Porter was the moſt conſiderable Perſon of the two, the Attempt was firſt made on him by one Clancy, who made him an Offer of 300 Guineas to bear his Charges into France, of a Bill for 300 more when he was arriv'd, and of a Settlement of 300 l. a Year for his Life: Porter, on the other Hand, reflecting, That if it was worth the while of thoſe concern'd for the Priſoner, to make him ſuch an Offer, it was better worth the while of the Court to make him a larger Conſideration for betraying ſuch a Secret: Accordingly, as Burnet tells the Story, " he hearken'd ſo far to the Propoſition, that he drew thoſe who were in Treaty with him, together with the Lady (Fenwick) herſelf, who CARRY'D the Sum he was to receive to a Meeting, where he had provided Witneſſes who ſhould over-hear all that paſs'd, and ſhould, on a Signal, come in and ſeize them with the Money; which was done; and on a Proſecution the Practice was fully prov'd, and the Perſons concern'd in it were cenſur'd and puniſh'd." This is the Biſhop's Story: But as Porter himſelf related it to the Houſe of Commons, by whom he was requir'd to give it at large, he had the Money of Clancey, not of Lady Fenwick, who was not preſent when it was paid, and who only told him, That what Clancey had propos'd, ſhould certainly be made good: Nor was Lady Fenwick, or any other Perſon beſides Clancey, (of whoſe Conviction, and the Sentence paſs'd upon him, which was to pay a Fine of 500 Marks, to ſtand in the Pillory three Times, and to find Security for his good Behaviour during a Year, an oſtentatious Account was

A. D. 1696-7. was printed in the Gazette, No. 3228) queſtion'd for it.

Soon after Clancey's Trial, which was in October, Goodman diſappear'd, and a Reward of 1000 l. was offer'd by Proclamation to any Perſon or Perſons who ſhould apprehend him; but without Effect; ſo well he had taken his Meaſures, or ſuch Care had been taken of him, that he could not be heard of: And now but one Witneſs remaining, the Priſoner had ſome Reaſon to believe, That he was ſafe.

But tho' he was out of the Reach of the Law, it was reſolv'd that he ſhould not be out of the Reach of the Law-Makers: And the Method of Proſecution pitch'd upon, was by Attainder, which, ſays the Hiſtorian of his own Times, (who on this Occaſion becomes an Apologiſt proſeſs'd, becauſe a profeſs'd Undertaker in the Job) had been always practis'd amongſt us, at all Times; and he gives us a great Variety of Inſtances out of the Records of former Reigns: But then he admits, theſe Attainders had been often unjuſt, and as often revers'd for that Reaſon: And the very Truth is, That moſt of his own Inſtances bear Witneſs in behalf of the Subject againſt the Uſe of ſuch an Engine of Oppreſſion in a free Country, becauſe ariſing like This, from the Violence of the Times, and generally apply'd to iniquitous Purpoſes: Beſides, in his own Hiſtory of the Reformation, he pronounces, That the attainting Perſons in Cuſtody, without bringing them to Trial, could not be enough condemn'd, as being a Breach of the moſt ſacred and unalterable Rules of Juſtice.

Burnet's Plea for Attainders.

Fol. 359, 360.

But his Lordſhip had not only forgot what he had writ on that Occaſion, but alſo what he had writ in his former Volume of the Hiſtory of his own Times, concerning Tortures as us'd in Scotland, and of the terrible Idea conceiv'd of the Duke of York, for taking a ſort of Delight in inflicting them: For in order to ſet the better Colour on this Bill, he drops ſome Expreſſions which ſeem to favour the (f) Expediency of uſing them: And having laid down two Rules for all Bills of this Nature, which he preſumes to be comprehenſive enough to include the whole of the Proceding; namely, 1. That the Matter ſhould be of a very extraordinary Nature: And, 2dly, That the Fact ought to be ſo evidently true, that tho' a Court of Law could not proceede upon it, yet no Man could raiſe in himſelf a Doubt concerning it, takes it for granted, that he has effectually juſtify'd himſelf and his Friends to all Poſterity:—Whether with Law and Juſtice on his Side, or againſt Both, let the Sequel demonſtrate.

The Perſon who was the Inſtrument of bringing the Affair before the Houſe of Commons, was Admiral Ruſſel, who took an Opportunity to acquaint the Houſe, That his Majeſty had given Leave to lay before the Houſe ſeveral Papers, in the Nature of Informations, of Sir John Fenwick, in which He, and ſeveral other Perſons of Quality, were reflected on, and deſir'd they might be read. And made it his Requeſt, That he might have an Opportunity to juſtify himſelf, or in caſe he did not, he might fall under the Cenſure of the Houſe. Mr. Secretary Trumbal then made an Offer of producing the Papers, which, being call'd for, were produc'd accordingly and read: After which it was order'd, That Sir John Fenwick ſhould be brought immediately before them; and that no Perſon ſhould, in the mean Time, ſpeak with him, or give or receive any Paper from him. Thus the Juſtification of Admiral Ruſſel, and the Reſt, ſeem'd to be the only Point in view: But when the Priſoner was brought to the Bar, he was requir'd by the Speaker, in the Name of the Houſe, to make a full and ample Diſcovery of all he knew concerning the Deſigns and Practices of the Enemies of the Government; and his Anſwer was ſuch as became a Man in his Circumſtances, viz. That he did not know but what he ſaid might hurt himſelf; and therefore he deſir'd ſome Security; in which caſe he was willing to tell the Full of all he knew. This the Houſe would not engage for; but as the King had done before, gave him to underſtand, That the beſt way to obtain this Favour, was to deal ingenuouſly with them: But Sir John, it ſeems, had no Opinion of the Candour of a Majority; and for that Reaſon, it may be preſum'd, kept on the Reſerve as before; ſaying, He was in the Hands of the Law:—He was apprehenſive of the King's Diſpleaſure:—He had acquainted his Majeſty fully with all he knew:—He was beſet with Dangers:—He deſir'd the Houſe to conſider the Hardſhip of his Caſe:—He was unwilling to offend the King:—He was unwilling to offend the Houſe:—Neither Apologies or Remonſtrances, however, would be accepted in lieu of Informations:—He was commanded to withdraw:—And it was debated, Whether he ſhould be made acquainted with their having the Informations he had already given before them:—Whether any Menaces ſhould be made uſe of to extort the Truth from him:—And whether his Majeſty's Conſent, already given to this Examination, ſhould be imparted to him:—But all theſe Motions were over-rul'd: The Firſt, becauſe it was ſaid, he would then be govern'd in his Anſwers by theſe Papers only: The Second, becauſe it was thought unfair to force a Confeſſion from him: And the Third, becauſe it was thought inconſiſtent with the Privileges of the Houſe.—When, therefore, he was call'd in again, and requir'd to ſatisfy the Houſe, the Points urg'd which he declines.

A. D. [illegible] Feb. [illegible] formations [illegible] ſted in [illegible] Cenſure of the Houſe. Ruſſel

Sir John knew he before the Houſe, and requir'd to ſatisfy all he knew.

(f) Viz. "The Legiſlature was, indeed, bound to obſerve Juſtice and Equity, as much, if not more, than the inferior Courts; becauſe the ſuperior Court ought to ſet an Example to all others: But they might ſee Cauſe to paſs over Forms, as Occaſion ſhould require. This was the more reaſonable amongſt us, becauſe there was no Nation in the World beſides England, that had not recourſe to Torture when the Evidence was probable but defective: That was a mighty Reſtraint, and ſtruck a Terror into all People: And the freeſt Government, both antient and modern thought they could not ſubſiſt without it, &c.".

A. D. 1696-7. urg'd by the Speaker were, That this being the proper Place of Enquiry into what related to the King and the Government, he had no Reaſon to apprehend his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure: That in caſe he dealt candidly by the Houſe, he had no Reaſon to apprehend he ſhould ſuffer any thing by it, for nobody had ſuffer'd who had ſo dealt by it: That it was in his Power to deſerve the Favour of the Houſe: That the Houſe requir'd him to make a full Diſcovery:—And that this was the laſt Time the Houſe would make that Requiſition.

Some other Altercations paſs'd between the Chair and the Priſoner, but pretty much to the ſame Effect: And upon the Iſſue the Latter declar'd, That not being very good at ſpeaking, nor able to make uſe of his Memory ſo ſuddenly, in caſe he might have a little Time, he would do what the Houſe pleaſed to command him.

Nor was the Requeſt unreaſonable, tho' the Majority affected to think ſo: For he was told, The Enemies of the King and of the Nation, ought to be diſcover'd as ſoon as poſſible: And this being a Matter within his own Knowledge, the Houſe did not think fit to give him Time: But if they found by his Diſcovery, that he dealt candidly and ingenuouſly with them, and told them as much as he could recollect, they would conſider of his Requeſt of giving him Time for the reſt. Finding himſelf thus preſs'd, he gave the Houſe to underſtand, That the Anſwer to all the Informations he had hitherto given, in order to merit a Pardon and an Exemption from turning Evidence, had been, That they were not ſatisfactory: And therefore he perſiſted in demanding the Security of the Houſe; that he might not be told at laſt, That all he had ſaid was not ſatisfactory.—The Reſult of all was, That he was directed to comply with the Pleaſure of the Houſe, or withdraw: He choſe the Latter: Upon which it was reſolv'd, (g) That the Papers read this Morning, As Sir John Fenwick's Informations, reflecting on the Fidelity of ſeveral Noblemen, divers Members of that Houſe, and Others, only by Hearſay, were falſe and ſcandalous, and a Contrivance to undermine the Government, and create Jealouſies between the King and his Subjects, in order to ſtifle the Conſpiracy: And a Motion being ſoon after made, For Leave to bring in a Bill to attaint him of High Treaſon, a warm Debate enſued, which ended in a Diviſion of the Houſe, when it appear'd, that the Queſtion was carry'd in the Affirmative by no leſs than 179 Voices againſt 61.

A Vote of Cenſure paſs'd on his Information.

A Bill of Attainder order'd.

The Attorney and Solicitor Generals, that is to ſay, Trevor and Hawles, (the Latter of whom had taken ſo much Pains, in print, to expoſe the hard Uſage which Lord Ruſſel, Colonel Sydney, &c. had receiv'd from the Violence of the Times in the late Reigns) were order'd to bring in the ſaid Bill: On the Third Day after it was brought in, and having been read for the firſt Time, occaſion'd another fierce Debate, which laſted ſeveral Hours; and in the Courſe of which one Mr. Manley, being ſo far tranſported as to ſay, "That it would not be the firſt Time Peo- "ple had repented their making their Court "to the Government, at the Hazard of the "Liberties of the People." Such was the Clamour rais'd againſt him, that, notwithſtanding all the Qualifications he could urge, he was, upon the Queſtion, committed to the Tower, as Mr. Coke had been in the preceding Reign; from whence he could no otherwiſe be enlarg'd than by Petition, acknowledging an Offence, begging Pardon, &c. So ſcrupulouſly were Forms obſerv'd when a Complement was to be paid to the Court, at a Time when a Rule was laid down, That they ought to be diſpens'd with in the Caſe of a Subject, whoſe Fortune, Life and Honour were at Stake! After which, it is ſcarce neceſſary to ſpecify, That the Iſſue of this Debate no otherwiſe differ'd from the Former, than as the Numbers were different; for now the Yeas were 196, and the Noes 104: What follow'd were certain Orders, That the Priſoner ſhould have a Copy of the Bill, and the Uſe of Pen and Ink; to which, at his Requeſt made by Letter to the Speaker, an additional Order was made on the Morrow, That he might have Leave to confer with his Council and Solicitor alone, which the Keeper of Newgate had deny'd him: The Council he nam'd in his Letter, were Sir Francis Pemberton, (formerly Lord Chief Juſtice) Sir Thomas Powis, and Sir Bartholomew Shower: But when he afterwards apply'd by Petition to be heard by his Council at the Bar of the Houſe, they granted him but Two; and whereas he alledg'd in his ſaid Petition, That they had many weighty Reaſons to offer againſt the ſaid Bill, and the Prayer of it was, That they might be heard againſt paſſing it, They put a material Change upon him, in the wording their Order upon it: For it is therein ſaid, That Sir John Fenwick be allow'd Two Council at the Bar of the Houſe to make his Defence: And this was follow'd by two other Orders, That ſuch of his Majeſty's Council as were not Members, ſhould attend on the Morrow, to produce the Evidence againſt him; and that Sir John Fenwick ſhould be brought to the Bar: So that in the very Inſtant of granting him Council, an Expedient was found to render them of little or no Uſe to him; and to ſurprize him into an irregular Trial for his Life, when the Drift of his Petition apparently was to obviate, the Snare. That, however, his Council ſhould not be aware of the Conſequence of two ſuch Orders, when conſider'd conjunctively, and ſhould undertake to manage ſo nice a Point at ſo ſhort a Warning, is not ſufficiently to be wonder'd at: To offer their Reaſons againſt the Bill, according

Manley, a Member, committed to the Tower for giving Offence to the Houſe.

Fundamental Errors committed by Sir John's Council.

A. D. 1696-7.

(g) Note, in the Books ſet forth in the Year 1702, under the Title of, The Proceedings againſt Sir John Fenwick, &c. both this Vote, and many other material Circumſtances, are not mention'd.

A. D. 1696-7. cording to the Prayer of the Petition, possibly was but reasonable: But to attend in Defence of the Man, according to the Letter of the Order, was certainly one of the greatest Mistakes that ever was made: For they could not enter upon his Defence, without submitting to a Trial: And they could not but foresee, that in such case, the same Majority which could be induc'd from Party-Prejudice or Connection, Duty of Office, or any political Refinement of any Sort, to give their Sanction to the Whole of any such Proceding, would scarce boggle at any Part of it: Their Duty then, it certainly was, to insist, on the Prisoner's Behalf, That his Cause was already before his Country in the ordinary Way; and that the Issue of a Bill found by the Grand Jury, was in the same way only pleadable before the Petit Jury: As, also, when they found their own Arguments, and the Prisoner's Birthright over-rul'd by a Vote of the House, to have interested the Lords in his Behalf, by a solemn Appeal to them, Whether the Commons, who could not examine upon Oath, could act as a Court in a capital Case? And by as solemn a Prayer, That the Prisoner might have the Benefit of their Sovereign Jurisdiction.

But to procede: When the Morrow came, and it appear'd, That Curiosity had drawn together Numbers of People, it was thought proper, as a preparatory Measure, to have the Speaker's Chamber, the Lobby, &c. clear'd of all Strangers; which was done accordingly, with an Exception to such of the Lords as were there to attend the Debate, and whose Presence was conniv'd at.

Debate concerning the Mace.

But before the Prisoner and his Council were admitted, a Debate arose on the following Difficulty, Whether the Serjeant with the Mace ought to stand by the Prisoner at the Bar, or whether the Mace ought to lye upon the Table? The Courtiers insisted, That the Mace should be at the Bar, because the Prisoner was in the Custody of the Serjeant: But the Opposers maintain'd, He would nevertheless be in the Serjeant's Custody, tho' the Mace was on the Table: And farther, That if the Mace was at the Bar, all the Members would be muzzled: That the Bill could not be read unless the Mace was at the Table, &c. The Courtiers would not, however, recede from their Point, tho' they could not refute their Adversaries; and for an Expedient it was at last admitted, That the Mace might be at the Bar while the Prisoner stood there: And that if any Member had any thing to say, he need only desire, That he and his Council might withdraw; for then they must withdraw of course, and of course the Mace must be laid upon the Table, when every Member would find himself at Liberty as before: Then as to the reading of the Bill, it was also agreed, That it should be read to the Prisoner, as the Charge against him, which He and his Council were to reply to: But then it should not be esteem'd a second reading of the Bill, according to the Forms of the House: What follow'd was the bringing the Prisoner to the Bar, together with the Council for and against him: After which the Speaker, addressing himself to Sir John, said to him in Substance, That the House having been inform'd, That he had been engag'd in a horrid Conspiracy against the Life of his Majesty, and for bringing in a French Force to invade the Kingdom, of which he had been indicted, to the End that he might not go unpunish'd, in case he was guilty, had order'd in a Bill to attaint him for High Treason, which had been once read, and which would be read to him; after which the Evidence against him would be heard, and he would have Liberty to make his Defence: That the House, as a Favour, had granted him the Assistance of Council, which they expected he would make a good Use of: That he was also to acquaint his said Council, That the House did reckon their own Prudence would so guide them, as not to give any just Offence to the House: And that they would not be allow'd to question the Power of Parliaments to pass Bills of Attainder, of which the House were more proper Judges than any private Person.

Order thereon.

Fenwick brought to the Bar.

A. D. 16[illegible]. The Speaker instructs the Council for the Prisoner.

The Bill was then read, and tho' an Original, not being in our Statute-Books, deserves to be remember'd here.

The Bill.

"Whereas Sir John Fenwick, Bart. was, upon the Oaths of George Porter, Esq; and Cardel Goodman, Gent. at the Sessions of Oyer and Terminer held for the City of London, on the 28th Day of May, 1696, indicted of High Treason, in compassing and imagining the Death and Destruction of his Majesty, and adhering to his Majesty's Enemies, by consulting and agreeing with several Persons (whereof some have been already attainted, and others not yet brought to their Trial for their said Treasons) at several Meetings, to send Robert Charnock, since attainted and executed for High Treason, in conspiring to assassinate his Majesty's sacred Person, (whom God long preserve) to the late King James in France, to incite and encourage the French King to invade this Kingdom with an armed Force, by promising to join with, and assist, him with Men and Arms upon such Invasion: And whereas the said Sir John Fenwick did obtain his Majesty's Favour, to have his Trial delay'd from Time to Time, upon his repeated Promises of making an ingenuous and full Confession of all his Knowledge, of any Design or Conspiracy against his Majesty's Person or Government, and of the Persons therein concern'd: And whereas he has so far abus'd his Majesty's great Clemency and Indulgence therein, that, instead of making such Confession, he hath contriv'd and fram'd false and scandalous Papers as his Informations, reflecting on the Fidelity of several noble Peers, divers Members of the House of Commons, and others, only by Hearsay; and contriving thereby to undermine the Government, and create Jealousies between the King and his Subjects, and to stifle the real Conspiracy: And whereas Cardel Goodman, one of the Witnesses against the said Sir John Fenwick, to prove the said Treason, lately, and since the several Times appointed for the

A.D. 1696-7. the Trial of the ſaid Sir John Fenwick, at one of which Times the ſaid Sir John Fenwick had been accordingly try'd, had it not been for the Expectation of the ſaid Diſcoveries ſo often promis'd by him, is withdrawn; ſo that the ſaid Cardel Goodman cannot be had, to give Evidence upon any Trial; Be it enacted by the King's moſt excellent Majeſty, by and with the Advice and Conſent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, and by the Authority of the ſame, That the ſaid Sir John Fenwick be, and is hereby convicted and attainted of High Treaſon, and ſhall ſuffer the Pains of Death, and incur all Forfeitures as a Perſon attainted of High Treaſon."

The Speaker, in the next place, call'd upon the King's Council, Serjeant Gould and the Recorder Lovel, to open the Evidence they had to prove the Suggeſtions of the Bill, which were, in ſhort, no other than theſe, That the Priſoner had been indicted of High Treaſon, on the Oaths of Porter and Goodman: That to procraſtinate his Trial, he had amus'd the Miniſters with falſe and ſcandalous Papers, which he had call'd Informations: And that Goodman, one of the ſaid Witneſſes, was withdrawn. Gould, however, in the fulſome Cant of the Bar, enlarg'd on all the Circumſtances which conſtituted the Treaſon, and which, according to Law, ſhould have been prov'd by living Witneſſes: And having juſt hinted, that his Trial had been delay'd, in conſequence of his frequent Aſſurances of making a Diſcovery, infer'd from the Attempt made on Porter by Clancey, under the Countenance of Lady Fenwick, which he took care to recite very circumſtantially, that Goodman was withdrawn by Contrivance to take off the Proſecution: And, after throwing in theſe Words, And thus far we SUSPECT Sir John Fenwick may be concern'd, mention'd the Contents of the Priſoner's intercepted Letter, and then concluded with ſaying, "Theſe Things we ſhall humbly hope to prove according to our Duty, and then, according to the Order of the Houſe, leave Sir John to make his Defence:" But firſt Mr. Recorder Lovel was to be heard; and he more notably aſſerted, That the Indictment found againſt the Priſoner, was agreable to the late Act for regulating Trials; for it had been found on the Oaths of two Witneſſes to the ſame Treaſon: That Cooke had been convicted and condemn'd for the ſame Treaſon, by the ſame Witneſſes: That in the Matter ſworn againſt Cooke, it appear'd that Fenwick was equally concern'd; and that He did withdraw himſelf, and fled.

Harangues of the King's Council, &c.

Such was the Subſtance of their Harangues: And the next Step they took was to deſire, that one Baker, the King's Solicitor in that Cauſe, might be call'd in to give an Account of the ſaid Indictment: And now it was that the Priſoner's Council became (tho' but in Part) ſenſible of the Error they had committed in attending at the Bar, in conſequence of an Order ſo inſidious, which ſeeming to correſpond with the Priſoner's Prayer, was nevertheleſs ſo repugnant to it: For Sir Thomas Powis objected to the Method of proceeding propos'd by the King's Council: Said it was Matter of Surprize to them: That they did not find their Client had receiv'd the leaſt Notice of any ſuch Purpoſe, or to prepare himſelf by Counter-Evidence, if he had any: That all they came prepar'd for, was to give their Reaſons againſt the Bill, &c. Sir Bartholomew Shower alſo ſpoke to the ſame Effect, with this Addition, That as Sir John had no Notice to provide his Witneſſes, ſo neither had he any way to compel them to come: That as to the Poſſibility of their being ready to make his Defence againſt Matter of Fact, they had no Notice of the Order for bringing him to the Bar that Day, till Nine or Ten o'Clock the Night before: And that as to the Suggeſtions of the Bill, namely, That there was an Indictment: That Witneſſes had been ſworn: That one was withdrawn: That their Client had prevaricated in his Confeſſion, they were ready ſo far to procede in his Defence.

They proceed to call Evidence, which is oppos'd by the Council for the Priſoner.

A.D. 1696-7.

This Diſagreement of the Council, occaſion'd an Order for their withdrawing; and the Matter came of courſe to be debated by the Houſe, which Debate was open'd by Sir Thomas Lyttleton on the Court Side, who inferring, That the Senſe of the Orders of the Houſe, and the Method of proceding propos'd by the King's Council, were of a Piece; thereby acknowledg'd, in effect, That the ſaid Orders, and the Prayer of the Priſoner's Petition, were not ſo: For, ſaid He, "Sir John's Petition was to be heard downright againſt the Bill: If it was your Intention to hear him to That, and to That only, I conceive you would not have worded your Anſwer as you did."

They are order'd to withdraw, and a Debate enſues.

But tho' an Artifice ſo unbecoming the high Pretentions of the Houſe, and ſo unfit to be employ'd againſt a Subject who had, in ſome Meaſure, thrown himſelf on the Mercy of the Government, was thus ſtrongly indicated, nobody ſtood up to expoſe that Artifice, or to ſhew how hard it was to inſiſt on the Priſoner's joining Iſſue in a Proceding which he was ſo unfairly drawn into: On the contrary, Lord Norreys, who anſwer'd Sir Thomas Lyttleton, overlooking the Order in anſwer to the Prayer of the Petition, admitted the Order to the King's Council for producing Evidence, was fairly worded; and only pleaded, That the Priſoner had not receiv'd timely Notice of: By which Means the Courtiers carry'd their great Point at once; Of having the Trial before them, without the Trouble of even putting the Queſtion upon it: And the whole Debate of the Day (which was extremely long, and diſcover'd a great Diverſity of Opinions, both as to the Propriety of the Bill, and the Manner of proceding upon it) terminated in theſe two Queſtions, viz. 1ſt. That Sir John Fenwick be allow'd farther Time to produce Witneſſes in his Defence, againſt the Charge of High Treaſon; and that he give in a Liſt of his Witneſſes to the Speaker: And, 2dly, That the Council, in managing the Evidence againſt him, be allow'd

The Queſtion put'd in the Affirmative.

A. D. 1696-7. allow'd to produce Evidence touching the Allegations in the Bill, and the Treaſons for which he ſtood indicted: Both of which paſs'd in the Affirmative; and an Order was made for bringing Sir John again to the Bar three Days afterwards.

Accordingly, on that Day, he was again brought up; but before he was admitted, the Speaker put the Houſe in Mind of the Letter which he, the Priſoner, had writ to his Lady after he was taken; and deſir'd to know whether it was their Pleaſure, that the ſaid Letter ſhould be produced before Sir John Fenwick, and whether the Evidence to be given by Mr. Vernon, (Clerk of the Council) ſhould be given while Sir John was at the Bar: Which, on putting the Queſtion, paſs'd in the Affirmative.

They proceed to the Merits of the Cauſe.

The Priſoner and the Council on both Sides being then brought in, Mr. Serjeant Gould proceed to open the Charge againſt him, as contain'd in the Indictment: Said the ſame Matters were alſo contain'd in the Bill, and prepar'd the Houſe for the Teſtimony which they had to produce in Support of it: The Indictment itſelf was then produced: After which the incorruptibly-honeſt Captain Porter told the ſame Story before the Houſe, which he had told ſo often in the Courts below, and had his Memory refreſh'd, and his Evidence pointed againſt the Priſoner, by the Help of ſuch leading Queſtions from the Chair, as are uſually propounded from the Bench in the ordinary Courſe of Trials; and in Aid of which, Gould alſo aſk'd, Whether Cooke was preſent at thoſe traiterous Conſultations mention'd by Porter? Whether Goodman was preſent when the Indictment was preferr'd at the Old-Baily? And then would have proceded to the Affair of Clancey's tempering with him to abſcond, &c. but was interrupted by Sir J. Powis, who inſiſted, That in Caſe of Life, and in Caſe where a Law was prepar'd to be made, ſubſequent to the Fact, to condemn a Man to Death, ſtronger Evidence was requiſite, than when a Man was to be try'd by a Law in being: Whereas, what they were about to offer, was no Evidence at all, nor could be admitted any where: And whereas a Wife could not be a Witneſs for her Huſband, it was moſt reaſonable, that no Action of hers ſhould be brought in Evidence againſt him. Sir B. Shower alſo enforc'd the ſame Point; appealed to the Recorder (Lovel) whether even the Old-Baily-Practice aforded any ſuch Precedent: And further ſaid, "Beſides; I have one Objection more: There is no ſuch Thing alledg'd in the Bill: And the Order is, That they ſhould produce Evidence as to the Allegations in the Bill, and the Treaſons in the Indictment; but I never heard of any Order, that they ſhould produce Evidence concerning the carrying away of any Witneſs: And 'tis not alledg'd, That Goodman is withdrawn by Sir John Fenwick's Privity: As to Porter's being temper'd with, there is no Colour of Suggeſtion in the Bill: So that this neither being in the Bill, nor being Evidence in Law, we hope you will not admit it."

Porter's General Evidence.

He is call'd upon to give the Particulars of Clancey's tempering with him, which is oppos'd by the Priſoner's Council.

Gould, on the other Hand, in his Reply, A. D. maintain'd, ſhrewdly enough, That it was an Allegation in the Bill, That Goodman was withdrawn: And, "the Uſe we make of This, ſaid He, is to let us in, to give an Account of what Goodman hath ſworn, and to entitle us to read his Examination:" And Lovel, from the Old-Baily Practice, which had been appeal'd to by Shower, took occaſion to add, "That even in criminal Caſes, the Courts are not ſo bound up to poſitive Evidence, but that the Evidence of Circumſtances, with ſome Perſons to corroborate them, is admitted:" This did not, however, end the Diſpute: The Priſoner's Council rejoin'd; and thoſe for the King were indulg'd with a Sur-Rejoinder: After which, the Parties on both Sides being order'd to withdraw, the Houſe took up the Debate; and after ſome farther Loſs of Time therein, the Queſtion was call for, and paſs'd in the Affirmative.

and allow'd by the Houſe.

The Conſequence was, That Porter was call'd upon for his ſecond Narrative, which, by the Help of ſeveral Interrogatories, he went thro' with: The Record of Clancey's Conviction was read in the next Place; and then one Roe was produc'd to teſtify, That Dighton, the Priſoner's Solicitor, had made him an Offer of 100 l. a Year, to furniſh Matter to diſcredit Goodman's Teſtimony; who having given in his Teſtimony accordingly, finiſh'd all in theſe Words, "But I don't know any Thing whereby I could have diſcredited Mr. Goodman:" And yet Biſhop Burnet himſelf, who ſays, no doubt with an Eye to this very Piece of Evidence, That firſt they gather'd Matter to defame him, (Goodman) finiſhes the ſame Sentence thus, in which his Courſe of Life furniſh'd them very copiouſly.

The King's Council would then have produc'd the King's Proclamation for apprehending Goodman, as a Proof that he was withdrawn; but that was over-ruled by the Houſe: And their next Point was, to bring forward Goodman's Examination, as taken by Mr. Vernon: But this was warmly oppos'd by both the Priſoner's Council: Powis affirming, in the moſt poſitive Manner, That the Council on the other Side very well knew, That a Depoſition taken when the Party affected by it was not preſent to croſs-examine the Depoſer, could not be admitted in a Caſe of Five Shillings Value: And Shower not only maintaining the ſame Thing, but putting the Houſe in Mind, That if they were not bound by the Rules of inferiour Courts, where the ſaid Depoſition could, on no Account or Pretence whatſoever, be admitted, They were nevertheleſs bound by the eternal and unalterable Rules of Juſtice, which ſuch an Admiſſion would be wholly inconſiſtent with. Gould and the Recorder, however, reply'd: The Former pleaded, That the Caſe was an extraordinary Caſe, and therefore it was brought into Parliament; and preſum'd Goodman was withdrawn by the Contrivance of the Priſoner; therefore his Depoſition was to be read: And the Latter admitting, That in Debate on admitting Goodman's Examination as Evidence.

A.D. 1696-7. civil Cases, or Cases of Property, the Practice was not allow'd, contended for it in criminal Cases; and in this particularly, because in that Place they were not to be ty'd up to formal Evidence. Powis then rejoin'd, That the Recorder had produc'd no one Authority or Precedent for the Distinction he had made: And Shower having observ'd, That the Juryman's Oath was the same in criminal as in civil Cases, proceded as follows: "Now I would know whether the Form of an Oath, which the Wisdom of our Ancestors has thought fit to use for 1000 Years past, be not the most proper Direction to inform us, What shall be Evidence? Evidence prima Facie must be Evidence of living Persons: I am speaking for the Life of a Man, and for maintaining the Rules of Law, which I hope shall continue for ever; and one of those Rules is, That the Examination of a Person that is absent, shall not be read to supply his Testimony." This, one would have thought, might have abash'd the most confirm'd Countenance: But the Recorder was case-harden'd, it seems; for he persisted in his Distinction between civil and criminal Cases; urg'd, That in some of the latter Kind, as for clipping and coining, circumstantial Proofs, by Tools, &c. was sufficient for Conviction; and concluded in these Words, "We do not offer this Evidence to be as concluding Evidence as if Goodman was here, but as corroborating Evidence of what Captain Porter had said: If it did wholly depend upon this Evidence, it may be, it might have no great Weight: But since there is other Evidence, viva voce, and since you have been pleas'd to order us to lay before you all the Evidence, we humbly offer it to you, and pray it may be read."

The Council order'd to withdraw, and the Matter debated by the House.

The several Parties were then requir'd to withdraw once more, (at the Instance of the same Mr. Manley, who had been just before committed to the Tower, for making what was thought too large an Use of the Freedom of Speech, clam'd by the House as their unquestionable Privilege) having been first ask'd by the Speaker, Whether they insisted on their several Pleas? And having severally declar'd, That they did insist upon them; and Manley proceeded to justify the Requisition he had made, by saying, amongst other

Mr. Manley. Things, "God forbid we should suppose ourselves out of all the Rights of the Law:—I never heard any Gentleman of the Long Robe, before the learned Serjeant at the Bar, assert, That an Examination before a Justice of the Peace, could be read against any Man for his Life:—'Tis known to all who have look'd into the A, B, C, of the Law, that it was ne-

Mr. Sloane. ver practis'd."—One Sloane, another Lawyer, then quoted the Lord Chief Justice Hale for an Authority, That as a Justice had Power to examine Offenders and Informers, so those Examinations, if the Party were dead or absent, might be given in Evidence; and drew his Inference as unfairly, as we shall find he made his Citation, in these Words, "So this withdrawing, by the Instigation of Sir John Fenwick, is a Presumption that what He (Goodman) swears is true."—Sir Richard Temple then deny'd the Fact, without med- A.D. 1696-7. dling with the Authority: Gave it as the Opinion of Lord Chief-Justice Vaughan, That tho' Parliaments were not bound by the Forms of Law, They were by the Rules of Law: And concluded with observing, That in the worst of Times, when Juries were laid aside, and Lord Mordaunt was try'd for Treason before the High Court of Justice, this Species of Evidence was not allow'd: But Sir T. Lyttleton (a Lord of the Treasury) having droll'd on what Temple had said, with a most unsuitable and therefore inexcusable Pleasantry, and triumph'd much on the Precept produced by Sloane from Judge Hale, insisted on reading the Examination, That the House might have as much Evidence as they could get, if they could not get all on which the Jury had found their Bill. On the other Hand, Mr. Har- Mr. Harcourt. court not only declar'd, That if the House were to pick all the Absurdities out of the Trials in the late Reigns, the Number would not excede those which the King's Council had endeavour'd to impose on the House that Day; but added, with great Shrewdness, That if there was a certain Rule for making use of Evidence in the Absence of the Party who gave it, there was no Occasion for an extraordinary Proceding in Parliament. Sir Edward Seymour, on the same Side, also said, That Bills of Attainder had been revers'd, because the Parliament who pass'd them, had not proceded according to the Rules of Law; and desir'd to be inform'd, Whether the House had ever receiv'd an Affidavit for Evidence? Mr. James Montagu again thought the Point so plain, that it would not bear a Debate: What Harcourt had suggested, That if an Examination was Evidence, the Cause might have been try'd by the Courts below, appear'd to him but the Shadow of an Objection: "For, said He, tho' it is Evidence, there are not Two Witnesses; and the Courts below require Two Witnesses in case of Treason." Thus it was Evidence and not Evidence: It was not Evidence in the Courts below, and yet it was Evidence in Parliament: Judge Hales writ only to direct the Practice of those Courts, and yet his Authority ought to be receiv'd in Parliament: For Mr. Montagu proceded still in these Words, "It would be admitted in case of Felony, and would be sufficient where two Witnesses are not requir'd expressly by the Law: And I can tell you, upon my Reputation, I have seen it done several Times: The learned Gentleman (Sloane) tells you, That my Lord Chief-Justice Hale's Opinion is so, and that is grounded upon an Act of Parliament; and that I think is of greater Authority than any Judge's Opinion: And therefore I think that Objection will vanish."

Sir Richard Temple.

Sir T. Lyttleton.

Sir Ed. Seymour.

Mr. James Montagu.

Such Fallacies can Lawyers maintain upon their Reputation! It was now apparent, that what Sloane had quoted from Judge Hale, regarded Felony only, and consequently could have no relation to Treason: And accordingly Mr. Robert Harley stood up, and spoke as follows.

"I

A. D. 1696-7. Mr. Robert Harley.

" I look upon this Matter under your Debates, to be of the greateſt Conſequence to the Lives of the Subjects of England, that poſſibly can come before you: Gentlemen have given you ſeveral Reaſons for reading theſe Depoſitions: One, that it was my Lord Chief-Juſtice Hale's Opinion; Another, that there is an act of Parliament for it: Now, I think, it would be proper to join Iſſue in theſe two Points: If any Act of Parliament can be produced for this, then the Debate will be at an End; but if there be an Act poſitive againſt it, then I hope you will not receive it: And if my Lord Chief-Juſtice Hale's Book have not one Word relating to this, then I hope that will be no Argument: He begins his Chapter of Evidence, and ſays, That the Evidence to the Jury, in Caſes of Treaſon, muſt be two Witneſſes; and then comes to the Caſes of Felony: But is that any Debate before us? And he tells you, That Informations might be taken of the Perſon himſelf, but that was not by the Common Law, but was allow'd of by particular Acts of Parliament: And then tells you, That his Information, and Depoſitions before the Juſtice, were to be admitted, (but he was to be by:) But is this any thing to lead you? Have they brought any Statute that tells you, There muſt not be two Witneſſes in this Caſe? If you will take Notice of a Statute, you muſt take Notice of a Statute that is in point: If any Man ſuffers by one Witneſs, I believe all the World muſt ſay, He ſuffers unjuſtly: I think 'tis of the greateſt Conſequence to admit of Affidavits: Here it is, that the Boundaries are eſtabliſh'd for the Lives and Liberties of Mankind: And this is an Obſervation that is found in Hiſtory, That thoſe that have broke their Bounds down, it hath return'd upon them to their Prejudice: Let us not out of Hatred or Zeal againſt a guilty Man, loſe our own (b) Innocence."

This was plain, ſound, parliamentary Senſe, deliver'd in a proper, parliamentary way: And as far as it went, was both argumentative and concluſive: But Sir Robert Rich, who ſpoke next, objected, That tho' the laſt Treaſon-Act was expreſs for Two Witneſſes, the ſame Act was altogether as expreſs, That the Proceedings in Parliament, on treaſonable Matters, ſhould not be ty'd up by it: And then, ſteering a middle Courſe between thoſe who were for ſubſtituting an Affidavit in the Place of Evidence, and thoſe who were wholly for rejecting it, ſaid, That tho' it did not weigh ſo much as if Goodman was preſent, he could not be perſuaded to think it weigh'd nothing: That to make a common Practice of reading Affidavits, might be of ill Conſequence: That if the preſent Caſe had been a Caſe of ſmall Conſequence, he ſhould not have been for reading the Affidavit in queſtion: That he did not aim at Sir John Fenwick's Blood, but the Safety of the King and the Government: That, therefore, he could not refuſe any Evidence in ſuch a Caſe, tho' never ſo ſmall, &c. A. D. 1696-7. Sir Robert Rich.

Mr. Pelham, with ſome Bitterneſs, then expreſs'd his Surpriſe, That the Subject ſhould be put on a worſe Footing in Parliament, than he found himſelf upon in Weſtminſter-Hall; and ſaid, That if poſitive Laws requiring two Witneſſes, were to be diſpens'd with on any Occaſion, the King's Council might as well inſiſt on their hearing any Evidence of any kind whatſoever. Mr. Pelham.

Lord Cutts, on the other Hand, call'd This, arguing againſt the Juriſdiction of the Houſe; obſerv'd, there were ſeveral Sorts of Laws, and among the reſt the Law of Parliament; and concluded in theſe Words, " The Matter was in a Courſe of Law; but upon an extraordinary Accident, and for extraordinary Reaſons, 'tis brought before you: The Accident is, the withdrawing of a Witneſs; and the Reaſon is, the ſaving of the King, the Government, yourſelves and Poſterity." Lord Cutts.

This call'd up the famous Parliament-Orator of thoſe Times, Mr. John How, whoſe very Expreſſions, for that Reaſon, if for no other, ought to be remember'd: " Either, ſays he, it (the Paper in diſpute) amounts to a Proof of High-Treaſon, againſt Sir John Fenwick, or it ſignifies nothing to you: If it be intended to weigh any thing, I can never agree to the reading of it; for it is only a Hearſay, brought to convict a Man that is try'd for his Life: But there has been one thing often urg'd, which ſeems to weigh more than all the Reaſons offer'd; and that is, your Enemies will have an Advantage, and your Government is at Stake: I don't take that to be ſo much an Argument of the Strength of the one, as of the Weakneſs and Neglect of the other: But, however, we ſit not here to patch the Failings of the one, by an unwarrantable Proſecution againſt the others: As to Sir John Fenwick, though he ſhould not be a good Engliſhman, yet his Cauſe may be the Cauſe of a good Engliſhman: The Queſtion is, Whether there be more Danger to the Government by the withdrawing of a Witneſs, and the Mr. John How.

(b) It has been over and over again affirm'd, That in the Courſe of the Debates on this extraordinary Caſe, Sir Edward Seymour took an Opportunity to ſay, " I am of the ſame Opinion with the Roman (Cæſar) who in the Caſe of Catiline declar'd, He had rather ten Guilty Perſons ſhould eſcape, than one Innocent ſuffer: And that Lieutenant General Mordaunt ſhould reply in theſe Words, " The worthy Member who ſpoke laſt, ſeems to have forgot, That the Roman who made that Declaration, was ſuſpected of being a Conſpirator himſelf." And there is a blind, imperfect Paſſage in Burnet, Vol. II. P. 189, 190, which glances at the ſame Thing: For that Prelate, in the Courſe of his Apology for this Proceeding, having cited Cæſar's Oppoſition to Cicero's Conduct in that Affair, as being inconſiſtent with the Parliament Law, and adding, " It appear'd afterwards how little Regard he (Cæſar) had either to Law or Liberty, tho' upon this Occaſion he made uſe of the one to protect thoſe who were in a Plot againſt the other:" Moſt abruptly and unaccountably cloſes the Section in theſe Words, The Expreſſion was much reſented by Thoſe who were againſt this Bill, as carrying a bitter Reflection againſt them for oppoſing it: But if the Book call'd, The Proceedings againſt Sir John Fenwick, is at all to be depended upon, Sir Edward Seymour never made uſe of any ſuch Expreſſion; Mordaunt never anſwer'd any Speech he did make; and this Sentiment of Mr. Harley's, is the only one that comes near to that famous one of Cæſar.

A. D. 1696-7. the escaping of Sir John Fenwick, or to us and our Posterity, by the withdrawing of a Witness, and the convicting of Sir John Fenwick for that Reason? They give Goodman his full Freedom; he is gone, and now they pretend, the Fate of the Government to depend upon his Testimony: The Precedent is not much to be fear'd; for, I suppose future Governments will take care, if they think fit to use, at least not to let such a Witness go about the Streets at Liberty: But it may happen, that certain Men (for asserting the Liberties of their Country in this House) may be run upon by ill Governments, and Attempts made upon their Lives by false Witnesses: Indeed the Bill of Treason provides, That no Person shall be condemn'd without two Witnesses: We all know two indifferent ones will serve a Grand-Jury; nothing is so easy as to get a Bill found by them; yet nevertheless, before a Petit-Jury, one of these Witnesses may be so notoriously infamous, as not to be fit to be produc'd: The only way to hang the Person so prosecuted, will be then to convey that Witness away, and urge this Precedent for a Bill of Attainder: A most dangerous one it is, and such a one as I think it is the Intereſt as well as Duty of all true Englishmen to oppose."

Mr. Smith. Mr. Smith, another Lord of the Treasury, then took the Word, not to answer Mr. How, but apparently to return the Current of the Debate out of the dangerous Channel he had driven it into: For the Case of Colonel Sydney having been mention'd by Mr. Pelham, as a most unwarrantable one, because there was but one Witness against him, and because a Paper was made use of to supply the Place of a Second, He (Smith) laid hold of this Circumstance to shew, That the Question before the House, was not whether Goodman's Paper should, in like Manner, supply the Place of Goodman, but whether it should be read: As if it could be read for any other Purpose? And having shot this insidious Bolt, he proceed to say, "Your Debate is extraordinary: Your Bill takes Notice of Goodman being gone away; and now you will not take Notice of what he has left behind; which I should the rather be satisfy'd in, because I saw a Gentleman soliciting at the Bar, (meaning Dighton) that did endeavour to get him away." Now this was false in fact: For what was alledg'd concerning Dighton was, that he had temper'd with Roe, in order to induce him to find Matter of Discredit against Goodman: But Mr. Pelham rising again, to explane what he had said of Sydney's Case; and the Attorney-General rising up next, it does not appear that any particular Notice was taken of a Misrepresentation, which would not have became a Prosecutor, much less a Judge, which was the Capacity that every Member of the House, at this Time, sate in.

Trevor, the Attorney-General. What the Attorney took upon him to set forth was, That Gentlemen had suffer'd themselves to deviate from the Point before them: —That the Question simply was, (as Smith had stated it before) Whether the Paper should be read?—That Examinations were often read in Evidence:—That when it appear'd there was no second Witness to prove him guilty, would be the Time to debate, Whether he ought to be condemn'd without Two Witnesses:—That they might as well have debated before, whether they should suffer Porter to be examin'd as one Witness, because no Man is to condemn the Prisoner without Two:—That if Sir John was upon Trial, this Information might have been admitted, Goodman not being in the way:—But if it was admitted, continued he, unless there was another Witness produc'd, I believe the Court would tell the Jury, Here are not Two Witnesses, and therefore you must acquit him." A. D. 1696-7.

Sir William Coryton, who spoke next, on the other Hand not only insisted on the Reasonableness of debating the Point, whether such a Paper should be admitted in Evidence, but also of rejecting it, as contrary both to Law and Justice: Enlarg'd on the Misrepresentation which had been made of Judge Hale's Opinion; and corrected that Misrepresentation by observing, that Hale states the Difference between Cases of Treason and Cases of Felony: Maintain'd, that the Reason of admitting written Evidence in the Latter, was because it was more favourable to the Prisoner than otherwise; as giving him an Opportunity, in case of any material Difference between the said written and verbal Evidence, to expose the Inconsistency: And demonstrated the pernicious Nature of the Thing contended for, by turning the Tables, as it was easy to do, and putting Sir John Fenwick in the Place of Goodman, in which case those Informations of his must be taken for Evidence, which, in his Opinion, were great Reflections upon Persons of great Worth and Honour. Sir W. Coryton.

Sir Christopher Musgrave then stood up once more, and spoke as follows: "'Tis said, we are not ty'd up to the Rules of Westminster-Hall, and that Parliaments may denominate Crimes after they are committed; but I never did hear that the Parliament did take upon them to determine that to be Evidence, which is not Evidence in any Court in the World: If you read this Paper to inform yourselves, you admit that to be Evidence, which is no where else to be admitted: You are told, you are not ty'd to the Rules of inferior Courts of Law, nor Equity: If you are not bound by them, you are bound by your own Constitutions: You are told, you are not used to read Affidavits in common Cases; but if my Memory serves me right, you have always had it oppos'd in this House: Therefore I think, according to the Rules of your own House, we should not read Affidavits: Will you make a new Rule in this Case? Pray consider the Consequence of it hereafter: Suppose there come down Affidavits upon another Occasion, against a great Man for High-treason, Whether that may not be thought sufficient for you to govern your Judgments? I hope those that hear me, will have a Care of that Matter: Why, by the Parity of Reason, may not two Affidavits do by Sir C. Musgrave.

A. D. 1696-7. by the Help of the legiſlative Power? I would be glad to know, whether, in the Caſe of an Impeachment, any ever heard of Affidavits being read? And this is much in that Nature: And, therefore, why ſhould you admit of an Affidavit now, when the Party charg'd was not preſent when that Affidavit was taken?"

Sir J. Williamſon. Sir Joſeph Williamſon (whether he that was ſome time Secretary of State to King Charles II. or his Son, is uncertain) took upon him to anſwer Muſgrave, which he choſe to do rather by confident Aſſertions, than Reaſons and Arguments: Affirming, "There was a Power lodg'd in the Parliament of England, to make a Man guilty of Treaſon, that was not ſo before; and that even in a Reign when they came to determine what Treaſons were, &c."

Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer. Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer Montagu, then ſtood up, and declar'd, He was for having the Paper read, whether an Affidavit or not, tho' he did not think it Evidence equivalent to viva voce: And tho' he did not think, that in like Caſes it ought to be admitted below, but alſo, That he was the more of this Opinion, from what had happen'd in the Houſe that very Day; when it had been diſputed, Whether Porter ſhould be examin'd, becauſe the Teſtimony of a Man's Wife was not good below: And yet, on the Examination, it was not the Teſtimony of the Man's Wife, but of a Letter of his own that appear'd againſt him; to which was added another Circumſtance, viz. That Clancey had told Porter, he came from Fenwick himſelf: So that the Evidence which was diſputed for ſuch Reaſon, amounted to more when it came to the Proof." Now the Teſtimony of the Letter, which this notable Miniſter lays ſo much Streſs upon, was contain'd in the following Interlocutory.

"Mr. Serj. Gould. Pray what Letter was that he (Clancey) brought you?

Cap. Porter. He brought me a Letter, and ſaid it was writ by Sir John Fenwick to King James, on my Behalf.

Mr. Speaker. Did he deliver that to you?

Port. No: He deliver'd it to the Gentleman that was to go with me, one Captain Donelagh.

Mr. Speak. Why, did you not take that Letter into your own Hands?

Port. I had it, and read it before it was ſeal'd up.

Mr. Serj. Gould. Do you remember the Contents of it?

Port. As much as I remember was, He deſir'd his Majeſty, by reaſon my going away, was to ſave my Lord Ayleſbury, my Lord Montgomery, &c. to pardon what I had done.

Mr. Recorder. Who ſubſcrib'd it?

Port. It was not Sir John Fenwick's Name; but they told me, King James would know who it came from."

Thus all that came before the Houſe, concerning this Letter, was Hearſay of Hearſay: and inſtead of any Proof that it was Sir John Fenwick's own, we find it expreſſly acknowledg'd, That it was not ſo much as ſign'd with his Name. A. D. 16[illegible]

But with the ſame Ingenuity the Chancellor farther proceed in theſe Words, "I would have this Paper read, not becauſe it ſhould ſupply the Place of a Witneſs: No; but becauſe you ſee he has been indicted by the Evidence of Goodman and Porter; and the firſt is withdrawn, and by whoſe Means you have heard; and I would know whether Goodman's Evidence did amount to accuſe him of the ſame? I do ſay, in your Power of Judgment, you are not conſtrain'd to the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall: And I would ſay, that for your Conſtitution, the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall are to be govern'd by the Letter of the Law: But there is lodg'd in the Legiſlature, a Power to judge theſe Crimes that are behind the Law: And I believe if the ſeveral Attainders were examin'd, there was never any Attainder that went upon a more juſt Proceding than this: I take the Crime to be a Plot with your Enemies to bring in a foreign Power: And as if that was not ſufficient, he hath made a falſe and ſcandalous Confeſſion, to bring a Diſtruſt and Jealouſy between the King and his People; and hath dallied and gain'd ſo much Time, as he hath had an Opportunity to corrupt one of the Witneſſes; and therefore, it would be hard if no Law could reach him: 'Tis ſaid, why did not you keep the Witneſs? It would be hard, after a Perſon hath made a Confeſſion for the Good of the Kingdom, that he ſhould be kept in Irons: We are debating of the Bill, while we are now only purely to ſee what is in this Paper: I ſhould not, if read, have made uſe of this, as a ſecond Witneſs; but the being an Affidavit, or not, is not material in this Point: The Commons procede upon Impeachments without Affidavits: 'Tis offer'd as Evidence: That Goodman was a Witneſs againſt him, you have Proof of; and that he hath been temper'd with to withdraw by the Friends of this Gentleman."

To part of this looſe Harangue, Sir Godfrey Copley reply'd in theſe Words, "If this Paper is to be read, I would know for what Reaſon: For if it be not intended to ſway or incline our Judgments, then I take the reading of it to be of no uſe at all: But, on the other Hand, if it is deſign'd as a Motive to ſway me, then I ſay, it comes as additional Evidence, and to ſupply the Defect of another Witneſs; and the dangerous Conſequence of ſuch a Precedent, (for, as he afterwards ſaid, it was very natural to ſuppoſe, That one Parliament might take Precedents from another) deſerves your Conſideration." And to another Part of the ſame Harangue, Sir Marmaduke Wyvell very truly anſwer'd, That whereas one or two honourable Perſons had urg'd, That Goodman had been temper'd with by Sir John, he could recollect no ſuch Thing; the utmoſt which had been offer'd in Evidence on that Head, being, as before obſerv'd, the Offer made by Dighton to Roe, to diſcredit Goodman's Teſtimony. Sir G. Copley.

A.D. 1696-7. L. Castleton. Lord Castleton then put this plain, short Question, Whether if the Affidavit was read, it was to be read as Evidence? But could not procure as plain an Answer: For the Solicitor-General, who made the Reply, was pleas'd to substitute Evasion in the Place of Solution; by inferring, in the first Place, That as the House had order'd Porter to go on with the Evidence, and did agree to consider afterwards, Whether it was Evidence or not, it was reasonable to admit the Paper on the same Terms: And then, by having recourse to the Practice below, which, on the Prisoner's Behalf, was not allow'd the least Consideration, from whence he drew a home Conclusion in these Words, "So that the Question, Whether it is Evidence, must come afterwards; and if you go according to the Rigour of the Law, it must be read."

Mr. Solicitor-General.

But the House growing weary of the Debate, neither Impropriety nor Disingenuity were any longer attended to; and the most material Things offer'd by Price, who had distinguish'd himself by his Opposition to the exorbitant Grant which Lord Portland had obtain'd in North-Wales, and who was the last that spoke on this Occasion, were comprehended in this one Period, viz. "The Question is, Whether an Information taken before a Justice of the Peace, ought to be read here? If it be to introduce a new Law, and make a new Crime, then you may make a new sort of Evidence: But if this be a Crime against an Act of Parliament or Law in being, then you must take the Evidence the Law doth afford you, according to the Nature of the Crime."

Mr. Price.

The Question carry'd in the Affirmative.

The Question was now call'd for with the Importunity usual, when the House was come to the End of their Patience, and was put by the Speaker accordingly, in these Words, That the Information of Cardel Goodman, taken upon Oath 24th of April, 1696, be read; upon which the House dividing, it appear'd, that the Ayes were 218, the Noes, 145.

Goodman's Examination read, and the Evidence of the Grand-Jury taken.

The several Parties being then call'd in, Goodman's Examination was read, being the same already recited P. 639: After which certain of the Grand-Jury who had found the Bill, were brought forward, to give in as Evidence, the Evidence which has been given to them by Porter and Goodman: And tho' this was oppos'd by the Prisoner's Council, for these Reasons, Because a Bill of Indictment was but an Accusation; because a Bill of Indictment could not be given in Evidence for the least Crime soever; because there could be no Resort to the Evidence on which it was founded; because it was part of the Juryman's Oath not to disclose the same; and because it was against the very Fundamentals of Law, the House were pleas'd to receive it from the Mouths of Two of the said Grand-Jury, whose Names, Gracedieu and Meade, deserves to be enroll'd in the Black List of Volunteer-Betrayers.

Debate on the Question for reading the Record of Cooke's Conviction.

The Record of Cooke's Conviction, was the next Piece of Evidence insisted upon; but it being dark by this Time, the Parties were again directed to withdraw, Candles were order'd, and a Motion was made to adjourn, which pass in the Negative, by 163 against 141.

A.D. 1696-7.

The Parties being then recall'd, and the Record again insisted upon, the Council for the Prisoner objected, That if such Evidence was admitted, the Trial of one Person in the same Company would be a Trial of all; and that it could not be expected, that They, who undertook only to defend Sir John Fenwick, should come prepar'd to answer the Charge against Cooke. The King's Council, on the other Hand, maintain'd, That such Objections were fit only for the inferior Courts: That they were now to be directed by the Judgment of the House: That a Witness having been withdrawn by Artifice, it was become necessary to bring the Matter where it was, and to procede by the Means in their Power: And that the only Purpose of producing the Record, was to prove there had been such a Trial, and to come at the Evidence which Goodman had then sworn.

Objections of the Prisoner's Council.

They were, however, order'd to withdraw once more, at the Instance of Colonel Granville and Sir Richard Temple; the Latter of whom averring, That there was no Precedent for what had been demanded, either in Parliament or out. Sir Thomas Mompesson, to expose the Man who rais'd the Difficulty, not to solve it, said, "When the Duke of Monmouth was impeach'd, the Bill was read three Times in one Day; and that Gentleman mov'd for the Impeachment:" And Sir Richard reply'd, He had done so on the Testimony of Three Witnesses, who declar'd they saw him in actual Rebellion, at the Head of an Army.

Sir R. Temple. Sir T. Mompesson. Sir R. Temple.

Thus one Stretch of Power, which had been severely condemn'd by the suffering Party, was made Authority for another, when those who had been the Sufferers, had the Power of tyrannising in their Turn: And for the Sake of setting forth the Proceeding against Sir John Fenwick in its proper Colours, let any Man compare it with the Rule laid down by the Earl of Warrington, in his Censure of the Proceding against his Friend the Duke of Monmouth, which runs in these Words: "In case of Treason, the Law requires two Witnesses, who must be of good Reputation, indifferent to the Prisoner, and their Evidence is to be clear, and direct to the Fact, and void of all Implication: For if they are Men of evil Fame, have Malice to the Prisoner, or are brib'd, swear doubtfully either as to the Time, Place, or Manner of the Thing; any of these renders their Testimony invalid."

[Observations on the Behaviour of the D. of Monmouth, P. 72, 73.]

But to return:—Colonel Granville cut short the Personalities which Sir Thomas Mompesson had given rise to, by saying, in Substance, That the House might as well order all the the Trials upon the Plot to be read, as to admit the Record of one Trial to be Evidence in another:—And was answer'd by Sir Thomas Lyttleton, who, among other Things, said, That if nothing but exact Evidence would have satisfy'd, this

Col. Granville. Sir T. Lyttleton.

A. D. 1696-7. would not have been brought in: And alſo having admitted, That the Council did not produce this Record as Evidence againſt Fenwick, nevertheleſs inferr'd from the Points already carry'd by the Majority, that this ought to be carry'd likewiſe: For, continued He, "Why did you admit the Evidence of what He (Goodman) ſaid to the Grand-Jury? What is this but to give Evidence of what he ſaid to the Petit-Jury, wherein both the Grand-Jury and Petit-Jury have both believ'd him?"

Mr. Howe. Mr. Howe, on the other Hand, obſerv'd, That the Houſe had lately made nothing of Hearſay (alluding to the Vote of Cenſure paſs'd on Sir John Fenwick's Informations) and yet were now diſpos'd to take Hearſay for Evidence.

Mr. Harcourt. Mr. Harcourt on the ſame Side likewiſe ironically ſuggeſted, That if the King's Council were gratify'd in this Point, it might probably ſave a great deal of Time, and prevent any Exception to any Evidence they had farther to offer: "For, ſaid he, 'tis not in the Power of Man to offer any Thing more abſurd:—I don't believe that ever any Man heard of ſuch a Thing offer'd, as that a Record ſhould be given in Evidence againſt a Man that is no manner of Party to the Record: If there be Book, Practice, Precedent, or any Thing to juſtify it, I will ſit down, &c."

Lord Cutts and Mr. Sloane. Lord Cutts and Mr. Sloane anſwer'd Mr. Harcourt: But the Former did little more than accuſe him of too much Aſſurance in his Aſſertions, and too little Clearneſs in his Deductions: And as to the Latter, having begg'd the Queſtion as unfairly as the other Courtiers had done, That it was thro' the Practice of the Priſoner, that Goodman was withdrawn, He proceeded to inſer, That as they had heard Evidence of what He (Goodman) had ſaid upon Oath before the Trial, ſo by the ſame Reaſon they might hear what he ſaid at the Trial.

Mr. Pelham. Mr. Pelham, having obſerv'd, That the Examination of Sir John Fenwick was inſenſibly become a Trial, and declar'd, That he would never have accepted of a Seat in that Houſe, if he had thought they had had any Buſineſs with Matters of ſuch a Nature, aſk'd, If any thing was more natural, than to examine whether ſuch Evidence was proper, or what any Court would allow of?

Sir W. Williams. Sir William Williams aſſerted the ſame in effect, that Harcourt had aſſerted before; and concluded in theſe Terms, "Let us conſider how many Judgments given haſtily in the late Reigns, have been revers'd: What is the Reaſon given for it? It is for receiving That for Evidence, which was not Evidence in the Law: Your Bill of Rights takes Notice of it."

The Soliciter General. The Solicitor-General then roſe up, and having modeſtly premis'd, That he did not think this Matter would have laſted a Quarter of an Hour; and that if Gentlemen would debate on the ſame Matter which had been twice before over-rul'd, the Fault in Point of Tediouſneſs was theirs; proceeded thus, "All that is to be prov'd by this Record is, That one Peter Cooke was attainted of High-Treaſon: If the Council on the other Side would have own'd Peter Cooke to have been attainted, you had not been troubled to have had the Record brought to the Table: But as to what they ſay, That Sir John Fenwick was no Party to the Record, and therefore it can be no Evidence againſt him, it is true: Of itſelf it is no Evidence againſt him: But This, as it is open'd, is to introduce the Evidence of what's ſworn by A WITNESS upon that Trial, which cannot be done unleſs that Trial be firſt prov'd by the Record itſelf:"—He alſo inſinuated the Reaſonableneſs of this Proceding from a Preſumption, That if the Priſoner could have deriv'd any Advantage from the Evidence given by Goodman in Cooke's Caſe, he would not have fail'd to make his own Uſe of it: And, to recriminate on the oppoſite Party, it muſt be ſuppos'd, he farther touch'd on Corniſhe's Trial, for the Sake of ſhewing, how unjuſtly the Court had refus'd him to prove a Witneſs (Rumſey) forſworn, becauſe his Council had not produc'd the Record of Lord Ruſſel's Trial, on which the Proof was grounded.

Mr. Price. Price took up the Argument next, and ſaid, very ſenſibly, "'Tis very much preſs'd that we ſhould read That, which when read, they ſay is not Evidence: If it be not Evidence, upon what Account ſhould they read it? But if it introduce other Evidence, This is an Ingredient, and part of that Evidence: Now ſuppoſe the Record ſhould be produc'd, and they ſhould bring Witneſſes to ſay what Goodman ſwore at the Trial, Would That be Evidence? No ſure: For no body ever pretended that this hath been admitted either at Law or in Parliament: By what Law, by what Rule, by what Meaſure of Reaſon are we then to procede in this Houſe?" He then maintain'd, that the Priſoner had an undoubted Right to bring the very Record in queſtion, if it would have avail'd him to take off Goodman's Teſtimony; becauſe there was no other way to do it but from what was collateral; but would by no Means allow, That ſuch a Right in the Priſoner, to produce a Record, in order to ſet aſide a Witneſs for Perjury, argued, That a Record in like Manner might be brought in Evidence againſt him for his Life; and concluded with theſe remarkable Words, "But if this Record of the Conviction of Cooke be brought to any Purpoſe now, 'tis to ſatisfy our Conſciences, That Goodman gave a good Teſtimony of that Trial: And I wonder the Serjeant (Gould) ſhould offer it, who is ſworn to offer nothing in Violation to Law."

Dr. Oxenden. Dr. Oxenden then did his beſt to prove, That the Determination of this Queſtion was comprehended in that of the Former for reading Goodman's Examination: "For, ſaid He, did we not receive what he had depos'd upon Oath before a Juſtice of the Peace? Was it receiv'd becauſe it was taken in writing, or becauſe it was his Evidence? Now they offer you an Evidence of his that

A. D. 1696-7. was not put into writing; but they will prove it by Witneſs: What is the Difference? If it had been taken down in writing, it muſt have been admitted as the ſame before."

Sir M. Wyvell. But this Queſtion of his was completely anſwer'd by Sir Marmaduke Wyvell, who ſaid, The Depoſition was againſt Sir John Fenwick, but the Evidence againſt Peter Cooke: And Mr. Attorney-General, with much ſeeming Candour, endeavour'd to compromiſe the Diſpute, by ſaying, "I do agree with thoſe Gentlemen that have ſpoke of this Matter, That the Conviction of Cooke, nor any Evidence upon his Conviction, can be Evidence againſt Sir John Fenwick: I don't pretend that This is; nor do I believe, that This is offer'd upon any ſuch Conſideration: But 'tis one of the Allegations of the Bill, That ſeveral of theſe Gentlemen were preſent at this Conſult of which Sir John Fenwick is accus'd: Therefore, I ſuppoſe the Council for the Bill, did offer this Record to make good that Allegation; and ſo I think it may be properly offer'd."

The Attorney-General.

Sir W. Williams, Sir C. Muſgrave, Mr. E. Harley. Here Sir William Williams declar'd his Concurrence with the Attorney: And the joint Cry of the Weary, the Profligate, and the Deluded was, Call them in! Call them in! But Sir Chriſtopher Muſgrave having made a Shift to pacify that Clamour, inſiſted as ſtrenuouſly as before, on the Impropriety, Injuſtice, and Danger in point of Precedent, of reading the ſaid Paper, under any Pretence whatſoever; and was ſtrenuouſly ſupported by Mr. Edward Harley, on whoſe Credit the Houſe divided on the Queſtion, and it was carry'd for reading it by 181 Voices againſt 110: And then a ſubſequent Queſtion being put from the Chair, Whether it ſhould be read as Evidence, Mr. Robert Harley urg'd, That the Council themſelves deſir'd no more, than that it might be read, to prove, That Cooke was attainted, and no more; to which the Houſe agreeing, the Parties were again call'd in, the Record was read, and the King's Council proceded to make their Uſe of it, which was to call ſome of the Jury, who ſerv'd on Cook's Trial, to affirm, That Goodman's Evidence did prevail to convict the ſaid Cooke: But this was oppos'd by Fenwick's Council, who inſiſted, That Fenwick being no way concern'd in the ſaid Trial, and for that Reaſon having no Perſon preſent at it to hear, obſerve, or croſs-examine the Witneſſes, &c. ſuch Sort of Evidence ought no more to be receiv'd in that Place, than in any other: And Shower, in particular, ſubmitted it to the Conſideration of the Houſe, Whether it was juſt, That the Evidence againſt one Perſon only, ſhould conclude againſt Another, ſtanding at a different Bar, in defence of his Life: Or, indeed, whether it ſhould be receiv'd againſt him? Adding, "Every Man's Defence is ſeveral; and as we oppos'd the reading of the Record before, ſo we do alſo oppoſe the calling any Witneſs upon it, for the ſame Reaſon." A. D. 1696-7.

The Queſtion carry'd in the Affirmative.

Cooke's Jury call'd for as Evidence.

The Debate thereon.

Here Lovel, the Recorder, took the Word, and ſaid, They call'd thoſe Witneſſes only to prove, That what Goodman had confeſs'd in his Examination, he had ſworn before a Jury:—But was cut ſhort by a Motion for the Parties to withdraw, which brought the Matter in diſpute before the Houſe.

Mr. Manley. Mr. Manley open'd the Debate with theſe Words: "I thank God I have that Regard for the Laws of England, and for every Engliſhman's Life, that when I ſee any Thing attempted againſt them, I muſt give my Teſtimony againſt it." And having touch'd in his way, on the Inſufficiency of Goodman's Evidence, even in the firſt Inſtance, becauſe materially contradicted, concluded in almoſt as uncourtly a Manner, as before, when the Majority did him the Honour to ſend him to the Tower: For, ſaid he, "They tell us we are not to be guided by the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall: But we are to be govern'd by the Rules of Juſtice: And we are not at this Time of Day, to ſeek a Way to the (i) King's Favour, by voting againſt a Criminal for High-Treaſon."

Mr. Sloane. Mr. Sloane, who ſtood up next, and who, tho' ſitting as Judge in this Caſe, acted againſt the Priſoner through the whole, as the moſt Proſtitute of Advocates; did, indeed, admit, That the Indictment and Conviction of Cooke, as it ſtood ſingly, was no Evidence againſt Fenwick: And, ſaid He, If they will produce Goodman now, it ſhall be no Evidence againſt him: But then he inſiſted, as Goodman was withdrawn, by the Means of Fenwick's Friends and Agents; and as that was the ſame Thing as if it had been done by himſelf, it was material, tho' not concluſive, for the Houſe to hear what he had ſaid when he was upon Oath.

Sir C. Muſgrave. Sir C. Muſgrave, on the contrary, declar'd, That This was harder than all the reſt: That the Examination and the Record they had admitted being in writing, could not be falſified: Whereas the Repetition of a Teſtimony upon Memory, was of all Expedients the moſt fallacious: That the Miſtake of a Word, alter'd the Nature of the Thing: And that, conſequently, as no Streſs could be laid upon it, it was to no Purpoſe to have recourſe to it, &c. He alſo aſk'd in what Caſes ſuch reflected Teſtimony had been ever given? And Sloane, in a confus'd, almoſt unintelligible Manner, anſwer'd, That the Thing was warranted by every Day's Practice, when a Witneſs was dead, and a Reference to his Teſtimony was thought neceſſary:—"But, added he, I will not ſtrain it:—We do not deſire to hear it as concluſive Evidence,—but only in this Senſe; Here is a Witneſs ſuppos'd to be carry'd away by the Priſoner's Means: And therefore, is it not neceſſary to hear what he ſaid before he was deluded and carry'd away?" Sir. C. Muſgrave.

It was anſwer'd, That whatſoever of the Kind

(i) It has been ſaid, and is generally believ'd, That his Majeſty had a perſonal Animoſity to the Priſoner.

A. D. 1696-7. Kind was done in ſome Caſes, nothing of the Kind was ever done in criminal Caſes:

Sir T. Lyttleton. And the ſtaunch Sir Thomas Lyttleton reply'd, "Why in this Caſe you have hear'd the Grand-Jury what he ſwore before them already; and what Objection is there more againſt hearing what he ſwore upon the Indictment?"

Mr. Gery. One Mr. Gery then obſerv'd, That when any Man was allow'd to give in Evidence upon Memory, what another Perſon had ſworn before, he was always put upon his Oath, and was liable to Proſecution in caſe he gave a falſe Teſtimony: Whereas in the preſent Caſe, no Oath was adminiſter'd; and no Remedy was to be had, if the Priſoner's Life was taken away, by an imperfect or injurious Repreſentation.

Mr. Commiſſioner Smith. And now even Mr. Commiſſioner (of the Treaſury) Smith ſeem'd to have a relenting Qualm upon him: For he expreſs'd a Doubt, Whether, after all, he ſhould give his Conſent to the Bill, unleſs ſome Expedient could be found to put the Witneſſes upon their Oaths: Said, That as Matters ſtood, they were only to ſit in Judgment upon Probabilities: Acknowledg'd, It was a difficult Thing for any Man to charge himſelf with what had been ſworn at a former Trial: As alſo, That, ſeeing there were two or three Witneſſes who confronted Goodman's Teſtimony, it was a Wonder almoſt how Cooke could be found guilty: But then he took care to make a Court-Inference at laſt: For, having preſum'd that the ſame Witneſſes would be produc'd againſt Goodman's Evidence again, he from thence inferr'd the Reaſonableneſs of hearing what Goodman had ſaid for himſelf.

Mr. Howe. On the other Side, Mr. Howe undertook to prove, That the Houſe could not receive any Information from ſuch Evidence, as was not in its own Nature credible: "I know not, ſaid he, whether theſe Witneſſes are to be brought or not: But I have heard that Cooke, after he was condemn'd to dye, without any Apprehenſion of being ſav'd, did, upon the Sacrament, declare, That Goodman was not upon the Place at that Time he ſwore himſelf to be there: I have heard ſince, that the ſame Divine that gave him the Sacrament, Dr. Wake, when he heard he had again contradicted that, ſo ſolemn Declaration, had ſuch an Abhorrence of the Proceedings on all Sides, that he would go to him no more:" Adding, "I can't think we can have Information from thoſe Perſons who, I ſuppoſe, did not think of giving Evidence in this Trial; and therefore did not take Notice ſo particularly of what he ſaid; and if ſo, 'tis loſing your Time."

Here the Queſtion being call'd for, the Speaker ſtated it to the Houſe: But Sir Godfrey Copley inſiſting to be heard, it was wav'd; and what he ſaid was to this Effect, "That if it had been made appear Sir John had taken off any Evidence, he ſhould have conſented to the ſupplying it, as well as it could be ſupply'd: But that not being the Caſe, and the Precedents of this very Day having ſo quick an Operation that they were already quoted to authoriſe one another, he could not help being apprehenſive of the Uſe that might be made of them, nor oppoſing them for that Reaſon." And that the laſt Word might not be on the adverſe Side, Sir Henry Dutton Colt wound up the Bottom of the Debate in this round Manner: "I believe no one Gentleman doubts, that Cooke was convicted upon the Evidence of Goodman: If they do, I would know the Reaſon of it: For upon the laſt Act, there are to be two Witneſſes to the ſame Treaſon: There were but Two poſitive Witneſſes againſt him for Treaſon, and they were Porter and Goodman: I think, therefore, he was convicted upon the Evidence of Goodman: What then needs any Perſon to remember any Particulars that paſs'd at the Trial, if they remember, on the whole, That he was convicted by the Evidence of Porter and Goodman?"

A. D. 1696-7.

Sir G. Copley.

Sir H. Dutton Colt.

The Queſtion was then put, and being carry'd in the Affirmative by 180 Voices againſt 102, the Parties were call'd in; the Jurymen were put on the Uſe of their Recollection; and the Firſt not only faltering in his Evidence, but, when call'd upon for Particulars, profeſſing he could remember no more, a Second was introduc'd, and after him a Third, whoſe Memory was good enough to make up all the Defects of the two Former. Mr. Serjeant Gould then mov'd, That Mr. Vernon might be deſir'd to produce the intercepted Letter from Sir John, which, he ſaid, falſly, was directed to his Lady; call'd it a Verdict of the Priſoner's againſt himſelf, and undertook to give the Import of it in theſe Words, "That Sir John look'd upon himſelf as having no Defence, but depended only upon a Contrivance with the Jury; and he adviſes to work with ſome Perſons of the Jury, who were to ſtand it out and ſtarve the reſt, and ſo by that Means to ſave him." He then acknowledg'd, That they could not produce Webber; for tho' he was taken with Sir John, there being no Charge againſt him, he had taken the Benefit of his Habeas Corpus, and was not to be found; but added, They were ready to produce one Fowler, who had receiv'd the Letter from Webber.

The Queſtion carry'd in the Affirmative.

Sir John's intercepted Letter mov'd for.

Here Powis and Shower once more interpos'd in Behalf of their Client, by urging, That they had not only the Authority of the Courts below, but even of the Parliament itſelf, againſt ſuch ſort of Evidence, which had been declar'd illegal, by the Act which revers'd Colonel Sydney's Attainder: But Gould and Lovel would not allow the Caſes to be parallel, and ſtrenuouſly contended for its being admitted as concurring Evidence, to ſhew, that the Priſoner thought his Caſe ſo deſperate, that nothing but indirect Means could ſave him: —Only when Fowler, who receiv'd the Letter from Webber, had, in the Courſe of his Examination, acknowledg'd himſelf dubious, Whether the Priſoner, tho' in the ſame Room, could ſee the Letter deliver'd; and Shower had inſiſted, That, before they could make any Uſe of it at all, they muſt, at leaſt, prove it to be the Priſoner's Hand-writing, by a Com-

But not inſiſted on.

A. D. 1696-7. Compariſon of Hands: They did not think fit to lay any farther Streſs upon in; but concluded their Evidence with a Deſire, That Mr. Vernon might be induc'd to give an Account of the ſeveral Adjournments of the Trial; which was, however, on ſome Pretence or other, poſtpon'd till the next Day: And the Council for the Priſoner were call'd upon to enter on his Defence: But they ſeverally pleaded Incapacity, after twelve Hours Attendance, to deliver the many weighty Things they had to urge, on Matters ſo very new to Lawyers.

This caus'd a new Order for their withdrawing; which being obey'd, Mr. Smith, who had ſo lately put on ſuch a Maſk of Candour, declar'd againſt giving an Opportunity to any Man to practiſe with Witneſſes; and call'd for the Priſoner's Liſt of Witneſſes, if any ſuch had been deliver'd in: But the Speaker ſignifying, He had receiv'd no ſuch Liſt, the Houſe came to a Reſolution, late as it was, to hear ſuch Evidence as the Priſoner had to produce that Night: But as to the Obſervations of his Council, to give them Time, Till —To-Morrow—: Which being imparted to the ſaid Council, they declar'd, They had no Evidence at preſent to produce, but the Copy of a Record: And being once more withdrawn, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer took Advantage of this Acknowledgment to urge, That ſince the Gentlemen had no living Witneſſes then to produce, it would be giving them too much Advantage to receive any ſuch at any other Time, ſeeing the whole Meaning of the Chicanry of the Council, was to get Time to reply; Mr. Dighton having heard the Evidence: And not ſatisfy'd with this unmerciful Plea to deprive the Priſoner of all Reſource, he not only call'd upon the Houſe to order Dighton into Cuſtody, (who was there by Leave of the Houſe, in the Capacity of Solicitor for the Priſoner, and conſequently was under their Protection) that he might be anſwerable for the Subornation which, he ſaid, had been prov'd on him by Roe; but complain'd of it as an unprecedented Thing, That in a Matter of ſuch Moment, wherein the Government was concern'd, the Priſoner's Council ſhould entertain them for ſix or eight Hours together with Delays. So that the Priſoner's Caſe was indeed ſo deſperate, that it was thought almoſt criminal to defend him.

It was then, among other Things, reſolv'd, That the Priſoner ſhould be brought up again at Twelve o'Clock the next Day; and that the Houſe would hear no other Witneſs in his Behalf, unleſs ſuch as were to prove the Record his Council had to offer.

The next Day, at the Time appointed, the Houſe being render'd as full as poſſible, by a formal Summons by the Mace of all the Members attending the Courts below, the Priſoner was brought to the Bar; and Sir T. Powis, after a ſhort Apology for himſelf, enter'd on his Defence, under three ſeveral Heads, viz. The Manner of the Proceding: The Matter alledg'd in the Bill upon which he was to make his Defence: And the Proofs of the Matter ſo alledg'd, which had been call'd Evidence. A. D. 1696-7.

The Priſoner's Defence by his Council.

On the firſt of theſe Heads he premis'd, That tho' Laws ex poſt Facto were Laws, they were hard ones: That a Law of that Nature, to detain certain (k) Perſons in Priſon, had paſs'd laſt Seſſions, which affected the Liberty of the Subject: That the Bill at preſent under Conſideration, in like Manner, affected the Life of the Subject: That Precedents were of a growing Nature; and that to prevent their growing familiar, he thought they ſhould not be over eaſily obtain'd.

He then proceded to ſay, That the Perſon concern'd in the ſaid Bill, was not only forth-coming, in order to be try'd by the ordinary Methods of Juſtice, but was actually under Proceſs, had pleaded, and was ready to ſtand Trial: That if there was ſufficient, legal Evidence againſt him, as the King's Serjeant had inſiſted, there was no Reaſon why he ſhould be depriv'd of the Benefit of ſuch a Trial, as was the Birth-right of every Subject: And that if there was not ſufficient, legal Evidence, he thought the want of ſuch Evidence, was a very odd Reaſon for the Bill.

Here he took occaſion to expatiate on the Antiquity, Regularity, and Impartiality of Trials by Juries; as alſo to obſerve, that even the very Regicides, notwithſtanding the Notoreity of the Fact charg'd upon them, had the Benefit of ſuch a Trial: And after a Variety of Inſtances of the Tenderneſs of the Laws, even in Caſes of Outlawries, came down to That ſo lately paſs'd for regulating Trials in Caſes of Treaſon, in order to touch on what was ſo very extraordinary, viz. That the very Parliament which paſs'd that Law, ſhould alſo paſs another for putting a Perſon to death without any Trial at all.

For his next Topic, he took in the whole Field of Attainders: Admitted there had been many, but inſiſted there had been very few reſembling This: Affirm'd the Weight of them had fallen principally on Outlaws and Fugitives: And that whenever they had fallen on Perſons forth-coming, the Caſes of ſuch Perſons were never mention'd but with a Cenſure as heavy as the Sentence they had inflicted.

Having then ennumerated ſeveral Attainders which had been revers'd, becauſe they were unjuſt, he came to his ſecond general Head, under which he obſerv'd, That in all Courts of Juſtice, the Perſon accus'd is to make his Defence Secundum Allegata & Probata: That it was not enough that a Matter was prov'd, which was not alledg'd, or that it was alledg'd without Proof: And hence he argu'd, That by no Law whatſoever, were they concern'd to defend him farther than he was accus'd: Now "This Bill of Attainder, ſaid he, as it is drawn, and now ſtands before you, doth not ſo much as alledge or ſay, That Sir John Fenwick is guilty

(k) Accus'd of being concern'd in the Aſſaſſination-Affair; but not on ſuch Evidence as would have ſerv'd to convict them.

A.D. 1696-7 guilty of the Treaſon whereof he was indicted; and that hath prevented us from producing Witneſſes to That, and ſeveral Matters which the King's Council have enter'd upon:" And his Concluſion from hence was, "That the Priſoner's being guilty, was not then the Queſtion, becauſe it was not charg'd upon him."

Proceding then to what was alledg'd: As, That he was indicted: That he had prevaricated in order to gain Time: And that having by ſuch his Prevarications gain'd Time, one of the Witneſſes was withdrawn, He obſerv'd, That an Indictment might be laid againſt the moſt innocent Man in the World: That if the Prevarications had been prov'd, which had not been done by any one Witneſs, not the leaſt Ingredient of Treaſon could be infer'd from them againſt the Priſoner: And that as to the withdrawing of the Witneſs, the Bill did not ſo much as alledge it was by the Means, Procurement, or even the Privity of Sir John Fenwick: So that if the ſame Witneſs had died by the Hand of God, there would have been as good a Reaſon for attainting him.

Laſtly, deſcending to what the King's Council had call'd Proofs, he ſubmitted it to the Judgment of the Houſe, Whether in a Caſe which was to be made capital by a ſubſequent Law, more palpable Evidence was not requiſite, than in any Caſe cogniſable by any Law already in being; whereas the King's Council had introduc'd Evidence to Matters not alledg'd in the Bill, which was not agreable to Juſtice, and defective Evidence to what was:—Porter, he obſerv'd, was not upon Oath; and there was no Place in the World where Evidence in capital Caſes was admitted, unleſs upon Oath: And he urg'd, That if it was not their Courſe to adminiſter an Oath, it was a good Reaſon why the Bill ſhould not have begun there: He then inſtanc'd the Manner of proceding in Lord Strafford's Caſe; and concluded, That nothing could be more ſevere, than to paſs Sentence of Death on a Man, to corrupt his Blood, and confiſcate his Eſtate, on Parole-Evidence: The Parole-Evidence of ſuch a Man as Porter; of late, by his own Confeſſion, of ſo villanous a Diſpoſition as to be engag'd in a Crime of the blackeſt Nature:—A Convert not to the Dictates of his Conſcience; but a Coward ruſhing from the Danger at that Time, and now even drudging for a Pardon!

Paſſing, in the next Place, to Goodman's Paper, as ſworn before Vernon, he would not allow it even to be an Examination, much leſs Matter of Evidence, becauſe the Man had never been examin'd; and what he thought fit to ſet down therein, was only what he thought moſt likely to make himſelf uſeful as a Witneſs: And he maintain'd, That the ſaid Goodman's Evidence in the Caſe of Cooke, where Fenwick was neither Party nor preſent, could not be made uſe of as Evidence againſt Fenwick, without violating the fundamental Rules of Law and Equity, which requir'd the Witneſs to be examin'd before the Face of the Priſoner, that the Latter might have all poſſible Advantages againſt the Former, as well to juſtify his own Innocence, as to expoſe and diſcredit the Evidence brought againſt him:—Nobody could be ſure that Goodman, if forthcoming, would have ſworn the ſame againſt Fenwick as he had done againſt Cooke: His Confidence might fail him: He might be diſconcerted by a better Defence: And if any one, upon the Strength of Imagination only, ſhould preſume the contrary, it might alſo be preſum'd, on the Priſoner's Side, That what Goodman ſwore againſt Cooke, was to ſave his own Life: And having thereby found an Opportunity to get out of the way, his Conſcience prompted him to make uſe of it, that he might not be oblig'd to repeat his Perjuries:—This, however, he inſiſted on, That neither did the Bill alledge, nor any ſort of Evidence prove, that the Priſoner had been the Means of his withdrawing: That Clancey's Attempt on Porter, tho' never ſo flagrantly prov'd, furniſh'd no Proof with reſpect to Goodman; but even the Proofs in that Caſe, was nothing but Hearſay, with reſpect to Fenwick, and ought to weigh no more: That as to Dighton's Attempt on Roe, it was to find Matter to diſcredit Goodman's Teſtimony, which was going on a Suppoſition, That he would appear, and conſequently imported the quite contrary of what had been often (tho' groundleſsly) aſſerted, That Fenwick was anſwerable for his withdrawing. A.D. 1696-7

Here he alſo took occaſion to ſay, That Roe was ready to anſwer for himſelf, if call'd upon: And then, recurring to the Indictment, he took Leave to aſſert, on the Authority of a Book in his Hand, (Hawle's, the Solicitor-General's Remarks on the Caſes of Ruſſel, Sydney, Armſtrong, Corniſh, &c.) That the Matter, as in the ſaid Indictment laid, and as far as it had been offer'd to be there prov'd, did not amount to Treaſon.

The Indictment ſays, continued He, "That there was a Conſpiracy and Agreement to call in a Foreign Power, and to that Purpoſe to ſend Charnock to France; but the Indictment does not ſay, That Charnock was ſent; only that there was a Meeting, and an Agreement, and a Conſpiracy, to ſend him: And I appeal to you, Whether it be prov'd that he was ſent? For Mr. Porter ſays no more, But that there was a Meeting at the King's-Head, and he nam'd Sir John Fenwick to be one who was preſent; and there it was, he ſays, agreed, That Charnock ſhould be ſent into France: Now, if there was nothing more than an Agreement and Conſpiracy to do it, and no farther Act, but ſuch a Meeting to do it, but the Perſon was not actually ſent, or at leaſt, not prov'd to be ſent; then, from this learned Author's Opinion, I inſiſt upon it, That This is not a ſufficient Overt-Act of Treaſon. In the late Caſe of my Lord Ruſſel, whoſe Innocency is vindicated by this Author, he takes Notice, That a Conſpiracy or Agreement to levy War, is not Treaſon, without actual levying War; and of that Opinion was my Lord Coke, and my Lord Chief-Juſtice Hales. A Con-

A. D. 1696-7. Conſpiracy or Agreement to call in Foreign Forces, unleſs actually done, or a Perſon, at leaſt, actually ſent, or ſomething more than a bare Agreement for that Purpoſe, is the ſame as a Conſpiracy to levy War: And in the Caſe of my Lord Ruſſel, the Proof being only, That he, and others, met together, and agreed to ſeize upon the Guards, and levy War, which he never actually did, it is inſiſted upon by this Author, That that was not Treaſon; for that Indictment went no farther: And therefore my Author ſays, "Shew me where ſuch an Accuſation was ever agreed to be more than a Conſpiracy to levy War? And that ſuch a Conſpiracy was ever agreed to be Treaſon within the Statute of Edward III. till within theſe few Years."

Sir, now I muſt humbly ſubmit it to you, Whether this be any Thing more? And for the Purpoſe, you will pleaſe to conſider, What this preſent Bill in Parliament, and what that Bill of Indictment recited in it is: For it is not, That Charnock was ſent into France to ſolicit foreign Forces; but only, That Sir John Fenwick was at a Meeting, where they did agree ſo to do: Calling in foreign Forces, is levying War; but Conſpiracy to levy War, is not Treaſon, unleſs it be actually done: A Conſpiracy to call in foreign Forces, is nothing more: And therefore I humbly inſiſt upon it, That neither by this Bill, or by the Indictment recited in it, or the Proofs offer'd before you, any thing is charg'd, but only an Agreement at that Meeting mention'd by Captain Porter, a ſingle Perſon, and he not upon Oath, to call in foreign Forces: For he only ſays farther, That Charnock told him he had been in France: I ſhall not trouble you any further; we have not thought fit to produce Witneſſes, for the Reaſons I have offer'd: For that we do not find, that Sir John Fenwick, throughout the Bill, is charg'd with being guilty of Treaſon; and we are not willing to enter upon the Defence of a Matter not charg'd upon him: I hope, Sir, you will not make a Precedent, That where a Perſon is indicted, and ready to abide his Trial in the ordinary Courſe of Juſtice, as Sir John Fenwick now is, that he may be taken out of the Hands of the ordinary Judges, and be brought to this Bar, to receive his Trial here.

A Matter of this Nature may be of very great Conſequence: We know at preſent upon what Ground we ſtand; for by the Statute of Edward III. we know what is Treaſon; by the two Statutes of Edward VI. and the late Act of Treaſon, we know what is Proof; by the Statute of Magna Charta, we know how we are to be try'd per legem terræ & per Judicium Pariũ, that is, a Peer by his Peers, and a Commoner by a Jury: But if Bills of Attainder come into Faſhion, we ſhall neither know what is Treaſon, what is Evidence, nor how, nor where we are to be try'd: Sir, I ſubmit it to you, and hope this Bill ſhall not paſs."

Here he clos'd his Plea; and not to follow his Collegue Shower, who took the Word next, over the ſame Ground again, it will be enough to obſerve, That the moſt material of his Suggeſtions were thoſe that follow, viz. "That, ſuppoſing it reaſonable to have an Act paſs'd, That Goodman's Depoſitions ſhould be read at the Trial, in caſe he himſelf was not forth-coming, it cou'd not be ſuppos'd reaſonable, to put him in a worſe Condition, becauſe of Goodman's Abſence, (which there was no Evidence to prove he was anſwerable for) than if he was there:—And yet ſuch, in caſe the Bill paſs'd, would be the Caſe: For if Goodman was forth-coming, the Priſoner might have had his Trial by Jury; might have had the Benefit of Challenges and Exceptions to the Array; might have challeng'd an Account of Favour, if any of the Grand-Jury had been empannell'd; would have had his legal Exceptions to the Teſtimony of the Witneſſes; might have had thoſe Witneſſes examin'd upon Oath; might have given Evidence upon Oath in anſwer to it, &c. All which he was depriv'd of." A. D. 1696-7.

The King's Council reply'd according to their Privilege in the Courts below; tho' if they had wav'd it for this once, the Failure would, perhaps, have been no Detriment to their Cauſe:—But if any Idolater of this Reign, thinks himſelf depriv'd of any Matter of Conſolation, by being depriv'd of their Speeches, let him have Recourſe to the State-Trials, and he will be ſilenc'd, if not ſatisfy'd.

The Parties being withdrawn, and the Cauſe once more before the Houſe, Mr. Ruſſel ſaid, I think this may be a proper Time to aſk Queſtions; and began with ſtating Such, as he thought would be moſt conducive to his own Vindication, as to the Charge brought againſt him, Of ſending Intelligence to King James: And was follow'd by Colonel Crawford for himſelf, Colonel Godfrey for the Earl of Marlborough, Mr. Brydges for the Duke of Shrewſbury, Colonel Granville for his Father the Earl of Bath, Mr. Boſcawen and Lord Coningſby for Lord Godolphin, and Sir Ralph Delaval for himſelf: Upon which Mr. Howe took occaſion to ſay, "I do not oppoſe Sir John Fenwick's being examin'd to this Paper: But it might have been more to your Credit, if you had examin'd him before your Vote upon it: But here are a great many Gentlemen riſe, to queſtion a Man to that which he does not pretend to any Proof of, nor is any way to the Purpoſe: It may be poſſible Sir John Fenwick may never have ſeen any one of the Perſons nam'd in the Paper, and yet all in his Paper be true: The beſt way for ſaving your Time is, I conceive, to have the ſeveral Parts of the Paper that do concern theſe Gentlemen, read to him, and to aſk him, Upon what Grounds he gave the King each particular Information? This will lead him into all that he knows of the Matter, which is pretended ſo much to be deſir'd."

Mr. Ruſſel moves to have the Priſoner queſtion'd on his Information.

Mr. Howe.

But this Propoſal of Mr. Howe's, did not ſuit the Diſpoſition of the Majority, who were only for reading the ſeveral Names contain'd in the Paper; and ſeverally queſtioning

A. D. 1696-7. ſtioning Sir John, as to what treaſonable Matter he ſeverally knew of each: Accordingly, the Houſe having reſolv'd, at the Inſtance of that acute Lawyer Mr. James Montagu, That neither while he was under Examination, nor when he ſhould be order'd to withdraw, his Council or Solicitor ſhould attend him, Sir John was brought to the Bar alone; and was, by the Speaker, requir'd to act the ſtrange Part of becoming an Informer, againſt Perſons who, in one Houſe or other, were either ſitting, or to ſit, upon him as Judges: But ſo much of the Snare as was ſet for him under this Method of proceding, he had the good Fortune to avoid, by perſevering in his former Reſerve; and urging the Danger he ran, while under a double Proſecution, if any thing ſhould eſcape him which might be turn'd to his own Prejudice.

He is queſtion'd accordingly, but continues on the Reſerve.

The Houſe being thus again at a Fault, the Priſoner was again remov'd, and a Motion was made for Mr. Vernon to give his Evidence, concerning the Artifices us'd to poſt-pone the Trial; which being agreed to, Sir John, his Council, &c. (that Forms might not be wholly unobſerv'd) were all re-admitted, to hear one of his Judges act the Part of an Evidence againſt him, as he had been requir'd to act the Part of an Evidence againſt certain of his Judges before: And what Mr. Vernon deliver'd, tho' not over clearly, was to this Effect, viz. That the frequent Adjournments of the Seſſions at the Old-Baily, for ſix or ſeven Weeks together, beſt made it appear his Trial had been put off: That Sir John, as he took it, was committed to the Tower on the 19th of June: That the firſt Application made by Lady Mary Fenwick, was on the 30th: That her Petition was, That he might have ſome Friends come to him, to adviſe him how to make his Application to the King: That ſhe firſt propos'd, That ſome body ſhould be ſent over from Sir John to the King, upon ſome Matters of Importance; not declaring what they were, but only ſaying, ſhe was told, there were ſuch Matters:—She had a proper Perſon to ſend, and would acquaint the Lords-Juſtices with the Man, if he might have Leave to go:—That ſhe afterwards ſaid, She could not produce a Perſon ſo ſoon: [By the way no Time was as yet ſpecify'd] That on the 2d of July ſhe came and offer'd to go herſelf; ſaying, If it was not as much for the King's Service as Sir John's Benefit, ſhe would not go: That having obtain'd Leave to go, ſhe would have capitulated, That the Trial ſhould be put off till her return: That tho' the Lords refus'd This, becauſe her Return would depend on her own Pleaſure, they engag'd to appriſe the King at the ſame Time of her Intentions, and to poſtpone the Trial till they had an Anſwer: That a Paſſage having been order'd for her, ſhe deſir'd to ſpeak with Sir John in private, in order to her Journey: That the ſame Night ſhe came back again, and ſaid ſhe had conſider'd of it, and would not go; for which ſudden Alteration of Purpoſe, ſhe aſſign'd ſeveral Reaſons: That on the 7th of July, a certain noble Lord, (the Duke of Devonſhire) then of the Regency, acquainted the other Lords, That he had been deſir'd by the Earl of Carliſle, to go to Sir John Fenwick, he having been very earneſt to ſpeak with him; and their Lordſhips agreed to acquieſce in what his Grace ſhould think fit to do in that Matter: That his Grace went the ſame Day to Sir John: That on the Morrow, the Lords-Juſtices having another Meeting, his Grace imparted to them the Contents of what Sir John had ſent to the King, which He, Sir John, did not chuſe to have imparted any other way: That it was the 7th of Auguſt before his Majeſty's Anſwer was receiv'd; and his ſaid Anſwer was, That his Majeſty had not receiv'd any great Satisfaction by the Meſſage, and that Sir John ſhould be try'd: To which the Duke added, That his Majeſty, in his Letter to him, had been pleas'd to direct, That what Sir John had farther to ſay, ſhould be ſent to him in writing: That it being conſider'd the Judges being at this Time on their Circuits; and alſo, that the King expected to hear again from Sir John, [which in caſe of a Trial would have been a moſt unreaſonable Expectation] his Grace undertook to make another Viſit to Sir John; and, it was to be ſuppos'd, did receive ſome new Matter from him, which he ſent to his Majeſty:—That it was September before the Anſwer to this was receiv'd, at which Time his Grace was at Bath: That this, conſequently, took up ſome little Time more: And it appear'd, at laſt, his Majeſty's Expectations were, That Sir John ſhould prove what he had ſaid: And that he ſhould, moreover, manifeſt his Ingenuity, by confeſſing what he knew of any other Deſigns againſt the Government: That on the 10th of September, He, Mr. Vernon, was directed to repair to Sir John, and communicate to him, by Order of the Lords-Juſtices, his Majeſty's Pleaſure: That Sir John's Anſwer was, He had no more to ſay, or to that Effect; and he muſt provide for his Defence as well as he could: Adding only, That if he could ſpeak once more with the Duke, he ſhould be glad to do it: That his Grace being ſtill at Bath, Directions were again given for bringing on his Trial: That, in the mean Time, his Grace did, however, return to Town, did again repair to Sir John, and brought an Account from him, That he was ready to make out what he had ſaid to the King; and in the mean Time was ready to give Satisfaction to the Lords-Juſtices: That hereupon He (Mr. Vernon) was ſent to him with a Paper, requiring him to prove what he had already ſaid to the King; and that he dictated an Anſwer, which their Lordſhips thought fit to be ſent to the King: That his Arraignment was at that Time fix'd for the 17th of September, but was put off again, for the Sake of knowing the King's farther Pleaſure: And that before his Majeſty's Anſwer came, it was, he believ'd, the Beginning of October.

Mr. Vernon's Evidence concerning the ſeveral Delays of the Trial.

Thus it appears, by Mr. Vernon's own Evidence, That from the 7th of July, to the 10th of September, the Affair was wholly in their own Hands, and none but themſelves were

A. D. 1696-7. were anſwerable for the Delays they complain'd of: As alſo, That if, inſtead of giving way to another Interview between the Duke and Sir John, they had taken him at his word on the 10th of September, viz. That he had nothing more to ſay, he might have been arraign'd on the 17th, according to the Directions then ſaid to be given: And yet, tho' the Matter of Fact concluded thus apparently in Favour of the Priſoner againſt the Allegations in the Bill, which plac'd all theſe Delays to his Account, his Council drew no manner of Advantage from it; but, on the contrary, acquieſc'd in the Charge; and contented themſelves with ſaying, That he had done no more than was uſual on the like Occaſions, and what could not, by any Rule of Law, be interpreted into Treaſon.

which his Council drew no Advantage from.

Debate in committing the Bill. And now the whole Matter being before the Houſe, the Bill was read a ſecond Time, and an unuſual Pauſe enſuing, the Speaker aſk'd, If he ſhould put the Queſtion for committing it? But as if this had been the Signal waited for, a vehement Debate was

Sir T. Dyke. inſtantly open'd by Sir Thomas Dyke, who declar'd againſt the Queſtion: And tho' we have been already ſo copious on this Subject, we cannot excuſe ourſelves from inſerting two or three remarkable Paſſages which occurr'd in the Courſe of it, and which may poſſibly ſerve, to put the Colour of this irregular Tranſaction out of the Power of Controverſy for the Time to come.

The Solicitor-General. Hawles, the Solicitor-General, who of all Men living it leaſt became to drive ſo extraordinary a Point in ſo extraordinary a way, having urg'd in the Courſe of his inſidious Plea, That the Houſe, in the preſent Caſe, were to act both as Judges and Jury; as Judges, in deciding what Crime the Fact amounted to; and as Jury, in ſumming up the Proofs, not only according to the Law of Evidence, but the Dictates of Conſcience; Mr. Harcourt reply'd as follows.

Mr. Harcourt. "I have often heard this call'd a Trial, and that we are the Judges: The Gentleman that ſpake laſt gave us another Title, and told us we were the Jury alſo: I know no Trial for Treaſon, but what is confirm'd by Magna Charta, per Judicium Parium, by a Jury, which is every Engliſhman's Birth-Right, and is always eſteem'd one of our darling Privileges, or per Legem Terræ, which includes Impeachments in Parliament: But if it be a Trial, 'tis a pretty ſtrange one, where the Perſon that ſtands upon his Trial hath a Chance to be hang'd, but none to be ſav'd: I can't tell under what Character to conſider ourſelves, whether we are Judges or Jury-Men? I never heard of a Judge, I am ſure not of a Jury-Man, before, but he was always upon his Oath: I never heard yet of a Judge, but had Power to examine Witneſſes upon Oath, to come to a clear Sight and Knowledge of the Fact: I never heard of a Judge, but if a Priſoner came before him, the Priſoner was always told, he ſtood upon his Deliverance; and he had not only a Power to condemn the Guilty, but to ſave the Innocent: Have we this Power? Suppoſe, upon ſuch a Trial as this (if it muſt be call'd ſo) it may ſo happen, that a Perſon that comes before us, ſhould be the innocenteſt Man in the World; what Judgment is it that we can give, for ſo much as ſuch a Perſon hath made his Innocency fully appear? Is the Speaker, by his Warrant, to ſend him back again to Newgate? You can't diſpoſe of him otherwiſe, tho' you were ſatisfy'd of his Innocency: But in ſuch a Caſe, the Party muſt undergo a double Trial, which is contrary to all Rules I have heard of: If I am a Judge in this Caſe, I beg Leave to tell you, for my own Juſtification only, what a Definition I have met with of a Judge's Diſcretion: My Lord Chief-Juſtice Coke ſays, 'Tis Diſcernere per Legem; and by that Diſcretion I beg Leave to conſider this Caſe. If Judges make the Law their Rule, they can never err; but if the uncertain, arbitrary Dictates of their own Fancies, which my Lord Coke calls the crooked Cord of Diſcretion, be the Rule they go by, endleſs Errors muſt be the Effect of ſuch Judgments.

A. D. 1696-7.

As to this particular Caſe, I did expect from the Gentleman that ſpoke laſt, that he would have told you there was a plain Evidence why you ſhould go on to the paſſing of this Bill; but inſtead of that, I am ſurpriz'd to hear a thing mention'd; That in parliamentary Proceedings, a Man may be hang'd by one Witneſs, which certainly is not to be taken for granted.

As to this particular Caſe, I would take Captain Porter as upon his Oath for Suppoſition-ſake: You have then one Witneſs againſt Sir John Fenwick of High-Treaſon; and, with your Leave, I deſire to examine what you have more in this Caſe.

Yeſterday you voted a Paper to be read, Goodman's Narrative, or Examination; 'tis a different Caſe now: Now you have it before you to determine upon: Yeſterday the Queſtion was only for hearing: Let Gentlemen now conſider how far they ought to believe it, and the other Evidence we have: And firſt, there is ſome Evidence, that Clancey temper'd with Porter, and gave him a Sum of 300 l. and ſo they would infer, becauſe Porter was temper'd with, to be gone, therefore Goodman was. It was told us farther, (and I deſire I may be inform'd if I am miſtaken) That Clancey ſaid, he came from Sir John Fenwick; and afterwards my Lady Mary Fenwick ſaid, ſhe would make good what Clancey had ſaid; and from theſe Arguments they preſume, that Sir John Fenwick knew of it: Give me Leave to tell you a Rule I never heard contradicted, That Preſumption is to be made in favour of Life, but we are not to preſume a Man guilty: Becauſe Porter was temper'd with by another, becauſe he ſaid it was by Sir John Fenwick's Order, ſhall we preſume Sir John Fenwick did it? Is Hearſay to be Evidence? Or is a Man to be had to the Gallows upon Preſumption? How often, and with how much Reaſon, have we heard Exclamations againſt Judgments, upon Preſumptions, Innuendoes, conſtructive, accumulative Treaſon, &c.

Gentlemen, there is ſome farther Evi-

A.D. 1696-7. dence; and that is, of what was ſworn at Cooke's Trial; and ſome Gentlemen thought fit to have the Record read, and an Examination of what was ſworn there. I can never go ſo far as to think it reaſonable, That what Evidence hath been given in one Caſe, ſhould affect another Man: But all this is to be anſwer'd, by calling it parliamentary Proceedings: No doubt 'tis no Evidence in the Courts below, but they are mention'd with ſome kind of Diſdain, as very inconſiderable: In this Caſe, I beg Leave to ſay in their Vindication, That whatever the Rules of Weſtminſter-Hall are, 'tis not therefore Reaſon becauſe 'tis a Rule, but becauſe 'tis Reaſon, and Reaſon approv'd of by long Experience, therefore 'tis a Rule; and if they make their Rules for that Cauſe, I hope This is a Cauſe why we ſhould imitate them: But I would not have thoſe Rules thought Matters of Form, but Subſtance; or more properly part of the Law itſelf.

Upon the whole Matter, if no Gentleman will give us a Reaſon why this is Evidence, but it muſt be taken for granted, here is but one Witneſs, and that not upon Oath; and if we are to come to our parliamentary Diſcretion to ſupply that Defect, the Want of the Other, 'tis a Diſcretion I will diſclaim all the Days of my Life: And I hope you will reject the Bill."

Sir T. Lyttleton. Again; Sir Thomas Lyttleton, as if to ſhew, That a corrupt Whig makes the moſt pliant Courtier, having pronounc'd, That a Parliament ought not to ſtand on ſuch little Niceties, nor be bound by the little Formalities of other Courts, when the Government was at ſtake; Mr. Howe took occaſion to ſay, That he was of the Opinion of a Member who had declar'd, He had rather be try'd by twelve Men than four hundred; not only becauſe of the Challenges without ſhewing Cauſe, which in ſuch Caſe he had a Right to, but becauſe he might except to any one of the Pannel, who had any particular Animoſity againſt him; and I ſuppoſe, continued He, Sir John Fenwick would deſire Thoſe he has nam'd in his Paper, might not be Judges: Whether that Paper were true: And whether he ought to be attainted, for delivering it to the King? He alſo ſaid, That, Self-evident as the Power of Parliament was, it was under the ſame Reſtraint as the King's, of which Bracton had declar'd, Hoc tamen non poteſt facere, quod non poteſt juſte facere: That to do a Thing of this Nature, becauſe the Parliament had Power to do it, was a ſtrange way of Reaſoning: That what was Juſtice and Equity in Weſtminſter-Hall, was Juſtice and Equity every where: That if Gentlemen were to be guided by their private Opinions, they might have proceeded to the Queſtion on the Caſe, without any Evidence or Proofs at all: That one bad Precedent in Parliament, was of worſe Conſequence than a Hundred in Weſtminſter-Hall, becauſe private or perſonal Injuries, did not forecloſe the Clames of original Right; whereas a Parliament could ruin the Nation beyond Retrieve, becauſe it could eſtabliſh Tyranny and Miſery by Law.—He then touch'd on the Evidence; reminded the Houſe, That A.D. three Witneſſes had ſworn upon Cooke's Trial, that Goodman was not at the Place of Meeting; and obſerv'd, that even from Porter's Teſtimony, it was doubtful, whether he was there at the preciſe Time of the treaſonable Conſultation: After which he proceeded in theſe remarkable Words: "The Conſequence of This, Gentlemen ſay, they do not fear: I believe if Sir John Fenwick had been told, when he was Major-General of King James's Army, that I ſhould come here to ſit upon his Life, he would have laugh'd at it, and thought it as impoſſible as Men in great Poſts now may think the like Fate ever like to befall them: But the contrary has happen'd; and I have ſeen Parties perſecute one another with ſuch Violence, that at one Time or another every body hath been in Danger of a Proceding of this ſort againſt them, which ſurmounts all we can think of, extends beyond all Pardons, and will reach beyond the Act of Indemnity: God knows who may be ſerv'd ſo, notwithſtanding all the Acts of Indemnity. Sir, there is one Thing that is ſaid farther, which the Gentleman at the Bar concluded with as a ſubſtantial Argument, That we do not aim at Sir John Fenwick's Blood, (God forbid we ſhould) but at his Confeſſion: You here read the Bill once, and twice; will commit and paſs the Bill, (Sir John Fenwick not confeſſing) and ſtill this is not to aim at his Blood: Perhaps this Man knows no more of this Matter; yet is he as it were rack'd even to Death from Reading to Reading, becauſe he does not confeſs; and at laſt he comes to be drawn, hang'd, and quarter'd, inſtead of High-Treaſon, for not confeſſing it.

Mr. Howe.

This I take to be the moſt dangerous Part of all the Arguments that have been urg'd: For I muſt tell you, That, according to my private Opinion, I do believe, that Sir John Fenwick does know of no more Perſons concern'd, (nor does he pretend he knows all that he ſays.) But the great Argument is, Take care of your Government. In the firſt Place, they muſt ſuppoſe the Safety of the Government depends upon his Execution; Or why do they uſe it as an Argument? But how does it appear the Government would be in danger by not paſſing this Bill? Do you want Exemples of Puniſhment to deter Men? No; you have had lawful Proof againſt four or five Perſons, and they have been executed: Here are Exemples made, that no body for the future may preſume to conſpire together, and hope not to be executed: What is the Reaſon of this Bill then? Why, there is a Plot going on: Sir John Fenwick hath been impriſon'd theſe ſix Months and more, and will you hang him becauſe there is a Plot now going on? What Conſequence is that? Do you think that he knows any thing of it? It may have been ſtarted ſince his Confinement; ſo that as to what is preſs'd of his Confeſſion, I know no one Thing would be gain'd by it that could be uſeful to the Government: Will you then proceed to a Bill of Attainder, unleſs the Matter be of the greateſt Conſequence? The Preamble of the

A. D. 1696-7. Bill for attainting the Duke of Monmouth, gave a ſubſtantial Reaſon for it, That he was in Arms, and could not be brought to Juſtice: That imply'd, that if he could have been brought to Juſtice, they would not have attainted him: For my own Part, could I approve this way of proceding, which I take to be both unjuſt and dangerous, my private Opinion ſhall never guide me in ſuch a Caſe; 'tis not the ſame thing with That my worthy Countryman put in Matter of Religion; my private Opinion does not affect other Perſons: If I miſtake in That, I only ſuffer, tho' it be ſome Juſtification, being the Rule appointed by God for us to go by: But where private Opinion may be a Pretence to exerciſe private Malice, Revenge, Avarice, and Ambition, to the Deſtruction of Others, 'tis no way fit Mankind ſhould be mutually ſubjected to the One, who are ſo much inclin'd to the Other: Law has therefore been appointed for the common Safety of all our Lives, Liberties, and Eſtates; a certain Rule by which we ever thought we held them, and without which we ought not to loſe them: If that Rampart be torn down, and the arbitrary Power of private Opinion eſtabliſh'd in its room, be that plac'd where it will, 'tis a greater Blow to our Conſtitution, than any we have hitherto been threatned with: It is not, I fear, in my Power to reſtrain it; but I think it yet better to ſuffer by it, than conſent to it."

Mr. Finch. It was yet farther remarkable, That in the Courſe of the Debate, Mr. Finch, who had been Solicitor-General in part of the two preceding Reigns, and who had ſo often diſtinguiſh'd himſelf both by his Speeches and Pleadings, fell into ſuch a Diſorder, as he was endeavouring to detect and expoſe the iniquitous Nature and pernicious Conſequences of this Bill, that he was unable to procede:—But having declar'd, That his Head would not ſuffer him to trouble the Houſe any farther, ſat down in Confuſion.—

Sir R. Temple. But what he fail'd in, Sir Richard Temple abundantly ſupply'd: For, having obſerv'd, That nothing could be more dangerous than the Precedent they were about to ſet, except the Arguments us'd in ſupport of it, he proceded to ſay, "I muſt confeſs, 'tis a new Doctrine to me, That the Laws that are made by the Parliament, are to be no Rule and Guide to this Houſe: Sir, the Birth-right we have, is in our Laws; and I did ever think till now, That the Laws were not only made for Weſtminſter-Hall, but for all the Subjects of England; and eſpecially, that they were to be a Rule to the Parliament that made them, till they ſhould think fit to alter them.

Here have been great Miſtakes between the Power of Parliament and the Juriſdiction of it: The Power of Parliament is to make any Law, but the Juriſdiction of Parliament is to govern itſelf by the Law; and this, give me Leave to ſay it to you, hath been the Opinion of all your Anceſtors, and the Method they ever uſed: Shall we make a Law here in a particular Caſe againſt all the Laws of England? 'Tis Ultimum remedium & peſſimum: You may uſe it in a Caſe of abſolute Neceſſity, but otherwiſe it may be a Precedent to over-turn all.

There are ſeveral Things in making this Precedent, that overthrow all the Laws and Liberties of England: Firſt, you are paſſing Judgment upon a Man, upon one Witneſs: I have heard a ſtrange Debate to Day.

There is another Thing that is extraordinary: Here you are going to paſs an Act without any Trial at all; for to ſay This is a Trial before you, the Commons, is a Miſtake: You never did aſſume a Juriſdiction of trying any Perſon, nor can you: You may, for your own Information, hear what can be offer'd; but 'tis not a Trial where Witneſſes are not upon their Oaths. There is no manner of Power or Juriſdiction can be pretended for you to try me: That is a Second Thing: All the Bills of Attainder you have had, have been in three Caſes, where the Perſons have been either dead or fled, or have been without the Compaſs of the Law, and could not be brought to anſwer: And you have had ſome Bills of Attainder after Trials had in Weſtminſter-Hall; but never a one of Thoſe have been call'd Trials, and they have been generally revers'd.

There is another Thing in this, that I think of a moſt dangerous Conſequence; and that is, That you are making way, for what I know, by this Precedent, for a Rack; for 'tis ſaid, This is to force a Man to be an Evidence: Why, give me Leave to ſay to you, 'Tis a new way not known in England, that you will hang a Man unleſs he will confeſs or give Evidence: But I think 'tis ſomething more than a Rack; for here is drawing, hanging, and quartering in the Caſe: And I do not think this Proceding will make him an Evidence with any Credit or Reputation to this Houſe; nor am I of Opinion that he can diſcover any thing worth ſuch a Precedent.

Now give me Leave to ſay one Thing as to the Juriſdiction of Parliament. It hath paſſed here for current, That the Parliament hath a Power to declare what they will Treaſon, tho' ſo by no other Law: 'Tis the greateſt Miſtake in the World: I heard a great Debate upon this, upon my Lord Clarendon's Caſe: And it is plain, that that Statute relates only to Caſes brought from inferior Courts to Parliament: For it ſays, "That if any other Caſe ſuppoſed Treaſon, which is not in that Statute ſpecify'd, doth happen before any Juſtices, the Juſtices ſhall tarry without going to Judgment of the Treaſon, till the Cauſe ſhall be ſhew'd and declar'd before the King and his Parliament, Whether it ought to be judg'd Treaſon, or other Felony;" I ſpeak to the Juriſdiction the Parliament has by that Statute: 'Tis, that if the like Treaſons (for at Common Law there was a great many Treaſons) ſhould fall out, and be brought before inferior Courts, of which they doubted, whether they were Treaſon or no, then they ſhould be brought before the Parliament, to judge whether they were Treaſon or Felony: But how ſhall they judge? By the Laws in being: And who is this Judgment in? Not in the Parliament by Bill, but only in the Houſe of Lords:

A. D. 1696-7. Lords: Much less is it, That you may judge That to be Treason in this House, that was not so by the Law before: So that give me Leave to say, therefore, there is no such Power reserv'd to the Parliament, to declare any thing Treason that is not Treason before.

I must say, 'tis of the last Consequence, that we should make a Law in a particular Case, to take away from him all the Liberty that belongs to a Subject: Some Gentlemen talk of the great Favour he hath had at this Bar; I know not what to think of it; I am sure you allow'd the King's Council such Privileges as I never see before; and that was to offer That for Evidence, which every body acknowledg'd was not so; and I do not think any body would think it a great Favour to be heard in this Manner, especially to Things not in the Bill.

'Tis said every Man must go according to his private Opinion, 'tis not said Judgment neither: But if we sit here to judge, we sit to judge him according to the Laws of England, and then we must judge him according to legal Proof: Will you set up a Judgment that is not only not ty'd to the Rules of Westminster-Hall, but is not ty'd to the Laws of the Land, and attaint a Man without a legal Trial, without legal Evidence, and upon one Witness, when the Law says you shall have two; and after all, say 'tis a reasonable Proceding?

Lord Digby. It is also worth remembring, That Lord Digby clos'd his Speech with a Suggestion, That if it had not been for the Vindication of the Persons accus'd by Fenwick, the Parliament would never have been troubled with that Matter, tho' the Safety of the Government was alledg'd as the Pretence for bringing it there. That Mr. R. Harley said, He would never draw a Curse upon himself and his Posterity for removing so antient a Lawmark, as that which had been so long establish'd by the Laws: That no Man should suffer for Treason, except on the Testimony of two Witnesses: And that Colonel Granville express'd himself as follows.

Col. Granville. "Sir, I would not presume to trouble you at this time of Night, was the Debate upon a less Subject than it is: But since you are going to pronounce Judgment in a Case of Life and Death, and we are told this House is above any Rule, and that we have no Precedent comes up to the Case in question, but that every Gentleman is to find out private Rules to walk by, I think it my Duty to declare by what Rule I shall govern myself in this Matter; which is this: I will deal with Sir John Fenwick to Night, as I would have Mankind deal with me, if I was in Sir John Fenwick's Place: Now, if I was indicted of Treason, and not allow'd any Trial, nor the Benefit of making my Defence according to the known Laws of the Land, I should think my Blood unjustly spilt, let me be never so guilty.

I shall not pretend to talk of your Power, which certainly hath no other Bounds but your Justice and Discretion; but I hope you will never exert the extraordinary Power that is lodg'd in you, but in such Cases as will meet with Approbation abroad. Sir, I hear our Proceedings upon this Bill of Attainder call'd a Trial, but I cannot think it any; and, with Submission, I do think we are a very unfit Court to determine this Matter: We sit in so many Capacities, 'tis hard to distinguish in what Capacity we act: Some of us are Witnesses, some are Prosecutors, some Others are accus'd: 'Tis hard to be accus'd, and to be a Judge at the same Time: I am sure I am as much concern'd as if I was accus'd myself, being so nearly related to one that is; and it is for his Innocence and Honour that I think myself bound to oppose the passing this Bill: For as no Resentment shall make me do any thing that is unjust, so I fear nothing that he can say, and I scorn to stop his Evidence, by cramming a Bill of Attainder down his Throat."

But notwithstanding all that was urg'd, or could be urg'd, by a Tory-Minority, such Tories had Court-Favour render'd the Whigs, and so determin'd were They to pay any Price for that Favour, that after the Debate had continued till near Eleven o'Clock at Night, it was resolv'd by a Majority of 182 against 128, that the Bill should be committed.

Committed it accordingly was to a Committee of the whole House: On the 20th it was carry'd thro' that Committee, and receiv'd that dreadful Addition, Of which Treasons the said Sir John Fenwick is guilty, under the Title of an Amendment: On the 23d it was reported, and order'd to be engross'd; and on the 25th, after another long and obstinate Debate, in which the Tory-Lawyers of the House, as the Prisoner's Council had before done, adopted the Principles, Authorities, and Arguments of the Whigs; and the Whigs avail'd themselves of the Subterfuges and Quirks of the Tories, the Bill was finally pass'd by 189 Voices against 156.

The Bill sent up to the Lords. All that now depended on Them, was to send it up to the Lords, which was done by the Hands of one Mr. Norris, who had reported it from the Committee to the House: And tho' it might be presum'd, That Those who told Notes so well in the House of Commons, might calculate as well in the House of Lords, there was still some room to hope, That their Lordships, in a Cause of so very delicate a Nature, would have been above holding up the Train of the Commons.

Nor ought it to be unremember'd nor unacknowledg'd, that, notwithstanding the visible Growth of Corruption and Prostitution, a glorious Stand was, on this delicate Occasion, made in that House, against the Torrent which has since so fatally and irresistibly borne down all before it.

Indeed, The Spirit to which that Stand was owing, seems to have been as unpleasing to the Courtiers of those Times, as it was favorable to the Rights and Clames of the Subject: For Bishop Burnet having said, The Debates on this Occasion were the hottest, and held the longest, of any that ever he knew; adds, in a plaintive Tone, "The Lords took a very extraordinary Method to force all their absent Members to come up:

Burnet's Complaint of the Spirit which appear'd upon it.

They

A. D. 1696-7. They ſent Meſſengers for them to bring them up, which ſeem'd to be a great Breach on their Dignity; for the Privilege of making a Proxy, was an undoubted Right belonging to their Peerage: But thoſe who intended to throw out the Bill, reſolv'd to have a full Houſe."

As to the Debates which aroſe among their Lordſhips, it may be ſurmis'd, they were in ſubſtance pretty much the ſame with Thoſe which had been exhauſted in the Commons: But, whether they were or not, the partial Account given by the Prelate juſt quoted, is the only account we have of them; and That is not worth a Repetition.

It muſt then ſuffice to obſerve, That never was the Court harder drove than upon this Occaſion; and that never did any Court before perſiſt ſo obſtinately in a Meaſure ſo manifeſtly odious to ſo great a Part of the Nation: For out of One Hundred and Twenty-nine Lords Spiritual and Temporal, the united Intereſts and Paſſions of the King and his Miniſters, could carry a Majority but of Seven, on paſſing the Bill: And no leſs than Forty-one, of whom Eight were Biſhops, join'd in the following Proteſt, which the Hiſtorian of his own Times has, more politically than honeſtly, entirely over-look'd.

The Proteſt againſt it.

We whoſe Names are underwritten do diſſent, for the Reaſons following.

Becauſe Bills of Attainder againſt Perſons in Priſon, and who are therefore liable to be tried by Law, are of dangerous Conſequence to the Lives of the Subject; and, as we conceive, may tend to the Subverſion of the LAws of this Kingdom.

Becauſe the Evidence of Grand-Jurymen, of what was ſworn before them againſt Sir John Fenwick, as alſo the Evidence of the Petty-Jurymen, of what was ſworn at the Trial of other Men, were admitted here; both which are againſt the Rules of Law; beſides that they diſagreed in their Teſtimony.

Becauſe the Information of Goodman in writing was receiv'd, which is not by Law to be admitted; and the Priſoner, for want of his appearing Face to Face, as is requir'd by Law, could not have the advantage of croſs-examining him.

And it did not appear by any Evidence, that Sir John Fenwick, or any other Perſon employ'd by him, had any way perſuaded Goodman to withdraw himſelf; and it would be of very dangerous Conſequence, that any Perſon ſo accus'd, ſhould be condemn'd: For by this Means a Witneſs, who ſhould be found inſufficient to convict a Man, ſhall have more Power to hurt him by his Abſence, than he could have had if he were produc'd viva voce againſt him.

And if Goodman had appear'd againſt him, yet he was ſo infamous in the whole Courſe of his Life, and particularly for the moſt horrid Blaſphemy which was prov'd againſt him, that no Evidence from him could or ought to have any Credit, eſpecially in the Caſe of Blood.

So that in this Caſe, there was but one Witneſs, viz. Porter; and he, as we conceive, a very doubtful one. A. D. 1696-7.

Laſtly: Becauſe Sir John Fenwick is ſo inconſiderable a Man, as to the endangering the Peace of the Government, that there needs no neceſſity of proceding againſt him in this extraordinary Manner.

Huntingdon, Thanet, N. Dunelm', R. Bath and Wells, Craven, Carliſle, Nottingham, H. London, Gil. Hereford, Willoughby, Kent, R. Ferrers, Granville, Fitzwalter, Hallifax, Lindſey, P. Winton', Arundell, Lempſter, Hereford, Carnarvon, Jonat. Exon', Jeffreys, Northumberland, Abington, Hunſdon, Chandos, Scarſdale, Normanby, Weymouth, Tho. Menev', Dartmouth, Suſſex, Northampton, Bath, Tho. Roſſen', Briſtol, Leeds, Rocheſter, Leigh, Wiloughby de Broke.

But tho' the ſaid Hiſtorian-Biſhop has over-look'd this remarkable Proteſt, he has ſtarted another Affair, which in part grew out of Fenwick's Caſe, alike for the Sake of exculpating the Duke of Shrewſbury, and blackening the Earl of Monmouth; but, as uſual, neither tells the whole Truth, nor confines himſelf to nothing but the Truth, nor even ſo models the Story he tells, as to clear it of Inconſiſtency.

According to him, There was one Smith, a Nephew of Sir William Perkins, who had, for ſome Time, been in Treaty at the Duke of Shrewſbury's OFFICE, pretending he could make great Diſcoveries, &c. And had ſent many dark and ambiguous Letters to the Duke's Under Secretary, (Vernon) containing only Hints and Scraps of Stories; had exacted a Promiſe, not to be made a Witneſs, yet never offer'd any other Witneſs, nor told where any of Thoſe he inform'd againſt were lodg'd, or how they might be taken; was always aſking more Money, bragging what he would do if he were well ſupply'd, and ſeeming to think he never had enough: "Indeed, continues his Lordſhip, before the Conſpiracy broke out, he had given ſuch Hints, that when it was diſcover'd, it appear'd, that he muſt have known much more of it than he thought fit to tell. One Letter he wrote Two Days before it was intended to have been put in Execution, ſhew'd, He muſt have been let into the Secret very far (if this was not an Artifice to lay the Court aſleep) For he ſaid, That as Things ripen'd, and came near Execution, he ſhould certainly know them better." His Lordſhip then throws in a Suggeſtion, That it was not improbable He was one of the Five whom Perkins had undertaken to furniſh, for aſſiſting in the Aſſaſſination; and that he hop'd to ſave himſelf by this pretended Diſcovery, in caſe the Plot miſcarried: And adds, "The Duke of Shrewſbury acquainted the King with his Diſcoveries; but nothing could then be made either of them or him: When the whole Plot was unravell'd, it was then manifeſt from his Letters, that he muſt have known more of it than he would own." But if it is extremely ſtrange, Burnet's Account of Smith's remarkable Caſe.

A. D. 1696-7. that these Hints of his should have contain'd so much of the Secret, and yet that nothing could be made of them or him, it is not less strange, That the King should have been made acquainted with them by the Duke, as the Bishop also asserts he was, and yet should be capable of entertaining any ill Impressions of his Grace for concealing them, as the Sequel seems to indicate:" Upon the whole, therefore, says his Lordship, he rather deserv'd a severe Punishment, than any of those Rewards, which he pretended to. He was accordingly dismiss'd by the Duke of Shrewsbury, who thought that even this Suspicious Behaviour of his (Smith) did not release him (the Duke) from keeping the Promise he had made him. Smith, thereupon, went to the Earl of Monmouth, and possess'd him with bad Impressions of the Duke of Shrewsbury, and found him much inclin'd to entertain them: He told him, That he had made great Discoveries, of which the Duke would take no Notice; and because the Duke's ill Health had oblig'd him to go into the Country, Two Days before the Assassination was intended, He put this Construction upon it, That he was willing to be out of the way when the King was to be murder'd. To fix this Imputation, he shew'd him the Copies of all his Letters; all of which, but the last more especially, had the Face of a great Discovery: The Lord Monmouth carry'd This to Court; and it made such an Impression there [which, one would think, had been impossible, if the said Discovery had been already imparted to his Majesty] that the Earl of Portland sent Smith Money, and entertain'd him as a Spy; but never could, by his Means, learn any one Piece of Intelligence: When this happen'd, the King was just going beyond Sea; so Smith's Letters were taken, and seal'd up by the King's Order, and left in the Hands of Sir William Trumbal."

Corrected from Smith's own Memoirs.

Such is the Bishop's Story: But there is a Book still extant in the Name of Smith, under the Title of Memoirs of Secret Service, by the Help of which his Lordship might, if he had thought proper, have render'd it more accurate, and of course satisfactory: For therein it appears, by several short Letters from the Duke to Smith, that his Treaty was with his Grace in Person, not merely with his Office: That it was open'd in November 94: That he was really acquainted with the State of King James's Court, because he writes largely of the Middleton and Melford-Factions, under the several Titles of Compounders and Non-compounders: That he gave Information of the Arms hid in his Uncle Perkyns's House, which were afterwards seiz'd: That on the 2d of February the Duke sent him a Bill for Twenty Pounds, and a Dismission from any farther Service: That by the Dint of his own Importunity, he was again retain'd: That his Grace agreed to take him into pay at Twenty Pounds a Quarter: That all the Money he receiv'd of the Duke, amounted but to Eighty Pounds: And that, tho' his Discoveries are not altogether so circumstantial, as a Secretary would A. D. have been glad to have them, there is scarce one of his Letters from the 16th of December 1695, that does not throw some material Light on the Design: Thus in his Letter of that Date he says, The late King had dismiss'd most of his Officers, but then it was in order to have their Service here: And that without Money, he shall not be able to keep up the necessary Interest in Goodman and Porter's Party. In another of December 23, he says, Commissions were come over, and that the Malcontents had receiv'd Instructions to prepare and be in readiness against the Junction of the Toulon and Brest Squadrons: And in a Postscript,—That the Business of the Descent had been confirm'd to him, by the Person who deliver'd out the Letters: That the Instructions were in the Hands but of few Persons; and that the Forces intended for the Invasion, were not to meet till the Fleet had left Toulon. In another Letter of January 5, he makes use of these Words, "Yesterday I was desir'd to get a List of the Forces and Colonels Names here; and also it was enquir'd into what Number of Guards did usually attend his Majesty when he goes abroad: The Intention of this, I do not as yet know: I believe it is of bad Consequence; therefore, it is necessary to double the Number, and that quickly too." January 10, he certifies, That the Person employ'd formerly about the La Hogue-Business, was come over to manage the Concert now: In a subsequent Conference with Mr. Vernon, he specifies that Major Holmes was the Person, and that he went down to Sir William Perkyns's as soon as he came over. On the 24th, he made an Offer of being instrumental to the seizing Major Holmes, which was afterwards declin'd by Mr. Vernon, for want of sufficient Evidence to justify the holding him. February 7, he earnestly desir'd an Audience of the Duke, urging, "The Storm now coming is so violent, concerted, and sudden too, that it will be a great Work to prevent it:" Which Audience being granted on the 10th, he inform'd his Grace, That Sir George Barclay was engag'd in the Affair as well as Holmes: That they had a Design upon the King; as also to seize or surprize the Guards: That Ferguson was concern'd in it: That Melfort was the principal Manager in these Undertakings, &c. Being requir'd in a Letter from Vernon, dated the 12th, to put his Informations in writing, he did so: These Informations are dated the 14th, the very Day that Pendergrass made his first Appearance as a Discoverer to the Earl of Portland, and contain, among other Particulars, the following:—"But the Affair of the greatest Expedition, and not yet communicated but to a Few, and they to be Undertakers, is This, To carry off the King, and that quickly too: There will be at least Sixty commission'd officers to do it: When they have beat the Guards, They are to force the King to ride with Them, and a Vessel is ready to carry him to France: The Orders,

21

A. D. 1696-7. as they say, are not to abuse his Person: And when the King is there, (for the Vessel will be over in a few Hours) whilst the Nation is in a Consternation for the Person of the King, then the French will appear, and bring over the late King."

Now, that this perfectly agreed with Charnock's Notion, That to seize the King in his Winter-Quarters, was a military Action, altogether justifiable by the Laws of Arms, is apparent: And, if it is altogether as apparent, That, if the Design was communicated to none but Undertakers, and he was really in the Secret of the Design, he must have been one of the Undertakers himself; it ought to be be remember'd, That he made no Scruple of informing the Duke, that he intended to appear as such among the Conspirators, in order to get at the Bottom of their Design, and so much the more effectually to defeat it: That he demanded 50 l. to buy a Horse, and equip himself for the Service; and that Mr. Vernon, by his Grace's Order, did actually offer him 20 l. which he refusing at first, as too little, and afterwards demanding, They, in their Turn, refus'd to part with it.

But neither was this the last Letter, which more especially had the Face of a great Discovery: For being requir'd to be still more particular, on the 19th he farther inform'd his Grace, That the Number of the Conspirators who had undertaken the Seizure were Fifty: That they had bought Horses and Furniture: That on receiving Intelligence of the King's Purpose to go Abroad, they were to be dispos'd by Twos and Fours at the Inns of the adjacent Villages, habited as Country Gentlemen: That besides this Body, they were to have another of Twenty-five Footmen in ambuscade: And that among the Persons employ'd, were Barclay, who had the chief Command, Major Holmes, Captain Charnock, Captain Porter, Chambers and Boyce.

But, notwithstanding the Face of a great Discovery, which these Letters wore, and the concurrent Testimony which the Government had receiv'd in this Interval, from Fisher, Pendergrass, Porter, &c. the Answer to these Letters was, That the Duke was going out of Town for three or four Days, and he thought it would be Time enough to consider of his (Smith's) Demands at his Return: So that it must be concluded either, That the Intelligence given as above to Lord Portland and Sir W. Trumbal, was not communicated to the Duke of Shrewsbury, which would prove the King plac'd no Confidence in him; or that his Grace had very little Zeal for his Master's Service or Safety.

It is true, that Smith appear'd extremely careful, not to impart any Circumstance that might put it into the Power of the Government to force him to turn Evidence, which he had expressly provided against; and in his Conferences both with the Duke and his Deputy, stood more on the reserve, than was consistent with his Professions in his Letters: But then it is also as true, That his Grace so apparently starv'd the Cause, that Smith had some Reason to husband his Intelligence, for fear of being starv'd himself, when he could be no longer of any Service. A. D. 1696-7.

But when Smith was induc'd to publish his Memoirs of Secret Service, one Richard Kingston, a Clergyman, set forth an Answer to it, under the Title of, A modest Answer to Captain Smith's immodest Memoirs, &c. in which he not only asserts and maintains, That the said Book was writ by Tom Brown, a facetious but scurrilous Writer of those Times, but also, That the Letters inserted therein, to the Duke of Shrewsbury and Mr. Vernon, were in several Places corrected, amended, alter'd, and several Additions made to them, as he could prove by the very Copy sent to the Press, which had been deliver'd into his Hands by Smith's Printer and Bookseller:—And with this Impeachment on Smith's Character and Ingenuity, we shall leave the Merits of his Case in Suspence, till we have brought forward another Scene of Sir John Fenwick's Tragedy, in which both Lord Monmouth and Smith were Parties, and by the Means of which the Latter, as we shall see, was first brought on the public Stage. The Charge of one Kingston against Smith.

And here it is necessary to make another Reference to the very busy, very notable, Historian of his own Times, who proceeds with his Tale in these Words.

" This Matter [of Smith's, that is to say] lay quiet, till Fenwick began to make Discoveries: And when Lord * * * [Monmouth] understood, that he had not nam'd himself (about which he express too vehement a Concern) but that he had nam'd Lord Shrewsbury, it was said, That he had enter'd into a Negotiation with the Dutchess of Norfolk, that she should, by Fenwick's Lady, encourage him to persist in his Discoveries; and that he dictated some Papers to the Dutchess, that should be offer'd to him, as an additional one; in which, many little Stories were related, which had been told the King, and might be believ'd by him: And by these, the King might have been dispos'd to believe the rest of Fenwick's Paper: And the whole ended in some Discoveries concerning Smith, which would naturally occasion his Letters to be call'd for, and then they would probably have had great effect. The Dutchess of Norfolk declar'd, That he had dictated all these Schemes of his to her, who copied them, and handed them to Fenwick; and that he had left one Paper with her: It was short, but contain'd an Abstract of the whole Design; and referr'd to a larger one, which he had only dictated to her: The Dutchess said, she had placed a Gentlewoman, who carried her Messages to Fenwick's Lady, to overhear all that pass'd; so that she both had another Witness, to support the Truth of what she related, and a paper left by him with her. She said, That Fenwick would not (l) be guided by him; and said, he would not Burnet's Account of Lord Monmouth's Practices on Fenwick, and of Smith's Examination before the Lords.

(l) Turn to Page 687, Col. 1. and also to Mr. Tindal's Continuation, Vol III. P. 337. where he asserts, That Fenwick was advis'd and induc'd by the Earl of Peterborough (at this Time Earl of Monmouth's only) to set up a Counterplot, by impeaching several of the King's best Friends.

A.D. 1696-7. not meddle with contriv'd Diſcoveries: That thereupon this Lord was highly provok'd: He ſaid, if Fenwick would follow his Advice, he would certainly ſave him; but if he would not, he would get the Bill to paſs: And, indeed, when the Matter was depending, he ſpoke two full Hours in the Houſe of Lords, in favour of the Bill, with a peculiar Vehemence. Fenwick's Lady, being much provok'd at this, got her Nephew, the Earl of Carliſle, to move the Lords, that Fenwick might be examin'd, concerning any Advices that had been ſent him, with relation to his Diſcoveries: And upon this, Fenwick told what his Lady had brought him; and thereupon, the Dutcheſs of Norfolk, and her Confident, were likewiſe interrogated, and gave the Account which I have here related: In concluſion, Smith's Letters were read, and he himſelf was examin'd: This held the Lords ſeveral Days: For the Earl of Portland, by the King's Orders, produc'd all Smith's Papers: By them it appear'd, that he was a very inſignificant Spy, who was always inſiſting in his old Strain of aſking Money, and taking no Care to deſerve it."

Thus we are to ſuppoſe, That we have the whole of the Caſe before us, with reſpect to the Duke of Shrewſbury and Smith; and from ſuch a Proof of Fenwick's Abhorrence of falſe Accuſations, and his Ingenuity in diſcovering the Practices try'd upon him, find ourſelves ſtrangely embaraſs'd as to the Affair of his Informations, which had been ſo peremptorily pronounc'd Falſhoods and Forgeries by the Houſe of Commons.

further corrected.

But we are now to ſhew, That this was not the whole of Smith's Affair: While the Duke was abſent, he had, as he ſays himſelf, been importunate with Mr. Vernon, to be introduc'd to his Majeſty, and had complain'd of ill Uſage; after which, on his Grace's Return, he was ſweeten'd with the ſame Note of 201. which had been offer'd him before, and which made up the abovemention'd 801. But then he was, at the ſame Time, requir'd to give up one Hewet, a Meſſenger to the Party, from whom he had procur'd much of his Intelligence; and accordingly did furniſh ſuch Inſtructions for the taking him, that he was taken the next Day: And now he was not only frown'd upon, as often as he made his Appearance at the Secretary's Office, but was ſeiz'd at his Lodging by a Meſſenger, accompany'd with ſeveral Soldiers, together with his Papers; but, having, by a happy Preſence of Mind, or the Effect of a ſtrong Perſuaſion, That his Patron would not have treated him in ſo rough a way, acquainted the Meſſenger, there was another Captain Smith, who lodg'd in the ſame Neighbourhood, and over-borne him with Aſſurances, That He could not be the Perſon intended by his Grace, the Meſſenger apprehended the other, and took off the Guard, which he had till then left on him and his Papers: The Warrant was nevertheleſs againſt him; and he was again ſeiz'd the next Day by the ſame Meſſenger at White-Hall, where he was at Dinner: What was propos'd by this Treatment, was to oblige him to confront Hewet, notwithſtanding the Promiſe given him, That he ſhould not be made a Witneſs. To obtain his Liberty, he did confront Hewet: And having ſo done, offer'd to confront Ferguſon (who was alſo taken with Hewet) but this was declin'd: And after another officious but vain Attempt, for Leave to viſit his Uncle Perkyns, while under Condemnation, in order to draw a full Confeſſion from him by the Hope of a Pardon, the Door was wholly ſhut againſt him; and he was diſmiſs'd with Reprimands, for having complain'd of the Duke's Behaviour; tho' his Grace, according to Biſhop Burnet, did not think himſelf releas'd from keeping the Promiſe he had made him: Upon this, he apply'd to the Duke of Norfolk, under whom he had ſerv'd as a Captain, and afterwards, to the King's new Favourite Keppel, to be introduc'd to his Majeſty; but without effect: At laſt, reſolving to make a perſonal Puſh, he repair'd to Kenſington, and finding the Earl of Monmouth in waiting, as a Lord of the Bed-Chamber, made his Addreſſes to him; who would undertake for no more than to report his Name and Buſineſs: In ſhort, the King being on the Point of ſetting out for Flanders, He was told, his Majeſty could not ſee him; but if his Buſineſs prov'd of Conſequence, he was to be introduc'd to Sir William Trumbal: To furniſh out this Proof, he gave his Letters and Minutes to his Lordſhip, who having read and conſider'd them, did accordingly introduce him to Sir William Trumbal, who, if Smith deſerves any degree of Credit, wonder'd the King had never been made acquainted with his Services, and declar'd he himſelf had never heard the leaſt mention of them. His Papers being looſe, he then tranſcrib'd them in a Book, in order of Time: "And both the Originals and the Book (being, ſays Smith, the Proof of my Correſpondence, and undeniable Demonſtration of the Reality of my paſs'd Services) were ſeal'd up in Two Parcels, and deliver'd [to Trumbal] in the Preſence of the ſaid Earl. The Intention and Deſign of delivering up the ſaid original Papers into the Secretary's Hand, was not only to prove the Truth of my Book, but to ſecure them from any Attempt."

Upon the King's Return, Smith grew importunate for an Audience, and at length obtain'd one on the 10th of November, being introduc'd by the Earl of Portland; and having preſented to his Majeſty the Book of Correſpondence, "went away fully ſatisfy'd with the Honour he had receiv'd, and the Belief, [theſe are the Words of his own Memoirs] that his Majeſty was ſenſible of the Truth and Greatneſs of his Services."

Thus far this inſignificant Spy was countenance'd by his Majeſty himſelf, (a Circumſtance which the Hiſtorian of his own Times has carefully forgot) and, waiting ſoon after on Mr. Secretary Trumbal, was told by him, in the Preſence of Lord Monmouth, That his Majeſty was very well ſatisfy'd with the Accounts

A.D. 1696-7. counts he had given him: and had commanded him to enquire, What he moſt lik'd, whether to ſerve in the Army, or in any other Employment? To which he added as of himſelf, That ſome Money would be order'd him for the preſent: But that Money being ſcarce, little muſt ſerve, till more came in.

What occur'd next, was a Note from the ſame Secretary (who ſeems to have been no more than Lord Portland's Shadow in that high Office) directing him to repair the ſame Evening to that Lord at Kenſington: He did ſo: His Lordſhip made him a Preſent of Fifty Guineas; and Sir William afterwards told him, when the Funds were ſettled, his Majeſty would reward him well for his paſt Services.

receives a Preſent of fifty Guineas.

He had afterwards another Notice from Sir William to wait on Lord Portland at Kenſington, concerning a Protection which he had ſolicited to ſkreen him from his Creditors; and was aſſur'd by him, he ſhould have a farther Supply of Money in a few Days.

And whether ſuch a Series of Conſiderations ſhewn to ſo inconſiderable a Man, was ſhewn to him out of ſtark Gratitude, for his having been the firſt Diſcoverer of the Plot, in which caſe he can be no longer eſteem'd an inſignificant Spy; or becauſe he had now the ſuperior Merit of acting the Part of an Accuſer of the Duke of Shrewſbury, the Sequel will beſt inform us.

Some other ſtrange Circumſtances in his Story.

In his Introduction he takes occaſion to intimate, That he had chang'd his Lodgings, at the Inſtance of Lord Monmouth, "leſt "the Ducheſs of Norfolk ſhould force him "to diſcover himſelf and his Correſponden-"ces, ſhe having had ſome Informations "of his Intelligence from ſome of her Huſ-"band's, the Duke of Norfolk's Family; "and This, continues He, was ſome Months "before his Lordſhip's Controverſy with "the ſaid Ducheſs in the Houſe of Lords."

In his Preface, he alſo drops another odd Circumſtance, viz. That ſcarce any body knew his Lodging but Lord Portland and Sir William Trumbal: And it is for that very Reaſon, that he ſeems to wonder, That when he was in Expectation of a ſecond Supply from that Lord, he ſhould be attack'd by a Warrant from the Houſe of Peers, and brought in Cuſtody to that Bar; being, as he ſays, altogether ignorant of the Reaſon that induc'd their Lordſhips to attack him: Burnet, as we have ſeen, admits, That Smith's Papers were produc'd by the Earl of Portland in the Houſe of Peers, by the King's Order: Smith declares, They were brought by Sir William Trumbal, ſeal'd up in the ſame Form he had left them in his Hands, and broke open in the Houſe: And it is ſcarce to be imagin'd that they were produc'd, merely to prove him an inſignificant Spy, at a Time when he was actually retain'd by the King himſelf, under the joint Patronage of the Lords Monmouth and Portland, and Mr. Secretary Trumbal: Beſides, the Duke of Shrewſbury himſelf, being call'd upon by the Houſe to lay before them the Letters he had receiv'd from Smith, and not being able, as he inform'd their Lordſhips, in writing, (for he was ſtill (m) indiſpos'd, and in the Country) to recover them, made ſo fair an Uſe of his Recollection with regard to the Contents of thoſe Letters, with an Exception to Dates, that the ſaid written Paper, which was ſet forth in print by Smith himſelf, is the ſtrongeſt Authority imaginable in favour of Smith, tho' calculated for a quite contrary Purpoſe, and the fulleſt Refutation of what the Biſhop, and that other Hiſtorian of his own Times, Kingſton, before-mention'd, has urg'd againſt him: For therein his Grace acknowledges all the great (n) Points before enumerated: So that if Tom Brown did alter any of Smith's Phraſes, it is manifeſt he offer'd no Violence to the Senſe.

A.D. 1696-7.

Laſtly:

(m) It is here to be obſerv'd, That as Biſhop Burnet often writ more than he knew, ſo Biſhop Kennet knew more than he writ; as may be gather'd from the following Paſſage, which he has ſlid into his Notes, and which is a new Authority againſt Thoſe who ignorantly maintain, That the Tories were the only Malcontents of theſe Times.

"In Truth, the greateſt Enemies to the Intereſt of the Government, were the capricious and diſobliged Friends of it: They had not found their Accounts agreeable to their Hopes: they had not obtain'd the laſt Favour they aſk'd of the King: or they had not found their Opinion and Advice anſwering always to his Judgment; or ſuch a One was a Man they could not act with; or they were denied to have their own Man: or they thought themſelves ſo neceſſary to the Government, that they might preſume to ſtand upon their own Terms: or at beſt, they were weary of Trouble and Hurry, and thought it ſome Honour to leave the Court, when it was only Indolence to enjoy themſelves: And theſe ſort of Abdicating Courtiers, did his Majeſty more Diſſervice, than any who oppoſ'd his Title and Adminiſtration from the Beginning."

(n) Which is, no doubt, the Reaſon why the Biſhop does not take the leaſt Notice of it: But Mr. Tindal, not entering into his Lordſhip's Reaſons for that Omiſſion, has inſerted it in his Notes, and yet makes uſe of the Biſhop's Text: So that he falls into the Inconſiſtencies which his Lordſhip was ſo cautious to avoid. But let the Reader judge from the Paper itſelf, which was as follows.

To the Lord Keeper.

My Lord, Exford, 13th of Jan. 1696-7.

"Having receiv'd the Commands of the Houſe of Lords, to lay before their Lordſhips what Letters I receiv'd from one Smith, in February laſt; or in caſe I had kept none, then to acquaint the Houſe with what I can remember was contain'd in them: I am very ſorry not to be able ſo fully to comply with their Lordſhips Directions as I wiſh I could; for having heard long ſince, that this Man did pretend to great Merit for his Diſcoveries, and had, on ſeveral Occaſions, in a very unhandſome Manner, complain'd of me, I did then endeavour to collect what Letters he had ſent me, that I might judge how his Intelligence appear'd when put together: for as it came to me, I could make little of it: But I found I could retrieve ſo few, and thoſe generally of an old Date, (when I had more Value for his Intelligence than I had afterwards) that I am almoſt certain I have none of thoſe Letters left, which their Lordſhips deſire to ſee. I ſhall therefore apply myſelf to give them the beſt Account I can of what he did inform, that is moſt material at this Time: which I am the better able to collect, becauſe ſeveral Things he then mention'd fell out ſo true, that I was ſurpris'd how he could know them, and not more, till I underſtood he had his Intelligence from one Hewet, a Youth that liv'd with Major Holmes's Brother, (I think) and was about that Time often employ'd to wait on Sir George Barcley: by which Means he had opportunity to gueſs or overhear Particulars, which otherwiſe I ſuppoſe he might not be truſted with. I remember in Winter, Smith writ very poſitively of an Invaſion intended from France, which was to break out at the Arrival of the Toulon Fleet: and that many Gentlemen of Quality and Officers were ſent from St. Germains on that Deſign: He nam'd Mr. Henry Brayne, my Lord Montague's Brother, at one Time: at another, Sir George Barcley, Holmes, Coaster, and others: Then he gave Hints of ſome great Deſign, which he ſhould ſoon diſcover the Bottom of: and afterwards grew more particular, that it was to ſeize the King's Perſon, and nam'd Barcley, Charnock, Holmes,

A. D. 1696-7.

Laſtly: Smith himſelf, as if conſcious he had acted the Part of an Evidence againſt the Duke of Shrewſbury, makes ſome Apology for having laid open the whole Affair in the Courſe of his Examination, by pleading the Obligations of his Oath: Hewet alſo, one of his Intelligencers, was brought to confront him at the Lords Bar, on his Grace's Behalf; not, indeed, to ſhew that his Evidence was in any reſpect untrue, but only, that he had procur'd it all at ſecond Hand; which ſhews plainly enough, That there were Two oppoſite Currents at Court at this Time: And how earneſtly both the King and his Favourite impell'd one of them, (tho' it was overborne by the other, not thro' the Inſignificancy of Smith, but the Blaſt which gave ſuch a Shock to the Credit of Lord Monmouth) may be collected not only from the Paſſages already before us, but from that out of Burnet, which follows: "The Earl of * * * [Monmouth] was upon the Accuſation and Evidence above-mention'd, ſent to the Tower, and turn'd out of all his Employments. But the Court had no Mind to have the Matter farther examin'd into: For the King ſpoke to myſelf to do all I could to ſoften his Cenſure, which he afterwards acknowledg'd I had done. I did not know what NEW Scene of Confuſion might have been open'd by him in his OWN EXCUSE." The Biſhop alſo adds, That it was believ'd the Loſs of his Places was ſecretly made up to him: And tho' Smith, immediately on the Diſgrace of his Patron, was forbid the Court, by way of Sacrifice to the Duke of Shrewſbury, he was the very next Winter, on threatning to lay his whole Caſe before Parliament, taken into pay as a Spy upon the Jacobite-Party Abroad, had one Hundred Pounds advanc'd to him, and was promis'd a Monthly Remittance; which being never paid, he return'd in ſuch a Diſpoſition, as render'd him a fit Inſtrument for the Malcontents, who made uſe of him accordingly, as we ſhall ſee in its Place.

And now we are at length come to the Cataſtrope of Fenwick's Tragedy, for whom there was no longer any Hope: For as he had incens'd ſome of the leading Grandees at Court, by his Informations, ſo it is plain, he had put himſelf out of the Reach of Mercy, by refuſing ſo obſtinately to cloſe with the Earl of Monmouth's Propoſition to become a a falſe Witneſs againſt thoſe very Men, in depoſing more than he knew, or than was in his Power to verify. According to Burnet, however, he nevertheleſs made Application to the Throne for a Reprieve, and endeavour'd to intereſt the Lords on his Behalf: But all the Anſwer he could obtain was, That the Succeſs of his Suit would depend on the Fulneſs of his Diſcoveries: The ſame Author alſo aſſerts, That for ſome Days he ſeem'd to be in Suſpence what Courſe to take: That he deſir'd to be ſecur'd, That nothing which he confeſs'd ſhould turn to his own Prejudice: That the Lords, by Addreſs to the King, deſir'd they might be at Liberty to make him that Promiſe, which was readily granted: And that upon this he farther deſir'd to be aſſur'd of a Pardon, on making a full Confeſſion, without being oblig'd to become a Witneſs; to which their Lordſhips return'd an ambiguous Anſwer to this Effect, That he had to do with Men of Honour: That he was therefore to rely on their Diſcretion: That their Mediation for him, would be ſuitable to the Sincerity and Importance of his Diſcoveries: That according to his Behaviour hitherto, it was more reaſonable for him to confide in their Candour, than for them to confide in his, &c.

But this being the ſame Language which had been us'd to him all along, he now ſaw plainly, That he had no other Choice but Death or Infamy; and gallantly preferr'd the Former. In what Place, by what Perſon, after what Form, Sentence was pronounc'd upon him, or whether in Virtue of the Act, ſuch a Ceremonial became unneceſſary, and it was in the King's Breaſt to carry it into execution, when, where, and how he pleas'd, is not remembred: But executed he certainly was by the Ax (in Complement to his Rank, and Alliance with the illuſtrious Family of the Howards) on Tower-Hill, January 28; and, as Burnet acknowledges, behav'd with great Decency and Compoſure: The ſame Writer alſo ſays, "At the Place of his Execution, he deliver'd a Paper in writing, wherein he did not deny the Facts that had been ſworn againſt him, but complain'd of the Injuſtice of the Procedure, &c." But how he dar'd to ſay ſo falſe a Thing, in a Book ſo ſolemnly dedicated to the

Fenwick executed.

[Vol. II. p. 195.]

A Fallhood of Burnet's, concerning the Paper he left.

---

and others, as employ'd in the Villany; and that at the ſame Hour this was to be executed, a general Riſing was to be in all the Counties of England. He was different in his Accounts about the Manner of ſeizing the King: Sometimes Mr. Lelia's Lodge near Richmond was to be attack'd, and the Walls ſcaled by the Foot, whilſt he was there: Sometimes an Attempt of the like Nature was to be made on Kenſington-Houſe: and at other Times, the King was to be ſet upon going to, or coming from Hunting. Near to the Day the Aſſaſſination was intended, he was very earneſt for Money to buy a Horſe and Equipage; upon which I deſir'd Mr. Vernon to talk with him, if he knew, of his own Knowledge, any Perſon engag'd in ſuch a Deſign: For being never able to bring any thing in Confirmation of what he aſſerted, from whom he had it, or at what Time it was to be executed, I ſuppoſed there was no Truth in the Story; or, if there were, I might poſſibly have ſet him out to be engag'd in it. He gave Mr. Vernon no Satisfaction upon diſcourſing with him, but proceeded in his Promiſes to him, That nothing could be attempted, but he would give him or me an Account of it: When the whole was brought to Light, and it appear'd he was not enough in the Secret to have prevented it, I intended, notwithſtanding, to have done ſomething for him, and at his own deſire conceal'd his Name, to give him an Opportunity, as he pretended, to apprehend Chambers: In the mean Time I had an Account, that in very public Places he began to threaten he would complain of me to the Parliament; whereupon I neither thought it ſafe nor decent to have any more to do with him.

What I receiv'd relating to the Attempt on his Majeſty's Perſon, or the Invaſion, I always gave the King an Account of it, whilſt I was able to assist on him; but being much indiſpos'd, I had his Majeſty's Leave to go into the Country for a few Days, where I remain'd till I was commanded back upon the happy Diſcovery of that horrid Deſign.

This, my Lord, is all I can collect on the Subject that Lordſhips are pleaſed to command: I beg the Favour it may be communicated to the Houſe, and am,

My Lord,

Your Lordſhips moſt, &c.

SUNDERLAND.

A. D. 1696-7. the God of Truth, and when the Paper itſelf was extant to bear Witneſs againſt him, who is ſo deeply vers'd in the Frauds and Forgeries of Courts, as to be able to ſolve? The very Words of Fenwick (after declaring himſelf of the Church of England, as by Law eſtabliſh'd, &c.) are Theſe.

confuted by that Paper.

"As for what I am now to die, I call God to witneſs, I went not to that Meeting in Leaden-Hall-Street, with any ſuch Intention as to invite King James by Force to invade this Nation; nor was I, myſelf, provided with either Horſe or Arms, or engag'd for any Number of Men, or gave particular Conſent for any ſuch Invaſion, as is moſt falſly ſworn againſt me.

I do alſo declare, in the Preſence of God, That I knew nothing of King James's coming to Calais, nor of any Invaſion intended from thence, till it was publicly known: And the only Notion I had that ſomething might be attempted, was from the Toulon Fleet coming to Breſt.

If there be any Perſons whom I have injur'd in Word or Deed, I heartily pray their Pardon, and beg of God to pardon thoſe who have injur'd me; particularly thoſe who with great Zeal have ſought my Life, and brought the Guilt of my innocent Blood upon this Nation; no Treaſon being prov'd upon me.

I return my moſt hearty Thanks to thoſe noble and worthy Perſons who gave me their Aſſiſtance by oppoſing this Bill of Attainder, without which, it had been impoſſible I could have fallen under the Sentence of Death: God bleſs them and their Poſterity; though I am fully ſatisfy'd they pleaded their own Cauſe while they defended mine."

And now let the moſt partial Advocate for the Hiſtorian of his own Times, defend his Veracity any longer if he can!

There was alſo another material Article in the Paper, which he cannot be excus'd for paſſing over in Silence, viz.

"I alſo call God to Witneſs, That I receiv'd the Knowledge of what is contain'd in thoſe Papers that I gave to a great Man, that came to me in the Tower, both from Letters and Meſſages that came from France; and he told me, when I read them to him, That the Prince of Orange had been acquainted with moſt of thoſe Things before."

For the reſt, it conſiſted of the two following Paragraphs, and a ſhort Prayer.

"I might have expected Mercy from that Prince, becauſe I was inſtrumental in ſaving his Life: For when about April 95, an Attempt form'd againſt him, came to my Knowledge, I did partly by Diſſuaſions, and partly by Delays, prevent that Deſign; which I ſuppoſe was the Reaſon that the laſt villanous Project was conceal'd from me.

I pray God to bleſs my true and lawful Sovereigns, King James, the Queen, the Prince of Wales, and reſtore him and his Poſterity to this Throne again, for the Peace and Proſperity of this Nation, which is impoſſible to proſper till the Government is ſetled upon a right Foot."

At the ſame Time alſo, that the Act of Attainder againſt Fenwick receiv'd the Royal Aſſent, another Act of the like Nature paſs'd againſt Barclay, Holmes, and nine more, who were fled from Juſtice, in caſe they did not ſurrender themſelves on or before the 25th of March, then next enſuing; and to detain in Cuſtody, without Bail or Mainprize, Counter, John Bernardi, Robert Caſſels, Robert Meldrum, James Chambers, Robert Blackbourne, and ſuch other Perſons as ſhould ſurrender themſelves, or be apprehended, againſt whom there was Evidence upon Oath, of their being concern'd in the late barbarous and bloody Conſpiracy, until the 1ſt of January, 1697-8, unleſs they ſhould be ſooner bail'd by Order of Council. A. D. 1696-7. Another Act of Attainder.

Thus was the Government fortify'd on all Hands as ſtrongly as it could be fortified by the Force of Terrors: For in the preceding October, before the leaſt Whiſper of this barbarous and bloody Conſpiracy had taken Air, one Thomas Pyke was hang'd at Tyburn for High-Treaſon, in going to France, according to Sentence paſs'd on him at the Old Baily; and in the very next Month one Vaughan underwent the ſame Fate, for having commanded a ſmall Privateer called the Loyal Clancarty, in the Service of France.

But, how odious ſoever the Service of France was juſtly held, and what Severity ſoever was us'd in puniſhing thoſe who enter'd into it, the ſame Solicitude was not ſhewn to render that of England proſperous.

The Conduct of the Navy examined.

At the very Opening of the Seſſion, the Commons reſolv'd themſelves into a Committee of the whole Houſe, under the ſolemn and ſpecious Pretence, of conſidering the State of the Nation; but in Reality to oppreſs Sir George Rooke by the ſame Weight of Majority which fell ſo heavily and fatally on poor Fenwick: For the whole Drift of their Enquiries regarded only this ſingle Queſtion: Why the French Toulon Squadron was not intercepted in its Way to Breſt? And Rooke was the Perſon pitch'd upon to anſwer it: Accordingly, he was order'd to attend, underwent a long Examination, was oblig'd to produce Copies of all the Orders he had receiv'd, the Letters he had ſent, the Journal he had kept; and, afterwards of all the Letters which had paſſed between him and the Secretary's Office: On the producing theſe, he was again examin'd, as were alſo Sir Cloudeſley Shovell and Admiral Mitchel, whoſe Orders and Inſtructions, together with an Account of all the Intelligence receiv'd by the Admirals from Time to Time, concerning the ſaid Toulon Squadron, were taken into Conſideration next: And when the Public, after ſo much Amuſement and Expectation, were become impatient for a ſuitable, Iſſue a Motion for Candles put an End to the whole Proceeding; it may be preſumed with the Conſent of all Parties; for the Houſe adjourn'd, and it was heard of no more.

Report of the Committee on Trade.

In the ſame Interval alſo a Committee was appointed to inſpect the Trade of the Kingdom, who made a very ſeaſonable and ſenſible

A. D. 1696-7. sensible Report to the House, in which the Dearness of Labour, the Exportation of Wool (properly called the selling the Trade instead of the Commodities of the Kingdom) the Running prohibited Goods, the pernicious Practice of Stock-Jobbing, and the Neglect of our Fisheries, are set forth as the principal Reasons why the Commonwealth was not in so flourishing a State as had been expected, and might be attain'd; and the Encouragement of our Plantation Trade, particularly in Sugars, Tobacco, and naval Stores, were earnestly recommended to the Consideration of Parliament.

Votes and Addresses on the Loss at Newfoundland.

Nor did Those concern'd in the Newfoundland Trade, and who had suffered greatly by the Attack which the French had made on our Settlements, &c. in those Parts, the Summer preceding, fail to remonstrate their Case in a Variety of Petitions, which were referred to a Committee, and after Examination, produced the following Resolutions, viz. "That the Trade to Newfoundland doth very much promote Navigation, increase Seamen, and is of great Profit to this Nation, and of Advantage to us in the Balance of Trade. That the great Losses sustain'd in the Newfoundland Trade, were occasion'd through Want of a sufficient Number of Men of War to secure its Harbours, and to protect the Fishery. That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, That a competent Number of Men of War and Land Forces be sent as soon as conveniently may be to regain the lost Harbours in Newfoundland, to cruise on that Coast, to guard the Fishery, and annoy the Enemy trading to those Parts."

The King's Answer.

Such an Address was accordingly presented, and the Answer his Majesty was pleased to return was to this Effect, "That he had and would take all imaginable Care for retrieving so beneficial a Trade."

Nor was this the only public Reprimand which the Government receiv'd from this Parliament after their own Hearts, on the Behalf of our suffering Trade; notwithstanding that Boast of Burnet's formerly touch'd upon, That our Affairs at Sea went well this Year: For a little Fleet of Merchant-Ships from Ireland and the West of England to Flanders having fallen into the Hands of the Enemy in their Passage from Spithead, about the Middle of February the Owners petition'd the House of Commons for an Enquiry into the Affair, and made it appear, that timely Intelligence of the Enemy's Purpose had been communicated by one Mr. Bowen to one Mr. Brightman, Secretary of the Admiralty: Upon this both Brightman and Bowen were order'd to attend: The latter produc'd a Letter from Ostend dated the 5th O. S. giving an Account, That the Dunkirk-Squadron was gone out, in order to lie in wait for the said Merchant-Ships; and said, He had receiv'd it the 8th; as also, that he had given an Abstract of it to Brightman on the 9th; and the said Letter having been read, the House came to the following Resolution, viz. That the said Letter was a sufficient Ground for the Lords of the Admiralty, to communicate the Intelligence it contained to the Port of Dover and other Ports, for the better Security of Trade: But tho' a notorious Neglect was thus unanswerably proved on the Admiralty-Board, and the Nation incurr'd such a Loss by it, no Censure was pass'd either on their Lordships or their Secretary.

Petition of the Owners of certain Merchant Ships taken by the Enemy.

Some Points were also brought before the House, which seem'd to be levell'd personally at the King: Of this Kind was the Calling for the Copies of the Dockets of Grants of Crown Lands, and Sums of Money during the preceding Year; which was done merely for the Sake of exposing his Majesty's Profusion to his foreign Favourites, Zuyleſtein whom he had created Earl of Rochford, and Bentinck Earl of Portland: But the Latter, appris'd of their Purpose, prudently enough took Care to sacrifice a Grant by Tally of 24,571 l. 5*s.* 4*d.* as a free Gift to the Envy of the House, and thereby made his Peace for the present: For these Copies of Grants were accompany'd with a Certificate signifying, That his Lordship had voluntarily vacated the said Grant: And to make him some Recompence in Honour, for this Drawback (if it was not a Feint) on his other Acquisitions, as also to shew how determin'd he, the King was, to distribute his Favours his own Way, his Majesty, soon after, was pleas'd to bestow the Garter upon him.

Grants of Crown-Lands &c. call'd for.

Address against Colonel Villiers.

Another of these Points was This: Colonel Villiers presuming on the Protection of a favourite Lady at Court, had made bold with the Pay of his Regiments, had refus'd to come to any Account with his Officers, and committed various Irregularities, which brought on a Complaint against him in the House of Commons, and that again produc'd an Address to his Majesty, who was pleas'd to answer, That he would give Order to have the Accounts stated, and that Right should be done.

The remarkable Case of Conrade Greibe.

Lastly: The Petition of one Mary Greibe having been presented to the House, and referred to a Committee, the said Committee in their Report set forth, That Conrade Greibe, the Husband of the said Mary Greibe, having undertaken to deliver two Petitions in Behalf of certain Officers and Soldiers turn'd out of Count Steinbock's Regiment to the King and Parliament, was the Day before seiz'd by one Kitson, a Messenger, by Warrant from Mr. Secretary Trumbal, charging him with treasonable Practices: That he was kept ten Days in the said Messenger's House; during which Time he had often been refus'd an Examination: And that at last, about Two or Three o'Clock in the Morning, he was taken out of the Custody of the said Messenger by a Party of the Dutch Guards, who carry'd him on board a Dutch Vessel, from whence he was convey'd to Brussels, where he was thrown into a Dungeon and subsisted on Bread and Water only.

What follow'd, was a Resolution for an Address, That his Majesty would be pleas'd to cause the Informations against Greibe to be laid

A. D. 1696-7. laid before the Houſe, and ſuch an Addreſs was prepar'd and preſented accordingly; to which he was pleas'd to return a written Anſwer to the following Effect. "That upon the Diſcovery of the late Conſpiracy againſt his Perſon and Government, the ſaid Greibe was taken into Cuſtody amongſt other ſuſpected Perſons, as concern'd in that Plot; and, about the ſame Time, ſeveral Informations being ſent and deliver'd to his Majeſty, whereby he appear'd to be a very dangerous Perſon, his Majeſty thought it for his Safety not to ſuffer him, being an Alien, to continue longer in this Kingdom; and did order the Duke of Wirtemburgh, who was then going for Flanders to tranſport him thither, in order to ſend him to the Elector of Brandenburgh, his natural Prince, which was done accordingly, and the ſaid Greibe was deliver'd to the General of the ſaid Elector, who was by him appointed to receive him.

Thus the Informations, required by the Addreſs, were not only refus'd, tho' in a Manner ſome what indirect, but under the Cover of the Plot, one of the moſt arbitrary Actions was acknowledged to the Teeth of the Legiſlature, that ever had been committed in England. The Man, tho' an Alien, was accountable to the Laws, while a Sojourner here, and therefore, was entitled to their Protection; nor was there any one Plea in the Anſwer, which could ſatisfy a conſcientious Man, that either ſuch an extraordinary Exertion of Power, or the Apology for it, became the Character of a Deliverer. The Commons, however, affected to be ſatisfied; or at leaſt acquieſced in Silence; for no more was ſaid of the Affair.

Tokens that the Commons were in Diſgrace with the People.

But even the Commons themſelves had, for ſome Time paſſed, been grown gradually more and more odious and contemptible in the Eyes of the Public: And of This they were made ſenſible by ſeveral Incidents which occurr'd in the Courſe of this very Seſſion. For a Committee having been appointed to enquire into the Abuſes of Priſons, they were appriſed by two ſeveral Witneſſes, That one Tilly, at that Time Warden of the Fleet, and accuſed of acting arbitrarily in his Office, had boaſted of bribing a Committee of Parliament, in order to obtain the Act, by which he had been enabled to purchaſe the ſaid Office of an Infant, in whom the Right lay; and had ſaid, That Commons, Lords, Judges, Privy-Counſellors, and all, were to be induced, by palming, as he phras'd it, to do any Thing: They were alſo appriſed by two other Witneſſes, that one Francis Duncomb had alſo reported, he had diſtributed Money to ſeveral Members; and when This was reported to the Houſe it was ordered, that both Duncomb and Tilly ſhould be taken into Cuſtody: It alſo appears, by the Journal of the Houſe, That one Markham, and one Glover, were, about the ſame Time, accuſed of having ſpoke ſcandalous Words of the Houſe; and that the Houſe did not think proper to procede with the Rigour uſual in the like Caſes againſt them; becauſe of the turbulent Spirit which, at this Time, rag'd amongſt the Populace. It is true, they A. D. 1696-7. did make an Order for taking the Former into Cuſtody; but it does not appear, That it ever was executed: And when the Queſtion was put, with Regard to the Latter, it paſſed in the Negative; and to conceal what had happen'd, an Order was made, That the ſaid Queſtion ſhould not be printed in the Votes.

It is, however, proper to obſerve, That this turbulent Spirit did not ariſe immediately, either from theſe Informations, or the Reſentment they cauſed in the Houſe: All Perſons converſant in Trade, either practically or ſpeculatively, were, at this Time, divided in their Opinions, as to the Introduction or Prohibition of India Silks: And a Bill had been brought into Parliament to reſtrain the Wearing them: At the Head of Thoſe who embrac'd the former Opinion, appeared Dr. Davenant, ſo juſtly famous for his political Writings; and on this Occaſion it was, That he ſet forth his Eſſay on the Eaſt-India Trade: But, how rational ſoever his Opinions were in general, ſo loud was the popular Cry on the other Side, that they could not be heard without Doors, tho' they had their full Weight within: And when it appeared, that the Bill was likely to be drop'd, the Populace were let looſe to Tumultuous Application in behalf of a Bill. enforce it by the Dint of Clamours and Importunities, if not of Menaces and Violencies: But tho' the Houſe was in a Manner inveſted by the Mob, (as the Eaſt-India Houſe had alſo been) who had taken Poſſeſſion of all the Paſſages leading to it, they would not ſuffer themſelves to be forced from their Purpoſe: On the Contra- Order and Vote thereon. ry, They ordered the Sheriffs, and Juſtices of the Peace for Weſtminſter and Middleſex, to diſperſe theſe outrageous Suitors; they reſolved, That the inciting and encouraging any Number of Perſons to come in a riotous Manner, either to hinder or promote the paſſing any Bill depending before the Houſe, being againſt the Conſtitution and Freedom of Parliament, was a high Crime and Miſdemeanor; and they appointed a Committee to enquire who were the Authors of this Tumult, which, in a ſolemn Addreſs to the King, the Company of Weavers thought fit both to diſown and expreſs their Deteſtation of.

But as if to make amends for the Loſs of Account of Bills loſt. a Bill ſo popular as this were, Two others altogether as unpopular, was loſt with it, viz. A Bill for a general Naturalization; and a Bill for regulating printing Preſſes; by which among other Things it was provided, That no News-Paper ſhould be publiſhed without a Licence, under certain Pains and Penalties therein mentioned.

Several other Bills were alſo loſt of different Natures, which, for very obvious Reaſons, deſerve to be mentioned; as, A Bill to prevent the Buying and Selling of Offices and Places of Truſt, which was one of the crying Sins of theſe Times; for the public Service was generally bought and ſold with them: A Second, To prevent the undue Marriages of Infants: Which ought rather to have been to prevent the Marriages of

A. D. 1696-7. Infants as undue: A Third, To settle and regulate the Trade to Africa: And a Fourth, To encourage the Woolen Manufacture of England, and to prevent the Exportation of That of Ireland to foreign Parts.

But of all the Bills which met with this Fate during this Session, That for regulating the Elections of Members to serve in Parliament created the most Speculation: The Gentlemen, who compos'd the Minority, observing, that many of the Court-Phalanx were mere Adventurers, who had scarce a visible Livelihood to exempt them from Parish Persecution, entertained a Notion, not altogether unplausible, That the Votes of these Parliament-Switzers contributed more to their Daily Bread than their Prayers; and thence inferr'd, that Men of Property were the most likely to act as Men of Principle, or true Representatives of their Country: These, at least, were the Pretences for the Bill; which provided, That none but such as were Land-Owners to a certain Value, should be in a Capacity of serving. The Court, on the other Hand, who knew most and best the Importance of Corruption, and the Expediency of defending every Out-work and Approach which led to it, set all their Engines at work to defeat it, tho' they proceeded in the House of Commons at least with all the Caution imaginable: For they harangu'd on the Danger of prescribing the Qualifications of Candidates, and of such an apparent Encroachment as This was on the Liberties of the Electors: Enlarg'd on the Reasonableness of leaving the Nation at perfect Freedom, in a Proceeding which regarded their Freedom most: And argued, "That it seem'd both unjust and cruel, That if a poor Man had so fair a Reputation, as to be chosen, notwithstanding his Poverty, by Those who were willing to pay him Wages, he should be branded with an Incapacity, because of his small Estate: That Corruption in Elections, was rather to be apprehended from the Rich, than from the Poor, &c." They also stimulated the People in many Parts of the Kingdom, to petition against it, because it seem'd calculated to incapacitate Merchants, who were Men of Property, tho' not Land-Owners, from sitting: But this Objection was remov'd by a Clause which provided, That any Merchant, being a natural-born Subject of England, who was worth 5000*l.* in real and personal Estate, might be elected; under this Restriction, That no Man should be esteem'd a Merchant for having Money in the Bank, or any other Company: And this Expedient appearing to be satisfactory without Doors, the Bill was pass'd, and sent up to the Lords, who thought fit to reject it on the second Reading; the Number on the Division being 62 against 37: And of the Latter, 14 entering their Protest for this Reason, viz. Because They conceiv'd the Provision made in the Bill, to be most agreeable to the Constitution and true Interest of this Kingdom.

Burnet.

and Bills pass'd.

And now all that remains, in order to bring the Session to a Close, is to specify such national Bills as have not been touch'd on already, and yet did receive the Royal Assent, April 1, and April 16, when the King put an End to it, viz. An Act for punishing Mutiny. An Act for enlarging High-ways. An Act for preventing Frauds in Brewers, &c. An Act for the Relief of Creditors. An Act for lessening the Duty on Tin and Pewter exported, and granting an equivalent Duty on Drugs. An Act to make perpetual, and render more effectual, an Act to prevent Delays at the Quarter-Sessions. An Act to enforce the Act for the Increase and Encouragement of Seamen. An Act for raising the Militia for the Year 1697. An Act for the further Encouragement of the Manufactures of Lustrings and Alamodes, and for preventing the Importation of the same. An Act for the better Observation of the Course antiently us'd in the Exchequer. An Act for the easier obtaining Partitions of Lands held in Coparcenary, &c. An Act for the Supply of some Defects in the Laws for the Relief of the Poor. An Act for the more effectual Relief of Creditors in Cases of Escapes, and for preventing Abuses in Prisons and pretended privilege Places. And an Act to restrain the Number and ill Practices of Brokers and Stock-jobbers, which in the Preamble of the said Act, were said to be such as were not only extremely prejudicial to the public Credit of this Kingdom, and to the Trade and Commerce thereof, but such, as if not timely prevented, might ruin the Credit of the Nation, and endanger the Government itself.

A. D. 1697.

As to the gracious Speech from the Throne, it was as follows.

King's Speech.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

Having given my Assent to the several Bills you have presented to me, I am now to return you my hearty Thanks for what you have done this Session; which has been carried on with great Prudence, Temper, and Affection.

At the Opening of the Session, I told you how sensible I was of the Difficulties to be struggled with, which were of such a Nature, that, I will freely own, the Hopes I had of our being able to overcome them, were founded only upon the Wisdom and Zeal of so good a Parliament.

My Expectation has been fully answer'd; you enter'd upon the Business with so much Chearfulness, proceeded so unanimously, and have at last brought Things to such a Conclusion, that we may hope to carry on the War with Success, in case our Enemies do not think it their Interest to agree to an honorable Peace: And so effectual a Provision being made for supplying the Deficiencies of former Funds, (which is the best Foundation for re-establishing of Credit) I doubt not but in a short Time it will have a very happy Effect, to the universal Ease and Satisfaction of my People.

The Circumstances of Affairs making it necessary for me to be out of the Kingdom for some Time, I shall take care to leave the Administration of the Government, during my Absence, in the Hands of such Persons as I can depend upon.

A. D. 1697. My Lords and Gentlemen,

I have nothing more to ask of you, but that you would carry down the same good Disposition into your several Countries, which you have expres'd in all the Procedings of this Session."

Now, of Two Bishops that have writ the History of these Times, one Burnet, makes no mention at all of this Speech; and the other, Kennet, who gives it verbatim, takes no care to point out those remarkable Words, I shall take care to leave the Administration, &c. to the particular Attention of his Readers: And yet they relate to one of the most memorable Incidents in his Reign; namely, his Majesty's taking that very Lord Sunderland into his Service, who was so justly obnoxious to all Parties alike, both for his violent Councils, and acknowledg'd Treacheries to King James: As we have already seen. He had been long a distinguish'd Favourite, but hitherto had prompted only behind the Curtain; and now when he was brought forward to act a principal Part on the public Theatre, it was held requisite for the King, on this solemn Occasion, to make use of some such Expressions as should amount to a Declaration, That he himself would be responsible for his Fidelity.

Lord Sunderland made Lord Chamberlain, and out of the Lords Justices.

Whether they were at first understood or attended to, at this Distance of Time is hard to be determin'd: But when it was known the Earl of Dorset had been induc'd to take a large Sum of Money, in lieu of the Lord Chamberlain's Place, to make room for him at Court, and he was appointed one of the Lords Justices in the King's Absence, it must be concluded, That they were no longer a Mystery to any Body; and that the Reflections made on such an Avowal of so intimate a Connection, were suitable to the Occasion.

That it was a Step extremely mortifying to the Whig-Undertakers at Court, can scarce be doubted; and probably the long and fierce Opposition, which they maintain'd against the Act of Grace, in part arose from their Apprehensions of his Ascendancy, and their Resolution of throwing all manner of Obstacles in his way.

In virtue of a Compromise with the Whig leaders.

From Circumstances it moreover appears, That with all the Weight the King could throw into his Scale, his Admission into the Service, was the Result of a sort of Compromise: For at the same Time the Lord-Keeper Somers was made a Lord, and farther dignify'd with the Title, Power, and Pre-eminence of Lord High Chancellor; and Admiral Russel was not only created Earl of Orford, but also appointed one of the Lords Justices, tho' to make room for him, Lord Godolphin, first Commissioner of the Treasury, who had been of the Regency the two preceding Years, was left out.

This is all that can be trac'd from such Vestigies as Time has left us of our Court-History at this Crisis: And, indeed, of our domestic Concerns in general, we have nothing more to add that deserves a Place in History: For Scotland was all this while intent on nothing but the Establishment of their new India-Company, in Conformity to the Charter they had receiv'd, and in contempt of the Displeasure of England: And as to Ireland, to say, That the Marquis of Winchester, Lord Galway, (now made an Earl) and the Lord Viscount Villiers, were associated in the Government there, with the Stile and Title of Lords Justices; and that Mr. Methuen was appointed Lord Chancellor of that Kingdom, in the Room of Sir Charles Porter, who did not long survive his Antagonist Capel, is to say nothing: For as long as a Period is undistinguish'd by new Measures or Incidents, it derives no new Colour from new Names. A. D. 1697.

But then, before we resume the Thread of Foreign Affairs, some Notice must be taken of an Occurrence, that was just hinted at in the Close of that Section which treated of the Conduct of our Marine, during the last Summer.

It was hinted, that Sir Cloudesley Shovel had been sent with a Fleet to look into Brest, on a Suspicion, that the Enemy were making Preparations there for a Descent; and that tho' the said Suspicion was groundless, they nevertheless did send a Squadron to Sea, on a very important Errand.

M. Pointis's Expedition to the West-Indies.

That Squadron consisted of seven large Men of War, about ten Frigates, Victuallers, Tenders, &c. mann'd with 2260 Seamen, and 1750 Soldiers, under the Command of M. Pointis, who had form'd a Scheme three Years before of waging a sort of piratical War in the Spanish West-Indies, and with the Permission of his Court, had induc'd several private Persons to be Adventurers in the Charge, for the Sake of being Sharers in the Profits.

We are told King William himself was the Person who by his own Sagacity, not the Goodness of his Intelligence, first discover'd the real Destination of this Squadron: But upon what Authority this Incense is offer'd to his Majesty's Memory, is not over-easy to trace: And was the Fact ever so notorious, it would follow, That his Foresight was of little Use to his Affairs, as will presently be seen. [Lives of the Admirals, Vol. III. P. 202.]

It appears by Admiral Nevil's Papers, That towards the latter End of September, he had Orders to get ready a Squadron for the Mediterranean-Service; and that by the End of October, the said Squadron was in such Readiness, that he waited for nothing but sailing Orders: That by these sailing Orders he was to make the best of his way to Cadiz, there to remain till he should receive farther Notice from England: That on the 3d of November he did actually set sail with the Cambridge, Rupert, Pembroke, Warwick, and Blackwall Men of War, as also two Fireships: That on the 17th, Mr. Secretary Trumbal, by Letter, order'd him to co-operate with the Consul at Cadiz, and his Majesty's Minister at Madrid, in demanding the Restitution of certain English Merchant-Ships trading to Barbary, which, in Contravention of the Treaties subsisting between the two Nations, had been taken by the Spaniards as lawful Prize, because Admiral Nevil sails for Cadiz.

They,

A. D. 1697. They, the Spaniards, were at War with the Moors, and their Men condemn'd to the Gallies; (which, by the way, manifeſted plainly enough, that Schonenburgh's Affair was not forgot at either Court) That by a general Inſtruction, dated November 30, ſign'd and counterſign'd by the King, and accompany'd with a Letter from Trumbal, requiring him to keep the ſaid Inſtruction ſecret, he was order'd to uſe his utmoſt Diligence in fitting out the ſaid Squadron for a Voyage of ſome Length; and in particular to furniſh them with as much Wine and Oil as they could ſtow: That in a more particular Inſtruction, alſo ſign'd and counterſign'd by the King, and dated the next Day, December 1, by the Preamble of which it appears Mr. Neville was advanc'd to the Rank of a Vice-Admiral, it is ſaid the King had receiv'd ſeveral credible Advices, that the Squadron fitting out at Breſt, under the Command of the Sieur Pointis, was deſtin'd for the Weſt-Indies, there to inſult ſome of his Majeſty's or the King of Spain's Territories: That on the Credit of theſe Advices, he was directed by the ſaid Inſtruction to make the beſt of his way to Madeira, there to join or wait the Arrival of ſuch of his Majeſty's Ships as ſhould be order'd to re-enforce him; after which he was directed to procede with his whole Strength to Barbadoes; and in caſe the Enemy's Fleet were not at Martinico, to go in queſt of them to the Leeward-Iſlands and Jamaica; ſending, in his way, a Frigate to Porto-Rico and St. Dominigo for Intelligence of them, as alſo of the Spaniſh Flota and Galleons: If the ſaid Frigate brought him Advice, that the Enemy were making any Attempt on the King of Spain's Territories, or the ſaid Galleons and Flota, he was to repair to their Relief without Loſs of Time; and upon meeting with the Enemy, he was to take, burn, ſink, or otherwiſe deſtroy them: For the better Performance of which Service, he was authoris'd to take under his Command all ſuch Ships of War as he ſhould meet with in thoſe Seas, &c. In caſe of receiving no Advice of the Enemy, he was to make an Offer to the chief Governor of the Havannah, of convoying the ſaid Flota to Cadiz; and to inform him, he had been ſent into thoſe Seas for their Security: And, laſtly, if the Flota and Galleons were already ſail'd, and there was no Probability of overtaking them; or the Spaniards refus'd to ſail in Company with them, and he was aſſur'd the Enemy had no conſiderable Strength in thoſe Seas, he was then to make the beſt of his way back to England.

Receives Orders to prepare for a ſecret Expedition.

An Abſtract of thoſe Orders.

It farther appears by the ſaid Admiral's Papers, that he receiv'd theſe Inſtructions on the 21ſt of December: That he apply'd himſelf immediately to obey them: That he inform'd Sir William Trumbal, his Ships, being built for cruiſing, were not capable of much Stowage: That he was not able to procure the (o) Reſtitution of the Engliſh Merchant-Ships taken by the Spaniards, and confiſcated for trading with their Enemies the Moors: That Wagers had been publicly laid at Cadiz, that he was bound to the Havanna, to convoy the Flota and Galleons home to Cadiz: That the Duke d'Alberquerque (whom he repreſents as an Enemy to the Engliſh Nation) nevertheleſs came on board his Ship, to impart a Secret to him, as he ſaid, by his Catholic Majeſty's Order; namely, That his ſaid Majeſty had receiv'd Advice from his Miniſter at the Engliſh Court, That the Admiral had Orders to tranſport 4000 Foot from Milan to Catalonia; and to be inform'd, what Quantity of Proviſion would be neceſſary for their Subſiſtance: That he ſet ſail from Cadiz, without the Dutch Men of War lying there, on the 9th of January: That on the (p) 12th he open'd his Orders in preſence of his Captains: That on the 16th following, being in ſight of Madeira, he diſpatch'd an Expreſs to Sir William Trumbal with Advice thereof: As alſo, that in hope the Ships appointed to re-enforce him, were already arriv'd, he had diſpatch'd the Warwick before him, with Orders to the Commanders of them to join him immediately, he having receiv'd Intelligence, before he left Cadiz, that M. Pointis had ſet ſail from Breſt with his Squadron: That in another Letter to the ſame Miniſter, dated the 20th, he gave him to underſtand, a Fleet of twenty-ſeven Ships had been ſeen from the North Part of the Iſland, ſtanding to the Southward: That on the 15th of February, he farther inform'd him, the ſaid Fleet was Pointis Squadron; and complain'd bitterly, that he ſhould be detain'd for twenty-ſeven Days together, in Expectation of the Ships that were to join him; beating, ſaid he, our Ships to Pieces, (for he kept his Squadron at Sea all the Time) ſplitting our Sails, ſpending our Proviſions, and giving the Enemy Opportunity to do what they liſt: That he repeated thoſe Complaints again and again, as well to the Lords of the Admiralty, as to the Secretary's Office: And that, notwithſtanding all he could urge, it was the 20th of March before Rear-Admiral Meeſe, who was appointed to command under him, arriv'd, who had been but fourteen Days in his Paſſage, whereas the Admiral had waſted ſixty in waiting for him; when, as he told the Secretary himſelf, he did not expect to wait five Hours.

Comes in ſight of Madeira.

where he continues for forty Days, expoſtulating a Reinforcement.

But 'tis remarkable, his final Orders were not ſign'd by the King till the 10th of February, almoſt a Month after he had reach'd his Station; and theſe final Orders, being nevertheleſs

(o) I have the Tranſlation of a very ſtrong Remonſtrance to his Catholic Majeſty on this Occaſion now lying before me; as alſo an original Letter to the Admiral, in the Name of all the Factory, for the Protection he had given, and the Favour he had ſhewn them.

(p) Notwithſtanding which Mr. Burchet talks of his convoying the Turkey Fleet, and forty-five other Merchant-men, in concert with Rear-Admiral Evertzen, and three Dutch Men of War, in their way home, before he ſet ſail for Madeira. And the Author of the Lives of the Admirals, taking Burchet for his Authority, computes it was about the Middle of February when he came upon his Station.

A. D. 1697. nevertheleſs accompany'd with a Letter from Trumbal, preſſing him to uſe his utmoſt Care and Diligence, that no Time ſhould be loſt, inſtead of aſſigning any Reaſon to account for the Time which had been loſt already, it ſo far provok'd the Admiral, that in his Reply he made uſe of theſe very words, "I wiſh you had been as earneſt with the People at home: Then, poſſibly, we might have prevented a great deal of Miſchief, which I am afraid is done, before the Date of this Letter: And you may depend upon it, that M. Pointis is returning home before this Time, and may be at Breſt, or ſome other Port in France, as ſoon as I am at the Havannah, having a long way to run. I have cruis'd now off of this Iſland two Months and four Days, to the Amazement of all People, eſpecially the Portugueſe, who are a jealous People, and have kept a ſtrong Guard along ſhore ever ſince my coming here."

In ſhort, the Ships which compos'd the Re-enforcement, were the Breda, Trident, Ruby, Briſtol, Sunderland, Lincoln, Dolphin, Scarborough, Goſport, and Biddeford; as alſo the Blaze and Lightning Fireſhips; and four Dutch Men of War, the Leo, Hollandia, Leyden, and Utrecht: But of theſe only the Briſtol, which carry'd the Rear-Admiral's Flag, and the Lightning Fire-ſhip, came up, the reſt being diſpers'd in a Fog off of the Iſle of Wight: This was a new Affliction to the Admiral; and, as if to increaſe it, the Wind, which had been all this while at E. came about to W. This, however, did not hinder him from perſuing his Inſtructions, in making the beſt of his way to Barbadoes, the Place of general Rendezvous; and he did make the beſt of his way accordingly; as we ſhall ſee in its Place; for Time now calls upon us to reſume the Thread of our foreign Negotiations.

and ſets ſail for Barbadoes.

Foreign Affairs. The verbal Anſwer of the Imperial Court to the Miniſters of England and Holland, before cited, (P. 678.) having been tranſferr'd by them to their Principals, and the Imperial Miniſters at the Hague having roſe in their Demands on M. Callieres, the Miniſter of France, the ſaid Miniſters (of England and Holland) were directed to renew their Importunities with his Imperial Majeſty, to accept the Mediation of Sweden without Reſerve, and name a Place for holding the Congreſs; and on the 8th of January, N. S. did preſent a Memorial accordingly; in which, having premis'd in the Name of their Maſters, That ſuch Expedients might be eaſily found, as would ſerve to remove all Obſtacles on the two great Points of acknowledging King William, and reſtoring Luxemburgh, they proceede to complain, in ſome ſort, of the ſaid new Demands, and of the new Explanations touching the Preliminaries requir'd of the French Miniſter by the Emperor's expreſs Orders; adding, That the ſaid Miniſter, M. de Callieres, had not only, on his own Part, teſtified much Surprize at a Step ſo altogether unexpected, but declar'd, that the King his Maſter would even be more ſurpriz'd than He: That there was not the leaſt Hope to be entertain'd of his Majeſty's Compliance, but, on the contrary, it was to be fear'd he would look on ſuch a Procedure as a Mark of the Repugnance and Averſion of the Allies to Peace: That the King and the States, having examin'd with Attention all theſe Circumſtances, and all that was farther to be apprehended, in caſe theſe new Difficulties ſhould give occaſion to the Prolongation of ſo bloody a War, could no longer excuſe themſelves from repreſenting ſeriouſly, tho' reſpectfully to his Imperial Majeſty, the little Proſpect there was of Succeſs in theſe Demands, as alſo the Expediency of receding from them, and of concurring as ſoon as poſſible with the ſaid King and States; that the Preliminaries and the Declaration which his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty was to make thereon, and which was already in a manner agreed upon, might be ſettled without delay: And that to this End they beſought him to ſend immediately to his ſaid Miniſters at the Hague, the Powers and Inſtructions neceſſary for bringing the Affair to ſuch a happy Determination, as had been ſo long and ſo ardently deſir'd, &c.

A joint Memorial of the Engliſh and Dutch Miniſters at Vienna to the Imperial Court.

The Imperial Court, on the other Hand, in their Reply dated the 17th, did not fail to juſtify themſelves, and to recriminate on France: The Emperor, they ſaid, had ſhewn the utmoſt Readineſs to accept the Mediation of Sweden, and had even nam'd a Place (Aix la Chapelle) for opening the Congreſs; and it was owing to the ambiguous Anſwers of Callieres himſelf, that the Negotiations had been ſo long delay'd: To evince which, his Imperial Majeſty again declar'd, That if, in caſe of any Failure on the Side of France, in the full and entire Re-eſtabliſhment of the Treaty of Weſtphalia, his Swediſh Majeſty would give to the Emperor and Empire, and in general to all the Allies, the Guaranty he had promis'd, he was of Opinion the Mediation ought to be accepted by all the Parties concern'd without Delay: So that if his Britannic Majeſty and the States were of the ſame Mind, as he hop'd they were, the Time and Place of Meeting might be fix'd without any Difficulty: But then he alſo expreſs'd his Reliance on the good Offices of his Swediſh Majeſty, and the Zeal and good Faith of the Allies, as well for obtaining the full Reſtitution of Lorrain, (without which the Ends and Purpoſes of the Peace could never be obtain'd) as alſo a Recompence for ſuch Damages and Pretentions as the other confederated Powers had to urge, or had ſuſtain'd: And he argued, that the Succeſs of their Negotiations, would in a good Meaſure depend on the Firmneſs of their Union, and the Concurrence of their Efforts in the Support of each other, agreeable to thoſe Conſiderations which were the Baſis of their Confederacy, &c.

The Emperor's Anſwer.

But with what Reluctance ſoever the Imperial Court embrac'd the Overtures of Peace, and how obſtinately ſoever they inſiſted on ſuch previous Conceſſions in favour of Spain and Lorrain, as they knew would not be granted, in hope of breaking off the Conferences, it was on the 4th of February agreed by all the Miniſters of the Allies aſſembled at the Hague, except the Miniſter of Spain, (who demanded that France ſhould, by way of Preliminary, agree to reſtore all the Places nam'd in a Liſt of Re-unions, which he preſented to the Aſſembly, and which were almoſt innumerable) to accept the Mediation of Sweden; and the next Day M. de Caunitz, the firſt Imperial Miniſter, made an Offer in form of the ſaid Mediation to M. Lillieroot, the Plenipotentary of Sweden, in the Name of all the Allies, Spain, as before excepted.

A.D. 1697. The Mediation of Sweden accepted by the Allies.

On the 10th, the full Powers of the ſeveral Miniſters having been reciprocably communicated and examin'd in the Preſence of the Miniſter-Mediator, and M. Dykveldt, M. de Callieres propos'd the following Preliminaries, viz.

Preliminaries offer'd by France.

1. That the Treaties of Weſtphalia and Nimeguen, ſhould be the Baſis of the preſent.

2. That Straſburgh ſhould be reſtor'd to the Empire in the ſame Condition as when taken by his Majeſty.

3. That Luxemburgh ſhould be reſtor'd to Spain in its preſent State.

4. As alſo Mons and Charleroy.

5. And the Places in Catalonia taken ſince the Peace of Nimeguen, in the State in which they were taken.

6. That the City and Caſtle of Dinant ſhould be reſtor'd in like manner to the Biſhop of Liege.

7. That all Re-unions made ſince the ſaid Peace, ſhould be made void.

8. That Lorrain ſhould be reſtor'd according to the Conditions of the ſaid Peace.

Under certain Qualifications,

After which, the ſaid Miniſters repairing to the Houſe of M. Borel, who being indiſpos'd, could not be preſent at the Mediators, the ſaid M. Borel and M. Dykveldt gave the Mediator to underſtand, in the Preſence of M. Callieres, who confirm'd the ſame, in the Name of the King his Maſter, That it was agreed, the moſt Chriſtian King ſhould acknowledge the Prince of Orange King of Great Britain on the Concluſion of the Peace, without any Difficulty, Reſtriction, Condition, or Reſerve: The ſame two Miniſters alſo ſignify'd, That whereas, in the ſecret Negotiation, when the Reſtitution of Straſburgh was diſcours'd of, it was always added by M. de Callieres, Or the Alternative of an Equivalent, at the Choice of the King of France, They had as often added in their Turn, Or an Equivalent, at the Choice of the Emperor: And again, That, in diſcourſing of the Reſtitution of Luxemburgh, they had, in like manner, added, Or an Equivalent, which the King of Spain ſhould propoſe to the Choice of the King of France: All which, and ſuch other Matters as were thought of ſufficient Moment, being reduc'd to writing, were ſign'd as the Protocole of the Negotiation by the Miniſter Mediator; with the Addition of another Article, which took place on the 15th following: For the Miniſters of the Empire and Spain taking Offence at the Relaxations admitted on theſe ſeveral Heads, the ſame two Miniſters of the States which give Offence to the Emperor and Spain.

then declar'd, That as often as M. Dykveldt made his Report to the Congreſs of the Allies at the Hague, of what had paſs'd between M. de Callieres and him on that Subject, they had always proteſted againſt admitting any Equivalent for either of theſe Places, as the ſaid M. Dykveldt had always told M. de Callieres, in the Preſence M. Borel.

A.D. 1[illegible]

But this little Rectification was not ſufficient to render the Preliminaries of France palatable to the reſt of the Allies: On the contrary, when they were communicated to them, each had his Objection; and All, the Malcontents that is to ſay, agreed, That inſtead of an Act of Acceptance, they ought to return an Act of Reſervation: Accordingly, ſuch an Act was propos'd, and preſented to the Mediator by M. de Caunitz, in the Name of all, ſetting forth in Subſtance, That the Emperor and Empire inſiſted on the Benefit of the two Treaties in their full Extent, according to the Explanation of Nuremburgh; and, over and above, of all the ſeveral Declarations of his Swediſh Majeſty, and even of his Guaranty, in caſe the Moſt Chriſtian King ſhould ſtart any new Difficulties in the Courſe of the Conferences: That the Elector of Cologne, in quality of Biſhop of Liege, demanded Reſtitution of the Caſtle and Duchy of Boullon, and of the City and Caſtle of Dinant, in its preſent State, together with all its Appertenancies and Dependencies, Artillery, Stores, &c. That with regard to the Intereſts of his Catholic Majeſty, his Plenipotentiary ſtill maintain'd, That he could not receive the two Treaties in queſtion for the Baſis of the Negotiation, becauſe the Crown of Spain had no Concern in the Former; and the Latter was infinitely ſhort of the Pyrenean, for the Re-eſtabliſhment of which all the Allies had ſolemnly engag'd themſelves, and the King himſelf, as well as for the public Good, became a Party in the preſent War: That for theſe Conſiderations, he, the ſaid Plenipotentiary, reſerv'd, urg'd, and demanded the Renewal of the ſaid Treaty; and, over and above, declar'd, That, on condition France reſtor'd all the Places belonging to the King his Maſter, ſhe had poſſeſs'd herſelf of, and particularly thoſe comprehended in the Re-unions, of which he had deliver'd in a Liſt in writing, then, and on that Condition only, he was ready moſt chearfully to accept the Mediation propos'd, &c. That as to what regarded the Reſtitution of Lorrain, the Queen-Dowager of Poland, (alſo Ducheſs-Dowager of Lorrain) as Gourdian of the Duke her Son, had ſet forth, in writing, many important Reaſons, why ſhe could not conſent to the ſaid Reſtitution on the Terms of the Treaty of Nimeguen, which had never been accepted by the late Duke, and which had even been revok'd by the Moſt Chriſtian King.

Act of Reſervation by the Allies.

Laſtly: The ſubſcribing Plenipotentiary, in his own Character, earneſtly ſupplicates the high Allies, to conſent to nothing which ſhould interfere with the full and entire Reſtitution of Lorrain, which they were bound by the Articles of the Confederacy to procure;

A. D. 1697. cure; but on the contrary, to renew their good Offices with his Swedish Majesty, to procure Conditions more suitable to the just Demands of the said Plenipotentiary, by seduously representing to him, That in so doing, he would greatly contribute to the Advancement of the Peace: It not being in the Power of the Allies to accept of an Accommodation, without a Breach of the Confederacy, in which the Duke of Lorrain is not to the Extent of his Demands, comprehended.

And for a Close of all, he said, That all the Allies, as well in general as particular, reserv'd all their Rights and Pretentions against the Most Christian King; and more especially for Reparation of all the Wrongs they had sustain'd during the War, which they should expose more at large in the Course of the Conferences: But these Difficulties remov'd, and Concessions made, They were ready, one and all, to open the Conferences, &c. &c.

Thus the Conferences were open'd with a sort of Ruffle, which shew'd the Allies were divided amongst themselves; and which, consequently, gave the French as much Advantage over them in the Cabinet, as they had found in the Field: The Place of holding the Congress, became also the Subject of farther Altercations: The Imperial Court had nam'd Aix la Chapelle, as we have seen, and other Cities in the Empire; perhaps, foreseeing that France would not concur: France, on the other Hand, had nam'd the Hague; and the Maritime Powers had not only concurr'd, but importun'd the Emperor to do the same: His Imperial Majesty, nevertheless, refus'd in his Turn; and tho', as Bishop Kennet, and Mr. Tindal after him, state this Dispute, one would think it was soon over, the contrary is true: The Imperial Ministers stiffly maintain'd their Ground, and affected to admit of no Temperament, unless France would adhere to the Declarations which she had made in Sweden and Holland, with regard to the Treaties of Westphalia and Nimeguen, and which, they pretended, She had already departed from:—This is evident by the Answer deliver'd to a Memorial of the English and Dutch Minister at Vienna, March 14, by the Count de Zevl: As also by a Memorial of the Imperial Plenipotentiaries at the Hague, to the Minister-Mediator, dated the 28th, in which they insist, in the strongest Terms, That the preliminary Declaration of M. de Callieres, was both in Matter and Manner totally different from Those just cited, and demanded another Declaration conformable thereto: In the Congress of the Ministers of the Allies, moreover, held the same Day at the Hague, the Pensionary of Holland, having acquainted the Assembly, that M. Lillieroot had made him a Visit, in order to concert with the Allies all the preparatory Measures for opening the Negotiation, took occasion to complain of the Backwardness of the Imperial Court in giving their Consent, That the Congress should be held at the Hague: And all the Answer he receiv'd from the Imperial Minister present, M. de Straatman, was, That they expected to receive their Orders on that Head, by the next Post.

Difficulties in naming the Place of Congress.

Complain'd of by the Grand Pensionary.

A. D. 1697.

It is true, a sort of provisional Agreement had been made by the rest of the Powers concern'd, That Newburgh-House, belonging to his Britannic Majesty, in the Village of Ryswick, situated between the Hague and Delft, should be the Place of Meeting: That the French Ministers should take up their Residence at the last of those Places, and the Imperial continue at the Former: Messieurs de Harlay, de Crecy, and de Callieres, the Plenipotentiaries of France, were arriv'd; and M. Lillieroot desirr'd himself as Mediator, to clear the way to Business, by a previous Settlement of all that belong'd to the Ceremonial, and all that was requisite to Dispatch: But, notwithstanding all this, the Imperialists came to no Decision as to the Place of Treaty; and the French as obstinately refus'd to make any farther Concession in point of Preliminary: But as on the one Hand, they adher'd to the Letter of the Offers made by M. de Callieres, at the Hague, February 10, so on the other, they would pay no Regard to what had been offer'd at any other Time or Place.

The French intractable.

It was the 10th of April when this Refusal was made; and on the 20th following, the Imperialists deliver'd a Paper to the Mediator, which they affected to call the Ulterior of his Cæsarean Majesty; in which they put him, the Mediator, in Mind, That they had been so far from admitting the Offers of Callieres, That his Imperial Majesty would not have accepted the Mediation at all, if the King of Sweden had not consented to guaranty the preceding Declarations of France: That, even supposing the Offers of M. de Callieres were in effect tantamount to the said Declarations, the Embassadors of France ought to have made no Difficulty of using the very same Expressions in the Former which had been us'd in the Latter: That, however, they themselves, as well as the Embassador-Mediator, could not be ignorant of the notable Difference in point of Sense between the one and the other: That it was impossible to conclude the Peace on any Grounds, but the full Contents of the Treaties so often nam'd, and full Reparation for all the Acts of Encroachment committed since: And that, therefore, as well in regard to the Promises of his Swedish Majesty, as what became the Charge he was invested with, the Embassador-Mediator would do well to enforce the Justice of their Demand to the Embassadors of France, and employ his good Offices to obtain the Satisfaction requir'd, in order to remove every remaining Obstacle, &c.

The Imperialists deliver in a Paper which they call their Ulterior.

What the Operation of this Ulterior was, we can no otherwise trace than by the mediatorial Project which it gave rise to, and which was in Substance as follows: That the Ministers of his Britannic Majesty, and of the States-General, having been appriz'd by the Embassador-Mediator of what had pass'd on both Sides, thought themselves oblig'd

A Project deliver'd by the Mediator in the Name of the Maritime Powers.

A. D. 1697. oblig'd to remonſtrate to the Imperial Miniſters the Danger of breaking up the Conferences, in caſe the Two Parties perſiſted in their ſeveral Reſolutions; in which Caſe, the Advantage contain'd in the Offers made by M. Callieres, would not only be loſt, but it might become extremely difficult to re-commence the Negotiation; and ſo much the more ſo, as the Operations of the Campaign might quite change the Face of Affairs, and with it the very Grounds of an Accommodation: That the ſaid Miniſters wiſh'd his Imperial Majeſty might obtain full Satisfaction in his Requiſitions; yet, believing it was ſcarce to be obtain'd at preſent, or, at leaſt, previous to the Opening of the Congreſs, they could not help letting him know, They thought it would be for his Service, and for that of all the Allies, as alſo conformable to the good Intentions which his Imperial Majeſty had always expreſs'd for the Common Cauſe, and the Repoſe of Europe, for his Embaſſadors to open the Congreſs, and in the Courſe of the Conferences, to treat of the Innovations made, and the Re-eſtabliſhments to be inſiſted upon, ſince the ſaid Treaties, inſtead of inſiſting upon them by way of Preliminary; the ſame Miniſters at the ſame Time declaring, That their Maſters would jointly and ſeperately do their utmoſt to obtain the ſaid Re-eſtabliſhments in full, as alſo of the Duke of Lorrain, which ſhould be treated of among the foremoſt Points of the Negotiation; and promiſing, That with regard thereto, They would fulfil, precifely and religiouſly, all the Obligations they were ſubject to in virtue of their Alliances.

Thus the Embaſſador-Mediator, in his own Character, and with regard to the Guaranty of the King his Maſter, was wholly ſilent; and the Maritime Powers, tho' Parties, acted, in effect, as Mediators: And in the Collection of Acts and Memorials relating to this Treaty, ſuch Papers as ſerve to explane the vaſt Demands of the Emperor and Spain, are inſerted next to this Project, as if to expoſe the unreaſonableneſs of breaking off the Conferences, becauſe the French refus'd to grant them in the Lump.

And yet Biſhop Burnet is pleas'd to ſay, the French were reſolv'd to have a Peace at any Rate. It is true, the languiſhing Condition in which the King of Spain had lain all Winter, had inſpir'd them with nearer Thoughts of procuring that ſplendid Crown for a Prince of the Bourbon Race: Their Practices upon the Spaniſh Miniſters and Grandees, in favour of the young Duke of Anjou, were frequently diſcours'd of in the Pamphlets and News-Papers of thoſe Times: And their Inclinations to Peace, did ariſe in a good Degree from that Cauſe: But then it is plain, They would not purchaſe ſuch an Acquiſition on one Side, at the Expence of ſuch a Sacrifice on the other.

All the Parties have an Eye on the Spaniſh Succeſſion.

And it is alſo true, That the Emperor had an Eye to the Spaniſh Succeſſion, as well as France: That he had plac'd his Hopes, in a good Degree, on the Continuance of the preſent Alliance, and of the War in conſequence of it; and that the Proſpect he had of a powerful Ally againſt the Turks, in the Perſon of the Czar Peter, as alſo of giving a King to Poland, and of maintaining the War upon the Rhine on a more equal and vigorous Footing than it had hitherto been, in conſequence of the Aſſociation form'd by the Princes and Powers of the Six Circles, by which they engag'd to bring an Army of 60,000 Men into the Field, had encouraged him to treat in ſuch Language at leaſt, as if all the Powers of the Earth could not induce him to alter his Purpoſes: Nor is it altogether improbable, that he drew ſome additional Advantage from the Death of Charles XI. King of Sweden, which happen'd about this Time, in the 42d Year of his Age: The young King was a Minor; he had large Poſſeſſions in Germany; and the Countenance and Favour of the Head of the Empire, is occaſionally of great Conſequence to the Members, as it ſerves either way to facilitate or traverſe their Claims and Pretenſions.

Death of the K. of Sweden.

This, however, is certain, That the News had ſcarce reach'd the Hague, before the Embaſſador-Mediator expreſs'd himſelf in Terms of more than ordinary Regard for his Imperial Majeſty, and the Imperial Miniſters made a Conceſſion in a Compliment to him, which the Engliſh and Dutch Miniſters had labour'd for in vain; as may be gather'd from a Propoſition, which the ſaid Embaſſador-Mediator made as a Peace-Offering of his own, on the 4th of May, N. S. and the Anſwer to it, which was return'd the next Day: For the Propoſition was to this Effect, viz. That, whereas his Imperial Majeſty refus'd to accept the Preliminaries offer'd by M. de Callieres, but on the contrary, ſtill inſiſted on a new Declaration, conformable to the Reſolutions of the States-General of September 3. That, whereas, alſo, the Imperial Embaſſadors had importun'd him, the ſaid Embaſſador-Mediator, to uſe his utmoſt Endeavours to procure ſuch a Declaration from the Embaſſadors of France, which he had accordingly uſed, tho' without Succeſs: And that, whereas, on the other Hand, the Plenipotentiaries of the States had, with great Earneſtneſs, preſs'd him to open the Conferences as ſoon as poſſible, for very important Reaſons, under a Promiſe, That, during the Negotiation, they would ſupport the Pretentions of his Imperial Majeſty with all their Weight, and procure him all the Satisfaction in their Power:—He, the ſaid Embaſſador-Mediator, had frequently remonſtrated to the Embaſſadors of his ſaid Imperial Majeſty, the indiſpenſable Neceſſity of opening the Conferences without Delay, and did now again moſt earneſtly beſeech them to do the ſame; hoping They would at laſt yield to the Conſiderations which had obſtr'd him to be ſo importunate: Adding, "That he was now to much the more urgent, becauſe he had juſt receiv'd Diſpatches from his Court, containing the dying Sentiments of his late Royal Maſter, viz. That He had perſever'd to the laſt in his Purpoſe to keep his Faith with all his Allies inviolably; as alſo, to fulfil the Guaranty which he had promis'd.

A Propoſition made by the Mediator, in favour of the Emperor in the Name of his Succeſſor in the Conferences.

A. D. 167 promis'd, and the ſeveral Declarations he had made thereon: That, feeling the Approaches of Death, he had earneſtly recommended the ſame Thing to his Succeſſor, in the Preſence of many Perſons; and had commanded, with his laſt Breath, That ſuitable Aſſurances ſhould be made to his Allies, and eſpecially to his Imperial Majeſty, as a natural Effect of that cordial Sincerity which he had always obſerv'd towards him: And, finally, that his Majeſty now reigning, who had inherited the ſame Inclinations for, and Attachments to, the Intereſts of his Imperial Majeſty, and the common Good of the Allies, together with a ſufficient Strength to carry his laſt Will into execution, deſir'd to manifeſt the ſame Sincerity in all Things."

Accepted by the Imperialiſts under certain Reflections.

And the Imperial Miniſters in their Anſwer to it, having again declar'd, That, except on the Baſis they had hitherto contended for, the Peace could never be concluded, at laſt ſoften their Tone, and procede in theſe Words, "Nevertheleſs, the Embaſſadors of his Imperial Majeſty, of their own proper Motion, and without any Order to that effect, conſent, as a Favour to the Allies, as alſo, for the Sake of that Harmony which his ſaid Majeſty deſires to maintain with them, and more particularly, as well in Conſideration of the repeated Inſtances of his Excellency the Mediator, as for the Advancement of Peace, That the Conferences ſhould be open'd without any farther Delay: Declaring themſelves ready to treat with the ſaid Lords Embaſſadors, (of France) conjointly with thoſe of the High Allies; without any Prejudice, however, to the ſaid Demands, founded on the Conventions of the general Alliance, the Declarations of his ſaid Imperial Majeſty, and the Pretenſions of the other Allies, which are thus to be referr'd to the Negotiations of the Peace; the ſaid Embaſſadors perſuading themſelves, that this Reſolution of theirs, will not fail to be favourably receiv'd and approv'd by his Imperial Majeſty, in conſideration of his ſaid Allies, and of the Peace, which he deſires above all Things; as alſo, that the High Allies on their Side, will not be wanting to ſupport his Pretenſions, according to their Promiſe: And in like manner, They expect from the Endeavours and Guaranty of the Mediator, all the Zeal, and all the Equity imaginable, in the Maintenance of the Rights of his ſaid Majeſty, or rather of all the Allies in general."

And they are open'd accordingly.

The Spaniards, it ought to be obſerv'd, had already made a like Declaration: And thus all the ſeveral Parties being ſo far agreed, the 9th following was appointed for opening the Congreſs in form, and it was that Day open'd accordingly.

But before we can follow the Thread of Buſineſs tranſacted therein, it will be neceſſary to find room for an Incident or two, which Impartiality requires to be interwove, as a Part of our own Story, viz.

A Manifeſto for Force to the Prince of King William.

When the Diſcourſe of a general Peace began firſt to be talk'd of in the ſeveral Courts of Europe, a Paper was diſpers'd, it is ſaid, (improbably enough) from that of France, of a mix'd kind, as being partly ſerious, partly ironical, under the Title of, A Manifeſto of William III. King of England, &c. And tho' writ in the Nature of a profeſs'd Apology for that Prince, and a bitter Recrimination on King Lewis and King James, containing equal Matter of Accuſation againſt them All, and even of his Holineſs Pope Innocent XI. into the Bargain: For his Majeſty, the ſuppos'd Author of the Piece, being made to open it, with a Complaint, That the King of France, and his Partiſans, call'd him Tyrant and Uſurper, and had laid to his Charge not only the Rebellion of the Engliſh, as the juſt Defence of their Liberties is opprobriouſly call'd, but alſo all the Diſorders of Europe, is, in the next Place, made to throw ſuch a Light on the public Tranſactions for ſome Years paſt, as ſerve to ſhew, That either Folly or Wickedneſs were the true Sources of them all. Thus he charges King Lewis with taking ſecret and indirect Meaſures with the Grand Signior, in order to break the Courſe of Succeſſes which the Emperor, the King of Poland, and the States of Venice had annually obtain'd over the Latter: And with procuring the Cardinal of Furſtenburg to be made Co-adjutor to the Elector of Cologne, in order to ſecure him the Succeſſion to that Electorate; or, in caſe of a Diſappointment, to furniſh him with Pretences to carry Fire and Sword into Germany, for which, at the ſame Time, he alſo made the neceſſary Preparations: He then admits, that the Cardinal was legally choſen, and accuſes the late Pope of Partiality, for deciding the Election againſt him: But nevertheleſs ſpeaks of the Behaviour of the French, in breaking the Truce of twenty Years, on this ſingle Provocation, (tho' the Ducheſs of Orleans's Clames on the Eſtate of the Elector-Palatine, her Father, was made the Pretence) and laying waſte the Palatinate, in Terms full of Horror; and from the juſt Indignation of the German Princes thereat, deduces the Convention of Auſburgh. He then makes a Tranſition to the Affairs of England, and expoſes the Folly of King James in following the Track of King Lewis, without his Power; that is to ſay, in forming a Plan to convert his Subjects to his own Religion, by the Terror of a Standing Army: Affects to call it a Piece of ill Fortune, That the Engliſh Malcontents ſhould invite him to be their Head, when he had rais'd a numerous Army to ſupport the Intereſt of Pope Innocent XI. againſt Cardinal Furſtenburg; which ſaid Pope had ſolicited his Aid, had enter'd into an Alliance with him, had remitted large Sums of Money to him, and had undertook, in caſe he became his Champion againſt the over-grown Greatneſs of France, to raiſe him to the Summit of human Glory: Talks with the ſame viſible Air of Affectation, of his Expedition to England, as if it aroſe only from a Motive of Conſcience, for the Glory of God, and out of a Goſpel-Principle of Good-will to Men: Makes a Merit of adviſing his Uncle and Father-in-Law to withdraw, as if nothing but his Flight could have ſav'd him from

A. D. 1697. the Fate of his Father; and avers, That the Engliſh forc'd him to accept the Crown, whether he would or not. Then, returning to the Topic he had ſet out with, viz. The Reproaches heap'd on him by King Lewis, he rips open the whole Life of the Latter, to ſhew, that there was not a Species of Perfidy, Rapine and Cruelty, that he was not as guilty of as any of his Neighbours: And, laſtly, having declar'd, That ſuch were his Connections, and ſuch his Reſolutions, that no Force either could or ſhould wreſt the Sceptre out of his Hand, he concludes, nevertheleſs, with a Strain of Generoſity that turns the whole into Ridicule; namely, That, for the Sake of reſtoring Peace to Europe, and eſtabliſhing ſuch a Plan of Power, as ſhould keep the Balance for ever even, he was ready to reſign the Three Crowns of England, Scotland, and Ireland, to King James and his Son, and to return to Holland; there to diſcharge the Duties of the Stadtholderſhip in quiet, during the Reſidue of his Days; provided, King Lewis would, on his Part, contract his Ambition within the Bounds of the Pyrenean Treaty, of which he had never obſerv'd any one Article, and annul all Thoſe which his own Exceſſes, and the Difficulties of his Neighbours, had given riſe to ſince."

Remarks upon it.

The whole of this Piece is ſtill (q) extant; and is beſt confuted by the Driſt of the Conferences already ſpecify'd: For, inſtead of entertaining the leaſt Thought of abdicating in his Turn, for the Sake of Peace, we have ſeen, that the Acknowledgment of his Title by France, and conſequently the perpetual Excluſion of King James, was proviſionally ſecur'd, as the ſine qua non of the Negotiation: Nor, in fact, could the French Court have given a more authentic Earneſt of their Sincerity in that Point, than their precluding that unfortunate Prince from ſending a Miniſter to the Congreſs; which was ſo much the ſtronger Proof of his being already abandon'd, becauſe a Miniſter-plenipotentiary of the Duke of Lorrain, who was in the ſame State of Deprivation, tho' not by the ſame Means, was admitted on the ſame Terms as if his Maſter had been actually poſſeſs'd of his Dominions, and had already enter'd a ſolemn Proteſt againſt all that ſhould be agreed to the Prejudice of the Houſe of Lorrain, in virtue of the Treaty of Nimeguen, which the late Duke had never ſubmitted to, or of the pretended Preliminaries offer'd by M. de Callieres. And it is, beſides, not unworthy Recollection, That, from the Moment his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty gave up the Point which he had valued himſelf ſo much upon, namely, the redreſſing the injur'd Majeſty of Kings, both his Majeſty King William, and his Colleagues the States, became, in ſome Meaſure, the Advocates of France, and ſhew'd a Diſpoſition of courting her good Graces, at the Expence of the Emperor and the reſt of the Allies.

That, however, King James might not be plung'd at once into utter Deſpair, nor King William at once exempted from any farther Mortification, two Papers, in King James's Name, were ſuffer'd to viſit the Public, before the opening of the Congreſs: the firſt of which was called a Manifeſto, or Remonſtrance, and the other a Memorial, addreſs'd to the Catholic Powers of Europe; and the laſt, a Summary Memorial to the Proteſtants. In the Preamble of the firſt, it was ſaid, He had not addreſs'd himſelf, and the Juſtice of his Cauſe, to the confederate Princes before, becauſe he thought, that Truth itſelf would not be able to prevail againſt the Prejudices of the Times; and becauſe he thought their Eyes were too much dazzled with the Hopes which they had entertain'd of prevailing by the Means of the Prince of Orange againſt France: But that now, when Time had diſcover'd the Vanity of his Projects, and the Calamities brought upon Europe, had oblig'd the Powers concern'd to think ſeriouſly of an Accommodation, he could no longer conceal the Reaſons which ought to induce them to contribute to his Re-eſtabliſhment, without failing in his Duty to God, to himſelf, his Son, and his People.

This was the Subſtance of his Preamble, tho' deliver'd in the Third Perſon: And in the Sequel, he aſcribes all his Sufferings to his Religion; which was no ſooner diſcover'd, ſaid He, but it gave riſe to the Perſecution againſt him: Of his peaceable Acceſſion to the Throne, notwithſtanding, he ſpeaks very feelingly in the next Place; and adds, That his Government was ſo juſt and moderate, that it procur'd him the Affection and Eſteem of all good Men: His pardoning all Thoſe who had endeavour'd to exclude him from the Throne, as ſoon as he had got poſſeſſion of it, the Wealth and Happineſs his People enjoy'd during his Halcyon-Reign, and the good Correſpondence he preſerv'd with all the Princes his Neighbours, are the Topics he then proceeds upon: After which, making a ſort of Acknowledgment, That he could not diſſemble his Zeal for the Catholic Religion, but, nevertheleſs, denying that he offer'd any Violence to the Religion eſtabliſh'd by Law, he goes on to ſay, That the Faction having now receiv'd new Life, renew'd their League with the Prince of Orange, and at the ſame Time poiſon'd his People with falſe Rumours, That his Intentions were to introduce the Catholic Religion by Force: That the Thing, however, which determin'd the ſaid Prince to put his Deſigns into Execution, was the Birth of the Prince of Wales, which not only ſet him at a farther Diſtance from the Crown, to which he had aſpir'd in being, but augmented the falſe Fears which had been propagated on account of Religion: That hence it follow'd, he no ſooner ſet Foot in England, than the greateſt Part of the Nation revolted: That his Majeſty was abandon'd and betray'd by his Officers, his Domeſtics, and even his own Children; and that (q) It was publiſh'd on a Folio Half-Sheet, and is now to be ſeen in the Appendix of Boyer's Life of King William.

A.D. 1697. that the Princes his Confederates, againſt the Right of Nations, drove his Miniſters from their Courts, and treated his Majeſty as a declar'd Enemy, without any previous Declaration, or any the leaſt Pretext capable of juſtifying a Proceding ſo contrary to the ſaid Right of Nations, and the Reſpect reciprocally due to crown'd Heads: That his Majeſty, thus unworthily treated by the whole World, and expos'd to ſuch imminent Danger in the Cuſtody of the Prince of Orange, who kept him Priſoner under a ſtrong Guard, had no other Place of Refuge left but France, whither, not without great Difficulty and Danger, he had caus'd his Queen and his Son to be convey'd before: That if the Cauſes of this ſtrange Invaſion of all Laws, divine and human, were to be inveſtigated, they would be found no other than ſo many Calumnies publiſh'd for ſo many Truths, in the Declaration of the Prince of Orange, and echo'd by the Mouths of his Emiſſaries; namely, That he had violated the Laws of the Land: That he had prepar'd and acknowledg'd a ſuppoſititious Heir to his Crown: That being Guaranty to the Treaty of Nimeguen, he had not fulfill'd the Conditions of that Guaranty: And that he had enter'd into a ſecret League with France againſt the Houſe of Auſtria:—That theſe Calumnies were all ſo groſſly falſe, that barely to name them, was ſufficient to expoſe them: That with regard to the Firſt, every Body knew, That by the fundamental Laws of England, the Kings of England were anſwerable for their Actions to none but God alone: That, however, his Majeſty had done nothing but what had the Sanction of thoſe Laws: That all who were acquainted with the Engliſh Conſtitution knew, that, in all doubtful Caſes, it belong'd to the Twelve Judges to decide what the Law was; and that it was the Duty of the Subject to ſubmit to ſuch their Deciſion: That he had done nothing without their Approbation: That in caſe they had prevaricated, they had been liable to Puniſhment: And that ſome of theſe being impriſon'd ſince the Revolution, for the Opinions they had given before it, even the Prince of Orange himſelf, knowing they had done nothing but their Duty, and having anſwer'd all his own Purpoſes, which was only to blacken his Majeſty, had not puniſh'd any one of them: That as to the Second Calumny, it was ſo black, ſo baſe, ſo atrocious, and ſo inconſiſtent with common Senſe, that even thoſe who in the Invention manifeſted ſo little Senſe of Conſcience or Shame, durſt not bring the Matter to Examination, as they had promis'd, even before a Parliament of their own Creatures, for fear of expoſing their own Wickedneſs: That as to the Third, it was impoſſible to ſhew, that either the King or his Brother, in whoſe Reign the Treaty of Nimeguen was made, was included in it as Guaranty: That on the contrary, the States, the King of Spain, and the Emperor, ſeverally made their Peace with France, at ſeveral Times: That the Embaſſadors of the ſaid King (Charles) officiated therein, only as Mediators, and did not ſo much as ſign the ſaid Treaties: That conſequently his Majeſty was no ways oblig'd to guaranty the ſaid Treaty; and that if he was ſo oblig'd, it could neither be prov'd that he had ever contraven'd it, or that he had ever been call'd upon by the confederate Princes to fulfil it: That, indeed, it was true, there was a defenſive Alliance ſubſiſting between England and the States, which He, King James, had ratify'd on his Acceſſion to the Throne, and which He had never violated; whereas the States, inſtead of aſſiſting him againſt every Invader, had enabled the Prince of Orange to invade his Dominions, while Van Citters, their Miniſter at London, all the while aſſur'd his Majeſty, His Maſters would religiouſly maintain a good Correſpondence with him, and the Prince of Orange continued to write the moſt reſpectful Letters to him; that is to ſay, to the very Inſtant that he was ready to put his Deſign in Execution: That as to the pretended League with France, Lord Sunderland himſelf, in his Apology, had declar'd he knew of no ſuch Thing: And that when his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty made him an Offer of conſiderable Succours, he choſe to reject them, that he might not be liable to the leaſt Imputation of having enter'd into any ſuch League: That it was alſo true, that the confederate Princes having importun'd him to join with them in a League againſt France, he had declin'd it; as holding it equally diſhonorable to break with a Prince, to whom he was nearly allied in Blood, without any juſt Ground of Complaint, and diſadvantageous to his People, to involve them in a War, which he foreſaw was likely to prove ſo ruinous to Chriſtendom: And that this Firmneſs of his it was, which had both prejudic'd them againſt his Majeſty, and diſpos'd them to believe the Fable of the ſecret League, which had now been ſo effectually exploded: That falſe as all the Allegations brought againſt him were thus manifeſtly prov'd, it was nevertheleſs theſe Falſhoods which had ſtirr'd up his Subjects againſt him, and reduc'd himſelf and his Family to ſo wretched a State: That, conſequently, Accuſations of a very different Nature, and ſupported by very different Proofs, ought to have been producible, as the only Inducements fit to engage Princes, ſo zealous for Religion and Juſtice; as the Emperor and the King of Spain had always appear'd, to become the Confederates of an Heretical Uſurper, in ſo enormous an Action as the dethroning a lawful King, a Catholic, his Uncle, and his Father-in-Law: That the only Gloſs which could be ſet on a Procedure ſo viſibly unjuſt was, to ſuppoſe, That thoſe Princes were firſt deceiv'd by the falſe Repreſentations of their Miniſters: And, Secondly, That all they had in View, was to force England into a War with France, without examining the Means by which the Prince of Orange undertook to bring it about: That in Charity it ought to be ſuppos'd, if they had known what his Purpoſes were againſt the ſacred Perſon and Crown of his Majeſty, they would not have given him their Countenance: For it was true, that even the Hollanders themſelves, Enemies as they were by A.D. 1697.

their

A. D. 1697. their Conſtitution to Monarchy, did not lend their Troops to the ſaid Prince, but under an expreſs Declaration, which they diſtributed to all the foreign Miniſters at the Hague, except Thoſe of England and France, "That it was upon condition he ſhould neither dethrone the King, nor alter the Succeſſion:" That if, therefore, they thought themſelves oblig'd to cover their Conduct under ſuch a Salvo, much more was to be expected from monarchical and hereditary Princes, who, on ſuch Occaſions, were involv'd in one common Cauſe: For in caſe the factious Subjects of any of them, aſſiſted by ſome Aſpirer, who could not live unleſs he reign'd, ſhould think themſelves authoris'd to accuſe their Sovereign, and that Aſpirer was to be countenanc'd by the Princes his Neighbours, none of them could be ſafe on their Thrones: A Spirit of Rebellion would be propagated every where: And Malcontents of all ſorts would not only make their Example a Warrant for their Conduct, but would be enabled to make Exemples of their Sovereigns, to diſpoſe of their Crowns at will, and thereby to unhinge the Security of Government every where: That, nevertheleſs, if his Enemies ſhould avail themſelves of the Neceſſity which They had brought on him to abandon his Dominions, in order to ſave his Life, and urge it as a reaſonable Plea for depriving him of his Crown, no doubt, that very Plea would convince all reaſonable Perſons of their unjuſt Procedure: For no ſuch Perſon could help ſeeing, That this was making a Jeſt of Sovereignty; and adding an Inſult of the moſt enormous Kind, to Injuries not to be vindicated: That, therefore, it was to be preſum'd, That all Sovereigns, feeling their own Majeſty violated in That of the King, would reflect on the Uſage he had undergone with a ſuitable Indignation; and that the Confederate Princes in particular, knowing the Eyes of all Europe were now upon them, and beginning to be already convinc'd of the Miſrepreſentations and Falſhood which had ſurpris'd them into ſuch Prejudices againſt his Majeſty, would act as their Safety, their Honour, their Conſciences, and the Good of the Catholic Religion requir'd, in contributing all in their Power to his Re-eſtabliſhment."

This, ſo far, was the general Drift and Tendency of this ſpecious Piece: And as to what remains, it conſiſts of a feeble Attempt to ſhew, That the State of the poor Catholics under King William's Government, was ſuch as requir'd the Intervention of all Catholic Princes for their Relief: That for the ſaid Princes to adhere to his Intereſts, merely becauſe they look'd upon him as an irreconcileable Enemy to France, was to act in a Manner irreconcileable to the Dictates of their holy Religion, and to render themſelves unworthy of God's Bleſſing: That the frank and generous Offers of the Moſt Chriſtian King, for the Sake of Peace, when the Superiority was ſo viſibly on his Side, was alone ſufficient to prove, That the Allies had nothing farther to apprehend from his Power, and conſequently were in no need of perſevering in their Attachments to the Prince of Orange, &c. That if, however, the contrary was true, it was abundantly more reaſonable for the Allies to take the neceſſary Meaſures for preſerving the Balance of Power with a lawful King, both by Intereſt and Inclination concern'd in the maintaining it, than with an Uſurper, who could no otherwiſe thrive than in the Midſt of Troubles and Confuſion: That to ſet this Point in the cleareſt Light, they need only ſet the Conduct and Character of the one, in oppoſition to thoſe of the other; on which Suppoſition, they would find in James a Rectitude of Heart, and a Tenderneſs of Conſcience worthy of a Prince; and in William, an Ambition without Bounds, ready to ſacrifice all Conſideration to the Attainment of his Ends: And that upon the whole, he could not, without Indignation, liſten to the Expedients which had been talk'd of by ſome, to accommodate his Affairs; namely, of leaving the Prince of Orange in poſſeſſion of the Crown for Life, on condition it ſhould be ſecur'd on his Death to the Prince of Wales; as if it was poſſible for his Majeſty, with a ſafe Conſcience, to abandon the Juſtice of his Cauſe, together with his Duty to God, to his Poſterity, and to his Subjects, by authoriſing and legitimiſing what a tumultuous Aſſembly, without Authority, had enacted in favour of an Uſurper, and againſt the Religion: For in ſo doing, he himſelf ſhould become the Inſtrument of reverſing the Conſtitution of a Monarchy, which had always been hereditary, of depriving the Prince his Son of his Succeſſion by Right, of expoſing him to the Inconveniencies of a Subſtitution every way injurious to his Perſon, and of rendering him dependent on the Humour and Caprice of a Parliament for his Elevation, which, when legally aſſembled, never had any Power to alter the Succeſſion, &c.

A. D. 1697.

With regard to the Summary Memorial addreſs'd to the Proteſtant Powers, we are told, it took its Riſe from ſome Signs of Diſpleaſure manifeſted by them, at their being over-look'd in the Former: And it ſeems reaſonable to think, That it was the Reſult of an After-Thought, not only becauſe it was ſubſequent in point of Time, but alſo becauſe that ſome Pains are taken in the Preamble of it to ſhew, That all which had been ſaid to the Catholic Powers, equally regarded the Proteſtants, whom he, King James, could by no means look upon as Enemies irreconcileable to him and his Intereſts, or as wholly unconcern'd in the Breach of every fundamental Law, divine and human, violated in his Perſon. The Decalogue it proceeded to ſay, the Obſervance of Oaths, the Obedience due to lawful Sovereigns, and to the Laws of Society, were equally binding to all who call'd themſelves Chriſtians, and even to Nations the moſt barbarous: Since the famous Confeſſion of Auſbourgh, before Sect of Proteſtants, except Enthuſiaſts and Madmen, had dar'd to deny theſe Obligations, &c. Nor was it ever permitted in Sweden, Denmark, Germany, or any Proteſtant hereditary Government, to promulge any other other Doctrine touching the Obedience due to Sovereigns, than that which had always been receiv'd in England, except in Times of Revolution: So that all Proteſtant Princes were oblig'd to acknowledge, That all the vain Pretexts us'd by the Prince of Orange to colour his Uſurpation, were altogether as repugnant to the Religion they profeſs, as to the Catholic: As alſo, that the Conſequences to be apprehended from ſo pernicious an Example, were not more dangerous to the Catholics than to them.—It Treaties confirm'd by the moſt ſolemn Oaths, (proceeded the Memorialiſt) the moſt ſolemn Recognitions of neighbouring Princes by their Embaſſadors, by their Letters, and by other public Acts, are of no force, there is no Prince living who can be ſure of enjoying peaceably his own Eſtates, or of bequeathing them to his Heirs:—It is by the public Faith only of ſimilar Acts, that moſt Part of the Proteſtant Princes of Germany hold the great Poſſeſſions which once belong'd to the Church, but which have ſince been ceded to them by the Treaties of Weſtphalia, &c. and yet if a powerful and ambitious Emperor, under a Pretence that theſe Uſurpations were contrary to the fundamental Laws of the Empire, and the original Contract between the Emperors his Predeceſſors, and the Churches ſo diſpos'd of; as alſo, that the Pope had enter'd his Proteſt againſt thoſe Treaties, ſhould vacate the ſeveral Capitulations which had been made concerning them, his Conduct in ſo doing, would be more juſtifiable than that of the ſaid Proteſtant Princes, in maintaining the pretended Abdication of his Majeſty, the Vacancy of the Throne in conſequence thereof, and the tranſferring it to a Stranger: Becauſe hereditary Succeſſion was more antient in England, than in any of the Electorates and other States of Germany:—Neither could any of the ſaid Proteſtant Princes and States deny, That they had complemented the ſaid King on his Acceſſion to the Throne, and on the Birth of the Prince of Wales; that they had enter'd into Treaties with him, &c. Now, Theſe are the moſt ſolemn Acts which could paſs between crown'd Heads, and contain'd the ſtrongeſt Obligations which could be laid on Men:—How then could they excuſe themſelves for having broke their Faith to his Majeſty, and united with his Enemies againſt him, without any previous Declaration of War, without the leaſt Cauſe of Complaint, or, as it ſhould ſeem, the Shadow of any, ſeeing, that ſince the Revolution, they had aſſign'd none; and the very ſame Treaties were ſtill ſubſiſting, which they had contracted with his Brother? Whence it was obvious, his Majeſty had obſerv'd them religiouſly; and conſequently they had no Pretext to violate them:—However, if his Majeſty had furniſh'd any ſuch Pretext, what could they impute to his Son as a Reaſon for abandoning him as they had done? When, according to the Tenor of all Treaties between Kings, their Heirs were as well comprehended in them as themſelves? Would they take Advantage of the pretended Suppoſition? The Prince of Orange himſelf had not dar'd to bring ſo audacious a Calumny to the parliamentary Teſt he had promis'd in his Declaration: But it was not to be believ'd, that any one of thoſe Princes any otherwiſe regarded that Chimera, but as a Complication of Impudence and Wickedneſs: Notwithſtanding which, They had acted in all Reſpects, as if it was a Fact not to be doubted; and had thereby eſtabliſh'd a Precedent, which might draw the moſt pernicious Conſequences on all crown'd Heads. An Aſpirer, ſupported by a Faction within, and Alliances without, may any where find himſelf in a Condition to ſtruggle for a Throne not only with the Heir, but even the Poſſeſſor, under the ſame Preſumption, That He was not the Son of his (r) Father. Of all the Princes of Europe, there was not one whoſe Birth was not more liable to be call'd in queſtion, than that of the Prince of Wales; becauſe there was not one who was born in the Preſence of ſo many Witneſſes, &c.—It is true, Rumours were at firſt ſpread abroad of ſecret Leagues, which his Majeſty had contracted with the Catholic Princes for the Extirpation of the Proteſtant Religion: But there was no Body then living, who could remain unconvinc'd of the Falſihood of them, ſeeing that Eight Years were elaps'd ſince the Papers of his Secretaries had been in the Hands of his Enemies, who in all that Time had not found the leaſt Proof of any ſuch League; no not with his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty:—Indeed, the Manner in which the other Catholic Princes had abandon'd him, and the little Concern they had ſhewn for the Intereſt of the Church their common Mother, were ſufficient to manifeſt, That his Majeſty could not take any Meaſures againſt the Proteſtants, with whom thoſe Princes were ſo cloſely ally'd, even before his Majeſty came to the Throne.—It ſeems, therefore, reaſonable to conclude, That it would be more for the Honour of the Proteſtant Princes, to remove the Calamities brought upon all Europe by the Uſurpation in England, than to confirm it, as they were now labouring to do, by a Treaty of Peace, founded on a Baſis altogether as unjuſt:—For, if the Catholic Princes are altogether inexcuſable, for the indirect Part which they have taken in this Deſign, the Proteſtants are not leſs ſo; becauſe the Obligation of thoſe Laws, divine and human, which condemn ſuch Invaſions, are common to all Chriſtians alike: And if the preſent Power of the Prince of Orange had inſpir'd the Proteſtants with Sentiments different from Thoſe they formerly profeſſed, they would, nevertheleſs, do well to conſider, that they had no better Foundation

A Summary Memorial of his to the Proteſtants.

A. D. 1697.

(r) Probably this Arrow was meant to glance at King Lewis himſelf, whoſe Birth had a thouſand Times over been call'd in queſtion.

A. D. 1697. Foundation than the Life of one ſingle Man; after which the Crown would deſcend to other foreign Princes, even tho' the phantom Laws, on which that pretended Succeſſion was founded, ſhould be ſtill in Being:—But after ſo many Examples, which are to be found in the Hiſtory of England, it was reaſonable to think, the Nation, as it had twice already done in the Courſe of Thirty-ſeven Years, would return to its antient Laws, and its true Maſters: For this laſt Revolution being founded on the ſame Principle, and the Violation of the ſame Laws, would naturally have the ſame Iſſue: In which the Proteſtants would experience the Vanity of all the Treaties they had made with an Uſurper, which would become like Thoſe they had made with Cromwell:—Theſe are the Reflections thoſe Princes ought to make, and which ought to direct them to the Choice of better and ſurer Means to re-eſtabliſh the Peace of Europe, than thoſe hitherto propoſed; which being founded on the ſame Injuſtice, as had prov'd a Viſitation to all Chriſtendom, could not but be ruinous, ſooner or later, to Thoſe who had labour'd with all their Might to eſtabliſh it, &c.'

Such were the Paper-Batteries which this unfortunate Prince brought to play againſt a Confederacy, form'd at his Expence, depending on the Continuance of his Excluſion; and againſt a Prince that was the Head, Heart, and Hand of that Confederacy: A Prince who in the Cabinet had out-reſin'd him, in the field had ſubdu'd him, and who had entrench'd the Throne he had acquir'd by all the Expedients which the Wit of Man could deviſe to render it inacceſſible.

Nor were even theſe Paper-Batteries left unanſwer'd: For the firſt, as being the moſt circumſtantial, was not only adverted upon, Paragraph by Paragraph, but alſo in a more compendious way, by a more maſterly Hand, and that both in French and (s) Engliſh: Nor was the laſt ſuffer'd to paſs thro' the World without a proper Comment: And in all theſe Anſwers to theſe Pieces.

(s) In the Year 1703, a Quarto Pamphlet was alſo publiſh'd under the Title of, A Memorial, drawn up by King William's ſpecial Direction, intended to be given to the Treaty of Ryſwick, juſtifying the Revolution, and the Courſe of his Government; in anſwer to two Memorials that were offer'd there in King James's Name. In the Preface of which we are inform'd, That, upon King James's preſenting his two Memorials, it was thought neceſſary to prepare a Memorial in anſwer to them; which was intended to be given, in King William's Name, to all the Miniſters that were then at the Hague. The Memorial was thereupon thus drawn up by his Majeſty's own Direction, he explaining himſelf upon every Particular; and the draught was examin'd by him, and, by his Orders, carried to ſome of the worthieſt Miniſters that our Nation produc'd in that Age, and carefully reviſ'd and corrected by them: But when it was reſolv'd to tranſlate it into Latin and French, in order to the communicating it, his Majeſty had Advice from the Hague, That King James's Memorials were ſo little conſider'd there, that the offering an Anſwer to them, would give them ſome Credit; and that, without that, they had none at all. That the Draught was therefore, order'd to be written over again, in another Style, not in his Majeſty's Name, but as the Anſwer of a private Hand to thoſe Memorials; and ſo to be printed: Yet, before this could be done, another Advice came, to let the Matter quite alone, and to leave thoſe Memorials to ſleep in that Neglect under which they were fallen. The Matter reſted upon this; but, theſe Papers being drawn up by ſuch an Authority, and containing ſuch a full, tho' ſhort, Vindication of the Revolution, it was afterwards thought proper to publiſh them. The Anſwer to the firſt Memorial to King James, begins with obſerving, "That the King of Great Britain does not wonder to ſee a Prince, who has, for ſo long a Time, fought to take away his Life, in the blackeſt Methods, endeavour, now likewiſe, to attack his Honour, even in the undeceiteſt Expreſſions; of which the late Memorial is full. The late King, while he was in Ireland, did, himſelf, concert with one James the way of murdering the Kings But, to render was his Majeſty of the Honour of a Perſon ſo nearly related to him, that he gave Order to ſuppreſs that Matter: tho' the authentical Proofs of it are yet extant, in Letters, and other Papers, taken in the late Earl of Tyrconnel's Cabinet. Grandval's Confeſſion is well known: and Sir John Fenwick did lately claim Merit, by his diverting another Deſign to murder the King, purſuant to a Commiſſion, that, tho' it was not come over, yet was affirm'd to be ſign'd by the late King: His having laid the Deſign of murdering the King a Year ago, and his having ſent over Perſons, and a Commiſſion to that Effect, have been ſo undeniably proved, that all Europe is ſtill full of Horror at it: At ſuch Practices, Heathens would be aſtam'd: The purſuing them, Year after Year, deſerves ſeverer Words, than the King thinks fit to uſe, even after ſuch a Provocation: ſuch Regard is had to the high Birth, and the Rank which that Prince once held in the World. The King had the beſt Reaſon to have expected ſuch Practices from the late King, becauſe, tho' he had him ſo long in his Power, he did him no Hurt, nor put him under any Reſtraint: He refus'd to hearken to the Advices that many gave him, of ſecuring his Perſon, till a general Peace ſhould be made: or, at leaſt, till Ireland ſhould be reduced: Some who offered thoſe Advices, are now in the late King's Intereſt: and can, if they pleaſe, inform him of the Truth of this Matter: The late King himſelf deſir'd to be attended by ſome of the Dutch Guards, when he went to Rocheſter, and ſent to the Count de Solmes to that effect; who immediately order'd it, without any Direction from the King, who was not then come to London: When the King knew of it, he ſent Orders to thoſe Guards to wait about the late King, in what Manner he himſelf ſhould command: And it was viſible to thoſe who were about him at that Time, that he was all the while as much Maſter of himſelf, as when he was ſerv'd by his own Guards." The whole Progreſs of Affairs, as they paſſed between his Majeſty and King James, is laid open; and it is remarked, that King William "did not come to England on Deſign to dethrone that King, but declaring a full Purpoſe to leave the Care and Settlement of the Nation to the Parliament: And when ſome Lords were ſent to him by the late King, to aſk him, what it was that he propoſed, his Anſwer was, That he deſir'd that the Adminiſtration of the Government might be brought into a State conformable to the Laws then in being: ſo that no Perſons, who were under legal Incapacities, might continue in public Offices or Truſt; and that a Parliament might be call'd, and ſit in full Freedom, both Armies being at an equal Diſtance from it; that ſo proper Remedies might be applied to all the Diſtempers, into which thoſe violent Councils had thrown the Nation: By this, it appear'd how firmly the King had adher'd to his Declaration. During this Negotiation, and after the King had Notice given him, what the King's Demands were, he, upon Reaſons beſt known to himſelf, threw up all, and abandon'd the Government, and left his Army looſe upon the Nation, and the Rabble upon the City of London, and withdrew himſelf: By which he did all that in him lay, to caſt theſe Kingdoms into moſt violent Convulſions, and expoſe'd even his own Friends to all the Hardſhips, that might have been apprehended from enrag'd Multitudes: For, if the Providence of God, and the natural Gentleneſs of the People of England, had not prov'd effectual Reſtraints, this Nation had become a Scene of Fire and Blood; which the Enemies of this Kingdom perſuaded the late King to venture on, rather than to ſtay, and ſuffer a Parliament to inquire into the Cauſes of the Miſeries the Nation was fallen under, and to ſecure their Religion and Properties. Upon this, the Peers of the Nation, which had, till then, adher'd to the late King, finding themſelves abandon'd by him, declar'd, that the King would aſſume the Adminiſtration of this Infolent Government; which he conſented to do, till a Convention of the States ſhould be brought together, to give it a full and legal Sanction: He did take a moſt particular Care, that the Elections ſhould be carried on with all poſſible Freedom; and only without Violence and Threatenings, but even without Recommendations, or any ſort of Practice, how much ſoever Innocent ſoever: The like Care he uſed at their Meeting, when they met: Every Man argued and voted in the great Deliberations, then on foot, both with Freedom and Safety: So did the King ſpeak to any Perſon, or ſuffer any to ſpeak in his Name, to perſuade, much leſs to threaten them, who ſeem'd ſtill to adhere to the late King: However, he was obſerving the Promiſes he had made in his Declaration. It was thought a Remiſſneſs, and a Neglect of the Public too much, to interpoſe or move to alter the Laws Abuſes as he then did: The Convention coming to a full Reſolution, and judg'd, That the late King had broke the original Contract, upon which this Government was at firſt founded, and, after that, had abandon'd it; ſo that it was neceſſary for them, being thus forſaken by him, to ſee to their own Security: And, as they judg'd, That the late King's Right to govern them was ſuch, 1697. theſe ſeveral Pieces, not only the Adherents of King James were treated with an Overflow of Bitterneſs and Contempt, but even King James himſelf; as if he had equally forfeited all Right both of Juſtification and Recrimination; and as if his very Complaints were not worth a Hearing: His Intrigues with Father la Chaiſe, by the Intervention of his Secretary Coleman, were render'd as black as poſſible, (that is to ſay, it was ſuppos'd they had the Deſtruction both of our Laws and Religion, and even the dethroning the King his Brother for their Object) in order to juſtify the Excluſion-Bill: His ſeiſing the Revenue at his Acceſſion: The Cruelties exercis'd by his Command in the Weſt, on the Followers of Monmouth: His diſpenſing with the Laws: His Practices on the Univerſities: His High-Commiſſion-Court; and, in general, all the Violences and Follies of his Reign, were, in the next Place, urg'd againſt him as ſo many Proofs, That he had been the Inſtrument of his own Misfortunes; and that neither his Subjects nor his Children had fail'd in their Duty to him, till his Extravagancies of all Sorts had diſſolv'd the Tye:—It was alſo ſtrongly inſiſted, That his Deſertion was voluntary: That the Government was diſſolv'd: That the Nation had a Right to provide for itſelf: That in beſtowing the Crown on their Deliverer, they had done no more than what Juſtice, Wiſdom, and Gratitude requir'd: And that it was utterly inconceivable, They ſhould ever again ſubmit to the Bondage they had eſcap'd. Proceding to the Birth of the (pretended) Prince of Wales, nothing was omitted that had the leaſt Tendency to blaſt it as ſuppoſititious: To ſhew why it had not been examin'd in Parliament, agreeable to the Prince's Declaration, it was ſaid, in ſhort, That the Government having taken a different Form, ſuch an Examination was no longer neceſſary: To expoſe the Vanity of making this Appeal either to the Catholic or Proteſtant Princes of the Confederacy, ſufficient Care was taken to explane how much it was againſt the Intereſts of Both, that he ſhould ever recover his Crown: And, laſtly, to convince the whole World how utterly impoſſible it was, That he ever ſhould, and into what a State of Deſperation he was fallen, the ſtrongeſt Light that could be collected, was thrown on the Preliminary, by which France engag'd to abandon him, and to acknowledge King William without Reſerve, upon the Concluſion of a Peace. A. D. 1697.

The Congreſs open'd.

Thus hung the Controverſy at the Opening of the Conferences, which took place on the 9th of May, N. S. at Newburgh-Houſe, before ſpecify'd; whither the Embaſſador-Mediator firſt repair'd, and was follow'd, at ſome little Diſtance of Time, by the Bavarian Miniſter firſt; then by the Embaſſadors of the States-General; after whom arriv'd the Imperialiſts:—The Spaniards came next, and were follow'd by the Engliſh; to whom ſucceded ſeverally the Miniſters of Cologne and Liege, Saxony, Brandenburgh, Lorrain, the Circle of Franconia and Wirtembergh; and after all Theſe, the Embaſſadors of France.

What paſs'd at this Meeting, was no more than a formal Communication, firſt of the new Power which the Embaſſador-Mediator had receiv'd from his Court to the ſeveral Miniſters preſent, and then of their ſeveral Powers to him; and for ſeveral Days after, nothing material was tranſacted, except in making ſuch Regulations as were held neceſſary for the Sake of Method, Order, and Diſpatch; of which Thoſe for abridging the Ceremonial as much as poſſible, were not the leaſt material.

A Declaration of the Lorrain Miniſter.

On the other Hand, the Miniſter of Lorrain, who was wholly under the Direction of the Imperial Court, even while theſe neceſſary Regulations were under Debate, preſented a Declaration to the Mediator, importing, in ſubſtance, That, ſince all the Remonſtrances he had made for a new and more favourable Preliminary, in relation to Lorrain, ſunk, ſo they did not think it was neceſſary or incumbent on them to examine that, which the whole Nation, in general, as well as the King, in particular, had juſt Reaſon to call in queſtion, concerning the Birth of the pretended Prince of Wales. When the late King had quite diſſolv'd the Tie of the Nation to himſelf, they thought they had no further Concern upon them to inquire into that Matter; and therefore they thought it fit to let it remain in that juſt Doubtfulneſs, under which the late King's own Method of Proceedings had brought it: Beſides that, a particular Care had been taken by the late King, to cauſe all thoſe who had been in the Management of that Matter, or were ſuſpected of having a Share in the Artifices about it, to be carried over into France; ſo that it was not poſſible to come at thoſe Perſons, by the interrogating of whom Truth might have been found out: The King expreſs'd no ambitious Deſires of mounting the Throne: The Addreſſes of both Houſes, and the State of Europe, which ſeem'd deſperate without a mighty Support from England, determin'd him in that Matter: But, as he can appeal to God of the Sincerity of his Intentions, who alone knows them, ſo he has an infinite Number of Witneſſes, who ſaw and can juſtify his whole Conduct in the Progreſs of that Revolution, if it were fit for him to appeal to them."

---

In the Anſwer to the Second Memorial of King James, it is obſerv'd, in Juſtification of the Revolution, that, "nothing was done in the Progreſs of it, but that which he made inevitable by ſome Act or other of his own: It went not upon falſe Suggeſtions, nor barely upon the Pretences of redreſſing particular Grievances, or ſome doubtful Oppreſſions, much leſs on the ambitious Deſigns of his Majeſty, that are ſo often and ſo maliciouſly repreſented as the true Cauſes of the Revolution: It was the late King's open throwing off the Reſtraint of Law, and his ſetting about a total Subverſion of the Conſtitution, that drove the Nation to extreme Courſes: The Oaths of Allegiance can be underſtood only in the Senſe limited by law, and ſo they cannot be conceiv'd to bind Subjects to a King, who would not govern them any longer, unleſs he might be allow'd to do it againſt Law: A Revolution ſo brought about, carries in it no Precedent againſt the Security of Government, or the Peace of Mankind: That, which an abſolute Neceſſity inforc'd at one Time, can be no Warrant for irregular Proceedings at any other Time, unleſs it be where the like Neceſſity ſhall require the like Remedies: But, ſince the late King thinks fit to reflect on the Oaths of Subjects, he ought alſo to remember the Oath, which he himſelf ſwore at his Coronation, to defend the Church of England, and to maintain the Laws; to neither of which he ſhew'd any Regard in his whole Government, but ſet himſelf to overturn both. The many Alterations that have been made in the Succeſſion to the Crown of England, upon Occaſions that were neither ſo preſſing nor ſo important as thoſe of late were, ſhould have oblig'd thoſe, who penned this Memorial, to be more reſerv'd and leſs poſitive in affirming Things ſo contrary to the known Hiſtory of this Kingdom: Theſe Revolutions were confirm'd by Laws, which were not afterwards upon ſucceeding Changes repeal'd, for they continue ſtill in force; nor was the Crown of England ever reckon'd to be ſuch a Property to thoſe who held it, that they might uſe it or diſpoſe of it at Pleaſure, as the Memorial ſeems to ſuppoſe."

A. D. 1697. Lorrain, had been disregarded, he could no otherwise attend the Congress than to insist on such a Preliminary, as the Preliminary general to a general Peace, which the High Allies, if they duly consider'd their Engagements, could no otherwise procede to negotiate, without Prejudice to their Honours, Dignities, Words, Promises, and Obligations; and which, consequently, he, the said Minister, on the Behalf of his Principals, must for ever protest against, &c.

Proposals of the Imperialists. This Paper was dated the 15th of May, and the 22d following the Imperial Ministers presented their Proposals, or rather Demands, to the Mediator, of which the most remarkable were the following, That France should restore to the Empire all she had taken from it since the Peace of Munster, whether by Force or Pretence of Right; especially Friburgh, with its Appertenances, in its present State; as also Brisac, Philipsburgh, Hagenau, Weissenbourg, and Landau, together with all their Artillery, Magazines, &c. That she should annul and abrogate all which had been done under the Pretence of Unions and Re-unions; as also, every other Innovation since the Execution of the Peace of Munster, under what Pretence, or in what Manner soever: That to prevent all future Contests, References, and Arbitrations, it should be agreed and determin'd by the present Treaty, openly and explicitely, That the King and Realm of France should be content with the antient Districts of the Three Bishopricks, according to the Cession of Munster, as the full and whole of what belong'd to them; as also, with the several Rights, Powers, Preeminences, and Jurisdictions therein, formerly claim'd and exercis'd by the House of Austria, &c. That all the Estates and Sovereignties of the Palatine-House shall be restor'd, without any Exception whatsoever, either on the Behalf of France, or the Duke and Duchess of Orleans: That all the Commanderies and Effects belonging from all Antiquity to the Teutonic Order, and usurp'd by France, should be restor'd to the Grand Master, Francis Lewis, Prince Palatine, and Bishop of Worms: That, over and above the Town and Castle of Dinant, the Duchy of Bouillon, together with the Town and Castle, usurp'd from the Church of Liege, after the Peace of Munster, and during the Neutrality, should be restor'd to the Elector of Cologne, as Bishop and Prince of Leige: That all Damages sustain'd in particular either by the Emperor or Empire, should be repair'd; and a just Satisfaction should be given to the several Circles for their Charges, Losses, Sufferings, &c. by the Invasions of France: That Security should be given for the full and entire Restitution of the several Places in question, together with all their Dependencies, Archives, Magazines, &c. in ten Days after the Ratification of the Peace: That France, neither directly nor indirectly, shall make, or cause to be made, any Innovation in the Fiefs and other Rights of the Empire in Italy: That the Restitution of Lorrain should be one of the first Articles of the Peace, in the Manner demanded by the Plenipotentiary of Lorrain: That France, by and in consequence of the several Restitutions to be made by the Peace, of Places, Persons, &c. should acquire no new right upon, or against any other: That nevertheless all Benefices ecclesiastic, conferr'd, as well during the War, as before it, should remain to the present Incumbent: Lastly, That Satisfaction should be given to the other Confederates involv'd together with the Emperor and Empire in the present War, as to their several Pretensions, whether already made or to be made; and that all and every one of the said Confederates should be free, not only to confirm the general Peace, and every Article of it by reciprocal Alliances, but also to invite or receive the Accession of other Powers, not already Parties in it.

These Propositions on the Behalf the Emperor and Empire, were also follow'd by such Explanations, Clames, Demands, Enforcements, &c. as the several Princes concern'd thought requisite for the Support of their respective Interests.

And of Spain. On the 27th the Ministers of Spain presented also their Demands, consisting of Fifty-six Articles, all founded on a Pre-supposition, That the Cities of Roses, Gironne, Palamos, and all the other Places occupy'd by the French in Catalonia; as also Luxemburgh, Mons, Charleroy, &c. in the Low-Countries, in their present State, together with all their Artillery, Magazines, Fortifications, Appertenances, Re-unions, &c. and in general, all that could be demanded in Virtue of the Treaty of Nimeguen, were comprehended in, and to be restor'd to his Catholic Majesty by the Preliminaries offer'd by M. de Callieres, as the Basis of the Peace: But then these Demands were not restrain'd to the Limits of that Treaty: On the contrary, they included all that was included in the Pyrenean Treaty; and that in a Strain so precise, and seemingly so firm and unalterable, as if it was in their Power to command what they clam'd; and as if the Exhibition of Right was all that was necessary to the obtaining it.

And also of the Dutch. Much about the same Time also, the Dutch Ministers made their Proposals, which were altogether as simple and brief, as those of Spain were complicated and redundant: For they only propos'd, That Peace between his Most Christian Majesty and the States-General, might be restor'd on such Terms as were most suitable to the present State of Affairs: That in order thereunto, there might be a Treaty of Commerce, Navigation, and Maritime Affairs between the Two Powers, which they were ready to enter upon immediately: And that in the general Treaty, the Allies, as well as Themselves, might be severally included to their Satisfaction.

Now what this Difference of Language and Manner imply'd, those vers'd in political Matters, will scarce want the Key of the Negotiation to discover: These desir'd nothing but Peace, and to graft the Interest of their Trade upon it; whereas Those who had commenc'd the War only for the Sake

A. D. 1697. Sake of Recoveries and Reſtitutions, did not care to compound their Loſſes, and leave the common Enemy as formidable as ever.

Anſwer of the French Miniſters. But however this may be, on the 1ſt of June the Miniſters of France put in their Anſwer, which was addreſs'd alike to Thoſe of the Emperor and Spain, and was alike artificial and intimidating: For tho' is was call'd an Anſwer, it contain'd a Queſtion which was not very eaſy to ſolve: Said They, in effect, "Before it is poſſible for us to reply to the Propoſitions we have receiv'd, we muſt know whether the Preliminaries offer'd by M. de Callieres, are accepted or not? If the Former, the ſaid Propoſitions cannot be taken into Conſideration: If the Latter, the ſaid Preliminaries are no longer in Being, and we muſt procede on a Footing entirely new."

Capacity is always of uſe; but never makes ſuch a Figure as when ſupported by Power and Vigour: The Imperialiſts, if aware of this Turn, diſcover'd more Ingenuity than Firmneſs, in the Reply they made to it: For, having taken three Days to deliberate upon it, on the fourth they ſignify'd, That as the Articles in queſtion contain'd part of his Imperial Majeſty's Demands, and had been accepted for the Sake of having what was deficient in them ſupply'd, they did, nevertheleſs, perſiſt in demanding a circumſtantial Anſwer, Article by Article, as Equity and the neareſt way to Peace neceſſarily requir'd.

Rejoinder of the Imperialiſts.

and of the Spaniards. On the ſame Day alſo the Spaniards put in their Rejoinder, which was to the ſame Effect, tho' more amplified and inter-tiſſued with apparent Signs of Anxiety and Perturbation: And as if conſcious they were not ſtrong enough of themſelves to procure the Relaxations they contended for, they call'd upon the Mediator, as alſo upon the Dutch Miniſters, to ſupport them in their Clames, becauſe it was more immediately thorough them that the preliminary Declaration had been made.

French deliver a Liſt of Places not comprehended in the Treaty of Nimeguen, It ought not, however, to be forgot, that the Embaſſadors of France did ſo far condeſcend to argue the Matter with thoſe of Spain, that they deliver'd in a Liſt of Places occupy'd by the King their Maſter before the Treaty of Nimeguen, tho' comprehended in the Spaniſh Clames, which, conſequently, according to their Reaſoning, were not ſubject to Litigation, within the Meaning and Intention of their Preliminary: But the Spaniards, in the Margin of that very Liſt, did on the Spot enter ſuch Exceptions to the Liſt, as at once expos'd the Injuries their Maſter had ſuffer'd, and the Reaſons they had to inſiſt on Redreſs: For of the whole Number of Places it contain'd, but three appear'd to have been in the Poſſeſſion of France before the ſaid Treaty.

which is excepted to on the Spot by the Spaniards.

And now, agreeable to the famous Maxim of Hobbes, no ſooner had Reaſon declar'd againſt the French Miniſters, than they alſo declar'd againſt Reaſon, by delivering in a new Paper to the Mediator, in which they avow'd a Reſolution not to admit any Demand or Propoſition, contrary to the Articles of the ſaid Preliminary; or to agree to any one Point, which either had, or might be urg'd, beyond the Letter of the ſaid Treaty of Nimeguen and That of Weſtphalia: And ſignify'd, in the moſt explicate Terms, That if there was any ſerious Intention to re-eſtabliſh the Peace, the Negotiation muſt turn on ſuch Points only, as were poſterior to thoſe Pacts; or ſuch as the Alterations of Times and Circumſtances, had made it requiſite to change.

The French again inſiſt on the Letter of their Preliminaries.

All this while the bloody Buſineſs of the Field proceded, as if, in general, no Dependence was plac'd on Negotiation and Treaty-work; or, at leaſt, as if all the Articles were to be engrav'd with the Point of the Sword.

Proceedings of the Campaign.

The firſt Motions, as uſual, were in Flanders: For the French, towards the End of April, having entertain'd a Deſign of taking poſſeſſion of the ſtrong Camp of Deynſe, and having aſſembled a conſiderable Body of Forces for that Purpoſe, the Elector of Bavaria, who had Intelligence of it, alſo took the Field to prevent them; and by an equal Mixture of good Conduct and good Fortune, carried his Point: For tho' a Party of the French were firſt in Poſſeſſion, they were not ſtrong enough to hold it; and before the Enemy were in a Condition to diſlodge him in their Turn, he had fortify'd his Lines in ſuch a Manner, that they did not think it adviſable to attempt it.

Elector of Bavaria prevents the French at Deynſe.

But as this was a Meaſure purely defenſive, it produc'd no Conſequence: King William was ſtill in England; nor does it appear, that the Confederates had as yet concerted any regular Plan for the Conduct of the Year: The Germans apprehending, and not altogether without Reaſon, That they were in danger of being overpower'd, by the additional Troops which France was now at leiſure to bring againſt them upon the Rhine, in conſequence of the Peace of Italy, and perhaps already ſomewhat diſguſted at the joint Advances of the Maritime Powers towards a Peace, appear'd extremely backward to furniſh ſuch a Force for the Service of the Low-Countries, as might balance That of the Enemy: And on the other Hand, when King William did arrive in Holland, (which was on the 27th of April, O. S.) he ſeem'd to beſtow more Attention to the opening of the Congreſs, than the opening of the Campaign: For, having continued ſome Days at the Hague, he removed firſt to Zuleſtein, and then declar'd a Purpoſe of proceding from thence to Loo: But, having receiv'd Intelligence, that the Enemy had inveſted Aeth, he repair'd on the 20th of May, N. S. to Breda, and from thence iſſued out his Orders on all Sides, for the drawing together ſuch a Force, as might raiſe an Expectation at leaſt, that his Purpoſe was to raiſe the Siege.

The Germans dilatory as uſual.

King William more attentive to Peace than War.

But take the Field on hearing the French had inveſted Aeth.

But then the Execution of theſe very Orders, ſerves to ſhew in how unprepar'd a State he was, for ſo great an Enterprize: The Elector of Bavaria's Forces were ſtill at Deynſe; his own were encamp'd at Bois-Seigneur-Iſaac; and it was provided, that the two Armies ſhould join at Hall or St. Quintin-Lannock;

A. D. 1607. Linnock; as alſo, that they ſhould be reinforc'd on the way, by the Brandenburg and Liege-Cavalry, for the Foot were ſeveral Days March behind: And as for the Forces under the Landgrave of Heſſe, and thoſe of Lunenburgh and Munſter, which alone were computed at 22,000, they were ſcarce in Motion, and could not poſſibly come up, till a good Part of the Campaign was over.

Is join'd by the Elector of Bavaria. Accordingly, on the 24th, the King in Perſon join'd the Army; on the 26th the Elector of Bavaria came up, after a very fatiguing March: And when the two Armies took poſt at Iſeringhe, they conſiſted of 119 Battalions, and 280 Squadrons, amounting, as it was ſaid, to near 100,000 Men.

[L. Gazette. No. 3288]

To no Purpoſe. But tho' they talk'd of nothing leſs than raiſing the Siege, the Enemy knew they had nothing to apprehend from them: For while M. Catinat, aſſiſted by M. Vauban, carry'd on the Approaches with an Army of between 30 and 40,000 Men, Meſſ. de Villeroy and de Boufflers, with upwards of 90,000 more, were ſo poſted, as to render it in a manner impoſſible for an inferior Force to ſuccede in ſo deſperate an Enterprize: And beſides the Diſpoſition thus made to cover the Beſiegers, M. de Tallard and M. de la Mothe, had each of them a flying Camp under his Command; the one between Ypres and Furnes, and the other between the Sambre and the Meuſe.

The two Armies ſeperate again. Thus the joint Army of the Confederates having continued long enough at Iſeringhe, to be convinc'd, that nothing ſenſible could be done for the Relief of the Place, on the 31ſt broke up and ſeperated; King William directing his Courſe to Braine-le-Chateau, and the Elector of Bavaria returning to his former Poſt at Deinſe.

Burnet's Apology for it. Biſhop Burnet, having acknowledg'd the Place was ill furniſh'd, in order to colour the Conduct of his Majeſty on this Occaſion, proceedes in theſe Words, "And the bad State both of our Coin and Credit, ſet the King's Preparations ſo far back, that he could not come in Time to relieve it:" And according to Biſhop Kennet, his Majeſty openly declar'd, "He would not ſacrifice a Man for "the Relief of a Place which the French "muſt be oblig'd to give up by the Peace." But if his Majeſty did make this open Declaration, it ſeems not a little ſtrange that he ſhould make ſo haſty a Puſh to aſſemble his Army, and advance ſo far to diſcover the Strength and Diſpoſition of the Enemy: —Becauſe he could have made no Attempt of any kind, which would not have coſt him many Lives: And that he actually did come up Time enough to relieve the Place, in contradiction to Burnet, we have already ſeen: Beſides, tho' the Place was reduc'd to a State of Deſpondency, by the Seperation and Retreat of the confederate Army, it nevertheleſs held out till the 5th of June, (tho' his Lordſhip is pleas'd to add, it was faintly defended by the Governor, for the ſame Reaſons, which indue'd King William not to attempt its Relief) when the Beſiegers were on the Point of making a general Aſſault, and the Gariſon, in ſuch Caſe, had nothing to expect but unavoidable Deſtruction: And in the Letter of his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty to the Archbiſhop of Paris, requiring him to celebrate a ſolemn Te Deum, on the Surrender of the Place on the 7th, (when the Gariſon march'd out with all the Honours of War, except Cannon) the Caſe, as he ſtates it, appears very different from the State given of it by the ſaid Right Reverend Hiſtorians:—For it was thus, in Subſtance, that Monarch expreſs'd himſelf, "Couſin, the Propoſitions of Peace which I caus'd to be made, a long Time ſince, not being accepted, tho' extremely favourable, I choſe to give the confederated Princes ſufficient Time to conſider and underſtand their own Intereſts, by ſuffering my Armies to continue in a State of Inactivity during the laſt Campaign: But the little Uſe they have made of my Forbearance, has oblig'd me to reſume a Spirit of Enterprize, to the End, They may be convinc'd, it is not from a Contumation of the War they muſt hope for Peace: It was with this View I order'd my Couſin Catinat to lay Siege to Aeth, which tho' one of the moſt conſiderable Places in the Netherlands, held out but thirteen Days, after the Trenches were open'd:—In vain the principal Leaders of the confederate Forces brought into the Field a greater Strength than they had ever brought into the Field before:—They no ſooner came in view of the Place, than they were convinc'd of the Impoſſibility of relieving it:—This Conqueſt is ſo much the more agreeable to me, becauſe obtain'd with ſo little Loſs, and becauſe I have reaſon to conclude from ſo proſperous an Opening of the Campaign, that, if my Enemies perſiſt in refuſing the advantageous Terms I have offer'd them, out of a ſincere Deſire to re-eſtabliſh the public Tranquility, God, who knows my Sincerity, will continue to pour the like Bleſſings on my Arms, which he has hitherto pour'd upon them: In confidence whereof, I have order'd that Te Deum, &c.

The Place capitulates. But how much ſoever this Royal Mandate ſerves to waken the Credit of our Two Hiſtorians, it is nevertheleſs certain, that the Troops of Heſſe, Munſter, and Lunenburgh, and no leſs than eight Regiments from England, which were to have join'd the Confederates, and which his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty ſeems to ſuppoſe had already join'd them, were not as yet arriv'd: So that, while the Siege laſted, King William had not the Uſe of thoſe Numbers which King Lewis places to his Account.

It is true, they did arrive ſoon after, but not Time enough for his Majeſty to undertake any thing offenſively, before the Enemy were at Leiſure to find him full Employment.

A Project of the Enemy to reduce Brabant, defeated. On the contrary, when only the Lunenburghers were come up, his Majeſty receiv'd Advice, that all the three Armies of the Enemy were in Motion, that their Purpoſe was to get Poſſeſſion of the Camp at Anderlech, from whence they had formerly bombarded

A. D. 1697. barded Bruſſels, &c. in conſequence of which, not only that City, but alſo Vilvord, and les Trois Trous, muſt have fallen into their Hands: And the Meaſures he took upon it, ſeem'd to argue, That his Reſolution was to act on the Defenſive only: For tho', by cauſing his Forces to decamp on the 22d (of June) in the Evening, and to continue their March all Night long thro' the Wood of Soignies, his Dragoons, and two Brigades of Foot, made a hard Shift to prevent the Enemy, by ſeizing the Poſt about Ten o'Clock the next Morning, and the reſt of his Army came up to ſuſtain them the ſame Day; his next Care was to fortify every dubious Approach with ſufficient Entrenchments, as well for the Security of his Camp, as for the City he undertook to cover: Nor when the Reſt were actually arriv'd, which was ſoon after, did he attempt any thing beyond a general Forage, which was done, under all the Precautions imaginable: And that he might derive no Credit from thence, within a Day or two, the Enemy perform'd the like in ſight of the confederate Army, with as much Succeſs, and as little Diſturbance.

Such was the Face of the Campaign in Flanders: And as it was in all Reſpects ſo much to the Advantage of France, we are not to wonder at the Air of Preſcription which they put on in the Courſe of the Conferences at Ryſwick.

Progreſs of the Conferences at Ryſwick.

And, not to be too minute in following the Negotiation Step by Step, by the Beginning of July, the Embaſſadors of each Side had viſited and re-viſited: Thoſe of the Emperor and Spain, at the Requiſition of the French, had reſpectively deliver'd the Hint of a Project for ſhortening the Proceſs, and the Latter had given a civil but firm Reply, by Word of Mouth, importing, in general, an Approbation of that Proceſs; but adding, That ſince Spain, which was ſo deeply concern'd in the Event, had ſtill her Reſerves, it was impoſſible for them to explane themſelves any farther, till the Allies were all of one Mind: That, nevertheleſs, they would venture to inſinuate, That tho' it was abſolutely neceſſary to adhere to the Treaty of Nimeguen, yet in the Courſe of the Conferences, ſuch Explanations on certain Points might poſſibly be made, as would leave no juſt Cauſe of Imputation againſt them, for not having done their Endeavour to ſatisfy the Allies: That if the Diſpoſition on their Side was ſincere towards a Peace, they would probably obtain it ſooner by that Channel than any other, if they made a proper Uſe of it: That hitherto they had receiv'd no Order but to expedite the Peace as faſt as poſſible, notwithſtanding the preſent Superiority of his Majeſty's Arms, and the farther Proſpect of Succeſs which lay open before him; and that for their Parts, they had loſt no Opportunity of diſcharging their Commiſſion.

All this was reported to the Miniſters of the Allies by the Mediator, on the 3d of July, and on the 9th following, the Embaſſadors of Spain, ſtill under the Cover of all their former Reſerves, conſented to receive a Project of Peace from Thoſe of France. A. D. 1697.

But when Matters were brought to this Iſſue, all Europe was ſurpris'd with the opening a new and very extraordinary Vein of Negotiation near Hall, in the Sight of the two Armies, between the Marſhal de Bouffliers, and the Earl of Portland, each accompany'd with a ſplendid Train of General Officers, Perſons of Diſtinction, &c. And in reciting this Incident, our two Right Reverend Hiſtorians, Kennet and Burnet, differ irreconcileably: For the Latter is expreſs, That the Marſhal deſir'd the Conference, (tho' his own Account of what paſs'd at it, partial as it is, apparently makes againſt him) whereas the Former declares, The Earl, as from himſelf, demanded it: The Gazette, on the other Hand, only ſays, They met by Agreement; but, in avoiding to ſay who made the Advance, according to all political Reaſoning, ſufficient indicates the Truth. Interſetted by certain Field Conferences between Bouffliers and Portland.

But however this may be, it is certain they had Five Conferences, tho' Biſhop Kennet ſays but Four, viz. on the 10th of July, N. S. the 15th, the 20th, the 26th, and the 2d of Auguſt: What paſs'd in the Three firſt, paſs'd in the open Field; but in the Fourth, the two Negotiators, after a Debate of two Hours, retir'd to a Houſe in the Suburbs of Hall, where they call'd for Pen, Ink, and Paper, and employ'd an Hour longer, no doubt, in reducing to writing, what they had ſettled in the Field: And, as undoubtedly, it was at the Fifth and laſt Conference that this important Paper was reciprocally ſign'd; which, according to the Right Reverend Author laſt quoted, contain'd an Adjuſtment of ſeveral Points, that the Plenipotentiaries at Ryſwick would not have adjuſted in a Year.

As to the Subject-Matter of theſe Conferences, no ſatisfactory Account has been given of it to this Day: Burnet, indeed, would have had the World believe, That he was in the Secret of it, as may be gather'd from what follows: "The Lord Portland, (ſays He) told me, himſelf, That the Subject of thoſe Conferences, was concerning King James: The King (William) deſir'd to know [and yet, according to him, the Marſhal Bouffliers deſir'd the Conference] how the King of France intended to diſpoſe of him? And how he could own him, and yet ſupport the other? The King of France would not renounce the protecting him, by any Article of the Treaty: But it was agreed between them, That the King of France ſhould give him no Aſſiſtance, nor give the King any Diſturbance on his Account: And that he ſhould retire from the Court of France either to Avignon or Italy: On the other Hand, his Queen ſhould have 50,000*l.* a Year, which was her Jointure, ſettled after his Death; and that it ſhould now be paid her, He being reckon'd as dead to the Nation: And in This the King very readily acquieſc'd: Theſe Meetings made the Treaty go on with more Diſpatch, this tender Point being once ſettled." And this, no doubt, was the Story impos'd on the World at that Time: For even the Burnet's Account of thoſe Conferences, as given to him by Lord Portland.

A. D. 1697. Gazette Account, No. 3312.

the London-Gazette informs us, That Lord Portland, by his Majesty's Order, had acquainted the Imperial and Spanish Embassadors, "That for what related to his Majesty and his Kingdoms, all Matters were so far adjusted with France, That his Majesty was satisfied his Concerns would occasion no Delay: And that his Majesty desir'd the Emperor, and the rest of the Allies, would likewise contribute what depended on them, to the speedy finishing that great Work."

Remarks on the whole.

But it is scarce supposable, that the Managements to be observ'd with regard to King James, whose Interests had been so apparently given up by the very Preliminaries of the Treaty, were the only Points discuss'd, in the Course of a Procedure so altogether extraordinary: It was not for the superior Ability of Lord Portland, but the superior Confidence plac'd in him by the King, that he was selected for this distinguishing Commission: And surely such Points as have been recited, might have been entrusted to the Earl of Pembroke, Lord Villiers, and Sir Joseph Williamson, his Majesty's Plenipotentiaries at Ryswick, who had infinite Reason to complane of a Preference so altogether inexcusable, and which left nothing to them but the mere Formalities of a Negotiation.

But the Truth is, that his Majesty was not on very cordial Terms at this Time, either with the Emperor or Spain; and, in proportion as he grew out of Humour with them, and with the War on their Account, the more natural it became for him to conciliate the good Graces of King Lewis, which could be done no way so well, as by helping to give the Negotiations now depending a French Bias, or by co-operating with the French Court in some Practice on the Spanish Succession: And some Writers have suggested, That these Field-Conferences turn'd principally on that Hinge: But then it must be understood, That they procede upon Presumption, rather than Information: And that no Concert could then be made, but what was eventual: For the House of Bavaria, in Virtue of the Renunciation made by France, was next in that Succession; and the Electoress was then so near her Time, that she was brought to Bed of a Son, three Days after the last Field-Conference: And probably that very Incident put a Stop to those Jealousies, which such a seperate Proceeding could not fail to excite, notwithstanding all the plausible Things which Lord Portland could urge to the Allies in Extenuation of it: For, whatever the Agreement was, his Majesty either thought himself so restrain'd by, or plac'd such a Dependence on, it, that the very next Day after it was completed, he left the Camp, and repair'd to Loo, there to consume the rest of the Summer in Repose.

And now, having so far dispatch'd this remarkable Intersection, it may be expected, that we should again return to the Congress: But in the very Interval of these Field-Conferences, Advice was receiv'd of a new Incident, which will previously require our Attention.

A. D. 1697. Intrigues of the several Parties in Poland.

The Death of the King of Poland had, as usual, expos'd the Crown to Sale: And, so dazzling a Thing is a Crown of any Sort, that there was no want of Bidders for it. Of These the Princes James and Alexander, Sons of his late Majesty, were foremost; and as it was natural they should, had all the Countenance, and all the Assistance that the Queen-Mother could give them: But the being oblig'd to leave Warsaw under a Pretext, that her Presence had a Tendency to over-awe the Election, being also at Variance with the Court of France, having only a provisional Connection with that of Vienna, and having no positive Assurance of Support from any foreign Power, but the Czar, (who was at this Time accompanying his own Embassadors in cog. to the Hague) it was obvious, that there was Room enough for other Pretenders; and that in case of a warm and potent Opposition, all her Efforts might be fruitless.

On this Presumption, therefore, it was that Don Livio d'Odeschalchi, Nephew of the late Pope Clement XI. became a Competitor; and as the Crown was to be a Purchase, offer'd not only all that was in Power, but much more, to obtain it.

But all Apprehensions on his Account, were immediately suspended by the Appearance of a much more formidable Rival, Louis de Bourbon, Prince de Conti, who was recommended to the Poles by the Abbè de Polignac, the Minister of France at Warsaw, in all the advantagious Colours his whole Stock of Eloquence could furnish, (not without an Interspersion of Invectives on the Queen, and by Rebound on her Family) and yet more powerfully by the Distributions he was enabled to make among the Grandees, by way of Earnest of his Royal Master's Munificence: The Primate, who, to speak in English parliamentary Language, was the returning Officer, he had the Address to make sure of first; and then made use of his Authority and Exemple to influence Others: So that, in consequence of their joint Endeavours, the French Party soon became so considerable, as almost to defy all Opposition.

The Court of Vienna, on the other Hand, which was altogether as attentive to, and as much concern'd in, the Issue as the Court of France, could not so easily resolve who to favour: The young Duke of Lorrain, who set up as a known Dependent on the Emperor, was the Person whose Interests they were the most cordially inclin'd to espouse: But neither was the Queen-Dowager to be render'd wholy desperate, nor were the Pretentions of the Princes of Neuburgh and Baden, who also declar'd themselves Candidates, to be wholly slighted.

But, if the Rival-ship of so many Princes, who had all their Clames upon his Imperial Majesty, embarrass'd his Councils, when the Elector of Saxony made his Appearance on the same List, it was reasonable to think, that the Embarrassment was in part remov'd: Neither of the Three Former were in a Condition to out-bid France; and the Imperial Treasury

A.D.1697. Treasury could ill afford to supply that Defect: But the Elector was not only able to bear the Expence of the Purchase, but in case of any Contest, could bring a sufficient Force into the Field, to make good the Efforts of his Partizans.

How doubtfully soever then the Imperial Ministers might think it advisable to behave among such a Diversity of Competitors, it must be suppos'd, that they plac'd their Reliance chiefly on him, and that they took their Measures accordingly.

It is certain, that about the Beginning of March he repaired to Vienna; that he continued there till the End of May; and that when he departed, instead of proceding to Hungary, to resume the Command of the Imperial Army, he returned to Dresden, in order to collect a Body of Forces, with which he pass'd thro' Silesia, and presented himself on the Frontiers of Poland: Count Fleming, his Minister at Warsaw, having also in this Interval, prevail'd with the Pope's Nuncio to recommend him to the Poles, as the fittest Person in Europe to be their King; and also undertaken for his Reconciliation to the Church, that his Religion might not be urg'd as a Bar to his Promotion.

M. Fleming, also, on behalf of his Master, engag'd, That his Electoral Highness would pay the Crown Debts, and the Arrears of the Army: That he would reduce Caminiec at his own Charge: That he would annex the Ukrain, Walachia, and Moldavia to Poland: That in case of a War, he would, upon Requisition, assist the Republic with 6000 Men at his own Charge: That he would resettle their Coinage, restore their Trade, re-establish their Fortresses, &c. &c. And, lastly, that he would sign their Pacta Conventa without reserve.

But tho' such considerable Offers from so considerable a Prince, influenced many and stagger'd many more, their Operation was not strong enough to extinguish the Hopes of any one of the Competitors: On the contrary, all their Agents were Night and Day employ'd, in interesting Heaven, Earth, and Hell itself in their respective Interests.

The French favour them severally.

At length, however, after a Course of Intrigues and Incidents scarce to be ennumerated, the Day of Election came; the several Candidates were propos'd by the Primate, except the Prince of Baden; immediately the Field rung with the Counter-Acclamations of the several Parties; and while the Suffrages were taking, it being soon apparent, that the Duke of Lorrain, the Princes of Newbergh, and Baden, and Odescalchi were thrown entirely out of the Question; that the Contest lay between Prince James, the Elector of Saxony, and the Prince of Conti; and that the Latter of These had a Majority against Either of the Former; the Two Former join'd Interests, or rather, the Sobieski-Interest was thrown into the Saxon Scale by the Mediation of the Crown-General Jablonowski; in Virtue of which Management, That of Conti kick'd the Beam.

But weaker than the rest united.

But the Primate, whose Office it was to declare the Election, was so far from admitting the Legality of any such subsequent Compromise, that he withdrew from the Field, protesting against it, and refusing to hear of any Temperament: The united Party which remain'd, and which were now under a Necessity of justifying one Irregularity by committing many more, hereupon sent a Deputation to the Bishop of Cujavia, a zealous Partizan of the Sobieskies, to officiate in the Primate's stead, who excus'd himself for that Day, in order to deliberate on some Expedient to be made use of on the next.

A.D.1697.

Accordingly, his Advice was taken, and all Manner of Practices were try'd to gain the Primate and his Party, but without the desired Success; for the utmost he could be brought to, was to relinquish the Prince of Conti, provided the Adversary would relinquish the Elector: But they being in every respect the strongest, as having the Crown-Army to depend on within the Kingdom, and another Army of Saxon Auxiliaries upon the Frontiers, would not hear of any such Proposal: So that when the Palatinates re-assembled the next Day, the same Schism continued, the same Confusion ensued; and upon the Issue, the Primate proclam'd the Prince of Conti in a tumultuous way; and then, repairing to the Cathedral, which he found shut against him, by order of the Pope's Nuncio, and which he caus'd to be broke open, in Defiance of that Order, caus'd Te Deum to be sung, for an Act which threaten'd to involve a whole Kingdom in all the Calamities of a Civil War.

The Primate proclaims the Prince of Conti.

Such a Tool is Religion in the Hands of Churchmen and Politicians!

On the other Hand, the Bishop of Cujavia proclam'd the Elector of Saxony, sung Te Deum on the Spot, as also again in the Cathedral afterwards, on finding the same Doors open to them, which had admitted their Antagonists; the Crown-General caus'd all the Artillery round the City to be thrice discharg'd; and on the next Day the same Party met again in the Field of Election, and deputed 100 Gentlemen on Horseback with an Invitation to M. Fleming, to repair thither, or perhaps to be his Guard; notified to him, on his Arrival, the Choice they had made, and receiv'd his Acknowledgments in his Master's Name.

The Bishop of Cujavia for Elector of Saxony.

The next Measure to be taken, was to draw up the Pacta Conventa, which the new King was to sign: But first, in order to make a new Effort, whether any Impression might be made on the Primate and his Party, a Conference was demanded, and agreed to, but to no other Purpose than to make the Breach wider, if possible, than it was before: So that the Saxons, being at last convinc'd, that the Controversy was not to be decided in an amicable way, nam'd Three of their Party to invite the King into Poland, sent a Body of Forces to secure the Crown, and not only order'd the necessary Preparations to be made at Cracow, for the Coronation, but solicited the Czar, who had sent a Letter to the Nobility, which the Primate had suppress'd, to furnish them with an Army of Auxiliaries, in case of Need,

A. D. 1697. and made all the other Diſpoſitions in their Power to ſecure their Point, in caſe of an Appeal to the Sword.

Nor was the Primate and M. de Polignac wanting on their Parts, as well to authenticate what they had already done, as to maintain it at all Extremities, by all the Countenance, and all the Aſſiſtance that could be deriv'd, from the Power, Credit, and Influence of France.

Thus Poland had Two Kings at once, for each had that Title beſtow'd on him by his reſpective Party; and while the Courts of Paris and Conſtantinople acknowledg'd the Prince of Conti, thoſe of the Confederates did the ſame by the Elector of Saxony: In like Manner alſo, when the News was ſeverally brought to the ſeveral Armies in the Field, a triple Diſcharge, in Honour of one Pretender, was anſwer'd by a triple Diſcharge from the Enemy, in Honour of the Other: And at the Congreſs, all the Artifices imaginable were reciprocably practis'd, by both Parties alike, to eſtabliſh and deſtroy each others Intelligence, and the airy Caſtles built upon it.

This Incident without any apparent Operation at Ryſwick.

But, however the political Pack was cut and ſhuffled at Ryſwick, it does not appear that this Incident made any material Alteration in the Courſe of the Game, either in King William's or King Lewis's Cabinet: For it was the Day after the firſt Field-Conference, that the News reach'd both Camps; and yet the Two Negotiators continued their Meetings regularly, as we have ſeen, and brought them to a ſatisfactory Iſſue, as if what had happen'd in Poland, was a Matter of no Conſideration in Flanders.

Indeed, if the Earl of Portland had no more in Charge than what was contain'd in the Project preſented two Days before the firſt Meeting to the Mediator, by the Engliſh Embaſſadors, the French themſelves could not have deſir'd a Peace with England on cheaper Terms; and, conſequently, it was not their Intereſt to make the leaſt Heſitation in accepting it.

The Intereſt of France to make up with England on the Terms propos'd.

What thoſe Terms were.

According to that Project, which conſiſted of fourteen Articles, drawn up in Latin, by Mr. Prior, the Secretary of the Embaſſy, nothing was to be done but to abſtain from any farther Hoſtilities, to forgive and forget the paſt, to make reciprocal Reparation and Reſtitution, recall all Letters of Marque and Reprizal, and ſuch other Generals (with an Exception to one long Article concerning the Principality of Orange) as ſeem'd to indicate, That the two Nations had been fighting all this while, without any Cauſe of Complaint againſt each other, or having any Purpoſe to ſerve to each others Detriment.

The Dutch alſo in their Project, which was deliver'd in five Days before that of the Engliſh, confin'd themſelves as cloſely as poſſible to the Treaty of Nimeguen:—But then they took care to demand Reſtitution of the Ships and Merchandizes of their Subjects, ſeiz'd in the Ports of France, in the Beginning of the War: And alſo to carry on a Negotiation for the Re-eſtabliſhment of their Commerce, while this Project yet lay upon the Table. A. D. 1697.

And thus it becomes more and more apparent, that the way to Peace between the Maritime Powers and France, was open and free from any material Encumbrance: For as to the Diſpoſal of King James's Perſon, or the Queſtion, How his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty could own one King of England, and yet ſupport another? mention'd in the fabulous Hiſtory above quoted, they were Points that could not be propos'd, much leſs inſiſted upon, without a Violence not only to Generoſity and Hoſpitality, but even to Humanity.

But, to put this Matter out of the Reach of Controverſy, Poſterity need only be inform'd, That on the 8th of June, N. S. above a Month before Lord Portland and M. de Boufflers met, King James diſcover'd the Senſe he had of his own deſperate Condition, by ſetting forth a Third Manifeſto, addreſs'd to all the Princes and Powers of Europe, in his own Name, Stile, and Perſon, under a Preamble to this Effect, viz. "That, after ſo long and ſo calamitous a War, ſeeing all the Parties concern'd in it on the Point of ruſhing into a Peace without his Participation, he found it high Time to employ the only Method in his Power for the Conſervation of his inconteſtable Right, by a ſolemn Proteſt againſt all that ſhould be concluded in prejudice to it: That it was not his Purpoſe to enter into any Diſcuſſions of what had befallen him, becauſe the Notoriety of it had render'd it needleſs, and becauſe it could not be ſuppos'd that any could doubt the Juſtice of his Cauſe." After which, his Misfortunes, Prejudices, and Reſentments, prompted him to procede as follows: "It is not the Condition to which we have been reduc'd, ſince the Prince of Orange depriv'd us of our Crown, which is our ſole Affliction: For the Love of our People is ſo rooted in us, that we cannot, without Sorrow, behold their Riches and their Blood waſted in the Support of ſo unrighteous a Cauſe: And if a Peace ſhould be made to our Prejudice, They muſt be abandon'd as a Prey to thoſe Strangers they are become ſubject to, as long as the Uſurpation (ſuch as before, is the injurious Term made uſe of) ſubſiſts: We have alſo felt a ſenſible Regret in not being able to follow both our Inclinations and our Intereſts, in maintaining the Peace of Chriſtendom, and preventing the Calamities brought upon it by the War: And as our Enemies have ſpread falſe Reports of a ſecret League between us and France, we declare, upon the Word of a King, we never did make any ſuch League with that Crown, or with any of the Confederates engag'd in the preſent War. King James's Proteſt againſt the Peace, &c.

We beſeech thoſe Princes to conſider how dangerous the Example they give, may prove to themſelves, and that the Caſe of all Sovereigns is implicated in ours: We make it our Demand, that they would contribute to re-eſtabliſh us in our Kingdoms; that they would reflect on the Glory they would derive from a Reſolution ſo conformable to the Intereſts of

A. D. 1697. of those who have an Inheritance in their Dominions: And, lastly, that they would ponder, whether the most antient Treaties are not the most solid, and whether the Peace would not be more secure under our Guaranty, than under that of a Prince who has neither Right nor Succession; Since, if he had Children, they stand excluded even by the pretended Settlement made since the Usurpation?

Nevertheless, as we see the Confederate Princes will accept that Usurpation, as the Basis of the present Peace, we are indispensably oblig'd by what we owe to ourself, our Posterity, and our People, to make the best Provision we can, that our Silence shall not be taken for an Acquiescence, to the Prejudice of our Self, our lawful Heirs, and our Crown.

It is for this Reason, therefore, that we solemnly protest, in the best Form that we can, against all that may or shall be negotiated, regulated, or stipulated with the Usurper of our Realms, as being void of all rightful and lawful Authority.

We profess, in particular, against all the Treaties of Alliance, Confederacy and Commerce with England since the Usurpation, as being in like manner null, for want of the like Authority, and consequently no ways binding either to our lawful Heirs and Successors, or our Subjects.

We also protest in general against all Acts whatsoever, which, directly or indirectly, confirm, authorise, or approve the Usurpation of the Prince of Orange, the Acts of his pretended Parliament, and all others tending to reverse the fundamental Laws of our Realms touching the Order of Succession.

Lastly: We again protest and declare, That no Defect of Form shall redound to the Detriment of our Self, our lawful Heirs, our Crown, or our Subjects; we reserving by these Presents, seal'd with our great Seal, all our Rights and Clames, which do remain, and shall remain, in their full Force, and which no Extremity shall oblige us to renounce or compound; protesting once more, That neither before God or Man are we answerable for the Evils which the Injustice done, or to be done, us, may hereafter bring on our Kingdoms, and upon all Christendom. Given at St. Germains, &c."

Thus it is plain King James had nothing left to hope, and consequently King William had nothing to fear: As also, That nothing being stipulated in favour of the Nation, but barely an Acquiescence on the Part of France, in what they had done for their own Deliverance, there was no national Point of Negotiation left, which might not as well have been treated at the Congress by the English Embassadors, who had a constitutional Authority under all the Forms of Office, from the Council-Board to the great Seal of England, as in the Field by Lord Portland, the King's Privado, a Foreigner by Birth, under no better Sanction, perhaps, than a verbal Instruction, or, at least, such a written Order, as in doubtful Cases, military Men sometimes venture to insist upon for their own Security. A. D. 1697.

What, therefore, the Agitations of the Jacobite Party in England were, during these Field-Parlies, or whether they were weak enough to flatter themselves, that any reversionary Provision would be made in the Treaty for the Re-establishment of their Interests, (as some Authors have asserted) is not worth an Enquiry: And with this clear Insight into the Nature and Direction of our own Affairs, (which now for the first Time, in this Reign, and for Reasons already made apparent, were no longer intimately blended with those of the Confederates) we may dispense with some Part of our Minuteness in recounting the Sequel of the Negotiations.

The French deliver in their Project of Peace.

On the 20th of July, the French Embassadors deliver'd in their Project of a general Peace; that is to say, with the Emperor and Empire, Spain, and the States: For England was not mention'd, tho' Room was left for her being comprehended in it: The Contents of it were in general agreeable to the Preliminaries, tho' far short of the Demands of the Confederates: And yet, presuming on her own superior Power, the apparent Distraction among the Allies, and very probably the Advances at that very Instant making to her by England, the accompany'd this Project with a Declaration, That it was to be accepted by the last Day of August; or, if not, she should hold herself as much at Liberty to recede, as the Allies to refuse; and to make such Alterations in her Conduct, as the State of her Affairs should warrant, and the Good of Christendom require.

But limit the Time for acceptance.

This Project was reported to the Allies by the Embassador-Mediator, together with some verbal Explications of it; to which he added, in the Name of the French Ministers, That they were in earnest dispos'd to facilitate the Peace with all their Powers; and that there was nothing they desir'd more, than to see a thorough good understanding re-establish'd between the King their Master, and the High Allies: M. de Caunitz, on the other Hand, was altogether as polite in his Acknowledgments: But said, An Affair of such Importance requir'd a suitable Time of Deliberation; and excus'd himself in the most express Manner, from paying any the least Regard to the Restriction of Time, prescrib'd by the French.

Which Limitation the Imperialists pay no regard to.

And here, in order to account for the different Conduct, that began now to be observ'd by the Imperialists and Spaniards in the Course of the Negotiations, it is fit to touch on their different Circumstances, with regard to the Prospect of the Campaign.

State of the War on the Rhine.

The Imperialists, as if by way of Precaution against the ill Effects of their own Tardiness, had very early in the Spring drawn a Line between Mentz and Frankfort, cover'd with a suitable Number of Redoubts: They had also strengthen'd their Lines at Eppinghen with additional Works; and along the Necker, the Rhine, and the Main, took all the Precautions possible, to fortify and protect every Pass, that the Enemy might not

A. D. 1697. not find it eaſy, nor think it prudent, to make ſuch Incurſions as they had formerly done, before the German Forces were in a Condition to take the Field.

On the other Hand, apprehending, as before hinted, that the Enemy would this Year redouble their Efforts, they thought it adviſable to make ſuitable Preparations for their Reception.

Thus no ſooner was it underſtood at Vienna, that the Marſhal de Choiſeul, who had the Command on the Rhine, had left Paris, in order to draw his Army together, than the Prince of Baden order'd a Junction of the Imperial Forces, which lay in three ſeveral Bodies at Eppingben, Sintſheim, and Dermentz, at Bruchſal, where he arriv'd himſelf on the 22d of June.

But all theſe Meaſures, which had ſuch an unuſual Aſpect of Enterpriſe and Vigor, were in effect but ſo many Precautions: For when the Prince receiv'd Advice, that the Enemy had paſs'd the Rhine on the 4th of July at Fort Lewis, and taken Poſt near Raſtadt, tho' he did advance with his whole Army to Muckenſturm, which was not above a German Mile from the Enemy's Camp, he made no Effort to force them to an Action: On the contrary, when they retreated, as they did on the 18th, to another ſtrong Poſt between Raſtadt and Fort Lewis, he gave them no material Interruption: Again, when the French, after ſeveral Days of total Inaction, made a Motion downwards to Straſburgh, he mov'd upwards towards Bruſchal and Philipſburgh: In ſhort, the French were left to repaſs the Rhine at their Leiſure at Straſburgh; and before he ventur'd to do the ſame at Mombach, in order to inveſt the Fortreſs of Ehrenburgh, he call'd in the Margrave of Bareith, with the Body of Forces under his Command, to his Aſſiſtance; that, in caſe the Marſhal came up to intercept him, he might be in a Condition to give him Battle, without being forc'd to raiſe the Siege.

Thus if the French were not ſufficiently ſtrong, or did not think it adviſable to face the Germans on even Terms, the Germans were not over ſolicitous to face the French on any other: And the Reaſon is obvious: For a Miſtake in the Field on either Side, would have had a very ſenſible Operation on the Conferences at Ryſwick; and when a Peace was at hand, there was no Time either for Rectification or Atonement.

And in Catalonia. But if the Germans had a Superiority in the Field, which their over Caution would not ſuffer them to make any notable Uſe of, the Spaniards were ſcarce in a Condition to defend themſelves in Catalonia, tho' eas'd of the War in Italy.

For England and Holland, being no longer in a Humour to cover their Coaſts with a ſufficient Fleet to keep the Enemy in Awe, tho' the Parliament of England had, by a ſolemn Vote, ſtamp'd ſuch a Value on that Service, the Enemy reſolv'd to make their Uſe of that Opportunity to reduce Barcelona, and thereby convince his Catholic Majeſty, That, under the preſent Imbecility of his Councils, and all the other Reſources of his Government, a Peace with France was of more Conſequence to him, than the pretended Friendſhip of all the Powers of Europe beſides. A. D. 169

Accordingly, towards the latter End of May, the Duke de Vendome repair'd to the Army, and immediately advanc'd towards that of the Spaniards; while the Count d'Eſtrees, with a Squadron of Men of War, and another of Gallies, made the beſt of his way to ſhut up the Port of Barcelona by Sea: So infatuated, ſo remiſs, or ſo treacherous the Viceroy of Catalonia having been in the Execution of his Charge, that he had not taken the leaſt Precaution on that Side, for the Security of the Place, tho' he had all the Reaſon in the World to expect, it would be attack'd, and none, that it would be reliev'd.

As the French Army approach'd, the Spaniards retir'd; and the Prince of Heſſe-Darmſtadt, who had cover'd their Rear on that Occaſion, threw himſelf into the Town, with a ſtrong Body of Troops, while the reſt took Poſt behind the River Lobregat, to wait for a Reinforcement, and then to act as Occaſion offer'd.

The Place was inveſted on the 12th of June, the Trenches were open'd on the 16th, and the Batteries began to play both by Sea and Land: But tho' the French at firſt reckon'd they ſhould reduce it in twelve or fourteen Days, it was ſo ably, gallantly, and reſolutely defended by the Prince of Heſſe, that it prov'd one of the moſt difficult and bloody Enterprizes which had been any where undertook during the whole Courſe of the War: Nor, perhaps, had it ſucceeded at laſt, if M. Vendome had not obtain'd Intelligence, probably from ſome corrupt Spaniard, of a Concert form'd between the Prince of Heſſe and the Viceroy, to fall upon the Beſiegers, the one with his Army, the other with the Garriſon, at the ſame Inſtant; of which Intelligence he made ſuch notable Uſe, that, inſtead of being ſurpriſ'd himſelf, he ſurpriſ'd the Enemy, put them to the Rout, and entirely defeated their Purpoſe.

But, how intrepidly ſoever the Garriſon ſuſtain'd the Preſſures, Dangers, and Loſſes of ſo vigorous a Siege, it was foreſeen, They would be oblig'd to capitulate at laſt; and while this Foreſight grew every Day more and more clear and deciſive, another encouraging Piece of Advice was receiv'd from the Weſt-Indies, That de Pointis, not diſcovering any Likelihood of ſurpriſing the Galleons, which was his principal Errand, had fallen upon Carthagena, had carry'd the Place by the Help of the Buccaneers, and had carry'd away a Treaſure almoſt ineſtimable.

But as a Thread of our own Story is interwove with This, it will be incumbent on us to follow it ſomewhat circumſtantially, as we happen to be furniſh'd with the proper Authorities from Admiral Nevil's Journals, &c.

We left the ſaid Admiral on his way to Barbadoes, the Place appointed for the general Rendezvous of his Squadron, who was no

A. D. 1697. no ſooner got within the Reach of the Trade Winds, than he made for that Port with all the Sail he could ſpread: And having run 400 Leagues in that Manner from Madeira, diſpatch'd the Briſtol before him to the Governor of Barbadoes, with a Requiſition, That he would immediately ſend a Sloop to Martinico for Intelligence of the Enemy: On the 17th of April he arriv'd there himſelf with his Squadron, and found all the miſſing Ships, except the four Dutch and the Goſport, which did not arrive till the 26th following, already at Anchor.

On the 26th, he ſet ſail again, tho' the Sloop which had been ſent to Martinico, return'd without Intelligence: On the 4th of May he had a Conference with Colonel Codrington, Captain-General of the Leeward-Iſlands at Antigua, who was of Opinion, de Pointis's Deſign was againſt St. Domingo; the French having, for ſome Months paſs'd, been employ'd in cutting a Road a-croſs the Iſland, to the Spaniſh Settlements on the other Side: On the 5th, having held a Council of War, it was reſolv'd to make for Point d'Aguada, on the North Side of Porto-Rico, being the Place where the Flota always ſtops for Refreſhment in their way from Spain: On the 8th, he receiv'd Intelligence from the Brandenburgh Factory, on the Iſland of St. Thomas, That the Enemy's Squadron conſiſted of, One Ship of ninety Guns, but having only ſeventy-four mounted, two of ſeventy, mounting but ſixty-four each, one of fifty-ſix, one of fifty-four, two of forty-four each, one, a Spaniſh Prize, of forty-ſix, one of thirty-ſix, one of thirty-eight, two Fly-Boats laden with Ammunition, one Bomb-Ketch, and ſix Tenders, having on board 2000 Land-Forces, beſides their Marine Complement; and to which were added, from Petit-Guavas and Martinico, ten Privateers, large and ſmall: That according to their own Computation, they reckon'd themſelves able to make a Deſcent with 4500 Men; and that they ſet ſail from Petit-Guavas the 10th of March, O. S. The ſame Day this Intelligence having been conſider'd in a Council of War, it was reſolv'd to make for Jamaica, and to ſend a Ship for Intelligence into St. Domingo in their way; which laſt Purpoſe, the Weather being bad, was afterwards found impracticable.

On the 15th, however, they fell in with a Sloop belonging to Jamaica, off of the Eaſt End of that Iſland, by which the Admiral receiv'd Information of a flying Report, which prevail'd there, That de Pointis's Squadron had been ſeen before Carthagena: And the next Day, while his Men were replenifhing the Ships with Water in Port-Royal Harbour, Advice came from Porto-Bello, to Sir William Beeſton, Governor of Jamaica, That they were Maſters of the Place: That they came before it on the 13th of April: That they began to bombard it the ſame Day: That on the 15th, they reduc'd the Caſtle of Bocca-Chica: That on the 18th, they became Maſters of Fort St. Lazaro by Aſſault, after four ſeveral Efforts: That, nevertheleſs, it was the 29th before they carried the Suburbs: That proceeding then to batter the City, the Inhabitants preſs'd the Governor to ſurrender, which he refus'd, but was at length oblig'd to capitulate: That after three Parties, the Articles were completed: That on the 3d of May, the French took Poſſeſſion of the Place, and preſerv'd ſo ſtrict a Diſcipline in relation to the Inhabitants, that a Soldier was executed only for an Attempt to plunder a Mulatto Woman of a Ring: And that the Loſs to the Spaniards was computed at ten Millions (t).

A. D. 1697.

De Pointis reduces, ſtorms, and abandons Carthagena.

Thus it appear'd, They were much too late for Prevention, tho' not for Chaſtiſement; which became the Purport of the Admiral's next Reſolution.

Accordingly, on the 20th, he ſet ſail from Port-Royal, in order to fall thro' the Leeward Channel for Expedition-ſake, which he had firſt caus'd to be extremely well buoy'd: But the Land Breeze dying away, he was forc'd to come to Anchor, before he had got thro' all the Keys, as they are call'd, and was detain'd there for five Days together; the Sea-Breeze, during that whole Interval, blowing Night and Day, which had never happen'd in the Memory of Man before.

Nevil ſails in queſt of him.

Is detain'd five Days on the Coaſt of Jamaica.

And while he lay in this diſagreeable Situation, he receiv'd Intelligence, by an Engliſh Sloop from Porto-Bello, That on the 18th, ſhe ſail'd from that Place in company with the Galleons, being eighteen in Number; and that on the 20th, ſhe left them in the Night, ſteering N. N. E. for Jamaica, to furniſh themſelves with Proviſions, their ſeveral Crews being almoſt ſtarv'd, and not having a ſufficient Stock remaining to carry them to the Havannah: Upon which the Admiral gave Orders for the Squadron to be reduc'd to half Allowance of Bread, that he might be able in part to ſupply their Neceſſities, and appointed two Sloops to look out for them, with Orders to acquaint them, That he was going down to Carthagena againſt the Enemy; and that on his return, he ſhould join them at Jamaica.

At length a ſmall Land-Breeze ſpringing up, he made a ſhift to get clear of the Keys: On the 27th, the Ships to windward made the Signal of ſeeing Ships ſtanding to the Northward; upon which the Admiral, and his whole Squadron, ſtood after them with all the Sail they could make, taking it for granted they were the Enemy, as indeed they were, and as the next Morning it became apparent: The Signal was now given to chaſe; for M. de Pointis had no Inclination to ſtake the Booty in his Poſſeſſion, Comes up with and chaces him for three Days.

(t) 40,000,000 of Livres, according to ſome Writers, 9,000,000 according to de Pointis himſelf, and according to Mr. Campbell, Author of the Lives of the Admirals, upwards of 20,000,000, or even 1,200,000 l. Sterling.

A. D. 1697. sion, againſt Honour in proſpect; and for that Reaſon exerted all the Seamanſhip he was Maſter of to effectuate and ſecure his Retreat: But Accidents of various Kinds were of more Service to him than all his Skill: For when the Warwick, which fell in with them firſt, began to fire on the firſt Ship that fell in her way, it ſoon appear'd, that with all the Canvas ſhe could ſpread, ſhe could not keep up with her, and, therefore, was forc'd to take up with a Fly-Boat, loaded with (u) Ammunition, which ſtruck at the firſt Shot: When alſo the Briſtol, Trident, Goſport, and Newcaſtle were come up, and the firſt was actually within Gun-ſhot of de Pointis himſelf, who fired ſeveral Times at her, Night fell, not a Star was to be ſeen till Nine o'Clock, and the Weather grew ſqually: Of all theſe Circumſtances the Enemy took Advantage, tack'd about to the S. W. and thereby oblig'd Nevil and his Squadron to do the ſame: They did ſo, and ſtood after them with a ſtout Sail all Night: When Day broke, (the 29th) the Gale freſhen'd, the Sea grew rough, and it appear'd de Pointis had ſhot above two Leagues a-head: This ſhew'd, that, notwithſtanding the Turbulence of the Weather, not a Sail could be ſpar'd: And now they had more Reaſon than ever to curſe the Tardineſs which had kept them ſo long on the Coaſt of Madeira, expos'd to the perpetual Aſſaults of Wind and Weather: For now, when all in a Manner depended on Maſts, Yards, and Rigging, it appear'd, All were unfit for ſuch hard Service: The Top-Maſts of the Briſtol, Southampton, and Trident, as alſo of the Admiral and Rear-Admiral, were carry'd away; and the only Acquiſition of that Day's Chace, was another ſmall Veſſel taken by the Warwick. However, when the Evening came on, the Rupert, Goſport, Colcheſter, Sunderland, and one Dutch Man of War, were ſtill cloſe at the Heels of the Enemy; and as they kept on the ſame Tack all Night, the Admiral expected to ſee them engag'd by Morning: —But his Expectation was again deceiv'd: —For in the Morning, the Weather being as boiſterous as before, de Pointis, with five Sail more, were about four Leagues a-head of him, and only three of his own Squadron, viz. the Sunderland, Pembroke, and Goſport, in ſight; all which were alſo fallen a-ſtern, having either loſt their Top-Maſts, or ſplit their Sails:—The Admiral, nevertheleſs, continued the Chace with the ſame Ardor as before, and gain'd ſo much on de Pointis, that he made no doubt of coming to Blows to him:—But firſt his Main-ſail gave way, then his Fore-ſail and Fore-top-ſail; and the like Misfortunes ſucceſſively befell every other Ship in his Squadron:—So that the whole Day was ſpent in a Succeſſion of Expedients, all equally vain and fruitleſs: For in the following Night, they wholly loſt ſight of the Enemy; and on the Morrow, the Admiral could diſcover but two Ships in ſight of his whole Squadron, with which he repair'd to Carthagena, the Place of general Rendezvous in caſe of Seperation, and was there join'd the next Day, towards the *Evening, by Rear-Admiral Meeſe, and ſix other Ships, in no ſmall Diſtreſs; for all their Sails had been blown away: And the Admiral, after obſerving, That the far greater Part of the Squadron, after this Miſadventure, were oblig'd to ſail with Jury-Maſts, adds, Each Ship having but one allow'd, coming ſuch a Voyage as This to look for an Enemy.

But his Top-maſts, Sails, &c. grow weary.

He alſo complains of the Unkindneſs of Sir William Breſton, who, when ſolicited by the Captains of the three Men of War on that Station, to ſend out one of Them to lye off of Hiſpaniola, to give him Notice, That the Enemy were gone to Leeward, (in which Caſe he might have water'd at Cape Tiberoon, as they had done, and ſurpris'd them at their Moorings, before Carthagena) anſwer'd, That the Squadron was now come too late, and that They might have ſtaid at home for any Good they were like to do: "So, continues the Admiral, I do judge "there was not a Penny to be got: For I "perceive the Governors between the Tro-"picks, never ſend a Flag of Truce, or a "Letter of Intelligence, but They ſend a "Cargo with it."

Complains of Governor Breſton.

The Reader may, notwithſtanding, recollect, That on the 8th of May, the Admiral had this very Piece of Advice from Petit-Guavas; ſo that his not taking a Meaſure, which he himſelf afterwards pronounc'd to be ſo reaſonable, is rather to be aſcrib'd to a Miſtake in Judgment, than to a Defect of Intelligence.

The Admiral, however, upon the whole, comforts himſelf with a Perſuaſion, That if de Pointis had met with any of the Misfortunes, in either Maſts or Sails, which he met with, they muſt have been fatal to him: And, That his falling in with the Enemy, and chaſing them out of the way, was a Means of preſerving the Galleons: For, ſays he, They came out of Porto-Bello but two Days before de Pointis left Carthagena, and they were oblig'd to come up as high as Carthagena, before they could ſtretch over to weather the Shoals.

Carthagena plunder'd a ſecond Time by Freebooters.

But to return: The Admiral ſtay'd three or four Days before Carthagena, which was now in a more miſerable Condition, than when the French left it: For the Privateers had return'd two Days afterwards, had put ſeveral of the Inhabitants to the (w) Torture, to make them diſcover their Wealth, and had, beſides, committed all Manner of Diſorders:—And, having refitted his Ships, as well as their ſeveral Stores would allow, on the 4th of June he put to Sea again, and the (u) But having alſo on board as much Silver, according to the Author of the Lives of the Admirals, as was worth 20,000 l.

(w) In revenge, as they gave out, of the ill Treatment they had receiv'd from M. de Pointis, who gave them but 40,000 Crowns for their Share of the Plunder! And upon this ſecond Viſit, it is ſaid, They ſqueez'd out of the Inhabitants 1,000,000 Crowns in Money, and more than as much in rich Goods.

A. D. 1697. the ſame Day fell in with the reſt of his Squadron, which had taken one of the Privateers of forty-ſix Guns, and 420 Men, including Negroes and Mulattoes, off of Rio-Grande: In the four or five following Days, he alſo ſent a Detachment of Ships againſt the reſt of them, which deſtroy'd ſeveral: And on the 19th came to Anchor off of Cape Donna-Maria, in order to Wood and Water his Squadron for Cadiz or England.—Theſe are his own Words in the Abſtract of his Journal, ſent to the Secretary of State and Lords of the Admiralty, (with which laſt he conſtantly correſponded, tho' he never receiv'd one Order from them) and, adding, as he does immediately after, That he cannot imagine where the Galleons are, it ſeems reaſonable to conclude, That as yet he had come to no Reſolution concerning them.

Indeed, in the very ſame Day's Minutes, he complains, That his Ships were ſickly, That he had loſt ſeveral Captains, That his Proviſions began to fail, That he had heard nothing of the four Months Supply which had been promis'd him in February, That he was in doubt how the Newcaſtle and Colcheſter, which he had order'd back to Jamaica, would be able to get thro' the Windward-Paſſage, being very foul, and in want of every Thing, &c. And having, in the Courſe of his Minutes, acknowledg'd the Receipt of a Letter on the 22d, from Governor Beeſton, urging what great Service it would be to Jamaica, to deſtroy the Town of Petit-Guavas; as alſo, that he had the ſame Evening detach'd Rear-Admiral Meeſe with nine Ships on that Service; on the 1ſt of July he concludes his ſaid Abſtract with a Specification, That he was then ſtanding for Jamaica, to get out the Ships from thence, and did then deſign directly for the Havannah, tho' he had then no certain Intelligence of the Galleons.

By the ſame Ship which carry'd this Diſpatch home to England, Rear-Admiral Meeſe's Account of his Expedition to Petit-Guavas, was alſo ſent, and which was in Subſtance as follows, viz. That, having draughted 897 Men out of his nine Ships, and diſpos'd 250 of them on board a Tender, 100 in the Goſport, and the reſt in his Boats, and being come within ſixteen or ſeventeen Leagues of the Place, he order'd the Ships to keep out of Sight till the next Morning, (which was the 27th) on a Suppoſition that he ſhould ſurpriſe the Town that Night; but, finding it impoſſible to row ſo far in ſo ſhort a Time, he ſent them farther Orders not to appear till the 28th: That having landed 400 of his Men a Mile to the Eaſtward of the Town, between Three and Four o'Clock in the Morning, he himſelf, accompany'd with ſeven of his Captains, led them on, without waiting for the reſt: That juſt at Day-break they enter'd the Place, and march'd directly on to the Court of Guard, a ſtrong Stone Houſe, defended by a Breaſt-work, on which, however, there was but one Piece of Cannon mounted: That having forc'd this Place, and diſpers'd the Guard, they ſecur'd, in the next Place, two Batteries of four Cannon each: That in this Interval, the Inhabitants retir'd on all Sides to certain ſhrubby Places, of which the Town was full, and from whence they kept firing with ſmall Arms and Pateraroes, till they were, at ſeveral Attacks, diſlodg'd and routed: That in this Interval, his Men, who had behav'd extremely well as long as they continued ſober, grew drunk and mad, and being no longer to be kept under Command, broke into the Houſes, and loaded themſelves with Plunder: That hereupon, fearing he ſhould not have fifty ſober and ſerviceable Men left, he found himſelf under a Neceſſity to ſet fire to the Town, much ſooner than he intended, and without being able to fulfil any Part of his own Purpoſe, which was to have employ'd two Parties of choſen Men, under the Command of two Captains, in making a regular Search for all that was valuable, and to make a general Depoſite of the whole, for the common Profit of all the Adventurers (x): That in the whole of the Attempt, they had about thirty Men kill'd, and as many wounded: That of theſe they loſt but one in their Retreat: For every Houſe having a Quantity of Gun-powder in it, and all being on fire at once, they blew up ſo faſt, that the Enemy could not venture thro' the Ruins to fall upon them: That they had three Ships in the Harbour, and one that ſtood off to Sea, none of which they could take, becauſe the Goſport and the Tender never could come up; nor even their own Boats, till it was too late to make any other Uſe of them than to re-embark, in order to recover their Ships, which they did the next Morning: And that the gallanteſt Thing perform'd in the whole Enterpriſe, was perform'd by one Wicket, a Volunteer, who with eight Men beat thirty of the Enemy out of a Trench, and kill'd their Officer at the Head of them.

Surpriſal of Petit-Guavas by Rear-Admiral Meeſe.

And now the Squadron being re-united, the Admiral proceded towards Jamaica, according to the Advice he had ſent to England: And being arriv'd on the Coaſt, inſtead of complaining of Governor Beeſton, he was forc'd to court his Aſſiſtance, to procure a Supply of Proviſions for his Ships; nay, even to countenance a Practice he had before condemn'd, namely, to take in Goods on a trading Account, as an Inducement: And in the Governor's Anſwer to the Admiral's Letter, the true Spirit of a fordid, ſhrewd, rapacious Man of Office, is manifeſted in Capitals:—For, having thank'd him for conſenting to take on board the ſaid Goods, which, ſaid He, artfully enough, may be of ſervice to the King in his Cuſtoms, as well as a Kindneſs to the People, he proceeds to make a great Merit

A. D. 1697.

Extract of a remarkable Letter from Governor Beeſton to Admiral Nevil.

(x) Which, it was preſum'd, would have been very conſiderable, the Place being very rich, both in Merchandiſe and Treaſure: And the Privateers (as the Rear-Admiral was inform'd) having two Days before, depoſited there as much Gold, as four Mules could carry, out of the Spoils of Carthagena.

A. D. 1697. Merit, of his perſuading a certain Merchant to victual the Ships, on condition that He, the Governor himſelf, would ſupply 5 or 600*l.* towards it; which he pleaded Inability to do, except he borrow'd the Money; urging, That the War had render'd that Place ſo poor, and yet ſo chargeable, that he did not get the Expences of his Table; and that he, moreover, ran a great Riſque in taking up ſuch a Sum, becauſe the Victualling-Office, as he was inform'd, had no Credit.—Such a Variety of Pretences had he found out to colour the extravagant Profits which he had before-hand reſolv'd to derive from the Job!—But this was not the moſt remarkable Part of his Letter: For the next Paragraph was conceiv'd in theſe very Words, "I am, Sir, of your Opinion, that the Spaniards will not let you go into the Havanna: And I know their jealous Humour ſo well, that I believe the Galleons have as much fear to come under your Fleet as the French; but you need not, nevertheleſs, go to Virginia for Wood and Water, which is always a difficult Place to deal with, but may go into Mattanſas, twelve Leagues from the Havanna, and right againſt the Gulph's Mouth, where you may ride with great Safety, and Wood and Water, and that excellently good, at your Pleaſure; and whither the Spaniards will come to furniſh both you and themſelves: I am ſorry to find you have not People that know theſe Parts of the World better, and to acquaint you with the Conveniencies or Inconveniencies of them."

The Admiral ſails down to the Havanna.

But tho' the Admiral's own Opinion was thus confirm'd by Beeſton, he thought himſelf oblig'd by his Inſtructions, to make the Experiment; and had Reaſon to conclude, That ſuch a Squadron would not have been ſent ſo far to the Aſſiſtance of an Ally, without ſome previous Concert, or Aſſurances, that ſuch Aſſiſtance would be accepted.

Accordingly, having refreſh'd and refitted his Squadron as well as he could, he fell down to the Havanna, and when lying off the Coaſt, ſent in one Mr. Onelly with a Letter to the Governor, a Second to the Commander of the Galleons, and a Third to one Mr. Blakiter, a Britiſh Subject on board the ſaid Galleons, who had ſent an Account of the Loſs of Carthagena from Porto-Bello, to a Correſpondent at Jamaica, and of whom the Admiral himſelf had ſome perſonal Knowledge.

His Letters to the Governor, and the Commander of the Galleons, &c.

In the two Former Letters, the Admiral barely notify'd, That he was come into thoſe Seas for the Security of the Galleons, in their Return to Cadiz; and being in great want of Water and other Refreſhments, deſir'd to be admitted with his Squadron into the Port of Havanna, in order to be properly fitted for ſo long a Voyage: But in the Third to Mr. Blakiter, he not only inſerts a Brief of what was committed to his Charge, and of what had happen'd to him ſince his Arrival in thoſe Seas, but alſo a Piece of Intelligence, which he ſaid, came by the laſt Advices from England, viz. That M. Chateau Renaud was fitting out fifteen Men of War at Breſt, in order to intercept the Galleons: And he concluded with ſaying, That he had ſent his Inſtructions by the Bearer, to let him know how earneſtly the King preſs'd him for the Security of the Galleons.

Theſe Inſtructions, it is farther to be obſerv'd, were given to Onelly in writing; and, excepting what was Recital, were as follow: That, in caſe, to obviate his Demand of being admitted into the Port, the Governor ſhould propoſe the Bay of Mattanſas, he was to urge, That there was no riding there for great Ships without great Hazard: That the Water was brackiſh, unleſs they went three Miles up the River for it: And that having cut away their Boats, while they were in purſuit of M. de Pointis, they could, in ſuch Caſe, make but one Turn in twenty-four Hours: That by the Law of Nations, Ships in Diſtreſs like theirs, had a Right to demand Admiſſion for Relief and Succour, provided they departed in twenty-four Hours: That in order to remove all Suſpicions, he would ſend five or ſix Captains aſhore, to ſerve as Hoſtages for the good Behaviour of the Fleet; or rather than fail, he would become a Hoſtage himſelf: That he was ready to furniſh a Ship laden with Powder, Ammunition, and ſmall Arms, for the Supply of Carthagena, which they were wholly deſtitute of, and for want of which, they would be daily expos'd to the Inſults of the Privateers: That in caſe all this fail'd, to aſſure the Governor, their Neceſſities were ſo great and urgent, that the Admiral was willing to preſent the Governor with a Regalio of 2000 Pieces of Eight, for the Favour requir'd: That farther to illuſtrate the Equity of his Intentions, he had ſent the Inſtructions he had receiv'd from the King his Maſter: And, laſtly, that the Interdiction of his Catholic Majeſty, againſt the Entrance of all Ships, was to be underſtood of all trading Ships only; and conſequently his Ships being Men of War, were not included in it.

All theſe ſeveral Papers were dated July 23, O. S. were deliver'd the ſame Day, and were anſwer'd the next, by the Governor of the Havanna, to this Effect, That he was in general extremely well diſpos'd to diſcharge all the Obligations of Hoſpitality both towards him and the Ships under his Command; but that the King his Maſter's Orders being poſitive, not to admit any Ships, tho' belonging to the Allies, under any Pretence whatſoever, he did not dare to diſpence with them: That as to what correſponded both with his Duty and Inclination, to ſerve him under the Head of Refreſhments, the more than ordinary Scarcity which then reign'd in that Port, and which had been of late encreas'd by the Arrival of the Galleons, had made it extremely difficult for him to make his Compliances ſuſtable: That, however, he had call'd a Council of War, who had given their Conſents, that his Squadron ſhould be invited to enter the Bay of Mattanſas, which was eaſy of Acceſs, capable of receiving his whole Squadron, tho' more numerous than it was: That he was ready to furniſh him with Pilots, if he ſtood in Need of them: That when

The Governor refuſes to admit him into the Harbour.

A. D. 1697. when there, he should be supply'd with all the Refreshments in their Power, with an Exception to Bread, or Bread-Corn of any kind: That it should be his Endeavour, to convince him how much he was his Servant in all Things: And that his only Regret was, That he could not answer his Expectations in all Things.

and the General of the Gallicons to accompany him to Europe.

The same Day also, the General of the Gallcons very civilly acknowledg'd the Admiral's Letter: But withal signify'd, That, not having receiv'd the King his Master's Orders to accept the Offer of an English Convoy, nor even the least Notice concerning it, he purpos'd to call a Council of his principal Officers, to which he should invite such of the Trade, as were most interested in the Freight entrusted to his Charge, and would send him a decisive Answer with all possible Speed: And the very same Day he gave the Admiral to understand, by another Letter, That the said Council had met: That they appear'd to be highly sensible of the Favour design'd them: And that they were wholly of Opinion, That for want of proper Orders and Instructions, it could not be accepted; which Refusal, for that Reason, they hop'd would not be interpreted any Breach of the good Correspondence subsisting between the Two Crowns.

On the Receipt of these two Letters, and Mr. Onelly's Report from Blakiter, the Admiral, tho' all was so conformable both to his own Expectation and Governor Beeston's Surmises, either fell into a violent Passion, or thought it expedient to behave, as if the Provocations he had receiv'd, were sufficient to justify the highest Resentment: For in his Reply he not only testify'd the highest Surprize at the Reception he had met with, but complain'd, That they had treated him and his People as if they were Turks and Moors, rather than Englishmen and Christians, in denying them Water, when they had sail'd so many hundred Leagues only for their Service: That Onelly had committed a Mistake, in saying he wanted either Bread or Flour: That he wanted only Water: That it was impossible for him to be supply'd in a suitable Manner in the Bay of Matanzas: That he had again sent to the General of the Galleons for his final Answer: And that, in case he persisted in his Refusal, he should that very Night leave their Island, according to the Instructions he had receiv'd from the King his Master, to seek Water among the Indians, from whom he expected more Friendship and Hospitality, than he had found among the Spaniards.

The Admiral resents it highly.

but in vain.

This produc'd another Letter from the Governor, in which he appears sufficiently sensible of the Admiral's Reproaches, but nevertheless commits not the least Trespass on the Rules of Prudence and Moderation: "The Disposition, said He, in substance, that I endeavour'd to manifest, was of the most cordial and friendly Kind: I thought I had convinc'd you, That if what you ask'd had depended on me, you would have been gratified to your own Wish:—I thought the becoming Regard, so great a Subject as you are shew'd to the King your Master's Orders, would have led you to infer, that as unreserved an Obedience was due to mine:—I call'd a Council before I answer'd your former Letter; and, notwithstanding the Warmth of your Expressions, I call'd another before I answer'd This, the Majority of whom were of the same Opinion as before:—I am therefore doubly oblig'd, as well by their Resolution, as by the Duties of my Office, to abide by my former Answer, tho' in every Thing else, I am STILL at your Devotion."

A. D. 1697.

At the same Time also, the General of the Galleons signify'd in writing, That if the Choice lay in him, he would gladly have accepted the obliging Offer he had made him: But that as he was not Master, to oppose or dispense with the King's Commands, he had no more to say, But that He, the Admiral, might persue his Voyage, when he pleased, and that he was extremely mortify'd in not being able to bear him Company.

And now being at last convinc'd, that the Resolution of the Spaniards was not to be shaken, and that all the Purposes of the Expedition were at an End, with a heavy Heart, and a distemper'd (y) Body, the Admiral shap'd his Course for Virginia, where he arriv'd on the 7th of August, and dy'd soon after.

He arrives at Virginia, and dies.

Rear-Admiral Meese had also dy'd soon after the Affair of Petit-Guavas, so that the Command devolv'd on Captain Dilkes, as Senior Captain, under whose Conduct the Squadron was afterwards brought to England, in a Condition altogether miserable; which was so much the more to be regreted and deplor'd, as the Expence and Loss was balanc'd by no Acquisition either of Profit or Honour.

And, what render'd the whole Affair so much the more grievous to the Public, de Pointis, after his Escape out of the Hands of Admiral Nevil, made for Conception-Bay in Newfoundland, where he and his Squadron arriv'd about the 20th of July, in as foul, as sickly, and almost as weather-beaten a State, as ours return'd in to England.

De Pointis arrives at Newfoundland.

But, how miserable soever that State upon the whole was, and in what Need soever they stood of Refreshments, it is scarce to be suppos'd, they would have ventur'd to have come upon that Coast, if they had not either rely'd on the usual Improvidence of our Court, or the superior Vigilance and Activity of their own.

It was but the Summer before, as we may recollect, That a Fleet of Privateers had laid

(y) In a Letter to his Lady, dated from Barbadoes, soon after his Arrival there, he takes occasion to say, That he felt no Symptoms of Sickness or Disorder, nor had any Apprehension of any.

A. D. 1697. laid waſte our Settlements in that Iſland; and in the Winter following, the Sufferers had apply'd to Parliament for ſuch a Squadron to be ſtation'd on that Coaſt, as might be ſufficient to preſerve them from the like Viſitation for the future.

On the other Hand, as the Succeſs of theſe Privateers had diſcover'd our Weakneſs in thoſe Parts, the French came to a Reſolution to ſend thither a ſtrong Squadron the next Year, whether to reduce the Town of St. John's, and render themſelves ſole Maſters of the Fiſheries in thoſe Seas, or merely to eſcort de Pointis and his Treaſure home to France, we have not a ſufficient Light to make an abſolute Determination: But of whatever kind the Reſolution was, it is reaſonable to think M. de Pointis was not a Stranger to it; and if ſo, we are not to wonder, that having now but five Ships with him, he took this Courſe, in hope of falling in with ſuch a Force, as would be able to give him Protection, till he reach'd the Ports of France.

It ſo happen'd, however, that when he came to anchor in Conception-Bay, the French Squadron deſtin'd for this Service, was not arriv'd; and on the contrary, an Engliſh Squadron, under the Command of Captain Norris, who ſail'd from St. Helen's April 17. was already at anchor before St. John's, which was alſo gariſon'd with a Body of Land Forces, under the Command of Colonel Gibſon.

Of de Pointis's Arrival, Captain Norris had immediate Advice, and ſoon after, of all the Particulars relating to the Ships under his Command: But whatever Inclination he had to make ſuch an Uſe of it, as became a Man of Spirit and Enterprize, he either did not think himſelf (z) ſtrong enough for ſuch an Attempt, or reſtrain'd by his Orders, which contain'd no Proviſion for any ſuch Incident, and for that Reaſon, he choſe to adviſe with the Land-Officers, who were aſſociated with him in the preſent Service: Accordingly, ſeveral Councils of War were held, conſiſting of Eleven Land-Officers, and Thirteen Sea-Officers, in which the Expediency of going in queſt of the Enemy, was ſeveral Times debated, and (thro' an Exceſs of Caution) as often determin'd in the Negative by all the Former, and five of the Latter, which made the Majority ſixteen to eight.

Lives of the Admirals, Vol. III.

Reſolution of an Engliſh Council of War there not to attack him.

Thus an Enemy who, not unlikely, had been permitted to plunder an Ally, that the Booty he had made, might fall to the Share of the Avenger, had the good Fortune to eſcape a ſecond Time, without being put to the Trouble of firing a Gun: For no ſooner was he convinc'd that Neſmond was not within thoſe Seas, than apprehending the Engliſh might recover their Wits, or reſume their Courage, he ſet ſail for Europe, under ſuch a Direction, no doubt, as ſeem'd beſt calculated to fall in with the Company he had been diſappointed of. A.D. 1697.

Nor was even This the laſt remarkable Circumſtance in their Story: For on the 14th of Auguſt, deſcrying, when they were within a few Days Sail of their own Coaſt, ſome large Ships to Leeward of them, they were raſh enough to bear down upon them, no doubt, on a Preſumption, That they were Neſmond's Squadron.

He falls in with an Engliſh Squadron.

But ſo it happen'd again, that theſe Ships were five Engliſh Men of War, viz. Two of Eighty Guns, two of Seventy, and one of Forty, under the Command of Captain Harlow, who had been detach'd from the Channel's Mouth by Rear-Admiral Mitchell, to cruiſe in the Soundings; not to intercept an Enemy, but to fall in with ſuch of our Merchant-Ships, as were homeward-bound, that the Public might not conclude, That they went to Sea without any Purpoſe at all: And it is accordingly acknowledg'd in the Gazette, No. 3317, That when Harlow made up to Windward to meet with the Enemy, it was on a Suppoſition, That they were ſome of Theſe: So that both Parties were alike diſappointed, and alike ſurpris'd into an Engagement: For an Engagement enſued, which laſted from Three in the Afternoon, within two Thirds Gun-ſhot, till towards Six in the Evening; about which Time de Pointis, being convinc'd of the Indiſcretion he had committed, in expoſing ſuch a Treaſure as he had acquir'd to the Chance of War, made a Signal for tacking; and in ſo doing, preſented Harlow with one of the moſt inviting Opportunities, that ever a Favourite of Fortune was entruſted with: For but one of the French Ships would ſtay, and even that one was ſo diſabled in her Main-top-maſt-head, and by the Downfall of the Yard, that tho' ſhe kept her Wind, ſhe quitted the Line, which, it is confeſs'd, threw de Pointis himſelf into ſome Diſorder. —But Harlow, tho' he made the Signal for tacking likewiſe, took (a) Time to ſet his Main-ſail, that he might be ſure his Ship would wear; in conſequence of which Precaution, de Pointis had Leiſure both to complete his Tack, and alſo to cloſe his Line again: After which, ſo much better Sailers were the French Ships than ours, or, according to Mr. Burchet, ſo much cleaner were their Bottoms, after ſo long a Voyage, that they diſtanc'd ours in almoſt what Proportion they pleas'd; ſo that, ſays the ſame Author, they could lower a Yard or a Top-maſt at pleaſure, to hinder their coming by the Board. [Burchet.]

And thus, after a Chace which was continued all that Night, all the next Day and Night, being the 15th, and Part of the 16th, M. de Pointis had the Pleaſure of a new Deliverance,

(z) His Squadron conſiſted of four Fourth Rates, two Sixth Rates, two Five-ſhips, two Bombs, and a Ketch.

(a) It is obſervable in the Gazette Account of the Loſs, that Harlow had but one Man kill'd on board his Ship, and five wounded; whereas the Defiance had fifteen wounded, the Reſolution ſix kill'd and fourteen wounded, and the Devonſhire eleven kill'd and eleven wounded: As alſo, That in a ſubſequent Gazette, an Advertiſement was ſet forth by the Admiralty, acknowledging the Receipt of a Letter, which contain'd ſeveral Things in relation to the ſaid Engagement, and inviting the Writer to make good his Evidence before the Board, by a Promiſe of Rewards and Preferments.

A. D. 1697. And arrives at Brest.

liverance, and on the 19th arriv'd at Brest, without any farther Moleſtation; which, when it became public, was in England ſo much the worſe reliſh'd, becauſe the Paris Article in the London-Gazette, had prepar'd the Minds of the People for a very different Iſſue; ſometimes by foreboding ill Succeſs to him, becauſe nothing had tranſpir'd concerning him, and ſometimes by intimating he had fallen into Nevil's Hands, and had been ſtripp'd of a great Part of his Plunder.

But the creating falſe Hopes and Expectations, and ſetting falſe Gloſſes on real Facts, was the leaſt exceptionable Part of our Marine Conduct, as we ſhall now, for the Sake of throwing the whole into one View, farther evince: Tho', with regard to the argumentative Drift of this Section, (which was to illuſtrate the different Situations of the Germans and Spaniards, and thereby account for their different way of treating at Ryſwick) all that we thus procede to interject, may be reaſonably call'd a Digreſſion.

General Remarks on our Naval Conduct.

In what the French Naval Power conſiſted, as to Number of Ships, Tonnage, Guns, Seamen, &c. and how it was diſtributed as to the Mediterranean and Ocean, it is utterly inconceivable, that either our Cabinet or our Admiralty-Board ſhould be ignorant, after the War had laſted a Year; and if not ignorant, it is almoſt inconceivable, That they ſhould make ſo little uſe of their Knowledge.

The diſpatching Nevil to the Weſt-Indies, was either a Meaſure of the King's own, or of his favourite Miniſter Sunderland's, which he did not ſuffer to paſs thro' the Admiralty, and for that Reaſon perhaps it was, That he was ſuffer'd to beat the Seas in ſight of Madeira, for ſo many Weeks together, in Expectation of the Reinforcement he was there commanded to wait for.

For what regarded the Coaſt of Spain, the Mediterranean, African, and Eaſt-India Services, no farther Proviſion was made, than was compris'd under the Head of Convoys for our Merchant Ships, employ'd in thoſe ſeveral Trades, which were ſeldom ſtrong enough to render them worth waiting for.

The ſlight Squadron ſtation'd at Newfoundland, under Norris, was the Effect of an Application to Parliament, and a parliamentary Addreſs to the Throne.

Then as to all the other Services, they were either totally neglected, or ſo imperfectly provided for, as to render them the Deriſion of our Enemies, and the Grievance of the Subject.

And as to the great Conſideration of All, namely, The applying ſo vaſt a Superiority, as the Maritime Powers were now Maſters of, to the Blocking up of the Enemy's Ports, and deſtroying their Commerce, it was this Year leſs attended to than ever.

Ruin of our Newfoundland Trade.

But to exemplify ſuch of theſe Points as need Exemplification, in Gazette No. 3281. a Piece of Intelligence is dated from Falmouth, April 17. importing, That one of our Merchant-Ships from the Groyne, had been chac'd by five Ships under French Colours, two of which were of ſeventy Guns each: Again, in Gazette No. 3287, we are farther inform'd by a Letter from on board the Sterling-Caſtle, then riding at Scilly, That on the 29th, the ſaid Man of War, together with the Berwick, and the Joſeph Fire-ſhip, having under their Convoy ſix Engliſh and five Dutch Merchant-ſhips, homeward-bound from Cape St. Antonio, fell in with the ſaid five Ships, and eſcap'd only by a Feint: For the Captain of the Sterling-Caſtle, who acted as Commodore, having made a Signal for four of the largeſt Merchant-Men to make into his Line, and ſhewing a great Forwardneſs to engage, the Enemy, after accompanying them for ſeveral Days, and making ſeveral Motions, as if to fall upon them, thought fit to ſheer off: In this Interval alſo, that is to ſay, between the 17th of April, when the firſt public Intelligence of theſe five Ships was receiv'd, and the End of the Month, the Canary Fleet, conſiſting of thirty-five Sail, which had been ſix Weeks at Sea, got into the Channel, without falling in with them; which was happy for them, becauſe they had but two Ships of Force, viz. the Defiance and the York, together with the Charles Gally and a Fire-ſhip to protect them: And about fifty Sail from Spain and Portugal, having on board a conſiderable Quantity of Silver, as well as other valuable Merchandize, put into Milford; having reach'd that Port with no better a Convoy than two Men of War, the Oxford and an occaſional one, call'd the Soldadoes Prize: Laſtly, in Gazette No. 3288. we learn, That, on the 5th of March, four of the ſaid five French Men of War, fell in with our Outward-bound Weſt-India Fleet, almoſt as ſoon as they had clear'd the Land, under the Convoy of the Norwich, Chatham, Sheerneſs, Seaford, and Blaze Fire-ſhip, took the two Latter, as alſo two of the Trade, diſpers'd the reſt, (which for the moſt Part made the beſt of their way for the neareſt Ports) and after a ſmart Engagement, in which they had each of them about forty Men kill'd and wounded, ſo diſabled the two Former, that not being able to keep the Sea, they were forc'd to return to Portſmouth.

A. D. 1697.

And what renders this laſt Incident ſo much the more remarkable, about the Time that theſe five Ships were thus active to intercept our Convoys, Rear-Admiral Benbow, with ſeven Third Rates and two Fire-ſhips, receiv'd Orders to ſet ſail on a Cruiſe, and might, if it had been thought proper, have taken both the Newfoundland Squadron under Norris, which ſail'd from St. Helen's on the 16th of April, and This for the Weſt-Indies, which ſail'd cloſe on the Heels of the other, under his Protection: For he himſelf ſet ſail on the 11th, and met with no Advantage of any kind till the 3d of May, when he fell in with this very Squadron of the Enemy, which had then juſt parted from the Sterling-Caſtle, &c. and the next Day, but one, made prize of the Seaford and Blaze: But, as in Pointis's Caſe, his

Ships

A.D. 1697. Ships were no more a Match for the French in ſailing, than they were a Match for him in fighting: So that his Cruiſe was neither ſerviceable to his Friends, nor prejudicial to his Foes: And what render'd this whole Courſe of Management ſo much the more provoking, on the very Day after this ineffectual Chace, he was join'd by three Third Rates more, together with one Fourth, and one Fifth, which, for aught that appears to the contrary, were ſent out merely to re-inforce him, having neither ſerv'd as Convoys nor Cruizers:—And this formidable Squadron, which by the way was victuall'd but for a Month, having made a Shift, by the Dint of ſhort Allowance, to beat the Seas till the 18th of May, then came to Anchor at Spithead, with no other Acquiſition than a miſerable Privateer of twelve Guns.

Again: So much the more to enflame this Account, our own Gazettes gave Notice, while Benbow was yet at Sea, (tho' ſo unable for want of Proviſions to continue there) in their Paris Articles, That M. Neſmond, above ſpoken of, had ſet ſail on the 29th of April, N. S. (two Days after Norris) from Breſt; that M. de Magnon had alſo ſet ſail from Rochfort, with five Ships to join him; and that having met with bad Weather, the Former had been oblig'd to put into Belle-Iſle, and the Latter into Rochelle: Nor had many Days elaps'd before it was in the ſame public Manner affirm'd, That the Junction had been actually made: That the two Squadrons together made twelve Ships, (tho' they prov'd to be ſixteen) and that it was reported, They were bound for the Mediterranean, to co-operate with M. d'Eſtrée, in the Reduction of Barcelona: But either believing the whole of this Intelligence, or believing none of it, (which, according to the Cabinet Syſtem of this Year, was the ſame Thing: For in the Mediterranean, it was pre-determin'd not to interfere; and if there was no ſuch Armament, nothing could be apprehended from it) no Attention was ſhewn to it: And the Orders Benbow receiv'd next, which he receiv'd almoſt as ſoon as he came to Anchor, were to procede again to the Soundings, with four Third Rates and two Fire-ſhips, which were victuall'd for no longer than a Month at ſhort Allowance; and to call in at Plymouth in his way, for the Plymouth Man of War, as alſo the Angleſey, if there, together with three Eaſt-India Men, which (ſays Burchet) he was to ſee well into the Sea; which Service he duly perform'd, and in his Return, had the good Fortune to join the Virginia and Weſt-India homeward-bound Fleets, with their reſpective Convoys, and, by Orders from Vice-Admiral Mitchel, accompany'd them to Plymouth.

Sir G. Rooke ſent in a Cruiſe.

It is true, in this Interval, Sir George Rooke, the King's Admiral, as he might be call'd, (for, as before obſerv'd, he was kept in the Service, by his Majeſty's Firmneſs againſt all the Efforts of the Whigiſh Faction) came down with the great Ships to the South Foreland, to collect the Fleet of State, and make the grand Parade of the Year. A.D.

But then it was the 2d of June before he reach'd the Downs; it was the 10th before he reach'd Spithead, and it was the 23d before he was able to ſet ſail: For tho' his whole Fleet, Dutch as well as Engliſh, conſiſted but of thirty-three ſail, excluſive of the Ships under Mitchel and Benbow, (which were in all but Eleven) he could man them no higher than their middle Complement: Of theſe thirty-three, ten of the Dutch could ſcarce be depended on; becauſe they were to ſerve, as Convoys to their Homeward-bound Ships, before they could return to join the Fleet: And as to Proviſions, they had but a Month's Bread and Beer, Butter and Cheeſe, for a Term little longer; two Months Fleſh, and not above a Fortnight's Peaſe and Oatmeal.

And yet, notwithſtanding the Fleet was in this pitiful Condition, and the Admiralty had no preſſing Purpoſe to ſerve, either offenſive or defenſive, the Admiral had preſſing Orders from the Board to put to Sea, and accordingly did, as above ſpecify'd.

On the 25th, he was join'd by Mitchel and Benbow, off of the Lizard, and made for Uſhant, where, on the 4th of July, he receiv'd Information from Benbow, who had been diſpatch'd to look into Breſt, That the Enemy had but ten Ships in that Port arm'd, and ready for ſailing, under the Command of M. de Chateau-Renault.

After which, having detach'd the Latter of thoſe Commanders with ſuch of the Homeward-bound Ships as fell in his way, it was agreed to ſpread the whole Fleet in ſuch a Manner, as would beſt cover the Channel, and to ſend a Squadron of nine Engliſh and four Dutch Ships on a hundred Leagues Cruiſe, Weſt of Scilly, under Mitchel, in which he was to employ fourteen or ſixteen Days: "And, ſays Burchet, this Squadron was made thus ſtrong, leſt he ſhould meet with M. Neſmond in his Cruiſe, or M. Chateau-Renault, in his Return to Breſt, in caſe he was then at Sea:" So that we have here a ſufficient Avowal: That neither had the Government any Intelligence of their own, nor did they condeſcend to make any Uſe of what tranſpir'd thro' the ordinary Ducts of Communication.

For Neſmond, as we have already ſeen, was bound for Newfoundland, to ſerve as Convoy to de Pointis, (if not to attack St. John's, as was then ſuppos'd) and had been long out of the Limits aſſign'd to Mitchel: Nor does it appear, that any Squadron was appointed to intercept him in his Return.

On the 21ſt of July, however, when Admiral Rooke, weary of a Cruiſe which only ſerv'd to waſte Time, and conſume the little Proviſion he had, was come within ten Leagues of the Lizard, he receiv'd Orders from the Admiralty to leave a ſufficient Squadron off of Breſt, either to block up M. Chateau-Renault, or give him a proper Reception in caſe he ventur'd out: But this could not be comply'd with for want of Proviſions.

A. D. 1697. visions: Notwithstanding which, when he came to Anchor in Torbay on the 23d, he receiv'd a Second Order, insisting not only on the former Service, but also, That some other Ships should be sent to cruise in the Bay of Biscay: And here began a new Squabble between the Commander at the Board, and the Commander of the Fleet: For tho' the Latter at first began to make a Disposition suitable to those Orders, by taking the Remnant-Provisions out of the great Ships, in order to victual eleven Third Rates, and two Fire-ships, for a Month, recollecting afterwards, that by so doing, he should, in a Manner, disable the whole Fleet from putting to Sea on any Emergency whatsoever, he not only suspended that Disposition, but sent up a suitable Remonstrance to the Admiralty, accompany'd with a Proposal, That the said Ships might be sent to Spithead, in order to be furnish'd there.

Sharp Speech between Lord Orford and him.

But in this Interval, Rear-Admiral Mitchel being also return'd, (tho' he had detach'd Captain Harlow, as already recounted, and five other Ships on other similar Services, that is to say, to convoy the Homeward-bound Trade to their respective Ports) the Board repeated their Commands, and exacted Obedience to them: So that on the 8th of August, Vice-Admiral Aylmer set sail from Torbay on this Expedition, but was forc'd back by tempestuous Weather: And the Admiral himself, who still continued Malcontent with the Service, (because it was attended with almost insuperable Difficulties on account of Provisions, and directed so as to make him so much the more sensible of them) and perhaps expressing his Sense of Things with more Latitude than was agreeable to the haughty, dominering Spirit of the new Lord, was order'd to Spithead: And the subsequent Excursions of the Year, which were form'd under a Variety of Pretences, (such as the lying in wait for M. Chateau-Renault, the sustaining Admiral Nevil, in case he had been honour'd with the safe Conduct of the Galleons to Cadiz, and the convoying the Homeward-bound Trade from Spain and Portugal, not one of which, by the way, was answer'd) were committed to Rear-Admiral Mitchel.

The Conduct on the Dunkirk Station.

Lastly: As if to complete the Absurdities and Disgraces of the Year, the keeping due Watch and Ward on the Port of Dunkirk, which was, at all Times, one of the most considerable Parts of the Channel Service, because the Safety of our Eastland Trade in a good Degree depended upon it, and which at This, in particular, seem'd to require a more than ordinary Attention, was altogether as equivocally perform'd, as any Duties already recounted; as we are now to explane.

The French Party in Poland, had publish'd a solemn Protest against all that had been done in favour of the Elector of Saxony by their Antagonist, and had undertaken to maintain the Election they had made of the Prince of Conti, provided he made his Appearance among them in Person, properly furnish'd with Money to support the Expence of such a Contest, and some few Troops, which might serve as the Root of an Army. A. D. 1697.

The French Cabinet had set their Hearts on a Measure that so sensibly flatter'd both their Pride and their Interest: The Prince of Conti himself was all Resignation to the Will and Pleasure of his Most Christian Majesty: It was resolv'd, That he should embark at Dunkirk, on board the Squadron commanded by du Bart: This Resolution was made public in all the Gazettes of Europe; and such of them as had always affected to deride the Politics, and to bespeak the Miscarriage of all the Purposes of France, made no Difficulty to assure the Public, That the English and Dutch Ships on that Station, would either prevent his putting to Sea, or make prize of him afterwards.

On the other Hand, the Admiralty here, recall'd Benbow from the Service in the Soundings under Rooke, to take upon him the Command of the Squadron before Dunkirk; as if in Acknowledgment that the Motions of du Bart were now of more Importance than ever, and that nothing short of the Vigilance and Activity of Benbow, would be sufficient to defeat them.

This Squadron, however, which had some Time before consisted of seven Third Rates, then consisted but of four; two Fourths, one Fifth, and two Fire-ships: And tho' he was soon join'd by eleven Dutch Ships, they were all foul as well as his own; tho' sent purposely to hold in cheque the best sailing Ships, navigated by the ablest Seamen of France.

Hence it follow'd, That when he propos'd to the Dutch Commander the making the most reasonable Disposition in his Power for obeying his Orders, (which indeed were of the Janus-Kind: For, as on the one Hand, they directed him to persue du Bart, and destroy his Ships, if possible, at any Place whatsoever, except under the Cannon of the Northern Powers, on the other, they subjected him to such occasional Commands as he should receive from the King, agreeable to a Command the Admiralty-Board had receiv'd from his Majesty to that Purpose) he, the said Dutch Commander, made Answer, That his Ships being foul, were not fit for a Chace: Burchet himself also pronounces, That it was next to an Impossibility to block up clean Ships at Dunkirk with foul ones: And what is to the full as extraordinary as the rest, when Benbow propos'd that four of the best Ships might be order'd to Sheerness to careen, and the rest might come to the Downs, not only to heel and Scrub, (which is a sort of half Careen) but to take in Water, which they greatly stood in need of, (and which last he urg'd might be done, before du Bart, whose Ships were haul'd within the Bason for the same Purpose, could have the Advantage of a Spring-Tide to get out again) it was at first over-rul'd, tho' afterwards admitted. And thus a Squadron which was understood to be destin'd for real Service, was no better in fact than a Squadron of Amusement: For the Admiral, having

A. D. 1697. ing, on the 17th of August, discover'd five clean Ships ready to sail out of Dunkirk, and, as it is said, believing they would push thro' the East-Channel, he alter'd his Station accordingly, and, at the same Time, gave suitable Notice to the Dutch: Notwithstanding which, on the 23d following, at Five in the Morning, he discover'd five Sail to the Eastward, distant about four Leagues, which prov'd to be Those he was thought to lye in wait for: And tho' he made a Feint of giving them chace, it was apparently but a Feint: For as his ostensible Orders were to destroy them any where, he ought to have held the same Course they did, that he might have defeated their Purpose in the North, if he could not have overtaken them while under sail: But, as we have already seen, his Ships were in no respect furnish'd for such an Expedition: And having done enough, as he thought, to justify himself, he gave over the Chace at Four in the Afternoon, with a Design to return to his Station.

Further Remarks on the whole.

And now being come to a Close of our Dispositions during the War, it may not be unuseful to add Burnet's Censure upon them in his own Words, which are as follow: "The Conduct of our Affairs at Sea, was much censur'd: Yet our Admiralty declar'd themselves satisfy'd with the Account the Commanders gave of their Proceedings: But that Board was accus'd of much Partiality: On all such Occasions the Unfortunate must expect to be blam'd; and to outward Appearance, there was much Room given either to censure the Orders, or the Execution of them. The King own'd, He did not understand these Matters: And Russel, now made Earl of Orford, had both the Admiralty and the Navy-Board in a great Dependence on himself; so that he was consider'd almost as much as if he had been Lord-High Admiral: He was too much in the Power of Those in whom he confided, and trusted them too far: And it was generally believ'd that there was much Corruption, as it was certain there was much Faction, if not Treachery, in the Conduct of our Marine: Our Miscarriages made all People cry, That we must have a Peace, for we could not manage the War to any good Purpose; since, notwithstanding our great Superiority at Sea, the French conducted their Matters so much better than we, that we were Losers even in that Element, where we us'd to triumph most."

Thus, if any certain Conclusion can be drawn from such uncertain Premises, that celebrated Whig-Undertaker for the Revolution Russel, is made answerable by his Fellow-Labourer in the same Cause Burnet, the Whig Historian, for all the Disorders and Abuses he complains of:—But if we may have Leave to be a little more nice in our Discriminations, the King himself is not wholly out of the Reach of Censure: For if he did not understand naval Matters, it may be reasonably ask'd, Why did he aspire to the Government of a Naval Kingdom? Or when in possession of it, why, for the Sake of his own Happiness and Glory, not to insist on the Glory and Happiness of his People, did he neglect to qualify himself to discharge the high Office he had assum'd, in a Manner suitable to the Obligations of it? But it is scarce reasonable to think, that a Prince of his enterprising Genius, bred up in a Maritime Country, could be ignorant of these Matters: On the contrary, we have seen, that Neville's Expedition was a Measure of his own, which the Admiralty was not suffer'd to interfere in:—We have also seen, on more than one Occasion, that the Ships in the Channel Service, were in a Manner reserv'd for his immediate Direction: And, lastly, we have seen, that on the Strength of his own Judgment, he continued Rooke in the chief Command of the Fleet, tho' it furnish'd the Pretence for those divided Councils, captious Orders, wilful Neglects, and a Succession of national Disappointments and Disgraces, not to mention the Partialities, Hardships, and Injuries heap'd on Individuals, which either he wanted Leisure, or Firmness, or Power to punish.

The Dantzick-Prince refusing to admit the Prince of Conti, &c.

But to return:—How open soever the Prince of Conti (for, agreeable to the Intelligence before given the Public, he was aboard this Squadron of du Bart's) found his Passage out of Dunkirk, he met with Difficulties enough to bar his Entrance into Poland: For when he came to Dantzick, he found that City shut against him; for the Senate had already declar'd for the Elector of Saxony, and, consequently, could not hear of any other King: And tho' the Prince did land about 300 Soldiers and Officers, who made themselves Masters of Marienbourgh, which they began to fortify, in order to render it a Place of Arms, so slow were his Polish Adherents in coming in, so importunate were they for Money to defray the Charge of their Levies, and so determin'd was the Prince not to part with any, on mere Speculation, that both Parties became equally suspicious of each other: And at the long Run, notwithstanding the incredible Efforts of the Primate, to maintain the Election he had made, parted with mutual Disquiet.

He returns to France.

The Elector's Party, in the mean Time, had made all imaginable Use of the Advantages in their Power: They had brought him to Warsaw, where he had made his public Entry with all the Pomp and Splendor which belong'd to the Regal Office: They had travers'd all the Measures of the contrary Party, to retard his Coronation: They had, on the Day perfix'd, caus'd the Crown to be set on his Head by the Bishop of Cujavia, tho' it was the Office of the Primate, to perform that Ceremonial, administer the Oaths, &c.: And they had held a Diet to ratify all they had done: In consequence of which, the Saxon Minister at Ryswick had notify'd to the Congress in form, the Election of his Master to the Throne of Poland; and exhorted them not to conclude the Peace, unless Poland was comprehended in it.

K. Augustus crown'd.

And thus having clear'd our Way to the Congress once more, we are at liberty to observe, That Spain, seeing herself in a Man-

A. D. 1697. ner deserted by the Maritime Powers, seeing also those Powers going Hand in Hand with France in driving on the Peace; and being intimidated, as before hinted, with the Loss of Carthagena in America, and of Barcelona in Europe, (which, after holding out fifty-two Days open Trenches, surrender'd by Capitulation on the 10th of July, N. S.) whereby the French, in effect, became Masters of Catalonia, thought it high Time to quicken their Advances towards an Accommodation: Accordingly, instead of persisting any longer in their former Stiffness and Intractability, which was so ill sustain'd by the Figure they made in the Field, or being induc'd by the Imperialists, who found their Account in the War, and who were so much better able to defend themselves at all Extremities, they seem'd at last dispos'd to yield to the Times, and to admit of such Abatements on the Head of Re-Unions, as open'd a fair Prospect of Peace.

Barcelona surrendred.

The Ultimatum of the Imperialists at the Congress.

In the mean Time however, on the 30th of August, that is to say, the Imperial Embassadors deliver'd in a Paper by way of Ultimatum, importing, in general, That they adher'd to the Treaties of Westphalia and Nimeguen, so often propos'd by France: That they accepted of Strasburg, with its Appertenances: That all Things, without Exception, between the Empire and France, should be reduc'd to the State they were in Anno 1673. That on the Behalf of Lorrain, they were ready to listen to such Propositions, and negotiate in such a Manner, as should render it impossible for the Most Christian King to deprive a Prince and his Family of their Patrimony, and keep them in Exile, any longer: That the Church and Chapter of Liege might be restor'd to their incontestable Rights: And that they expected M. Lillieroot not only to give this Ultimatum of theirs a Place in their Portocole, but also to support it with his good Offices, as an Assertor as well as a Mediator.

The Emperor demands the Performance of the Swedish Guaranty.

On the very same Day also that this Paper was presented at Ryswick, the Imperial Minister at Stockholm presented a Memorial to his Swedish Majesty, setting forth, in very strong Terms, the insidious Conduct of France, in drawing the Allies into Treaty upon one Footing, and taking Advantage of their Disunion, to treat with them upon another; and demanding the Performance of his Guaranty.

But as this Memorial at Stockholm had no other Effect, than merely to give some Vent to the impotent Indignation of the Imperial Court, to the Ultimatum at Ryswick, serv'd only to draw from the French Embassadors, the very next Day but one, a Declaration, which not only serv'd to manifest their Superiority to all Europe, but also, to scatter Firebrands among the Allies, which could not but operate so, as to render it, in all Probability, stable and permanent: For therein they signifiy, That the Month of August being expir'd, which was the Term limited for the Acceptance of the King their Master's Offers, he was now entirely at Liberty to vacate them all, and to propose what new Conditions he thought fit: That, however, the same Desire which he had always entertain'd of putting a Period to the Calamities of Christendom, being still the only Rule of his Conduct, he should make no other Use of the Advantages in his Power, than to quicken the Re-establishment of the Repose of Europe: That on this Basis, he withdrew the Option he had given the Emperor, of Strasburgh, or an Equivalent in lieu of it; his Majesty being determin'd to unite it, together with its Dependencies on this Side the Rhine, to his Crown for ever; Those on the other being to be restor'd, with the same Rights and Prerogatives as before: That the Fort of Kehl should be restor'd to the Emperor and Empire in its present State: That the Cities of Fribourgh, Brisac, and Philipsburgh, should be in like Manner restor'd, on the same Conditions specify'd in the Project deliver'd by his Embassadors to the Mediator: That those specify'd for the Restitution of Lorrain, in the same Estate it had been held by Duke Charles in 1670, should be punctually executed, together with the Clauses of Explanation: That his Majesty, judging it necessary to assure the Empire, That his only Desire is to render the Peace solid, to the End it may be lasting, engages to raze all the Forts and Fortresses, and destroy all the Bridges he has on the Rhine, with an Exception nevertheless to that Part of the Bridge at Fort Louis, which communicates with Alsace: That in like Manner he demanded the Bridge of Philipsburgh should be destroy'd, the Fort built at the Foot of the Bridge on the Side of France, should be demolish'd, and, the Rhine serving from thenceforth as a Barrier, the Entrance of his Realm should be secur'd on one Hand, as he on the other Hand fortify'd himself from any Entrance into the Empire.

Lastly: That to the Offers so considerable, which his Majesty had made for the keeping of Strasburgh, he added the Restitution of Barcelona, which he promis'd to restore to the King of Spain, as soon as he had obtain'd the Cession of Strasburgh from the Emperor and Empire, which was the only Use he propos'd to make of his Conquest of one of the most considerable Cities in the Spanish Monarchy.

That his Majesty had made no Alteration in the Conditions he had offer'd to his Catholic Majesty; and was persuaded, that that Prince, sensible of the Moderation he had manifested, would not insist on the Restitution of a few Villages belonging to the Castellany of Aeth, necessary for the Conveniency of the Commerce of Tournay, and the Communication of that City with Conde, which his Majesty proposes to reserve to himself of all the Advantages which he might derive from the Possession of Aeth.

France declares that the Month of August being expir'd, he will restore Strasburgh, &c.

That, however, as it was not fit that his Majesty alone should always oblige himself to sacrifice the most considerable Advantages to the Good of the Peace, he declar'd, That if his Enemies demurr'd to the new Expedient which he had offer'd to facilitate the Conclusion of it, beyond the 20th of the current

And allows the Empire ten more Days for the Acceptance of the Peace.

A. D. 1697.

A. D. 1697. current Month, he ſhould hold himſelf at Liberty to propoſe a-new; and the Calamities of the War, ought to be laid at the Door of Thoſe who refus'd to co-operate with his Majeſty in bringing it to an Iſſue."

A Remonſtrance of the Miniſters of the Empire concerning Luxemburgh.

On the ſame Day, however, as if to balance, in ſome Meaſure at leaſt, this Maſter-Stroke of France, the Miniſters of the Electors and Princes of the Empire, join'd in a written Repreſentation to thoſe of Spain, of the Inconveniences and Dangers ariſing to the whole Germanic Body from the Duchy of Luxemburgh's falling into the Hands of France, and for that Conſideration importuning the Spaniſh Plenipotentiaries, in the moſt urgent Terms, not to liſten to any Offer of an Equivalent for it.

And another to the States, requiring them to continue the War, &c.

The ſame Miniſters alſo repreſented to thoſe of the States-General, conformably, They ſaid, to what had been already repreſented to thoſe of England and Spain, 1. That all the World knew, That by the grand Alliance their High Mightineſſes, the Emperor, Empire, &c. were reciprocally bound each to the other, not to enter into any Negotiation, much leſs conclude a Peace, except with common Conſent; notwithſtanding which, they had learn'd, That the States, together with England and Spain, had brought their Negotiations to a Concluſion, tho' the Emperor and Empire had not ſo much as the Proſpect of a Peace in View; it being impoſſible for them ever to conclude a firm and honorable Peace on the Conditions offer'd by France. 2. That the ſaid high Allies might remember, that the Emperor and Empire would not even agree to the Preliminaries, till they had been aſſur'd by the Miniſters of England, Spain, and the States, That they would do their utmoſt to obtain in the Treaty, what was defective in the ſaid Preliminaries: That it was on the Strength of theſe Aſſurances, that the Emperor and Empire gave into the ſaid Preliminaries, and the ſubſequent Negotiations: That nevertheleſs, inſtead of carrying the Points propos'd, France, by her laſt Declaration, had even broke thro' the Preliminaries, and had thereby thrown the Affairs of the Allies, and particularly of the Emperor and Empire, into a worſe State than ever, and Thoſe who ought to concur in the Negotiation, into an Impoſſibility of ſo doing: That Matters being in this Situation, it was not to be doubted but their High-Mightineſſes, as well in regard of their Obligations, as the Intereſt of the Common Cauſe, would firmly abide by their Engagements with the Emperor and Empire, till the ſaid Preliminaries were fully complied with. 3. That if, contrary to all Expectations, France ſhould perſiſt in her Refuſal, and Spain abandoning her faithful Allies, ſhould make a ſeperate Peace, they beſought, in ſuch Caſe, their High-Mightineſſes to declare, whether the Empire might depend on their real Aſſiſtance agreeable to the ſaid Alliance, to the End, That They, on their Side, might take the neceſſary Meaſures for carrying on the War with Vigour, and animate the other Powers, alike intereſted in the Repoſe of Europe, in co-operating with them. 4. That on the Part of the Empire, they could aſſure the High Allies, That over and above the Troops of the five aſſociated Circles, conſiſting of 60,000 Men, thoſe of Bavaria, which made the Sixth, were alſo to be reckon'd upon, of which 4000 were already in Service; and not to mention the Troops of the Empire, and the other Allies of the Empire, which are not already comprehended in the ſaid Aſſociation, his Imperial Majeſty, and the other Circles of the Empire, would furniſh their Contingents for the Armament-General of the ſaid Empire; the which, provided the States made a ſuitable Effort on their Side, would compoſe an Army conſiderable enough to act offenſively on the Side of the Empire: And, laſtly, That if his Britannic Majeſty, together with their High-Mightineſſes, would take the ſame Reſolution of continuing the War, till France thought fit to grant her own Preliminaries, and upon that Baſis to form a ſure, general, and honourable Peace, they might, with the Bleſſing of God, promiſe themſelves good Succeſs.

What was the Iſſue of theſe Remonſtrances, we ſhall ſee preſently: But firſt we are to beſtow a Word or two on the Caſe of the Proteſtant-French Refugees in England, Scotland, Germany, &c. concerning whom, Biſhop Kennet is pleas'd to ſay, That they were at this Time no leſs diſappointed, than the Royal Exile (meaning King James) in France. "King William, continues his Lordſhip, having, on all Occaſions, declar'd himſelf their Protector, they reaſonably expected, That he would alſo prove their Deliverer, and never conclude a Peace with France, without obliging their natural Sovereign to reſtore them both to their Eſtates, and the free Exerciſe of their Religion in their own Country." Biſhop Burnet alſo ſurmiſes, "That the moſt melancholy Part of the Treaty was, that nothing was got by it in favour of the Proteſtants in France;" or, as the Paſſage ought to have ſtood, That they were no Part of it: And Both theſe right Reverend Politicians agree in acknowledging, That they made all poſſible Application to the King, and the other Proteſtant Allies, to no Purpoſe: The Latter, indeed, conſoles himſelf on this melancholy Occaſion, by adding, "But as They were no part of the Cauſe of the War, ſo it did not appear, That the Allies could do more for them, than to recommend them in the warmeſt Manner to the King of France:" And the Former will have it, That by the King's Direction to the Dutch Plenipotentiaries, the Matter was open'd at a Diſtance to Thoſe of France: But the Truth is, That a Memorial, founded on the Compaſſion due to Perſons ſuffering merely for Conſcience Sake, and containing an expreſs Remonſtrance in their Favour, was deliver'd to the Mediator, by the Earl of Pembroke, in the Name of the Proteſtant Allies in general: And, conſidering the divided Condition of the Allies at that Time, as alſo, that one half of them were yet more embitter'd againſt the Proteſtant Religion than France herſelf, ſuch an

Anſwer

A. D. 1697. Answer, (if any Answer was expected) as That, specify'd by Kennet, namely, "That as he did not pretend to prescribe King William any Rules about his Subjects, so he expected the same Liberty as to his own," was the only one that could have been expected on so captious an Occasion. But this Memorial was not deliver'd till the 19th of September, which was but the Day before the Peace was sign'd; consequently, as it is reasonable to think, was deliver'd only to amuse the Parties concern'd in it, without any serious Purpose in their Favour.

And now, the Day prescrib'd by France for the Acceptance of such Terms as she had also in effect prescrib'd, being come, the Embassadors of the Maritime Powers, together with those of Spain, (regarding more the Pressures their several Countries had incurr'd in the Course of the War, the Conveniencies they expected from the Re-establishment of Peace, and the Resentments they had conceiv'd against the Imperialists, for being so slow in making up a Quarrel which they had so ill maintain'd, than the Obligations of the Grand Alliance) made haste to sign a seperate Peace with France, notwithstanding all the Arguments, and all the Remonstrances of the Imperialists against it; who, seeing themselves on the Point of being deserted, had no Resource left but to require the good Offices of the Mediator on the following Heads, viz. "1. In procuring the best Equivalent possible for Strasburgh, by the Addition of Landau, Fort Louis, Montroyal, and Saar Louis, to Brisac, Friburgh, Kehl and Philipsburg; as also to procure some farther Concessions with regard to Lorrain. 2. In procuring a Prolongation of the Term for adjusting the Peace between the Emperor and Empire, (including Lorrain) and France, till the 1st of November: And, 3dly, In obtaining a reciprocal Armistice till that Time, of the most effectual kind; on these Conditions, That France should immediately withdraw her Troops out of all such Territories, as belong'd unquestionably to the Empire; without proceding to any new Exaction of any kind, or under any pretext whatsoever: That France should not march any other Troops either into the said Territories, or the Borders of Those in her own Possession: And that as to the rest, all Things should remain in their present State, without any Power on either Side to raise any new Fortification, or commit any new Waste or Destruction of any kind."

The Imperialists demand the good Offices of the Mediator on certain Heads.

But of these Propositions, however recommended by the Mediator, or enforc'd by the Allies, only the two last were listen'd to; nor Those but on condition, that the final Treaties with England, Spain, and Holland should be sign'd that Day, whether the Emperor and Empire sign'd or not; as foreknowing, That such a seperate Proceding, would not only expose the present, but serve to weaken every future, Confederacy: And that when such Seperation had taken place, they could humble the Caesarean Pride yet more securely than they had already done: Accordingly the great Business of the Day, was to give the last Hand to those several Negotiations; and Midnight came on before that great Business could be so far adjusted as to be ready for the last Hand: Besides, when all Difficulties were remov'd, and nothing remain'd but to carry what had been adjusted into Execution, a new Contest produc'd a new Embarassment: For whereas on all other Occasions, the Point of Precedency is the last Point given up, in This, the Struggle was, who should be last: The Ministers of Spain having dispatch'd their Treaty first, Those of the Maritime Powers insisted, That the Spaniards should sign first: But the French refus'd to sign with the Spaniards, unless the English and Dutch led the way: The English again made a Difficulty of giving it under their Hands, That They were the first to desert their Allies, whatever Pressures, and whatever Provocations they had to urge in their Excuse: And in this Perplexity the Affair hung, till about One o'Clock, when the Dutch thought fit to break the Ice, and were follow'd by the English and Spaniards, at about an Hour's Distance each from the other: So that it was Three in the Morning before the whole Transaction (which pass'd in a little Cabinet belonging to the Mediator) was completed: And, to procede in the Words of Bishop Kennet, "The Imperial and Electoral Plenipotentiaries, who most of them were all the while present in the Hall, were so far from consenting to what was done, that, on the contrary, they requir'd the Mediator to enter a Protestation, "That this was the Second Time that a seperate Peace had been concluded with France, (meaning that of Nimeguen for one, wherein the Emperor and Empire had been excluded) and that the States of the Empire, who had been impos'd upon thro' their own over-credulity, would not for the future be so easily persuaded to enter into Confederacies." The Spanish Plenipotentiaries, and particularly Don Bernardo de Quiros, by way of Excuse, replied, That he had a long Time been made acquainted with his Catholic Majesty's Pleasure, not to delay the signing of the Treaty, which had been agreed on before; and if he had obey'd those Orders, the French would not have taken Barcelona: But that having deferr'd the Conclusion of that Treaty, at the Persuasion of the Imperial Ministers, he had given the French Time to make themselves Masters of that important Place; which Success emboldened their Plenipotentiaries to change their Language, and thereby he had himself run the Hazard of incurring his Master's Displeasure.

The Ministers of England, Spain, and the States, agree to sign the Peace:

But differ about the Order of sig'ning.

The French refuse to sign with Spain, till the English and Dutch have sign'd.

The Latter of whom sign first.

Imperialists protest against it.

The Truth is, the Spaniards could not but perceive, that the English and Dutch could have sav'd Barcelona this Year, if they pleas'd; but that they rather declin'd it, with an Intention to bring the Spaniards more readily to accept the Offers of the French: And indeed, those two Powers, having in a Manner borne the whole Burden of the War, both by Sea and Land, whereby their respectives Subjects were reduc'd to great Straits, especially as to their Trade,

A. D. 1697. it could not seem strange that they were forward to sign a glorious and advantageous Peace."

Remarks on the Preceding. How advantagious and glorious it was, it is, however, rather too soon to pronounce; tho' we may venture to pronounce in passing, That it was no great Matter of Glory, to connive at the Distresses of an Ally, in the Manner above express'd, that he might stand so much the more in need of Peace; or to sign a seperate Treaty against both the Letter and Spirit of the Grand Alliance, which in the Third and Fifth Articles, expressly provides against any such Lapse on any Pretext whatsoever; and thro' the whole Conduct both of the War and of the Negotiations of Peace, constitutes and provides for a Common Cause, which was never to be sacrific'd for any seperate Consideration whatsoever.

In the Light, therefore, of a common Adventure for a common Interest, the Advantage and Glory of this Transaction must be consider'd: And in the Fourth Article of the said Grand Alliance, together with the first seperate Article, we are furnish'd with the Particulars in which the common Interest was plac'd: For by the said Fourth Article, no Peace was to be concluded, till the several Treaties of Westphalia, Osnabrugh, Munster, and the Pyreneans, had, by the Help of God, and their united Force been vindicated, so as that all Things, Civil and Ecclesiastical, were restor'd to their former Condition, according to the Tenor of the same: And by the first seperate Article, his Imperial Majesty was to be assisted by the other Allies, with all their Force, in succeeding to the whole of the Spanish Monarchy, in case his Catholic Majesty dy'd without lawful Issue, and France should directly or indirectly oppose it.

But tho' France took care to make her first Offers broad enough to build a Negotiation upon, she took as much care, as we have seen, to narrow them again in the Course of that Negotiation afterwards: So that when the Preliminaries came to be specifically made, and formally deliver'd, it was apparent, That they could not be accepted on the Footing of the Grand Alliance: And yet they were accepted: And now we are to see what in general that Acceptance produc'd.

Abstract of the Treaty between France and the States. And first of the Treaty between France and Holland, It articled for an instant Cessation of Hostilities, a general Armistice, a perpetual Amity, a reciprocality of Councils, Interests, and good Offices, a general Restitution as well of all Goods seis'd and confiscated, as of all Places taken and occupied on each Side; a Renunciation of all Pretensions on each other, a Discharge of all Prisoners, a Revocation of all Letters of Marque and Reprisal, a Caution that private or particular Injuries should not be the Cause of a national Quarrel, a Proviso, That in case of a Rupture, the Subjects on each Side should be allow'd nine Months to remove their Effects without molestation, &c. By the Fifteenth Article, the Peace between the Most Christian King and the Elector of Brandenburg, of June 1679, was re-esta- A. D. 1697. blish'd: By the Sixteenth, the Peace between the said King and the Duke of Savoy, was confirm'd; and both these Articles were inserted in the Treaty with England; as was also the Seventeenth, in which his Swedish Majesty was formally compris'd: In the Eighteenth, a Provision was made on the Behalf of the Most Christian King, for comprising all those Powers who should be nam'd before the Exchange of the Ratifications, or in SIX MONTHS after; and in the Nineteenth, on the Behalf of the States, a like Provision was made for the Kings of England and Spain, and all their other Allies, who in SIX WEEKS after the Exchange of Ratifications, should declare themselves willing to accept the Peace: By the Twentieth, the contracting Parties consent, that the King of Sweden, and all other Powers acceding to it, might take upon them the Guaranty of it: By the Twenty-first, the Treaty was to be ratified, and the Ratifications exchang'd in three Weeks from the Day of signing: And by the Twenty-second, the whole Treaty, for the greater Security, was to be publish'd, verified, and registe'r'd by the Parliament of Paris.

The Dutch Ministers, with whom the grand Pensioner of Holland was colleagu'd, some time in July, had also the Address to perfect their Treaty of Commerce, and to carry it into Execution at the same Time: And preparatory to the Treaty between England and France, it is necessary to insert the following previous Articles, which were inserted in the Protocole of the Mediator, as essential Obligations on the several Parties, and which have been over-look'd by all our Historians.

Certain preparatory Articles that between England and France. The first related to a Pension, so it is call'd, for Queen Mary d'Este, and is couch'd in the following strange Terms: "The Embassadors of the King of England declare, That the King their Master has promis'd, That the Pension of about 50,000 l. sterling, or of such Sum as shall be found establish'd by Act of Parliament, seal'd with the great Seal of England, shall be paid for the future, agreeable to the said Act: And that they content the Embassador-Mediator shall insert the said Declaration in his Protocole, and shall give an authentic Copy of it to the Embassadors of France, in the Presence of whom, as also of the Embassadors of the States-General, the said Declaration was made." Sign'd Lillieroot.

The Second was call'd, An Act of the Embassadors of France; and by which they oblig'd themselves to obtain from the King their Master, a particular Full Power, to be exchang'd with the Full Power of the Embassadors of England, in the usual Form, at the Time of exchanging the Ratifications.

The Third and Fourth, like the Last, were Insertions in the Protocole, and contain'd another Engagement on the Part of the French Embassadors, That, finding the Treaty made and sign'd at Breda, was not in French, they would furnish in lieu of That to be sign'd at present in French, another in Latin, before the Ratification: As also,

A. D. 1697. also a sort of reciprocal Agreement, That the French should release such of the French Protestants, as they had taken on board English Ships; as also the Four Ministers of Orange: And that the English should release the French taken on board French Vessels, (being Fifty in Number) according to the List given in at the same Time.

Abstract of the Treaty itself. The Treaty itself consisted of Seventeen Articles, of which several contain'd such general Matters of Agreement, as have been already given in the Abstract of the Dutch Treaty: But in the Fourth, his Most Christian Majesty engag'd, not to disturb or disquiet, in any Sort, the King of Great-Britain in the Possession of the Realms, Countries, Estates, Lands or Governments then possess'd and enjoy'd by his Britannic Majesty; to that Purpose giving his Royal Word, not to assist, directly or indirectly, any of the Enemies of the King of Great-Britain, nor to favour, in any respect whatsoever, the Cabals, Conspiracies, or Machinations, which might be excited by disaffected or rebellious Persons, in any of his said Possessions, against him; nor, by consequence, not to aid or assist any Person or Persons, either by Sea or Land, with Arms, Ammunition, Provisions, Ships, Money, or by any other Means whatsoever, who, on any Pretext whatsoever, should disturb or disquiet the said King of Great-Britain in the full and free Possession of his Kingdoms, &c. As in like Manner, the said King of Great-Britain reciprocally promis'd and engag'd for himself and his Successors, without any the least Exception or Reserve, not to disturb or disquiet the said Most Christian King, &c. By the Fifth, a free Commerce was reciprocally restor'd on the old Footing: By the Sixth, a like Provision was made for opening the Courts of Justice in each Kingdom, for the reciprocal Benefit of the Subjects of both Parties: By the Eighth, Commissaries were to be appointed for settling the Pretensions of each to Hudson's-Bay, taken by the French from the English during the late Peace, and re-taken by the Latter during the present War, &c. and for regulating and settling the Limits of the Places to be restor'd by the Seventh Article, as well as such Exchanges as might be found convenient to be made; which said Commissaries were to meet at London, in three Months after the Exchange of the Ratifications: By the Tenth, all Ships, Merchandizes, &c. taken on either Side within twelve Days after the signing the present Treaty, in the British and Northern Seas as far as Cape St. Vincent, or in ten Weeks beyond the said Cape, and on this Side of the Equator, and within six Months beyond it, should remain to the Captors: By the Twelfth, That in case of a Rupture, the Subjects of either Prince should be allow'd six Months to remove their Effects: By the Thirteenth, the seperate Article of the Treaty of Nimeguen, relating to the Principality of Orange, and all other Lands and Lordships belonging to the said King of Great-Britain, was to be entirely executed, both in Matter and Manner; and in Consequence all Innovations and Alterations of what Kind soever, which had been made to the Prejudice of the said Treaty, &c. should be made and remain void and of none Effect, &c.: And by the Seventeenth, the Ratifications were to be exchang'd in three Weeks, to be reckon'd from the Day of signing. A. D. 1697.

The Treaty between France and Spain consisted of Thirty-eight Articles, of which we need only specify such as relate to the Restitutions: Viz. By Article 4. Gironne, Roses, Barcelona, and generally all the Places, Forts, &c. taken from his Catholic Majesty in Catalonia during the Course of the War, were to be restor'd in their present State, without any Reserve, or any Alteration of any kind. By Article 5, The City, Fortress, and Province of Luxemburgh, with all their Appertenances, were also to be restor'd in the same unreserv'd Manner: The three following Articles provide for the like Restitution of Charleroy, Mons, and Courtray: The next, for all the Places in general taken or occupy'd by the French in Flanders, since the Commencement of the War. By the Tenth, all the Places, Cities, Towns, Villiages, &c. clam'd and possess'd by France, in the Provinces of Luxemburgh, Namur, Brabant, Flanders, Hainault, &c. under the Head of Re-unions since the Treaty of Nimeguen, were in like Manner reconvey'd to Spain, according to the List of Re-unions produc'd on the Behalf of his Catholic Majesty, and annex'd to the Treaty itself; with a Reserve of eighty-two Towns and Villiages, according to another List also annex'd to the said Treaty: And by the same Article, the French Clame on this Head, was to be referr'd to Commissaries, and in case they could not agree to the States-General. By the Twelfth, these Restitutions were to be made immediately after the Ratification. By the Thirteenth, all the Cannon, Ammunition, &c. belonging to France in the said Places, were made the Property of Spain. By those that follow, all Prisoners were to be set free; all Records were to be restor'd; all Contributions were to cease. By the Thirty-first, the City and Castle of Dinant were to be restor'd to the Bishopric of Liege. By the Thirty-third, both their said Majesties solemnly confirm'd the late Treaty between France and Savoy, and as solemnly declar'd themselves Guarantics for the due Observance of it. By the Thirty-seventh, the Treaty was to be publish'd, verify'd, and registred in the grand Council-Chamber of Accounts, and other Sovereign Courts of his Catholic Majesty in the Low-Countries, Castile and Arragon, the Parliament of Paris, and other Parliaments of France: And, lastly, as well to This, as the two preceding Treaties between England and France, and France and the States-General, a seperate Article was annex'd, in which it was provided, "That his Most Christian Majesty should allow to the Emperor and Empire, till the 1st of November ensuing, for their Acceptance of the Terms of Peace last propos'd, if his Imperial Majesty and the Empire came to no other Agreement in the mean Time: And in case

Articles of that Treaty between France and Spain.

A further Time allow'd to the Emperor and Empire, by a seperate Article in all the general Treaties.

He

A. D. 1697. He and They, in that Interval, did not accept the said Terms, nor otherwise agree with his Most Christian Majesty, the said Treaties with the said several Powers, were nevertheless to be in full Force, and to have their full Effect: Nor was it lawful for either of the said Powers to contravene any Part of it, directly or indirectly, on any Pretext whatsoever."

Thus the Emperor and Empire were reduc'd to the Necessity of accepting worse Terms than were at first offer'd, by insisting more rigidly than politicly on all they had a Right to insist on; in which Circumstance the Imperial Plenipotentiaries were glad to accept of the Armistice which was procur'd for them at the joint Instances of the Mediator, and the Ministers of England, Spain, and Holland, and sign'd on the 22d for the Emperor, and the 23d for the Empire.

An Armistice also granted to them for the same Term.

Thus we have the great Out-line before us of this memorable Negotiation: But as to the Secret of it, none but such as are furnish'd with a Clue to the Court-labyrinth at Loo, are in a Capacity to unfold it: And This may be pronounc'd with so much the more Assurance, because the very next Day after the Peace, was produc'd the following Act, which was sign'd by King William himself at that Place, without any counter Signature of any of his Ministers, as is usual on the like Occasions; and enter'd in the Protocole of the Mediator the 24th following, viz.

An Act of King William's at Loo, in relation to the withdrawing the French Troops, and Spain's Ratification of the Peace.

"We William the Third, by the Grace of God, King of Great-Britain, &c. approve the Treaty of Peace sign'd at Ryswick the 20th of September, 1697, between our Embassadors and Plenipotentiaries, and Those of the Most Christian King; and we oblige ourselves on the Faith and Word of a King, to furnish, in the Time specified, the Ratifications pure, simple, and in the customary Terms, sign'd by our Self, and seal'd with the great Seal of England: And whereas Two other Treaties were concluded the same Day, with the said Most Christian King, the one with the Catholic King, and the other with the States-General, We, in case the said Most Christian King shall think fit to withdraw his Troops out of the Dominions of his Catholic Majesty, as well in Flanders as in Catalonia, on the Delivery of the present Act, promise to employ our utmost Endeavours to procure the like pure, simple, and authentic Ratifications of the said Treaties, in the Time specified therein, as well on the Part of the said Catholic King, as the said States: And if the said Catholic King shall make any Difficulty on his Part, or shall not comply within the said Term, We again promise, That the Treaty made between our Embassadors, and Those of the Most Christian King, shall nevertheless have its full and entire Effect: And we also farther engage to use our Endeavours, that the Treaty and Ratification of the said States-General, shall, in like Manner, be precisely executed, even tho' the said Catholic King shall refuse to do the same by his: In Testimony of which, and by way of Assurance on our Side of all that is therein contain'd, We have sign'd these Presents with our Hand: Done at Loo the 21st of September, N. S. 1697. L. S. William R."

For what remains concerning England in particular, the Ratification under the Great Seal was dated September 25, O. S. and was counterSign'd by none of the King's Ministers but Mr. Blathwait, who acted, it seems, abroad, in the Capacity of a Secretary of State-extraordinary, tho' his Office was strictly no other than that which is now call'd Secretary at War; and when it came to be exchang'd, was objected to by the French, as was also the Preamble to the English Full-Powers, on account of the Words Franciæ Rex, inserted among the King's Titles in Both: The English Embassadors, however, took Shelter under the Treaty of Breda; and promis'd, That, in case the said Words were not to be found therein, they would furnish another Power, and another Act of Ratification in conformity thereto: So that an Expedient was soon found to prevent any new Litigation on that delicate but insignificant Head.

On the 22d of October, N. S. the Peace between France and England was proclaim'd at Paris, and exactly that Day Sennight afterwards at London: Nor ought it to be unacknowledg'd, That the Terms made use of by the French Court, were abundantly more polite, than Those made use of on our Side of the Water, tho' we had their Example to profit by: For in their Instrument, it was said, That a good, firm, stable, and solid Peace, together with an entire and sincere Reconciliation and Friendship, had been made and settled between the most excellent and most potent Prince Lewis, by the Grace of God, King of France and Navarre, and the most excellent and most potent Prince William the IIId. King of Great-Britain: Whereas the Preamble to the Proclamation, set forth by the Lords Justices, ran thus: "Whereas a Peace has been treated and concluded, at his Majesty's Royal Palace at Ryswick, between his Majesty and the French King, &c." And for this extreme Bluntness, no other Reasons, perhaps, can be assign'd, than that which follows, viz. That the French Court, by omitting to annex these Words, by the Grace of God, which is universally us'd in the Titles of Sovereign Princes, to That of King William meant to insinuate a Stroke of Satire, which could scarce be too severely retorted.

The Peace proclaim'd at Paris and at London.

And now, that we may keep pace with the Course of the Year, and thereby manifest so much the more fully on what Grounds of Strength and Confidence the Stiffness of the Imperial Court, which furnish'd the Maritime Powers and Spain with their most plausible Pretext for concluding a seperate Peace was founded, it is necessary to touch on such military Events, as occurr'd in the more remote Provinces of the War.

But first we must observe, That France was not more solicitous to keep up a military Spirit in the Turkish Divan, than the Emperor to enlarge his Dominions at the Expence of

A.D. 1697. of the Turkish Empire: Hence it was that, in the Beginning of the Year, Muscovy was taken into the Confederacy on that Side, which was renew'd for three Years; and a suitable Concert was made for carrying on the War by Sea and Land, in such a Manner, as might find full Employment for all the Forces of the Turkish Empire.

A bloody Battle between the Venetians and the Turks.

The first of these Provinces belong'd wholly to the Venetians, who confin'd in themselves wholly to the Defensive by Land, that their Efforts at Sea might be so much the more formidable: But tho' the two Fleets met in the Beginning of July, and had two several Engagements, the Issue was neither decisive or signal enough to furnish any great Matter of Triumph on either Side.

The Muscovites victorious over the Tartars.

The Muscovites also, at the latter End of the same Month, obtain'd a complete Victory in the Crimea, over the Tartars commanded by Sultan Galga: The Fight is said to have lasted twelve Hours; and that the greatest Part of the Tartars, not being able to pass the River Kalganski, were there cut to Pieces, drown'd, or taken Prisoners.

But the Fame of this Exploit was soon eclips'd by a far greater in Hungary. The Imperialists had open'd the Campaign with an Attempt on the Town of Bihut, in Croatia, in hope of opening a Passage into Bosnia; but the Place being vigorously defended, and a Party of the persecuted Anti-Romanists in Hungary, either transported by the Smart of their own Sufferings, or brib'd by the secret Emissaries of France, at the same Time breaking into open Rebellion against the Emperor their Sovereign, and putting all the Garisons they reduc'd to the Sword, it was thought advisable to raise the Siege, in order to quench this domestic Flame; which being effectually done, the Imperial Army took the Field, under the Command of Prince Eugene of Savoy: And much about the same Time, or soon after, the Grand Signior, in Person, arriv'd at Belgrade, in order to open the Campaign; his Purpose being to fall into Transylvania and Upper Hungary.

Accordingly, his first Effort was to reduce Titul, in which he succeeded: But then, believing he might with as much Ease carry Segedin, and afterwards Peter-Waradin, in case he could cut off the Communication of the Imperialists, he posted his Army between them and the last of those Places: Prince Eugene, on the other Hand, having obtain'd Intelligence of all This, and having been also reinforc'd by the Troops from Transylvania, under the Command of General Rabatin, made all possible Expedition to come up with him, before he could carry his Designs into Execution: And Fortune favour'd him even beyond his Expectation: For the Grand Signior being inform'd of the prodigious Marches he took, and the Advances he made, halted at Zenta, threw a Bridge over the Theysse, which he pass'd himself with all his Cavalry, except about 2000, and order'd a double Trench to be thrown up behind his Infantry, as a Precaution for their Security, in case the Enemy came up before they could follow him, and the Bridge should be broke down behind him. A Circumstance which presented one of those inestimable Opportunities, which never ought to be presented, or over-look'd: The Prince saw it with an Eagle's Eye, and seiz'd it with a Lion's Hand: For having rang'd his Army in order of Battle, and directed them to continue their March in that Order, he put himself at the Head of eight Regiments of Dragoons, in order to make sure of some Advantage, before it was possible for the Enemy to disentangle themselves from the Snare into which they were fallen: But finding on his Approach, the same Orders still in Operation, that is to say, the Cavalry still passing over the Bridge, with an Intermixture of Baggage, and whatever else could serve to aggravate Confusion, and the Foot making the best Disposition in their Power to defend themselves, he waited till the Army came up, and having distributed the said Regiments of Dragoons to their several Posts, brought his Cannon both on the Right and Left to play on the Bridge, while he completed his Disposition for occupying every Inch of Ground to the best Advantage; which being done, and not above two Hours Day-light remaining in the Skies, the Attack was begun by the Infantry of the Flank of the Left Wing: There, under the Cover of certain Pieces of Cannon, which had clear'd the Place of the 2000 Turkish Horse above-mention'd posted there, had slipt between the River and the Enemy's Rear, and by so unexpected a Motion, threw it into no small Disorder: Soon after which the whole Line, as well Horse as Foot, coming up, and charging them in front with the utmost Vigour, they were not able to withstand the Shock, tho' cover'd with a double Trench, and a Barricade of Waggons: In half an Hour's Time, the Imperialists of the Left Wing had broke thro' all Opposition; and being briskly supported by the rest of the Front, all was Dismay and Feebleness on one Side, and all Order and Resolution on the other: So that in a few Moments more, all the Tokens of an absolute Rout were visible thro' the whole Field: And now What was before Valour, became Cruelty: The Victors would not hear of Mercy; and dreadful was the Carnage that follow'd: Those who fought were hew'd down by the Front; Those who fled were cut off by the Imperialists who had broke into their Rear: The Bridge, which all endeavour'd to gain, was choak'd up with dead Bodies, and Thousands threw themselves into the River, to avoid the Fury of the Sword. Never was Victory more complete; never was such Destruction made in so short a Time: The whole Field was cover'd with the Dead: Of the Enemy's Camp, all the Tents, not excepting the magnificent Pavillion of the Grand Signior himself, all their Stores, as well of Ammunition as of Provisions, all their (b) Baggage of every kind, and

A.D. 1697.

The Battle of Zenta between the Imperialists and Turks.

The Latter totally routed.

(b) Consisting of 6000 Waggons, 6000 Camels, 5000 Horses, 10000 Oxen, and a vast Number of other Cattle. 130 Pieces of Cannon, 500 Drums, 500 Colours, 48 Pair of Kettle-drums, and a close Carriage, in which were the Ladies of the Grand Signior's Seraglio.

A. D. 1697. and all their Cannon, Prince Eugene remain'd Maſter: The Grand Signior ſav'd himſelf by Flight, which the Night favour'd: But the Grand Vizier was kill'd, and the Seal of the Empire, which he always wears about his Neck, was the next Morning preſented to the Prince by a Tranſylvanian Commiſſary: The Aga of the Janizaries, and twenty-ſeven Baſſaws more, were alſo found among the Dead, of whom the Number were ſaid to amount to upwards of 20,000, beſides 10 or 12000 drown'd in the Theyſſe, 6000 wounded, and the Priſoners, which were not many.

To the farther Honour of Prince Eugene, it is alſo to be remember'd, that in point of Numbers, his Army was greatly inferior to That of the Enemy; that the Victory was not more owing to the Miſtakes of the Enemy, than to his Addreſs and Preſence of Mind in the Improvement of thoſe Miſtakes; and that he had the Happineſs to purchaſe it, at ſo cheap a Rate as of 430 kill'd, and 1593 wounded.

But, complete and ſignal as the Victory was, ſo far was the Seaſon advanc'd, (it was the 11th of September when the Battle was fought) and ſo much Time was requiſite to refreſh the Army, after the fatiguing Marches they had ſuſtain'd, that the Advantage of the Day was the the chief Advantage immediately redounding from it: It is true, the Prince did make an Incurſion into Boſnia, with little or no Interruption; but the Conqueſts he made, were ſcarce conſiderable enough to deſerve mention: So that we may now return to Ryſwick, where it was ſuppos'd, the News of ſo glorious and deciſive an Action, would have had no ſmall Effect on the Negotiations: But tho' his Imperial Majeſty immediately diſpatch'd a Courier with a Letter, ſign'd with his own Hand, to the States-General, containing a Brief of the glorious Succeſs of his Arms, They were not in a Humour to be ſo dazzled with it, as to loſe ſight of any one Object which made a Part of their own immediate Intereſt.

Hence, therefore, it was, That his Miniſters at the Congreſs, ſeeing the Peace was ſign'd under all the Precautions that could be taken to ſecure the Exchange of the Ratifications, or to diſſolve the Confederacy, in caſe they were not exchang'd, thought it their wiſeſt Courſe to make all the Uſe they could of the farther Term allow'd them, to convert the Armiſtice into a full and perfect Accommodation.

And this they alſo found to be ſo much the more neceſſary, becauſe the Mediatrix, Sweden, appear'd on all Occaſions more anxious to excuſe herſelf from the Performance of her Guaranty, in conformity to the repeated Demands of his Imperial Majeſty, than to fulfil it; as appears undeniably by the ſolemn Act ſign'd at Ryſwick, on the 30th of October, by both the Embaſſadors-Mediators, (for now the Count de Bonde, who was firſt in the Commiſſion, attended the Conferences as well as M. Lillieroot) to the following Effect.

A. D. 1697. "Whereas, by the preſent Treaty of Peace (wherein his Sweediſh Majeſty has ſuſtain'd the Weight of the Mediation) remarkable Alterations have been made in the Treaties of Weſtphalia and Nimeguen, both of which were alſo made under his Guaranty, and that of other puiſſant Sovereigns, his ſaid Majeſty has thought fit to declare by us, his underwritten Embaſſadors Extraordinary and Plenipotentiaries, That there was nothing he deſir'd with more Ardor, than to maintain the ſaid Treaties; That with this View, he had, to the laſt, employ'd all his Cares to obtain the Performance of what had been promis'd on the Part of France, in conſequence of which, his Majeſty firmly believ'd, that in the future Treaty of Peace, he ſhould have carey'd his Point; more eſpecially as it was notorious, That his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, during the whole Courſe of the Negotiations, did offer to put the Empire in poſſeſſion of Straſburgh, and all its Dependencies; That, as theſe Propoſitions were not accepted in the Time prefix'd, as France had taken Advantage of the Succeſſes of her Arms to alter them, and, at laſt, had concluded a Peace with the Allies, who were alſo Guaranties, together with his Sweediſh Majeſty; whence the Emperor and Empire had thought it more adviſable to conſent to thoſe Alterations, than to continue a bloody and doubtful War any longer; his ſaid Majeſty perſuades himſelf, that he ſhall never be accus'd, either at preſent or hereafter, of having fail'd in any of the Duties, which either as Guaranty or Mediator he was liable to: Laſtly; That, as ſome new Difficulties had alſo ariſen touching the Treaty of Weſtphalia, with regard to Religion, the ſaid Embaſſadors Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of his ſaid Majeſty, did expreſſly reſerve to themſelves a Power to declare his Intentions on that Subject, within the Time limited for the Exchange of the Ratifications.

C. Bonde, N. Lillieroot."

A new Diſcovery ſtarted by the Proteſtant Princes.

The new Difficulty here alluded to, and which Biſhop Burnet calls a new Piece of Treachery againſt the Proteſtant Religion, is thus explan'd: In the Cloſe of the 4th Article of the Treaty between the Empire and France, (which provided, that all Places occupy'd by France, not belonging to Alſace, ſhould be reſtor'd without Exception) a Reſerve was made, That the Roman-Catholic Religion, re-eſtabliſh'd in the ſaid Places, ſhould, notwithſtanding ſuch Reſtoration, be continued in its preſent State: On the other Hand, the Embaſſadors of the Proteſtant Princes being met at the Houſe of the Plenipotentiary for Mentz, drew up a Memorial, and appointed four Deputies to deliver it to the Mediator; wherein they demanded, That as well at Straſburgh, as the other Places of Alſace belonging to France, the Lutheran Religion ſhould be re-eſtabliſh'd on the ſame Footing, and with all the Rights and Privileges it had enjoy'd in the Year 1624: But the French having at firſt demurr'd to this Demand, had in the End rejected it, with the Concurrence of the Imperialiſts,

A. D. 1697. Imperialists, (in which we are to ſuppoſe the Treachery conſiſted) and had moreover peremptorily inſiſted on the Reſerve in the Fourth Article above ſpecify'd: It was thus Things ſtood on the laſt 30th of October, when the Peace was to be ſign'd under that plauſible Act of the Mediators: For as the Emperor and France were equally determin'd to ſhew no Favour to the reform'd Religion, ſo the German Princes of that Religion, either to manifeſt their Reſentment, or in hope of obtaining ſome Conceſſion, would not ſuffer their Miniſters at the Congreſs to become Parties in that Signature: The Pretence of Refuſal was want of Orders, but the Truth was want of Will.

who refuſe to ſign.

This Counter-ſtep on that Side, did not, however, hinder Thoſe on the Other from making the beſt of their way to their Journey's End: For the Imperial Miniſters having conferr'd with the French on what had happen'd, the Latter took occaſion to declare, That the Signature needed not to be delay'd on that Account: And that the ſaid Princes ſo refuſing, ſhould enjoy the Benefit of the Armiſtice, during the ſix Weeks limited for the Exchange of the Ratifications; during which Interval, they ſhould be oblig'd to ſignify, either there or at Ratiſbon, whether They choſe to accede or not: But then if they did not, in that Interval, ſo ſignify their Acceſſion, purely and ſimply, They alſo declar'd, The War ſhould be renew'd againſt them, notwithſtanding the Articles of the Treaty in their Favour, which in ſuch Caſe, and as far as regarded them, ſhould be of none effect; tho' remaining altogether as valid with reſpect to the other Eſtates of the Empire, as if it had been accepted and ſign'd by All without Exception.

And now, in the very ſame Manner as the Emperor and Empire had been ſerv'd by the Maritime Powers and Spain, the Proteſtant Powers of Germany were ſerv'd by the Roman-Catholics: For the Latter having obtain'd their own Terms, and caus'd this Stipulation to be enter'd in the Protocole of the Mediation, They made no Scruple to ſign without them, on the Conditions, and with the Reſerves already in ſubſtance recounted: And among the ſpecial Proviſions contain'd in the Treaty, Treves was reſtor'd to the Elector of that Name: The Elector of Brandenburgh was to enjoy all the Advantages of his Treaty with France, before ſpecify'd: All that had been taken from the Palatinate, was to be reſtor'd: And as to the Clames of the Ducheſs of Orleans, they were referr'd to the Arbitration of the Emperor and France; and till a Decition was obtain'd, the Elector Palatine was to allow her Highneſs an Annuity of 100,000 Florins: The Counties of Spanheim and Veldentz, as alſo the Duchy of Deuxponts, were ceded to the King of Sweden: In the Reſtitution of Lorrain, his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty took care, that all the new Fortifications which had been erected at his Expence, ſhould be demoliſh'd, and to reſerve to himſelf the Caſtle of Nan Louis, with half a League of the Country round about it; as alſo the Town and Prefecture of Longuis, in Exchange for another Prefecture of equal Value, in one of the Three Biſhoprics; as alſo a free Paſſage for his Troops through the Duke's Dominions, &c. And, laſtly, as the famous Conteſt for the Electorate of Cologne, between Prince Francis Louis Palatine, and the Cardinal of Furſtenburgh, was by this Treaty finally terminated in favour of the (c) Former, ſo the Latter was expreſſly reſtor'd to all his Rights, Benefices, &c. that it might not be ſaid, that France in return for all his Services and Sufferings on her Account, had left him in a worſe Condition than ſhe found him.

The Powers ſign'd without them.

A. D. 1697.

And now for what remains to be mention'd concerning this complicated Affair, on the next Day but one after the Treaty was ſign'd, the Deputation on behalf of the Empire drew up an Abſtract of what had paſs'd, for the Information of the Diet at Ratiſbon, to whom it was addreſs'd, and of which the moſt remarkable Particulars are as follow, viz.

Account ſent to Ratiſbon by Deputies of the Empire.

"The Plenipotentaries having, at laſt, and with the proper Reſerves and Proteſtations, accepted the (d) Temperament propos'd, of waving the Ceremonial in their Conferences, the Deputation was open'd on the 30th at Night, that the Treaty of Peace, which was already concluded, might be ſign'd on the Behalf of the Empire, which was not done till Five o'Clock in the Morning.

Nor was it then in the Power of the ſaid Plenipotentiaries, to conform to the Letter of the Inſtructions they had receiv'd; and for this Failure, the Preſſures of the Criſis muſt be their Excuſe: For it is notorious, That after the ſeperate Treaties, which the other Allies had concluded, the Empire was wholly abandon'd and expos'd to the Diſcretion of France; in conſequence of which, the French Embaſſadors would neither liſten to Reaſon or Juſtice, and nothing remain'd but in concert with the Embaſſadors of his Imperial Majeſty, to accept the Conditions offer'd, rather than perſiſt in a ruinous War, which could no longer be carried on with any Hope of Advantage, either to the Emperor or Empire, after ſuch a Seperation, and when there was not the leaſt Probability that the ſaid Allies would, for the Sake of either, break the Engagements they had ſo lately made, and alſo made public; ſeeing They had expreſſly declar'd the contrary to thoſe whom we deputed expreſſly to make our Remonſtrances to them upon it.

Thus

(c) It ought not to be forgot, That the French having caus'd their Troops to advance into the Territory of Liege, between the Sambre and the Meuſe, during the Truce, in order to levy Contributions, his Electoral Highneſs, as Biſhop of Liege, on the 7th of October, directed his Miniſters at the Congreſs, to deliver in to the Mediator a formal Complaint thereof, as a Breach of the ſaid Truce.

(d) There had been, in particular, ſome very warm Diſputes concerning the Ninth Electorate, and a ſolemn Proteſtation had been preſented to the Mediator againſt it, ſign'd by the Miniſters of ſeveral German Princes.

A. D. 1697. Thus, it is that unfortunate Seperation which has produc'd a Peace so little Advantageous.——

And for the rest, no body can believe or imagine the Difficulties which occurr'd in treating for the Empire, with the Embassadors of France, after they were sure of their Ground, by the Publication of the several Treaties with the other Allies," &c.

General Declaration of the Protestant Powers of the Empire.

On the 4th of November, also, the Ministers of the Protestant Powers of the Empire join'd in a formal Declaration, That the Clause in relation to Religion, annex'd to the Fourth Article of the Treaty, was contrary to the Fundamentals of the Empire, as settled by the Treaty of 1555, and confirm'd by That of Westphalia, which was the avow'd Basis of the present; as also to the Imperial Capitulation; to That of the King of the Romans; to the Instructions of the Empire to their Delegates; to the particular Instructions which the Protestant Delegates had receiv'd from all the Evangelic Bodies; to the Orders they had receiv'd from the Princes their Masters; to the Guaranty of the Treaty of Westphalia, in which the Most Christian King himself was one of the Parties; to the very Preliminaries of the present Peace; to the Project of July 20, and the Declaration of September, deliver'd to the Congress by the Embassadors of France; to the Third Article of the Treaty itself; to the Stipulation in the seperate Treaties of Great-Britain and the States-General, by which the Emperor and Empire are at Liberty to accept of Peace on the Terms of the said Project and Declaration, &c. &c.

This Declaration was sign'd by the Ministers of Brandenburgh, Saxony, Saxe-Coburgh, the King of Sweden, as Duke of Deux-Ponts, Brandenburg-Culmbach, Saxe-Gotha, Brunswick-Wolfenbuttel, Brunswic-Zell, Holstein-Glucksta.lt, and Hesse-Cassel: And not satisfy'd with this, they call'd upon the Mediators to require the Catholic Princes of the Empire, to concur with them in their Endeavours to obtain that Justice, which by the said Article was deny'd them: The Mediators, moreover, did not fail to impart this new Demand to the Imperial Embassadors, who signify'd by their Secretary, That they had accordingly apply'd to the Ministers of the said Princes, whose general Answer was, 1. That the Deputation of the Empire being at an End, many of the Deputies already departed, and the rest on the Point of departing, they did not think it advisable to make a fruitless Effort to alter a Treaty already concluded, sign'd, and sent both to their several Principals, and to the Diet of the Empire; more especially at a Time when the French Plenipotentiaries every Moment expected the Ratification on their Side, and when it was probable such a Procedure would endanger the Peace itself: And, 2dly, That on these Considerations, they had submitted it to the Discretion of the Mediators, Whether it was fit for the Imperial Ministers to undertake any such Thing on their own Authority, or even to assemble again in order to deliberate thereon, when it was apparent, That certain Persons A. D. 1697. sought Occasions to impute Things to the said Embassadors, which they, the said Embassadors, would have been glad to have had otherwise dispos'd, &c.

They call upon the Catholic Powers to concur with them.

To gain.

But as this Declaration was far from being satisfactory to the Parties concern'd, so the same Dissatisfaction led them, both to remonstrate and protest against the Manner of conducting the Negotiations, from the Beginning to the End, as being contrary to the Right of voting inherent in the Electors, Princes, and States of the Empire, as also to common Usage, so strictly recommended and enforc'd in all their Instructions, and to the Eighth Article of the Treaty of Osnabrugh.

Their Protest against the Manner of Negotiation.

On the other Hand, the Embassadors of France, having been apply'd to by the Mediators for some Relaxation on the former of these Complaints, took occasion to pronounce, in the most peremptory Manner, That the Peace being sign'd, and the Ratifications ready to be exchang'd, (That of their Master being already in their Hands) They could not give way to the least Alteration, nor even repair to Ryswick, to hear the Proposal of any Alteration: That if the Protestants should continue to insist on any such Thing, They, the said Embassadors, might make some such Proposals to them, as would, perhaps, be less agreeable: And that, upon the whole, the Points in Dispute were of little Moment, and no Infringment of the Treaty of Westphalia.

The French Minister refuses to make any Alteration.

On the 24th of November this cavalier Sentence was thus pronounc'd, and four Days afterwards, the States-General took the following Occasion not only to signify their Acquiescence in it, but even to publish a sort of Apology for it: For Messieurs Heinsius, Dykevelt, and Haaren, the Dutch Plenipotentiaries, who had been order'd to second the Instances of the Protestant Ministers, in the Matter above-specify'd, having reported to the Assembly what they had done in Obedience to those Orders, and the Negative they had receiv'd, proceeded to recite also the Reasons on which the said Negative had been grounded, namely, That his Most Christian Majesty, having been at the Expence of building and endowing several Churches in the Places which he possess'd during the War, and which were now to be restor'd, neither his Conscience nor his Honour would suffer him to give way either to the Demolition of those Churches, or to the Deprivation of those now in possession of them: That as to the rest, his Majesty had no Intention to make any Alteration on the Head of Religion in any of those Places, to the Prejudice of the Treaty of Westphalia: That neither in the Places so to be restor'd, nor in those even in Alsace, which were to remain in his Possession, had his Majesty ever prohibited the Exercise of the Protestant Religion: That the whole of his Intention was, That the Churches so devoted to the Roman-Catholic Religion, should continue so devoted, without any Pretence of trespassing on the Protestant Religion, as exercis'd

A sort of Apology for the Conduct of France in the Eyes of the States-General.

A. D. 1697. exercis'd in the ſame Places: And that the ſaid Plenipotentiaries were concern'd to find, That in ſeveral Places Endeavours had been us'd to give a ſiniſter Interpretation to the Intentions of his ſaid Majeſty: After which, the ſaid Report was taken into Conſideration; and upon the Iſſue of the Debate which enſued, it was reſolved, To give the Thanks of the Aſſembly to the ſaid (Dutch) Plenipotentiaries, for the Pains they had taken in the Affair."

The Conduct of the Proteſtant Powers at Ratiſbon.

The Proteſtant Powers of the Empire notwithſtanding, continued as malcontent as ever; and at Ratiſbon not only endeavour'd to clog the Ratification, with certain Reſerves and Reſtrictions, but ſet forth a general Proteſt, which they call'd, The common Voice of Thoſe of the Evangelic Religion, againſt all that had been done in the whole Courſe of the Negotiation, to the Prejudice of their Rights, Claims, and Intereſts, either in Matter or Manner.

The Peace ratified.

At length, however, the Peace was ratify'd on both Sides: And no ſooner was it ſo done, but the French Plenipotentiaries ſet forth a ſolemn Act of Proteſtation againſt all the Proteſtations which had been made in the Courſe of the Treaty; and in which they declare, in the Name of the King their Maſter, That his Majeſty would not admit of the leaſt Alteration, Omiſſion, Reſtriction, or Reſerve, in any one Article of the ſaid Treaty, either in whole or in part: That he had order'd them to declare, and they did declare accordingly, That all Proteſtations, Conventions, Promiſes, Letters, or other pretended derogatory Acts, either public or private, either before or after the Concluſion of the Peace, (if any ſuch there were) by which it was propos'd to aboliſh, diminiſh, or enfeeble the Senſe or Efficacy of any one Article of the ſaid Treaty, or any Clauſe of any one Article, were, and ſhould continue to be, void and of none Effect; as being contrary to the Conditions accepted, regulated, and agreed for the Re-eſtabliſhment of the Repoſe of Chriſtendom, &c.

A Proteſt of the French Plenipotentiaries againſt all the Proteſts made in the Courſe of the Treaty.

With the ſame Air of Superiority alſo, while the Ferment among the Proteſtant Miniſters of the Empire at Ryſwick was at the higheſt, and without waiting for the Iſſue, as if it was a Matter of no Conſequence, his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty ſent his Mandate to the Archbiſhop of Paris, to the Effect following.

The Moſt Chriſtian King's Letter to the Archbiſhop of Paris, on the Concluſion of the Peace with England, Spain, and Holland.

The happy Succeſſes which God has beſtow'd on my Arms in the Courſe of ſo long a War, could never abate the ſincere Deſire of Peace, which I have always entertain'd; for Peace was the only Point I had in view in every Thing I undertook: Tho' the glorious Atchievements of this Campaign, and the Advantages they promis'd me, might have induc'd me to maintain my Conqueſts, and even to have puſh'd my Pretenſions farther ſtill, I have abandon'd All for that very Reaſon, and made it a Law to myſelf, to ſacrifice the Fruits of my Victories to the Repoſe of Europe: I am ſufficiently recompenc'd for the Price this Moderation will coſt me, by thereby putting a Period to the Calamities inſeperable from War: The Relief which my People will immediately partake of, and the Pleaſure from thence ariſing to me from their Happineſs, will ſufficiently indemnify me for that Sacrifice: And the Splendor of the moſt dazzling Triumphs, could not balance the Glory of rewarding the Zeal of my Subjects, who have all with equal Ardor, and with the utmoſt Perſeverance, laviſh'd both their Wealth and their Blood in my Service: God, who has favour'd the Deſigns he inſpir'd me with, has open'd the Eyes of the Confederates, who, ſeeing the Vanity of their falſe Hopes, and ſmarting with their real Sufferings, have accepted the Conditions I ſo frequently offer'd them. The Treaties with Spain, England, and Holland, have been ratified; and the Ratification of That I have concluded with the Emperor and Empire, will ſoon complete the great Work, ſo important and ſo neceſſary to Europe: But I cannot defer till then, the Teſtimony of thoſe Acknowledgments ſo juſtly due to God, That, after having render'd my Arms ſo many Times victorious, he begins to ſcatter the moſt precious of his Bleſſings thro' my Realm, and to revive a ſolid and ſincere Peace between my Eſtates and thoſe of my Neighbours; on which Occaſion I deſire you would cauſe Te Deum to be ſung, &c."

A. D. 1697.

And again, when the Peace with the Empire was ratify'd, the Language made uſe of in a like Mandate, was as follows, viz.

The ſecond Letter to the ſame Prelate on the Peace with the Emperor.

The Moment appointed by Heaven, to reconcile the Nations, is arriv'd. Europe is at Peace: The Ratification of the Treaty which my Embaſſadors had concluded with thoſe of the Emperor and Empire, has render'd that Peace perfect: Straſburgh, one of the principal Ramparts of the Empire and of Hereſy, forever united to my Crown: The Rhine made the Barrier between France and Germany; and what touches me ſtill more nearly, the Worſhip of the true Religion, authoris'd by ſolemn Stipulation within the very Walls of Sovereigns of a different Religion, are the Advantages of this laſt Treaty:—The Author of ſo many Bleſſings manifeſts himſelf too clearly not to be diſcover'd: And the viſible Characters of his almighty Hand, ſerve as the Seal which he ſeems to have us'd to authenticate my Intentions: Occupy'd from henceforth in propagating his Service throughout my Dominions, and rendering my People happy, I begin with diſcharging the Duty incumbent on me, of offering up my Thankſgivings, &c.

And now, with all theſe Particulars before us, (which our Hiſtorians in general have omitted) concerning the Encroachments of France in the Courſe of the Negotiation, the Submiſſions ſhe exacted, the Complaints thoſe Submiſſions occaſion'd, and the Reſentments they left behind, we may, perhaps, be competent Judges of that Glory and Advantage diſcours'd of by Biſhop Kennet, and alſo of the following more ſplendid Piece of Court-Embroidery left us by Biſhop Burnet.

A. D. 1697. Burnet's Reflections on the Peace.

" The King, by this Peace, concluded the great Deſign of putting a Stop to the Progreſs of the French Arms, which he had conſtantly perſued from his firſt Appearance on the Stage, in the Year 1672. There was not one of the Allies who complain'd, That he had been forgot by him, or wrong'd in the Treaty: Nor had the Deſire of having his Title univerſally acknowledg'd, rais'd any Impatience in him, or made him run into this Peace with any indecent Haſte: The Terms of it were ſtill too much to the Advantage of France; but the Length and Charge of the War had ſo exhauſted the Allies, that the King ſaw the Neceſſity of accepting the beſt Conditions that could be got: It is true, France was more harraſs'd by the War, yet the arbitrary Frame of that Government, made their King the Maſter of the whole Wealth of his People: And the War was manag'd on both Sides, between them and us, with this viſible Difference, That every Man who dealt with the French King was ruin'd by it; whereas, among us, every Man grew rich by his Dealings with the King: And it was not eaſy to ſee how this could be either prevented or puniſhed. The Regard that is ſhewn to the Members of Parliament among us, makes that few Abuſes can be enquir'd into or diſcover'd: And the King found his Reign grow ſo unacceptable to his People, by the Continuance of the War, that he ſaw the Neceſſity of coming to a Peace: The States were under the ſame Preſſure; they were heavier charged, and ſuffer'd more by the War than the Engliſh: The French got, indeed, nothing by a War which they had moſt perfidiouſly begun: They were fore'd to return to the Peace of Nimeguen; Pignerol and Briſac, which Cardinal Richlieu had conſider'd as the Keys of Italy and Germany, were now parted with: And all that baſe Practice, of claiming ſo much, under the Head of Re-Unions and Dependencies, was abandon'd: The Dutchy of Lorrain was alſo entirely reſtor'd."

Corrected. Now Lorrain was not entirely reſtor'd: France, on the contrary, could never be induc'd to part with the Reſerves ſhe had eſtabliſh'd by the Peace of Nimeguen: It was alſo reſtor'd in a defenceleſs State: It was to remain forever inveſted with the Dominions of France, and conſequently could no more be conſider'd as a Member of the Germanic Body: Pignerol, the Key of Italy, was not reſtor'd to Savoy in Virtue of this Treaty, as the Biſhop has unfairly inſinuated: Straſburgh open'd as wide an Entrance into the Empire, as Briſac; and an Author, who was a perpetual Advocate for King William, declares, " That to leave Straſburgh in the Hands of France, was tacitly to yield her all that belongs to the Empire beyond the Rhine, from Sundgaw to the Palatinate:" The ten Cities in Alſace, together with their Dependencies, were never held in Sovereignty by France before: That all that baſe Practice on the Head of Re-unions was not abandon'd, appears by the Reſerve made by the Moſt Chriſtian King in Flanders, of Eighty-two Towns and Villages, to ſay no more: It is true, indeed, France did make ſome very conſiderable Evacuations in favour of Spain; but then it was with a View to a Ten-fold-Retribution, which even King William himſelf was no Stranger to: And, laſtly, tho' his Majeſty took care to have his own Title acknowledg'd, he utterly forgot to obtain the ſame Favour for the Proteſtant Succeſſion, in the Perſon of the Princeſs of Denmark.

A. D.

" The French, however, who did not enter into the Views of their Monarch, ſays Kennet, were ſo little pleas'd with the Treaty, that they made very ſevere Reflections on the Makers of it, whom they traduc'd in their Lampoons, which were publicly ſung in Paris, and over all the Kingdom of France; while the Courage, Reſolution, and Wiſdom of King William, to whom this great Work was principally owing, were celebrated and admir'd throughout all the World."

" It was the Admiration of thoſe eminent Virtues, according to the ſame Author, which drew the Czar of Muſcovy, like the Queen of Sheba to hear the Wiſdom of Solomon, out of his own Dominions, to receive his Majeſty's Inſtructions."—Such Flatterers are Court-Divines!—But if the ſetting Matters of Fact in their own natural Form, and their own natural Light, be the great End and Uſe of Hiſtory, it muſt be declar'd, in contradiction to this Panegyriſt, That the Czar's chief Purpoſe in viſiting Holland and England, in Company with his own Embaſſadors, was to learn the Arts of Ship-building and Navigation, which according to the Evidence of Biſhop Burnet, King William, who did not underſtand thoſe Matters, could not teach him: And it is certain, that, during his Stay in thoſe Countries, he employ'd much more of his Time with Mechanics than with Courtiers; the Former of whom, as the moſt uſeful, he eſteem'd the moſt honorable, Beings. The Czar of Muſcovy viſits Holland and England.

But to procede: The King having made all the Diſpoſitions in the Republic, which were held ſuitable to the Criſis, on the 13th of November, O. S. embark'd for England, under the Convoy of an Engliſh Squadron, commanded neither by the firſt Lord of the Admiralty, Ruſſel, nor by his own Admiral, Rooke, but by Sir Cloudeſley Shovel, on whom the Honour fell, not becauſe he was a good Seaman, but becauſe he was no Courtier; and conſequently could take no Advantage of that Opportunity, to the Prejudice of his Superiors. On the 14th his Majeſty landed at Margate; and having lain one Night at Canterbury, and another at Greenwich, on the 16th made a ſort of triumphal Entry into London: (If a Triumph can be underſtood without a Victory; or if it can be otherwiſe underſtood, That the Triumph then celebrated, was a Triumph over the King his Uncle and Father-in-Law, at whoſe Expence alone his Trophies in ſuch Caſe were to be erected:) The City, however, gave him a ſplendid Reception; and the Populace were not ſparing of their Acclamations: The next Day a ſo- The King returns to England. Makes a ſort of triumphal Entry into London.

lemn

A. D. 1697. A Year of Thanksgiving.

lemn Thanksgiving was appointed by Proclamation, "To acknowledge the great Goodness of God, in putting an End to the late War by the Conclusion of a Peace, on such a Foundation as, by the Blessing of God, might prove effectual to procure a firm and lasting Tranquility to Europe:" And for the whole Season afterwards, the Gazette was burden'd with such Addresses of Praise and Congratulation, as could not but shock his Majesty's natural Modesty, if it was of so sensible and delicate a Kind as Burnet would have us believe.

A Parliament in Ireland.

A Parliament had been held in Ireland during the King's Absence, by the new Lords Justices, who had granted 150,000 l. for the Discharge of the Debts on the Civil and military Lists, agreeable to the Hint they had receiv'd of the King's Expectations therein; (for the Language us'd to that Parliament was, The King expects, &c.) and had conform'd in all other Respects to every other material Point requir'd of them, as became a People who were on every Occasion told, That they ow'd more to the Goodness, Valour, and Virtue of their Deliverer, than either They or their Children would ever be able to pay.

The Parliament of England had been summon'd to meet on the 23d of November, for the Dispatch of Business, by the Lords of the Regency: But the King had staid so much longer abroad than was expected, and the Crisis was so delicate, that a longer Time was necessary for those Cabinet Deliberations and Dispositions, which were necessary by way of Preparatory to the first Session after a general Peace.

The great Controversy touching a Standing Army.

A Pamphlet which the Ministry had writ, and caus'd to be publish'd, under the Title of A Letter, balancing the Necessity of keeping a Land Force in Times of Peace, with the Dangers that may follow it, had given a general Alarm to all those Lovers of their Country, whom Court-Favours had not converted into Court-Prostitutes: And the most able Authors (as Trenchard, Moyle, and honest Samuel Johnson, tho' himself a Court-Pensioner) had undertaken to answer it.

The Balancing Letter.

The Balancing Letter, as it came to be call'd, was a very artificial Composition: The Writer, (said to be Lord Sommers) tho' a profess'd Advocate for a Land-Force, affected to speak with Horror of a Standing-Army: "Any Man, said He, who would pretend to give a Jealousy of the Nation to the King, and suggest, That he could not be safe among them, without he were environ'd with Guards and Troops, as it was in the late Reigns, ought to be abhorr'd by every true Englishman, by every Man who loves Liberty and his Country." But then he would not suppose, that a reasonable Force kept up from Year to Year, could be call'd a Standing-Army: He insisted on the Necessity of keeping up such a Force, from the Alteration which Europe had undergone in its Military Establishments; from the Probability, That France would keep up a great Army; from the Vicinity of that Army; from the Ease of the Traject; from the expos'd Condition of our Ports, Rivers, and, in general, of the whole Country; from the Irrationality and Impolicy of relying merely on our Fleets for our Preservation; and from the Impracticability of rendering our Militia sufficiently useful. These were his general Topics; and in handling them, he affected an Air of Ingenuity, by saying, "I will not argue with you so unfairly, as to urge much the Reasons that we have of trusting the King: For how much soever may be said on this Head; either from his Temper, his Circumstances, his Interest, and the Course of his past Life, either with regard to the United Provinces, or to us here in England; and with how much Reason soever this might be prosecuted, yet I will not lay much Weight upon it; for it is not just to press an Argument that puts another Man to pain when he goes to answer it."

A. D. 1697.

Trenchard's Argument.

Trenchard, on the other Hand, set forth An Argument, shewing, That a Standing-Army is inconsistent with a free Government, and absolutely destructive to the Constitution of the English Monarchy; zested with a Bitterness which was, in general, extremely grateful to the Palate of the Times: To expose, for Example, the inconsistent and profligate Behaviour of the Whigs in Power, these very Expressions were made use of: "And here I cannot avoid taking notice of some Gentlemen, who, a few Years since, were the pretended Patriots of their Country, who had nothing in their Mouths but the sacred Name of Liberty; who, in the late Reigns, could hardly afford the King the Prerogative that was due to him, and which was absolutely necessary to put in motion the Machine of our Government, and to make the Springs and Wheels of it act naturally, and perform their Function: I say these Gentlemen, that could not with Patience hear of the King's ordinary Guards, can now discourse familiarly of 20,000 Men to be maintain'd in Time of Peace: And the odious Excuse they give for this infamous Apostacy is, That if they should not gratify the Court in this modest Request, another Party may be caress'd, who will grant This, or any Thing else which is ask'd; and then they say, Matters will be much worse: As if arbitrary Government was a different Thing in their Hands from what it is in others; or that the Lineaments and Features of Tyranny, would become graceful and lovely, when they are its Valets de Chambre, &c."

Of the Uprightness of the King's Purposes, many handsome Things indeed were said; but then sufficient Care was taken to insinuate, That every Compliment paid to him, every other King would exact, and Pretences altogether as plausible, would be found to gratify him: So that a Standing-Army once establish'd, was establish'd for ever; and the Records of every Country, and of every Age, had shewn, That the Establishment of a Military Force, had ever been fatal to Liberty.

A free People, it was moreover suggested, had a Right to maintain that Freedom by the Sword, against the Encroachments and Oppressions

A. D. 1697. Oppreſſions of their perfidious Governors, which it would be impoſſible for them to do, if the Sword was taken out of their Hands, and given to an Army of Mercenaries, which was the very Thing to be effectuated by the Meaſure in queſtion: "Now, I ſay, continues our Author, If the King has 20,000 Men before Hand with us, or much leſs than half that Number, the People can make no Effort to defend their Liberties, without the Aſſiſtance of a foreign Power, which is a Remedy moſt commonly as bad as the Diſeaſe: And if we have not a Power within ourſelves to defend our Laws, we are no (free) Government: For England being a ſmall Country, with few ſtrong Towns in it, and Thoſe in the King's Hands, the Nobility diſarm'd by the Deſtruction of the Tenures, and the Militia not to be rais'd but by the King's Command, there can be no Force levied in any Part of England, but muſt be deſtroy'd in its Infancy by a few Regiments: For what will three or four thouſand naked and unarm'd Men ſignify againſt as many Troops of mercenary Soldiers? What if they ſhould come into the Field, and ſay, You muſt chuſe theſe and theſe Men your Repreſentatives, where is your Choice? What if they ſhould ſay Parliaments are ſeditious and factious Aſſemblies, and therefore ought to be aboliſh'd, What is become of your Freedom? Or if they ſhould encompaſs the Parliament Houſe, and threaten if they do not ſurrender up their Government, they will put them to the Sword, What is become of the old Engliſh Conſtitution? Theſe Things may be, and have been, done in ſeveral Parts of the World: What is it that cauſes the Tyranny of the Turks at this Day, but Servants in Arms? What is it that preſerved the glorious Commonwealth of Rome, but Swords in the Hands of the Citizens?"

Again, afterwards, "I dare ſpeak with the greater Aſſurance upon this Subject, having the Authority of as great Men as the World hath produc'd for my Juſtification. Machiavel ſpends ſeveral Chapters to prove, That no Prince or State ought to ſuffer any of their Subjects to make War their Profeſſion; and that no Nation can be ſecure with any other Forces than a ſettled Militia. My Lord Bacon, in ſeveral Places, bears his Teſtimony againſt a Standing-Army, and particularly tells us, That a mercenary Army is fitteſt to invade a Country, but a Militia to defend it, becauſe the Firſt have Eſtates to get, and the Latter to protect: Mr. Harrington hath founded his whole Oceana on a trained Militia: And I have lately read a French Book called, A Hiſtory of the Politics of France, which ſays, (e) Enfin, ſi on veut ruiner les Anglois, il ſuffit, de les obliger a tenir des Troupes ſur pied: Nay, I believe no Author ever treated of a free Government, who did not expreſs his Abhorrence of an Army: For, (as my Lord Bacon ſays) whoever doth uſe them, tho' he may ſpread his Feathers for a while, he will mew them ſoon after; And, raiſe them with what Deſign you pleaſe, yet, like the Weſt-India-Dogs in Boccalini, in a little Time, They will certainly turn Sheep-Biters." A. D.

And, laſtly, he ſays, "I will make one Aſſertion more, viz. That the moſt likely way of reſtoring King James, is maintaining a Standing Army to keep him out."

A great Variety of Adventurers for Court-Rewards, undertook to anſwer this Pamphlet, and ſurpaſs'd Leſtrange himſelf in Adulations, Servilities, and Proſtitutions of all Sorts, tho' they fell far ſhort of him in Acuteneſs and Ingenuity.

(f) One of them, in particular, made a Sacrifice of Decency itſelf to the Royal Cauſe of a Standing Army, which had been held ſuch a Grievance in the former Reigns, tho' now become a Requiſite to good Government, under that Leaf-gilding, with Conſent of Parliament; and treated the Militia, under any Regulations whatſoever, with more Contempt than it had ever been treated with, even in the Former Reigns: Then as to a Reliance on our Fleets, he not only pronounc'd it a filly Expedient, but argued, That our Liberties were altogether as much expos'd under a Rabble of Tars, theſe were his Expreſſions, as under an Army of Muſqueteers: As often as the King's Perſon, the King's Character, &c. occurr'd in the Courſe of the Diſpute, he makes no Difficulty to call it downright Saucineſs, to make the leaſt Inference to his Diſadvantage: And in his Concluſion, expreſſes himſelf as follows, "To me it ſeems one of the moſt impudent Actions that ever was ſuffer'd in this Age, that a private Perſon ſhould thus attack the King, after all that he has done for the Preſervation of our Liberties, and the eſtabliſhing our Peace; after all the Hazards of his Perſon and Family, and the Fatigues of a bloody War, to be repreſented, at his Return, as a Perſon now as much to be fear'd as King James was, to be truſted no more than a Madman, and the like, before he ſo much as knows, Whether there ſhall be any Diſpute about the Matter or no? Has the King demanded a Standing Army? Has he propos'd it? Does he inſiſt upon it? 'Tis a Sign what a Government we live under; and 'tis a Sign what Spirit governs ſome Men, who will abuſe the moſt indulgent Goodneſs. It had been but Time to have wrote ſuch an Invective upon the King and the Army, when we had found the Parliament of England ſtruggling to diſband them, and the King reſolv'd to maintain them."

On the other Hand, Mr. Johnſon, who entered the Liſts againſt the Author of the Balancing Letter, (tho' known to be one of the Miniſters) with the Spirit of a Man who had gone ſuch Lengths in eſtabliſhing Revolution-Principles,

(e) I. e. The Way to ruin the Engliſh, is to oblige them to keep a Standing Army.

(f) In a Pamphlet call'd, Reflections on a late ſcandalous Pamphlet, entitled An Argument, &c.

A.D. 1697. Principles, for the Sake of the Governed, not of the Governors, thus boldly, ſhrewdly, ſenſibly, and diſintereſtedly argued.

"The Nation has already truſted the King with all that ever they had to truſt him with, all the Rights of an Engliſh King, and the Imperial Crown of this Realm, with all the Dominions, Juriſdictions, Prerogatives, and Pre-eminencies belonging thereto: And when the Parliament inveſted his Majeſty with this Regality, he was pleas'd to accept of it, as the greated Truſt they could repoſe in him. But the New Truſt this Letter inſiſts upon, is an Army which can overpower and conquer the Nation: For it is to be ſuch a Force as can withſtand an Invaſion, which all the Nation beſides is not able to do; that is to ſay, it can beat Thoſe who can beat us, and, therefore, it can much more beat us: So that it is a Force which commands all our Lives, Liberties, and Eſtates: And this Power is to be put into the King's Hands; and conſequently the whole Nation is to be at his Diſcretion: This is the Truſt: Now never trouble your Head more about it, nor about extolling the King, nor be in Pain for your Anſwerer, How he will get over the Argument of the King's Merit, to have this Truſt and entire Confidence put in him: For we have higher Thoughts of the King than you have, and particularly this honorable Notion of him which you have not, That he deſpiſes and ſcorns your little Flatteries: And yet we believe, That he does not deſerve the Truſt, nor can manage it faithfully; that he has neither Merit nor Capacity to entitle him to ſo entire a Confidence: No, not if he had all the Perfections upon Earth, as he has a great many; nay, if he were an Angel, he were not fit for this Truſt: For ſuch an abſolute Reſignation of ourſelves, is only proper to be made to God."

Some Reflections on the whole.

Let this ſuffice for the firſt Stage of this important Controverſy, which ſounded ſo much the ſtranger in the Ears of the Public, becauſe the very Perſons who now inſiſted the moſt ſtrenuouſly on this Anti-conſtitutional Meaſure, had been formerly the moſt violent Oppoſers of it: It is true they urg'd in Juſtification of this Change of Opinion, That the Times were alter'd: That War was become a Trade, which none could be Maſters of, but ſuch as had ſerv'd an Apprenticeſhip to it: That France kept large Standing-Armies on foot, &c. But theſe Alterations had not obtain'd during the Interval in which they had chang'd their Opinion: War was as much a Trade in the Reign of Charles II. and James II. as it was then become: France alſo kept large Armies on foot in thoſe Times, and for a ſhort Period, was actually at War with us, in confederacy with the Dutch, and while we were at War with Denmark too: And if the Argument was of any Force at all, it reach'd much farther than the Broachers of it were willing to acknowledge: For the French Government was become a Government of Will and Pleaſure, inſtead of Laws: The King was Maſter of the Lives and Fortunes of his People: And to keep pace with him on this Hypotheſis, the King of England ſhould have been ſet free from the Shackles of the Engliſh Conſtitution too: But to ſay all in a Word: A Deliverance, was but a Half-Deliverance, which the People themſelves, could not be truſted to defend, againſt any Invaders whatſoever: And this very Meaſure demonſtrated in the cleareſt and ſtrongeſt Manner, That all They had gain'd by the Revolution, was a Precedent in favour of Reſiſtance, which they would never be permitted to have the Benefit of any more. A.D. 1697.

But to proceed from Opinions to Facts: On the 3d of December the Seſſion was open'd, with the following Speech to both Houſes.

The King's Speech in Parliament.

"The War which I enter'd into by the Advice of my People, is, by the Bleſſing of God, and their zealous and affectionate Aſſiſtance, brought to the End we all propos'd, an honourable Peace; which I was willing to conclude, not ſo much to eaſe myſelf from any Trouble or Hazard, as to free the Kingdom from the continuing Burthen of an expenſive War: I am heartily ſorry my Subjects will not at firſt find all that Relief from the Peace, which I could wiſh, and they may expect; but the Funds intended for the laſt Year's Service, have fallen ſhort of anſwering the Sums for which they were given, ſo that there remain conſiderable Deficiencies to be provided for: There is a Debt upon account of the Fleet and the Army: The Revenues of the Crown have been anticipitated by my Conſent, for the public Uſes, ſo that I am wholly deſtitute of Means to ſupport the Civil Liſt; and I can never diſtruſt you will ſuffer this to turn to my Diſadvantage, but will provide for me during my Life, in ſuch a Manner as may be for my Honour, and for the Honour of the Government. Our Naval Force being encreas'd to near double to what it was at my Acceſſion to the Crown, the Charge of maintaining it will be proportionably augmented; and it is certainly neceſſary for the Intereſt and Reputation of England, to have always a great Strength at Sea: The Circumſtances of Affairs Abroad are ſuch, that I think myſelf oblig'd to tell you my Opinion, That, for the PRESENT, England cannot be ſafe without a Land Force; and I hope we ſhall not give thoſe that mean us ill, the Opportunity of effecting that under the Notion of a Peace, which they could not bring to paſs by a War: I doubt not but you, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, will take thoſe Particulars into your Conſideration, in ſuch a Manner as to provide the neceſſary Supplies, which I do earneſtly recommend to you. My Lords and Gentlemen, That which I do moſt delight to think of, and am beſt pleaſed to own, is, That I have all the Proofs of my People's Affection that a Prince can deſire: And I take this Occaſion to give you the moſt ſolemn Aſſurance, That as I never had, ſo I never will, nor can have, any Intereſt ſeperate from theirs: I eſteem it one of the greateſt Advantages of the Peace, that I ſhall now have Leiſure to rectify ſuch Corruptions or Abuſes, as may have crept into

A. D. 1697. any Part of the Administration during the War, and effectually to discourage Prophaneness and Immorality; and I shall imploy my Thoughts in promoting Trade, and advancing the Happiness and flourishing Estate of the Kingdom. I shall conclude with telling you, That as I have, with the Hazard of every thing, rescu'd your Religion, Laws and Liberties, when they were in the extremest Danger, so I shall place the Glory of my Reign in preserving them entire, and leaving them so to Posterity."

Various Opinions concerning it.

Thus the confident Queries before-cited, were answer'd from the Throne in the Affirmative: The King did propose a Standing-Army: He did demand it: He did insist upon it: Even Kennet, Boyer, Tindal, and the whole Herd of implicite Followers of each other in the same beaten Track, acknowledge, The Commons were variously affected by this Speech: Some, say They, thought some Expressions in it too magisterial; others seem'd to be offended at his Majesty's putting them in mind of what he had done for the Nation: Others again distrusted the great Promises of what he would do for them; and many others began to be jealous of what he had told them, That England could not be safe without a Land-Force: As if his Majesty meant to keep a Standing-Army to invade their Liberties, in the Defence of which the Nation had spent so vast a Stock of Blood and Treasure: And Burnet, to the same Effect, says, "The House of Commons carry'd their Jealousy of a Standing-Army so high, that they would not bear the Motion; nor did they like the way the King took of offering them his Opinion in that Point: This seem'd a Prescription to them, and might bias some in the Counsels they were to offer the King, and be a Bar to the Freedom of Debate."

But there was nothing new in his Majesty's reminding the Nation of his Services: He had done it almost on every public Occasion; while the Nation, in their Replies, were too modest to make a like Display of the Returns they had made him: And none of these Writers speak out in such Terms as the Occasion would warrant.

The King, by the Recognition of France, apparently thought himself as firmly establish'd in the Throne, as any of his Predecessors; and from thence inferr'd, He might talk in as high a Strain.

His Speech exempt'd with Tone of King James's.

King James, in his two Speeches to Parliament, had made the same Demand: In the First he demanded the Settlement of his Revenue during Life: And in the Second, he declar'd, That the Militia were not to be depended upon; and that nothing but a good Force of well disciplin'd Troops in constant pay, could defend us from such as, either at Home or Abroad, were dispos'd to disturb us. And if King James made use of somewhat broader Language, King William was not far behind him; seeing, that, in his Speech, he seems to foreclose all Debate on the Army-Point, by recommending to the Commons to consider it in such a Manner, as to provide the necessary Supplies. King William had not only the same (g) Adviser in his Bosom that King James had, but, as we have seen, had in the most public Manner acknowledg'd him: Nay, Bishop Burnet informs us, Lord Sunderland made no Secret of his having given the King this Advice: For, says He, He had argued with many on the Necessity of keeping up a greater Force: And the good Bishop seems to be so taken with him at this Crisis, that he bestows the following Panegyric upon him, "During the Time of his Credit, Things had been carry'd on with more Spirit and better Success than before: He had gain'd such an Ascendant over the King, that he brought him to agree to some Things, that few expected he would have yielded to: He manag'd the public Affairs in both Houses with so much Steddiness, and so good a Conduct, that he had procur'd to himself a greater Measure of Esteem, than he had in any of the former Parts of his Life."

But both Burnet and all our other unpolitical Historians, either pass entirely over a very remarkable Incident, which happen'd on the Third Day of the Session, or else barely mention it, as if was a Matter of so little Moment, as not to deserve Enquiry or Consideration: And this was the Resignation of the Secretary's Seals by Sir William Trumbal, and the giving them to Mr. Vernon, who had hitherto serv'd as Under-Secretary to the Duke of Shrewsbury, and was, in truth, the Man of Business under his Grace's Name and Patronage.

Trumbal, as we have seen, had acted in all Things like the Creature of Lord Portland, who had been for some Time in the Wane of his Favour with the King: For his Majesty, by the (b) joint Importunities of Sunderland and Mrs. Villiers, a Lady who had been particularly distinguish'd by his Majesty, both of whom hated and despis'd Portland, had cast his Eyes on another of his Countrymen, one Van Keppel, a Gentleman of Guelderland, whom he had first taken into his Service as a Page, and had sometimes employ'd as his Amanuensis, and upon whom at length he shower'd his (c) Favours

M. S.

Lord Portland out of Favour.

Van Keppel.

(g) Lord Sunderland.

(b) And yet, notwithstanding the Success of this Confederacy against Lord Portland, it appears, not only by the Trust repos'd in him by the King in the secret Conferences between his Lordship and Marshal Boufflers, but by many other similar Strains of Confidence, That he still retain'd as much of the King's Esteem as ever, tho' not of his Affection: Of this we have a Proof in the Letters of his Majesty to the Earl of Godolphin, (who tho' a Foreigner, had the Management in Ireland, both as one of the Lords Justices, and Commander in Chief of the Forces) made public by Mr. Tindal: For, as Lord Godolphin had imparted a Project to the King for keeping up twenty Battalions of Infantry, four Regiments of Dragoons, and eighteen Troops of Horse, (by reducing the Pay of the Officers, breaking most of the Companies on the Irish Establishment, and replacing them by Corps of more Estimation from Flanders) which his Majesty both approv'd and adopted, so the King declares in the said Letters, That he had imparted it to none but Lord Portland, and directs him to correspond with the said Lord in the Manner as the only Person authoris'd to communicate his Majesty's Intentions to him.

(c) He had been created Earl of Albemarle, and Knight of the Garter; was Master of the Robes, Captain of the First Troops of Guards, and General of the Horse Troops in the Dutch Service.

A.D. 1697. as ſo many Teſtimonies, That he was the Man whom the King delighted to honour. Lord Portland, like other Favourites, was impatient of a Rival; and yet by making his Maſter uneaſy with his repeated Complaints, only facilitated his Advancement: The King grew more tenacious of his Choice by the Oppoſition it met with: And that he might have an honorable Pretence for removing the Complainant out of the way, he not only told him, It was neceſſary for his Service, That he ſhould go to France in Quality of his Embaſſador-extraordinary, but, to his great Mortification, would accept of no Excuſe: As, therefore, the affected Compliment that was paid him, only ſerv'd to redouble his Diſguſt, it was not thought adviſable to leave him in Poſſeſſion, by the Means of Trumbal, of ſuch a Province of Buſineſs as the Secretary's Office: So Trumbal was remov'd: And that Vernon (who was choſen to be his Succeſſor, as a Man excellently well qualify'd to be the Drudge of Buſineſs, and yet not of ſuch perſonal Eminence as to aſpire to any Share of the Lead) might be detach'd from his former Principal, who was rather endur'd than truſted, he was exalted to this high Poſt, without his Grace's Knowledge or Participation.

The Former firſt Embaſſade to France againſt his Will.

Vernon made Secretary of State in the Room of Trumbal.

This, therefore, was the general State of the Cabinet, at the Commencement of the Seſſion: Sunderland, who was equally obnoxious both to Whig and Tory, had the King's Ear: Keppel had his Heart: Shrewſbury and Vernon, the two Secretaries, ſeem'd to belong to the Whigs; but the Former, tho' in Place, had no Confidence; and the Latter was retain'd for the King's Purpoſes only: Pembroke, the Privy-Seal, was ſatisfy'd with whatever Share of Power was allotted him: Devonſhire, the Lord-Steward, was more a Courtier than a Statеſman: And as to the Chancellor Sommers, the firſt Lord of the Admiralty, Orford, and Montagu Chancellor of the Exchequer, (for Godolphin, as yet firſt Commiſſioner, was entirely out of the Queſtion) tho' not over-ſatisfy'd with each-other, They were nevertheleſs united with Shrewſbury againſt Sunderland; tho' it is aſſerted the Latter (Montagu) ow'd his Riſe to Sunderland's Countenance and Recommendation, and, out of the Ferment of the Seſſion, reſolv'd to convince his Majeſty of their ſuperior Importance.

General State of the Cabinet.

Accordingly, when the Speech was taken into conſideration by the Commons, the Addreſs in Acknowledgment was ſo equivocally drawn up, as neither to give the King any Satisfaction in either of the Demands he had made, nor yet to give him the leaſt Opportunity of ſhewing any Diſſatisfaction with his Undertakers among them:—On the contrary, they gave it the moſt courtly Turn they could, conſiſtent with ſuch Reſerves; altho' they confin'd their Aſſurances of Aſſiſtance to Generals only:—But theſe were their very Words.

Commons Addreſs.

"We your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Commons in Parliament aſſembled, who have ſo frequently waited on your Majeſty with the Tender of our Aſſiſtance for carrying on the War, come now to congratulate your Majeſty upon the happy Concluſion of it, in a Peace ſo honorable and advantageous to the Nation, as ſufficiently juſtifies the Wiſdom of the Commons in adviſing, and your Majeſty's Conduct in the Proſecution of it. A.D. 1697.

The Proſpect of the Benefits your People will receive from this Peace, is very pleaſing: The Honour your Majeſty has reſtor'd to England, of holding the Balance of Europe, gives your Subjects great Content: But what your Commons are moſt affected and delighted with is, That your Majeſty's ſacred Perſon will now be ſecure, from thoſe many and great Dangers, to which you have ſo often expos'd it for our Sakes: Nothing being ſo evident, as that your Majeſty's Return in Safety, was a Bleſſing more welcome to your People than Peace, and receiv'd with greater Demonſtrations of Joy.

We, therefore, with Hearts full of Affection, Duty, and Gratitude, do aſſure your Majeſty, in the Name of all the Commons of England, That this Houſe will be ever ready to aſſiſt and ſupport your Majeſty, who, by putting a Period to the War, has confirm'd us in the quiet Poſſeſſion of our Rights and Liberties, and ſo fully completed the glorious Work of our Deliverance."

His Majeſty did not, however, recede from the Point, as appears by his Reply, which was as follows.

"Gentlemen,

Nothing that relates to the Peace pleaſes me ſo much, as the Satisfaction you have in it: And as you have aſſiſted me in the War, beyond all Expreſſion, I do not doubt but you will be as zealous in maintaining the Peace." King's Anſwer.

To maintain the Peace, according to his Majeſty's Senſe, was to continue the Army; not, indeed, upon the Eſtabliſhment which had been ſubmitted to during the War, (for ten Regiments of Engliſh Foot had been diſbanded, and two of Dutch Horſe, which had been quarter'd in England in Plenty, Eaſe, and Safety, were ſent home) but, nevertheleſs, on ſuch an Eſtabliſhment, as had never been heard of amongſt us, in Time of Peace, before, except when King James, under the Direction of the ſame Lord Sunderland, was furniſhing his Enemies with thoſe Matters of Complaint, which, in the Fulneſs of Time, brought on the Revolution: For his ſetting up an Army in Time of Peace, was then reckon'd one of his moſt crying Sins; and as ſuch was ſet forth in the Declaration of Rights, tho' Care was inſidiouſly taken, even in that ſacred Inſtrument, to beſpeak the ſame Meaſure of Miſ-Government, by inſerting thoſe deluſive Words, without Conſent of Parliament; as if the Word Parliament contain'd a Charm, which could convert Poiſon itſelf into an univerſal Antidote. General Remarks on the King's Demand of a Standing-Army.

But even the King himſelf, in his own Declaration, when bidding for the Affection and Confidence of the People, as Prince of Orange, had ſet forth, That his great Purpoſe was to ſettle their Liberties on ſuch a Foundation, that no Danger ſhould remane of their relapſing into Slavery: And that as ſoon as This was done, he would ſend back all

A.D. 1697. all his foreign Forces: And yet he was now contending not only for a Standing-Army, which was incompatible with the Security of thoſe Liberties, but for ſuch an Intermixture of Foreigners amongſt them, as (k) aggravated, out of Meaſure, the Jealouſy which from ſuch a Variety of Cauſes had taken Poſſeſſion of the Public: For of theſe Foreigners, he had one Troop of Horſe, conſiſting of 220 Men, and one Regiment of Body-Guards, conſiſting of four Battalions, or 2670 Men: Theſe were Dutch: He had, alſo, one Scotch Regiment of 1656 Men: Two Regiments of Dragoons, conſiſting of about 1400 Men, and three of Foot, conſiſting of almoſt 3000; all French Refugees, who had no other Dependence but on him; and, with a very little Court-Management, might, in Proceſs of Time, have been brought to ſerve for ſuch Prætorian Bands, as ſerv'd the worſt Purpoſes of the worſt Roman Tyrants; or the Turkiſh Janiſaries, who have no Property but their Swords, nor Relation to or Connection with, any one of the human Species, but the Officers who diſcipline, and the Lord-paramount, who pays and commands them.

And as the King, in the Time of his Courtſhip to the People, had thus ſolemnly renounc'd all military Support, ſo the two Parties which divided the Bulk of the People into Whigs and Tories, had ſeverally declar'd their Averſion to any ſuch Anti-conſtitutional Meaſure in the ſtrongeſt Terms: The Tories, when King James ſtickled for an Army, would hear of nothing but the Militia; and the Whigs, in the Reign preceding that, had in a ſolemn Vote maintain'd, That there was no Security for the Nation againſt a Standing-Army, unleſs the Life-Guards were torn up by the Roots.

Proceedings in the Committee thereon.

Thus, when the Matter came to be debated in the Committee of the whole Houſe, December 10, the Anti-Courtiers had Authority as well as Reaſon on their Side; and the only Fault they were guilty of, was in waving the Militia Point, and admitting the Propoſition of an Army: For by ſuch Admiſſion they adopted the Thing, and made the Opening for all thoſe additional Encroachments which Cuſtom and Endurance have render'd familiar ſince.

Which reſolves to diſband all Forces rais'd ſince the Year 80.

After much Altercation, the Queſtion firſt ſtated was, Whether all the Forces rais'd ſince the Year 80, ſhould be diſbanded; and this was carry'd without a Diviſion: The Miniſters in the Houſe, either thinking, They had obtain'd enough at once, in obtaining the Admiſſion of an Army of any Size, on any Terms whatſoever, or elſe being unable to make any efficient Effort, for want of a good Underſtanding among themſelves: For, as we have already obſerv'd, the Whigs in Power were as much for lowering Sunderland, as for eſtabliſhing themſelves; and the more Difficulty he had to ſurmount, ſo much the higher Value they could ſet on their own Services.

The next Day, however, when the Report was to be made from the Houſe in Committee to the Houſe, They came with a Court-Expedient in their Mouths to enlarge the Baſis they had laid: For, without pretending to oppoſe the Vote of the Day before, they only deſir'd it might be recommitted, under Pretence, That the King was reſtrain'd by it, to the old Tory Regiments, (for ſo we find them call'd) which, it was thereby inſinuated, he could not ſafely rely on: But then they had not the Confidence to urge, That thoſe Regiments were not ſufficient in point of Numbers for the Service expected from them: On the contrary, if Mr. Trenchard's Account of the Debate is to be depended upon, as it certainly is, Some of them acknowledg'd, That the King's Eſtabliſhment in the Year 80, which was the Eſtabliſhment in debate, was too large; and none of them, either in public or private, pretended to be for enlarging it. But whatſoever their real Purpoſe was, they miſcarry'd in it: For the Anti-Courtiers maintain'd their Point, on a Diviſion of the Houſe, by 185 Voices againſt 148; of which 148 it was ſaid, 116 had Places.

A.D. 1698.

Motion for Recommitting over-ruled.

State Tracts, Temp. Gull. III. Vol. I. p. 666.

"This was a thorough Victory, continues Mr. Trenchard, and requir'd great Skill and Addreſs to retrieve: The Fears of France were again multiply'd; and it was ſaid, There was a private Article, That King James was to leave France, which the French refus'd to perform; that Boufflers and the Earl of Portland (for, it ſeems, we were the firſt to pay the Compliments uſual upon a Peace) had given one another the Lye; that ſome of the Latter's Retinue had been kill'd; that the French Embaſſador was ſtopp'd; the King of Spain dead; and more to this Purpoſe. The Club was ſet up at the R—: Great Applications made; the Commiſſion of the Exciſe was declar'd to be broke, (by which nine Commiſſioners Places were to be diſpos'd of, and above forty Perſons nam'd for them) and many of the Country Gentlemen were gone home. Thus recruited, they were ready for a new Encounter: And ſince, by the Rules of the Houſe, they could not ſet aſide the former Vote directly, they try'd to do it by a Side-wind; which was by moving, That Directions might be given to the Committee of Ways and Means, to conſider of a Supply for Guards and Garriſons: But the other Side, to obviate this, offer'd theſe Words as an Amendment, viz. According to the Vote of December 11.

Rumors propagated without Doors, to excite a Change of Sentiments within.

This Matter was much labour'd; and the Gentlemen that were againſt the Army explan'd themſelves, and declar'd, They were not for obliging the King to the Regiments in 80; but that they only inſiſted on the Number, and he might chuſe what Regiments he pleas'd. By this Means they carry'd it; but not without great Oppoſition, (tho' I preſume, from none of thoſe Gentlemen who declar'd in all Places, They were for recommitting (k) Of which he complains in theſe Words to Lord Galway, "I aſſure you I am very much troubled to find Things here ſo high againſt the poor Refugees.

A. D. 1697. mitting the former Vote only for the Reasons before given.) Besides; They were forc'd to explane themselves out of a considerable Part of it; for they allow'd the King the Dutch Regiments, and the Tangerines (meaning Those which, in King Charles's Time, had compos'd the Garison of Tangiers, in Number about 3000, and the English Regiments in the Dutch Service, at the same Period) which, in my Opinion, could not be well understood by the former Vote: The Meaning of which seems to be, That the King should have all the Forces that Charles II. had in 80 in England; and Those were not then here; the Holland Regiments being paid by the States and their Soldiers, and the others 500 Leagues off at Tangier. But all this Advantage would not satisfy the Army-Gentlemen: For, in the Committee, they endeavour'd again to set aside the Vote, by moving for the Sum of 500,000*l. per Ann.* for Guards and Garisons, without naming any certain Number, which would have maintain'd above 20,000: But this could not be carry'd: Therefore they came to a sort of Composition to have but 10,000, whereof a great Number were to be Horse and Dragoons, and the Sum given to maintain them was 350,000*l.* But notwithstanding this, they mov'd afterwards for 3000 Marines, (alledging, these were not a Land-Force, but a Water-Force) which was carry'd.

The Commons depart in many Respects from the Letter of their former Vote.

Here I would beg Leave to observe one Thing, That nothing would satisfy the Courtiers at the Beginning of the Winter, but to have the Forces establish'd by the Parliament, [No doubt having their Eye on the Clause in the Declaration of Rights, That a Standing-Army, without consent of Parliament, was against Law] and upon other Terms, they would not accept them; and in all Companies said, That any Minister that advis'd the King to keep them up otherwise, or any Officer that continued his Commission, ought to be attainted of High-Treason: About which I shall not differ with these Gentlemen; nor do I arraign them from altering their Opinion: For, perhaps, they may conceive, that a Vote to give 350,000*l.* for Guards and Garisons, is a sufficient Authority against Law, to quarter Soldiers in all Parts of England, and as well out of Garisons as in them, and as well at a Distance from the King's Person as about it. A. D. 1698.

Thus what our Courts for above a Thousand Years together, had never Effrontery enough to ask, what the Pensioner-Parliament could not think of without Astonishment, what King James's Parliament (that was almost chosen by himself) could not hear debated with Patience, we are likely to have the Honour of establishing in our own Age, even under a Deliverance."

Remarks on the whole.

And yet again, afterwards, "If the Prince of Orange, in his Declaration, instead of telling us, That we should be settled upon such a Foundation, that there should be no Danger of our falling again into Slavery, and that he would send back all his Forces, as soon as that was done, had promis'd us, That, after an eight Years War, (which would leave us in debt near (l) near twenty Millions) we should have a Standing-Army establish'd, a great many of which should be Foreigners, I believe few Men would have thought such a Revolution worth the Hazard of their Lives and Estates."

On the other Hand, Burnet having observ'd, That, notwithstanding the After-Game play'd by the Court to obtain 15000 Horse and Foot, the House could not be brought to admit above 10,000, proceeds to say, "This gave the King the greatest Distaste

The King disgusted.

(l) Which, however, was far from being the Case, as appears by the following current Abstract.

From 5 Nov. 1688	Years.	Annual Supplies Intended.	Annual Supplies Granted.	Deficiencies.	Overplus.
		l. s. d.	l. s. d.	l. s. d.	l. s. d.
To 31 December—	1690	7,467,049 19 10	5,296,103 01 09	2,170,940 18 01
	1691	4,086,255 01 06	4,163,636 04 10½		77,381 03 04½
	1692	3,521,677 16 03	3,281,622 13 08½	230,055 02 06½
	1693	4,017,080 07 06	3,471,482 16 01	545,597 13 05
	1694	5,036,581 08 11	4,853,050 11 03	177,530 17 08
	1695	4,882,512 00 00	4,883,120 00 00		608 00 06
	1696	5,024,853 19 11	3,945,878 01 00½	2,078,975 18 10½
	1697	4,880,078 91 11	4,137,309 16 02½	742,769 03 08½
Annual Supplies	Intended	38,900,289 15 10
	Granted		33,032,209 05 05½
	Deficient		5,945,869 14 03	5,945,869 14 03
Overplus in 2 Years		77,789 03 10½			77,789 03 10½
Lost by Gaimers, &c.				400,514 00 00
		38,978,078 19 08½	38,978,078 19 08½
1695. The Parliament gave towards Seamens Wages				634,385 14 03
And an Overplus to the Navy in general					500,000 00 00
					34,777 00 00
This Grant, and the Overplus deducted				630,566 03 10½	630,566 03 10½
1697. The Grants were less than the Supplies intended				5,715,817 10 04½
Besides the Deficiency in the Produce of the Funds, 8, 9, W. cap. 20.				5,160,459 14 09½
Thus you see the Occasion of a Debt amounting to				10,876,277 05 01½	At the Peace.

A.D. 1698. taſte of any thing that had befallen him in his whole Reign: He thought it would derogate much from him, and render his Alliance ſo inconſiderable, That he doubted whether he could carry on the Government, after it ſhould be reduc'd to ſo weak and ſo contemptible a State: He ſaid, That, if he could have imagin'd, That, after all the Service he ſhould have done the Nation, he ſhould have met with ſuch Returns, he would never have meddled in our Affairs; and that he was weary of governing a Nation that was ſo jealous, as to lay itſelf open to an Enemy, rather than to truſt him, who had acted ſo faithfully during his whole Life, that he had never once deceived Thoſe who truſted him. He ſaid This, with a great deal more to the ſame Purpoſe, to myſelf: But he ſaw the Neceſſity of ſubmitting to what could not be help'd."

Thus the Commonwealth, according to Trenchard, was ſick of its own Choice; and the King, according to Burnet, was equally ſick of the Honour they had done him, becauſe it was not accompany'd with unlimited Power, or, which is nearly the ſame thing, with unlimited Confidence.

Lord Sunderland, moreover, who was the Undertaker, if not the Adviſer, of this unpopular, becauſe unnatural, Meaſure, and who very well knew what a Miniſter had to apprehend, if he continued in Power, after a Majority in the Houſe of Commons had declar'd againſt him, reſolv'd, "To prevent a public Affront, by retiring from Court and from Buſineſs, not only againſt the Entreaties of his Friends, ſays Burnet, but even the King's earneſt Deſire, That he would continue about him. Indeed, continues the ſame Hiſtorian, upon this Occaſion, his Majeſty expreſs'd ſuch a Concern and Value for him, that the Jealouſies were encreas'd, by the Confidence the Court ſaw the King had in him."

Lord Sunderland reſigns.

P. 207.

But, tho' his Lordſhip retir'd from Court, and reſign'd his Office, as it does not appear, That it was fill'd again till the 25th of October, 1699, it may not unreaſonably be ſuppos'd, that the Profits of it were all that Time ſet apart for his Uſe, as an Acknowledgment for paſs'd Services.

It cannot, however, be ſuppos'd, That his Majeſty ſhould find himſelf thus oblig'd to part with a Servant he ſo thoroughly confided in, without a due Degree of Reſentment; nor that, in caſe his Reſentment could have taken its natural Courſe, it would not have fallen on ſuch of his Servants in the Houſe of Commons, as had preferr'd any Conſideration whatſoever to the Execution of his Commands.

But as, on the one Hand, he had his Reaſons for laying a Reſtraint on his Behaviour, ſo They had, alſo, the Means in their own Hands of making their own Propitiation.

700,000*l. per. Ann. voted for the Civil Liſt.*

Thus, no ſooner was the Fate of the Army decided, and the Houſe had order'd in a Bill to regulate the Militia, in order to render it more uſeful for the Time to come, (which by the way was never brought to any Degree of Perfection) than they qualify'd thoſe diſagreable Proceedings by a Vote in the Committee of Supply, which on the Report was agreed to, That, in a juſt Senſe and Acknowledgment of what great Things his Majeſty had done for theſe Kingdoms, a Sum not exceeding 700,000*l. per Annum*, be granted to his Majeſty during his Life, for the Support of the Civil-Liſt; which was now, for the firſt Time, to be ſeperated from the other Services, and plac'd on a ſeperate Footing: Whether wiſely or not, is perhaps a political Problem, which few will care to ſolve:—This, however, is certain, That, while it was ſo inter-twiſted with the other Services, it partook, in common, with the Reſt of the Inconveniencies which aroſe from deficient Supplies, lax or corrupt Adminiſtrations, &c. whereby the King and his Houſhold were ſometimes aggriev'd as well as the People; conſequently were not wholly inſenſible when the public Grievances became a joint Conſideration: Whereas, ſince this Period, the King and his Servants being always ſecure of their Dividend out of the Supplies, and Miſmanagements affecting the Public only, a Door has been open'd for a Continuance of ſuch Neglects and Abuſes, as could not otherwiſe have remain'd for two Seſſions together, without being detected and puniſh'd.

A.D.

But having made this Advance by way of Complement to his Majeſty, they nevertheleſs proceed with all poſſible Deliberation in carrying it into Effect; as if, inſpir'd by that laudable Jealouſy which is the firſt Principle in the Engliſh Conſtitution, They had kept it depending, as a ſort of Pledge for his Majeſty's good Behaviour.

For the firſt Buſineſs that was diſpatch'd by the two Houſes, was, 1ſt, An Act to prevent the farther Currency of any hammer'd Silver Coin of this Kingdom, and for recoining ſuch as were ſtill in being; as alſo, for the making out new Exchequer-Bills, in lieu of thoſe which either had, or might be, filled up by Indorſements. 2dly, An Act to open the Correſpondence with France, which had been ſhut up during the War, under a Variety of Proviſos, in relation to King James, viz. That ſuch as, ſince the 11th of December, 1688, had voluntarily gone into France, or born Arms in the French Service, or under the ſaid King James, ſince the 13th of February, 1688, without Licence under the Privy-Seal, and ſhould, at any Time after the 14th of January, 1697, return into any Part of his Majeſty's Dominions, (unleſs they return'd before the firſt February then next enſuing) or ſhould hold any Correſpondence with, or remit any Money to, or for the Uſe of the ſaid King James, &c. &c. ſhould, upon Conviction, be deem'd and adjudg'd guilty of High-Treaſon. 3dly, An Act for continuing the Impriſonment of Counter, &c. for the late horrid Conſpiracy: And, 4thly, An Act for giving farther Time for the adminiſtering Oaths with relation to Tallies and Orders, and for the eaſier Diſpatch of public Buſineſs in the Exchequer, and in the Bank of England.

Theſe Acts receiv'd the Royal Aſſent January 14, and the ſame Day the Houſe of Commons agreed to the Reſolutions which had been taken in a Grand Committee about the Supply, viz. 1ſt, That a Sum not exceeding 350,000 l. be granted to his Majeſty, for maintaining Guards and Garriſons for the Year 1698. 2dly, That a Supply be granted to his Majeſty, which, together with the Funds already ſettled for that Purpoſe, ſhould be ſufficient to anſwer and cancel all Exchequer-Bills, iſſued, or to be iſſued, not exceeding 2,700,000 l. 3dly, That a Supply be granted to his Majeſty, for the ſpeedy paying and diſbanding the Army. Again, on January the 18th, They farther reſolv'd, 1ſt, That, upon diſbanding the Army, over and above what is due to them, there be allow'd, by way of Bounty, fourteen Days Subſiſtence to each Foot-Soldier and Non-Commiſſion Officer; and to each Foot-Soldier three Shillings more, in lieu of his Sword, which he is to deliver up. 2dly, That upon diſbanding the Army, over and above what is due to them, there be allow'd, by way of Bounty, ſix Days full Pay to each private Trooper and Non-Commiſſion Officer of the Horſe and Dragoons. 3dly, That of the Supply to be granted to his Majeſty, the Sum of 250,000 l. be allow'd upon Account, towards defraying the Charge of diſbanding the private Troopers, and Centinels, and Non-Commiſſion Officers, of the Horſe, Dragoons, and Foot. 4thly, That Proviſion be made for giving Half-pay to the Commiſſion-Officers, (his Majeſty's Natural-born Subjects of England) till the ſaid Officers ſhall be fully paid off and cleared, and be otherwiſe provided for.

1698. Acts paſſed.

the

A. D. 1697-8. Resolutions on the Supply.

For making good Deficiencies.

On the 22d, they moreover voted the Sum of 407,000 l. for making good the Deficiency of the Aid of Three Shillings in the Pound, granted to his Majeſty the laſt Seſſion of Parliament: And 940,000 l. for making good the Deficiency of the Subſidies, and other Duties granted at the ſame Time: Alſo 129,000 l. for making good the Deficiency of the Aid of one Shilling in the Pound: And they order'd a Committee to conſider of Ways and Means for making good the ſaid Deficiencies. On February the 1ſt, having taken the Arrears of the Army into Conſideration, they reſolv'd, That the Sum of 1,254,000 l. was neceſſary to clear the Arrears of Pay, due to the Land-Forces, according to the Eſtabliſhment from the 1ſt of April 1692, to the laſt Day of September 1697, beſides 940,815 l. for Subſiſtence, 28,295 l. for Contingencies, 5000 l. for the General Officers, and 75,000 l. for the Guards and Garriſons; in all 2,348,102 l. And that there was but 855,502 l. remaining in the Hands of the Pay-Maſter of the Army, the 1ſt Day of January, 1697-8.

Arrears of Subſidies.

February 10, they conſider'd the Account of what was due to ſome of his Majeſty's Allies, both for Arrears of Subſidies, and for Payment of Auxiliaries; and reſolv'd, That 180,000 Rix-Dollars were due to the Elector of Brandenburgh; 250,000 Rix-Dollars to the Landgrave of Heſſe-Caſſel; 121,223 Rix-Dollars to the Duke of Wolfenbuttle; 149,997 Rix-Dollars to the Biſhop of Munſter; 50,000 Rix-Dollars to the Dukes of Hanover and Zell; 25,000 Rix-Dollars to the Duke of Holſtein, and 200,000 Rix-Dollars to the King of Denmark, both upon the fore-mention'd Account, and in Conſideration of an entire Prohibition of Commerce between that Crown and France: They alſo reſolv'd, That there was due the Sum of 177,000 l. to the Contractors for Bread and Forage. Four Days after, they further examin'd into the Debt of the Nation, and reſolv'd, That the Sum of 1,392,742 l. was due upon the ſeveral Heads of the Eſtimate of the general Debt of the Navy; 204,157 l. to the Office of Ordnance; 340,708 l. for Tranſports for reducing of Ireland; 125,785 l. for other Tranſport-Service; and 49,929 l. for Quartering and Cloathing the Army rais'd by Act of Parliament in 1677, and diſbanded by another Act in 1679. A. D. 1697-8. Granted.

Army and Navy Debt, &c.

It being impoſſible for the Nation to acquit this vaſt Debt at once, the Commons reſolv'd to do it by Degrees; and therefore voted, 1ſt, That the Debt due for clearing the Army, from the 1ſt of April 1692, to the laſt Day of September 1697, amounting to 1,254,000 l. and the Sum of 139,066 l. be raiſed in the Year 1698, which would clear the Army to the 1ſt Day of April, 1693. 2dly, That the Sum of 203,450 l. be rais'd for the clearing the Arrears of Subſiſtence to the Troops in England, between the 1ſt Day of January 1696, and the 1ſt Day of Auguſt 1697. 3dly, That 450,816 l. be rais'd for clearing the Arrears of Subſiſtence to the Troops in Flanders, to the 4th Day of October 1697. 4thly, That the Sum of 50,000 l. be rais'd for the General Officers. 5thly, That 137,990 l. be rais'd for clearing the Arrears of Subſiſtence due to the Troops in Flanders, from the 4th of October 1697, to the laſt Day of December. 6thly, That the Sum of 1,100,117 l. be rais'd for the Navy; to wit, 100,000 l. for Wear and Tear; 600,000 l. for Seamens Wages, in part of 1,862,849 l. due on that Score; 16,389 l. due to the Regiſtred Seamen; 24,000 l. for the Salaries of the Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, and other Officers, and for Contingencies; 28,663 l. for the Half-pay Sea-Officers; 90,073 l. for Penſions to ſuperannuated Sea-Officers and Widows; 15,927 l. for the Charge of the Yards; 648 l. for the Muſter-Maſters of the Out-Ports; 43,399 l. for Wages to Ships and Veſſels in Ordinary; 19,608 l. for Victuals of the Ships in Ordinary; 32,558 l. for Harbour-Mooorings; 35,848 l. for Ordinary Repairs of the Navy; 55,520 l. for the two Marine Regiments; and 37,286 l. for the Charge of the Office for regiſtring Seamen. 7thly, That the Sum of 60,000 l. be allow'd for the Ordnance: And, 8thly, That Proviſion be made towards Payment of the Principal and Intereſt of the Tranſport-Debt.

Ways and Means.

Proceding alſo to Ways and Means for raiſing the Supplies, they came to a Reſolution to lay a Tax of 3*s.* in the Pound on Land for next Year, from February 2, by way of Aſſeſſment, upon every County, in Proportion to the Rates of the firſt 4*s.* And in order, as it was then preſum'd, to prevent

A. D. 1697-8. prevent any future Deficience in this Fund, together with a Credit on the ſame, for any ſuch Sum as ſhould not exceed 1,400,000 l. at 8 per Cent. Intereſt: As alſo, to continue the Duties upon Coals and Culme for five Years, from the 15th of May, 1698, upon which they granted a Credit of 100,000 l. at 7 per Cent. and of (m) 400,000 l. at 8 per Cent: Another Expedient adopted by them was a Quarterly Pole, with a Credit upon it for 250,000 l. at 7 per Cent. and 250,000 l. at 8 per Cent: And a Fourth was to raiſe by the Sale of reverſionary Annuities, 266,701 l. 4*s.* 6*d.* They alſo continued the Duties on Coffee, Tea, and Spices, from May 1, 1698, to May 1, 1700, which, upon a Computation of 14,200 l. per Ann. Product, was to produce in three Years 42,600 l. and on a like Computation of Licence-Money for Hawkers and Pedlars, 14,000 l. more: Having, moreover, agreed to take off one Moiety of the Tax on Glaſs and Earthen Wares, they granted a Duty upon Whale-fins and Scots Linen in lieu of it, which, at 15,000 l. a Year for eight Years, was computed at 120,000 l.

A Diſt to apply a Fourth Part of the Forfeitures to the common Service.

While theſe ſeveral Matters were under Conſideration, the old Anti-Court-Expedient of reſuming improper and exorbitant Grants was alſo reviv'd, tho' not in its full Latitude: For now it was only propos'd to apply the Fourth Part of their Value to the Service of the Public: But no Qualification could as yet make that unpalatable Medicine go down: For one Party having, as artfully as unreaſonably, inſiſted on beginning with the Grants of King Charles II. and King James II. the Perſons affected by that Proceeding were glad to join Intereſt with thoſe in the ſame Manner affected by the like Proceeding againſt the Grants of King William; in conſequence of which Concert, ſo many Petitions were preſented, and ſo many Difficulties were rais'd, that it became no very difficult Taſk at this Criſis to ſet aſide Both.

One Incident however, which fell out on this Occaſion, deſerves Remembrance: For it appearing, That one Mr. Railton held one of thoſe Grants in Truſt for Mr. Montagu, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and a Motion being made for him to withdraw, it not only paſs'd in the Negative by a great Majority, but a Counter-Motion was ſet on foot, and carry'd, namely, That it was the Opinion of this Houſe, That the ſaid Mr. Montagu, for his good Services to the Government, did deſerve his Majeſty's Favour. A Vote, ſay our notable Hiſtorians, with one Voice, that will render his Name famous to all ſucceeding Ages! No doubt becauſe of the known Diſintereſtedneſs and Impartiality of parliamentary Deciſions in all miniſterial Caſes!

A Vote in favour of Mr. Montagu.

But Irony is ſcarce to be allow'd in Hiſtory, which delights in nothing but plane Truth; and the Time was now approaching not only when miniſterial Service was to be deem'd the higheſt Degree of political Merit, but alſo when Miniſters were to be gratify'd in all their Demands their own way.

A. D. 1698.

Proceedings on the Eaſt-India Trade.

Thus in defeating the Forfeiture-Bill, they not only oblig'd their Royal Maſter, who was as ſenſible as any of his Predeceſſors on any prerogative Point, and endear'd themſelves to each other, but they alſo made way for a Meaſure every way more ſuitable to the Purpoſe they had moſt at Heart; which was, by a new Experiment on the Eaſt-India-Trade, to give the Bulk of their old Friends, the Interlopers, a legal Admiſſion into it, under Pretence of new Regulations, and of raiſing a conſiderable Sum for the public Service by their Means.

But then this Favourite-Purpoſe was not avow'd at firſt: On the contrary, ſome Time in December the Company was founded, by Perſons of conſiderable Rank in the Government, How they ſtood diſpos'd to advance a Sum of Money by way of Loan, in conſideration of a Settlement by Authority of Parliament: And Undertakers were found to lay the Matter before a general Court, at the next ſeaſonable Opportunity: But whether theſe Undertakers wanted Addreſs, Courage, Intereſt, or Zeal, they ſuffer'd the Affair to languiſh ſo long in their Hands, that the Courtiers either grew weary of Expectation, or were furniſh'd thereby with the Pretext they wanted, to ſtrike up with the Interlopers, which they did accordingly.

[Coſt of the Company preſented to the Houſe of Lords.] P. 5.

This, which ſoon took Air, quicken'd the Motions of the Company, which became immediately ſenſible, That no Alteration could be made in the preſent Courſe of Trade, but muſt either affect their Charter, (which but in September 1694, had coſt them ſo dear) or their Profits, or both. Under theſe Apprehenſions, therefore, upon the 18th of April, it was propos'd and reſolv'd in a general Court, to advance 700,000 l. for ſuch a parliamentary Settlement, as had been before ſuggeſted to them: And it is added, That they pitch'd upon this Sum, becauſe it had formerly appear'd to be the Senſe of the Public, That (conſidering their Sufferings by the War, &c.) a parliamentary Settlement might be granted them for the Loan of 600,000 l. As alſo, That when this Reſolution was communicated to the Miniſtry, they were encourag'd to offer it to Parliament. But tho' when they did offer it accordingly, the Houſe ſeem'd inclinable to accept it, as Biſhop Kennet intimates, it is certain the Encouragement they receiv'd was no better than a Snare: For, during this very Interval, one Mr. Samuel Sheppard, in Concert with Sir John Ward, Sir Francis Eyles, Sir Gilbert Heathcote, &c. and under the Patronage of the Chancellor of the Exchequer Montagu, was preparing a new Propoſal, for raiſing Two Millions, by way of Loan, at 8 per Cent. on the Security of a good Fund for Repayment of Principal and Intereſt; and by way of Conſideration, over and 1698.

The Company propoſe to lend 700,000 to the Public.

Vol. III. P. 748.

Their Antagoniſts offer to undertake it.

(m) Beſides which, as it appears by the Treaſury-Books, there aroſe on the ſaid Duties 68731. 0*s.* 9*d.* before the ſaid Loans were charged thereon.

A. D. 1698. and above the whole Trade to India, with an Exclusion to all others; which on the 20th of May following was laid before the House, and so favourably receiv'd by the Majority, that on the 26th following, a Bill was order'd to be brought in agreeable thereto, and with the Additions following, viz. 1st, "That every Subscriber might have the Liberty of trading yearly, to the Amount of his respective Subscription; or might assign over such his Liberty of trading to any other Person. 2dly, That his Majesty be empower'd to incorporate such of the said Subscribers, as should desire the same. 3dly, That the Powers and Privileges for carrying on the East-India Trade, should be settled by Parliament. 4thly, That the said Subscribers should enjoy the said 8 l. per Cent. and Liberty of trading to the East-Indies, exclusive of all others, for the Term of ten Years, and until the same should be redeem'd by Parliament. 5thly, That every Person subscribing 500 Pounds have a Vote, and no Person to have more Votes than one. 6thly, That all Ships laden in the East-Indies, should be oblig'd to deliver in England. 7thly, That no Person that should be a Member of any Corporation trading to the East-Indies, should trade otherwise than in the Joint-Stock of such Corporation of which he was a Member. 8thly, That Five Pounds per Ann. ad valorem, upon all Returns from the East-Indies, be paid by the Importer, to be plac'd to the Account of the Subscribers, towards the Charge of sending Ambassadors, and other extraordinary Expences. And, 9thly, That over and above the Duties now payable, a further Duty of One Shilling and Ten-pence per Pound Weight, be laid upon all wrought Silks imported from India and Persia, to be paid by the Importer."

A Bill order'd.

"And whereas, formerly, (say the Company in their Case above quoted) it hath been the constant Custom in Farms, Bargains, and Offers of the like Nature, till the first Bidder be ask'd, whether he is able to advance farther, in this Case, the Company, notwithstanding their Charter, and the Right they have to the Trade, were early told without Doors, That their Proposal should be oppos'd, tho' they would lay down the Two Millions in question.

The old Company petition against it.

The Company did, however, make their Appeal, by Petition, to the Justice and Equity of Parliament, as well as to the Public, in their Case before cited, setting forth, 1st, Their Rights and Clames under so many Royal Charters, particularly the Last, which was calculated purposely to remove all reasonable Objections, and super-induce many national Advantages, agreeable to several Regulations propos'd and resolv'd in the House of Commons; no Forfeiture of which either had or could be urg'd. 2dly, The Regard that was due to the Property of above a thousand Families interested in their Stock; and in particular of 781 new Adventurers, who had come in upon the Credit and Faith of the said new Charter, and had thereon subscrib'd no less than 744,000*l.* As also to the Property of the Company in India, amounting to 44,000*l. per Annum* Revenue, which they were now in effect to be depriv'd of. 3dly, The Expence they had been at in Fortifications there, to the Amount of a Million. 4thly, Their Sufferings in the Course of the War, and more especially since the last Subscription, in which Interval they had lost twelve great Ships, worth at Market 1,500,000*l.* 5thly, Their Services and Merits with regard to the Government; in having contributed during the same Interval 295,000*l.* to the Customs; and in Taxes, 85,000*l.* besides the Taxes for the current Year; in having furnish'd 6000 Barrels of Gun-powder, on a very pressing Occasion, and 80,000*l.* for the circulating Exchequer-Bills, in a Time of great Extremity, at the Instance of the Lords of the Treasury, which was then esteem'd a very important Service, &c."

A. D. 1698.

Both Kennet and Tindal tell us, That their Petition met with such Regard from the Commons, that they offer'd to settle the Trade on them, in case they would accept it on the Terms and under the Limitations accepted by the others, which they refus'd: But they do not tell us, on what Authority they build their Assertions, which seems to be utterly irreconcileable with the Sequel of this Transaction.

The Bill read a second Time.

For, notwithstanding the Petition of the Company, the Bill was read a second Time, on the 10th of June; and proceded upon as a Point of Business which was to be dispatch'd as soon as possible: Besides, when the Company, in consequence of the Resolution of a general Court held the same Day, made an Offer of submitting their Stock to a Valuation of 50 per Cent. viz. 20 on their dead Stock, and 30 on their quick, which they were content to warrant at the said Sum, and to open their Books for new Subscriptions, in order to raise the said Two Millions in question, this Concession produced no Resolution in their favour: On the contrary, when the Committee appointed to inspect their Books, Stock, Dividends, Cash, &c. made their Report three Days after, by which it appear'd, they had not only, at several Periods, greatly over-valued their Stock, and rais'd their Dividends far above their real Profits, but also, that out of the new Subscriptions, they had paid 325,565*l.* 0*s.* 4*d.* to the old Proprietors, and several large Sums for Special Service, (that is to say, in feeding the Corruption of those in Power, as formerly recited, in order to obtain a Charter) advantage was taken to move, That Satisfaction be given to the new Subscribers to the East-India Company, for all Damages done them, by making Dividends beyond the real Value of the Company's Stock, at the Time of making such Dividends; and also by the Payment of the said 325,565*l.* 0*s.* 4*d.* to the old Proprietors, out of the Estates of the said old Proprietors, so receiving the said Payment and Dividends: But the Debate which arose upon this Motion having been adjourn'd till the next Day, when the Company made it appear, That the said Payment of 50 per Cent. was made to the old Proprietors with the Consent of the new Sub-

The old Company propose to raise 2,000,000l. by new Subscriptions.

An intimidating Motion against the Directors.

A. D. 1698. scribers, the said Motion was dropt: Alarm'd, however, with so home an Attack, and justly apprehensive of what was next to ensue, the Directors call'd another general Court the next Morning, in which an immediate Subscription of 200,000 l. was agreed to by those of the most Credit and Substance present, as the first Payment of the two Millions above-mention'd, and subject to Forfeiture, in case the subsequent Payments were not made good. The same Day Proposals upon this Plan were presented to the House; as were also those of their Antagonists, which, appearing to the Courtiers the most reasonable of the Two, had the Preference: The Division on ordering the Bill to be engross'd, being Yeas 120, Noes 80; and on passing it, Yeas 115, Noes 78: Which at once shews how poorly the Business of the Nation was attended in these Times; and also how fluctuating a Thing a Majority us'd to be, before the great Secret was found of forming and disciplining such a Phalanx as should be in a manner irresistable.

The Proposals of both Parties presented to the House.

The Bill pass'd.

But, tho' the new Company, as it began already to be call'd, was form'd out of the old Interlopers, and such as had set out on their Bottom, it did not comprehend all the said Interlopers: For such of them whose Stocks were better suited to a seperate than a joint Trade, and who found themselves more likely to be excluded now than ever, not only oppos'd both Companies alike, in Conformity to their old Tenets, but at this particular Period set forth a Paper under the Title of, A Letter concerning the East-India-Trade, to a Gentleman, in which are the following significant Paragraphs.

Scope of the Advocates for an open Trade.

"The Landholders of England, who all depend on Trade, and who are Traders, with whatsoever other Titles they may flatter themselves, (since all Men owe their Subsistence to the Commutation of the Necessaries or Conveniencies of Life) would think it highly irrational to erect by Law, monopolising Corporations for Corn, Cattle, Wool, &c. as well knowing that those, by commanding the Markets, buying cheap, and selling dear, would grind both the first Seller, and the Consumer; thereby robbing the Landlords of their Income, and depriving the People of their Subsistance, and so would discourage Manufactory, and all other Sorts of Industry relating to the Product of our Country; and, by the Artifice of Combination, cut up the Roots of Trade at Home, which depends on cheap living: Whereas such Corporations relating to Foreign Trade immediately, are no less pernicious to the Nation, by destroying the Foundation of Riches, to be drawn from Abroad, which is cheap selling.

The present Company, and what may be destin'd to succeed it, being but one Buyer of all Commodities proper for India, and one Seller of all brought from thence, will endeavour to make themselvs so much Masters of the Markets in both Cases, as to buy and sell with their own stated Profits: Whereas, private, free Traders, being ignorant of each others Designs, must take the Markets every where as they find them: And 'tis most certain, That from the Year 1653, to 1657, while the Trade was free and open, the Dutch East-India Company suffer'd much by the low Prices, whereat the Indian Commodities were sold by the English Merchants: Nor can any Thing be more serviceable to the Dutch Interest, than that the bold, adventurous English Spirits, with so great Knowledge of Trade, and so great Stocks to be employ'd for India, China, and other Parts yet undiscover'd, should be confin'd within a lazy, monopolizing, joint Stock, which will never fail to keep so fair a Correspondence with those of their Brethren on the other Side of the Water, as, by each Others Motions, to regulate their Prices and Profits; and impose, arbitrarily, by consent, on the Subjects of each State, and the whole World also. I shall not insist on the Difficulty of good Government in a new Corporation, tho' we have heard some Complaints of Corruption (perhaps not altogether groundless) in relation to the present East-India Company: And it is not probable at this Time, when there is so great a Scarcity of good Morals, that Matters will be much mended by changing Hands: I shall only mind you, in reference to the national Constitution, that in the late Reigns, the East-India Company, and the great Bankers of Lombard-Street, were thought dangerous to the Nation, by the Loans of great Sums, made to King Charles II. and King James, on the Credit of the Exchequer only, when those Princes were not, or would not be supply'd in a parliamentary way: And in this present Reign, for the same political Reasons, the Bank of England was restrain'd by Law, from lending to the Crown otherwise than on Funds granted in Parliament, with borrowing Clauses authorising such Loans. But if a new Corporation of Two Millions Fund, 160,000 l. annual Interest, with a Million or two more occasionally on Credit, or otherwise advanc'd, with Pretence to carry on the Trade; together with the constant accruing Profits; I say if This gives no Umbrage of Hazard to our most excellent Constitution, of which, I hope, all good Englishmen will ever be tender and jealous, I may then conclude this Nation forever out of Danger from any Matters of that Nature."

A. D. 1698.

But how well grounded soever in Reason this Paper was, it met with no Regard; because it was equally conclusive against both Parties: And when Truth is in the Midst, tho' it is her own proper Post, her Authority is so far from being duly consider'd, respected, or obey'd, that it is then most of all in danger, of being trodden under Foot.

The Bill, when pass'd by the Commons, was sent up to the Lords, and was follow'd, as it was reasonable to expect, by the old Company, with all the Opposition they could make: For, having upon their Petition, obtain'd Leave to be heard by their Counsel, They not only insisted as before on their own Rights, but they attack'd the new

The Bill sent up to the Lords.

A. D. 1698. new Regulations contain'd in the Bill, and maintain'd they were leſs beneficial to the Public, than Thoſe inſerted in the late Charter. According to the ſaid Charter, (in which, they ſaid, were expreſs Covenants, That his Majeſty would not grant Licence to any other Perſons to trade to India) the old Company were oblig'd to take in additional Subſcriptions to the Amount of 744,000 l. whereas by the preſent Bill, no Proviſion was made for any certain Stock to carry on the Trade: The old Company were moreover oblig'd to export Engliſh Manufactures to the Value of 100,000 l. per Ann. Whereas the new Subſcribers were laid under no ſuch Obligation: According to their Charter, none but natural-born Subjects, or Perſons naturalis'd, were allow'd to ſubſcribe; whereas the Bill admitted Foreigners; which, as the old Company were ready to ſhew, might produce Effects very pernicious and dangerous to the general Intereſt of the Nation: Tho' the old Company had offer'd to raiſe Two Millions, the New were oblig'd by the Bill to raiſe but One; and it was reaſonable for the Former to make a Doubt, Whether Voluntiers could be found to furniſh the reſt? And, Laſtly, they urg'd, That, whereas, according to the Votes of both Houſes, the beſt way to carry on the Trade, was by a joint Stock, excluſive of all others, the Bill provided both for a joint Stock, and a ſeperate Trade; which, as they apprehended, would increaſe the Difficulty of completing the Two Millions.

The Company heard by their Counſel againſt it.

What was moſt remarkable in the Anſwer of the Reſpondents, conſiſted in theſe two Aſſertions, That the old Company's Charter had been obtain'd by irregular Means: And that it was not in the Power of the Crown, without Conſent of Parliament, to grant a Monopoly.

Thus the Corruption of the Times was openly avow'd on one Hand, the Prerogative was attack'd without Ceremony on the other, and yet the Courtiers preſent appear'd to be neither exaſperated nor alarm'd; becauſe, perhaps, the vacating one Job, made way for another.

But tho' the miniſterial Current ſat ſo ſtrongly in favour of the Bill, a great many able and eminent Lords not only ſtood up to oppoſe it, but left no material Argument, or parliamentary Expedient untry'd, to make good their Way againſt it; as appears in the whole Progreſs of the Diſpute; and alſo in the Proteſt, which, on the Queſtions being carry'd for the ſecond reading of the Bill, by Sixty-five Voices againſt Forty-eight, was enter'd and ſign'd by Twenty-one of the Latter (amongſt whom was the Lord Godolphin, tho' at that Time firſt Commiſſioner of the Treaſury) for the following Reaſons, viz.

Proteſt of 21 Peers againſt it.

"1ſt, Becauſe this Bill puts an unreaſonable Hardſhip upon the preſent Eaſt-India Company, ſince it plainly appear'd at the Bar of this Houſe, That a Security, of which (we conceive) there was no Reaſon to doubt, had been offer'd by the ſaid Company for raiſing the whole Two Millions for the public Service; whereas the Bill inveſting the new Subſcribers with the Trade upon the Subſcription of one Million only, does not, as we conceive, give ſo much as a Probability of raiſing more: And it may be reaſonably enough doubted, Whether the ſeparate Trade allow'd in this Bill, concurrent with a joint Stock, may not prove ſo inconſiſtent, as to diſcourage the Subſcription from ever coming near to the ſaid Million?

A. D. 1698.

2dly, Becauſe the Bill puts a Period to the Charter of the Eaſt-India Company, and gives the Trade thither to other Perſons, without ſo much as ſuggeſting, that the ſaid Charter, or the Trade carried on by Virtue of it, hath been prejudicial to the King or Kingdom, tho' the ſaid Company have an expreſs Clauſe in their Charter, That it ſhall not be determin'd without three Years Warning, even if it ſhould appear not profitable to the King or this Realm: And the Bill granting likewiſe a Supply of Two Millions, in which the Commons pretended the Houſe of Lords ought not to make any Alteration, we are of Opinion, their Lordſhips are thereby likewiſe depriv'd of the Freedom of their Vote in the Matter of the Eaſt-India Trade, to which it cannot be deny'd but they have an equal Right with the Commons: And yet, by its being join'd to a Bill of Supply, this Houſe muſt either be the Occaſion of diſappointing ſo large and neceſſary a Grant for the Public Service, or be put upon the unreaſonable Hardſhip of conſenting to a Matter, which, tho' it ſeems ſo unjuſt, it is fruitleſs for them to examine, if their Amendments are not to be admitted, becauſe offer'd to a Money-Bill; which we humbly conceive to be a manifeſt Violation of the Rights of the Houſe, and tending to an Alteration of the Conſtitution of the Government."

Laſtly, That we may wind up the Evidence relating to this Affair, Burnet has given his Teſtimony concerning it as follows.

Burnet's Teſtimony concerning it.

"It is certain, that this Act, together with the Inclinations which thoſe of the Whigs, who were in good Poſts, had expreſs'd for keeping up a greater Land-Force, did contribute to the blaſting the Reputation they had hitherto maintain'd, of being good Patriots, and was made uſe of over England by the Tories, to diſgrace both the King and them. To this, another Charge of a high Nature was added, That they robbed the Public, and apply'd much of the Money, that was given for the Service of the Nation, both to the ſupporting a vaſt Expence, and to the raiſing great Eſtates to themſelves: This was ſenſible to the People, who were uneaſy under heavy Taxes, and were too ready to believe, that, according to the Practice in King Charles's Time, a great deal of the Money that was given in Parliament, was divided among thoſe who gave it: Theſe Clamours were rais'd and manag'd with great Dexterity, by thoſe who intended to render the King, and all who were beſt affected to him, ſo odious to the Nation, that by this Means they might carry ſuch

A. D. 1698. such an Election, of a new House of Commons, as that, by it, all might be overturn'd. It was said, That the Bank of England, and the new East-India Company, being in the Hands of Whigs, they would have the Command of all the Money, and, by consequence, of all the Trade of England."

Preamble of the Bill. And as to the Act itself, the Preamble set forth, That the Commons, considering his Majesty's extraordinary Occasion, and being desirous to supply the same, in a Manner least grievous to the Subject, granted to his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, from the 1st of July, 1698, Two-pence Half-penny per Gallon on Salt, and from the 29th of December, Three-pence Half-penny per Gallon, together with the additional Duty of Stamps (granted under the Denomination of a free Gift, by a seperate Bill) for establishing the new Company's Fund of 160,000*l.* subject to Redemption by Parliament.

Account of the other Money-Bills. Then as to the Time and Order in which the Money-Bills were pass'd, That for satisfying and discharging the Arrears of several Annuities incurr'd between May 17, 1696, and May 17, 1697, receiv'd the Royal Assent March 7: That for granting 1,484,015*l.* 11*s.* 11¼ for disbanding Forces, paying Seamen, and other Uses therein mention'd, April the 2d: That for granting the Duties on Coal and Culm; and that for continuing Duties on Tea, Coffee, &c. for paying Interest on the Transport-Debt for reducing Ireland, May 16: And on July the 5th, the Act for settling the East-India Trade as above; together with, The Act for enlarging the Time for purchasing Annuities, (the Contributions arising from which were for the Recoinage, and for cloathing the Army in 1697): The Act for imposing the new Stamp Duties: The Act for licencing Hawkers and Pedlars, as a farther Provision for the Irish Transport-Debt: The Act for increasing the Duties on Lustrings (intended rather as a Prohibition of that Manufacture, than a Means of raising Money.) The Act for the more regular Payment of Lottery-Tickets: The Act for applying to the Use of the Navy and Ordnance, the Overplus of the Money granted for building Twenty-seven Ships of War: The Act for granting the Quarterly Pole: And the Act for settling the Civil-List: Concerning which, something more particular remains to be said: For the Preamble set forth, That his Majesty's most dutiful and loyal Subjects the Commons, being always sensible of the great Blessings which, by the Goodness of Almighty God, They and all other Subjects of his Majesty's Realms and Dominions, in the free Exercise of the true Christian Religion (the most valuable Benefit which can be bestow'd upon any Nation or People) as also in their Liberties and Properties, did fully enjoy under his Majesty's most auspicious Government, and being desirous to make a grateful Acknowledgment of his Majesty's unparallel'd Grace and Favour to his Commons, and particularly for his great and successful Undertakings and Atchievments, whereby his Majesty A. D. 1697. had been the happy Instrument of securing the aforesaid Blessings to them and their Posterities, had, therefore, freely and unanimously, resolv'd to encrease his Majesty's Revenue during his Reign, with Prayers for its long Continuance; and accordingly did give and grant to his most excellent Majesty the new Subsidy from the 31st of January 1699, during Life.

Particularly of that for settling the Civil List.

And in the 13th Section, they farther signify, That, whereas their Purpose was, That the yearly Sum of 700,000*l.* should be supply'd to his Majesty for the Service of his Houshold and Family, and for his other necessary Expences and Occasions, They had and did assign him, The hereditary and temporary Excise (after the Tallies already struck thereon were discharg'd), 600*l.* a Week out of the Revenue of the Post-Office; the first Fruits and Tenths of the Clergy; the Fines in the Alienation-Office and Post-Fines; the Revenue of the Wine Licence; the Money arising by Sheriffs, Prossers, and Compositions in the Exchequer; as also from Seisures; the Revenue of the Duchy of Cornwall, and all other Rents of Crown-Lands either in England or Wales; as also Fines for Leases of the same; the Duty of Four and a Half per Cent. in Specie arising from Barbadoes and the Leeward-Islands; as also what should arise from the farther Subsidies and Duties then granted, under the following Provisoes, That, in case the said Revenues produc'd more than 700,000*l. per Ann.* the Overplus should be accounted for to Parliament: That all Grants and Dispositions of the same should be void: And that all Grantees, or other Persons to whom such Grants might be made, should be incapable of holding the same.

Burnet's Remarks upon it. It remains to be added, That, under the Head of this Act, Bishop Burnet takes occasion to inform us, "That it was design'd to grant for the Civil-List no more than 600,000*l.* but that, as it had been promis'd at the Treaty of Utrecht (in what Manner, we have seen) That King James being now as dead to England, his Queen should enjoy her Jointure, which was 50,000*l.* a Year; and as it was intended to settle a Court about the Duke of Glocester, who was then nine Years old, this large Provision was made for the Civil-List, to enable the King to bear these Expences: But, continues the same Author, by some great Errors in the Management, tho' the Court never spent so little, yet Payments were very ill made; and by some strange Consumption, all was wasted."

As also, that the Dutchess Dowager of Marlborough thus enflames this Charge against the King, in her own Account of her own Conduct, (P. 116, 117, 118, 119, 120.)

and the Dutchess Dowager of Marlborough.

"When the Duke of Glocester was arriv'd at the Age, to be put into Mens Hands, the King insinuated to such Members of the Parliament, as he knew were desirous to have the Duke handsomely settled, that it would require near 50,000*l.* a Year: And, at the same Time, he promis'd other Persons, whom he knew it would please, That he

A. D. 1698. he would pay Queen Mary in France her Settlement, which was alſo 50,000 l. a Year: And theſe Steps he took, in order to obtain an Addition of a 100,000 l. a Year to his Civil-Liſt.

The Addition was granted, yet he never paid one Shilling to the Queen: And, as to the Duke, the King not only kept him in Womens Hands, a good while after the new Revenue was granted, but, when his Highneſs's Family was ſettled, would give him no more than 15000 l. a Year: Nay, of this ſmall Allowance, he refus'd to advance one Quarter, tho' it was abſolutely wanted to buy Plate and Furniture; ſo that the Princeſs was forc'd to be at that Expence herſelf.

But this was not all: The King (influenc'd, I ſuppoſe, in this Particular, by my Lord Sunderland) ſent the Princeſs Word, That, tho' he intended to put in all the (n) Preceptors, he would leave it to her to chuſe the reſt of the Servants except one, who was to be Deputy-governor and Gentleman of the Duke's Bed-chamber, (which was Mr. Sayers.)

This Meſſage was ſo humane, and of ſo different an air from any Thing the Princeſs had been us'd to, that it gave her an extreme Pleaſure; and ſhe immediately ſet herſelf to provide proper Perſons, and of the moſt Conſideration, for the ſeveral Places. Mr. Boſcawen, and Secretary Vernon's Son, were to be Grooms of the Bed-chamber; the Sons of the Earls of Bridgwater and Berkley, were to be Pages of Honour, and ſo on. In the mean Time, the King was in no haſte to finiſh the Affair of the Duke's Eſtabliſhment; and a little before he left England, to go make the Campaign, told my Lord Marlborough, (who was now (o) reſtor'd to the Army, and was to be Governor to the Duke of Glouceſter) That he would ſend a Liſt, from Abroad, of the Servants he would have in the Duke's Family; not in the leaſt regarding the former Meſſage he had ſent to the Princeſs: Which my Lord obſerving, took the Liberty to put his Majeſty in mind of it; by adding, That the Princeſs, upon the Credit of that Meſſage, had engag'd her Promiſes to ſeveral Perſons; and that, not to be able to perform thoſe Promiſes, would be ſo great a Mortification, as he hop'd his Majeſty would not give her, at a Time, when any Thing of Trouble might do her Prejudice, ſhe being then with Child. Hereupon, the King fell into a great Paſſion, and ſaid, She ſhould not be Queen before her Time; and he would make the Liſt of what Servants the Duke ſhould have.

The King was ſo peremptory, that my Lord Marlborough could ſay no more, and had no Expedient left, but to get my Lord Albemarle to try to bring him to Reaſon; which his Lordſhip promis'd to do: And accordingly he took my Lord Marlborough's Liſt of the Perſons the Princeſs had choſen, and carried it with him into Holland. In concluſion, that Liſt was approv'd, with very few Alterations: But this was, without queſtion, not ſo much owing to the King's Goodneſs, or my Lord Albemarle's Perſuaſions, (tho' I believe his Lordſhip did take Pains in this Matter) as to the happy Choice the Princeſs had made of the Servants: For the King, upon cool Conſideration, muſt perceive, that he could not ſtrike out of the Liſt a greater Number than he did, without hurting himſelf more than the Princeſs: He only made my Lord Raby's Brother an Equerry; and appointed, to be Gentlemen-waiters, two or three Perſons, who had ſerv'd the late Queen in ſuch like Stations, and had Penſions on that Account: And it was to ſave this Money that the King did ſo Ungentleman-like a Thing, as to force the Princeſs to fail in ſome of her Engagements."

A. D. 1698.

Such is the Repreſentation of his Majeſty's Conduct on this Head:—But, how faithful ſoever it may be in the Main, the Biſhop's Part ſtands in need of ſome Correction: For, whereas he affirms, the Court never ſpent ſo little, it appears by the moſt authentic Accounts that can be obtain'd, That the Expenditure of King Charles the Second's Houſhold, and all the Articles belonging to it, did not exceede 588,493 l. 1*s.* 1*d.* out of which the Duke of York alone had about 80,000 l.: And that the Expenditure of King James for the ſame Articles, was but 576,105 l. 14*s.* $\frac{1}{2}$: Whereas That of King William amounted to 675,270 l. 19*s.* 9*d.* which was 86,778 l. 18*s.* 8*d.* more than That of King Charles, and 99,165 l. 5*s.* 9$\frac{1}{2}$ more than That of King James.

Appropriations of the Supplies.

Laſtly: Whereas the Grants of the Seſſion amounted in the whole to 4,850,174 l. 5*s.* 3*d.* the Appropriations and Diſpoſitions were as follow, viz. For Wages to Seamen, 250,000 l.: For diſbanding, 250,000 l.: For Forces and contingent Charges thereof, 1,215,506 l. 1*s.* 7$\frac{1}{2}$: For Ditto and Tranſports, 31,436 l. 1*s.* 4*d.*: For Ordnance Land-Service, 53,112 l. 9*s.* 3*d.*: For diſcharging Pro-Tallies on the Exciſe and Poſt-Office, (p) 600,000 l.: For the Expence of his Majeſty's Houſhold, 400,000 l.: For the ſeveral Mints, 29,209 l.: For Præmiums on the Contracts for Exchequer-Bills, (no Sum aſcertained but iſſued) 147,968 l. 14*s.* 3$\frac{1}{2}$: For cancelling Ditto out of the Land-Tax and Loans, 240,659 l. 1*s.*: To Bank and Bank Annuities, 272,322 l. 6*s.* 5$\frac{1}{2}$: For Deficiency of the Fund of Two Millions, Intereſt of Tallies, &c. 117,586 l. 10*s.* 1*d.* For Intereſt on the Iriſh Tranſport-Bill, 56,600 l.: For Principal and Intereſt of Loans on the Salt, Glaſs, and Whale-Fin Duties, 120,000 l.: And, whereas all the Reſidue

(n) Of whom Biſhop Burnet, againſt his Will, it ſeems, was appointed the firſt; concerning which, ſee the ſplendid Section in his Hiſtory of his own Times, Vol. II. P. 210, 211.

(o) By whoſe Interpoſition, or what Terms, or for what Purpoſe, now all Service was at an End in the Field, her Grace does not ſtay to particulariſe; which is ſo much the more to be regretted, becauſe her great Friend Lord Godolphin, was at the ſame Period diſgrac'd, and ſet aſide as an unprofitable Servant.

(p) Of which only 467,000 l. was ſo apply'd: The remaining 133,000 l. being apply'd to the Civil liſt.

A. D. 1698. Residue of the said Grants, was by a general Clause appointed for Land and Sea Services, 842,592*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.* was apply'd to the Service of the Navy; making in the whole, 4,840,957*l.* 6*s.* 11¼ so accounted for.

But the Session produc'd also some other Matters not unworthy of Notice.

Enquiry into fraudulent Indorsements of Exchequer-Bills.

For the Debts incurr'd in the Course of the War, having given rise to a new Currency in Bank, and Exchequer-Bills, &c. and all Men, after the Exemple of Those in Power and of their Agents and Creatures, being in haste to grow rich, as the lucrative Jobs of every Session gave them large Opportunity to do, every kind of Practice was try'd upon them by the Adventurers of the Times: They were both counterfeited and falsify'd, by the needy and desperate; and even Those who were in Office, and had the bleeding of the Public in every Vein, were not above making some notable Experiments upon them, which went by the Name of irregular Indorsements, for so tenderly worded was the Advertisement from the Treasury, that gave Notice to the Public of this new Stroke of Ledger-de-Main. It seems on the first issuing of these Exchequer-Bills, they bore no Interest; but after they had been paid in upon any of the Taxes, and had been issued a second Time, they were entituled to an Interest of 7*l.* 12*s.* per Cent. Here, therefore, was an Opening for the Ingenious and Industrious to try their Talents: And, accordingly, a Confederacy was form'd by Mr. Charles Duncomb, Receiver-General of the Excise, Mr. John Knight, Treasurer of the Customs, Mr. Bartholomew Burton, who had also a Place in the Excise, and Mr. Reginald Marriot, one of the Deputy Tellers of the Exchequer, to make the most of it: But the Advertisements above-mention'd having made the Fraud public, and it being soon trac'd home to these Banditti in Office, the Treasury first took cognisance of it, and then the House of Commons. Marriot, one of the Gang, turn'd Evidence; there was no want of Proof, either of the Fact, or against the Persons accus'd; and the House inclining more to Rigor than Mercy, to deter others from committing the like breach of Trust for the future it ought to be suppos'd, Duncomb and Knight, who were both Members, were expell'd, and sent to the Tower: Burton was sent to Newgate; and Bills of Pains and Penalties were order'd in for their farther Punishment. That against Duncomb, who was immensely rich, (as appear'd by his paying down the Purchase-Money, which was 95,000*l.* for Helmsley, the Estate of Villars Duke of Buckingham, when the want of Coin was most sensibly felt, and loudly complain'd of) was pass'd first, notwithstanding the remarkable Opposition given to it by the Attorney-General (Trevor) and sent up to the Lords, by whom it was rejected, on a Division, by one Voice; said to be the Duke of Leeds's, and accompany'd with some other (q) Suggestions, which serve to display yet farther either the Malignity or the Corruption of the Times.

Gazette, No. 3345.

Duncomb and Knight, two Members, expell'd for the same, and sent to the Tower.

Bills of Pains and Penalties order'd against them.

A. D. 1699.

which are rejected by the Lords.

It ought, however, to be acknowledg'd, That, in rejecting Bills of this extraordinary Nature, to assign Punishments where the Laws had specify'd no Offence, their Lordships might be directed by the noblest Principles of Wisdom and Equity: The Bills against Knight and Burton had the same Fate: And so far did this Spirit of Clemency carry them, that they also discharg'd Duncomb from his Confinement; a Favour which, however, he deriv'd no Benefit from: For the Commons, in a Flame of Resentment, re-committed him; and he continued in Custody till the End of the Session.

Their Lordships also enlarge Duncomb, but he is re-committed by the Commons.

Hard Case of the Victuallers of the Tower Hamlets.

Another singular Case, and which was treated by the Commons in a Manner as singular, was the Case of the Victuallers of the Tower-Hamlets, who, by Petition, set forth, That, under the Pretence of Subsistance-Money, &c. they had been oblig'd by the Justices of Peace, to disburse several Sums to the Officers and Soldiers of Colonel Tidcombe's Regiment: This Petition was refer'd to a Committee; that Committee came to the following Resolutions; and the House upon the Report agreed to them, viz. 1. That the Petitioners had no Cause of Complaint against the Justices of the Peace, who acted in relation to the quartering of Colonel Tidcombe's Regiment. 2. That by an Account stated between the Victuallers and Mr. Moyer, Agent for the said Regiment, it appear'd, That the Sum of 3623*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.* was due to the said Victuallers; and that there was due from his Majesty to the said Regiments, 4975*l.* 9*s.* 7*d.* So that, notwithstanding all the Provisions made by the Laws, with regard to the Billetting and Quartering of Soldiers, and the Privileges of the Subject against every such Pressure, Victuallers, Inn-holders, &c. were, by the said Report, understood, to be liable to subsist the Soldiery, in case they were not subsisted by the Government.

London-Derry Petitions.

On the other Hand, a Committee having been appointed to examine the Allegations of a Petition presented to the House by Colonel Michelborne, joint Governor of London-Derry with Dr. Walker, and having reported to the House, That all the said Allegations had been verify'd, That 992*l.* was due to the said Colonel upon his Pay as Governor: That 14,949*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* was due to the said Colonel, his Officers and Soldiers, and that it was their Opinion, an Addtess ought to be sent to his Majesty in their Favour, the said Resolutions were not permitted to be

(q) Namely: That Duncomb had dissell'd the impending Storm with a golden Sacrifice: But if his Escape was call'd a Jeb by the Whigs, the Bill was call'd a Job by the Tories; as appears by that very extraordinary Pamphlet, call'd, The true Picture of a modern Whig, writ by Dr. Drovenant; in which Double, the Hero of it, says, "I can tell you who was "to have had Helmsley, if the Bill had pass'd against Dun-"comb, and who were to have shar'd all the rest of his "Manors."

A. D. 1698. be read a Second Time: But then ſome few Days afterwards, the Affair was reſum'd; and an Addreſs was prepar'd and agreed to; in which the Services and Sufferings of the ſaid City (which had alſo by Petition pray'd the Mediation of the Houſe with his Majeſty in their Favour) were in the firſt Place recommended to his Majeſty's Conſideration in the Kingdom of Ireland, that the Citizens thereof might no longer remane a ruinous Spectacle to all, a Scorn to their Enemies, and a Diſcouragement to his Majeſty's well-affected Subjects: And, Secondly, the Governor and Gariſon of the ſaid City, who, thro' the utmoſt Sufferings and Extremities, had defended the ſame, and who, for ſuch ſignal Service, did deſerve ſome ſpecial Marks of his Majeſty's Favour, for a laſting Monument to Poſterity: In which Addreſs his Majeſty was pleas'd to Anſwer, That he would take them into his Conſideration, according to the Deſire of the Houſe.

An Addreſs in their Favour.

A Book aſſerting the Independency of Ireland on the Parliament of England.

While this Affair was alſo depending, Complaint being made to the Houſe of a printed Book, entituled, The Caſe of Ireland's being bound by Acts of Parliament in England, (written by William Molyneux, of Dublin, Eſq;) in which, the Dependence of that Kingdom on the Authority of the Parliament of England was deny'd, and by Inference, it was repreſented to be a conquer'd Country, ſubject to the Will and Pleaſure of the Crown, a Committee was appointed to enquire who was the Author of the ſaid Book, as alſo to enquire what Proceedings in Ireland had given Occaſion to the writing of the ſaid Book: And an Addreſs was voted to the King, That his Majeſty would be pleas'd to give Directions for the Diſcovery and Puniſhment of the Author.

Occaſions an Enquiry into the Conduct obſerv'd in that Kingdom.

When likewiſe the ſaid Committee made their Report, it was unanimouſly reſolv'd, "That the ſaid Book was of dangerous Conſequence to the Crown and People of England, by denying the Authority of the King and Parliament of England, to bind the Kingdom and People of Ireland, and the Subordination and Dependance that Ireland has, and ought to have, upon England, as being united and annex'd to the Imperial Crown of this Realm: And that a Bill, entituled, An Act for the better Security of his Majeſty's Perſon and Government, tranſmitted under the Great Seal of Ireland, whereby an Act of Parliament made in England, was pretended to be re-enacted, and Alterations therein made, and divers Things enacted alſo, pretending to oblige the Courts of Juſtice, and the Great Seal of England, by the Authority of an Iriſh Parliament, had given Occaſion and Encouragement to the forming and publiſhing the dangerous Poſitions contain'd in the ſaid Book. Four Days after, the Commons, in a Body, preſented an Addreſs to the King; wherein they laid before his Majeſty, the dangerous Attempts that had been of late made by ſome of his Subjects of Ireland, to ſhake off their Subjection to, and Dependance on, this Kingdom; which had manifeſtly appear'd to the Commons, not only by the bold and pernicious Aſſertions, in a Book publiſh'd and dedicated to his Majeſty, entituled, The Caſe of Ireland, being bound by Acts of Parliament in England, ſtated; but more fully and authentically, by the Votes and Proceedings of the Houſe of Commons in Ireland, in their late Seſſions: And whereby the foremention'd Bill, ſent hither under the Great Seal of Ireland, whereby they would have an Act paſſed in the Parliament of England, expreſly binding Ireland, to be re-enacted there, and Alterations therein made; ſome of which amounted to a Repeal of what is requir'd by the ſaid Act made in England; and in other of the ſaid Alterations, pretending to give Authority to, and oblige the Courts of Juſtice and Great Seal here in England: That This they could not but look on as an Occaſion and Encouragement in the forming and publiſhing the dangerous Poſitions contain'd in the ſaid Book: That the Conſequences of ſuch Poſitions and Proceedings, would be ſo fatal to this Kingdom, and even to Ireland itſelf, that they needed not to be enlarg'd on, or aggravated: Therefore, as they reſted ſatisfy'd, that his Majeſty, by his Royal Prudence, would prevent their being drawn into Example; ſo they aſſur'd his Majeſty of their ready Concurrence and Aſſiſtance, in a parliamentary Way, to preſerve and maintain the (r) Dependance and Subordination of Ireland, to the Imperial Crown of this Realm: And they humbly beſought his Majeſty, That he would give effectual Orders to prevent any Thing of the like Nature for the future, and the pernicious Conſequences of what was paſs'd, by puniſhing and diſcountenancing Thoſe that had been guilty thereof: That he would take all neceſſary Care, that the Laws which direct and reſtrain the Parliament of Ireland in their Actings, be not evaded, but ſtrictly obſerv'd: And that he would diſcourage all Things, which might, in any Degree, leſſen the Dependance of Ireland upon England." To this his Majeſty's Anſwer was, "That he would take Care That what was complain'd of, might be prevented and redreſs'd, as the Commons deſir'd."

A. D. 1698. and Addreſs to the King.

Reſolutions of the Houſe thereon.

Nor did the Jealouſy at this Time, entertain'd of the Government in Ireland, end here: On the contrary, Complaints having been made to the Houſe, That Woollen Manufactures were ſetting up and carrying on in that Kingdom, to the manifeſt Detriment Proceedings on the Woollen Manufactures of Ireland.

(r) Which from Circumſtances is preſum'd to be much antienter than is commonly imagin'd: For a certain Author, who undertook to continue the Same Chronology, ſpecifies, That Lanfranc, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Temp. Guil. I. conſecrated Donate, a Monk of that Church, to the See of Dublin, petente Rege, clero & populo Hiberniæ, or by the Requeſt of the Iriſh Parliament: And it is farther obſerv'd by other Authors, deeply verſ'd in our Antiquities, That in King Edgar's Charters, Oſmund's Law, and divers of the Same Hiſtorians, the Subjection of Ireland to England is many ways evidenc'd, tho' our Lawyers are ſo courteous as to free that Country from our Laws and Cuſtoms till towards the End of King John: And to aſſert, that our Parliament did not bind them till Poyning's Law in Henry VII.

A.D. 1698. ment of Thoſe which conſtituted the Staple Trade of This; the Houſe at firſt order'd a Bill to be prepar'd for quieting the Apprehenſions entertain'd, and the Miſchiefs which might actually follow from the Matter complain'd of: But thinking it more prudent to compliment the King with ſuch an Act of Popularity of this Side of the Water, and of Aggrievance on the other, they had recourſe to another Expedient, which was an Addreſs to the following Effect.

"That being very ſenſible, That the Wealth and Power of this Kingdom, do, in a great Meaſure, depend on the preſerving the Woollen Manufacture, as much as poſſible, entire to this Realm, that they thought it became them, like their Anceſtors, to be jealous of the Eſtabliſhment, and the Encreaſe thereof elſewhere, and to uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to prevent it: That they could not without Trouble obſerve, That Ireland, which is dependant on, and protected by England, in the Enjoyment of all they have, and which is ſo proper for the Linen Manufacture, the Eſtabliſhment and Growth of which there, would be ſo enriching to themſelves, and ſo profitable to England, ſhould of late apply itſelf to the Woollen Manufacture, to the great Prejudice of the Trade of this Kingdom, and ſo unwillingly promote the Linen Trade, which would benefit both Nations: That the Conſequence thereof, would neceſſitate his Majeſty's Parliament of England to interpoſe, to prevent this Miſchief, unleſs his Majeſty, by his Authority and great Wiſdom, ſhould find Means to ſecure the Trade of England, by making the Subjects of Ireland perſue the joint Intereſt of both Kingdoms: Wherefore they implor'd his Majeſty's Protection and Favour in this Matter; and that he would make it his Royal Care, and enjoin all thoſe he employ'd in Ireland, to uſe their utmoſt Diligence to hinder the Exportation of Wool from Ireland, (except to be imported hither) and for the diſcouraging the Woollen Manufactures, and encouraging the Linen Manufactures in Ireland; to which the Commons of England ſhould always be ready to give their utmoſt Aſſiſtance." To this Addreſs his Majeſty made anſwer, "That he ſhould do all that in him lay to promote the Trade of England; and to diſcourage the Woollen, and encourage the Linen, Manufacture in Ireland."

A new Act to reſtrain the Exportation of Wool, &c.

But, as the French Refugees, which, during this Reign, had fled from Perſecution at home, and taken Sanctuary here, had brought over the Silk Manufactures of France along with them, ſo the French, as if by way of Reprizal, having ſeduc'd Woollen Manufacturers from hence, and ſet up a great Work in Picardy, it was thought expedient to bring in a new Act for explaining and better executing the former Acts againſt exporting Wool, Fuller's-Earth, and Scouring-Clay, which was brought in, perfected, and paſs'd into an Act accordingly.

Further Proceedings for relation to the Army.

Again: During the ſame Interval, Thoſe who had rais'd ſuch a Flame, both within Doors and without, againſt a Standing-Army, kept their Eye on every Motion of the Court, A.D. 1698. with regard to that tender Point, during the whole Courſe of the Seſſion, as we farther collect from Trenchard's Hiſtory of Standing-Armies; who ſays, "That, inſtead of complying with the foregoing Reſolutions of the Houſe of Commons, with regard to the Diſbanding the Army, They (the Court, that is to ſay) reform'd a certain Number of Men, out of every Troop and Company, and kept up all the Officers, who are the moſt eſſential and chargeable Part of an Army, the private Soldiers being to be rais'd again in a few Days, whenever they pleaſe; which was ſuch a Sort of Diſbanding, as every Officer would have made (and always did make, when occaſion offer'd) in his Company for his private Advantage: So that all the Effect of ſuch a Reform, was to hinder the Officer from falſe Muſters, and to ſave the Pay of a few common Soldiers. But, continues He, This would not ſatisfy the People, and therefore they diſbanded ſome Regiments of Horſe, Foot, and Dragoons, and thought of that profound Expedient, of ſending a great many more to Ireland; as if our Grievance was not the Fear of being enſlav'd by them, but leſt they ſhould ſpend their Money amongſt us: Which Project was, however, ſo tranſparent, that they durſt not rely upon it; and therefore gave out, That, as faſt as Money could be got, they would diſband more Regiments; upon which a ſuitable Expectation was rais'd; and ſeveral Times it was taken Notice of in Parliament; to which it was always anſwer'd, That the Delay was owing to nothing but want of Money: While, on the other Hand, it was affirm'd in all public Places without Doors, That Eighteen Regiments more would be diſbanded: Nay, ſome went ſo far as to name the very Regiments: And Mr. Trenchard adds, That he had heard it with great Aſſurance affirm'd, That the King had ſign'd the Order in Council: And he concludes the Section in theſe Words, "Thus the Seſſion was worn out, till the Houſe of Commons, tir'd with Expectation, addreſs'd his Majeſty, That he would be pleas'd to give Orders, That a Liſt be laid before the Houſe of the Army diſbanded, and intended to be diſbanded; and of the Officers Names who are to have Half-Pay: And his Majeſty was pleas'd to anſwer, That he would comply with the Deſire of the Houſe, as ſoon as conveniently he could: But the Parliament ſitting not above a Month afterwards, his Majeſty ſent them no farther Anſwer."

The Houſe, moreover, duly conſidering what conſequence a ſerious Regard to the Duties of Religion and Morality were of to a State, waited upon his Majeſty in a Body, with a ſolemn Addreſs, in which they complain'd both of the Neglect and ill Examples of the Magiſtracy, and the general Degeneracy and Corruption of the People, to the great Scandal and Reproach of the Proteſtant Religion, and to the Diſhonour and Prejudice of his Majeſty's Government; beſought his Majeſty, to iſſue his Royal Proclamation, commanding all his Judges, Juſtices

A. D. 1697. ces of Peace, &c. to put the Laws in force against Prophaneness and Immorality: As also, that the said Proclamation might be read at least four Times a Year, in all Churches, Chapels, &c. as also at the Assizes and Quarter Sessions, just before the Charge was given: And that he would give effectual Orders for the Suppressing of all pernicious (s) Books and Pamphlets, containing impious Doctrines against the Holy Trinity, (which abounded at this Time) &c. To which his Majesty was King's Answer. pleas'd to answer, That he could not but be very well pleas'd with an Address of that Nature: That he would give immediate Directions in the several Particulars desir'd: But that he could with some more effectual Provision might be made for the suppressing the said pernicious Books and Pamphlets.

New Regulations of the African Trade. Taking, also, the African Trade into Consideration, which, like that of the East-Indies, was in the Hands of a Company, and for that Reason was said to be equally mismanag'd, the House observ'd a middle Course between the said Company (who, to maintain their Charter, insisted, That the said Trade could no otherwise be carry'd on, than under the Protection of their Forts and Settlements) and the Interlopers; who, on the contrary, insisted on the Necessity of laying it open: For they left the Management, as before, in the Hands of the Company; and yet open'd the Trade, in some Measure, to the said Interlopers, on condition, that they paid to per Cent. on all the Goods they carry'd to the African Coast, to the Company, towards the Maintenance of their said Forts and Settlements.

Proceedings against certain Merchant-Smugglers. Lastly, certain of the French Refugees, having been incorporated by Charter, in order to furnish the Kingdom with Alamodes and Lustrings, which, before the War, we had always been furnish'd with from France; a French Passport having been intercepted by the Government in the Year 1695-6, inclos'd in a Letter sign'd G. and B. and it having been discover'd by the Duke of Shrewsbury in April 1697, that these two Initials stood for Gaudet and Burreau, two French Merchants in London, his Grace, by his Warrant dated in June following, attach'd their Books and Papers, no doubt with a View to trace out some Plot or treasonable Correspondence at least: But all that appear'd was, That the said Merchants were in Confederacy with several more, in smuggling French Lustrings, Alamodes, &c. and the French Pass they made use of, was for the Vessel they employ'd in that Service; which being imparted by the Lords Justices to the said Company, they undertook, for their own Sakes, to push the Enquiry, and the Government to carry on the Prosecution, against the Delinquents.

Accordingly, the Company having provided sufficient Matter of Evidence, and a sufficient Number of Witnesses to verify it, apply'd to the House of Commons by Petition: This Petition of theirs was refer'd to the Committee of Trade, at the Head of which was Sir Rowland Gwynne; before whom the Cause was open'd by Baker, the Solicitor of the Treasury: After which the Company undertook for themselves, and produc'd their Witnesses, Facts, &c. among the Latter of which, some of the most extraordinary were, That, in the Course of little more than a Year, those illicit Importations had reduc'd the Number of Looms employ'd by them, from 768, to between 40 and 50: Whereas, if it had not been for the said illicit Practices, they made no doubt of having had treble the first of those Numbers so employ'd in the said Manufactures: That these confederate Smugglers had also imported the same Kind of French Goods from Holland as well as France; the French Seals having first been taken off, and Dutch Seals put on in their Stead: That one de la Motte, of Rotterdam, a Factor for the Merchants of Lions, had shipp'd no less than 25,000 Pieces of the said Goods on board English and Dutch Men of War, in great Boxes, which were consign'd to several French Merchants in London, particularly nam'd: That Gaudet and Seignoret, two of those Confederates, were Committee-Men of the Lustring Company, and under an Oath to be faithful to the same: And that in farther Violation of the said Oath, the said Gaudet, &c. having receiv'd Intelligence, That Lord Galway, while his Majesty's Minister to the Duke of Savoy, was instructed to solicit the Importation of English Woolens into his Royal Highness's Dominions, Custom-free, did make Interest at Turin to frustrate the said Solicitations, which were frustrated accordingly, &c. And, upon the whole, the Committee having made their Report, it was resolv'd, agreable thereto, "That the Manufacture of Lustrings and Alamodes, set up by the Lustring Company, had been very advantageous and beneficial to this Kingdom, by employing great Numbers of the Poor, and preventing the Exportation of our Coin, for purchasing of those Commodities: That there had been a very destructive Trade carried on with France, during the War, for importing Alamodes and Lustrings, contrary to Law, whereby the King had been defrauded of his Customs, and our own Manufactures greatly discourag'd: That the same Vessels which imported Alamodes and Lustrings, did export great Quantities of our Wool: That thereby Intelligence had been carried into France, during the War, and the Enemies of the Government had been convey'd from Justice, out of this Kingdom, (particularly (t) Cardel Goodman) and had had frequent Opportunities of returning hither,

A. D. 1698.

Evidence of the Lustring-Company.

Resolutions against them.

(s) About this Time, by his Majesty's Encouragement, a Society was constituted for the Reformation of Manners; which the dirty Practices of their Informers, and other Familiars, have since brought into Contempt and Disuse.

(t) The Evidence to this Fact was given by one Saunders, the Master of one of the Smuggling Vessels, who depos'd, That in October 1696, one Pierce contracted with him for 100 Guineas to carry Passengers into France, whom he afterwards knew to be one Colonel Ingram, his Lady, their Niece, the Lady's Woman, one Mr. Williams Co-Brazen, and Cardel Goodman; And that they were landed at Calais; but did not specify how he came by this After-knowledge.

A.D. 1668. hither, to carry on their pernicious Defigns: That by the intercepted Letter, wherein the French King's Paſſport was inclos'd, compar'd with Mr. John Goudet's Hand-writing, and the Copy of the ſaid Letter enter'd in Mr. Goudet's Copy-Book of Letters, and by Mr. Goudet's Seal, wherewith the Paſſport-Letter was ſealed, it did appear, That the ſaid Paſſport was procur'd and paid by the ſaid Mr. Goudet and Company: That the ſaid Paſſport was ſent back in order to be renew'd, the Time for which it was granted being expir'd: That Goudet, Longueville, and Barreau, were Partners during the Time this Smuggling Trade was carry'd on: That Mr. Stephen Seignoret, Mr. Baudoin, and Mr. Santini, were alſo Partners, and had imported great Quantities of French Alamodes and Luſtrings: That Mr. Peter de Hearce dealt with ſeveral Perſons in France, for French Silks, and other Commodities from France, under ſeveral fictitious and counterfeit Names: That John du Maiſtre, Peter Baraillau, Diana Maſon, John Auriol, Iſaac Auriol, John Paucier, John Guyguier, and ſeveral others, had been concern'd in the Smuggling Trade: That a Bill be brought in for the Encouragement of the Luſtring Company, and the more effectual preventing the fraudulent Importation of Luſtrings and Alamodes, and the Exportation of Wool and Fullers-Earth: That John Goudet, David Barreau, Peter Longueville, Stephen Seignoret, Rene Bauduoin, Nicholas Santini, and Peter de Hearce, (to whom were afterwards added John Pierce, John du Maiſtre, and John Auriol) be impeach'd before the Lords of high Crimes and Miſdemeanors; and be taken into the Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms, attending this Houſe: That the reſt of the Smugglers be proſecuted by Mr. Attorney General, and Mr. Sollicitor General: And, laſtly, That Mr. Hilary Reneu, for the great Service done this Kingdom, in promoting the Manufacture of Alamodes and Luſtrings, and diſcovering the fraudulent Importation thereof, and Exportation of Wool, deſerv'd the Countenance and Protection of the Government; and that a Bill for naturalizing of him and his Family, be permitted to paſs this Houſe gratis."

They are impeach'd,

Accordingly, Articles of Impeachment having been prepar'd, and carry'd up to the Lords, the Smugglers put in their Anſwers, and the Committee of the Houſe of Commons made their Replications; a great Diſpute aroſe between both Houſes of Parliament; the Lords inſiſting, That the Trials ſhould be at the Bar of their Houſe, where the Committee of the Commons muſt have ſtood; and the Commons, on the other Hand, inſiſting upon their having a convenient Place appointed for the Managers of the Impeachments againſt the Priſoners, whereby they might be the better enabled to make good their Charge againſt them: This gave occaſion for a Conference, which being ineffectual to accommodate the Matter, the Commons reſolv'd, That they would be preſent at the Trials, as a Committee of the whole Houſe, in regard the Affair was of great Conſequence to the Trade of the Kingdom: Whereupon the Lords acquainted the Commons, that they would proceed upon the Monday following upon the Trials in Weſtminſter, where Seats would be provided for both Houſes. All this while the Perſons accus'd had conceiv'd no ſmall Hopes of Impunity, from the Diſagreement between Lords and Commons; but when they ſaw that Matter adjuſted, Eight of them confeſs'd themſelves guilty: Whereupon the Commons went up to the Bar of the Lords Houſe, and their Speaker, in their Name, having demanded Judgment againſt the ſaid Offenders, the Lords impos'd a Fine of 10,000 l. upon Stephen Seignoret; of 3000 l. on Rhene Baudoin; of 1500 l. on John Goudet and Nicholas Santini; of 1000 l. on Peter Dihearce, John Pierſe, and John Dumaiſtre; and of 500 l. on David Barreau; and order'd, that they ſhould be impriſon'd in Newgate, until they had paid their reſpective Fines. And, leſt any Favourite ſhould be gratify'd with theſe Sums, the Commons addreſs'd his Majeſty, That they might be appropriated to Greenwich Hoſpital, which his Majeſty order'd to be done accordingly; to the great Diſappointment of ſeveral greedy Courtiers: Whether thoſe Lords who, it is ſaid, perſuaded the ſaid accus'd Perſons to plead Guilty, who ſhall ſay?

A.D. 1668.

and fin'd,

[Boyer.]

[The true Picture of a Modern Whig, Part I. P. 14.]

And now all that remains to complete the Seſſion, is to give his Majeſty's Speech at the Cloſe of it, which was conceiv'd in the following Terms.

King's Speech.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

I cannot take Leave of ſo good a Parliament, without publicly acknowledging the Senſe I have of the great Things you have done for my Safety and Honour, and for the Support and Welfare of my People.

Every one of your Seſſions hath made good this Character: The happy uniting of us in an Aſſociation for our mutual Defence; the remedying the Corruption of the Coin, which had been ſo long growing upon the Nation; the Reſtoring of Credit; the giving Supplies in ſuch a Manner for carrying on the War, as did, by God's Bleſſing, produce an honorable Peace; and, after that, the making ſuch Proviſions for our common Security, and towards ſatisfying the Debts contracted in ſo long a War, with as little Burden to the Kingdom as is poſſible, are ſuch Things as will give a laſting Reputation to this Parliament, and will be a Subject of Emulation to thoſe which ſhall come after.

Beſides all this, I think myſelf perſonally oblig'd to return my Thanks to you, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, for the Regard you have had to my Honour, by the eſtabliſhing of my Revenue.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

There is nothing I value ſo much as the Eſteem and Love of my People: And as for their Sakes I avoided no Hazards during the War, ſo my whole Study and Care ſhall be to improve and continue to them the Advantages and Bleſſings of Peace.

And I earneſtly deſire you all, in your ſeveral Stations, to be vigilant in preſerving Peace

A. D. 1697. Peace and good Order, and in a due and regular Execution of the Laws, eſpecially thoſe againſt Profaneneſs and Irreligion."

What a Strain of Grace and Acknowledgment! Whether natural or artificial, may be collected beſt from a Conſideration of his Majeſty's known Temper and uſual Deportment; from his Senſibility in the Affair of the Army; and from the Streſs uſually laid on Royal Recommendations in the Caſe of a general Election, which was to follow: This Parliament having ſat its limited Time!

Parliament Diſſolv'd.

It was the 5th of July when this Speech was deliver'd; and tho' the Parliament was that Day prorogu'd only to the 2d of Auguſt, on the 7th it was diſſolv'd by Proclamation, and a new one was ſummon'd to meet on the 24th of Auguſt.

But before we procede farther on with the Courſe of the Year, it will be expedient juſt to touch on a few Incidents which happen'd in the Commencement of it, viz.

Caſe of the Earl of Glencarty.

The Earl of Glencarty, who had marry'd one of Lord Sunderland's Daughters, and who, during the War, had made his Eſcape out of the Tower to France, for which, and the treaſonable Matters alledg'd againſt him, he had been attainted, preſuming on the Peace, or rather on the Protection of his Father-in-Law, not only return'd to England, but went directly to his Lady; out of whoſe Apartment he was the next Morning taken by a Meſſenger of State, upon the Information of the Lord Spencer, his Brother-in-Law: But inſtead of being ſent to Newgate, as the Warrant directed, he was, by the Interpoſition of Lord Sunderland, ſent out of the Kingdom.

[Boyer.]

Whitehall burn'd.

Another of theſe Incidents was the Burning down the Palace of Whitehall, which for a long Courſe of Years, had been the Reſidence of our Kings, and well deſerv'd to be ſo, on account of its admirable Situation. The Fire began in a Laundry; and as its Beginning was owing to Careleſſneſs, ſo the Ruin caus'd by it was owing to the Selfiſhneſs of thoſe who were then in poſſeſſion of the Lodgings: For they, it ſeems, were more ſolicitous to ſave the Furniture, which was partly their own, than the Building, which they held only during Pleaſure: In conſequence of which, all the Royal Apartments, except the Banqueting-Houſe, were (u) deſtroy'd: And our Sovereigns, in order, we muſt ſuppoſe, to oblige their Favourites with Manſions on this delectable Spot, have ſince choſe to keep their Court in that Gothic, irregular, unſightly Heap, which at this Day, by the Courteſy of England, is call'd the Royal Palace of St. James's.

Proceſs and Iſſue of Lord Portland's Embaſſy.

Of the Earl of Portland's Embaſſy to the Court of France, mention has been already made: But of the Expence and Prodigality of it, which was without Bound, a bare mention, and we have no room for more, would hardly be ſufficient: Some of our Writers tell us, the Oſtentation of our Court on this Occaſion, coſt no leſs than 80,000 l. and Kennet, Oldmixon, &c. ſeem tranſported with their own Deſcriptions of it. The Firſt tells us, The French were aſtoniſh'd at the Grandeur and Opulence of the Engliſh Nation: And the Laſt, That nothing like it had been ſeen at Paris before, in the Reign of Lewis le Grand: But Others, who were Eye-witneſſes of his Entry, and who acknowledge the Splendor of it, ſay, The French derided every Part of it: And, it is unqueſtionably true, That ſuch officious Compliments as Theſe, are more for the Honour of Thoſe they are made to, than Thoſe who make them.

A. D. 1698.

[Mem. and Obſerv. on the Occurrences of Europe, 1712. P. 8.]

But his Majeſty had, before This, diſcover'd his extreme Forwardneſs to make a ſort of Court to his good Brother of France: For having receiv'd a Notification by Letter of the Duke of Burgundy's Marriage, on the 21ſt of December, he diſpatch'd the Duke of St. Albans that Day Sennight with his Felicitations on that Occaſion.

Gazette, No. 3351.

Nor is this all: For whereas Lord Portland made his public Entry into Paris, February 27, the Count de Tallard, his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty's Embaſſador Extraordinary to the Court of England, did not arrive in London till the 19th of March: His public Entry was not made till the 16th of May; and had more the Air of a Leſſon of Frugality to us, than of an Attempt to vye with us in Splendor, or of any Purpoſe to flatter us into a good Opinion of them.

Our Hiſtorians, moreover, inſinuate, what indeed is ſcarce to be believ'd, That among the Points of Negotiation, committed to Lord Portland, one was to ſolicit the Removal of King James to Avignon: But that, notwithſtanding all the Diſtinctions heap'd upon him, his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty would not ſo much as hear the Propoſal; and that, upon the whole, if it ſhould be admitted, That no Embaſſador was ever more honour'd, no Embaſſador was ever leſs ſucceſsful.

But to get rid of ſo fulſome a Subject for good and all, on the 8th of June his Excellency left Paris; having long before had the Mortification to be inform'd from his Maſter's Cloſet, That while he was thus figuring it at the Court of France, the Earl of Jerſey, a near Relation of the Favourite Court-Lady, and conſequently an Inſtrument of the Faction againſt him, was appointed his Succeſſor: "And upon his Return, ſays Biſhop Burnet, not being able to bear the viſible Superiority which his Rival Keppel was, in his Abſence, grown up to, he took Occaſion from a ſmall Preference that was given to the Latter, in prejudice of his own Poſt as Groom of the Stole, to withdraw from Court, and lay down all his Employments. The King, continues the ſame Author, us'd all poſſible Means to divert him from this Reſolution, but without prevailing on him: He conſented to ſerve the King

He lays down all his Employments on his Return.

ſtill

(u) A Circumſtance which the Court Ear-wigs of thoſe Times took a malicious Advantage of, in certain Rhimes, to be ſevere on the abdicated King, who, in Alluſion to his Statue, ſtill remaining in Privy-Garden, and then ſurrounded with the Flames, they ſaid, had never ſtood Fire before.

A. D. 1698. still in his Affairs, but would not return to any Poſt in the Houſhold."

It is now proper to inſert another of thoſe Letters from the King to Lord Galway, his Confident in Ireland, which have been communicated to the Public by Mr. Tindal, and which contain ſo much of the Secret of his Majeſty's Government, with regard both to Civil and Military.

A Letter from the King to Lord Galway.

It was dated from Kenſington July 16, and is thus tranſlated from the original French: "Tho' I have largely explain'd to the Chancellor of Ireland my Sentiments about the Iriſh Affairs, I am willing, however, to write to you, to tell you, That it was never of ſuch Importance (x) to have, at preſent, a good Seſſion of Parliament, not only in Regard to my Affairs of that Kingdom, but eſpecially of This here: The chief Thing that muſt be try'd to be prevented is, That the Iriſh Parliament takes no Notice of what has paſs'd in This here; and that you make effectual Laws for the Linen Manufacture, and diſcourage, as far as poſſible, the Woollen: Theſe (y) are the Two moſt material Points you have to accompliſh; and the Third is, the neceſſary Supply for the Maintenance of the Army, of which you know the Importance, and to try to get as much as you can; ſince, after this Seſſion, I ſhould be very glad not to be oblig'd, this good while, to have another Parliament in Ireland: I have ſent Orders for embarking at Oſtend the five French Regiments; and, inſtead of my own Regiment of Dragoons of Eppinger, I will ſend you two Regiments of Foot, which will be much the ſame as to Expence: Bathwaite (Secretary at War) will write to you about the Eſtabliſhment and Appointment of the Pay of the Forces: I muſt tell you, I am well ſatisfy'd with the Chancellor of Ireland: At his firſt coming here to the Parliament, he committed a great (z) Overſight, and all the Miniſtry here are much incens'd againſt him, as well as the Whig-Party: But in Ireland it is juſt the contrary; it is the Tories: So he will find it hard to behave in ſuch a Manner, as not to be involv'd in Difficulties: If bad Succeſs attends you in the Parliament, it is certain, the Blame will here be laid on him: I thought it neceſſary to inform you of this Circumſtance, that you may take your Meaſures accordingly: Be always aſſur'd of my Eſteem.

W. R."

On the very Day this Letter was dated, (a) his Majeſty, in Council, was pleas'd to declare his Intention to go over to Holland for a ſhort Time; and appointed the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor Somers, the Lord Privy-Seal Pembroke, the Lord Steward Devonſhire, the Earls of Dorſet, Marlborough, and Romney; the Earl of Orford, firſt Commiſſioner of the Admiralty and Treaſurer of the Navy; and Mr. Montagu, who, on the 1ſt of May, had been made firſt Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, in the Room of Lord Godolphin, to be Lord Juſtices of the Kingdom in his Abſence: So that neither of the Secretaries of State, it ſeems, were permitted to have any Share in this delegated Royalty: The Duke of Shrewſbury being excluded, either becauſe he was in Diſgrace at Court, or becauſe the Court was in Diſgrace with him; (for it is ſcarce poſſible to be deciſive on ſo delicate a Point) and Mr. Vernon, to ſave Appearances: For, having till the laſt Seſſion of Parliament ſerv'd under Lord Shrewſbury, it was held altogether indecent to inveſt him with an Honour which that Nobleman was deny'd.

Lords Juſtices appointed.

But even of Thoſe who were thus nominated, Biſhop Burnet takes Care to inform us, only Three had any Share of the Secret; namely, Lord Somers, Lord Orford and Montagu; the firſt of whom he characteriſes not only as one of the ableſt and moſt incorrupt Judges that ever preſided in the Chancery-Court, but as a Firſt-Rate Genius in Government-Affairs, which ſo recommended him to his Majeſty, that he conſider'd him beyond all his Miniſters, and repos'd a ſuitable Confidence in him on all Occaſions: Of Lord Orford, he ſays no more, in effect than this: That in his Diſtribution of the Preferments in his Province, he conſider'd nothing but Zeal for the Government, or rather that Faction of it in which he was a Leader: And this Zeal, as before hinted, paſſed with him for every kind of Merit; ſo that the Government became liable to many ſiniſter Imputations on account of his Partialities; which were too obvious to be overlook'd, and too flagrant to be excus'd: And, laſtly, of Montagu, he ſays, That he had gain'd ſuch a viſible Aſcendant in the Houſe of Commons, over all who were zealous for the King's Service, that he gave the Law to the Reſt, which he did always with great Spirit, but, ſometimes, with too aſſuming an Air.

Characters of the Triumvirate in Power.

Theſe are the Colours in which he hath ſet forth this Triumvirate: But theſe Colours are not altogether ſo lively as they ought to have been, if there is any Truth in Tradition thro' the nobleſt Hands, or in Manuſcript Authorities, which correſpond with them.

The Characters given of them by others.

In his Capacity of Chancellor, Lord Somers is undoubtedly irreproachable: And he that did not acknowledge his Abilities in State-Affairs, muſt either have none of his own, or, thro' Prejudice and Perverſeneſs, muſt have forfeited the Uſe of them: It was to his Abilities as a Stateſman as well as a Lawyer, he ow'd his Advancement: His Father was an Attorney at Worceſter, who M. S. left him a bare Competency and no more: He was long a Practitioner at the Bar, before his Merits were ſuitably diſtinguiſh'd: And if it had not been for his political Connections

(x) Perhaps this Paſſage ſhould have run thus, as, as preſent, to have, &c.

(y) Perhaps it ſhould be thus, Theſe are Two or the moſt material Points, &c.

(z) What is no where explain'd.

(a) There was alſo a Poſtſcript in theſe Words, "I ſhall ſet out in Two Days for Holland: I ſend you back the Prince of Conti's Letter, and approve much of your Anſwer to him: I had not an Opportunity to let you know it before."

A. D. 1698. rections with Lord Shaftſbury, Sir William Jours, and the other great Leaders of the Oppoſition to the Court of King Charles II. very probably had never attained thoſe Honors which he deſerv'd and became ſo well: For it is not the leaſt of his Excellencies, that, in Point of Addreſs, whether adviſing as a Miniſter, attending in the Circle as a Courtier, preſiding in the Houſe of Lords as Speaker, conferring or altercating with Foreign Miniſters, giving Audience and Diſpatch to Suitors, or doing the Honors of his Table, where he became all Things to all Men, he was the moſt extraordinary Man of his Times:—But when Juſtice has made theſe Acknowledgments, ſhe will think herſelf oblig'd to add, That theſe ſurpaſſing Talents, this all-comprehenſive Knowledge, did not operate with the ſame Vigour in the Cabinet as on the Bench: That Firmneſs which had withſtood the Storm, melted in the Sun-ſhine; and, having once ſuggeſted what was right, he did not think himſelf oblig'd to withſtand what was wrong; at leaſt, in ſuch Points as the King had ſet his Heart upon; tho' they were often ſuch as were ſcarce to be reconcil'd either to his Majeſty's printed Profeſſions, or to the Conſtitution, the Intereſt, and the Honor of England: In ſuch Caſes the Courtier was too hard for the Patriot; and he who had pleaded ſo ſtrongly for the Right of Reſiſtance, acted as if Reſignation and Compliance were indiſpenſable Duties.

Of Lord Orford, enough has been ſaid already: But of Mr. Montagu, ſo little, that ſome additional Features are neceſſary, even to furniſh out a Sketch of his Portrait. He was deſcended from a collateral Branch of the Montagu's Earls of Manchester, had been educated at Cambridge, as ſome ſay with a View of taking Orders: While there, he had diſcover'd an Inclination to Poetry, and obtain'd ſome Reputation by a Piece, call'd, The City Mouſe and Country Mouſe, in anſwer to The Hind and Panther of Dryden: But, being a Man of ſhrew'd Diſcernment, and much Ambition, he ſoon diſcover'd, That the Revolution had given a new Turn to the Current of Affairs: That the King having many Wants, would have occaſion for ſuitable Supplies: That, conſequently the Houſe of Commons would be the great Road to Preferment: And that he who, by any Means, could make himſelf conſiderable there, might carve for himſelf: Inſtead, therefore, of ſneaking into the Church, he reſolv'd to faſten upon the State; to turn Declamer firſt, and Projector afterwards; and by haranguing boldly on one Hand, and undertaking deſperately on the other, to make his Fortune: Accordingly, he ſoon diſtinguiſh'd himſelf as a thorough-pac'd Man in each of thoſe Provinces: And was almoſt as ſoon diſtinguiſh'd by Lord Sunderland, as a fit Inſtrument to be ſet up againſt Lord Godolphin; and as his, Sunderland's, Subſtitute to manage the Houſe of Commons: But tho' he could, for a while, condeſcend to acknowledge a Superior, it became viſible in Time, That he could not bear an Equal. Thus when the Court-Junto confederated againſt the firſt of thoſe Lords, he alſo turn'd againſt him, for the Sake of ſupplanting the Laſt. To unite Morality and Policy, is, it ſeems, one of the hardeſt Taſks in the World: Lord Sunderland had been a double Dealer to his Maſter, and Montagu was a double Dealer to him: Each had his Purpoſe to ſerve, and to ſerve that Purpoſe, made no Scruple to ſacrifice every other Conſideration:—But, with what Facility ſoever he made his Way to the Head of the Treaſury-Board, or how abſolutely ſoever he exercis'd his Dominion there, neither the Advantages uſually attendant on noble Birth, nor the Offering he had made to the Graces and Muſes, nor the familiar Converſe of the accompliſh'd Great, could poliſh off the Ruſt he had acquir'd in a College, or abate that dogmatical Stiffneſs ſo much in faſhion there, ſo ridiculous every where elſe:—Indeed, he came young into Buſineſs; his Progreſs was ſwift; the Times yielded to him; and poſſibly that Sufficiency ſo natural to Youth and good Fortune, and the Flatteries his Situation expos'd him to, were alone anſwerable for theſe Blemiſhes: Beſides; his public Conduct was, perhaps, more obnoxious than his private Character: He was the Patron of Projectors as well as Poets: Among his Books and Papers, when ſold by Auction, there was a Collection of Projects in three Folio Volumes, which mark the Harpy-Spirit of the Times, if poſſibly, yet more ſtrongly than the Grants they produc'd; as they ſerve to ſhew, That ten Expedients were offer'd for one that was adopted: If he was not the Father of Corruption, he foſter'd it, as if all his Hopes were built upon it: And as to his Bargains with the Money-Jobbers, (to ſay nothing of the (b) uſurious Conditions on which they were made) they lye heavy on the Nation to this Day, and probably will ſo continue to the Day of Judgment.

A. D. 1698. M. S.

Particularly Dr. Davenant.

Dr. Davenant, who had been an Adventurer, tho' an unſucceſsful one, and of a lower Claſs, in the ſame way, loſes no Opportunity

(a) Dr. Davenant, having obſerv'd, That the old Eaſt-India Company neither propos'd or expected any Premium or Deduction whatſoever, for laying down the 200,000 l. which they offer'd, as a Depoſite for the two Millions they were to raiſe, adds, "Yet their Offer was diſcourag'd by ſome of our Men of Buſineſs; and the ſame Perſons have thought it reaſonable to allow to the New Company, (the Subſcription to which by the way was fill'd, for that very Reaſon, as ſoon as poſſible) a Premium of 62,500 l. which was defalk'd out of the firſt Payment of 200,000 l. part of which Premium is contrary to the expreſs Direction of the Act of Parliament." And he alſo takes care to remember, That, for circulating 3,000,000 in Exchequer-Bills, (which, in another Place, he informs us was a Project of Mordecai Abbot's, tho' aſſum'd by Mr. Montagu) bearing a current Intereſt of above 7½ per Cent. 225,000 l. was allow'd by way of Premium: And that the ſaid 3,000,000, when brought into Circulation, was no more than 2,700,000 l. ſo that no leſs than 300,000 l. was loſt by the way.

(b) In the Collection of Projects above-mention'd, I have ſeen one of the Doctor's, dated January 4, 1694. for raiſing 840,000 l. per Annum, by a new Exciſe on Malt, Soap, Candles, Hides and Skins.

A. D. 1698. portunity of laying open both his Character and his Conduct: But tho' he seems to be more particularly embitter'd againſt him, it cannot be ſaid, That he has been over-merciful to his two Co-partners in the Adminiſtration: And without this Key to the Doctor's Writings, ſome of the moſt pointed Paſſages in them, would in Time grow unintelligible.

—" They who come into a Government (ſays he, for Example, in his Diſcourſe, Of private Mens Duty in the Adminiſtration of public Affairs) with a Deſign to build a Family and make a Fortune; who are to get all, and can loſe nothing; who are chiefly recommended by their Boldneſs to undertake, and Readineſs to comply; whom no Counſels fright, and whom no Meaſures ſhock; ſuch Men are, indeed, the proper Inſtruments for introducing arbitrary Power, but can hardly be thought fit Miniſters in any Nation that is deſirous to preſerve its Freedom." And again, afterwards, " But at the Head of Theſe, they had always ſome one that was to be the forlorn Hope, and who would venture to go greater Lengths than any of his Companions: And for this Poſt they generally choſe a puſhing Man of bold Spirit, a ready Wit, a fluent Tongue, obſcure and low in the World, and even ſuch a one whom Fortune could hardly leave in a worſe Condition than ſhe found him."

In his Diſcourſe of Grants and Reſumptions, of which we ſhall have occaſion to ſpeak more largely hereafter, he has alſo many other Sallies of the ſame Tendency, all level'd at one or other of the Triumvirate: And, laſtly, in the Second Part of his True Picture of a Modern Whig, he ſerves them All up in theſe Words, to the Indignation of the Kingdom, " Suppoſe a Gentleman, (meaning Lord Orford) from 800*l. per Annum* comes to have at leaſt 500,000*l.* in his Pocket, and to be made an Earl, is he to ſit quiet? No; let him endeavour to get a Million, and to be a Duke. If a Lawyer, (meaning the Chancellor) from 300*l.* a Year in Eſtate and Practice both together, comes to have a good 6000*l.* a Year, is he to reſt there? No; let him think of doubling that Eſtate; and to be made an Earl. If another (meaning Montagu) with a Fifty Pound Annuity, and whoſe young Ambition look'd no higher than Tythe-Pigs, and a ſmall Parſonage, obtains a Barony, (which will be explan'd in its Place) the moſt profitable Employment in the State, and to be worth 80,000*l.* in Money, is he to bound his Hopes there? No; let him aſpire to be a Marquis, to have a blue Ribbon, and to be Lord High Treaſurer."

And now, with ſuch a Diverſity of Evidence concerning theſe great All-ſufficients of the Cabinet lying before us, we may proceed to ſuch Meaſures as were either the Reſult of their Advice, or receiv'd all the Sanctions they could give them; intermixing in our way, the other Incidents of the Year.

Firſt, then, the Hiſtorian of his own Times furniſhes us with the following Matter, in the following Words.

" Before the King went into Holland, which was in July, News came from Spain, that their King was dying: This Alarm was often given before, but it came much quicker now: The French, upon this, ſent a Fleet to lie before Cadiz, which came thither, at the Time that the Galleons were expected home from the Weſt-Indies: And it was apprehended, That, if the King had died, they would have ſeiz'd on all that Treaſure: We ſent a Fleet thither to ſecure them; but it came too late, to have done any Service, if it had been needed: This was much cenſur'd; but the Admiralty excus'd themſelves, by ſaying, That the Parliament was ſo late in fixing the Funds for the Fleet, that it was not poſſible to be ready ſooner than they were: The King of Spain recover'd for that Time; but it was ſo far from an entire Recovery, that a Relapſe was ſtill apprehended. When the King went to Holland, he left ſome ſealed Orders behind him, of which ſome of his Miniſters told me, they knew not the Contents till they were open'd: By theſe, the King order'd 16,000 Men to be kept up: For excuſing this, it was ſaid, That tho' the Parliament had, in their Votes, mention'd only 10,000 Land-men, to whom they had afterwards added 3000 Marines, and had rais'd only the Money neceſſary for that Number, yet no determin'd Number was mention'd in the Act itſelf: So, ſince the Apprehenſion of the King of Spain's Death made it adviſable to have a greater Force ready for ſuch an Accident, the King reſolv'd to keep up a Force ſomewhat beyond that, which the Houſe of Commons had conſented to: The leaving theſe Orders ſealed, made the whole Blame to be caſt ſingly on the King, as it ſcreen'd the Miniſters from a Share in this Counſel: And we have more than once known Miniſters put the Advices, that they themſelves gave, in ſuch a Manner on their Maſters, that in executing them, our Kings have taken more Care to ſhelter their Miniſters, than to preſerve themſelves."

Burnet's H. Council of abroad ſent to Cadiz, and of the ſecret Orders left by the King.

But oblig'd as we are to this Writer for the latter Part of this Section, in relation to the ſealed Orders, we cannot excuſe ourſelves from beſtowing ſome Correction on the Former.

Our own Gazetter do, indeed, make frequent mention of the frequent Indiſpoſitions of the King of Spain: But in That of June 23, (Twenty-ſix Days before the King departed for Holland) we are aſſur'd from Madrid, He was perfectly recover'd: As alſo, That nine of the Thirteen Galleons expected, on board of which were above thirty Millians of Dollars regiſter'd, did actually arrive at Cadiz on the 4th of that Month; and the Reſt ſoon after did the ſame. Now, it was not till the 11th of Auguſt, N. S. that the French Squadron came into the Bay of Cadiz; and his Catholic Majeſty did not relapſe till the 29th: Our Squadron under the Command of Aylmer, did not ſail from Spithead till the 13th of September, O. S. and, if that Commander had any other Commiſſion [illegible]

The Former proved in the laſt. No. 3305.

A. D. 1697. ties That of renewing and confirming our Treaty with the piratical States of Algiers, Tunis, and Tripoly, which he successfully discharg'd, it was a very different one from That of securing the Galleons against the Efforts of France, as will be made evident, when we resume the Thread of our foreign Affairs.

A Remark on the Latter. Again: If the Triumvirate manifested more Concern for themselves than for their Master, in exposing him personally to the Blame of his own unpopular Measures, with relation to the Army, it must be own'd, on the other Hand, That, in going out of the Kingdom, to spend the Summer, when he had no longer that Pretence for his Excuse, which he had so often made a Merit of, namely, Of exposing himself for the Service of the Public, at the Head of the Confederate-Army, his Majesty left the whole Burden of the ensuing general Election upon them; and render'd the Pressure of it so much the more grievous, by furnishing additional Matter of Clamour upon that Account. A. D. 1698.

The Nation had as yet been unaccustom'd to such occasional Desertions, at least in Time of Peace; and could ill brook the undue Preference so notoriously given to an inferior State. The Heads of the oppoling Faction had their Eyes open to every Advantage; and had as few Scruples as the Converters themselves, in making their own Use of every Impreſſion they could faſten upon every Mind: And whatſoever ſerv'd to enflame the Diſtempers of the Times, contributed to their Popularity, and conſequently to their Strength in the Houſe of Commons.

Among the Pamphlets ſet out by theſe Oppoſers on this Occaſion, there were nevertheleſs Two, which are laid on ſo broad and ſo conſtitutional a Baſis, that they deſerve not only to have a Place in our (d) Hiſtory, but to be made the Standard of Judgment in whatever relates to the Conduct of Parliaments:

(d) In the Former, ſpeaking of the original Uſe of Parliaments, and afterwards of the Abuſe, the Author proceeds in theſe Words, "I hope it need not be told, That they were at firſt intended for a Support to the King's juſt Prerogative, and a Protection to the Subjects in their juſt Rights and Priviledges; for maintaining all due Honor to the executive Power, and all ſuitable Reſpect and Encouragement to Thoſe who are entruſted with the Adminiſtration of the Laws; for a Poiſe and Balance between the two extreme contending Powers of abſolute Monarchy and Anarchy; for a Check and Curb to inſolent and licentious Miniſters, and a Terror to ambitious and overgrown Statеſmen; for giving their Advice to his Majeſty in all Matters of Importance; for making neceſſary Laws to preſerve or improve our Conſtitution, and abrogating ſuch as were found burdenſome and obſolete: for giving the King Money for defraying the Charges and Expences of the Government, or maintaining a neceſſary War againſt foreign and domeſtic Enemies; for examining and inſpecting the public Accounts, to know if their Money be apply'd to its true Uſe and Purpoſes: In ſhort, for the beſt Security imaginable to his Majeſty's Honour and Royal Dignities, and the Subjects Liberties, Eſtates, and Lives.

"This being the Nature and true Deſign of a Parliament, let us now ſee, Whether a Houſe of Commons, full of Officers and Court-Penſioners, will anſwer thoſe noble and laudable Ends of their Conſtitution: And here, indeed, I begin already to be aſham'd of my Undertaking. The Proof of the Negative is ſo ridiculous, that it looks too much like a Jeſt to aſk any one in his Wits, Whether a Parliament fill'd with Delinquents will ever call themſelves to Account; or what Account would be given if they ſhould? Whether an Aſſembly of public Robbers will ſentence one another to be puniſh'd, or to make Reſtitution? Whether it is poſſible our Grievances can be redreſs'd, that are committed by Perſons from whom there is no higher Power to appeal to? Whether there is any Hope of Juſtice where the Malefactors are the Judges? Whether his Majeſty can be rightly inform'd in Affairs relating to himſelf or the Public, when they are repreſented to him only by ſuch Perſons who deſign to abuſe him? Whether the public Accounts will be faithfully inſpected, by thoſe who embezzle the Money to their own uſe? Whether the King's Prerogative can be lawfully maintain'd by ſuch who only pervert it to their own ſiniſter Ends and Purpoſes? Whether a Parliament can be a true Ballance, where all the Weight lies in one Scale? Or, laſtly, Whether a Houſe of Commons can vote freely, who are neither propoſed with the Hopes and Surmiſes of engaging Places, or the ſtrong Fears of loſing them? Methinks, it is offering too much Violence to human Nature, to aſk ſuch Queſtions as Theſe."

And again, afterwards, "As for King James's Reign, tho' it was notoriouſly guilty of the Breach and Violation of moſt of our fundamental Laws, which ſufficiently juſtifies our Carriage towards him, yet we cannot ſay that his Miſmanagement is to be aſcrib'd to the Corruption of any Parliament ſitting in his Time: 'Tis true, indeed, he reap'd too much Advantage from the Conduct of the firſt-b'd Parliament in his Brother's Reign, and us'd all poſſible Endeavours to have ſuch another for himſelf, well knowing it to be the moſt effectual Means for carrying on his ruinous and deſtructive Projects; yet either from the miſtaken Conſtancy of the People, or want of Dexterity in his Miniſters, he was altogether diſtreſſed in his Expectations.

This miſerable Diſappointment of King James's Hopes, made way for our late glorious Revoluſion, which was brought about by the hearty Endeavours, and accompany'd with the moſt unfeign'd Vows and Wiſhes of all true Lovers of their Country, who, from hence expected a full Deliverance from their preſent Miſeries, and a ſure Remedy for their future Fears: For what Happineſs might not the People well hope for, under the Influence of Kings, ſupported by the beſt of Rules, viz. The general Conſent and Election of his People? We were fill'd with golden Dreams, not only of a ſure Security for our Eſtates and Lives, but an unſhaken Aſſurance of all Manner of Bleſſings a Nation is capable of enjoying: But tho' we have dreamt the Dreams, we have not ſeen the Viſions: And tho' the Nation is, by this Time, ſadly ſenſible, how wretchedly they have fallen ſhort of their expected Happineſs, yet they are not at all acquainted with the true Spring and Fountain from whence all their Misfortunes flow; which is, indeed, no other than that bare-fac'd and openly-ever'd Corruption, which, like an unverſal Leproſy, has ſo notoriouſly infected and over-ſpread both our Court and Parliament: "'Tis  'tis this that has hinder'd the paſſing a Bill ſo often brought into the Houſe for incapacitating Members to bear Offices": "'Tis This could not only indemnify, but honor, a Leading Member [meaning Montagu] for his audacious Proceeding in accepting a Grant of Lands, which, by the Parliament, had been ſet apart for the public Service: A Vote that ſhall ſtand recorded in their own Journals, to the never-dying Infamy of that mercenary Aſſembly: "'Tis This could make the ſame Perſon moſt confidently affirm, That he was ſure the Majority of the Houſe would agree to what he was going to ſay: "'Tis This could make Men of peaceable Diſpoſitions, and conſiderable Eſtates, vote for a Standing Army: "'Tis This could bring Admirals to confeſs the Fleet under their Command was no Security to us: "'Tis This could make us Men act againſt their own apparent Intereſts: In ſhort, 'tis This has infatuated our Prudence, ſhaken our Confidence, ſully'd our Reputation, and introduc'd a real Defection from all true Engliſh Principles: Bribery is, indeed, ſo ſure and unavoidable a way to deſtroy any Nation, that we may all ſit down and wonder, that ſo much as the very Name of a free Government is yet continued to us."

From the Latter of theſe Pieces, I ſhall give but one Section, viz. "All Mankind have obſerv'd, That in the ſecond Revolution unimprov'd by Parliament in the ſame Age; the one as ineffectual to the Good of England in the Hands of Patriots, Whigs, and Diſſenters, as the other was in the Hands of Cavaliers and Churchmen; which makes Men apt to conclude, the Fault lies in that Part of our Conſtitution on which we moſt rely: And the common Reaſon given by all, why Parliaments have miſmanag'd, is, That they are ſo manag'd themſelves: They do not only ſuppoſe them ſubjected to the Power of Kings, to the Influence of great Men, to the Arts of old and crafty Statеſmen, but accuſe them now of being led by beardleſs Politicians, by upſtart Prentices in Buſineſs, ſcribler ſupported by Fortune, Dignities, nor Experience: and only know'd up by projecting Inſolence: If This were the Caſe, To what are we reduc'd? This is not Phaeton unfortunately conducting the Horſes of the Sun, but a Carrier driving Pack-Horſes and Beaſts of Burden, which jog on their appointed Stages for their Maſters."

A. D. 1698. ments: The first of them is call'd, The Danger of mercenary Parliaments: The Second, Considerations on the Nature of Parliaments, and our present Elections: And Both of them are still extant in the State-Tracts of this Reign.

Proceedings in the general Election.

In the Cities of London and Westminster, however, the Courtiers had the Superiority: The Latter, in particular, was represented by Two First-Rate Ministers; namely, The first Commissioner of the Treasury Montagu, and Mr. Secretary Vernon: Nor ought it to be less unnoted, That Mr. Robert Walpole, since such a super-eminent Name in our Annals, was now, for the first Time, sent to Parliament as a Member for Castle-Rising: His Heart swelling, no doubt, with Emulation as often as the happy Name of Montagu rung in his Ears: And his Head full of Projects and Purposes, to distance him before the End of the Race; tho' in the first Heat, he had in a Manner distanc'd the whole Field.

As to the Elections in general, according to Burnet, they fell on such as were in the Interests of the Government: Meaning, it must be suppos'd, Whigs: For neither He, nor the Faction he belong'd to, would ever allow the Tories were so: Besides, the Words that follow, put the Matter out of doubt: For he adds, "Many of them had, indeed, some popular Notions which they had imbib'd under a bad Government, and thought they ought to keep them under a good one: So that Those who wish'd well to the Public, apprehended great Difficulties in managing them." Now none but Whigs had imbib'd these Notions; nay, these Notions constituted the very Essence of Whiggism; and all we are to infer from the Manner in which they are treated by the Bishop, is, That when the Whigs are in Power, the said Notions are bad; when out, they are good ones: And that Governments are good or bad, according to the Share the Whigs are permitted to have in them.

A Prorogation by Command of the Lords Justices.

But, to take Leave of this Topic for the Present, the Returns being all made, a Proclamation was set forth by the Lords Justices, importing, "That, whereas the Parliament, according to the Writs of Summons, was to have been held on the 24th of August, They, by the Advice of his Majesty's Privy-Council, for weighty Reasons them thereunto moving, did, thereby, publish and declare, That the said Parliament should not, on the said 24th of August, sit for the Dispatch of Business, but should then be prorogu'd to the 27th of September; after which convenient Notice should be given by Proclamation, of the Time when the Parliament should be holden, &c. That the Members of both Houses might order their Affairs accordingly.

The King, it may be remember'd, as often as the Parliament of Scotland assembled, had made his Excuses to them, for not meeting them in Person, by pleading the Duties incumbent on him in his military Capacity: But the War was now at an End: A Session was to be held: His Majesty had a favorite Point of his own to carry; and yet instead of suiting his Behaviour to his Professions, he appointed the Earl of Marchmont, who was Lord-Chancellor of that Kingdom, to open it by Commission; the Lord Viscount Seafield, Secretary of State, to be Lord President during the said Session; and Lord Polwarth to act as Lord Treasurer; under which Direction it was open'd accordingly, July the 19th, being the Day before he set out for Holland, in the usual Form: That is to say, by a Letter from the King, and correspondent Speeches from the Commissioner and President.

King's Letter to the Scots Parliament.

"His Majesty, in particular, most graciously thank'd them for the Proofs of their Loyalty and good Affection to his Person and Government, in the former Sessions of Parliament; assur'd them, That he design'd to give them such Encouragement upon all Occasions, as might make them find the Advantage of their Faithfulness and Duty to him: And also, That he was sensible of their chearful Assistance, during the Continuance of the War; which, by the Blessing of God, was now ended in an honorable Peace: Acquainted them, That the present Circumstances of Affairs, hindred him from prosecuting his Design of holding this Session in Person, but that he had appointed the Earl of Marchmont to represent his Royal Authority among them; being well satisfy'd of his Abilities for discharging this Trust; and having fully instructed him to do whatever might be necessary for the Support of the Government, and Safety of the Kingdom: That their Enemies Abroad, and those who were disaffected to the Government at Home, were still ready to lay hold on all Opportunities for carrying on their bad Design: And that, therefore, his Majesty judg'd it absolutely necessary for their Preservation, that the Forces upon the present Establishment should be continued; and he did not doubt but they would provide suitable Supplies for maintaining them. He then recommended to them, the raising Supplies to make good the Deficiencies of the Funds given in former Sessions, for the paying the Arrears that were due, and repairing the Forts and Garison Places: The taking effectual Methods to discourage Vice, Immorality, and Irreligion; and the proceeding with Unanimity, and cordial Concurrence, in the Dispatch of the Public Affairs; that it might appear to all, they were not unmindful of the happy Deliverance they had had, from the Dangers to which their Religion and Liberties were formerly expos'd: Assuring them, in the Conclusion, of his Care to maintain their Religion, Laws, and Liberties; and of his Royal Favour and Protection in all their Concerns." What follow'd, was an Adjournment to the 21st, when the Parliament met again, and appointed four Committees; One to consider of the Security of the Kingdom, One for Trade, another for Elections, and a Fourth for returning an Answer to his Majesty's Letter: Two Days after which, the first of these Committees having made their Report, it was voted, That the present Standing Forces

of

A. D. 1698. of this Kingdom, were neceſſary to be contin'u'd, the Houſe was pleas'd moſt complaiſantly to be of the ſame Mind; and thereupon another Committee was nam'd, to find Ways and Means to raiſe the neceſſary Sums for their Subſiſtance.

But, notwithſtanding this Complaiſance, (which was afterwards, as we ſhall find, moſt bitterly complain'd of) Scotland was at this Inſtant, and had been, for ſome Time paſs'd, inconceivably agitated with Anxiety and Reſentment, on account of their new commercial Company; and the injurious Treatment it had receiv'd, from the King and his Miniſters.

Proceedings in relation to the Scots trading Company.

What a Flame ſo comprehenſive a Charter, which took in Africa and both the Indies, accompany'd with ſuch extraordinary Privileges, had rais'd in England and Holland, we have already been made acquainted with: But what follow'd upon it, both at London and at Hamburg, where the Company ſolicited Subſcriptions to make up a Capital ſufficient for the Adventure they propos'd to undertake, remanes to be told, and will beſt be told out of their own Repreſentation to their own Parliament, which was in Subſtance as follows.

The Repreſentation of their General Court.

"That whereas the Wiſdom of the King and Parliament had thought fit, by two ſeveral ſolemn Acts and Letters Patent, under the Great Seal of that Kingdom, to eſtabliſh their Company with ſuch Power, Privileges, and Immunities, as were needful to encourage any ſuch new Undertaking in that Nation, and particularly to raiſe a Joint Stock in ſuch Manner as they ſhould think fit; and for that End, to enfranchiſe ſuch Foreigners, as would become Partners with them; and to enter into Treaties of Commerce with any in Amity with his Majeſty for that Effect: That thoſe of their Number, who were then entruſted with the Management of that Affair, did think it moſt natural to make the firſt Offer of ſharing their ſaid Privilege with their Countrymen, and other Neighbours in England, as living under the ſame Monarchy: And that they not only readily embrac'd the Offer, but in nine Days ſubſcrib'd 300,000 l. ſterling, as the one Half of the Capital Stock then propos'd, and actually paid in the firſt Fourth Part thereof; part in Specie, part in Bank-Notes, payable upon Demand: That both Houſes of Parliament of England, taking Umbrage at thoſe Proceedings, had not only jointly addreſs'd his Majeſty for fruſtrating the Ends of the ſaid Acts, but the Houſe of Commons had alſo appointed a Committee to examine what Methods were taken for obtaining the ſaid Acts of Parliament for eſtabliſhing their Company; who were the Subſcribers thereunto, and who were the Promoters and Adviſers thereof; with Power to ſend for Perſons, Papers, and Records: And that, perſuant thereto, the ſaid Committee had given Orders to ſummon not only the Engliſh Subſcribers, but even ſome Perſons A. D. 1698. reſiding then in Scotland; as by the ſaid Addreſs, Votes of the Houſe of Commons, and Copy of the ſaid Summons did appear: By all which, together with ſome other Meaſures then taken, their Friends in England were, to their great Loſs, Diſappointment, and Retardment, forc'd to relinquiſh their Enterpriſe: That notwithſtanding that Diſcouragement, not only moſt of the Nobility, Gentry, Merchants, and the whole Body of the Royal Burroughs, had, upon the Inducement and public Faith of the ſaid Acts of Parliament and Letters Patent, contributed as Adventurers in raiſing a far more conſiderable Joint-Stock, than any was ever before rais'd in the Kingdom for any public Undertaking, or Project of Trade whatſoever, which made it of ſo much the more univerſal a Concern to the Nation: But they had alſo all the promiſing Hopes of foreign Aid that their Hearts could wiſh, eſpecially at Hamburgh, where the Merchants of that City enter'd into Contract with their Deputies, to join at leaſt 200,000 l. ſterling with them; till, to their great Surpriſe and Loſs, the (e) Engliſh Miniſters there, had, under Pretence of ſpecial Warrant from his Majeſty, put a Stop thereto, by giving in a Memorial to the Senate of that City, not only diſowning the Authority of the ſaid Acts of Parliament and Letters Patent, but alſo threatning both Senate and Inhabitants, with the King's utmoſt Diſpleaſure, if they ſhould countenance or join with them in any Treaty of Trade or Commerce, as by the annex'd Copies thereof might appear; which Memorial they pray'd might, for the better Information of his Grace and the Eſtates, be read in Parliament. That after the ſaid Memorial was by the Senate tranſmitted to the Commercii or Body of Merchants of that City, they, to aſſert their own Freedom, had adviſ'd and prevail'd upon their (the Scots) Deputies and Agents, who were there for the Time, to open Books in the ſaid Merchants-Hall, where, for ſome Days, they ſign'd conſiderable Sums purſuant to their ſaid Contract, tho' under Condition to be void, if they ſhould not procure ſome Declaration from the King, that might render them ſecure from the Threatnings and other Inſinuations contain'd in the ſaid Memorial. That as the reaſonable (nay, and unqueſtionable) Proſpect which they had of a powerful Aſſiſtance from Hamburgh, and ſeveral other Places, (if not obſtructed as aforeſaid) had induc'd them to prepare a far greater Equipage at firſt, than otherwiſe they would have done; ſo the rendering theſe Meaſures abortive, had not only weaken'd their Stock, leſſen'd their Credit, retarded their firſt Expedition, and diſheartned many of their Partners at Home, but even ſlacken'd their Reſolution and Power from proſecuting, at that Time, ſeveral other Branches of Foreign and Domeſtic Trades and Improvements, which they had in

(e) Namely, Sir Paul Ricaut, the Reſident for the King at that City, and Mr. Creſſet, Envoy at the Court of Lunenburgh, who jointly ſign'd the Memorial againſt the Company.

A. D. 1698. in View, if they had not met with such Obstructions and (f) Discouragements from Time to Time: That tho' their Company was more immediately and sensibly touch'd, in many Respects, by such Proceedings than any other, yet they humbly conceiv'd also, That the Honour and Independency of the Nation, as well as the Credit and Authority of the Parliament, was struck at thro' their Sides: That they could not, as Countrymen, and in Duty to that collective Power, which gave their Company first a Being, but inform his Grace, his Majesty's High Commissioner, and the Right Honourable the Estates of Parliament of the Premises, to the End that the great Council of the Nation (then assembled) might do therein, as they in their profound Wisdom and Discretion should think fit: That as to what concern'd their Company in particular, they should humbly beg Leave to suggest farther, That the Ships being then at Sea, (whither bound, we shall see in due Time and Place) on their intended Voyage, the former Treatment which their Company met with in England, and elsewhere, might give them just Grounds to suspect, That if either thro' Multiplicity of public Affairs, or otherwise howsoever, his Grace and the Right Honourable the Estates of Parliament, should neglect the taking present Notice of such Umbrage, the Enemies of their Company would be thereby encourag'd, either directly or indirectly, to persue their former Designs of ruining (if possible) all their Measures: Therefore they desir'd his Grace and the Estates of Parliament, to take the Premises into their serious Consideration, to vindicate their Company's Reputation Abroad, by supporting the Credit of the Acts of Parliament, and Letters Patent, by which the same was establish'd, and wherein the Honour of the Nation was so much concern'd: To take effectual Measures for repairing the great Loss and Damages which they had already sustain'd thro' the unwarrantable Treatment above-mention'd; as well for preventing the like for the Time to come; and withal to continue to them the Privileges and Exemptions mention'd in the said Acts of Parliament, and Letters Patent for some longer Time, in consideration of the Time already elaps'd without Execution, and their Stock lying dead without Improvement, by reason of the aforesaid Obstructions."

A Representation like This, founded on real Grievances undeniably prov'd, and echoed by the Voice of a whole Country, could not but be receiv'd; tho' it is reasonable to think no Management was wanting to stifle it: (For during the whole Time the Scotish Parliament continued to sit, there is but one Article in our Gazettes, from Edinburgh; which one Article contains only an Abstract of the King's Letter, and a Minute of the Vote for keeping up the Standing-Forces, so they are therein call'd, of that Kingdom.) And all the Courtiers had to do, was to to quality the Heat of the House, that their Petition, which was the Word they presen'd to Representation, might be couch'd in somewhat softer and more general Terms. A. D. 1698.

Accordingly, they had, so far, some Merit to plead with their Master: For the said Petition was contracted to the Size and accommodated to the Effect following.

The Parliament's Address to the King.

"That having consider'd a Representation made to them by the Council General of the Company trading to Africa and the Indies, which mention'd several Obstructions that they met with in the Prosecution of their Trade, particularly by a Memorial presented to the Senate at Hamburgh, by his Majesty's Resident in that City, tending to lessen the Credit of the Rights and Privileges granted to the said Company by an Act of the then present Parliament: They therefore, in all humble Duty, laid before his Majesty the whole Nation's Concern in that Matter; and they did most earnestly entreat, and most assuredly expect, that his Majesty, in his Royal Wisdom, would take such Measures, as might effectually vindicate the undoubted Rights and Privileges of the said Company, and support the Credit and Interest thereof: And that as they were in Duty bound to return his Majesty most hearty Thanks for the gracious Assurance his Majesty had been pleas'd to give them of all due Encouragement, for promoting the Trade of that Kingdom; that so they were thereby encourag'd humbly to recommend to the more especial Marks of his Royal Favour, the Concern of the said Company, as that Branch of their Trade, in which they and the Nation which they represented, had a more peculiar Interest."

And that the Company might also be induc'd to follow the same courtly Pattern in the Petition of their own, which they thought fit to transmit to his Majesty by the same Express that was charg'd with the Other, they were induc'd to believe, The King, upon a proper Application, would give them Two of his Frigates which then lay in Burnt-Island-Harbour: And the Snare which was so artfully set, they as simply fell into; as appears by the Petition itself, which imported,

The Company's Petition to the King.

"That whereas the Parliament had, by their Address, been pleas'd to recommend the Concerns of the Company to his Majesty, for supporting the Credit and Interest thereof, which had already suffer'd in a great Measure, by reason of the several Obstructions which they had met with in the Prosecution of their Trade, particularly by a Memorial

(f) They had before complain'd to the King by Address, dated June 28, 1697. To which his Majesty was pleas'd to answer by his two Secretaries, the Earl of Tullibardin and Sir James Ogilvie, "That, as soon as he return'd to England, he would take the said Address into consideration: And that, in the mean Time, he would order his Ministers in those Parts, not to make use of his Name in obstructing the Company in prosecution of their Trade with the Inhabitants of that City." After which Sir Paul Rainat denying, That he had receiv'd any such Orders, and persisting in the same Conduct towards the Company, which they had complain'd of before, they made their next Application, which was dated December 20, 1697, to the Lord Chancellor and Privy-Council of Scotland, but with no better Success than before.

A. D. 1698. Memorial given into the Senate of Hamburgh, by his Majesty's Ministers there; these encourag'd them with all Humility to lay before his Majesty, That as the said Memorial was given into the Senate of Hamburg, in a most solemn and public Manner, so they humbly conceiv'd, That the Effects thereof could not be taken away, but by some Intimation made to the said Senate, that they might enter into Commerce with them, as freely and securely in all Respects, as they might have done, before the giving in of the said Memorial: That in consideration of the Damages sustain'd by the Company, his Majesty would be pleas'd, for their Encouragement, and as a gracious Mark of his Royal Favour, to bestow upon them the two small-left of the Frigates then lying useless in Burnt-Island-Harbour: And that in regard of the Time lost by reason of the said Obstructions, his Majesty would be graciously pleas'd to continue the Privileges granted by Act of Parliament to the said Company, of being Custom-free for such longer Time as his Majesty should think fit."

In short, if his Majesty was ill serv'd by those Scots Ministers of his, who obtain'd his Assent to the Charter, &c. of the said Company, as he told the Parliament of England, he was as well serv'd by These: For their whole Practice was to qualify the Heats which this commercial Fever had caus'd, and to administer Opiates to that End: But as that End was not wholly obtain'd by these Opiates, and, on the contrary, it was reasonable to apprehend, That a false Repose would produce real Phrenzy, the Session was adjourn'd in the Beginning of September to the 25th of November; in which Interval, the Company having receiv'd repeated Advices from one Stewenson, their Agent at Hamburg, That their Affair lay under the same Difficulties and Discouragements as before; they preferr'd another Complaint to the Lord Seafield, by way of Letter or Memorial, as follows, viz. "That they had, by Order of the Council-General of their Company, transmitted the Copies of two Letters receiv'd from their Company's Agent at Hamburg to his Lordship; upon the reading whereof the Day before, at a Meeting of the said Council-General, they were not a little surpris'd at the Contents, considering the many repeated Assurances they had formerly receiv'd by Letters and Word of Mouth, and even in Parliament, That the King had given Orders to his Minister at Hamburgh, with relation to the Memorial given in to the Senate of that City, against their Company: But after some reasoning thereupon, and considering how far his Lordship's frank Undertaking, when in Scotland, as well as the Station he was in, did engage his best Endeavours to procure the Company Justice, and vindicate the Company's Rights in that Matter, they had order'd them, (the Court of Directors) to transmit the said Copies to his Lordship, and expected his Lordship's Answer to That, and their late Petition to his Majesty, before they remonstrated any farther with relation thereunto." To which the said Secretary thought fit to answer thus: "That he would take the first convenient Opportunity he could have, to represent the Matter to the King; but could not yet expect to have it, his Majesty being very much employ'd in the Affairs of the English Parliament."

The Company prefer another Petition.

A. D. 1698. His Lordship's Answer.

In this Interval also, the Parliament of Ireland met at Dublin: And the Lords Justices in their Speech, at the opening of the Session, having again put them in Mind, That they ow'd both their Deliverance and present Safety to his Majesty; as also assur'd them, That his Purpose was to provide for their Establishment and future Prosperity, &c. proceeded as follows.

The Parliament of Ireland met.

"The Settlement of this Manufacture, (the Linen) will contribute much to people the Country, and will be found much more advantageous to this Kingdom, than the Woollen Manufacture, which, being the settled Staple-Trade of England, from whence all Foreign Markets are supply'd, can never be encourag'd here for that Purpose; whereas the Linen and Hempen Manufactures, will not only be encourag'd as consistent with the Trade of England, but will render the Trade of this Kingdom both useful and necessary to England.

Lords Justices Speech.

We hope the great Debt due at Midsummer, 1697, will be paid, by what you have formerly given and design'd for that Purpose: The King has, since the Peace, thought fit to send hither a Part of those Forces who serv'd Abroad during all the War, having disbanded the greatest Part of those who serv'd here, with a Resolution notwithstanding to continue the Subsistence to the Officers, until they can be otherwise provided for. His Majesty EXPECTS that you will enable him to support the Charge of the present Establishment, which shall be laid before you, Gentlemen of the House of Commons, with an Account of what the Revenue produc'd for one Year from the said Midsummer, 1697.

We must inform you, that there hath been so great Remissness in the Management of the present Poll, that very little of that Money is yet receiv'd: We are so sensible of the Necessity and Usefulness of the Barracks, that we have advanc'd the Money necessary to go on with them, so fast as it could be employ'd; and hope you will enable us to finish all Those you shall think necessary for easing the Country in Quarters."

Dissatisfaction amongst the Commons.

But whatever Pains their Excellencies had taken to induce the Commons to comply with the Expectations of their Sovereign in their full Extent, or whatever Hopes they had entertain'd of a suitable Success, the Complection of the House did not appear to be altogether conformable: On the contrary, the Affair of the Woollen Manufacture had render'd many of the Members sullen and untractable; and, after the Example of Those of England, they resolv'd to discharge their Resentments as far as they durst upon the Army. Thus, even in their Address, which was worded with the utmost Caution, and had the smoothest Face imaginable, They contriv'd by their very Reserve

on

A. D. 1698. on that Head, to manifeſt their Sentiments concerning it: For, inſtead of echoing it Word for Word, as from a provincial Parliament might have been apprehended, they never ſo much as mention'd that favourite Point; and, in a Manner courtly and artful enough, ſeem'd to indicate, They ſhould do as they were done by; as will beſt appear by their own Expreſſions, which, after a ſmooth Introduction, were as follow.

Their Addreſs. "It is a great Addition to our Happineſs, to be aſſur'd by your Excellencies, That as his Majeſty has been pleas'd already to paſs ſeveral excellent Acts in this Parliament, ſo there will Bills be laid before us this Seſſion, which may ſecure us a firm Eſtabliſhment and Proſperity for the Future: Such Laws we have long wanted and wiſh'd for; but it is reſerv'd to his Majeſty's Goodneſs alone to be the Author of them to us.

We pray Leave to aſſure your Excellencies, That we ſhall heartily endeavour to eſtabliſh the Linen Manufacture, and to render the ſame uſeful to England, as well as advantageous to this Kingdom; and that we hope to find ſuch a Temperament in reſpect to the Woollen Trade here, that the ſame may not be injurious to England: And as we have, to our utmoſt Abilities, granted Supplies, which have hitherto with Honour ſupported and defray'd the Expences of the Eſtabliſhment, we ſhall again take the ſame into our Conſideration, when laid before us, and come to ſuch Reſolutions thereon, as become dutiful and loyal Subjects.

We are ſenſible how neceſſary the erecting Barracks is, for eaſing the Country Quarters, and pray your Excellencies the ſame may be proceeded on.

And that his Majeſty may effectually receive thoſe Aids already granted him by this Parliament, we ſhall take into our Enquiry, thro' whoſe Defaults or Remiſſneſs the preſent Poll hath been ſo ſlowly paid, and anſwer'd into the Treaſury: And by all dutiful Deportment, will continue to deſerve the Character your Excellencies have, with great Truth, repreſented us under to his Majeſty, of being a People zealous for his Majeſty's Service, and firm in our Loyalty to the Crown of England; for which Juſtice done us, we owe, and, with all Acknowledgments, return, your Excellencies our moſt humble and hearty Thanks."

On the other Hand, as in their Manner, they had been thus careful to cover their Diſguſts, their Excellencies were pleas'd to receive their Offering graciouſly, and to return them as gracious an Anſwer.

But in the Courſe of the Seſſion, the ſame Mal-content Spirit on many Occaſions became more apparent, as the Sketch of their Tranſactions that follows will evince: And tho' it was not ſtrong enough to obtain the Maſtery, it was nevertheleſs active enough to be troubleſome.

[Boyer, &c.] On the 1ſt of October, the Commons read, for the firſt Time, a Bill for confirming the Eſtates and Poſſeſſions held and enjoy'd under the Acts of Settlement and Explanation; and order'd Heads to be brought in for a Bill for encouraging of Plantations and Improvements in that Kingdom. Nine Days after, the Committee appointed to take into Conſideration the Lords Juſtices Speech, reported, That it was their Opinion, That a Supply be granted to his Majeſty; and that it was neceſſary that the Woollen Trade of Ireland be regulated: To which Reſolutions the Houſe unanimouſly agreed. On the 17th of the ſame Month, a Motion was made, That an Addreſs be preſented to the Lords Juſtices of that Kingdom, to intercede with his Majeſty, That the five Regiments of French Proteſtants, then in Ireland, ſhould be diſbanded; but the ſame paſt in the Negative. Five Days after, the Commons read the Bill for the better Security of his Majeſty's Royal Perſon and Government; and took particularly into their Conſideration, that Clauſe which had been voted out by a Majority of ten Voices, relating to the Roman-Catholics taking the new Oaths; and after a long Debate, threw out the Bill: But, at the ſame Time, they appointed a Committee to bring in the Heads of a Bill to prevent the Eſtates of Proteſtants to come to Papiſts; and to encourage Perſons to turn Proteſtants. On the 14th, the Committee appointed to conſider of Ways and Means for raiſing the Supply, reported their Opinion, which was, 1ſt, That an additional Duty be impos'd on the Old and New Drapery of that Kingdom, that ſhould be exported, Freezes excepted; to which the Houſe agreed: And, 2dly, That a Tax be laid on all beneficial Grants of Lands and Tenements made by his Majeſty, and her late Majeſty, to which the Houſe diſagreed; and inſtead of it, they afterwards reſolv'd to lay a farther Tax of 30,000*l.* upon Lands, over and above the 90,000*l.* already impos'd upon them. The Bill for levying theſe Sums being completed, as alſo Another for completing the Supply, and to defray the Charge of building Barracks, a Third for laying the additional Duty on the Draperies above ſpecify'd, and other Bills, their Excellencies put an End to the Seſſion, for aught that appears, even without the Ceremonial of a Thankſgiving Speech: For, in the Gazette No. 3468. which records that Occurrence, and ſpecifies the ſeveral Acts which receiv'd the Royal Aſſent, no Mention is made of any ſuch Thing.

A. D. 1698. Legal Eſtabliſhment. Proceedings.

And now we are once more at Liberty to follow his Majeſty to Holland, whither we ſhall find the Secret travell'd with him; tho' he had not any one Engliſh Miniſter in his Train, qualify'd by his Office, either to give him Advice, or to obey his Commands; and tho' a King of England, according to the Conſtitution, can perform no legal Act without the Advice of his Council: For, except the Earl of Eſſex, (probably the Lord of the Bed-chamber in waiting, and Sir Joſeph Williamſon, who was Embaſſador Extraordinary to the States) he had not an Engliſhman of any Diſtinction about him; And to render This ſo much the more mor-

Foreign Affairs.

tifying

A. D. 1698. tifying to the Nation, the Earl of Portland, in the Face of Europe, appear'd to be his ſole Miniſter, and the Earl of Albemarle his ſole Favorite.

It is true, he had dropp'd a Hint of the great Object he had in view to the Lord Chancellor before he went abroad: But then it was no more than a Hint; and apparently dropp'd not for the Sake of his Advice, but to beſpeak the Sanctions which he alone could give, and which he nevertheleſs could not, alone, ſo fully give as the Conſtitution requir'd.

Proceedings in relation to the Spaniſh Succeſſion.

But, in order to explane this delicate Affair in a manner ſuitable to the Importance of it, it is neceſſary we ſhould recall to Mind a Circumſtance or two, which we have already paſs'd over.

Tho' the Secret of the League of Auſbergh is not as yet known, it is ſcarce to be imagin'd, that the Spaniſh Succeſſion ſhould not be one of the Conſiderations which gave riſe to it: And that it actually was the very Corner-Stone of the Grand Alliance, has already been prov'd: For it may be remember'd, That by the ſeperate Article, the Maritime Powers were to aſſiſt the Emperor, or his Heirs, with all their Forces, in taking Poſſeſſion of it, as what lawfully belong'd to that Houſe, on the Death of his Catholic Majeſty without lawful Iſſue: The Emperor and the Dutch, it muſt alſo be remembee'd, were at firſt the ſole Parties in that Alliance; And it is yet farther remarkable, That tho' by the Tenth Article, the Kings of Great-Britain and Spain were to be invited into it, the Latter by the Emperor and the Former by the States, the Former did accede, and the Latter, for aught that appears in print, did not; tho' he became a Party in the War which enſued in conſequence thereof: Whence it may be not unreaſonably inferr'd, That the Court of Spain, tho' deeply intereſted in the Alliance, and prepoſſeſs'd in favour of the Imperial Branch of the Auſtrian Family, were offended at a Diſpoſition ſo irregular and unwarrantable, of the Spaniſh Monarchy, in which the Spaniards themſelves, inſtead of being the firſt Movers, were not ſo much as Parties.

But, tho' it was at firſt thought worth while to give ſo high a Price for the Good-Will of his Imperial Majeſty, in the Courſe of the War, he ſunk in his Value, either becauſe he did not make ſufficient Returns, or becauſe he was of no farther Uſe: So that the Peace of Ryſwick, in all Probability, was more owing to a Deſire of vacating the ſaid ſeperate Article of the grand Alliance above cited, than either to any Complaiſance for the Dutch commercial Intereſts, or Concern for the real Preſſures or Reſentments of the Engliſh.

Effect of the Field Conferences between Portland and Boufflers on the Alliance.

As it has been proved, That the Field-Conferences between Lord Portland and M. de Boufflers gave the finiſhing Stroke to the Peace, ſo it has been a thouſand Times aſſerted, That theſe Conferences extinguiſhed the laſt Remains of good Underſtanding among the Confederates.

The calling for Paper, Pen and Ink, in the Suburbs of Hall, did certainly imply, that ſomething was written: And whatever was ſo written, ought, in conformity to the ſaid Alliance, to have been communicated to the principal Parties, at leaſt, in it: But all that was communicated was verbal only; and, conſequently, inſufficient to remove the Umbrage thoſe myſterious Conferences did undoubtedly occaſion: And Thoſe, who, on our Side of the Water, undertook to ſet a Gloſs on King William's Conduct at this Criſis, lay it down as a Fundamental, That the Emperor's Behaviour to his Majeſty was ſuch, as juſtify'd all the ſubſequent Procedings of the Latter in Reſentment of it. A. D. 1698.

Various Opinions concerning the King's Conduct.

" The Emperor, ſays One of them, abandoning all other Thoughts, had, during the laſt War, perſued his Advantages againſt the Turks, and, thereby, had both exhauſted his own Strength, and diſguſted his Allies: And on the Concluſion of the Peace of Ryſwick, he had ſhew'd ſo great an Inclination to ruin Hereſy at any Rate, and ſo little Regard to the Honor of a Prince to whom he ow'd ſo much, that This, with ſome other Things, (which I love not to remember, becauſe I hope that Court will grow wiſer) had given ſo juſt a Diſcontent, that Few ſeem'd willing to engage in a new War for him and his Family." [State Tracts, Temp. Guil. III. Vol. III. P. 184.]

As to the Reproach of Ingratitude contain'd in this Paragraph, (tho' Reproaches of that Nature have ſeldom any Weight with Sovereigns) it is eaſy to conceive, how it might be retorted by the Imperial Court: And unleſs the Services redounding to King William from the League of Auſbergh, were, fully and circumſtantially, ſet in oppoſition to the Services redounding to his Imperial Majeſty from the Grand Alliance, it is ſcarce poſſible to direct the Cenſures of Poſterity.

Our Anti-Court-Writers of theſe Times, alſo tell us, That their very Antagoniſts themſelves not only admited, but pleaded, That what paſs'd at theſe Conferences, was the Foundation of all which happen'd afterwards: But then, inſtead of allowing this Plea, the Former call it, an Acknowledgment of Breach of Faith: For by the Grand Alliance, no ſeperate Meaſure was to be taken in the Diviſion of a common Cauſe: And they affirm, That the Manner of making the Peace, was the firſt Overt-Act of a Conſpiracy againſt the Rights and Clames of his Imperial Majeſty: Beſides; there are others who go yet farther ſtill, and maintain, in effect, That this Breach of Engagements on one Hand, in the ſame Inſtant produced contrary Engagements on the other. " They (meaning the French, for ſo the Paſſage runs) had already bought a Peace from the Duke of Savoy by reſtoring Pignerol, in hope his Seperation from the Confederates would facilitate the general one; and in This they ſacrific'd their Ally King James, who had put himſelf under their Protection, to their [Ibid. p. 88.]

A. D. 1698. common Enemy, (g) R.— G.— with whom they enter'd into private Measures for a ſtricter Alliance, by virtue of which the undoubted Right of the Emperor and his Male Line to the Succeſſion of Spain, was to be ſacrific'd in Requital, as appear'd ſoon after. "And again, in another Paſſage which follows cloſe upon the Heels of This, it is farther ſaid, "The Continuation of the War would have kept the two great Maritime Powers united to the Emperor and Spain, by virtue of their Alliance; which was ſo prejudicial to France, and yet no way to be diſſolv'd but by a Peace, that it became abſolutely neceſſary to make one: The Conferences of M. de Beuſſlers with the Earl of Portland, the Embaſſy of that Earl to France, and the extraordinary Honors done him there, were the Fore-runners of the Diſſolution of the Confederacy, and the Meaſures taken between the French Court and thoſe Powers to ſecure the Succeſſion of Spain to the Electoral Prince of Bavaria." Which is the great Tranſaction preſently to be explain'd.

A true Picture of a Modern Whig, p. 2. p. 201, &c. Hereditaries of our Miniſters to the Miniſter of France.

Laſtly, Dr. Davenant, (ſumming up the Reproaches about this Time caſt upon the modern Whigs by the reſt of the Nation, as, That they had ſtoop'd below all the moſt ſervile Flatterers of the two late Courts: That they had promoted all the bad, and oppos'd all the good, Meaſures in the Houſe of Commons for ſeveral Years together: That they had been for Standing Armies and againſt the Bills, for regulating Trials and for triennial Parliaments) adds, That from the Treaty of Ryſwick, the Grandees of the Court had been in ſo cloſe a Connection with France, that it was become notorious and ſcandalous to the meaneſt of the Vulgar; and that every body ſmil'd with Scorn and Indignation to ſee Favorites and prime Miniſters acting the Parts of Gentlemen-Uthers, in receiving Count Tallard at the Foot of the Stairs at Kenſington; and wonder'd to find a French Embaſſador more careſs'd at Court under a Whiggiſh Miniſtry, than ever Boſſillon had been, in the Reign of King Charles II.

And now, having proceed thus far in diſplaying the Complection of the Times, all that is neceſſary to be farther premis'd, is a ſlight Sketch of the Clames of the ſeveral Pretenders to the great Succeſſion in diſpute.

Clames of the ſeveral Parties on the Spaniſh Succeſſion.

Firſt then the Emperor, in behalf of himſelf and his Deſcendants, put in his Clame to the whole in general, 1ſt, As the Heir-Male of the Auſtrian Family, as being deſcended in a right Line from the Emperor Ferdinand, youngeſt Son of Charles V. and Brother of Philip II. King of Spain. 2dly, In Virtue of certain Family-Compacts between the two Branches, by which the Male-Heir of the Collateral-Line on either Side was to ſucceede to the Inheritance preferably to the Females of the right Line. 3dly, In conſequence of the ſeveral ſolemn Renunciations of all the ſaid Females, for themſelves and their Heirs, enfore'd and confirm'd by Treaties, Oaths, and almoſt every other kind of Obligation. And, 4thly, The Will of Philip IV. by which the ſaid Succeſſion was bequeath'd in form to the Males of the Imperial Line, in caſe of Failure in the other Branch. A. D. 1698.

But, on the other Hand, it was alledg'd, That, according to the Fundamentals of the Spaniſh Conſtitution, the Order of Succeſſion was lineal, without making any Diſtinction between Male or Female: That the Emperor Charles V. in whoſe Right the preſent Emperor laid his Clame, inherited not in Right of his Father Philip I. (who attain'd the Throne, by marriage with Jane Daughter and Heireſs of King Ferdinand) but of the ſaid Queen Jane his Mother: That, therefore, if the ſaid collateral Right was to be admitted, there were ſtill living Males of both the Royal Houſes of Caſtile and Arragon, who, in virtue of that Right, would exclude the Houſe of Auſtria even on their own Principles: And, laſtly, That the Order of Succeſſion not depending on the good Will and Pleaſure of the King regnant, but being a Fundamental not in the Power of the Throne to alter, all Family-Compacts, teſtamentary Bequeſts, and occaſional Renuntiations, were void and of none Effect: Whence the Inference was wholly in favour of the Houſe of Bourbon; with this Exception, That it was alſo a Fundamental of the Spaniſh Conſtitution, That the two Crowns of Spain and France were incompatible, and therefore could never be worn on the ſame Head.

General Reflections on the whole.

To all which may be added, That tho' Matter of Right on This, and all other Occaſions, is conſtantly urg'd, Matter of Intereſt is always the Point in ſight: And ſuch being the Caſe, we are not to wonder, that Facts as well as Arguments are warp'd to oppoſite and irreconcileable Purpoſes.

But wherever the Right lay, the neighbouring Powers could take no other ſenſible Part in the Diſpute or the Deciſion, than was ſuggeſted by their Intereſt: And, it appear'd at firſt Glance, That the Emperor aſk'd too much: For the Whole of the Spaniſh Succeſſion, added to the Empire and his own hereditary Dominions, would have render'd the Auſtrian Scale as much too heavy, as That of Bourbon had already been found: Nor would the Monarchy of Spain, which had ſo recently trembled under the Superiority of France, bear any Diminution: And, on the other Hand, it was equally apparent, That either the late Grand Alliance, and the War which follow'd upon it, were Impoſitions on the Credulity of Mankind, or any Addition to the Power of France, would have render'd the Rectification of the Balance on any Emergency whatſoever, impoſſible.

The

(g) Theſe Initials apparently ſtand for the Words Roy Gratianus: For the Tract from whence this Paſſage is taken, was written originally in French, under the following Title, Le Partage du Lievre de la Fable, &c. Imprimé a Co... An. 1700

A. D. 1698. The Expedient, nevertheleſs, propounded by that inſidious Power, as we in England have been taught to believe, and adopted by King William, was to render Spain weaker, and France ſtronger than ever; to the utter Excluſion of the Emperor and his Clame; tho', according to the ſaid Grand Alliance, his Majeſty had ſolemnly acknowledg'd, That the whole Inheritance lawfully belong'd to him and his Houſe.

Thus, that there was ſome Inconſiſtency, and not leſs Impolicy in his Majeſty's Conduct, can ſcarce be deny'd, if the Balance of Power is a Matter of that Importance, as in our annual Speeches from the Throne, it has been annually repreſented for above ſixty Years paſs'd: And whether, in point of Equity and Decency, his Majeſty was wholly acquitted for becoming inſtrumental to the Diviſion of an Inheritance which he had no Concern in, and which conſequently he could have no Authority over, unleſs from the joint Reference of all the ſeveral Claimants, let the Caſuiſts determine!

Indeed, his beſt Advocates endeavour to derive ſome Warrant for what he did, from the Intractability of the Emperor. "No Arguments were omitted (ſays One of them) to draw him into new Meaſurs, (after the Treaty of Ryſwick that is to ſay) in order to make the ſeperate Article of the Grand Alliance ſignificant and effectual: And it was highly reaſonable to inſiſt upon Terms, when it was ſo freſh in Memory, where the Burden of the War lay: But by reaſon of the very ſlow Meaſures of the Court of Vienna, and the particular Intereſts which the Emperor thought himſelf under a Neceſſity of managing with the Court of Madrid, nothing had been done, or was like to be done on that Side: And, at the ſame Time, the Subjects of England and Holland ſeem'd neither willing nor well able to enter into a War: France did not only continue arm'd as during the War, but was at vaſt Expence in buying Horſes for remounting their Cavalry, and for liſting the ableſt Men, as faſt as they were diſbanded by the Confederates. Without a Treaty, a War was inevitable, or rather France was Maſter of all without a War. This was the unhappy Neceſſity under which the King and the States found themſelves."

[State Tracts, temp. Gull. III. Vol. III. p. 188.]

In part, alſo, to the ſame Effect, M. de Lamberty obſerves, That, by the Hurry M. de Caunitz was in to leave the Congreſs, in order to take poſſeſſion of his new Employment of Chancellor to the Imperial Court, there was no Time for negociating a new League, in order to ſecure the Spaniſh Succeſſion to the Houſe of Auſtria: The King of England, and the States-General, continues he, were ſtrongly inclin'd that way: D. Bernard de Quiros, (Miniſter of Spain) had even Orders to concur in it:—But the Inſtances of the Miniſters of thoſe Powers, could not prevent the Departure of the Imperialiſts: And ſo the Deſign fell; the Imperial Court not attending to thoſe ſage Repreſentations, becauſe they had been taught to believe, They ſhould ſucceede better, by making a Party among the Grandees, and by intriguing with the Queen of Spain, and the Counteſs of Berlip, the reigning Favourite at the Court of Madrid, &c."

[Tom. I. p. 11, 12.]

But, unfortunately, M. de Lamberty himſelf, in the very next Paragraph, mentions an Opinion which had obtain'd, That the Earl of Portland had laid the Foundation of this Treaty with M. de Boufflers three Years before, when the Latter was taken Priſoner by M. Dykvelt, in marching out of Namur: And if it be true, that either then, or in the Field-Conferences, which took place during the Congreſs, the Plan of the Project was laid, it will follow, That there was no Sincerity in the Offer of renewing the Alliance made at Ryſwick: Or elſe that they were made in ſuch a Manner, or cloge'd with ſuch Conditions, as the Makers of them foreſaw would beſpeak a Refuſal: Nor, after all, did this Refuſal on his Side, neceſſitate the Treaty which follow'd: For if his Imperial Majeſty was not then in a Humor to place his Dependence on ſuch Friends as he had either diſobliged, or as had deſerted him, ſurely it does not follow, That we ought immediately to ruſh on Meaſures quite oppoſite, and to cut off all his Hopes at once, becauſe he would not ſubmit implicitely to be ſerv'd juſt at our Time, and in our Way.

And, finally, if France was Maſter of all without a Treaty, and was ſo little to be reſtrain'd by Treaties, as our Court-Doctors had always maintain'd, How was the Caſe mended by admitting their Clame in conſequence of this Compoſition, againſt expreſs Renuntiations; and thereby authoriſing them to ſtart ſuch farther Pretenſions from Time to Time, as, by the Help of that irreſiſtable Force which, it ſeems, they had in Readineſs, might put them in poſſeſſion of the Reſt?

But, to ſuſpend Diſſertation for a while, and reſume Facts; it has been ſaid, The King had only dropp'd a Hint of his Purpoſe in relation to this momentous Affair, to the Chancellor, before he went Abroad: And it is now to be added, That he was no ſooner got to Loo, and ſurrounded with none but his own Creatures, than he fell roundly to work with M. de Tallard, who was of the Party; and when the Articles were in a Manner adjuſted, his Majeſty was graciouſly pleas'd to write to his Chancellor as follows.

Auguſt $\frac{1}{11}$, 1698.

K. William's ſecret Letter to the Lord Chancellor for Blank-Powers.

"I imparted to you, before I left England, that in France there was expreſs'd to my Lord Portland, ſome Inclination to come to an Agreement with us, concerning the Succeſſion of the King of Spain; ſince which, Count Tallard has mention'd it to me, and has made ſuch Propoſitions; the Particulars of which my Lord Portland will write to Vernon, to whom I have given Orders not to communicate them to any other beſides yourſelf, and to leave to your Judgment to whom elſe you would think proper to impart them; to the End, that I might know your Opinion upon ſo important an Affair, and which requires the greateſt Secrecy.

A. D. 1698.

A. D. 1698. crecy. If it be FIT this Negotiation ſhould be carried on, there is no Time to be loſt, and you will ſend me the full Powers under the Great Seal, with the Names in BLANK, to treat with Count Tallard: I believe this may be done (ſo) ſecretly, that none but you and Vernon, and Thoſe to whom you ſhall have communicated it, may have Knowledge of it; ſo that the Clerks, who are to write the Warrant and the full Powers, may not know what it is: According to all Intelligence, the King of Spain cannot outlive the Month of October; and the leaſt Accident may carry him off every Day: I receiv'd yeſterday your Letter of the 9th: Since my Lord Wharton cannot at this Time leave England, I muſt think of ſome Other to ſend Ambaſſador to Spain; if you can think of any one proper, let me know it, and be always aſſur'd of my Friendſhip.

WILLIAM R."

The Chancellor, when this Letter arriv'd, was at Tunbridge-Wells, for the Benefit of the Waters, whither it was tranſmitted to him by Mr. Secretary, together with the Letter of Lord Portland's referr'd to by his Majeſty: And the Perſons he thought fit to impart this Secret to, were Lord Orford and Montagu, who were of the Regency as well as the Triumvirate, and the Duke of Shrewſbury: But neither the Laſt nor the Firſt, for aught that appears, would have any Concern in a Tranſaction that, both for Matter and Manner, was ſo juſtly exceptionable: And it cannot enough be wonder'd at, That the Chancellor ſhould ſuffer himſelf to be flatter'd into a Part ſo unworthy both of his Character and Office; and which at the ſame Time expos'd him to that very Diſgrace he meant, no doubt, by his fatal Compliance on this Occaſion, to avoid.

As to what paſs'd among the reigning Junćto, when the ſeveral Points referr'd to them were under Debate, it is altogether as unknown, as what paſs'd on the ſame Subject at Loo: But what they agreed to acknowledge, is contain'd in the Chancellor's Anſwer to his Majeſty, which was as follows.

Tunbridge-Wells, 28th Auguſt, 1698, O. S.

SIR,

His Lordſhip's Anſwer.

"Having your Majeſty's Permiſſion to try if the Waters would contribute to the Re-eſtabliſhment of my Health, I was juſt got to this Place when I had the Honor of your Commands: I thought the beſt way of executing them, would be to communicate to my Lord Orford, Mr. Montagu, and the Duke of Shrewſbury, (who, before I left London, had agreed upon a Meeting about that Time) the Subject of my Lord Portland's Letter; at the ſame Time letting them know, how ſtrictly your Majeſty requir'd, that it ſhould remain an abſolute Secret.

Since that Time Mr. Montagu and Mr. Secretary are come down hither; and upon the whole Diſcourſe, three Things have principally occurr'd, to be humbly ſuggeſted to your Majeſty.

Firſt, That the entertaining a Propoſal of this Nature, ſeems to be attended with very many ill Conſequences, if the French did not act a ſincere Part; but we were ſoon at Eaſe, as to any Apprehenſion of this ſort; being fully aſſur'd your Majeſty would not act but with the utmoſt Nicety, in an Affair wherein the Glory and Safety of Europe were ſo highly concern'd. A. D. 1698.

The Second thing conſider'd, was the very ill Proſpect of what was like to happen upon the Death of the King of Spain, in caſe nothing was done previouſly towards the providing againſt that Accident, which ſeem'd probably to be very near: The King of France having ſo great a Force in ſuch a Readineſs, that he was in a Condition to take Poſſeſſion of Spain, before any other Prince could be able to make a Stand: Your Majeſty is the beſt Judge whether this be the Caſe, who are ſo perfectly inform'd of the Circumſtances of Parts Abroad.

But, ſo far as relates to England, it would be want of Duty not to give your Majeſty this clear Account, That there is a Deadneſs and Want of Spirit in the Nation univerſally, ſo as not at all to be diſpos'd to the Thought of entering into a new War, and that they ſeem to be tir'd out with Taxes to a degree, beyond what was diſcern'd, till it appear'd upon the Occaſion of the late Elections: This is the Truth of the Fact, upon which your Majeſty will determine what Reſoſutions are proper to be taken.

That which remain'd, was the Conſideration what would be the Condition of Europe, if the Propoſal took place: Of this we thought ourſelves little capable of judging: But it ſeem'd, That, if Sicily was in the French Hands, they will be intirely Maſters of the Levant Trade; that, if they were poſſeſs'd of Final, and thoſe other Sea-ports on that Side, whereby Milan would be intirely ſhut out from Relief by Sea, or any other Commerce, that Duchy would be of little ſignification in the Hands of any Prince; and that, if the King of France had poſſeſſion of that Part of Guipuſcoa, which is mention'd in the Propoſal, beſides the Ports he would have in the Ocean, it does ſeem, he would have as eaſy a way of invading Spain on that Side, as he now has on the Side of Catalonia.

But it is not to be hop'd, that France will quit its Pretences to ſo great a Succeſſion, without conſiderable Advantages; and we are all aſſur'd, your Majeſty will reduce the Terms as low as can be done, and make them, as far as is poſſible in the preſent Circumſtances of Things, ſuch as may be ſome Foundation for the future Quiet of Chriſtendom; which all your Subjects cannot but be convinc'd is your true Aim: If it could be brought to paſs, that England might be ſome way a Gainer by this Tranſaction, whether it was by the Elector of Bavaria (who is the Gainer by your Majeſty's Interpoſition in this Treaty) his coming to an Agreement, to let us into ſome Trade to the Spaniſh Plantations, or in any other Manner, it would wonderfully endear your Majeſty to your Engliſh Subjects.

I

A. D. 1698. It does not appear, in case this Negotiation should proceed, what is to be done on your Part, in order to make it take place: Whether any more be requir'd than that the English and Dutch should sit still, and France itself to see it executed: If that be so, what Security ought we to expect, that if, by our being neuter, the French be successful, they will confine themselves to the Terms of the Treaty, and not attempt to make farther Advantages of their Success?

I humbly beg your Majesty's Pardon, that these Thoughts are so ill put together: These Waters are known to discompose and disturb the Head, so as almost totally to disable one from writing: I should be extremely troubled, if my Absence from London has delay'd the Dispatch of the Commission one Day: You will be pleas'd to observe, that two Persons (as the Commission is drawn) must be nam'd in it, but the Powers may be executed by either of them: I suppose your Majesty will not think it proper to name Commissioners that are not English, or naturalis'd, in an Affair of this Nature.

I pray God give your Majesty Honour and Success, in all your Undertakings. I am, with the utmost Duty and Respect,

SIR,
Your Majesty's most dutiful and most obedient Subject and Servant."

P. S. The Commission is wrote by Mr. Secretary, and I have had it seal'd in such a Manner, that no Creature has the least Knowledge of the Thing, besides the Persons named.

Remarks upon Both. It is in this artificial Manner that Men of the best Understandings in the Service of Kings, who have no other Hold upon their Masters than what they derive from their Compliances, trim and temporise, between what is requir'd of Them, and what They would be glad to avoid. There is scarce any Thing positive in the whole Letter in favour of the Treaty, but, that the People of England were weary of War and Taxes, and that France would not wave their Pretensions to the Spanish Inheritance without great Advantages: On the other Hand, having hinted Objections enough (considering his Majesty's peevish, way-ward Temper) to put him extremely out of Humor, he insists upon nothing with any Force that could be of Service to his Country: And, lastly, having struck at Lord Portland, in the Caution which, for Party-Considerations, he ventures to give at concluding, he, nevertheless, takes the worst Part of this clancular Proceding upon himself, by furnishing the Blank-Commissions requir'd by the King, which was in effect, putting the Fate of the Kingdom at one Stroke into his Majesty's Power: For, in virtue of Them, he might have reconvey'd the Crown, for some foreign Consideration upon his own Decease, to the Posterity of the abdicated King. A. D. 1698.

What Notions he had entertain'd of the English, what Resentments he had conceiv'd against them, in what Manner he had occasionally express'd those Resentments, and how capriciously he had sometimes found himself dispos'd to act in consequence of them, the Chancellor could scarce be ignorant; nor of what follows, (which, notwithstanding the (b) different Accounts in our Histories, is not unworthy Notice) "That, when the Negotiator (Portland) return'd from sowing those Seeds of Jealousy by his endearing Embassy, great Notice was taken, of his extravagant commending the Prince of Wales, as if he had been in Love with him; which, with some other Imprudences in him and his tatling Crew, and Reasons of more weight not to be mention'd, have given a Jealousy, even to Men of Understanding, That he was partitioning for more Princes than one." State Tracts. Temp. Guil. III. Vol. III. p. 84.

This Word partitioning not having occur'd before, it is necessary to observe, That the secret Treaty at this Time carrying on at Loo, came to be generally call'd, A Treaty of Partition; except at Court: For there that Appellation was look'd upon as an Abuse; and it was the Fashion to call it, A Treaty for the Preservation of the Peace of Europe.

Besides; tho' his Majesty, in his Letter, seem'd to desire the Chancellor's Opinion of the Negotiation, we ought to conclude, the full Powers were all he wanted, if it be true that the said Treaty was concluded four Days after the Dispatch of the said Letter to England: Indeed, the Instrument bears Date October 11, (N. S.) But then, at the Head of all our printed (i) Translations of it, we find it affirm'd in so many

(b) Vra. In the Detail of the Honors shewn him at the French Court, as follows.

"On the 15th of May his Excellency dined at Versailles, with the Marechal de Villeroy, who in the Afternoon conducted him to Marli, to see the Gardens and Water-works: The next Day he went to Meudon, where he hunted and supp'd with the Dauphin, and on the 17th return'd to Versailles, where he had a private Audience of the King. The following Days he continued to take his Leave of the Court, and on the 23th there being a Review of the Troops of the Houshold in the Plain of Arcbers, where the King and the Dauphin, the young Princes of France, and divers Persons of Quality were present, his Excellency went thither also, but would, perhaps, have forborn coming, if he had known that King James, and the titular Prince of Wales, had likewise been there. The Prince of Wales, by his Father's Directions, endeavour'd to join Conversation with the Lord Woodstock; but the Lord Portland, his Father, knowing the young Prince's Design, order'd his Son to avoid him; as he did himself all Those that belong'd to the Court of St. Germains; tho' it was reported, King James had caus'd it to be intimated to his Excellency, that he never pretended to make his Lordship answerable for the ill Usage he receiv'd from him he represented. At this Review, King James himself did all he could to engage the Lord Cevenstein, and the other English Noblemen, to accost him; but all imitated the Earl of Portland; who a Week after went to Versailles, and had a private Audience of the King in his Closet, where his Excellency took his last Leave; as he did afterwards of the Dauphin, and of the Duke and Dutchess of Orleans at St. Cloud. The King sent the Earl the usual Present of his Picture set with Diamonds, but with this Difference, that the Stones were worth three Times as much as those of other like Gifts: Besides This, his Most Christian Majesty presented him with all the Stamps and Prints engrav'd at the Louvre, consisting in twelve large Folio's; in return of which, the Ambassador made the King a Present of nine very fine English Horses. On the 8th of June his Excellency left Paris, and went to Chantilli, a House belonging to the Prince of Conde, where he was entertain'd in a splendid Manner till the 11th, when he took Leave of his Highness." Rennet, Bowr. &c.

(i) Four several Editions of which are now lying before me.

A.D. 1698. many Words, That it was concluded upon the 19th of Auguſt, O. S. or 29th N. S. and the Fact is no where controverted. Laſtly, on comparing the Treaty with the Chancellor's Letter, we ſhall not only find, that what he ſo prudently recommended with regard to the Weſt-Indies was wholly ſlighted, but alſo, that the whole of the Plan had not been communicated to him.

For tho' it ſtands in our Hiſtories, as if it conſiſted but of Four Articles, it conſiſted of Fifteen: Of theſe the Firſt renews and confirms the Treaty of Ryſwick: The Two contracting Parties next avow and declare, That the Deſire of preſerving the public Tranquility, and preventing the Umbrage which might be taken from the over-grown Power of any one Prince, are the ſole Motives of the Partition which enſues of the Dominions of Spain.

An Abſtract of the Partition Treaty.

The Fourth ſtipulates and provides, That the Dauphin, in lieu of his Clame to the whole Succeſſion, ſhall have for his Share (Son Partage) in full Propriety, Poſſeſſion, &c. to have and to hold to him and his Heirs for ever, free from all Moleſtation upon any Pretence, or any Clame on the ſaid Succeſſion whatſoever, the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily; the Places on the Coaſt of Tuſcany, or the Iſlands adjacent, then belonging to Spain; namely, St. Stephano, Porto Hercole, Orbitello, Telamone, Porto Longone, and Piombino, in the ſame Manner as they were then had and held by the Spaniards, together with the Town and Marquiſate of Final, the Province of Guipuſcoa, particularly the Towns of Fontarabia and St. Sebaſtian, ſituated in that Province, and eſpecially the Port du Paſſage compris'd in it; with this Exception, that if any Places belonging to the ſaid Province lay on the other Side of the Pyrenees and the other Mountains of Navarre, Alava, or Biſcay, they ſhould belong to Spain; and contrary-wiſe, all ſuch Places belonging to Spain, as lay on this Side the ſaid Mountains, ſhould belong to France; the Paſſes of the ſaid Mountains to be equally divided between the two Kingdoms: The whole of the ſaid Premiſſes, together with the Fortifications, Ammunitions, Powder, Ball, Cannon, Gallies, &c. which ſhould be found belonging to the King of Spain at the Time of his Death, without Iſſue, to be annex'd to the Kingdoms, Places, Iſlands, and Provinces which are to compoſe the Share of the Dauphin: In conſideration of which ſaid Share ſo compos'd, the Moſt Chriſtian King for himſelf, the Dauphin, his Children Male and Female, his Heirs already born, or to be born; as alſo the Dauphin for himſelf, his Children, Heirs, &c. did promiſe to renounce, and on theſe Conditions did then renounce all their Rights and Pretenſions to the ſaid Crown of Spain; and all other the Realms, Iſles, Eſtates, Countries thereunto belonging, &c.

The Fifth provides, That the Crown of Spain, together with the other Kingdoms, Iſlands, States, Countries, and Places belonging thereto, (except Thoſe before excepted) ſhould be given and aſſign'd to the electoral Prince of Bavaria, in full Propriety and Poſ- A.D. 1698.
ſeſſion, to have and to hold to him and his Heirs for ever, as his Share of the ſaid Inheritance, againſt all Rights, Clames, and Pretenſions, &c. &c. either on the Part of the Moſt Chriſtian King, the Dauphin, &c. on one Part, or the Emperor, the King of the Romans, the Archduke, &c. on the other; in conſideration of which, the ſaid Elector of Bavaria, as well in the Quality of Father, as of lawful Tutor and Adminiſtrator, to the ſaid Electoral Prince, ſhould, in the Name of the ſaid Prince, his Heirs, &c. hold himſelf fatisfy'd with the ſaid Share, and renounce all Rights, Clames, and Pretenſions whatſoever on the Shares aſſign'd to the Dauphin and the Archduke; as the ſaid Electoral Prince was alſo to do, when out of his Minority.

By the Sixth, the Duchy of Milan was aſſign'd to the ſaid Archduke, as his Share of the ſaid Inheritance, and in Extinction of the Clames of all his Family: For as He, the ſaid Archduke, by the ſaid Article was to renounce, when he became of Age, all the Kingdoms, Provinces, &c. already diſpos'd of, ſo, by the next Article, the Emperor for himſelf and his Heirs, and the King of the Romans, were ſeverally to declare and execute the like Renunciations, on the Death of the Catholic King, in conſideration of the Allotment of the ſaid Duchy to the Archduke.

By the Eighth, the Treaty was to be communicated to the Emperor and the Elector of Bavaria, immediately after the Exchange of the Ratifications; and upon the Death of his Catholic Majeſty, They were to be invited to approve thereof.

By the Ninth, in caſe either of the ſaid Princes ſhould reject the ſaid Treaty, and ſhould nevertheleſs make any Attempt to take Poſſeſſion of the Share ſo allotted to him, or of any other Part of the ſaid Inheritance, by Force, the ſaid contracting Parties were to oppoſe ſuch Attempt with all their Force; and in the mean Time the Share allotted to the Son or Brother of the Prince ſo rejecting the ſaid Treaty, was to remane as in Sequeſtration, in the Hands of ſuch as ſhould be then Viceroys or Governors thereof.

The Tenth, Eleventh, Thirteenth and Fourteenth, had no other Object but the making good the ſaid Treaty by Force againſt all Oppoſers: And in the laſt of theſe Four Articles, it was ſpecially ſtipulated and agreed, That if any Prince whatſoever ſhould oppoſe the Execution of the ſaid Treaty according to the Allotments made therein, the ſaid contracting Parties ſhould, in ſuch Caſe, be oblig'd to aſſiſt each other againſt all ſuch Oppoſition with all their Forces, and the Proportions, as well by Sea as Land, ſhould be ſettled as ſoon as the ſaid Treaty was ſign'd.

By the Twelfth Article, an Opening was left for all Kings, Princes, and States to become Parties in the Treaty, if they thought fit, and alſo Guarantees: And by the Fifteenth and laſt, the Ratifications were to be exchanged in three Weeks, or ſooner, if poſſible.

A. D. 1698. possible, to be computed from the Day of Signing.

Secret Articles. This is in Substance what was contain'd in the Body of the Treaty: But there were also certain seperate and secret Articles, which Posterity ought not to lose sight of, viz. That the Elector of Bavaria should be Tutor and Administrator to his Son, and should have the Administration of all his Kingdoms, &c. during his Minority: That if the said Prince his Son should happen to dye without Issue, then the said Elector should succede to all the said Kingdoms, &c. And that in case the Duchy of Milan should come to be sequester'd, according to the Stipulation in the Ninth Article, the Administration thereof should be vested in the Prince de Vaudemont, its present Governor; and, upon his decease, in Prince Charles de Vaudemont, his Son.

Thus all the Pretentions of the Imperial Court to the Spanish Succession, however founded or deriv'd, were at one bold Stroke set aside, by the superior Influence of France in concurrence with the Maritime Powers, who had before made the Establishment and Security of those Pretensions, the principal Motives of a general War.

A French Bias manifested upon the subject. And as the whole Bias of the Treaty was French, so in several Particulars the same Bias manifested itself in such a Manner, as fully authoris'd the lively Saying of a Frenchman, when it came to be divulg'd, viz. Voicy un Roy d'Angleterre encore plus commode pour nous, que n'estoit le Roy Charles. We have now a King of England more for our Turn, than even King Charles himself.

Mem. of Eur. p. 17.

For the Kingdoms and Provinces assign'd to the Dauphin, were of course to be annex'd to the Crown of France, whenever there should be a Demise of that Crown; whereas the Duchy of Milan, assign'd to the Imperial House as their Share, was assign'd to the Archduke, that its Connection with the Empire might be as remote and slight as possible: Besides, the Emperor, as afterwards appear'd, had a Clame on this Duchy as a Fief of the Empire, fallen in for want of Heirs Male in the Right Line; as also on the Duchy of Haut-Gueldre: And tho' the Elector of Bavaria and the Electoral Prince were oblig'd to renounce specifically the Duchy of Milan so assign'd to the Archduke as his Share of the Spanish Succession, the Dauphin is laid under no such specifical Obligation with regard to the said Duchy. Lastly; whatever might be urg'd in Behalf of the Electoral Prince of Bavaria's Clame upon, and Interest in, the Succession, as being A. D. 1698. the only Son of Mary Antoinette, Daughter of his Imperial Majesty, (who, by the way, was at this Time in her Grave) and of Margaretta Teresa, second Daughter of Philip IV. no Pretence of any tolerable Kind could be urg'd in favour of the Elector himself: For he had not the Shadow of a Right either in Law or Equity, nor was there Ground for any such political Basis, as would bear the Weight which was to rest upon it: And yet we see an express Provision was made, That in case the said Electoral Prince dy'd prematurely, his Share should belong not only to his Father, but his Heirs.

Full Powers. With regard to the full (i) Powers, in Virtue of which this unprecedented Negotiation was carry'd on and completed, Those of M. de Tallard, bearing Date August 19, N. S. were both from the King and the Dauphin; and are extant in print: But neither Those transmitted by the Chancellor in Blank from England, nor those given by the States, have ever yet been made public.

Manner of Signing. The Body of the Treaty, or first fifteen Articles, were sign'd, by Tallard only on Behalf of France, (for, at so pliant a Crisis, one French Minister was equal to any Negotiation); by Lord Portland and Sir Joseph Williamson for King William; and by no less than seven, of whom Heinsius the Grand Pensionary was one, on Behalf of the States: The Two secret Articles in relation to the Elector of Bavaria, in case he survive'd the Prince his Son, and the Sequestration of Milan, were sign'd by Tallard, and Portland and Williamson only: And, then again, another Article explanatory of the Fifth, Seventh, and Tenth of the Treaty, was sign'd by the same Persons who had before sign'd the said Treaty.

And now, whether this Measure was in Essentials good or bad, or in Manner and Circumstance justifiable or unjustifiable, it was reasonable to think, That once establish'd, the Parties concern'd would have plac'd their Reliance upon it, and made the necessary Dispositions to carry it (when Time should serve) into Execution:—Whether They did or not, the Sequel will shew: But this is certain, That his Majesty King William, if any Judgment can be deriv'd from Appearances, was fully perswaded, He had provided at least for his own Repose, during the Remainder of his Life: He had, in the Beginning of the Year, enter'd into a new (k) Triple League with the King of Sweden and the States on a defensive Plan, which provided

A new Triple League between England, Sweden, and the States.

(i) In the Preamble of the said Powers it is said, That the Desire of maintaining the Peace of Europe, together with the Effects and Friendship which Lewis King of France and Navarre had conceiv'd for his most dear and most beloved Brother the King of Great-Britain, had induc'd him to enter into closer Engagements than before with his said Brother, and to concert with him the necessary Measures for preventing such Emergencies as might occasion a new War, &c.

(k) But, whereas this Triple League was concluded and sign'd May 4, N. S. on the 9th of July following, the Swedish Court enter'd into another Alliance with France, of which the following were the principal Heads, viz.

I. That the antient Alliance was renew'd between the Kings of France and Sweden, their Heirs and Successors.

II. That the Aim and Intention of this Treaty, was to preserve and secure the common Peace, by such Means as should be judg'd most proper and convenient. III. That if it should be disturb'd by any Breach and Hostilities, the two Kings would make it their Business to repair the Wrongs in an amicable way. IV. That if their Endeavours prov'd ineffectual, they would jointly consider of Ways to defend the Rights of the Country injur'd. V. That in case any Prince or State would enter into this Treaty within a Year, they should be admitted by the Consent of both Kings. VI. That neither the one nor the other, should make Peace or Truce without comprehending the other therein. VII. That the Articles of the Treaties formerly concluded by either of the two with other Kings, Princes or States, should remain

A. D. 1698. provided not only, That in caſe either of the contracting Parties was invaded or menac'd with an Invaſion, the Others ſhould immediately aſſiſt the ſaid Party with Intelligence, Advice, and Aſſiſtance, but alſo, That the View and Scope of the ſaid League ſhould moreover extend to the Preſervation of the Peace of Europe, againſt any Aggreſſors whatſoever: And the Miniſters of the ſaid Parties were to meet forthwith, in order to adjuſt all and ſingular the Points, which ſhould be thought neceſſary for perfecting the ſaid League. But after this Adjuſtment with France, we hear no more of this Meeting, or at leaſt of any thing it produc'd: And his Majeſty waſted the reſt of the Summer in reviewing the Dutch Troops, interchanging Complements with the Princes of Germany, particularly of the Houſe of Lunenburgh, &c: Indeed; our Hiſtorians tell us, with what Probability, let the preceding Narration bear witneſs, That his Majeſty's Viſit to the Duke of Zell, gave the Court of France as much Uneaſineſs, as the French Camp at Compeigne gave the Allies: Tho' 'tis moſt certain, continue They, that his Majeſty had nothing in View, but to cement the Union of the ſaid Princes, by a Match between the King of the Romans, and the Princeſs of Hanover, which was now agreed upon, and ſoon after completed; as alſo, by removing the Apprehenſions ſome of the Members of the Empire were under of the growing Power of the Emperor; which, it muſt be own'd, his Majeſty had effectually done, by his Partition-Treaty.

Neglected.

Reviewing, Viſits, &c.

[Kennet, Boyer, &c.]

Thoſe Authors, however, deduce the ſame Inference from the Succeſs of his Majeſty's Mediation, conjunctly with That of the States, in terminating the Hungarian War, which had now laſted Fifteen Years.

But if the Two Courts of Vienna and Conſtantinople had not found themſelves without the Support which they had hitherto drawn from their ſeveral Allies, or if the Emperor had not eſteem'd the Spaniſh Succeſſion better worth his Attention than new Acquiſitions in Hungary, it is probable that Mediation had ſtill continued as unſucceſsful as ever.

As it was, the Two Armies kept the Field during the whole Summer, tho' without making any Attempt againſt each other: And in that of the Imperialiſts, which wanting Pay wanted every Thing, a Conſpiracy of ſo extenſive and dangerous a Kind was ſet on foot, as, if not providentially diſcover'd, had probably render'd them an eaſy Prey to the Enemy.

Conferences at Carlowitz.

It was the 7th of November before the ſaid Mediators (Lord Paget for England, and M. Colliers for the States) deliver'd to the Turkiſh Plenipotentiaries (at Carlowitz, the Place of Meeting) the preliminary Articles, which were in Subſtance, That all the ſeveral Parties ſhould retain what They were in poſſeſſion of: Five Days more were ſpent in canvaſſing theſe Articles; and then a Diſpute about Precedency, had like to have broke up the Congreſs in Confuſion: But Expedients having been propos'd and ſubmitted to, which remov'd the Difficulty, by removing the Thing itſelf, Matter of Form gave place to Matter of Buſineſs, and for three Days the Conferences were carried on with a good deal of Succeſs: But then ſome Debates ariſing, about the giving up of Teckely, and the holy Sepulchre; the diſmantling of Caminieck, and the ſurrendring of another Place upon the Black-Sea; beſides the quitting of Aſoph to the Muſcovites; and, chiefly, about the Regulation of Limits between the two Empires, and the Venetian and Turkiſh Territories; the Plenipotentiaries ſent Expreſſes to their reſpective Maſters, which waſted a great deal of Time: However, at length, the Imperialiſts and Poles concluded their Part of the Treaty on the 26th of January, 1699, and perhaps would have done it ſooner, but in ſome ſort of Complacency to the Venetians, who did not ſign theirs till the Middle of the next Month. As for the Articles between the Czar of Muſcovy and the Sultan, they contain'd only a Truce for two Years, and ſo were ſoon agreed upon, and ſign'd on the 25th of December, 1698. By this Peace the Emperor preſerv'd his late Acquiſitions, and vaſtly enlarg'd his Territories: The Poles (tho' worſted in an Action with the Tartars this Summer) had the important Place of Caminieck reſtor'd to them, in its preſent State, with other Advantages: The Muſcovites were Gainers by the keeping of Aſoph: And tho' the Venetians ſeem'd to have far'd hardeſt in this Negotiation, as is uſual with thoſe who make their Terms laſt, yet they had all the Morea, and ſeveral Fortreſſes in Dalmatia, yielded up to them: So that, according to ſome Computations, the Turks loſt the beſt Half of their Dominions in Europe. By this Time alſo, the new King of Poland, having brought the Cardinal-Primate, who had ſo obſtinately ſtickled for the Prince of Conti, to acknowledge his Majeſty's Title, and in ſome ſort compos'd the Troubles of Lithuania, Chriſtendom wore a Face of Tranquility, which by ſo much the more pleaſing it was, was ſo much the more deceitful: For, as the Seeds of Miſchief which had been ſcatter'd wide over the North were ripening apace, ſo in the South, as in part we have ſeen, Fraud and Ambition were altogether as vigilant and as active, in order to produce a ſimilar Crop.

A. D. 1699.

The Treaty concluded.

France, in particular, had all along play'd a double Game: For, while ſhe was meditating and conducting ſo artful a Negotiation with the Maritime Powers, her Miniſter, the Marquis de Harcourt, us'd no other Language remain in full Force and Vigour, ſo far as they ſhould not be contrary to this. VIII. That the Freedom of Commerce between the Subjects of the two Kings, ſhould be preſerved as formerly. IX. In purſuance of which, all Ports, Cities and Provinces ſhould be open to the Subjects of both Crowns, according as the Laws and Cuſtoms ſhould permit, both to ſell their Commodities in theſe Places and buy others. X. And that this particular Treaty ſhould continue ten Years, with Liberty to prolong this Term, if it were judg'd convenient by the two Kings; who by conſent ſhould have a watchful Eye upon the Means to preſerve the Peace againſt the Danger that threaten'd it.

Intrigues at the Court of Spain.

---

A. D. 1698. guage of the Court of Spain, but such as might induce his Catholic Majesty to believe, That he had not so cordial a Friend in the World as the King his Master: Tho', at the same Time, he caus'd a large Body of his best Forces to move towards the Frontiers of Catalonia on one Side and of Navarre on the other, that Terror might have its Operation, as well as Courtship and Complement: M. de Harcourt was also furnish'd with Instructions of all Sorts, as well to defeat the Intrigues of the Imperial Minister, the Count de Harrach, with the Queen and Madame de Berlip, as to facilitate his own: Knowing the Dread conceiv'd by the Spanish Grandees of coming under the Dominions of France, he was to offer them as a Palliative, the Choice of the Dauphin's three Sons; or, in case of Refusal, the Electoral Prince of Bavaria, in preference to any Prince of the Imperial Family; or even any One else whom They should chuse to be their Sovereign from amongst themselves: Nor was the Necessity of forming a sufficient Party in the Nation, the Court and the Cabinet; and, above all, of retaining a sufficient Co-adjutor in the Latter, who should be deeply interested in the Cause, and capable, as well by his Abilities as his Situation, to give the most favorable Turn to every Incident that arise, and to influence by his Authority and Example, in Aid of all other Considerations, unthought of, or unattended to.

Cardinal Porto Carero in the French Interest.

For This necessary and able Co-adjutor he found in the Person of the Cardinal Porto-Carero: And, being thus furnish'd with Creatures to his Purpose, he began to spread his Snares accordingly.

The Queen removes the Court to Toledo.

The Queen, on the other Hand, more afraid of his succeeding, than confident of her own Power to defeat him, thought it her wisest Course to hurry his Catholic Majesty out of his Way; and, agreable to this Resolution, the, all at once, prevail'd with him, to remove from Madrid to Toledo, under a Pretence, That the Air of the Former did not agree with him; and also, to forbid all the Foreign Ministers from following him, under another similar Pretence, That his Majesty's Health requir'd some Respite from the Fatigues of State.

This Scheme being thus laid, and this Motion made in consequence of it, M. de Harcourt had nothing to do, but to keep his Eye on the Count de Harrach: But, upon Enquiry, he found, the said Count had disappear'd just before: Concluding, therefore, that he was of the Toledo-Party; and from this Piece of Management, growing so much the more apprehensive of his Influence there, he posted down after him; and demanding an Audience, presented a Memorial to his Catholic Majesty, setting forth, That he had receiv'd positive Orders from the King his Master, to make him an Offer of Succours by Sea and Land against the Moors, who were then besieging both Ceuta and Oran; and, in excuse of his own unexpected Appearance there, alledging, That he was not permitted to make that Offer to any Body but his Majesty in Person.

Pretence of the French Minister to follow it.

But tho' the Plea serv'd very well to authorise his coming, it would not serve for his Stay: For the King gave him to understand, by way of Answer, That he had left his Foreign Affairs in the Hands of the Cardinal de Toledo at Madrid; and that his Business at Toledo, was to avoid Business. A. D. 1698.

This cold Reception oblig'd him to return to his former Post, where he found the Cardinal he was refer'd to, ready furnish'd with an Answer, viz. That when his Catholic Majesty found the Two Places in Danger, which his good Brother of France had offer'd his Succors to relieve, he should thankfully accept them: And that, in the mean Time, he should lose no Opportunity of maintaining the good Correspondence subsisting between their Majesties: So that all the Benefit he deriv'd from his political Journey was This, That his Catholic Majesty, to save Appearances, was not only oblig'd to dismiss M. de Harrach from his Attendance at Toledo, (where he actually was) but to cause it to be given out, That he had only saluted their Majesties in the Walks. The Reception he met with.

All This, it must be observ'd, pass'd in Spain before the Partition-Treaty was sign'd, and, very probably, quicken'd the Process on the Part of France, whose Ministers, in exact proportion as the Prospect narrow'd on one Hand, open'd it for themselves on the other: In which they had altogether the Advantage, in point of Intelligence, both of King William and his All-sufficient Fortland: For neither the Imperial or Catholic Courts were upon good Terms with him, consequently plac'd no Confidence in him: And tho' his Majesty had not only wrangled the Latter into a Re-admission of Schoenenburgh the Jew, but had also honour'd him with the Character of his Envoy as King of England, (in Consequence of which, the British Arms were now over his Gate, and he stood upon higher Ground than ever) This forc'd Elevation of his, only lower'd his Master as much as it rais'd him; and he was serv'd accordingly: For the Spaniards not only continued to hate, distrust, and despise the Man, but the Character for his Sake: And, very probably, the true Reason, why Lord Wharton (who had been nam'd to that Embassy, and who, as we have seen by the King's Letter to the Chancellor, had excus'd himself from going) declin'd that Service, was, on the Jew's Account, who, he knew, would have the Secret, whoever had the Commission. The Court of England not upon good Terms with the Court of Vienna and Madrid.

But, what Reason soever the Court of Spain had to resent the Behavior of his Britannic Majesty in the Case of Schoenenburgh and other Matters, and That of All the several Parties in the Partition-Treaty more especially, the Imperial Court had not Credit or Address enough to derive any Advantage from it: On the contrary, no sooner had that Secret taken Air, but a violent Ferment follow'd in his Catholic Majesty's Cabinet: And the Result was, a Will, not conformable to Those of Philip III. and Philip IV. in behalf of the Males of the House of Austria, but in behalf of the Electoral Prince of Bavaria. The King of Spain makes a Will in favour of the E. Prince

A. D. 1698. of Bavaria, who was therein declar'd his Majesty's Universal Heir, to the equal Disappointment of both the Rival-Families.

In what Manner the Court of Vienna behav'd upon the Occasion, is not, indeed, explain'd: But as to the Court of France, they made no Difficulty to order M. de Harcourt to present an expostulatory (l) Memorial thereon, to the following Effect, viz.

French Memorial thereon.

"SIR,

The King my Master has commanded me to tell your Majesty, That, after the positive Assurances I had given him in your Majesty's Name, That you would never make any Innovation in the Peace, or fail in the punctual Observance of it, he could not tell how to give Credit to a Report which prevail'd, concerning a Will made by your Majesty in favour of the Electoral Prince of Bavaria, till it was confirm'd to him in such a Manner, as left no Room for Contradiction: That in a Case so little expected by his Majesty, considering the Confidence he plac'd in your Majesty's Royal Word, he should himself be wanting to the Friendship of which in the late Peace he gave your Majesty so many Proofs, to the Preservation of that Peace, and to the Maintenance of those Rights which the inviolable Laws and Customs of the Monarchy have vested in the Dauphin his only Son, if he should not declare, as he has commanded me to do, to your Majesty, That he will take the same necessary Cautions to prevent a Renewal of the War on one Hand, as the Injury meditated against his Family on the other. I am also to add, That it is the passionate Desire of the King my Master, to see your Majesty long enjoy the Dominions which you receiv'd from God, in Right of your Birth: And that as to myself, your Majesty knows, I have never importun'd you concerning the Succession: Lastly, Sir, it is to be consider'd; Whether the disinterested Respects of my Master, and his Desire to maintain a good Correspondence with your Majesty, deserve the Resolution you have taken: And what Reason all Europe may have to complain of your Majesty, if, to the general Misfortune, the Solicitude of my Master cannot prevent the Disturbance to be fear'd from such an Incident."

And now One would have thought, That, in answer to this half-plaintive, half-menacing Memorial, the Court of Spain would have justify'd the Measure his Catholic Majesty had taken in favour of the Electoral Prince of Bavaria, by complaining in their Turn of the Partition-Treaty, which both preceded and provok'd it: But the Death of that Infant-Prince, which happen'd about the Time of presenting this Memorial, and of which they had soon after Intelligence at Madrid, in all Probability, qualify'd the Eagerness of the Answer which M. de Harcourt would otherwise have receiv'd: For the Answer he did receive, by the Order, and in the Name, of his Catholic Majesty, was conceiv'd in the Terms which follow,

A. D. 1698.

"Most excellent Lord,

Upon considering the Memorial presented by your Excellency to his Majesty, He commanded me to tell you, That he was conscious, nothing had been wanting on his Side to the punctual Observance of the Peace, agreable to what he has, upon other Occasions, suggested to your Excellency: That he will persevere in the same Sentiments: That his Zeal for preserving the Tranquility of Europe, is equal to That of the Most Christian King: That he could not but be surpris'd at his Excellency's Memorial, at a Time when the divine Goodness had so recently restor'd him to Health, and, by consequence, when there was no longer any pressing Motive upon him to quicken his Resolutions; But that he hop'd he should have sufficient Time allow'd him, to make his Most Christian Majesty a long Series of such Returns, as were suitable to his Majesty's Professions of Friendship and Esteem for him; as also, to concur with him in whatever should be found necessary for continuing the public Repose; which would be the constant Tenor of his Prayers, and which he should recommend to Posterity as a Fundamental most worthy their Regard and Observance."

Spanish Answer.

Thus stood this great Affair at the Beginning of the Year 1699; and no more need be added to this Recital in this Place, than Bishop Burnet's Epitome of it; and a Word or two, to clear the Perplexity and expose the Unfairness thereof, that the Prejudices of that egregious Writer may be for ever done away.

"The frequent Relapses, (quoth He) and the feeble State of the King of Spain's Health, gave the World great Alarms: The Court of Vienna trusted to their Interest in the Court of Spain, and in that King himself; the French Court was resolv'd not to let go their Pretensions to that Succession, without great Advantages; the King and the States were not now strong enough, to be the Umpires in that Matter: This made them more easily hearken to Propositions, that were set on foot by the Court of France: The Electoral Prince of Bavaria was propos'd, he being the only Issue of the King of Spain's Second Sister, who was marry'd to the Emperor: Into this the King, the States, and the Elector of Bavaria enter'd; the Court of Spain AGREED TO THIS; and that King, by his Will, confirm'd his Father's Will, by which the Succession of the Crown was settled

B. Burnet's Epitome of this Affairs.

(l) A Copy of which, according to Mr. Lamberty, who has preferr'd it in his Collection, M. Dykvelt was the first Person to procure, in the original Italian. A Translation of it is also to be met with in the State of Europe for February 1699. The Author of which, having touch'd on the very civil Footing on which the Imperial and French Ministers liv'd with each other at Madrid, and the Conjectures made by the Public upon it; as if they were engag'd in a joint Negotiation concerning the Succession, adds, (not being as yet in the Secret of the Parties, nor aware of the Force of his own conclusion) As if that great Affair were of such a Nature, as to suffer Transactions about Right of Inheritance, during the King's Life, and without his Knowledge.

A.D. 1698. settled on the Iſſue of the Second Daughter; and it was reſolv'd to engage all the Grandees and Cities of Spain, to maintain the Succeſſion according to this Settlement: The Houſe of Auſtria complain'd of this, and pretended that, by a long Tract of reciprocal Settlements, ſeveral mutual Entails had paſs'd between thoſe two Branches of the Houſe of Auſtria: The Court of France ſeem'd alſo to complain of it; but they were ſecretly in it, upon Engagements, that the Dominions in Italy ſhould fall to their Share."

Now, one would conclude from hence, That the Partition-Treaty we have been diſcourſing of, and the King of Spain's Will in favour of the Electoral Prince, had the ſame Purpoſe in view, and that the Latter was the Reſult of the Former: Whereas our own (m) Writers obſerve, That the Court of Spain reſented the One to the higheſt Degree, and as an Expedient of Oppoſition, according to the Proofs already before us, fell upon the Other, (for the Engagements of the Grandees were againſt a Partition of any Kind): And, laſtly, it is obſervable, That with an Inſincerity, or a Negligence, which can never be too ſeverely expos'd, he never ſo much as mentions the ſecret Article in favour of the Elector of Bavaria at all.

[State Trials, Temp. Gul. III. Vol. III. P. 98, 206.]

and his State of Affairs at Home;

In the ſame indiſcriminate, if not in the ſame uncandid, Manner, he alſo treats of our domeſtic Affairs, or rather the Aſpect they wore, at the Meeting of the new Parliament: For, having mention'd the Difficulty apprehended of managing them, as before cited, he procedes in theſe Words, "The King himſelf did not ſeem to lay this to Heart ſo much as was fitting: He ſtay'd long beyond Sea; and croſs Winds hinder'd his Return to England ſo ſoon as he had intended; upon which the Parliament was prorogu'd for ſome Weeks after the Members were come up: Even This four'd their Spirits, and had too great a Share in the ill Humor which appear'd amongſt them."

Corrected.

The plain Matter of Fact was This: The Parliament having been prorogu'd from the 27th of September to the 27th of October, and again to the 29th of November, a Proclamation was iſſued on the 3d of that Month, importing, That the Seſſion ſhould then be open'd, and that the Members were to give their Attendance accordingly: Thus the whole Kingdom was inform'd, That his Majeſty, inſtead of receiving the Compliments of the Nobility and Gentry on his Birth-Day, had ſolicitouſly deferr'd his Return as long as poſſible, without any better or other Pretence to excuſe the Delay, than what had already been urg'd to excuſe his Abſence: And when the Perſon of a King is put into the Balance againſt a whole Nation, it is no great Immodeſty to ſuggeſt, That Slights on one Hand may warrant Reſentments on the other. The King was all this while at Loo, or at leaſt till the 7th of November, O. S. when Sir Cloudſley Shovel, arriv'd with a Squadron on the Coaſt of Holland, to convoy him home: And all the Formality of what Buſineſs he had to tranſact with the States, was ſtill to be diſpatch'd. Thus it was the 15th before his Majeſty could aſſiſt in the ſeveral Aſſemblies of the Council of State, and of the States-General, where the military Diſpoſitions of the Year were to be adjuſted, in order to be tranſmitted to the ſeveral Provinces: And by that Time the ſaid Formalities were thus diſpatch'd, and what other Matters were then depending, ſuch a Courſe of weſterly Winds ſet in, as detain'd him at the Hague till the 11th of December: So that there was a Neceſſity to prorogue the Parliament again till the 6th of that Month, which was done accordingly; not without ſome Apprehenſion, That yet another Prorogation might be found neceſſary: For, with all the Seamanſhip Sir Cloudſley was Maſter of, it was the 3d before he could reach Margate; and it was the 4th in the Evening before his Majeſty reach'd Kenſington: After which there remain'd but one Day for the propounding and digeſting ſuch Preparations as were neceſſary, at leaſt, for the Choice of a Speaker, on which, at this Criſis, both Parties ſeem'd to think the Iſſue of the Parliament in a good Degree depended; as it appears by a Paper publiſh'd about this Time, under the Title of Conſiderations upon the Choice of a Speaker, &c. the Author of which ſeems to be equally apprehenſive of a known Profligate in the Service of the Court, and of a known Profligate pretending to be in the Service of the People: For, having premiſ'd, That whenever Slavery ſhould be entirely fix'd in England, as it was amongſt all our Neighbours, it muſt be by the two-fold Influence of a corrupt Parliament, and a ſtanding parliamentary Army, according to that famous Maxim of Lord Burleigh, That England can never be undone but by a Parliament; as alſo, That a corrupt Speaker was the fitteſt Perſon to corrupt and otherwiſe influence the Proceedings of the Houſe, he enters his firſt Caveat againſt a Perſon who had no other Characteriſtics than Confidence and Dexterity, a Perſon already debauch'd, and once rejected by the Houſe on a like Occaſion; and who being already a Lord of the Treaſury, was under the greateſt Temptation to do whatever was demanded of him, and conſequently could neither with Honeſty or Decency hold two ſuch Truſts as were inconſiſtent with each other. After which, he

A.D. 1698.

The King returns from Holland.

Conteſt on the Choice of a Speaker.

ſpeaks

(m) Says One of them, "Now, all Europe knows what Memorials the Spaniſh Miniſters have given every where, both before and ſince the laſt Treaty, [of which we ſhall hear in its Place] complaining of partitioning, as an unprecedented Practice againſt the Laws of God and Man, and as an Indignity done them, which they would oppoſe and revenge with the laſt Drop of their Blood: Did not D. de Harcourt, ſeveral Months before the Treaty, (which ſhews the Deſign of the Treaty older than we pretend) warn the States, That there was no Expedient imaginable that could prevent the Dismembering their Monarchy that they would not lay hold on? Nay, that they would all arm from Fifteen to Sixty, rather than ſuffer it?" And ſays alſo Another, "Did not the Spaniards return an Anſwer to the Agents of the French, with a Haughtineſs natural to the Temper of that People, when the Electoral Prince of Bavaria was pitch'd upon to ſucceed the Spaniſh Monarchy?"

A. D. 1698. speaks of another Gentleman, who at the Revolution was 16,000 l. in debt to the Crown, and by a particular Clause in the Act of Indemnity, procur'd a Release: And again, towards the Close of his Paper, characterises the same Gentleman, as an old Prostitute of the exploded, pension'd Parliament in Charles the Second's Reign, who had, from that Time, been tricking the House in so shameful a Manner, that the several Periods of his Life might be mark'd out by the Bargains he had made with the Court, when the Court came up to his Price.

By the last of these Gentlemen he meant Sir Edward Seymor, and by the first Sir Thomas Littleton; concerning whom, and what was to be expected from him, he farther writes as follows: "Suppose there is a Debt growing every Day upon the Nation by Seamen not discharged, while the Money given for so necessary a Purpose, has been dispos'd of for keeping up an Army, that should have been disbanded pursuant to the Determination of the last Parliament, after the most mature and solemn Debates, must not the House expect Interruptions in bringing on that Matter, Difficulties in wording, and Delays in putting the Question, from one who, in his Station at Court, may be, perhaps, charg'd with advising the keeping up of the Army, and in the last Parliament was the best and most artificial Advocate for not disbanding at all?"

Now the Person tacitly recommended by the Disqualifications thus fasten'd upon these Two, was Mr. Harley: But when the Question came to be put, it appear'd, That the Majority were for Sir Thomas Littleton, which look'd like a good Omen on the Side of the Court, promising a smooth and happy Session.

Sir T. Littleton chosen.

As to the gracious Speech from the Throne, deliver'd three Days after, (for till then both Houses complaisantly adjourn'd themselves, that the Court might have Time to concert their Measures) it was conceiv'd in these Words.

The King's Speech.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

I have do doubt but you are met together, with Hearts fully dispos'd to do what is necessary for the Safety, Honor, and Happiness of the Kingdom; and that is all I ask of you.

In order to this, Two Things principally seem to require your Consideration.

The One is, What Strength ought to be maintain'd at Sea, and what Force kept up at Land for this Year? All that I shall observe to you on this Head, is, That the flourishing of Trade, the supporting of Credit, and the quieting of the Peoples Mind at Home, will depend upon the Opinion they have of their Security: And, to preserve to England the Weight and Influence it has, at present, on the Councils and Affair Abroad, it will be requisite Europe should see you will not be wanting to yourselves.

The Second thing I shall mention to you, as of great Consequence, is, the making some farther Progress towards a discharging the Debts, which the Nation has contracted, by reason of the long and expensive War: In this the public Interest, as well as Justice, is concern'd; and I think an English Parliament can never make such a Mistake, as not to hold sacred all parliamentary Engagements.

A. D. 1698.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

I do earnestly recommend these Things to you, that you may provide such Supplies, as you shall judge necessary for these several Occasions.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I think it would be happy, if some effectual Expedient could be found for employing the Poor, which might tend to the great Increase of our Manufactures, as well as remove a heavy Burden from the People.

I hope also you will employ your Thoughts about some good Bills for the Advancement of Trade, and for the future Discouragement of Vice and Profaneness.

The Things I have mention'd to you being of common Concern, I cannot but hope for Unanimity and Dispatch."

Remarks thereon.

Thus it appears through all Disguises, That the King's favorite View was to be important on the Continent; which is the most ruinous Principle that can be adopted with regard to the natural Interest of this Country; and that his favorite Measure was to have as considerable a Land-Force as he could possibly procure, both to figure with Abroad, and to be safe at Home: And it is impossible to pass over the stupid and servile Reflections, made by our pretended Historians upon it, without a suitable Mixture of Concern and Indignation: For, tho' nothing is more manifest than that his Majesty grafted his own Interests on the Interests of France, and that all the Engagements he was under, were such as had been concerted with France to force the Imperial Court into an Acquiescence with the Partition, these Writers, with the Evidence of the Fact before their Eyes, which at this Time (except in the Cabinet) was not so much as suspected in England, talk upon all Occasions, as if he had no other Purpose to serve with these Land-Forces, but to cover the Nation from the Insults of France. Three of them, in the very same Words tell us, "The King was apprehensive, That if England was entirely disarm'd, it would be too great a Temptation to the Ambition of France:" Another says, "It was obvious to all thinking Men, not biass'd by Faction or Prejudice, that it was absolutely necessary for England to keep up a good Naval and Land-Force, to be prepar'd against any Invasion from France:" And even Burnet, who admits, the King's keeping up an Army beyond the Votes of Parliament, was much resented, adds, nor was the Occasion for doing it much consider'd: Whereas, in the Papers set forth by the Anti-Courtiers of those Times, the Occasion is more fully consider'd, or rather, is supposed more interesting, than it deserv'd: For, according to the mistaken Opinion which then prevail'd, That the King had all the Steddiness and Consistency of Conduct, which he had so pathetically lamented the Want of,

Kennet, Boyer, Tindal.

Oldmixon.

A. D. 1698. of, in his Royal Uncle Charles II. They farther preſum'd, That France was ſtill the Object of his Majeſty's Jealouſy, and the only Power which he was to be arm'd againſt: As alſo, that the Spaniſh Inheritance would be the Object of that Power, not England; That our Part on ſuch an Emergency, would be to aſſiſt the Weakeſt; and that, under the Load of Preſſures and Anticipations laid upon the Nation in the Courſe of the laſt War, 2,300,000*l.* would be all that we ſhould have to lay out on the Experiment: So that the Queſtion would not be as it was then, How a new War could be carry'd on againſt France at large, but how that Sum could be diſpos'd of to the greateſt Advantage: In anſwer to which, they reaſon'd as follows.

"Moſt Men, at this Time of Day, I believe, will agree with me, That 'tis not our Buſineſs to throw Squibs in Flanders, ſend out vaſt Sums of Money to have our Men play at Bo-peep with the French, and, at beſt, to have their Brains beat out againſt Stone-Walls: But if a War is neceſſary there, 'tis our Intereſt to let the Dutch and Germans manage it, which is proper for their Situation, and let our Province be to undertake the Sea: Yet, if we have not Wit and Honeſty enough to make ſuch a Bargain with them, but that we bring ourſelves again to a Neceſſity of maintaining Armies there, we may hire Men from Germany for half the Price we can raiſe them here; and they will be ſooner ready, than they can be tranſported from hence; That Country being full of Men, all Soldiers, enur'd to Fatigue, and ſerving for much leſs Pay than we give our own: Beſides; we ſhall carry on the War at the Expence of others Blood, and ſave our own People, which are the Strength and Riches of all Governments; we ſhall ſave the Charge of providing for the Officers when the War is done, and not meet with ſuch Difficulties in diſbanding them."

And, again, afterwards, They manifeſt their Diſcernment rather than their Intelligence, by giving the Court-Managers this wholeſome Admonition, viz. "If theſe Gentlemen are really afraid of a new War, and don't uſe it as a Bug-Bear to fright us out of our Liberties, and to gain their little Party-Ends, the Way to bring the People into it heartily, is to ſhew them, That all their Actions tend to the public Advantage, to leſſen the national Expences, to manage the Revenue with the greateſt Frugality, to poſtpone part of their own Salaries, and not to grow rich while their Country grows poor, to give their hearty Aſſiſtance for appropriating the Iriſh Lands, gain'd by the Peoples Sweat and Blood to the public Service, as was promis'd by his Majeſty; and not to ſhew an unhappy Wit in puniſhing ſome Men and excuſing Others for the ſame Fault, and ſpend three Months in Intrigues, how to keep up a Standing-Army, to the Dread of the greateſt Part of the Nation: For, let them fancy what they pleaſe, the People will never conſent to the raiſing a new Army, till they are ſatisfy'd they ſhall be rid of them when the War is done: And there is no way of convincing them of That, but the Diſbanding Theſe with Willingneſs." A. D. 1698.

Thus it appears, the Occaſion or Neceſſity of a Land-Force at this Criſis was thoroughly conſider'd, tho' on miſtaken Grounds: And this Miſtake was more advantageous to the Court, than all the Arguments they had to offer: For if, at this Criſis, the Secret of the Partition had been known to the Public, and with it, that the Uſe and Application of this Force was to be againſt the Emperor, not againſt France, it is reaſonable to think, tho' (n) one Author has been hardy enough to aſſert the contrary, That the Ferment would have roſe much higher againſt the Court than it did; and that the King would have loſt the Confidence of his People for good and all.

But the ſame Prelate, moreover, admits, That the Reſentment conceiv'd againſt the King on account of his not diſbanding the Army, agreable to the Reſolutions of his Parliament, was much increas'd by his own Management after he came over: "The Miniſters, continues He, repreſented to him, That they could carry the keeping up a Land-Force, of Ten or Twelve Thouſand, but that they could not carry it farther: He ſaid, ſo ſmall a Number was as good as none at all, therefore, he would not authoriſe them to propoſe it: On the other Hand, They ſhould loſe their Credit with their beſt Friends, if they ventur'd to ſpeak of a greater Number."—So that we have here an explicit Confeſſion, That this favorite Meaſure of the King's was not only unpleaſing to the Anti-Courtiers in Parliament, and the Bulk of the Nation, but alſo to his own Miniſters, and to Thoſe they rely'd on moſt: And it is not unworthy Remark, That not the leaſt Trace of any Addreſs from the Commons, in Acknowledgment of his Majeſty's Speech, is to be found in any of our Books: Whence it may be inferr'd, That what with the Sullenneſs of the King and the Timidity of his Miniſters, and the Animoſities which prevail'd in the Houſe, it being found impracticable to reconcile the Compliments expected on one Hand, with the Pre-engagements taken on the other, the Houſe neither did or could agree upon any Addreſs at all.—So that we have here an Exception, to what is in our Times become an indiſpenſible Rule, viz. That every Speech from the Throne, deſerves not only the Acknowledgments of the Houſe, but a ſort of Engagement to comply with every Thing propos'd in it. No Addreſs from the Commons.

Nor was the Zeal of the Lords on this Occaſion very eaſily kindled, nor when kindled

(n) Boyer in his Life of King William, Vol. XIV. p. 369, where he moſt abſurdly and inconſiſtently ſays, "Had the late Partition-Treaty been communicated to Parliament, they would, perhaps, at that Time, if not abſolutely have approv'd of it, yet have been ſo far under the ſame Apprehenſions with his Majeſty, as to ſee the Neceſſity of keeping France within the Bounds ſet her by the Peace of Ryſwick."

A. D. 1698. kindled did it flame out very bright: For as it was the 22d before they agreed to their Addreſs, and the 3d of January before they waited upon his Majeſty with it, ſo it was conceiv'd in ſuch general Terms, as were more ſuitable to the Decorum of the Houſe, than the more immediate Views of his Majeſty: For having declar'd themſelves highly ſenſible of his Majeſty's great Grace and Goodneſs towards his People, expreſs'd on ſo many Occaſions, and particularly in his late Speech, they begg'd Leave humbly to aſſure his Majeſty, That as they ſhould always retain a lively Impreſſion of thoſe great and continued Obligations which he had laid upon the Nation, ſo it ſhould be, upon every Occaſion, their perpetual Care and Study, with the moſt zealous Duty and moſt grateful Affections imaginable, to make his Majeſty all ſuitable Returns within their Power: As alſo, That they ſhould not fail to uſe their moſt diligent Endeavours for the attaining thoſe great and good Ends, which his Majeſty had been graciouſly pleas'd to recommend to his Parliament.

The Addreſs of the Lords.

His Majeſty, however, made the moſt of it: For in his Anſwer he expreſs'd himſelf as follows.

"My Lords,

The King's Anſwer.

I take this Addreſs very kindly; and give you my hearty Thanks: The Houſe may always depend upon my Kindneſs, as I do on this Aſſurance of their Duty to me, and their Zeal for the public Good."

Thus the Triumph of the Court, in carrying their Speaker, was very ſhort-liv'd; and that Gleam of Sun-ſhine only ſerv'd to make the Gloom and the Damp which follow'd it, ſo much the more ſenſibly felt.

The Conduct of his Miniſters with regard to the Bill for diſbanding the Army.

Nor, as Burnet farther obſerves, was the Diſpoſition with regard to the Court leſs favorable to their Purpoſes, than their own feeble and abſurd Conduct: For as the Miniſters had not Credit enough with their Maſter to carry their own Meaſures, nor with the Houſe to carry his, when the Affair of the Army came under Debate, they brought in no Eſtimates; they made no Propoſals; but left the whole Game in the Hands of the Oppoſers, who play'd it accordingly: For having propos'd 7000 Men, as a ſufficient Eſtabliſhment for Guards and Garriſons, which was all we wanted in Time of Peace, they carry'd their Point without any great Difficulty, as appears by the following Reſolution upon it, viz.

The Reſolutions of the Commons thereon.

"That all the Land-Forces of England in Engliſh Pay, exceeding 7000 Men, (and thoſe conſiſting of his Majeſty's natural-born Subjects) be forthwith paid and diſbanded; and that all the Forces in Ireland, excepting 12,000 Men, (and thoſe natural-born Subjects, to be kept and maintain'd by the Kingdom of Ireland) be, likewiſe, forthwith diſbanded:" And, agreable to this Reſolution, they order'd a Bill to be brought in, which being warmly proſecuted by the Undertakers on that Side, was ſoon brought to Perfection, to the immortal Honor of this Parliament, and the great Relief and Satisfaction of the People in general: For, notwithſtanding the maudlin Lamentations of our purblind Hiſtorians over this juſt, ſeaſonable, and ſalutary Meaſure, all that deſerves to be lamented in it, is the Want of ſuch a Preamble to the Bill, as ſhould have deterr'd any Man, how daring or profligate ſoever, from making any future Effort, to reſt the Security of the Government upon any other Baſis, than the Love, Gratitude, and Eſteem of a brave, free, diſcerning People, agreable to the firſt Principles of our antient Conſtitution. A. D. 1698.

But, content with the enacting Clauſes, the Advocates for the Bill, did not ſtickle for any Preamble at all: And, accordingly, it now ſtands in our Statute-Books, as a Matter of Fact, unſupported either by Maxim, Argument or Inference.

Heads of the Bill.

As to the ſaid enacting Clauſes, the firſt provided, That the Army, and all the reſpective Regiments, Troops, Companies, &c. in England, Wales, &c. ſhould, on or before the 26th of March then next enſuing, be diſbanded, except ſuch Regiments, Troops, and Companies, not exceeding 7000 Men, Officers of all Sorts included, as before the firſt Day of the ſame Month of March ſhould be particularly expreſs'd in his Majeſty's Royal Proclamation under the Great Seal: The five following Clauſes, only ſerv'd to explane and enact the ſeveral Parts of the Reſolutions on which the Bill was founded: The Seventh was calculated to inflict Pains and Penalties, on all ſuch Officers as ſhould preſume to exerciſe any kind of military Power over their ſeveral Corps, after they had been ſo diſbanded; as alſo, on every Perſon or Perſons who ſhould wittingly and willingly adviſe, frame, contrive, counterſign, or put in Execution any Proclamation, Commiſſion, Act, Order, or Command whatſoever for continuing together any of the ſaid Corps, after they ſhould be ſo diſbanded; and to prevent any of the Soldiers, ſo diſbanded, for continuing together above Ten in a Company, after the Space of Two Days, after they were ſo diſbanded: The Eighth made Proviſion for a Loan of 800,000 l. at 7 per Cent. on the general Credit of the Exchequer, for the Payment of the Troops ſo diſbanded; the Overplus to be afterwards apply'd for other neceſſary Occaſions of the Kingdom: By the Ninth, no Perſon naturaliz'd in Ireland, was to be reputed a naturaliz'd Subject of England, or capable of being continued in the Service: And the Tenth contain'd a Proviſo, to exempt any of the Regiments, &c. ſo diſbanded, as ſhould, after Embarkation, or being in Readineſs to embark, in order to be tranſported beyond the Seas, be prevented and detain'd by contrary Winds, from the Pains and Penalties contain'd in the Act."

But of all the Precautions taken by the Commons to ſecure their Point, That of making it the firſt Buſineſs of the Seſſion, and of poſtponing every other Conſideration, was the moſt material; and what, upon ſimilar Occaſions, ought to be held moſt worthy of Imitation; if ever a Criſis ſhall come, when a Parliament ſhall be diſpos'd to read

A. D. 1698. in the Steps of This: For it ought not to be forgotten, That both Houſes ſeem'd to be inſpir'd with the ſame Spirit: If the Bill was but feebly oppos'd below, it was yet more feebly oppos'd above: And even B. Burnet himſelf allows, That ſo faint and ill-ſupported an Attempt, was rather a Reproach than a Service to the Government: Beſides; what renders This ſo much the more extraordinary, the ſame Author farther obſerves, "That the King not only ſeem'd to lay the whole of this Procedure much to Heart, but to ſink under it: He try'd (continues He) all that was poſſible to ſtruggle againſt it, when it was too late; it not being ſo eaſy to recover Things in an After-game, as it was to have prevented this Miſunderſtanding, that was like to ariſe between him and his Parliament." And, again, "In the carrying theſe Points, many hard Things were ſaid againſt the Court, and againſt the King himſelf: It was ſuggeſted, That he lov'd not the Nation, That he was on the Reſerve with all Engliſhmen, and ſhew'd no Confidence in them: But that, as ſoon as the Seſſion was over, he went immediately to Holland: And They ſaid, This was not to look after the Affairs of the States, which had been more excuſable; but that he went thither to enjoy a lazy Privacy at Loo; where, with a few Favourites, he hunted and paſs'd away the Summer, in a way that did not raiſe his Character much. It is certain, the Uſage he had met with of late, put his Spirits too much on the Fret; and he neither took care to diſguiſe That, nor to overcome the ill Humour which the Manner of his Deportment, rather than any juſt Occaſion given by him, had rais'd in many againſt him." So that the Biſhop would have us believe, That he did, and did not, give Occaſion for the ill Opinion that was entertain'd of him, and the hard Things that were ſaid of him. But this is not all; for his Lordſhip (tho', according to Cuſtom, he ranges his Matter very imperfectly) moreover tells us, "It was ſurmis'd, That he was reſolv'd not to paſs the Bill; but that he would abandon the Government, rather than hold it with a Force that was too ſmall to preſerve and protect it." And Mr. Tindal not only confirms This, out of an original Letter of Lord Sommers's to the Duke of Shrewſbury, wherein it is aſſerted, That the King had actually form'd ſuch a Deſign, but has favor'd the World with a Copy of the Speech which his Majeſty had prepar'd on that extraordinary Occaſion, as follows.

Burnet's Remarks on the King's Conduct.

An intended Speech of the King's, containing a Sort of Abdication.

"I came to this Kingdom, at the Deſire of this Nation, to ſave it from Ruin, and to preſerve your Religion, your Laws and Liberties; and for that End I have been oblig'd to maintain a long and burdenſome War for this Kingdom; which, by the Grace of God, and the Bravery of this Nation, is at preſent ended in a good Peace; under which you may live happily and in quiet, provided you will contribute to your own Security, in the Manner I had recommended to you at the opening of the Seſſions: But ſeeing, on the contrary, that you have ſo little Regard to my Advice, and that you take no Manner of Care of your own Security, and that you expoſe yourſelves to evident Ruin, by diveſting yourſelves of the only Means for your Defence, it would not be juſt nor reaſonable, that I ſhould be witneſs of your Ruin; not being able to do any Thing of myſelf, it not being in my Power to defend and protect you, which was the only View I had in coming into this Country: Therefore, I am oblig'd to recommend to you to chuſe and name to me ſuch Perſons, as you ſhall judge moſt proper, to whom I may leave the Adminiſtration of the Government in my Abſence; aſſuring you, That, tho' I am at preſent forc'd to withdraw myſelf out of the Kingdom, I ſhall always preſerve the ſame Inclination to its Advantages and Proſperity: And when I can judge, that my Preſence will be neceſſary for your Defence, I ſhall be ready to return, and hazard myſelf for your Security, as I have formerly done; beſeeching the great God to bleſs your Deliberations, and to inſpire you with all that is neceſſary for the Good and Welfare of the Kingdom."

A. D. 1698.

Mr. Tindal adds, By what Means the King was diverted from This, does not appear: And yet B. Burnet ſays, This was conſider'd only as a Threatning: So that little Regard was had to it; which, very probably, was the Caſe: For it was a Threatning which he had practis'd twice before: That is to ſay; Firſt, while the Convention was delibe- Burnet, Vol. I. rating on ſuch a Method of ſupplying the P. 820. Vacancy in the Throne, as was not agreable to his Views and Deſigns: And, again, in the Firſt Year of his Reign, when, according to the ſaid Prelate, he thought he —Vol. II. could not truſt the Tories, and he was reſolv'd P. 39, 40. he would not truſt the Whigs: Beſides; by abſenting himſelf Half the Year, he had taken off the Edge of his own Weapon; and there was ſome Danger of his being taken at his Word; in which Caſe, he had no After-game to play, but what might ariſe out of the Diſſentions, likely to enſue in the Nomination of a Regency; which was, perhaps, the very Reſerve he had in View: For by the Word Perſons, he did not mean to recommend the Princeſs of Denmark; and it is reaſonable to think the Nation would have accepted no other.

But whether he was in earneſt or not in propoſing this peeviſh Meaſure, and whether it was by Perſuaſion or Neglect he departed from it, he reſolv'd at laſt to comply with the Voice of his People, and paſs the Bill; which he accordingly did on the 1ſt of (o) February, with the following Speech. 1698-9.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

I am come to paſs the Bill for diſbanding His real Speech. the Army, as ſoon as I underſtood it was ready for me. Though

(o) Upon the ſame Day alſo an Act was paſs'd to take off the Bounty upon Corn exported, for a certain Time therein specify'd.

A. D. 1698.-9 Though in our preſent Circumſtances there appears great Hazard in breaking ſuch a Number of Troops; and tho' I might think myſelf unkindly uſed, that thoſe Guards, who came over with me to your Aſſiſtance, and have conſtantly attended me in all the Actions, wherein I have been engag'd, ſhould be remov'd from me; yet it is my fix'd Opinion, that nothing can be ſo fatal to us, as that any Diſtruſt or Jealouſy ſhould ariſe between me and my People, which I muſt own would have been very unexpected, after what I have undertaken, ventur'd, and acted for the reſtoring and ſecuring of their Liberties.

I have thus plainly told you the only Reaſon, which has induc'd me to paſs this Bill: And now I think myſelf oblig'd, in diſcharge of the Truſt repos'd in me, and for my own Juſtification, that no ill Conſequences may lie at my Door, to tell you as plainly my Judgment, that the Nation is left too much expos'd.

It is therefore incumbent upon you to take this Matter into your ſerious Conſideration, and effectually to provide ſuch a Strength, as is neceſſary for the Safety of the Kingdom, and the Preſervation of the Peace, which God has given us."

Thus his Majeſty deſtroy'd the Merit of his own Act, by avowing the Reluctance with which it was done; and by ſuch an ungracious Intermixture of Reſentment, Reproach, Menace and Diſapprobation, as from a Houſe of Commons leſs obſervant of Decorum, might have drawn very diſagreable Returns: For as his Riſque had been great, ſo had been his Reward: And Thoſe who are upbraided with Services, are very apt to recollect the Price they have paid for them.

Beſides; in the laſt Paragraph of his Speech, he inſiſts, in a Manner, on their undoing what they had done, under the Penalty he had aſſign'd before, of their being anſwerable for all Events: And to ſhew with what Sincerity he co-operated with his Parliament in this Affair, we need only inſert his Letter to Lord Galway, dated juſt four Days before he gave the Royal Aſſent to the Act, as tranſlated from the original French, for the Information of Poſterity, by Mr. Tindal, viz.

Kenſington, Jan. 27, 1698.

His Letter to Lord Galway. " I receiv'd ſome Days ago a Letter from you without Date, by which I ſee you are uneaſy at the Proceedings of the Parliament here againſt the Foreigners: I think you have too much Cauſe to be ſo; tho', as yet, nothing has paſs'd about you, and I have good Reaſon to hope you will be left undiſturb'd: At leaſt, you may be aſſur'd, I ſhall do my utmoſt, that nothing be done to your Prejudice; ſatisfy'd, as I am, with your Conduct, and uſeful, as you are, for my Service: So you may be ſure, that I will not recall you, unleſs I am forc'd to it, which I hope will not be the Caſe. It is not to be conceiv'd, how People here are ſet againſt the Foreigners: You will eaſily judge on whom this reflects: I deſign very ſhortly to ſend into Ireland five Regiments of Foot, and two of Horſe, and ſoon after three more of A. D. 1699. Foot, eight in all: I will ſend you, in a few Days, Orders to diſband Wooſley's Regiment of Horſe, and nine Regiments of Foot, intending to keep only thoſe of Hamner and Hamilton: I deſign alſo, when the Parliament riſes, to ſend you your Regiment of Horſe, and the three FRENCH Regiments, and, perhaps, Miremont's Dragoons; but that muſt be very ſecret, tho' I much fear my Deſign is already ſuſpected here: I am in doubt whether I ſhall ſend likewiſe into Ireland Eppinger's Regiment: All this together would amount to eighteen Battalions of Foot, three Regiments of Horſe, and five of Dragoons, reckoning Eppinger's for two; and this would be in a Manner agreable to your Project, and, according to my Calculation, the Expence no greater; but, if it ſhould be, ſomething muſt be retrench'd, of which I ſhould be glad to know your Sentiments: You will eaſily perceive how neceſſary it is, that all this be kept ſecret: I thought it requiſite to give you early Notice of my Intention, that you might take your Meaſures accordingly; mine muſt be regulated according as Things go in the Parliament, of which there is no being ſure, till the Seſſion is over: There is a Spirit of Ignorance and Malice prevails here beyond Conception: Be always aſſur'd of my Friendſhip.

WILLIAM R."

Thus we have a new Proof, under the King's own Hand, That he did not look upon the Exerciſe of a Diſpenſing Power in the ſame Light now as he had formerly done: Then as to his Majeſty's Charge of Ignorance, which he urges with ſo much Warmth againſt his Parliament, it is Matter of Lamentation, That they did not know more: For with this Letter, and the Partition-Treaty before them, Doubts, Suſpicions, and Surmiſes, would have been converted into Facts, Certainties, and Demonſtrations.

And as to their Malice, whatever might be imputed to Individuals under that Head, the Parliament in general ſeems to be wholly clear of any ſuch Imputation, if we may judge from the Language they us'd, and the general Current of their Proceedings, which, agreable to the two-fold Duty incumbent on them, were alike ſuited to the Reſpect they ow'd to the Crown, and their Obligations to their Country.

For on the ſame Day the Speech was The Commons Addreſs. made, the Commons unanimouſly reſolv'd, That an Addreſs of Thanks ſhould be preſented to the Throne, with Aſſurances of aſſiſting his Majeſty, and ſupporting his Government againſt all his Enemies whatſoever; in which, having declar'd, " How ſenſible they were of the Difficulties he had undertaken, the Labours he had ſuſtain'd, and the Hazards he had run, in reſcuing them from Popery and arbitrary Power, reſtoring their Liberties, and giving Peace and Quiet to all Chriſtendom; and how thankful for his moſt gracious Speech, in which he had expreſs'd ſo great a Regard for the Goodwill and Affection of his People, and had given ſo undeniable Proof of his Readineſs to comply with

A. D. 1698-9 with the Deſires of his Parliament. They procede to aſſure him, That as his Majeſty had ſhewn a moſt tender and fatherly Concern for the Security and Safety of his People, ſo he ſhould never have Reaſon to think the Commons were undutiful or unkind to him, but that they would, upon all Occaſions, ſtand by and aſſiſt him in the Preſervation of his ſacred Perſon, and Support of his Government, againſt all his Enemies whatſoever."

The Lords alſo were particular in their Acknowledgments for thoſe gracious Expreſſions in his Speech, " That it was his Majeſty's fix'd Opinion, that nothing could be ſo fatal to them, as that any Diſtruſt or Jealouſy ſhould ariſe between his Majeſty and his People: As likewiſe, for his Care and Concern for the Safety of the Kingdom upon all Occaſions; aſſuring his Majeſty, That at all Times, for the Safety of the Kingdom, and the Preſervation of the Peace, which God has given them, they would aſſiſt and defend his Majeſty againſt all his Enemies, both at Home and Abroad."

The King's Anſwer to each was after the uſual Form; except, that he ſeem'd to put his Complaiſance rather more to the Stretch in what he ſaid to the Commons, than in what he ſaid to the Lords.

But the Diſtinction made on this Occaſion, was not, in any Degree, ſo extraordinary as That which follow'd a few Days afterwards: " For when it it was hop'd (to uſe B. Burnet's Words) that the paſſing the Act had ſoften'd Peoples Minds, a new (p) Attempt was made for keeping the Dutch Guards in England:" And this Attempt was made by the following Meſſage, all in the King's own Hand-writing, by the Earl of Ranelagh, (Pay-Maſter) to the Houſe of Commons only.

" William R.

The King's Meſſage about the Dutch Guards.

His Majeſty is pleas'd to let the Houſe know, That the neceſſary Preparations are made for tranſporting the Guards, who came with him into England; and that he intends to ſend them away immediately, unleſs, out of Conſideration to him, the Houſe be diſpos'd to find a Way for continuing them longer in his Service, which his Majeſty would take very kindly."

The Commons, indeed, were not to be mov'd by this Diſtinction, great as it was, nor the other condeſcending Circumſtances attending it: On the contrary; with a Firmneſs never to be enough prais'd, or too often imitated, they ſhut their Ears againſt the Voice of the Charmer, and reſolv'd to adhere to the Act, without giving way to the leaſt Qualification: In doing which, tho' they render'd themſelves obnoxious to the King's Diſpleaſure, they did him a far more eſſential Piece of Service, (whatever the Flatterers of his Reign may urge; who, inſtead of forming their Judgments on a Compariſon of the occaſional Stands made in theſe Times againſt the Encroachments of the Court, with the implacable Spirit of Oppoſition which rag'd in the Exchuſioners, moſt abſurdly and perniciouſly endeavour to give their Readers a corrupt Bias, drawn from the Corruptions of their own ſervile Times) than if they had gratify'd him in his Requeſt: For the undue Preference given on many Occaſions to this Body of Dutch Janizaries, (at the Expence of the Scots Guards in particular) had blunted the Zeal of his national Troops, and almoſt depriv'd him of the Hearts of his People: Beſides; in remaining thus inflexible, they preſerv'd their own Conſiſtency; they countenanc'd the Proceedings of former Parliaments, who could not be induc'd to give their Conſents, That their own native Kings ſhould have Guards of their own native Subjects: And they ſhut the Door, for ever, as They thought, againſt the like ſhameful Innovation. A. D. 1698-9

The Courtiers, however, did not fail, on this Occaſion, to muſter their whole Strength, and put in practice all the Devices in their Power, to gratify their Maſter at the Expence of their Country: For, firſt, in order to gain Time for Job-work and Expedient, they mov'd, That a Day might be appointed for taking the Speech into Conſideration; which being carry'd in the Negative, and a Committee appointed to draw up an Addreſs, repreſenting the Reaſons, why the Houſe could not comply with his Majeſty's Meſſage, they mov'd, in the next Place, on the Report of the ſaid Addreſs, That it might be recommitted; but were again defeated on a Diviſion of the Houſe, by a Majority of Nineteen Voices: The Yeas being 156, the Noes 175.

Now, the Addreſs was conceiv'd in theſe Words.

" Moſt gracious Sovereign,

The Commons Addreſs in Anſwer to his Majeſty's Meſſage.

We your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal Subjects the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, do, with unfeigned Zeal to your Majeſty's Perſon and Government, (which God long preſerve) moſt humbly repreſent to your Majeſty, That the paſſing the late Act for diſbanding the Army, gave great Satisfaction to your Subjects; and the Readineſs your Majeſty has expreſs'd by your Meſſage, to comply with the punctual Execution thereof, will prevent all Occaſions of Diſtruſt or Jealouſy between your Majeſty and your People. It is, Sir, to your loyal Commons, an unſpeakable Grief, that your Majeſty ſhould be adviſ'd to propoſe any Thing in your Meſſage, to which they cannot conſent, with due Regard to that Conſtitution which your Majeſty came over to reſtore, and have ſo often expos'd your Royal Perſon to preſerve; and did, in your gracious Declaration, promiſe, that all thoſe Foreign Forces which came over with you, ſhould be ſent

(p) Of which the predominant Party was ſo apprehenſive, that they would not procede with the Land-Tax Bill, till they were ſufficiently ſecur'd againſt it: For a Motion being made on the 11th of March to read the ſaid Bill a ſecond Time, it was over-rul'd, by a Majority of 139 againſt 72: And ſoon after they alſo over-rul'd a Motion to authoriſe the Treaſury to iſſue more Bills of Credit; on the Diviſion, Yeas, 143, Noes, 182.

A. D. 1698-9. sent back: In Duty therefore to your Majesty, and to discharge the Trust repos'd in us, we crave Leave to lay before your Majesty, That nothing conduceth more to the Happiness and Welfare of this Kingdom, than an entire Confidence between your Majesty and your People, which can no way be so firmly establish'd, as by entrusting your sacred Person with your own Subjects, who have so eminently signaliz'd themselves on all Occasions, during the late long and expensive War."

And to this the House having given their Sanction, all that the Courtiers had farther to endeavour, was to get rid, if possible, of the most obnoxious Part of it: Namely; That which put his Majesty in Mind of the Promise made in his Declaration, before he had taken Possession of the promis'd Land. But this very Passage contain'd so full a Justification of the Refusal contain'd in the Address, that the Addressers would not part with it: And upon another Division, it appear'd they were still the Majority; the Numbers for the said Passage being 163, Noes, 157.

Thus according to the Number of Efforts on the Court Side, was the Number of Foils they receiv'd: The Point was an English one: It was maintain'd with a true English Spirit: And, seeing no Remedy, his Majesty was well advis'd to make a Virtue of Necessity, and acquiesce with the best Grace he could.

Accordingly, his Majesty's Reply was as specious as it could be contriv'd: And if, in order to obviate one of the Points which affected him most in the Address, he seems more particularly solicitous to justify his Message to the English Soldiers, it may be consider'd in his Excuse, That he was from henceforth to have none but such on this Side of the Water: And that, like all other Princes of the Continent, he had no Notion, That a King governing according to Law, might here be as safe as a Justice of Peace.

The said Reply was as follows.

" Gentlemen,

His Majesty's Reply. I came hither to restore the antient Constitution of this Government: I have had all possible Regard to it since my coming: And I am resolv'd, thro' the Course of my Reign, to endeavour to preserve it entire in all the Parts of it: I have a full Confidence in the Affections of my People, and I am well assur'd, they have the same in me; and I will never give them just Cause to alter this Opinion.

As to my Subjects, who serv'd during the War, I am an Eye-witness of their Bravery, and of their Zeal for my Person and Government; and I have not been wanting to express my Sense of this to my Parliaments, as well as upon other Occasions: I have all the Reason to trust and rely upon them that a Prince can have; and I am satisfy'd there is not one Man among them capable of entertaining a Thought, that what was propos'd in my Message, proceded from any Distrust of them. A. D. 1699.

It shall be my Study, to the utmost of my Power, to perform the Part of a just and a good King; and, as I will ever be strictly and nicely careful of observing my Promises to my Subjects, so I will not doubt, of their tender Regards to me."

It was in this Manner the King gave up, or was oblig'd to give up, his darling Point: And it was in the following Manner that his Opposers justify'd themselves to their Fellow-Subjects.

Vindication of the Proceeding. " But this Controversy is now at an End; since the whole Body of the People in Two Parliaments, have given a Sanction to the juster Opinion, and (with a true Roman Resolution, worthy their illustrious Predecessors, worthy the noblest, the manliest, the best Cause in the World, the Cause of Liberty) have declar'd, That they have Courage, Honesty, and Wisdom enough to defend themselves, and that they want no Keepers: Nor was this Debate carry'd on with that Heat and Faction, which is often found in popular Assemblies; no leveling at the Ministry, nor breaking their Discontents under the Notion of public Service: But it was manag'd with that Gravity, that Sedateness, that Candor, and yet with that noble Constancy, as might convince the whole World, that their Resolutions were the Results of the most mature Consideration, unshaken Love to their Country, and Zeal for Liberty. This is declaring, in Characters legible to all Europe, That it was not private Resentment, popular Faction, or a Propensity to change, but a just Sense of our Country's Liberty, which made us throw off our late Allegiance: It shews, That we did not expel our King, but that we depos'd a Tyrant: Whereas, if we had been so transported by our Fortune, so debauch'd in our Understandings, and so destitute of all Sense of Love and Honour due to our native Country, as to have allow'd That to one King, for which we depos'd Another, we had been the Scorn and Reproach of Mankind, and justly call'd Traytors, Cowards, and Fools.

However ungrateful this Vote may appear to the Flatterers and Courtiers, (who are but Insects bred and nourish'd out of the Corruption and Stench of bad Governments) yet I doubt not but his Majesty will consider it almost as the unanimous Opinion of this People, who voluntarily offer'd him Two most potent Crowns, set him at the Head of the Force and Councils of the greatest Confederacy that has ever been united, and supported him through the War, at a Charge that neither we, nor our Forefathers ever knew, till at last they enabled him to humble his powerful Adversary, and to bring him to Terms both safe and honorable: Nor did their Affection terminate with the War: For tho' we were in Debt near (q) 20,000,000 l. they have increas'd the Civil-List beyond what it was

(q) A great Exaggeration, as may be seen by turning back to P. 769.

A. D. 1698-9. was known in the Reigns of any of his Predeceſſors, and ſettled a great Revenue upon him for Life to ſupport it: Nay, this very Parliament have give all the Teſtimony of their Duty, which can be conſiſtent with their Country's Safety: They have choſen a Speaker out of his own Family; and have left him 7000 Men for Guards and Gariſons, which, if our Courtiers were honeſt, they would not ſo much as pretend to be neceſſary: For, if we dare take the Word of a noble Lord, (who has never diſtinguiſh'd himſelf by his Averſion to arbitrary Power, or Hatred to Armies) 3000 Men are enough to ſupply the Gariſons, and double as many as were eſtabliſh'd in King Charles the Second's Time for that Purpoſe: Then what Reaſon, or rather what Colour is there for 4000 Guards?"

The whole of this Piece, is ſtill extant in the State-Tracts of this Reign, Vol. II. And as to the final Iſſue of the Controverſy it is ſaid, ſuch a Reform in point of Numbers, as the Act preſcrib'd was made: But then it was ſo unequally made, That the Army which remain'd came to be call'd an Army of Officers: And as to the Dutch-Phalanx, when there was no Remedy, they were embark'd for their own Country, whereby the Nation had the (r) Comfort to be deliver'd from thoſe Un-national Deliverers.

Expence of Diſbanding, &c. Then as to the Expence of this Meaſure, tho' 800,000 l. was allow'd to defray it, the Service was perform'd for (s) 351,779 l. 17 s. 8 d. And adding to this, for Subſiſtance and clearings of Gariſons, 189,740 l. 4 s. 7 d. for Half-Pay, 39,475 l. 16 s. 1 d. and for Land-Ordnance, 19,004 l. 1 s. 8 d. the Military Diſburſements for this Year amounted but to 600,000 l.

Kennet, Boyer, &c. And, laſtly, whereas ſome of our Compilers, and among Theſe Mr. Tindal, will have it, That one of the Conſequences of the Diſbanding Act, was a more viſible Concourſe of Jacobites and Papiſts about the Town and Court, which occaſion'd an Addreſs from the Commons, That the Laws might be put in force againſt ſuch as diſown'd his Majeſty's Government, it is fit to be remark'd, That the ſame Author afterwards aſſigns another Reaſon of the ſaid more viſible Concourſe, which (conſidering the Temper of the Houſe) it is moſt probable, gave Riſe to the ſaid Addreſs:—But for once let us cite thoſe very Words, which, as they ſtand, we are to take for his own, tho' in Vol. II. p. 228. Truth they are Burnet's, who furniſhes ſeveral other Particulars, which might be urg'd to fortify that Conjecture.

Different Accounts of the Reaſons of Papiſts, &c. to London.

"Theſe Complaints of the Growth of Popery, were not without Reaſon; for, upon the Peace of Ryſwick, a great Swarm of Prieſts came over to England, not only Thoſe whom the Revolution had frighted away, but many more new Men, who appear'd in many Places with great Inſolence; and it was ſaid, That they boaſted of the Favour and Protection, of which they were aſſur'd: Some Enemies of the Government began to give it out, That the favouring that Religion, was a ſecret Article of the Peace; and ſo abſurd is Malice and Calumny, that the Jacobites began to ſay, That the King was either of that Religion, or at leaſt a Favourer of it: Complaints of the avow'd Practices and Inſolence of the Prieſts were brought from ſeveral Places, and thoſe were maliciouſly aggravated by ſome, who caſt the Blame of all on the King."

A. D. 1698-9.

Navy-Accounts call'd for. The Commons alſo, even while this great Affair of the Army was yet before them, were not inattentive to the Receipts and Iſſues of the Navy: But, on the contrary, call'd for Accounts, Vouchers, &c. &c. as if they were determin'd to leave no Crevice open either for Miſmanagement or Miſapplication: Whether factiouſly, for the Sake only of affronting and diſgracing Lord Orford, who had both the Direction above and the Diſtribution below, or nationally, for the Sake of preſerving a rigid Oeconomy, is not very eaſy to determine:—But then, whether they were led by the beſt or the worſt Principle, or a Mixture of Both, which is uſually the Caſe, the Precedent was a good one; and all that we have now to lament is, That it ſeems to be out of Uſe.

It had tranſpir'd, That the Auditors of the Impreſts had declin'd paſſing his Lordſhip's Accounts, for want of ſufficient Vouchers: As alſo, That his Lordſhip had a vaſt Sum of public Money in his Hands, which he detain'd unneceſſarily, to the Prejudice of the poor Seamen, and his own great Advantage.

They call'd, therefore, for the ſaid Accounts, and found there actually was ſuch a Demur for want of ſuch Formalities, which could only be ſupply'd by an extraordinary Authority from the Crown: And that the Balance then in his Hands, of Money, Tallies, &c. as Treaſurer of the Navy, was 460,190 l. 10 s. 7 d.: Of which, however, he ſignify'd, the Money due for Wages, amounting to 382,532 l. 12 s. 11 d. was then paying off; and that 60,031 l. due to the Yards, (the Tallies for which he had juſt receiv'd) would likewiſe be paid as ſoon as they could be converted into Caſh.

And,

(r) Mr. Oldmixon, (Vol. II. p. 186.) calls this Deliverance a Driving out of the Nation's old Servants; repreſents their Departure as a tragical Spectacle, of which, it ſeems, he was an Eye-witneſs; will not allow it to be ſaid, That it gave great Satisfaction; nor that ſo ſmall a Number as one Regiment of 5 or 600 Proteſtants, could occaſion any Diſtruſt or Jealouſy between King and People: But tho' the Religion of a Soldier, is, perhaps, of no great Moment, it is a known Thing, That theſe Guards were compoſ'd of Papiſts and Proteſtants indiſcriminately; that inſtead of one Regiment, they were two, one of Horſe the other of Foot; and that inſtead of being no more in Number than 5 or 600, they were 2890; that is to ſay, 270 Horſe, and 2620 Foot. (See the Eſtabliſhment in the State-Tracts of this Reign, Vol. II. p. 670.) Beſides, one Regiment of four Battalions might ſoon have been doubled: And we have already ſeen what Proviſion his Majeſty had made to have a Corps de Reſerve in Ireland.

(s) Theſe Items, it muſt be obſerv'd, are taken from Exchequer-Authorities; and are the actual Payments on the ſeveral Heads; But, according to the Eſtimates of Half-Pay, deliver'd to the Houſe of Commons, 57,334 l. 15 s. 10 d. was requir'd for thoſe Ends.

It appear'd alſo by the Liſt of General Officers on the Eſtabliſhment, (which is now familiarly call'd the Staff,) That

A. D. 1698-9. And, upon the Iſſue of the whole Proceeding, they repreſented to the Throne by way of Addreſs.

Addreſs thereon. "That the Streights Squadron not ſailing till September laſt, was prejudicial to England, and a great Miſmanagement.

That the Order made by the Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, September 12, 1695, giving Henry Prieſtman, Eſq; an Allowance of Ten Shillings per Diem, from the Date of his Commiſſion, as Commander in Chief before Sallee in 1684, till the Ship Bonadventure was paid off, over and above his Pay as Captain of the ſaid Ship, was very unreaſonable, and a Miſapplication of the public Money.

That the (t) Victualling any of his Majeſty's Ships by Others than by the Victuallers appointed for that Service, or their Agents, is contrary to the Courſe of the Navy, and may be of ill Conſequence.

That many new and unneceſſary Charges have, in an extraordinary Manner, been introduc'd into the Navy, contrary to the Rules of the Navy, which is a great Miſmanagement.

That the Deductions of Poundage taken by the Pay-Maſters of the Navy, for Slop-Clothes, Dead-Mens Clothes, Tobacco, Cheſt at Chatham, Chaplain and Surgeon, is without Warrant, and ought to be (u) accounted for.

That it is inconſiſtent with the Service of the Navy, for the ſame Perſon to be one of the Commiſſioners for executing the Office of Lord High-Admiral, and Treaſurer of the Navy at the ſame Time.

And that the paſſing any Account of Monies impreſs'd for the contingent Uſe of the Navy, without regular Vouchers, or ſuch other Proof as the Nature of the Service will admit, either with, or without, a Sign Manual, is contrary to the Rules and Methods of the Navy, and of dangerous Conſequence.

All which (ſaid They) we beg Leave to lay before your Majeſty; deſiring that you will be graciouſly pleas'd to (x) take effectual Care, That the Miſmanagements herein complain'd of, may be prevented for the future."

And this Addreſs being afterwards preſented, his Majeſty's Anſwer was as follows.

His Majeſty's Anſwer. "Gentlemen,

I will conſider your Addreſs: It is my Deſire that all Sorts of Miſmanagements and Irregularities ſhould be prevented or redreſs'd: You may be aſſur'd I will take the beſt Care I can in relation to the Navy, the right Management whereof, is of ſo great Concern to the Kingdom."

A. D. 1699. In this Interval, alſo, the Commons reſolv'd, That 15,000 Seamen ſhould be employ'd for a Summer and Winter-Guard, for the enſuing Year: And for fear the King ſhould commit another Treſpaſs on the Votes of Parliament, by augmenting his Land-Forces under the Notion of Marines, they took care to ſpecify, That the ſaid 15,000 Men ſhould conſiſt of Seamen only.

Land Tax Bill. And to anſwer all the ſeveral Services of Navy, Army, Diſbanding, &c. they made a ſuitable Proviſion in one Bill; granting to his Majeſty 1,484,015*l.* 1*s.* 1¼ by a Tax of 3*s.* in the Pound on Land, &c. as alſo for appropriating 40,000*l.* ariſing from the Surpluſes of the Cuſtoms, for the circulating Exchequer-Bills; and re-appropriating certain Tallies lying in the Hands of the Treaſurer of the Navy for Wages, to the Uſe of the Courſes of the Navy, &c.

But this Act brought in no more than 1,400,000*l.* excluſive of the 40,000*l.* from the Cuſtoms: And as to the Expenditure thereof, That of the Navy, under (y) ſeveral Heads, amounted to 800,000*l.* and That of the Army, as above, 600,000*l.* which with the 40,000*l.* for Exchequer-Bills, took up the whole.

A Clauſe in relation to the Irish Forfeitures. In the ſame Act, tho' very much againſt the Grain of the Court, a Clauſe was inſerted, for Commiſſioners to take an Account of the Eſtates forfeited in Ireland, in order to their being apply'd in Eaſe of the Subjects of England; and the Houſe appointed Commiſſioners accordingly. When, however, the Bill was ſent up to the Lords, this Clauſe was not only objected to, but proteſted againſt (tho' in vain) by nine Lords, who were a Mixture of Whigs and Tories; for theſe Reaſons, viz. Becauſe it was a Matter foreign to the Bill, and more proper for a Bill of itſelf: Becauſe the tacking a Clauſe of that Nature, was contrary to the antient Method of Proceedings in Parliament, and might be of ill Conſequence to the Freedom of Debate, the Privileges of the Peers, and the Prerogative of the Crown.

proteſted againſt.

Other Reſolutions which were dropp'd. The Commons, alſo, came to the following Reſolutions, (but did not proſecute them; for what Reaſon, or under what Pretence, neither the Complaints of one Party, nor the Extenuations of the other, have made us acquainted with) viz. "That Proviſion be made from Time to Time, for making good the

---

That Three Generals of Horſe, at 6*l.* a Day, Seven Lieutenant-Generals at 4*l.* a Day, Eight Major-Generals at 2*l.* a Day, and Eleven Brigadier-Generals at 1*l.* 10*s.* a Day, or 29,382*l.* 10*s.* a Year, were thought neceſſary for an Army of 7000 Men.

(t) While this Article was under Debate, the following Words were offer'd to be added to it by way of Amendment, except only in Caſes of Neceſſity happening Abroad, and paſs'd in the Negative, Yeas, 154, Noes, 167.

(u) Another Amendment was propos'd by leaving out theſe Words, to be accounted for, and inſerting in their ſtead, not to be taken for the future; but over rul'd.

(x) An Objection being made to the Words take Care, the Queſtion was put, That the ſaid Words ſtand as Part of the Reſolution, and paſs'd in the Affirmative, Yeas 204, Noes 160. And when the Addreſs was reported, it was agreed that the ſaid Words ſhould be alter'd to, take effectual Care.

				l.	s.	d.
(y) Viz. Wages,	—	—	—	500,000	00	0
Wear and Tear,	—	—	—	106,362	18	5½
Victualling,	—	—	—	75,073	8	4
Ordinary,	—	—	—	91,071	3	3
Ordnance,	—	—	—	26,502	8	11
And over and above out of the Tal. } lies above ſpecify'd,	—	—	—	800,000	00	0
Victualling,	—	—	—	96,905	4	7
Courſes,	—	—	—	188,732	9	2
In all,	—	—	—	1,885,727	13	9
By a Paper laid before the Houſe it alſo appear'd, That the Treaſure Debt was	—			432,000	13	4
Navy-Debt, excluſive of what } was due to Seamen,	—	—	—	2,245,957	16	1

A. D. 1699. the Principal and Intereſt due on all parliamentary Funds, granted ſince his Majeſty's happy Acceſſion to the Crown; and, particularly, that a further Proviſion be made within the Year 1699, for the Exchequer-Bills: That Proviſion be made both for ſecuring and paying off the Principal and Intereſt due on the Aid of Three Shillings in the Pound granted in the Year 1697, the Duties on Paper, Vellum, and Parchment; and on ſuch of the Malt-Tickets, as were or ſhould prove deficient: For paying and diſcharging the Arrears of the Annuities lately charg'd on the Tonnage Duties, and now on the additional Exciſe: For ſecuring and paying the Debt due for Tranſport-Service, perform'd at any Time, ſince the Beginning of the late War: For giving Half-pay to the Commiſſion-Officers, his Majeſty's natural-born Subjects of England, of Horſe, Dragoons, and Foot, diſbanded and to be diſbanded, till the ſaid Officers ſhould be fully paid off, or otherwiſe provided for: For ſecuring and paying the Arrears due to the General Officers of the Army, upon the Engliſh Eſtabliſhment; and for ſecuring and paying the Arrears of Pay and Subſiſtence due to the Officers and Soldiers of the Army upon the Engliſh Eſtabliſhment."

Bills receiv'd paſs'd without one Money-Bill.

It is alſo remarkable, That twice this Seſſion his Majeſty had the Trouble to come down to the Parliament Houſe, in order to paſs Bills, among which there was not one Money-Bill: For, on the 24th of March, which was the Second Time of his attending on that Account, A Bill to prohibit the exceſſive diſtilling of Spirits and low Wines from Corn, to prevent the Exportation of Beer and Ale, as alſo the Frauds of Diſtillers; A Second to enlarge the Trade to Ruſſia; and, a Third, to lay farther Reſtraints on the Proceedings of Sheriffs, and other Returning Officers, were all the public Bills that were ready for the Royal Aſſent. And, over and above this Backwardneſs in the one Thing needful to Courts, the Commons render'd themſelves yet more ungracious to his Majeſty, by calling for an Account of all the Grants call'd for.

Grants which had been made ſince January 1, 1697, as well in England as in Ireland: But of theſe they did not, however, make the moſt ungracious Uſe that was in their Power: For there being one Item of 500*l.* a Year out of the Poſt-Office in Blank, they did not inſiſt on having the ſaid Blank fill'd up; nor did they take any Notice of a Grant of 300*l.* a Year out of the ſame Office, not only to Oates the Witneſs, but alſo to his Wife, for 99 Years, in caſe either of them liv'd ſo long; nor of another Grant to the ſame meritorious Perſon of a Bounty of 500*l.* nor of a Third to Lord Coningeſby, of 6*d.* in the Pound out of all Payments by him made, in the ſeveral Offices of Vice Treaſurer, Receiver General, Pay-Maſter General, and Treaſurer at War in Ireland; all which Places were held by him at one and the ſame Time: Nor that the Grant of 15,000*l.* a Year to the Duke of Glouceſter, was only during Pleaſure: Nor that, in Conſequence of his Majeſty's Brigues in the North, he had prevail'd with Prince George of Denmark, to ſurrender to the Duke of Holſtein, the Iſland of Jeanneren, and the Bailiwicks of Tranſtuttle and Steinhorſt, held by the ſaid Prince in Mortgage for a Loan of 340,000 Rix-Dollars; in conſideration of which Surrender, his Majeſty had taken the Debt upon himſelf, at the Rate of 85,000*l. Sterling*, for which he was to pay his Highneſs 6 per Cent.—In ſhort, the Papers were ſuffer'd to lye on the Table unmoleſted, and no Uſe was made of any one Article contain'd in them.

A. D. 1699.

But no Uſe made of them.

Laſtly; as to the Reſt of the Seſſion, it may be ſumm'd up in the (z) Titles of the following Bills, which, together with the Land-Tax Bill, receiv'd the Royal Aſſent May 4, being the laſt Day of the Seſſion; namely, An Act to prevent the Exportation of Engliſh and Iriſh Wool, and to encourage the Woollen Manufacture of England: An Act for taking off the remaining Duties on Glaſs, &c. after Auguſt 1: An Act for the more full and effectual charging Duties upon Iriſh Salt; (in which a Proviſion was dexterouſly made for the Currency of Bank Bills in the Revenue, (when not under Par.) from May 1, to the End of the next Seſſion of Parliament): An Act to encourage the Newfoundland-Trade: An Act for laying a farther Duty on Sweets, and leſſening the Duties on low Wines one Half, (the Product of this Branch was appropriated to the Diſcharge of Malt-Tickets: But then there was alſo a Duty of 5*s. per* Chaldron upon Cinders for four Years, which was not appropriated at all): And an Act for ſuppreſſing Lotteries; levell'd principally againſt a gaming Lottery call'd, The Royal-Oak Lottery, (becauſe granted at firſt by King Charles II. to certain indigent Cavaliers, whom he had not the Heart to provide for any other way) which was ſo lucrative a Thing to the Undertakers, that they were able to pay Penſions out of their Profits, to the Amount of 3,950*l. per Annum*.

Other Acts paſs'd.

And now nothing material remains but to give his Majeſty's Speech at the Cloſe of the Seſſion, which, gracious as it was call'd in common with all other Speeches from the Throne, partook ſtrongly of Complaint, and contain nothing of Acknowledgment.

" My Lords and Gentlemen,

The King's Speech at the End of the Seſſion.

At the opening of this Parliament, I told you my Opinion was, That you were come together

(z) Except, That the old Eaſt-India Company, under the Patronage of the famous Jack Hew, as he was call'd, preſented a Petition to the Commons, praying, That their Caſe might be taken into Conſideration, and that ſome ſuch Proviſion might be made in favor of their Charter, as might ſecure to them the Benefit of it for the Reſidue of the Term of Twenty-one Years, for which it was granted, &c. But tho' a Bill was order'd to be brought in agreeable thereto, it was rejected on the Second Reading: And Darien has injuriouſly and idly branded the Attempt as to contrary to the fundamental Maxims of the Conſtitution, that it gave Cauſe of Jealouſy, it could be intended for nothing but the Ruin of the Government.

A. D. 1699. together with Hearts fully dispos'd to what was necessary for the Safety, Honor, and Happiness of this Kingdom; and, having nothing else to recommend to you, I had reason to hope for Unanimity and Dispatch.

You have now sat so many Months, that the Season of the Year, as well as your particular Affairs, make it reasonable you should have a Recess: I take it for granted you have finish'd all the Bills, which, for the present, you think requisite to be pass'd into Laws; and I have given my Assent to all you have presented to me.

If any Thing should be found wanting for our Safety, the Support of public Credit, by making good the Faith of the Kingdom, as it stands engag'd by parliamentary Securities, and for Discharge of the Debts occasion'd by the War, or towards the advancing of Trade, the suppressing of Vice, and the employing of the Poor, which were all the Things I propos'd to your Consideration, when we met first, I cannot doubt but effectual Care will be taken of them next Winter, and I wish no Inconvenience may happen in the mean Time."

Alterations in the Ministry.

But what follow'd close on the Heels of the Prorogation, was a new Change in the Ministry, which our Writers take little or no Notice of; or at least none that would give an intelligent Reader the least Satisfaction: If Lord Orford quitted the Admiralty and Navy-Boards, as also the Fleet, they would have us believe it was from a Foresight of the Storm which was gathering against him in the House of Commons: If the Duke of Shrewsbury did the same by the Secretary's Office, it was because he had been render'd incapable of undergoing the Fatigues of it, by a Fall from his Horse, or because Travelling was held necessary for the Recovery of his Health, impair'd in the Service of the Public: And, instead of receiving Information from Bishop Burnet, from whom it was reasonable to expect it, considering that he writes professedly of his own Times, and was then of the Court, he slides over the whole Affair, till he gets into the next Session of Parliament; and then only drops the following loose Expressions, in his way to something else: "Russel, with his Friends, being laid aside, and a Set of Tories being brought into their Places:" Whence one would imagine the whole Triumvirate was remov'd, and that the King had not kept one Whig about him.

Boyer. Tindal.

Kennet.

But Lord Sommers and Mr. Montagu still kept their Ground, tho' the Earl of Tankerville, and Mr. Henry Boyle were plac'd at the Treasury-Board, in the Room of the Speaker Littleton, and Mr. Thomas Pelham: It was not Rooke who succeeded Russel, but the Earl of Bridgwater, a Nobleman wholly unacquainted with Sea-Affairs: Lord Haversham, another Land-Admiral, as the Seamen in this Reign began to call the Admiralty-Commissioners, succeeded Priestman, remov'd at the same Time: Villiers Earl of Jersey, a Creature of the King's own, who had been Gentleman of the Horse to the Queen, while Princess of Orange in Holland, who had been ennobled by his Majesty, and who was of the Cabal against Lord Portland, succeeded the Duke of Shrewsbury in the Secretary's Office, (having been recall'd from his Embassy in France, it may be presum'd, for that Purpose): And the Duke of Leeds, (if any Thing, a veteran Tory) who, notwithstanding all the Imputations he labour'd under, had held the President's Chair so long, was displac'd to make Room for the Earl of Pembroke, the Latter of whom was complimented out of the Privy Seal, that his Majesty might bestow it on Lowther Lord Lonsdale, also a Peer of his own making, and as good a Whig, for aught that appears to the contrary, as Lowther of Whitehaven, who, since the Revolution, had serv'd as a Lord of the Admiralty, under every Administration, for Eight Years successively: So that no Enquiry we can make, will as yet direct us to these Tories, whom the good Bishop talks of.

It is true, the Duke of Shrewsbury had been hurt by a Fall from his Horse, and did make that Accident an Excuse for not being over-diligent in the Discharge of his Functions as a Minister: But then, tho' he had such an Interest in both Parties, that the King once took Occasion to say, He was the only Man that both Whig and Tory spoke well of: And tho' he was in general so popular, that he was frequently call'd the King of Hearts, he had not the Secret of captivating his Majesty; and the Reason assign'd for it by Some is, The exorbitant Demands he was induc'd to make, if not in Behalf of himself, in Behalf of his Party, which at last render'd his Majesty so uneasy, That he told him one Day, "I should be glad, if you "would put all your Demands together un- "der one Head, That I might see if the "whole Kingdom would satisfy them." The same Persons also suggest, That upon the first Denial which another great Lord (meaning Lord Orford) receiv'd from the King, he turn'd short upon his Majesty with these Words, "That he was very sorry his "Service was not agreable to his Majesty; "and that he begg'd his Majesty's Leave to "retire into the Country:" And that his Majesty, to his Surprize, assenting, he withdrew, with scarce Restraint enough upon his Passion to preserve him in his Duty.

M. S. Secret Hist. of one Year, p. 26.

But, tho' it is reasonable to think, from such a Variety of Evidence, as occurs upon that Head, That sometimes Altercations of a very pointed Nature pass'd between the King and his Whig-Friends, the Latter upbraiding him with having set the Crown upon his Head, and the Former replying, That, if so, they had apparently done it for their own Sakes, it cannot be depended upon; That they pass'd just at this Crisis: Something of the Kind has already been touch'd upon from Burnet: We have had a Course of Evidence, That the Duke of Shrewsbury had been upon ill Terms with the King for a long Time past'd; and very probably, the Lord Chancellor's advising with him on the great Secret of the Partition-Treaty, and his Behaviour upon it, as also That of Lord Orford's, (neither of whom had

A.D. 1699. had repair'd to the Chancellor's Head-Quarters at Tunbridge, with Vernon and Montagu, to give their Sanction to it) were the immediate Cauſes of thoſe Bickerings which produc'd the Changes we are now diſcourſing of; and which, by the way, are treated of as unaccountably in the Gazette, as any where elſe: For, in the Article dated May 14, which ſpecifies the King's conſtituting Lord Jerſey Secretary of State, no mention at all is made of the Duke of Shrewſbury: In That alſo, dated the 18th, which ſpecifies the Removal of Lord Pembroke to the Head of the Council-Board, no mention is made of the Duke of Leeds: And as to the Alterations in the Admiralty and Treaſury Commiſſions, they were not ſuffer'd to make an Article: Only in That dated May 31, in which the Lords-Juſtices who were to govern the Kingdom in the King's Abſence, (for his Majeſty was again bound for Holland) Lord Bridgwater's Name occurs amongſt the reſt as firſt Commiſſioner of the Admiralty: And there is good Reaſon to believe, That both his Lordſhip's Commiſſions were order'd the ſame Day.

This is the beſt Account that our ſcanty Materials will furniſh of this Change: And even This will ſerve to confute Biſhop Burnet; if not altogether ſo full and ſo ſatisfactory as it ought to be.

The reſt of the Regents were, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Preſident, the Lord Privy Seal, the Lord Steward, the Earl of Marlborough, Mr. Montagu, and (as if to diſtinguiſh the Omiſſion of the Duke of Shrewſbury the Year before) the Earl of Jerſey, his Succeſſor.

Then as to the Temper in which his Majeſty went Abroad, another of his Letters to Lord Galway, which enſues, will ſufficiently diſplay it.

Tindal.

Kenſington, June 1, 1699.

"I have not writ to you all this Winter, by reaſon of my Vexation at what paſs'd in the Parliament, and becauſe of the Uncertainty I was under to know what to ſend you: It is not poſſible to be more ſenſibly touch'd than I am, at my not being able to do more for the poor Refugee-Officers, who have ſerv'd me with ſo much Zeal and Fidelity: I am afraid the good God will puniſh the Ingratitude of this Nation: I could hardly get the Eſtabliſhment of Ireland paſs'd, as it will be ſent you: There are Retrenchments, which I was forc'd to make, tho' I lik'd them not; and, doubtleſs, ſome of them muſt be chang'd: The Duke of Bolton ſeems pleas'd with you, but not with the Chancellor: I have this Day diſpatch'd a new Commiſſion for the Lords Juſtices of Ireland, by joining with the Duke of Bolton, and you, the Earl of Berkley, who is an eaſy Man, and will be agreable to you: I am perfectly ſatisfy'd with your Conduct; and hope, now, you will be left undiſturb'd, ſince, in the laſt Parliament, nothing was ſaid of you, tho' you were much threaten'd: I fear, the Commiſſion given here by the Commons, for the Inſpection of the Forfeitures, will give you a great deal of Trouble, and me no leſs, the next Winter: Aſſuredly, on all Sides, my Patience is put to the Trial: I am going to breathe a little beyond Sea, in order to come back as ſoon as poſſible: I think it for my Service to change the Commiſſion of the Treaſury in Ireland, where, I doubt, the Revenue is not well manag'd; of which it is neceſſary that you let me know your Sentiments immediately: The Eſtabliſhment of the next Year muſt abſolutely be reduc'd, that my ordinary Revenue may ſerve to pay it; and a Parliament in Ireland muſt not be thought of ſo ſoon: Of this you ought inſtantly to conſider; and take your Meaſures for the future: Be always aſſur'd of my Friendſhip.

WILLIAM R."

A.D. 1699.

After what Manner his Majeſty took Breath in Holland, we are not as yet, however, at Leiſure to explane: For, (as we are told by one of the moſt enlighten'd Court-Writers of theſe Times, who takes upon him to juſtify the Diſpoſition the King had made of the Spaniſh Succeſſion, That the Proteſtant Intereſt was what we were concern'd for above all Things) it is neceſſary firſt to take Notice of an Incident, which happen'd during the laſt Seſſion of Parliament, and which, together with the Fourth Article of the Treaty of Ryſwick, will ſhew what that Concern amounted to: For, at the very Time when, according to the gracious Speech from the Throne at the opening of the ſaid Seſſion, England had ſo much Weight and Influence on the Councils and Affairs Abroad, and his Majeſty, as we have otherwiſe learn'd, had gone ſuch great Lengths to merit the Conſideration of his Moſt Chriſtian Brother of France, his ſaid Moſt Chriſtian Brother made no Difficulty to revoke and annul the famous Edict of Nantes, and to iſſue forth ſeverer Edicts againſt his Proteſtant Subjects than ever: And if Lord Jerſey had any Inſtructions to interpoſe in their Favour, his Interpoſition had no Effect: The Perſecution, as it is call'd by Burnet, (tho' he chuſes but juſt to touch upon it, and that more like a Divine than a Hiſtorian) continued to rage as before: And England (for want of a large Standing-Army no doubt it will be urg'd) had no other Reſource but That of the primitive Chriſtians, Prayers and Faſting, for the Succour of their oppreſs'd Brethren: For ſo it appears by the King's Proclamation, dated March 12, appointing a general Faſt and Day of ſolemn Humiliation, to implore a Bleſſing from Almighty God upon his Majeſty and his Dominions, to avert thoſe Judgments which our manifold Sins and Provocations had juſtly deſerv'd, and to intercede with the divine Majeſty in Behalf of Such as ſuffer'd Abroad for the Proteſtant Religion.

[State-Tracts. Tem. Guil. III. Vol. III. p. 191.]

Edict of Nantes revok'd.

The Progreſs of the Scots Company of Adventurers, muſt alſo be attended to; which we left labouring under many Difficulties and Diſcouragements, and muſt reſume in order to ſhew, that by this Time it labour'd under many more.

Progreſs of the Scots Company.

It has already been hinted, That they had ſent Ships to Sea: Theſe Ships were Two out

A. D. 1699. out of Four which they had caus'd to be built at Hamburgh, in hope, That the laying out such a Sum of Money there, would have forwarded the great Affair of procuring Subscriptions for advancing the Purposes in View: On board these Ships and their Tenders, a mix'd Cargo was embark'd, consisting partly of Goods (such as Scotland afforded) for Traffick; Guns and military Stores, for Service, if Occasion offer'd, and Provisions for the Support of the Adventurers: These were in Number between Eleven and Twelve Hundred; and consisted partly of Seamen and partly of Soldiers, marshall'd into Twelve Companies, under as many Captains, but enter'd in the Name of Planters, among other Reasons, to avoid an Application to the Scots Privy-Council, which was requisite for Leave to make Levies in the Military way: The Direction of all was given to a Council of Seven, (of whom Paterson was one, who was formerly discours'd of, as the principal Projector of the Bank of England, and who was also the Projector of the Company, and the Adventure now opening to us): And they were bound to the Isthmus of Darien, there to make an Establishment; on a Presumption, That the Spaniards had no Footing there: That the Natives were still Lords of the Soil: That They should be most gladly receiv'd and welcom'd by Them: And that in consequence thereof, they should, one way or other, go Halves with the Spaniards, in all the Wealth of all their Mines.

But the Project of this Adventure had its Birth from the Abortion of the Former: The African and East-India Trades, were certainly the Points they had first in View: And it was not till they had been successively (a) defeated in their Solicitations of Subscriptions in London, Amsterdam, and Hamburgh, that they exchang'd the One for the Other.

The Conduct of the Company. In this Interval they had also committed as many Errors, as they had incurr'd Misfortunes: They had cheated and been cheated in their Turn; and had so far confounded all the Cash they could raise, and put their Credit so to the Rack, in the Pourlieus of their Undertaking, that the Remnant of Both was scarce sufficient to send their Ships to Sea at all, and was not sufficient to accommodate them, in a Manner proper for so doubtful and hazardous an Undertaking: For of their Provisions, we are told by one of their own Officers, (tho' he apostatis'd afterwards, and expos'd the whole Undertaking in print, with all the Wit and Malice he was Master of) one Third was consum'd before they weigh'd Anchor: And such was, at that Time, the Scarcity which rag'd in Scotland, and, indeed, in the greatest Part of Europe, that if their Flow of Cash had rose ever so high, they could scarce have procur'd a suitable Supply in any reasonable Time. But then the Ships, tho' so miserably furnish'd, had but 100 l. Sterling each, and 10 l. to each Tender allow'd them, either for a Recruit, or to relieve them in case of any other Emergency; so many of which they were to many Ways liable to.

[A Defence of the Scots abdicating Darien.]

Thus from the very Beginning their Foundation was both too narrow and too feeble for their Building; which must have sunk with its own Weight, if no Force of any kind had been made use of to hasten its Downfall.

Upon the 17th of July 1698, the said Ships Five Ships fail. fail'd from Edinburgh-Frith, (which shews, That when the Company clamour'd loudest against the Memorials of the Two English Ministers at Hamburgh, they were long before at the End of their Negotiations there) and having touch'd at Madeira, for a Supply of Wine, in which they laid out all their little Stock of Money, made for Crab-Island, lying between Santa-Cruz and Porto-Rico, and in the Neighbourhood of St. Thomas, belonging to the Danes. This little Island they were to take Possession of in the Company's Name, and to leave a Detachment there: But the People they sent into St. Thomas's for Pilots, having indiscretely broach'd their Design, the Danes dispatch'd a Sloop to take Possession of it first: So that when the Scots came into the Road, they discover'd a large Tent set up on the Strand, with the King of Denmark's Colours flying over it.

Thus the same ill Fortune which had blasted their Purposes in the Bud, accompany'd them to America: And when they arriv'd at Golden-Island, which was about the Middle of October, the Wants and Miseries, as well as Difficulties and Dangers, they had to struggle with, soon convinc'd them of the Impracticability of their Undertaking, (in the wild Manner it had been conducted) and almost as soon dispos'd them to think more of a Deliverance than of an Establishment. and arrive at Golden-Island.

Their Managers meet at Home. The Managers at Home, in the mean Time, instead of devoting all their Cares to the Support of the Infant-Colony they had so desperately expos'd, made it their great Point, to ply the Court with Complaints and Expostulations, with regard to the Hamburgh Affair, (tho', as above manifested, their Hopes from that Quarter were all at an End long before their Ships set Sail) as if they were more anxious for Indemnification, than any thing else.

But now, instead of the equally frivolous and provoking Answers hitherto given the Company, Measures were taken to find Matter of Recrimination against them on one Hand,

(a) At London and at Hamburgh, as we have seen: And at Amsterdam, by some unguarded Expressions (as we are told) which dropp'd from Paterson, when in Liquor, to this Effect, viz. "That their Act empower'd them to grant Commissions to any Kind of People (without asking their Nation) to trade to the Indies under Scots Colours: And that such People might dispose of their India Goods where they pleas'd, provided they made a sham Entry in Scotland: And that if the Company should agree to take 5 per Cent. for the said Goods, such Ships as traded with their Commissions, would be able to undersell the English and Dutch full 15 per Cent." After which Lapse took Air, the Dutch would treat with the Company upon no other Terms.

A. D. 1699. Hand, and to fruſtrate their Enterpriſe on the other.

To the firſt of theſe Ends, Secfield the Scotiſh Secretary of State, inform'd them, "That he had preſented their Petition to the King, and was commanded to let them know, That, there being Accounts, that the Ships belonging to the Company were arriv'd on the Coaſts of America, and the particular Deſign not being communicated to his Majeſty, he therefore delay'd to give an Anſwer, till he had receiv'd certain Information of their Settlement." The Company, on the other Hand, in order to obviate this Snare, ſignify'd by their Council-General, "That the ſaid Ships had arriv'd ſafe at their intended Port, within a League of Golden-Iſland, on the Coaſt of Darien; and, after having (b) treated aboard the Ships with the Natives, who were always own'd to be Proprietors of that Part of the Coaſt, their Men had, at the Requeſt and with the Conſent, of the Natives, landed on the 4th of November, 1698, and taken Poſſeſſion of an uninhabited Place, never before poſſeſs'd by any European whatever; and that, in purſuance of the Treaty, the chief Men and Leaders of the Natives had join'd with, and taken Commiſſion from, the Council: That they thought it their Duty, at their firſt Meeting, to give his Majeſty an Account thereof; and likewiſe, That by Letters from the Council, bearing Date at New Edinburgh in Caledonia (the Name given to their new Settlement) the 28th of December, they were poſitively inform'd, That the French had a Deſign upon all that Coaſt, or at leaſt to make a Settlement ſomewhere thereabouts: And they humbly conceiv'd, That the firm Settlement of their Colony in thoſe Parts, might be a Means of preventing, or at leaſt leſſening, the evil Conſequences that might ariſe from his Majeſty's Kingdoms and Dominions every where, by the Settlement of any powerful foreign Neighbour upon any Part of that Coaſt: And that, as they were always bound thankfully to acknowledge his Goodneſs for granting them thoſe Privileges, and his Letters Patents, by which their Company was eſtabliſh'd; ſo they did in all Humility confidently expect his Royal Favor and Protection, as having, in all the Steps of their Conduct, thro' the whole Courſe of that Affair, ſtrictly obſerv'd the Conditions requir'd by the Act of Parliament and Letters Patents: And they referr'd That, together with the Contents of their laſt Petition, to his Royal Conſideration, to give ſuch Directions therein, as to his Wiſdom ſhould ſeem meet and expedient."

But before this Anſwer, which was dated March 21, to the Secretary's Letter of February 7, could be receiv'd at Court, and conſequently, before the artificial Uſe which the Company had made of the pretended Deſigns of France, could be examin'd, the fruſtrating Meaſures were already gone forth, as appears by the following extraordinary Proclamation of Sir William Beeſton's, Governor of Jamaica, dated the 9th of April, viz. A. D. 1699

"Whereas, I have receiv'd Orders from his Majeſty, by the R. H. James Vernon, one of the principal Secretaries of State, importing, That his Majeſty was not inform'd of the Intentions and Deſigns of the Scots in peopling Darien, which is contrary to the Peace between his Majeſty and his Allies, commanding me, not to afford them any Aſſiſtance; in compliance therewith, in his Majeſty's Name, and by his Order, I do ſtrictly charge and require all and every his Majeſty's Subjects, That, upon no Pretence whatſoever, they hold any Correſpondence with the Scots aforeſaid, or give them any Aſſiſtance, with Arms, Ammunition, Proviſion, or any Thing whatſoever, either by Themſelves, or any Other for them; nor aſſiſt them with any of their Shipping, or of the Engliſh Nation's, upon Pain of his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure, and of ſuffering the ſevereſt Puniſhment." Proclamation iſſued againſt them from Jamaica, &c.

Thus without any previous Hearing, and before the Court of Spain had prefer'd any formal Complaint againſt them, or made any Requiſition concerning them, a Body of his Majeſty's Scotiſh Subjects, acting both under an Act of Parliament and a Royal Charter, were thrown from out of his Royal Protection; with this farther Aggravation, That the Lord Preſident of the Scots Seſſion, and the Lord Advocate, were at the very Time of iſſuing this Proclamation on the Road from Scotland, by Order from Court, to plead the Cauſe of their Country.

It is no Wonder, therefore, That with the Face of their own Court thus early and thus peremptorily ſet againſt them, the Powers moſt concern'd in point of Intereſt, or in point of Policy, join'd in the Perſecution: What Part Holland took in it, (if any) was of ſuch a clancular Nature, and ſo clancularly manag'd, that nothing can be ſaid with any certainty concerning it: But on the 3d of May following, the Marquis de Canaillet, who was, at that Time, the Miniſter Reſidentiary of Spain in England, diſcover'd as well the Want of Harmony between the Two Courts, as the Diſpleaſure of his own, againſt this miſerable Colony, in a Memorial which was very little ſhort of a Declaration of War: For having premis'd, That the King his Maſter had receiv'd Advice of the Darien-Adventure from different Parts, he proceded to ſay, in effect, That thoſe Advices were very diſagreable to his Majeſty; as denoting very little Friendſhip, and a Rupture of the Alliance which had always been between the two Crowns, which his Majeſty had hitherto ſo religiouſly obſerv'd, and meant to obſerve, and which had produc'd ſo many Conveniencies and Advantages as well to the King (of England) as to his Subjects: That in the Midſt of ſo good a Correſ- Memorial of the Spaniſh Miniſter.

(b) According to the Tract, call'd, A Defence of the Scots abdicating Darien, p. 51, 52. theſe Words ſhould have run thus, and after having treated the Natives on board the ſaid Ships, &c.

A. D. 1699. Correspondence, and in full Peace, his Majesty did not expect such Insults and Hostilities from the Subjects of his Majesty (without any Cause or Pretext) in the Heart of his Dominions: And that all the King his Master desir'd was, To have his extreme Sensibility of a Procedure so unjust represented to his Majesty: For he would take such Measures concerning them, as he should see convenient."

It is obvious from the Jamaica-Proclamation, already inserted, and from a Course of the like Proclamations issued from all the rest of the English Plantations, That the Matter of this Memorial would not be very disagreable to his Majesty: But then, the Manner, which was offensive enough, must have touch'd him to the Quick: For, notwithstanding all that has been said of his Contempt of Pomp and Parade, or of those burdensome Ostentations which Policy occasionally enjoins, to captivate the Vulgar, he was, perhaps, rather more vain of his Royalty, more precise in exacting the Observance due to it, and more vindictive in case of any Trespass upon it, than those Princes usually are, who are Kings by Inheritance: Of which the Year now passing before us, will furnish a Variety of Instances.

The King vain of his Royalty.

—Thus, certain of the Nobility having put their Servants into Scarlet Liveries, Notice was given in the Gazette, by the Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marshal, That it was his Majesty's Royal Will and Pleasure, That, for the Future, no Person whatsoever should presume to use, give, or suffer to be worn for their Liveries, any Sort of Scarlet, or red Cloth, or Stuff, except the Royal Family or Foreign Ministers. And thus, when this very Marquis de Canaillet, the Spanish Minister, (chusing, perhaps, to recollect the Prince of Orange, and to forget the King of England) was rude enough to appear at Court in his Majesty's Presence with his Hat on, he could not forgive the Folly, or overlook the Affront; but caus'd him to be told, either to alter his Deportment, or forbear his Visits; which Acknowledgment of being hurt, only serv'd to put it into the Power of the brutal Minister to hurt him more: For, instead of complying with the former Part of the King's Requisition, he chose the Latter.

No. 3482.

New Intrigues between England and France in relation to the Spanish Succession.

And here, for a while, we must leave the Darien-Adventure in suspence, in order to interweave, as well as our Materials will give us Leave, a new Vein of Intrigue between England and France, in relation to the Spanish Succession, which the Death of the Electoral Prince of Bavaria, before-mention'd, had once again unsettled, notwithstanding the secret Article in favour of the Elector his Father: For as to the Suspicion entertain'd by the Credulity of some, and afterwards improv'd by the Craft of others, That the Infant Prince was prematurely dispatch'd out of the way, it is accompany'd with no Proof, and therefore deserves no Credit.

[Lamberty, Tom 1. p. 20.]

But then, in what Manner, for what Reason, or under what Pretext, the Elector was dropp'd by these great Disposers of Kingdoms, must be left to the Conjectures of Futurity; none of our Compilers having left us any such Lights as will serve to explane the Secret: For that there was a Faction which oppos'd him in the Court of Spain, and that he was odious for his Mal-Administration to the Flemings, was sufficiently known to all Europe before; and the Inclinations of the People so to be dispos'd of, was a Matter of the least Concern to the Disposers.

This, however, is certain, That King William had scarce discharg'd the Complements which he ow'd to the Republic he serv'd in the Capacity of Stadtholder, by assisting in their Assemblies, reviewing their Troops, Fortifications, &c. and had just began to take Breath at Loo, before M. de Tallard was at his Elbow, with new Instructions, and a new Negotiation was commenc'd, rather more favorable in Appearance to the House of Austria, but in no respect more unfavorable to the House of Bourbon, on a like Plan of Partition with the Former.

Mistake of M. de Lamberty in relation thereto.

And here it may not be unfit to observe, That M. de Lamberty supposes the Plan of it was laid during Lord Portland's splendid Embassy in France; in which he is altogether as erroneous, as in his Supposition with regard to the Former; namely, That it was first concerted between the said Lord and M. de Boufflers, when taken Prisoner by M. Dyckvelt, marching out of Namur: But if he had plac'd it to the Account of Lord Jersey's Embassy, he would not have been far from the Truth: For, in Virtue of that Lord's Connections with the reigning Cabal, he succeded Lord Portland in the Secret of Affairs, as well as in his Embassy to France; and being at Paris when the Electoral Prince of Bavaria dy'd, (c) unquestionably had Orders to confer with the French Ministers upon that Event; and at his Return to England, to enter on the Secretary's Office, came fully instructed in their Sentiments concerning it: Or if, thro' the Suddenness of his Revocation, any material Point was left in Suspence, it may be presum'd, That Mr. Prior, his Secretary and Privado (who remain'd at Paris, tho' without a Character, till Lord Manchester arriv'd) was enabled to supply all Defects: For when the Latter quitted Paris, instead of returning to his Principal at London, he waited upon his Majesty at Loo; And, as he himself in a Letter from thence, dated September 11, informs Lord Manchester, he had, soon after his Arrival there, a long and very particular Audience of the King, in which

(c) Mr. Cole, in his Introduction to his State-Papers, says, The King sent the Earl of Jersey into France with Instructions to negotiate this Second Treaty: But tho' he had such Instructions afterwards, it can scarce be conceiv'd he had them at first: For he made his public Entry into Paris January 4, 1698-9; whereas the Death of the Electoral Prince did not happen till the 16th of February following.

A. D. 1697. which he gave his Majesty a circumstantial Account of every Thing he knew, in relation to the Affairs of France.

Lord Manchester, the English Minister at Paris, was in the Secret.

On the other Hand, Lord Manchester (who arriv'd at Paris August 5, N. S.) had for many Months together nothing in charge, as is manifest both by his Instructions and printed Correspondence, but to purchase and employ Spies upon the Court of St. Germain's, to solicit the important Affairs of the Principality of Orange and Neufchastel, to mediate in favour of such unhappy Sufferers on account of Religion, as happen'd to have Friends at the Court of Loo, and to remonstrate against Insults offer'd on the high Seas, to the Ships, and Depredations committed on the Subjects, of England: And he more than once complains in the Course of his Letters of his own Insignificancy; as also of the Confidence plac'd in M. de Tallard, who, all this Time, manag'd the whole Correspondence between the Two Crowns; of whole high Favour at Court, he gives this signal Instance, "That he had seen him speak to the King about Business, even to much as without asking an Audience, or acquainting the Secretary of State with it."

Cole's Mem. p. 89.

In short, his Excellency was kept so totally in the Dark, as to what was transacting at Loo, That the first Intelligence he receiv'd concerning it, was from Mr. Stanhope, his Majesty's nominal Minister at Madrid (for, as we have seen, Shonenberg was the Man of Business) and Mr. Stanhope himself came at the Secret (as we shall farther see) by the Effects it produc'd: For, as soon as the Spanish Ministry were convinc'd, That the Re-partition of their Monarchy was the Matter in Agitation, a grand Council was held, and upon the Issue, a Resolution was taken, to remonstrate against it in the strongest Terms, as well by their own Ministers residing at foreign Courts, as to the foreign Ministers residing at their own: Accordingly, a Paper containing such a Remonstrance, was sent to Mr. Stanhope, by Don Antonio de Ubilla, Secretary of State, and this Paper was by him forwarded to Lord Manchester, as what concern'd, or by the Contents might be supposed to concern, his Excellency's Negotiations at the Court of France.

But notwithstanding Lord Manchester's Sensibility of the Preference given to M. de Tallard in his Lordship's own Walk of Business, and Mr. Stanhope's Hint concerning the Spanish Remonstrance, in his next Letter to Lord Jersey, he contents himself with writing thus coolly and concisely of the whole Affair, "The Spanish Embassador is endeavouring to get a private Audience of the King: The first Matter he is to represent is, in relation to some Transactions at Loo: The Declaration of his King makes also a great Noise here." Again; in a Letter written some Days after to Mr. Yard, one of the Under-Secretaries, he expresses himself as follows: "They write from Loo, That the Spanish Embassador (at London) had deliver'd to all the Lords Justices, a Memorial relating to the Succession to the Crown of Spain, which his Majesty resents very much: I desire you would let me know of what Nature it is, or whether it is not the same which was given to Mr. Stanhope some Time ago, and to most of the Ministers Abroad." And it is not till above three Weeks afterwards, that in another Letter to Mr. Prior, by this Time appointed Under Secretary to Lord Jersey, that he ventures to make use of the following very moderate Expostulation, "When you can do it conveniently, put my Lord Jersey in mind of what we have often discours'd about, in relation to the Affairs of France, and what he was so kind to say, He would prevent if possible, when I had the Honour of seeing him last: You can easily imagine, I shall not be able to obtain any Thing of this Court, if Matters of Moment must be only transacted by M. de Tallard's Not that I am desirous of knowing more than he would think proper in the Post I am in."

A. D. 1698.

Such Incidents, however, arose at last, as brought his Lordship into play almost whether his Employers would or not.—But in order to give those Incidents their due Place, it is necessary first to do the same, by such as lead to it.

It was then, in the Beginning of July, that M. de Tallard renew'd his Attendance on his Majesty at Loo: And we must either suppose, That the Treaty of Repartition was at that Time in good Forwardness, or that the Parties in it apply'd themselves with unusual Zeal to expedite it, from the first opening of the Negotiation: For by the next Month, such a Progress had been made in it, that the Court of Spain, which had been let into the Secret, tho' it was entrusted in so few Hands, thought it incumbent on them, for once, to quicken the Pace of the Protests and Remonstrances above-mention'd, for fear they should come too late.

Remonstrance of the Spanish Court against it.

That sent to Mr. Stanhope by Don Antonio the Secretary, was dated the 27th of August, and set forth in general, "That the King his Master, having been frequently inform'd by his Ministers in the North, of the strong Informations, and even evident Proofs which by different Advices and Accidents they had receiv'd, That the English, French and Hollanders, in consequence of what had been last Year concluded at Loo, were again forming new Treaties, for disposing of the Succession of that Crown, and dividing its Dominions, (which Advices had been so many ways confirm'd, that they were in a Manner public all over Europe) his Majesty could no longer dissemble his Knowledge, nor excuse himself from opposing what, if carry'd into Execution, would produce such irreparable Mischiefs: For which Reason he had order'd his Ministers at the Courts of France, England and Holland, to make known his Resentments of a Procedure, never before heard of during the Life of any King, &c. As also, to use all their Diligence in making such Instances, as may put a Stop to the said Negotiations, which were as unnecessary as they were pernicious, seeing he was not so unmindful of his Obligations, nor so negligent

A. D. 1699. gent of the Love and Security of his Vaſſals, as to be without due Reflection of what was needful to preſerve the public Tranquility (in caſe he ſhould dye without Heirs) by ſuch a Temperament, that no Body ſhould be able to find Fault with his Juſtice or his Foreſight: And that the Complaint of his Majeſty, (theſe are the very Words of the Secretary, if a literal Tranſlation may be call'd ſo) and the Orders he gives to his Miniſters Abroad, to notify to the Miniſters, in whoſe Courts they reſide, be, at the ſame Time, made public, he has lately order'd it to be made known to the Miniſters here: For which Reaſon, Don Antonio de Ubilla communicates it to Don Alexander Stanhope, by order of his Maſter, that he may alſo give Notice to his Britannic Majeſty, aſſiſting with his prudent Repreſentations this juſt and honeſt Purpoſe, that ſo the univerſal Quiet may be maintain'd, and that he may quit the Scandal of this Negotiation, which, 'tis fear'd, will be an unhappy Motive of kindling a voracious Flame of a new War, which being once lighted, will be difficult to be extinguiſh'd either by the greateſt Force, or the moſt dextrous and moſt powerful Mediation."

In pretty much the ſame Form, and in the ſame kind of Language, it may be preſum'd, the Sentiments of Spain, on this unprecedented Occaſion, were communicated to the Miniſters of the other Powers concern'd: And it is ſcarce reaſonable to think, That their Inſtructions to their own Miniſters Abroad, ſhould excede the Expreſſions they choſe to make uſe of at Home.

But if this was the Caſe, the Marquis de Canailles, in his Memorial to the Lords Juſtices of England, choſe rather to commit an inexcuſable Treſpaſs upon his Orders, than to loſe ſo tempting an Opportunity of gratifying his own Malignity, by affronting a Government which, according to his Reckoning, had behav'd ſo ill both towards his Mem. p. 58. Maſter and himſelf: For his Remonſtrance, as tranſlated by Mr. Cole, conſiſted of the following Particulars.

The inſolent one preſented by their Embaſſador in London to the Lords Juſtices.

"Firſt, That his Catholic Majeſty having been inform'd by evident Proofs, that his Majeſty King William, the Hollanders, and other Powers (in conſequence of what they have treated and ſtipulated laſt Year at Leo) are now, at this Time, actually hatching new Treaties for the Succeſſion to the Crown of Spain, and (what is next deteſtable) contriving its Diviſion and Repartition, his Majeſty orders his Embaſſador-Extraordinary reſiding in this Kingdom, to make known to the firſt Miniſters and Lords of England, the juſt Reſentment which his Majeſty has againſt theſe Operations and Procedings never before ſeen, nor even attempted to be treated of by any Nations in regard to the Intereſts of another; and ſtill leſs during the Life of a Monarch who is of ſo fit an Age to have Reaſon to hope (for many Years) a Succeſſion ſo much wiſh'd for by all Nations; who, without a deteſtable Avarice, could not be provok'd to uſurp and overturn another Prince's Country.

That if This was permitted, and was not A. D. 1699. contrary to the Laws of Nature, no Nation or Dominion could be ſafe againſt the Machinations and Deceits of the ſtrongeſt and moſt malicious: Whereas Reaſon and not Force confines Nations.

That if it was permitted to Strangers to take Notice, and to put their Hands into the Lines of Succeſſion of Kings and Sovereigns, there would be no Statutes nor municipal Laws to be obſerv'd in the One nor in the Other; nor could Any be free from the Attempts from Others, and the CROWN of ENGLAND LESS than ANY.

If we lye watching the Indiſpoſitions of Sovereigns, no Health would be conſtant, no Life ſafe; while the One and the Other depend on the Hand of the Almighty, who regulates Life, Death, and Empires.

That the Impreſſions which one Kingdom makes upon another, to tempt the Faith of the Subjects, and to excite their Minds to a Riſing, are an Offence, and but a Degree leſs than the betraying the good Faith which ought to be obſerv'd among Chriſtians, and more particularly among Allies and Friends.

That we ought not to preſume, That any Prince or Nation, and ſtill leſs the King of the Spaniſh Nation, is ſo negligent as not to take juſt Meaſures againſt Accidents that may happen when leaſt thought of, to ſecure the public Peace, and the Repoſe of Europe, which has been the Aim of the King and the Nation for ſo many Ages, as it is now, and will always be.

That if theſe Procedings, theſe Machinations and Projects, are not quickly put a Stop to, we ſhall, without doubt, ſee a dire and univerſal War over all Europe, difficult to ſtop when we are willing, and moſt ſenſible and prejudicial to the Engliſh Nation, which has newly try'd and felt what Novelties and the laſt War have coſt them: This Matter is ſo worthy of Reflection and Conſideration, that it is not doubted, but it will be own'd as ſuch by the Parliament, the Nobility, and all the Engliſh Nation, which has always been ſo full of Foreſight into the preſent and future Times.

The ſame Nation muſt conſider its particular Intereſts, the Trade and the Treaties which ſhe principally has with the King and the Spaniſh Nation; the Alteration, the Diviſion and Seperation of which, would, of Neceſſity, draw after it conſiderable Prejudices and Damages; and all This is prevented by cutting ſhort the Project that is begun, and not to help on Novelties that have, from all Times, been hurtful to Empires and Sovereignties.

That the Embaſſador Extraordinary of Spain, will manifeſt to the Parliament, when it ſhall be aſſembled, the juſt Reſentment which he now expreſſes, as his Majeſty has caus'd it to be notify'd to all the public Miniſters of the Kings, Princes, and Republics that reſide at the Court of Madrid."

Such was this angry, ill-manner'd Paper; which was not, however, preſented in due Form, by the Embaſſador in Perſon, to a Board

A. D. 1699. Board of Regents, but by his Secretary to the Lords Juſtices ſeverally; who had, thereby, a favorable Opportunity to decline all Notice of it, till they had appriz'd his Majeſty, and were made acquainted with his Pleaſure concerning it: And what his Pleaſure was, we find thus expreſs'd in a Paper call'd by Mr. Cole, The Tranſlation of the Paper ſent to the Spaniſh Embaſſador, and which was wrote in French, by Mr. Secretary Vernon, September 30, 1699, viz.

He is order'd to depart the Kingdom.

"His Majeſty having ſeen the Paper which the Secretary of the Embaſſy of Spain has deliver'd lately, by order of your Excellency, to ſeveral of the Lords-Juſtices of the Kingdom, his Majeſty has found the Contents ſo inſolent and ſeditious, that, in Reſentment of ſo extraordinary a Proceding, and which can by no Means be juſtify'd by the Law of Nations, He orders, That you go out of his Dominions preciſely in Eighteen Days, to be counted from this Notification; and that you keep in your Houſe, without going out of the Limits of it, till your Departure: I am alſo order'd, to let you know, That theſe are the Orders of his Majeſty, And that no Writing be any more receiv'd from you, nor any of your Domeſtics."

On the other Hand, according to M. de Lamberty, this Order was ſerv'd on the Embaſſador by Mr. Vernon in perſon, verbally; and his Excellency demanding a Copy of it in writing, the Secretary dictated, and the Embaſſador held the Pen: The Former ſeem'd penſive, and the Latter gay upon the Occaſion: Saying, firſt with an Air of Tranſport, Te Deum laudamus! and afterwards, That he ſhould not fail to obey the Orders he had receiv'd to a Scruple.

To procede:—His Majeſty, not ſatisfy'd with this ignominious Diſmiſſion of a Miniſter who had ſo highly exaſperated him, yet farther order'd his Engliſh Envoy at Madrid, Mr. Stanhope, to complain of the Affront offer'd him; which he did accordingly, in very lively Terms: Calling it an inſolent and faucy Attempt to ſtir up Sedition in the Kingdom, by appealing to the Parliament and People of England againſt his Majeſty; but taking proper Meaſures to exempt the Catholic King from any Concern in it; by urging, That his Maſter did not believe, the Marquis had any Order for what he had done from his Catholic Majeſty.

The Engliſh Miniſter likewiſe order'd to leave Spain.

This Subterfuge, however, did not ſerve: For his Catholic Majeſty took the Diſgrace of his Miniſter upon himſelf; and, in like Manner, order'd Mr. Stanhope to leave his Dominions in Eighteen Days, and not ſtir out of his Houſe during that Interval: Which Order Mr. Stanhope comply'd with; but, nevertheleſs, not without obſerving to the Spaniſh Court, That the ſame Expreſs which brought him the Orders for preferring the ſaid Complaint, had alſo brought him Letters of Revocation.

A Remark on the Occaſion.

It is moreover worth recollecting in this Place, That when Don Pedro de Ronquillo reſided at the Court of England on the Behalf of Spain, in the Reign of King Charles II. no foreign Miniſter ever made ſo many Appeals to the Public againſt the Court as he did, or was more the Favourite of the Exclufioners on that Account: So that Spain, in thoſe Days, was as active, tho' by different Methods, in practiſing upon the Succeſſion of England, as England now was on the Succeſſion of Spain: And the Prince of Orange then found his Account in the like Inſolence and Sedition, which his Britannic Majeſty now complain'd of: Such Inconſiſtencies do we find in the Conduct of Princes and Nations! And ſuch a Proneneſs to complain in their own Caſe, of the ill Treatment they are ſo prone to laviſh upon their Neighbours!

A. D. 1699.

The Spaniſh Miniſter at the Hague preſents a Memorial to the States.

Don Bernard de Quiros, the Spaniſh Embaſſador in Holland, in the mean while, did not follow, in every Reſpect, the Conduct of the Marquis de Canalles; for his Memorial, in point of Expreſſion, was decent and moderate enough: But then, as he knew, there was a ſtrong Faction ſtill ſubſiſting in the Republic againſt their Stadtholder, and in particular againſt the Meaſures then in agitation, for diſmembering the Spaniſh Monarchy in favour of France, he took care to furniſh them with ſuch a Quantity of inflammatory Matter, that it was not thought adviſable to ſuffer it to be brought into Debate: And no better Means of Prevention occur'd, than to refuſe the Acceptance of it, Till the old Quarrel on Account of Shonenburgh (the Accommodation of which, it ſeems, we have before prematurely diſcours'd of) was made up: And then a Reſolution of the States was procur'd to juſtify the Conduct of the Preſident of the Week, for ſo doing.

which they refuſe to accept.

M. Dyckvelt, Conduct with reſpect to the Treaty.

Of this Faction, (or at leaſt ſo far as related to the Partition-Treaty) Mr. Dyckveldt, Preſident of the States of Utrecht, was one: That great Man, ſays M. de Lamberty, miſtruſted the Management of France in that Affair: He maintain'd, That her Purpoſes in it were, only to entangle England and Holland in a dangerous Snare, which was manifeſt enough by her communicating the former Treaty to the Spaniſh Court, under the Pretence of complaining of the Catholic King's Will in favour of the Electoral Prince: And that even the Declaration of M. de Tallard to a Perſon in England, who offer'd to eſtabliſh a ſecret Correſpondence with him; namely, That he had been particularly inſtructed, not to do the leaſt Thing which might raiſe any Suſpicion at King William's Court, was no better than a Soporific: The ſame Author moreover tell us, That Thoſe who eſpous'd the Meaſure, maintain'd, on the contrary, That the Conduct of the French aroſe from their Fears of that King, who had been the principal Author of all the Alliances againſt Them: And that to theſe Fears were to be attributed the Favors and Diſtinctions heap'd on Lord Portland during his Embaſſy in France: As alſo the Readineſs they had ſhewn in releaſing, at the Inſtance of his Majeſty, the Effects of M. de la Feret, and of Maynard, the Miniſter of Charenton, which they had left in France, when they withdrew on Account of their Religion.

A. D. 1699. Heraill not allow'd, That France proceeded on a Principle of Fear.

To which M. Dyckvelt reply'd, That those who reason'd from the Fears of France, reason'd very idly: That for his Part, he was too well acquainted with her fierce and haughty Disposition; and remember'd too well the Disasters which had befallen the Allies at Steenkirk, at Landen, and elsewhere, to be so misled: And that as to the Restitutions specify'd of a few Cottages, &c. in favour of an Adventurer and a poor Preacher, no doubt, They thought, That a Suit which it was Meanness to make, it would be Meanness to deny.

Proof that she did not, from Lord Manchester's Dispatches,

But if These were really M. Dyckvelt's Reasonings, with regard to the pretended Fears of France, and not M. de Lamberty's in his Name, what would he have said, if he had read the following Passage out of Lord Manchester's Dispatches, in regard to those Heads of his Instructions, specify'd above; to wit, "I must desire your Lordship (Lord Jersey) will be so kind as to prevent as much as you can, any Demands in relation to French Refugees: For I am confident, they design to weary us out at last by their Refusals: and that it is not, in my poor Opinion, much for the King's Honor." 2dly, As to the Affair of Neufchattel, then held by the Duchess of Nemours, and claim'd as well by the Prince of Conti, as by his Britannic Majesty, in quality of Heir to the House of Longueville, in which we are also taught to believe, he was treated with great Consideration by the Most Christian King, we find one M. de Vryberge, an Agent of King William's at the Court of France for his own hereditary Claims, informing his Ministers, That when he complain'd, in his Master's Name, of certain Hardships put on the Duchess, by his said Most Christian Majesty, They not only avow'd the Facts, but added with some Sharpness, "Well, Sir, why should not the King cause himself to be obey'd by Madame de Nemours? And why should not he give her Troops to bring the People of Neufchattel to Reason; who, notwithstanding their Nearness to the Kingdom of France, have had the Insolence to refuse re-establishing the Minister Gerard (dispossess'd for being a Creature of the Prince of Conti's) during Two Months?" And as to the other Head, specify'd in the same Place, concerning Insults offer'd to, and Depredations committed on, the Subjects of England on the High Seas, none of our Ministers were ever able to obtain the least Satisfaction.

[Boyer.]

[Cole's Mem. p. 50.]

Thus it appears, That the Arguments drawn from the Fears of France, were rather the Result of Flattery than of Reason: And now it is Time to bring forward those Incidents which brought Lord Manchester into Play; and which, perhaps, will make it farther appear, That the Fears thus imputed to one Party, did really stimulate the Precautions taken by the other.

and that others did.

The new Treaty, it is, in the first Place, to be observ'd, was negotiated between France and England only; and when the Heads of it were fully settled and agreed upon, were reduc'd into writing, and reciprocally sign'd by the Two Kings, as will presently be manifested: But then his Britannic Majesty was to solicit the Concurrence of the Emperor, and actually undertook for That of the States-General, before the Treaty could be executed in form. A. D. 1699.

This, it seems, took up more Time than his Most Christian Majesty was willing to allow: For the Emperor was still on the Reserve, and had still his Managements at the Court of Spain, which he thought better worth relying on, than the Engagements of the Two Kings for dividing the Succession, not only without the Participation of the said Court, but in Defiance of its Resentment: And, on the other Hand, the Opposition which M. Dyckvelt and others had rais'd against the Measure, appear'd to be insuperable: For, according to a Fundamental of the Union, in every Act of the Republic, the formal Consent of every Province was necessary; and while the Opposition continued, This Consent could not be obtain'd.

In the Course of these Delays, France, growing out of Humor and out of Patience together, behav'd to his Majesty and to his Ministers, as if they thought those Delays were artful, and as if the King's Ascendancy in the Republic was such, That he could dispense with all the Forms of it; or at least so qualify them, that he could carry any Point he pleas'd: While his Majesty, who was really in earnest, and who did not find himself so omnipotent as they were pleas'd to suppose, offer'd every Expedient in his Power to deserve their Confidence, tho' without the desir'd Effect: For tho' he offer'd to sign the Treaty without the Concurrence of the States, as the only Temperament the Crisis admitted, and actually sent for Lord Jersey, his Secretary of State, to officiate at the Hague on that Occasion, the Temperament was not accepted of: And when the King, in Despair of influencing either Party to his Purpose, prepar'd to set out for England, M. de Tallard receiv'd Orders to return home, and did actually return home about the same Time.

Lord Manchester's private Audience of King Lewis.

And these were the Incidents which made it necessary for the Court of England to let their Embassador Manchester into the Secret, which he had so long been kept in Ignorance of: In order to which Mr. Prior was sent over express, to instruct him verbally in the whole Process; as also in the Conduct he was from thenceforth to observe in relation to it: And as to what follow'd upon it, his Excellency's own Dispatch to the Secretary's Office, by Mr. Prior at his Return, (which was as soon as ever Lord Manchester had receiv'd his Audience) will not only serve as the best Illustration, but also to verify several other extraordinary Points, which as they occurr'd sooner in order of Time, have been touch'd upon already. The said Dispatch was, in Truth, no more than a Detail of what had pass'd at the said Audience, which was of the most private Nature, between the King and the Embassador only, without any previous Communication

A. D. 1699. munication of the Subject-Matter of it to any of the French Miniſters; and began with a Sort of Speech, which his Excellency, it ſeems, had made on that Occaſion, to avoid the Miſchiefs to be apprehended from a written Memorial, as follows, to wit.

"SIR,

The King my Maſter having found, that M. de Tallard was by his Inſtructions oblig'd to quit Holland before he ſign'd the Treaty, which was projected with your Majeſty, relating to the Succeſſion of Spain; his Majeſty has order'd me to deſire this private Audience, to aſſure you, Sir, That the King continues in the ſame Sentiments he was always of, with regard to that Treaty: Your Majeſty knows very well the good Offices employ'd by the King my Maſter, to make the Imperialiſts enter into it: He has alſo done all he could to make the States like it: His Majeſty continues to act as he did: And as to what concerns the King's ſigning it, he caus'd the Earl of Jerſey to come into Holland expreſſly for that End: And I doubt not but the Count of Tallard will have told your Majeſty, how often the King my Maſter has offer'd himſelf to ſign it, to ſhew, that he was ready to do all that depended upon him: Your Majeſty will give me Leave to be a little longer in telling you how this Affair has paſs'd, that ſo your Majeſty may have it perfectly clear'd up, that there is no Alteration in the Intention of the King my Maſter: The Buſineſs was propos'd to the States of the Province of Holland, as to thoſe who were the moſt intereſted in it: For it was not apprehended, that any Obſtacles ſhould be met with elſewhere, if the Conſent of that Province was had: This was alſo the beſt way to make the Secret of this Affair leſs apt to be divulg'd: Sir, if it has been repreſented to you, That the King my Maſter might have made uſe of the Credit he has with the States, to cauſe this Treaty to be concluded, I will own, that the King has a great deal of Credit in that Country: But as this Credit does always conform itſelf to the Manners and Cuſtoms of the Country, and if the States had found no Objection, the Buſineſs could not have been ended without the Conſent of every City, which could not be had in leſs Time than a Month or Three Weeks, as the Penſionary, and the Earl of Portland, has given Count Tallard to underſtand: But whilſt his Orders did not give him Leave to wait for the Concluſion of the Affair, the King my Maſter hopes, that your Majeſty will renew your Orders to M. de Tallard, or will ſend Orders to M. de Bonrepos, (the French Reſident in Holland) to endeavour to remove all Obſtacles, that ſo the Project of the Treaty may have its Effect."

Then enſued the King's Anſwer, which is tranſlated into theſe Words.

"I own, I was a little ſurpris'd, that the Affair was not finiſh'd at the Expiration of the Time, and before the King your Maſter did ſet out for England: I am ſatisfy'd with the Aſſurances which you now give me from him, That he continues ſtill in the ſame Intention; and I hope he will ſtill continue to contribute all he can with the States: As for me, I am ſtill of the ſame Mind, and I act with the ſame Sincerity: I will ſoon ſend M. de Tallard with the neceſſary Inſtructions."

A. D. 1699.

Laſtly, the Embaſſador procedes to give an Account of a Sort of ſupplemental Conference between his Majeſty and him, as follows, "When I ſaid, that the Reaſon the States of Holland were not ſooner acquainted with it, was, That it could not be propos'd to them, till it was known whether the Imperialiſts would come in or no." The King ſaid, with Warmth, They have had Time enough given them, and even too much: As to Count Tallard's having Orders to come away, the King took no Notice of it; nor that he had been inform'd of every Step: Upon my ſaying M. de Tallard had been inform'd of all that has been done in this Affair, and has even ſeen all the Letters which M. Hop (the Dutch Miniſter at Vienna) wrote to the Penſionary; and it being firſt propos'd to the Province of Holland, it ſeem'd, that he was ſatisfy'd in theſe Points: I took occaſion to ſee if M. de Bonrepos had any Orders, ſaying, That the King my Maſter would deſire, that your Majeſty was inform'd by M. de Tallard or M. de Bonrepos, of all that paſſes: And even the States will have a great Regard for all that comes from your Majeſty. The King anſwer'd, In this Affair, I confided only in M. de Tallard: And I know very well, that the King your Maſter has more Credit than I in Holland on this Occaſion. When I ſaid, That the King had recommended it to the Care of the Penſionary, and that we hop'd, that the Difficulties were ſuch as might be ſurmounted; the King anſwer'd That he hop'd it alſo: And that he imagin'd that Somebody would come from the States into England, and that the Treaty would be ſign'd there. The King ſaid alſo, As you know I have it under the Hand of the King your Maſter, as he has it under mine. Then I ſaid, I have alſo, Sir, particular Orders to tell your Majeſty from the King, That, as he has acted on this Occaſion with an open Heart, and with all poſſible Sincerity, ſo he will continue to act on all other Occaſions that may be able to contribute to the ſtrengthening the Friendſhip and the good Correſpondence with your Majeſty: The King anſwer'd, You may aſſure the King your Maſter, that I will do the ſame."

Thus it is apparent, That, notwithſtanding the lofty Notions we have been taught to entertain of his Majeſty's firm and equal Conduct with reſpect to France, he did in the whole Courſe of this Affair condeſcend to act an Under-Part; and what is yet more extraordinary, for no perſonal Advantage, or at leaſt no apparent Advantage to himſelf. King William ſuppoſ'd to be afraid of being aſſaſſinated.

It is true, our Anti-Court-Writers on this Side of the Water, account for every ſuch Inſtance of Condeſcenſion on King William's Side,

A D. 1699. Side, to the (d) Dread of a new Aſſaſſination-Plot, and date the Alteration of his Conduct, from the Diſcovery of the Former: Nor in this Cenſure of Theirs, do they commit any great Offence either againſt Candour or Charity: For, as before obſerv'd, his Majeſty's Miniſter at Paris, was abundantly more attentive to the Motions of the Court of St. Germains, than thoſe of Verſailles; and moſt of his Diſpatches are entirely in the Character of a Spy: Lord Manchester, for Inſtance, in one of them to Lord Jerſey ſays, "I take all the Care I can to know the Steps of thoſe Fellows that were concern'd in the Aſſaſſination; but they do not appear in public, as they did when I came firſt: I cannot ſee any kind of Danger but from ſuch Villains: I do not like Father Saunders his Expreſſion to Stowe, That King James would ſhortly have Occaſion for him: Whenever any of Theſe are miſſing, I will give your Lordſhip Notice; tho' I hope none are admitted near the King, but ſuch as are known."

Nor is this the only Inſtance that can be given of the Apprehenſions entertain'd on this Head: For, amongſt a great Variety, Mr. Hill, his Majeſty's Reſident at Bruſſels, was employ'd to ſeize one (e) Obryan, and Others, who were ſuppos'd to be in King James's Pay for ſome ſuch Purpoſe; and to remove them from Garriſon to Garriſon, till Obryan could be ſent to England, (where, however, it does not appear, That any Proofs could be brought againſt him): Again; ſoon after, the States were pleas'd to iſſue a Placart, requiring all ſuch Perſons as were declar'd Rebels and Fugitives in England, and were then within thoſe Provinces, to depart the ſame in fourteen Days, on pain of being treated as Criminals; and declaring, That all ſuch as, for the Future, ſhould appear there, were to expect the like Treatment: And, laſtly, the Author of the State of Europe, in a ſulſian Compliment to the King, on his two-fold Dominion in England and Holland, concludes with theſe Words, "And thus Four diſtinct Nations have nothing to fear but the Hand of implacable Violence, from which Heaven has hitherto ſo miraculouſly preſerved him, that we may ſtill hope him ſafe under the ſame Protection."

A D. 1699. How very ſmall a Share one of theſe Four Nations at leaſt, had of this Protection, if it can be ſaid they had any at all, the Reader may poſſibly collect from what has already been ſaid of the Procedings againſt the Scots Company, which certainly had all the Clames upon him that Matter of Right and all the Sanctions of Government could give it: Notwithſtanding which, tho' his Majeſty, during the very ſame Period, could twice make ſo bold with the Succeſſion of the whole Spaniſh Monarchy, in favour of his inveterate Enemy, he was ſo far from making any Proviſion in favour of his Scots Subjects, that he continued to treat them, by his Proclamations from the Engliſh Colonies, as if they were no better than Free-Booters, againſt whom he ſhould be glad to ſee the whole World at war, that they might be extirpated ſo much the ſooner.

To whom they were thus inhumanly ſacrific'd, is not, indeed, altogether ſo eaſy to explane: For tho' Spain had complain'd loudeſt, we ought to be convinc'd from all which in this Interval had paſs'd between the two Courts, ſhe was not the moſt favorably heard: England, as we ſhall farther ſee in its Place, was grown cool in the Affair, as perceiving by this Time, She had nothing to apprehend from it: And as to France, in all my Lord Manchester's Correſpondence with that Court, there is not the leaſt Trace to be met with, That the Miniſters of his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty were ſo bad Politicians as to irritate the Scots, by interfering in an Affair which ſo nearly concern'd both the Honor and the Intereſt of the Latter. As Politicians, therefore, do nothing by Chance, and are more eſpecially careful not to make Enemies, except for the Sake of obliging more powerful Friends, it ſeems not irrational to place this Sacrifice to the Account of the Dutch: And it is certain the Scots themſelves in their Writings on this Occaſion ſet forth, made no Scruple to do ſo. State Tracts, Temp. Guil. III. Vol. III. p. 500.

But, however this may be, ſo faſt and ſo heavy did Difficulties inſurmountable, and Diſtreſſes intolerable, fall on the new Colony, that they were ſoon reduc'd to a Neceſſity of abandoning their Project, and all the ſplendid Hopes they had built upon it: For they were deſtitute of all Things: The Spaniards were moreover preparing to diſlodge them

(d) Thus, in the State Tracts of this Reign, Vol. III. p. 100, after a Digreſſion tending to ſhew, That Princes famous for their Courage in the Field, have trembled at the Apprehenſion of a Piſtol or a Dagger, this Paſſage occurs, "Both I and others have obſerv'd a Change ever ſince Charnock's Plot: And it is the only Key we have for decyphering many Things that have happen'd ſince."

(e) When this Man was ſeiz'd, Lord Manchester was call'd upon to procure ſome Account of him from the Spies which he had in his pay at the Court of St. Germain's: And the Reply he made was in theſe Terms, "The beſt Account I can learn of Obryan, is, what he ſaid of himſelf when he firſt came over, viz. That he was always a great Acquaintance of Goodman: That they had often robb'd on the High-way: That when he receiv'd the News of his being an Evidence, he was in Cuſtody of a Meſſenger: That he was engag'd with him in the Aſſaſſination, tho' none of the others knew of it, which made him reſolve to get Goodman out of the way; ſo, employing ſome Friends, he ſoon obtain'd his Liberty: Col. Ingram came to him, and told him, That his Friend would ruin Lord Aylesbury and Lord Montgomery, if it was not prevented; and that thoſe Lords would ſpare any Money, to perſuade Goodman to go into France, or to have him carry'd away by Force. This Obryan undertook; and Ingram procur'd a Settlement of 500*l. per Ann.* and 500*l.* in Money: That with ſome Difficulty, Obryan and Ingram met Goodman at the Dog in Drury-Lane, where with fair Words, but more out of Fear, he conſented to go, and Obryan never left him afterwards till he brought him to St. Germain's, where he was well receiv'd: But having ſpent their Money, and Goodman not finding any Thing would be done for him, he was diſtaſtefully us'd; and left, when my Lord Portland came, he might go to his Houſe for Protection, he was ſecur'd, and was never heard of ſince." Turn back to p. 783.—His Lordſhip alſo adds, "He thought, That if He (Obryan) believ'd he ſhould not be ſoon releas'd, he would diſcover all he knows: And he is fully acquainted with the Proceedings of moſt Lords." His Lordſhip alſo ſays, in another Place, That King James could not help expreſſing his Reſentment in public, upon the Duke of Berwick's giving Leave to apprehend Obryan at Bruſſels. Cole's Mem. p. 55, 56.

A. D. 1699. them by Force: And all Resources of all Kinds were cut off.

It is true; Bishop Burnet says, They sent a Second and a Third Recruit of Men and Provisions: But then, as we find no Mention of any such Circumstance in the Controversies which arose immediately upon the Miscarriage, we may rely upon it, notwithstanding, That the Wants as well as the Fears of the Adventurers, compell'd them to treat with the Spaniards for an Escape, as they had treated before with the Indians for a Settlement; in consequence of which Capitulation, They relinquish'd all their Clames as well as their Hopes, and set sail for Jamaica first; and, not succeding there, for New York afterwards, to negotiate such a Supply of Provisions, as might enable them to prosecute their Voyage home; which they need not have done, if any Part of those Recruits had reach'd them.

The same Prelate also charges the Jacobites, with going into the Management (of the Project and of the Resentments excited by the Miscarriage that is to say) with a particular Heat: As if the same Conduct was criminal in them when Malcontent, that was meritorious in the Malcontents during the two former Reigns, when every Grievance was improv'd with as much Zeal and as much Artifice as the Managers of those Times could inspire: And, indeed, it is the Policy of all Parties, as well as of the Cabinet always, to take all Advantages against an Enemy.

But tho' Lord Manchester, in many of his Dispatches, touches on the Correspondence carry'd on between the Disaffected Scots and the Court of St. Germains during this Interval, he never supposes that Correspondence to be of any great Consequence, because he could never discover any Disposition in France to countenance their Designs.

And, on the other Hand, so agreable to our Court was the first Intelligence of the Scots having abandon'd their new Settlement, (which Beeston took care to forward as soon as possible to the Secretary's Office) that their Joy in a Manner overflow'd: For it was communicated immediately to all our Ministers abroad, to be by them re-communicated, as what would be altogether as agreable to our Neighbours.

The Company, in the mean Time, with the Scots Nation in general on their Side, re- A. D. 1699. solv'd to make the Government answerable for the whole of the Misadventure; and by the Dint of Clamour, either to open some way to Indemnification, or Confusion. The Resentment it occasion'd in Scotland.

With this View they set every Engine to work that their Imaginations could furnish: In September they sent up an (f) Address, setting forth the Injuries they had receiv'd, and the Mischiefs they had to apprehend from the Spaniards, and beseeching his Majesty's Favour and Protection; which being, as usual, evasively (if at all) answer'd, they follow'd it with a Petition for a Session of Parliament to be held in November, according to the last Adjournment, which was conceiv'd as follows.

" That being sensible, that as their Company had its Birth from his Majesty's most gracious Favour, so it could not subsist but by his Protection, they did, therefore, in an humble Manner, petition his Majesty's High Commissioner, and the Estates of Parliament assembled the 19th of July, 1698. Upon which the Estates of Parliament had, with great Unanimity, address'd his Majesty, That he would, in his Royal Wisdom, be pleas'd to take such Measures, as might effectually vindicate the undoubted Rights and Privileges of the said Company; and support the Credit and Interest thereof: That that Session of Parliament ending before any Returns could be had from his Majesty, Reports had been spread by the Enemies of their Settlement, as if their Company had not his Majesty's Protection: And as an Evidence hereof, that Proclamations had been issued out in his Majesty's Name, by his Governors in all the American Plantations, not only to deprive their said Company and Colony, of the friendly Assistance that might reasonably have been expected from their Neighbour-Nation, but also strictly forbidding all his Majesty's Subjects, or others, within their Plantations, to enter into any Traffic or Commerce with the said Colony: Which Proceedings they had but too much Reason to believe had been of fatal Consequence to their Company and Colony, and therefore they begg'd, his Majesty would be pleas'd to take off the Force and Effect of those Proclamations, and to signify his Royal Pleasure to the Governors of those Plantations, The Company petition for a Session of Parliament.

(f) Viz. " That upon their arrival at Darien, the Natives receiv'd them with all possible Demonstrations of Joy and Satisfaction, whom they found in open War, on all Sides, with the Spaniards, against whom they besought their Assistance; which they could by no Means comply with, by reason of the then Peace between his Majesty and the King of Spain: That, notwithstanding their just and peaceable Deportment and Inclination, and their certifying the same by Letters to the two neighbouring Governors of Panama and Carthagena, they had, to their no small Surprize, receiv'd Information, That several great and warlike Designs and Preparations were carried on by the Spaniards, against their Colony: And that, contrary to all Justice and Humanity, as well as the Treaties of Peace, between his Majesty and the Catholic King, they unjustly detain'd, and refus'd to deliver up, the Persons and Goods that were fav'd of a Ship, belonging to their Colony, call'd the Dolphin, which, by Misfortune of springing a Leak, was oblig'd to run ashore, and suffer Shipwreck near the City of Carthagena: That this had been no small Inducement for them to have improv'd the frequent Opportunities they had of taking Measures greatly disadvantageous to the Crown of Spain: Yet to avoid, as much as possible, any Thing that might look like a public Breach, until the same were laid before his Majesty, and his Royal Pleasure known therein, they had proceeded no farther, than the granting Letters of Reprisals, for the People and Effects unjustly detain'd from them: That the Indies, as well as Europe, did at that Time implore his Majesty's Protection: And that as the effectual opening the Door of Commerce to the trading World, and the more easy Access to, and Correspondence with the Ends of the Earth, hath been hitherto hidden by the divine Hand, for one of the singular Glories of his Majesty's Reign; so it was no small Satisfaction to them to be any ways concern'd in so hopeful an Accession to the Dominion and Greatness of his Majesty's, and Wealth of his People; and that they laid themselves, their Case, and that valuable Opportunity at his Royal Feet, most humbly beseeching, That as it had its Beginning, so it might continue to have its Being and Support from the happy Influences of his special Bounty and Grace."

A. D. 1699. tions, that they might be supply'd with Necessaries, in the common and ordinary way of Commerce: As also, That his Majesty might allow his Parliament to meet at the Day appointed in November following, or as soon as possibly could be, that his Majesty might have the Advice and Assistance of the great Council of that Nation, in such a weighty and general Concern."

The King's Answer. But neither had this the desir'd Effect: For his Majesty directed Lord Seafield to answer, "That his Majesty very much regretted the Loss which that Kingdom and the Company had lately sustain'd: That he would, upon all Occasions, protect and encourage the Trade of the Nation; and would also take Care, that the Subjects of that Kingdom should have the same Freedom of Trade and Commerce with the English Plantations, as ever they had formerly: And as for the Parliament, that they were adjourn'd to the 5th Day of March next ensuing; and that he would cause them to meet, when he judg'd that the Good of the Nation requir'd it."

This new Repulse was look'd upon as a new Outrage, and operated accordingly: For as Despair stept in, Phrenzy seem'd ready to follow: And every Stage of a Ferment so national, even in spite of Impotence itself, seem'd also to bespeak a national Revolt.

Besides: As in the Tract call'd, A Defence of the Scots abdicating Darien, &c. an Attempt had been made to expose the Undertaking to the Scorn and Contempt of their Neighbour-Nation, the English, they thought it not only reasonable to defend their Conduct, but even to turn the Tables on their Adversaries; and to infer, That, in case their said Neighbour-Nation was indifferent to their Oppressions, the like Oppressions might, in the End, overtake Themselves.

Accordingly, They also had recourse to the Press, and set forth a Piece under the Title of, An Enquiry into the Causes of the Scots Miscarriage at Darien, which is part Apology, and part Recrimination, and which greatly irritated the Court; as we shall be more particularly inform'd in its Place.

For tho' this Scotish Adventure has brought us so near home, we are not as yet at liberty to resume the Thread of our own Affairs. The Inquietude of England, as, about this Time, it was call'd at the Hague; or rather that ridiculous Officiousness which had prevail'd in the Court of England, ever since it had undertaken to rectify every petit Disorder which affected the remotest Corner of Europe, had led us to act as the Peace-Makers of the North, or, at least, under that Pretence, to interfere in all the selfish Squabbles, which those selfish Powers were every Year exciting, for the Sake either of snatching an Advantage from their unwary Neighbours, or of receiving as much Hush-Money from France or the Maritime Powers, as amounted to a full Equivalent: Avarice and Ambition being nearer a-kin than is commonly imagin'd; and having Rapaciousness equally dependent on both.

Cole's Mem. p. 198.

Affairs of the North. Already we have seen in the Course of our parliamentary Transactions, that King William had incurr'd a Debt of 85,000 l. Sterling to Prince of George of Denmark, by taking upon him to redeem the Island of Jonneren, and the Bailiwicks of Traustuttle and Steinhorst, held by his Highness in Mortgage for 340,000 Rix-Dollars, and surrendering them back to the Duke of Holstein-Gottorp, to whom they originally belong'd. A. D. 1697.

This was a Sacrifice to the Balance of the North, and principally to Sweden: For tho' we had held so many thousand Danes in our pay during the War, we were not upon good Terms with Denmark: And, in order to manage one of those Crowns, it was necessary to retain the other. Now, the Duke of Holstein had just marry'd a Sister of the young King of Sweden, that the Interests of the Two Powers, which were nearly the same, might be yet more closely united by a Union of the Families, and had, thereupon, been constituted Generalissimo of the Swedish Forces; which were Circumstances by no Means agreable to Denmark: For that Crown had great Pretensions on Holstein, and had asserted them with so much Warmth, that the neighbouring Princes, to prevent a Rupture, had undertaken to mediate a Compromise, if possible, between the Two Parties: The Conferences, however, only serv'd to weary their Patience instead of adjusting their Clames; and had often been interrupted by such Acts, as seem'd to shew, That an Accommodation was scarce practicable: Thus the Danes, who long'd for Tonningen, which was the only strong Place the Duke had in the said Duchy, had some Time before surpris'd and demolish'd the Forts and Lines which had been rais'd for its Security: And now, while his Danish Majesty lay on his Death-Bed, his Highness thought the Crisis favourable for rebuilding them: Accordingly, having been re-inforc'd with a strong Body of Swedes, he not only proceeded to re-edify but enlarge the former Works: And before the Danish Court could take any Measures of Prevention, his Danish Majesty dy'd in the Fifty-third Year of his Age.

The Duke of Holstein, by rebuilding certain Forts, offends the Danes.

Death of the King of Denmark.

That Resentment, however, which he had scarce Time to manifest, his Successor, who was not more proud of his new Royalty than of being thought a Man of Enterprise, did manifest at full, as soon as he had got Possession of the Throne; and, as well by the Concert he form'd with the Courts of Saxony and Brandenburgh, as by his own military Preparations, made the best Disposition in his Power, not only to defeat the Purposes of Holstein, but to be aveng'd on Sweden.

On the other Hand, Zell and Hanover took part with Sweden and Holstein, tho' under the most plausible Pretences, of acting only for the Sake of conserving the Peace.

Secure, however, That Brandenburgh, would hold them in cheque, if Matters came to an Extremity, His Danish Majesty embark'd his Troops, and resolv'd once more to level what Works the Holsteiners and Swedes had rais'd.

But here England interpos'd, and so far prevail'd, That the Duke not only gave

Interposition of England.

over

A. D. 1699. over his Works, but seem'd disposed to send back his Auxiliaries, in case the Conferences were renew'd by a certain Term: About the same Time also a sudden Thaw, (for the Winter in this Interval came on) put a Stop to the vigorous Proceedings of the Danes, who, nevertheless, would consent to no such Renewal, till all Things were reduc'd to their former State: And at the Close of the Year, the mediating Ministers, at the Head of whom was Mr. Cressett, the English Minister to the Circle of Westphalia, drew up and referr'd the following Plan to the Consideration of the Danish Court, viz.

Conditions offer'd to Denmark.

"That the Duke should put a Stop to the Works, which were to be left in their present State, to the End of the Negotiation.

That as soon as his Danish Majesty should declare, He would undertake nothing against the said Works, during the said Negotiation, the Swedish Troops should be withdrawn.

That during the said Treaty, neither Side should continue, promote, or abet any hostile Design against the other, by encamping, marching, raising Contributions, or any other Method whatsoever.

That the Treaty for concerting a plenary Project of Accommodation be re-assum'd: And in order that the Conferences may not be carry'd on ad infinitum, or the Tranquility of the North be perpetually disturb'd with the Apprehensions of a War, some limited Time be settled for bringing the said Conferences to a Conclusion.

And that the Party which, rejecting these Conditions, shall first advance with his Forces towards, or encamp on, the Territories of the Other, shall be deem'd the Aggressor, and the Guaranty of the mediating Powers shall be given to the Party aggriev'd."

The Dissentions in Poland.

Of the distracted State of Poland during this Interval, much also might be said: For as the Election of King Augustus was the Issue of Force and Corruption, hitherto Dissention and Opposition had ruffled the Current of the Reign: But a Volume would not suffice for the Particulars. His Majesty could not believe himself safe, unless surrounded with Saxon Troops: The Poles could not believe themselves free, while a foreign Army and a corrupt Faction had the Sword at their Throats. In vain, therefore, were all Treaties of Accommodation, while this Root of Dissention remain'd in the Soil: And tho' in the Diet of Pacification held this Summer, an Expedient was adopted by both Parties, viz. That his Majesty should have Two Regiments of Saxon Foot Guards, and 1200 Horse; and an equal Number of Saxon Forces in Lithuania, and a general Compromise was made, as it was given out, to the Satisfaction of both Parties, the Waves continued in Agitation tho' the Storm was laid.

Elbing seiz'd and restor'd by the Elector of Brandenburgh.

The Elector of Brandenburgh, in the same Interval moreover, seiz'd on Elbing, as a Forfeiture upon Mortgage; and for a whole Year together seem'd determin'd not to quit his Hold; but, in the End, was prevail'd upon by the Emperor (to whom he was then a Suiter for the Stile of Majesty, by the erecting Ducal Prussia into a Kingdom) to relinquish it for 300,000 Dollars, tho' he had lent 400,000 upon it, and even to accept certain Jewels belonging to the Crown of Poland as a Pledge for the Payment of that easy Composition. A. D. 1699.

King returns to England.

This was nearly the State of the Continent when King William turn'd his Back upon it, in order to make his annual Visit to England. On the 13th of October his Majesty embark'd; on the 17th he landed at Margate, and the next Day reach'd Kensington: Where he was receiv'd by his Ministers and Servants with all the outward and visible Signs of Joy and Exultation; and afterwards complimented, as usual, by the Recorder of London as the Mouth of the Magistracy and Corporation; as also by the Bishop of London in the Name of the Clergy of his Diocese.

And now the great Business before his Majesty and his Ministers, was to make the best Disposition in their Power, for the Management of the ensuing Session of Parliament: For tho' he had prorogu'd them with a Frown, he had not thought fit to punish them with a Dissolution, for fear his own Views and Interests would have been more injur'd by such an Experiment than theirs: Thus, finding the Whigs jealous and sullen, because the Complexion of the House of Commons had oblig'd him to shew some Countenance to the Tories, He gave the Lord Chamberlain's Key, which had remain'd undispos'd of ever since Lord Sunderland's Resignation, to the Duke of Shrewsbury, upon the 25th: But this Expedient would not serve: He still continued to keep bad Company: He din'd publicly at Lord Rochester's at Richmond, and, recurring to the Principle he had set out with, endeavour'd once more to find out such a Temperament in the Distribution of his Favours, as should secure him an Interest in both Parties: All which were mortal Sins in the Sight of the Whigs: While, on the other Hand, as the Tories were but half serv'd, they were but half Servants; and as Mr. Prior writes to Lord Manchester, both Tory and Whig were as implacable as ever.

D. of Shrewsbury made Lord Chamberlain.

Mr. Montagu resigns.

Mr. Montagu, in particular, (either disgusted at the Turn of the Current at Court, or foreseeing Difficulties insuperable in the Management of a House of Commons so ill suited to Court-Purposes, or because, on the Death of Sir Robert Howard, he had procur'd a Grant of the (g) Auditorship of the Exchequer, which, tho' a fine cure, was the most lucrative Employment in the Kingdom) resign'd his Seat at the Treasury-Board, and also the Chancellorship of the Exchequer; to the no small Displeasure of his Friends, who

(g) It is in the Gift of the Treasury-Board: And the King having a Design to procure it for the Earl of Portland, Mr. Montagu so manag'd, That he got a Grant of it, before his Majesty had Time to interpose.

A. D. 1699. who were of Opinion, it seems, (b) There was no absolute Necessity for his so doing.

Again: The Tories; who were now become as great Proficients in the Art of Opposition as ever the Whigs had been, and who had the adroit Dr. Davenant at their Devotion, endeavour'd to render their Adversaries as odious to the People, and as suspected at Court, as they possibly could; to which End, the Discourse on Grants and Resumptions, was at this Crisis publish'd: As also Smith's Narrative of his Correspondence with the Duke of Shrewsbury, before sufficient explan'd, in which the said Doctor was also concern'd: The Former of these, Prior, in one of his Letters, calls, a scandalous Libel on the Government: And afterwards in another, having mention'd the same Two Pieces, he exclames, "O Tempora! O Mores! Every Man says and writes what he will!" As if under a Deliverer, every Man had not a Right to Freedom; or as if there could be any Freedom where the Tongue and the Pen were not free: Nor does he forget to observe, That the Lord Chancellor and Mr. Montagu are the Persons principally levell'd at: And if he had thrown in Lord Portland too, the Book would have justify'd him. For as the whole Drift of it is to shew, That extravagant Grants were unlawful in themselves, and seldom fail'd to occasion Enquiries, Resumptions and Punishments, so the Author loses no Opportunity of introducing such Points of History, as he thought furnish'd the most exact Parallels to the Characters and Incidents of his own Times. (i) And he takes particular Care to deduce from the Impeachment of the Earl of Danby, That the old Whigs thought it a High Crime and Misdemeanor, for a Minister to procure himself Grants out of the King's Revenue: And from an Assertion of Sir Robert Cotton's, That, when the People of England desire an Act of Resumption, the Work must begin with impeaching of Ministers.

A. D. 1699.

Davenant's Discourse of Grants and Resumptions set forth.

Such were the Doctrines address'd to the People: Such were the Humours fluctuating in the Cabinet: And as to the State of the Royal Family, tho' Prince George went down to Margate to receive the King at his landing, and had accompany'd him to Kensington (where the Princess and the Duke of Gloucester were among the Foremost to pay their

---

(b) Thus Lord Manchester (the Head of the Montagu's, writing to the Lord Chancellor Somers on this Incident) takes occasion to say, "Mr. Montagu's leaving the Treasury, I do own, did very much surprise me: And the more, since I find it your Lordship's Opinion, That there was not that absolute Necessity for it. I remember well what was thought of my Lord Orford's quitting the Admiralty, and I should be sorry, He should fall under the same Censure. It is certain it will be a great Loss to me in particular; tho' if the Public and the rest of my Friends do not suffer, I shall be very easy. I am apt to think he had a great many Enemies out of Envy, &c. And he might imagine, They would come to a Vote, That his Two Places are inconsistent, which was his Interest to avoid. I can only say, your Lordship is certainly the best Judge, and I could have wish'd He had took your Advice."

The Chancellor's Letter, which this is a Reply to, Mr. Cole has not thought fit to publish: And it is to be fear'd, That the other Retrenchments which he talks of in his Introduction, have been made with as little Reason and Judgment.

(i) The first great Person (says He, for Example) whom we find question'd since the Norman Government, was Ranulphus Bishop of Durham, who bore the Office of what we now call Lord Treasurer of England, in the Time of William Rufus: This Man had been the principal Instrument of the Profusion, and of what is its Consequence, those Extortions that disgrac'd the Reign of Rufus: Of whose Times William of Malmsbury speaking says, None were then rich but such as dealt with the Exchequer, Nullus Dives, nisi Nummularius. This wicked Minister was brought to Punishment by Henry I. who cast him into Prison, and loaded him with Chains. Matthew Paris says, De Communi Consilio Gentis Anglorum petiit sum Rex in quibusdam. Malmsbury gives him this Character. Radulphus Clericus ex infimo genere hominum, Linguæ & Affabilitate perversus ad summum; exsultator Divitum, Exterminator pauperum, Conjector alienarum Hereditatum. Inexhausti Cauillidevi, & cum variis, tum rebus immodicus, nec aliorum curarei nisi dummodo cumulaterei Dominum. It seems he was a little, insolent Fellow, who by his fluent Tongue and cringing at Court, had got Power enough to do much Hurt in England: A mischievous Tool against the Publick, as well as an Oppressor of private Men: Subtle to invent Wickedness, and bold to put it in Execution; and one who would stick at nothing to raise himself. Matthew Paris speaking of him says he was, Homo perversus, & ad omne scelus paratus, quem Rex constituerat Procuratorem suum in Regno ut exulceret, deformaret, vexaret & despoliaret, & omnia nummum bona ad Fisci Commodum congregaret. We have thus painted out this Statesman in the Colours as he is represented by those two venerable Writers: And he to much resembles several bad Ministers, who, in the Ages since, have succeed both to his Post and Power, that one would think they had chosen to take them for their Pattern.

In the 5th of Edward II. Pierre de Gaveston was accus'd in Parliament for having given the King ill Counsel, and for having cheated the King of his Treasure, and sent it beyond Sea, and for having estrang'd the King's Heart from his People, so as he slighted their Councils, and for having remov'd all faithful Ministers, and plac'd only his own Creatures or Foreigners about the King, and for having caus'd the King to grant Lands, Tenements, and Offices to himself and his Heirs, and to divers other People, (insomuch that by his Wealth he was become dangerous) to the great Damage and Injury of the King and his Crown: For which he was banish'd the Realm, so as if he return'd, he should be treated as an Enemy to the King, Kingdom and People. But take the Words of the Record, because 'tis very curious. (Here he relates the Record, and then proceeds thus.)

Pierre Gaveston at first was a Man only in the King's Pleasures; but as weak Princes often remove Men from their Pleasures into their Business, so Gaveston became presently a Minister of State: For the Records shew, that he was Guardian and Lieutenant of the Kingdom in the King's Absence, with very immoderate Powers, and afterwards he was constituted Lieutenant of Ireland: But the extravagant Honours and Favours conferr'd upon him, and the Lands he got from the King, drew, as all our Historians witness, the Indignation of the Parliament upon him. Tho. Walsingham says, that the Barons Librare studiose; Periculo, instrusant, quod evocavit Petrus ejus non potest Pax in Regno, nec Rex abundare Thesauro. And to they never rested till he was banish'd the Kingdom.

In the same Parliament Henry de Beaumont was likewise accus'd, for that to the Damage and Dishonour of the King, he had receiv'd the Kingdom of Man, which the Lords whom the King had consented should be of his standing Council, thought fit should remain to the Crown; and for that he had procur'd from the King to himself other Rents, Lands, Franchises and Offices; and for that he had procur'd for others the Grants of Lands, Rents, Tenements, Franchises and Offices; and for that he had given evil Counsel to the King contrary to his Oath: For all which the Judgment upon him was, That he should be outed the King's Council for ever, and not come near the King's Person, unless he were summon'd to Parliament, or call'd upon to attend the King in his Wars: Or unless it were by common Assent of Archbishops, Bishops, Earls and Barons, in full Parliament; and that all his other Lands should be seis'd into the King's Hands until the King should be satisfy'd, the full Value of what he had receiv'd from those Lands so granted to him by the King.

It seems likewise, that in this Reign the Ladies were begging and intriguing at Court: For the Lady Foley was accus'd for having prevail'd upon the King to give Sir Henry Beaumont, her Brother, and to others, Lands, Franchises and Offices, to the Damage and Dishonour of the King; for which she was order'd to repair to her own House, without ever returning to Court to make flay there.

In the Reign of Edward VI. there was one John de Warnetary, who was a kind of Surintendant des Finances, or what we call Commissioner of the Treasury, whom Heuring describes to be a little, insolent Fellow; who from a low Degree, and without any great Merit of his own, and only by the King's Favour, was got into great Employments, where giving Offence by his Pride and Arrogance, the great ones at last fell upon him, and he was accus'd, condemn'd, and hang'd.

A. D. 1699. their Duty to him) in his Majesty's own Coach, these Appearances were but Appearances: The King observ'd the same Coldness in his Manner towards them as formerly; and seldom lost any Opportunity of shewing how wide the Distance was between the first Step of the Throne, and the Throne in itself: Of which the Duchess of Marlborough has furnish'd us with the following Instance.

The King refuses to see the P. of Denmark on his Birth-day in Mourning.

"The King's Birth-Day coming just after the News of the King of Denmark's Death, the Prince, who had a great Tenderness for his Brother, was extremely uneasy at the Thought of putting on Colours so soon: And the Princess, knowing, that it had been the Custom in former Reigns, to wait upon the King, on a Birth-Day, without colour'd Clothes, when the Mourning was very deep, found Means to get my Lord Albemarle to ask the King's Leave, that the Prince might be admitted, is his Mourning, to wish his Majesty Joy: The Answer was, That the King would not see him, unless he came in Colours; and the Prince was persuaded to comply, tho' he did it with great Uneasiness."

And yet his Majesty, in his Speech from the Throne at the Opening of the Session, affected to be thought a Solicitor with the Public in Behalf of the Prince: Of which Circumstance her Grace taking no Notice, we must presume, her Opinion was, That the Motive of his Majesty's Plea was not to obtain a Favor for the Prince of Denmark, but to remove a Burden from his own Shoulders.

On the 16th of November, however, the Session was open'd, and the Speech made, as follows.

His Speech in Parliament.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

I hope you will not think I have call'd you out of your Countries too soon, if you consider, that our common Security requires a further Provision should be made, for the Safety of the Kingdom by Sea and Land, before we are at the End of what was granted for that Purpose last Session: And when you enter upon this Business, I believe you will think it necessary to take Care of the Repairs of the Ships, and of the Fortifications; without which our Fleet cannot be safe when it is in Harbour.

I cannot omit to put you in Mind of another Matter, in which so great a Number of my Subjects is concern'd, and wherein the Honour of the Kingdom, and the Faith of Parliaments is so far engag'd, that our future Security seems to depend upon it; I mean, the making good the Deficiencies of the Funds, and the discharging the Debts contracted by reason of the War.

And till we may be so happy as to see the public Debts paid, I shall hope that no Session will end, without something done towards lessening them. While I am speaking to you on this Head, I think myself oblig'd to mention, with a particular Concern, a Debt which is owing to the Prince of Denmark, (for Hanoverian and Steinhorst, that is to say) the State whereof I have ordered to be laid before you. A. D. 1699.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

These Things are of such Importance, that I must earnestly recommend them to your Consideration, and desire you to provide the necessary Supplies.

My Lords and Gentlemen.

There is nothing I could more rejoice in, than that I were not under the Necessity of so often asking Aids of my People; but as the Reason of it is evident, because the Funds formerly applied to defray the Public Expence, are now anticipated for Payment of the Debts of the Kingdom; so it is my Satisfaction, that you all see that nothing of what is demanded, is for any personal use of mine: And I do faithfully assure you, That no Part of what is given, shall be diverted from any Purpose for which it is design'd.

I believe the Nation is already sensible of the good Effects of Peace, by the manifest Increase of Trade, which I shall make it my Business to encourage by all Means in my Power; probably it might receive an Advantage, if some good Bill were prepar'd for the more effectual preventing and punishing unlawful and clandestine Trading, which does not only tend to defraud the Public, but prejudice the fair Merchant, and discourage our own Manufactures.

The Increase of the Poor is become a Burthen to the Kingdom; and their loose and idle Life, does, in some Measure, contribute to that Depravation of Manners, which is complained of, (I fear with too much Reason:) Whether the Ground of this Evil be from Defects in the Laws already made, or in the Execution of them, deserves your Consideration: As it is an indispensable Duty, that the Poor, who are not able to help themselves, should be maintain'd; so I cannot but think it extremely desireable, that such as are able and willing, should not want Employment; and such as are obstinate and unwilling, should be compell'd to Labour.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I have a full Assurance of the good Affections of my People, which I shall endeavour to preserve by a constant Care of their just Rights and Liberties, by maintaining the establish'd Religion, by seeing the Course of Justice kept steady and equal, by countenancing Virtue, and discouraging Vice, and by declining no Difficulties or Dangers, where their Welfare and Prosperity may be concern'd: These are my Resolutions; and I am persuaded that you are come together with Purposes on your Part suitable to those on mine: Since then our Aims are only for the general Good, let us act with Confidence in one another; which will not fail, by God's Blessing, to make me a happy King, and you a great and flourishing People."

The ill Effects of it.

And now it appear'd, That, in playing the Trimmer between the Two Parties, the King had disoblig'd the Whigs, without gaining the Tories: For, tho' he no longer insisted on the old Topick of a Land-Army,

A. D. 1699 the Dryneſs and Sullenneſs of this Speech, put the Craftſmen of the Malcontents in Mind of the Diſpleaſure expreſs'd in the laſt: And from the Impreſſions made on their Followers by Both, they made no doubt to excite ſuch a Ferment, as ſhould laſt from the Beginning of the Seſſion to the End. On the other Hand, Montagu's Reſignation, and the Silence he began to obſerve in the Houſe of Commons thereupon, had both disjointed and diſorder'd the Courtiers: They ſcarce knew what Voice they were to follow, or on whom they were to rely for their Reward: Mr. Secretary Vernon, and Smith the Chancellor of the Exchequer, were, in Virtue of their ſeveral Offices, to be eſteem'd their Leaders: But the Laſt, tho' poſſeſs'd of a miniſterial Office, was not of the Miniſtry; and the Firſt was more eminent for being a Drudge in his Office, than for his Aſcendency either in the Cabinet or the Houſe: Lord Ranelegh, the Pay-Maſter, was too obnoxious to be an Undertaker; and the Secretary at War (Blathwaite) was an Officer ſo newly inſtituted, and ſo little conſider'd, that he could ſcarce interfere in the Direction, without drawing the Office itſelf into queſtion.

When, therefore, ſuch was the Diſpoſition on one Hand, and ſuch the Diſtractions on the other, Turbulence, Miſconduct, and mutual Diſſatisfaction were but unavoidable Conſequences.

Accordingly; when the Speech was taken into Conſideration by the Commons, ſuch was the Prevalence of Paſſion and ill Humor, that the worſt Interpretation imaginable was put on the Exhortation: Let us act with Confidence in one another: And the worſt Uſe imaginable was made of it; as is evident by the following Remonſtrance, which was preſented to the Throne in the Name of an Addreſs, viz.

A Remonſtrance of the Commons in the Name of an Addreſs.

"Moſt gracious Sovereign,

We your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Commons in Parliament aſſembled, being highly ſenſible, That nothing is more neceſſary for the Peace and Welfare of this Kingdom, the quieting the Minds of your People, and diſappointing the Deſigns of your Enemies, than a mutual and entire Confidence between your Majeſty and your Parliament, do eſteem it our greateſt Misfortune, That, after having ſo amply provided for the Security of your Majeſty and your Government, both by Sea and Land, any Jealouſy or Diſtruſt hath been rais'd, of our Duty and Affections to your ſacred Majeſty and your People; and beg Leave humbly to repreſent to your Majeſty, That it will greatly conduce to the continuing and eſtabliſhing an entire Confidence between your Majeſty and your Parliament, that you would be pleas'd to ſhew Marks of your high Diſpleaſure towards all ſuch Perſons who have, or ſhall preſume to miſrepreſent their Proceedings to your Majeſty.

And your Commons (having likewiſe a due Senſe of the great Care and Concern, your Majeſty has always expreſs'd, for preventing and maintaining the Religion, Rights, and Liberties of your People, in Defence of which your Majeſty hath ſo often expos'd your Royal Perſon) will uſe their utmoſt Care and Endeavours, to prevent and diſcourage all falſe Rumours and Reports, reflecting upon your Majeſty and your Government, whereby to create any Miſunderſtandings between you and your Subjects."

A. D. 1699

Thus, inſtead of Acknowledgments and Thankſgivings, his Majeſty was ſaluted with Complaints and Expoſtulations: But tho' he was ſufficiently gall'd, he choſe rather to ſoften the Reſentments of his Subjects, than to gratify his own; as appears by the following mild and palliative Anſwer.

The King's moderate Anſwer.

"Gentlemen,

My Parliaments have done ſo great Things for me, and I have, upon all proper Occaſions, expreſs'd ſo great a Senſe of their Kindneſs, and my Opinion has been ſo often declar'd, That the Happineſs of an Engliſh King, depends upon an entire good Correſpondence between him and his Parliament, that it cannot ſeem ſtrange for me to aſſure you, That no Perſons have ever yet dared to go about to miſrepreſent to me the Proceedings of either Houſe: Had I found any ſuch, they would have immediately felt the higheſt Marks of my Diſpleaſure: It is a Juſtice I owe not only to my Parliaments, but to every one of my Subjects, to judge of them by their Actions: And this Rule I will ſteadily purſue. If any ſhall hereafter attempt to put me on other Methods, by Calumnies or Miſrepreſentations, they will not only fail of Succeſs, but ſhall be look'd upon, and treated by me as my worſt Enemies.

Gentlemen,

I am pleas'd to ſee by your Addreſs, that you have the ſame Thoughts of the great Advantages which will enſue to the Kingdom, from our mutual Confidence, as I expreſs'd to both Houſes at the Opening of the Seſſion: I take very kindly the Aſſurance you give me, of uſing your utmoſt Care and Endeavour to prevent and diſcourage all falſe Rumours and Reports reflecting upon me and my Government: And I faithfully promiſe you, That no Actions of mine ſhall give a juſt Ground for any Miſunderſtanding between me and my people."

Diſapproves Proceedings of the Malcontents.

Nothing leſs, however, would ſatisfy Thoſe who had now got the Lead, but a Committee of the whole Houſe upon the State of the Nation; in order to render the Court odious, it is to be ſear'd, rather than to render their Fellow-Subjects happy: For Popularity may be abus'd as well as Power; and a Community may ſuffer as much from Faction and Licentiouſneſs, as from Corruption and Oppreſſion.

But firſt, They reſolv'd to make their Court to the trading Part of the Kingdom, at the Expence of the Court on one Hand, and to the Malcontent-Clergy and their Followers on the other: The Latter Effort was made in the Houſe of Lords, the Former in the Houſe of Commons: And Both, for the more Eclat, on the ſame Day. The ſeveral Occaſions Theſe.

During the War, the Inhabitants of the Northern

A. D. 1699. In the Case of Kidd the Pirate.

Northern Colonies had made haste to grow rich, not only by carrying on every Kind of illicit Trade, but also by Piracy, and abetting of Pirates: Of these Pirates, which equally infested both the East and West-Indies, many were suppos'd to be immensely rich: And hence a Project was entertain'd of suppressing them, under the Pretence of public Service, but in truth for the Sake of the Spoil: Those who were too tender-conscienced to commence Pirates in the first Instance, finding no Repugnance to the sharing among themselves That which had been unjustly taken from Others.

[State Trials. Temp. Guil. III. Vol. III. p. 232, &c.]

In the Year 1695, the Earl of Bellomont having been appointed Governor of New-York, as also of New-England, one Levingstone, of New-York, not only recommended the said Project to him, but also recommended one Kidd, the Master of a Sloop, who undertook to carry it into Execution, provided he was furnish'd with a good Ship of about 30 Guns and 150 Men: And so captivating did it appear to the Earl, that he communicated it to the King himself, who was also induc'd to adopt it, and to call upon his Admiralty to do the same: But They, or rather the first Commissioner, having taken it into consideration, and finding the private Purposes in view, could not be serv'd without exciting much Clamour, in case the Expence of the Adventure was furnish'd out of the public Stock, affected to dismiss the Proposal, as impracticable, for want of Seamen, and other Requisites for so long and hazardous a Voyage.

But, in Truth, it was dropt only to be resum'd and prosecuted after another Method: For a Computation having been made, That 6000*l.* would be sufficient for the Undertaking, the King himself offer'd to furnish half the Money, and the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Shrewsbury, the Lords Romney, Oxford, Bellomont, one Sir Edward Harrison, Levingstone and Kidd, were to furnish the rest. But so it happen'd, that his Majesty reserv'd to himself a Tenth of the Profits, and yet made no Advance of Money; the whole of which were supply'd by the Other Adventurers.

[Burnet.]

The Ship was call'd, The Adventure Gally, Kidd had the Command, and was furnish'd with Two Commissions; one from the Admiralty dated January 26, 1695, empowering him to act against the French, and the other under the Great Seal, authorising him to make war on certain Pirates therein nam'd, and all other Pirates infesting the Coast of America, and other Seas.

The Adventurers were also favour'd with a Warrant or Grant from the Treasury, of all such Captures as they should make, without Reserve; the Commissioners thinking it more prudent for his Majesty to covenant with the Owners for his Tenth, than to avow any specific Clame in the said Warrant on his own Behalf.

Under these Sanctions the Ship set sail from Plymouth in April 1696: But, instead of falling in quest of Pirates on the American Coasts, Kidd, after touching at New-York, shap'd his Course for the East-Indies, where he turn'd Pirate himself, and in particular took a rich Ship call'd the Quedah-Merchant; of which the old East-India Company complain'd to the Lords Justices in 1698: For tho' the said Ship was commanded by an Englishman, having two Dutch Mates and a French Gunner, the belong'd to the Moors; and they affected to apprehend the Resentment of the Grand Mogul would fall upon them: Avery, who had run away with a Privateer call'd the King Charles the Second, and other Pirates having before committed great Depredations in those Seas.

A. D. 1699.

After this Exploit, Kidd having divided the Booty with his Men, Ninety of whom then left him and join'd other Adventurers in the same way, he burn'd his own Ship, and set sail in his Prize for the West-Indies, where he purchas'd a Sloop, and, having put a sufficient Freight on board her, left his said Prize in the West-Indies, with about seventeen or eighteen Men on board, (there to remane till they should hear farther from him) and made for the Continent, where he arriv'd early in the Summer of the current Year: Such being his Confidence, that he put into the Sound of New-York; and, having landed Goods in several Places there, proceed to Rhode-Island, from whence he sent one Emmet to his Lordship at Boston, in order to make his Peace: On the one Hand undertaking to prove, That he had done nothing but what was justifiable; and on the other signifying, That he had a Cargo with him, to the real Value of 10,000*l.*

His Lordship's Conduct on this Occasion was, first, to impart the Message he had receiv'd to the Council of the Province; and then, having procur'd their Approbation, to assure Kidd by Letter of his Protection, in case he made his Innocence apparent, agreable to what Emmet had advanc'd in his Behalf; which Letter had the desir'd Effect: For Kidd ventur'd into Boston on the good Faith of it; and, for a while, was suffer'd to be at large, in hopes of getting out of him where the great Ship lay: But giving frivolous or fraudulent Answers to the Questions put to him concerning her, embezzling the Cargo in order to bribe such as were ableſt to serve him; and Levingstone, in the same Interval, arriving from New-York, and making a peremptory Demand of the Bond which he had given for Kidd's Fidelity to his Owners, it was thought proper to make him a close Prisoner, together with several of his Crew, and to seize the Sloop and Cargo; which was done accordingly, June the 6th; which was also the Sixth Day after his Landing.

On the 8th of July his Lordship sent an Account of the whole Proceeding to the Secretary of State and the Lords of Trade, desiring, That the Prisoners might be sent for home, in order to their Trials; there being no Law in New-England for punishing Piracy with Death; and the whole Colony rather inclining to favour them, as being, in those Days, little better than Accomplices; if Receivers of stolen Goods deserve that Name.

What

A. D. 1699. What follow'd upon this in England, was an Order of Regency to the Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, directing them to diſpatch a Ship to Boſton, to bring home the ſaid Priſoners, together with their Effects; and they did diſpatch the Rochester accordingly: But, unfortunately, ſhe was ſo unfit for ſuch a Voyage, that, after beating the Seas for ſome Time, in tempeſtuous Weather, ſhe was forc'd to return back to Plymouth, which furniſh'd the Envious and Malicious with Colours and Pretences, That, as the whole Adventure was a piratical Job, ſo the Return of the Rochester was a colluſive Practice to cover it.

Such was the State of this Affair at the Meeting of the Parliament; with this farther Circumſtance, That the Old Eaſt-India Company, which was ſo highly exaſperated againſt the Government on Account of the Injury they had ſuſtain'd by the Eſtabliſhment of the New, and which had Mr. How for their ſtanding Advocate in the Houſe of Commons, thought themſelves particularly intereſted in what follow'd; not only becauſe the Capture was made in the Indian Seas, and the Apprehenſions they affected to entertain on that and the like Accounts, but alſo becauſe a Petition of Theirs to the Lords of the Admiralty to take Pirates in the ſaid Seas, and to hold Courts of Admiralty to try and condemn them, had been ſet aſide as irregular, and not fit to be granted.

And thus the Reſentments of particular Men, as well as a general Diſpoſition to think diſadvantageouſly of thoſe in Power, help'd to render an Incident, otherwiſe inconſiderable enough, one of the great Enflammatories of the Times.

Who brought it into the Houſe of Commons, is not ſpecify'd: But we are told it was taken up by Surprize (December 6) when another Matter was expected: And the Queſtions fram'd upon it, and upon which the Debate of that Day turn'd, was conceiv'd in the following Terms, to wit, "That the Letters-Patent granted to the Earl of Bellomont and Others of Pirates Goods, were diſhonorable to the King, againſt the Law of Nations, contrary to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, invaſive of Property, and deſtructive of Trade and Commerce."

Much was ſaid both ſhrewdly and bitterly in ſupport of it: But all was ſolidly refuted; as may be ſeen at large in the Account of the Proceedings in relation to Captain Kidd, ſtill extant in the State-Tracts of this Reign: For having aggravated their Charge, to the End that it might ring the louder, they were ſo much leſs able to verify any Part of it: Whereas, if they had proceded more conſcientiouſly, they had proceded more ſucceſsfully: And, in proving That to be a little, mean, ſordid Device to put ſome Money into the Pockets of the King and his Courtiers, which ought to have been a Royal Undertaking for the Honor of the Crown and the Security of the Subject, they would have expos'd the Matter of Fact in its true Colours, and ſo far would have had the Public on their Sides: Such black Conſtructions, as B. Burnet rightly obſerves of this Tranſaction, (tho' ſo much a Party-Man, that he was rarely, if ever, free from Party-Prejudice) are Men who are engag'd in Parties apt to make of the Actions of Thoſe whom they intend to diſgrace! A. D. 1699.

The Event of the Debate was not, however, ſuitable to the Violence with which it was carried on. The Chancellor's Character for Wiſdom and Integrity had as yet ſuch Weight with the Houſe, or at leaſt with the Aſſembly of that Day, that no Imputation would ſtick: And upon the Iſſue the Motion was rejected; tho', as we ſhall find by the Sequel, the Clamor was not let fall. The Motion form'd upon it rejected.

The other Point agitated the ſame Day in the Houſe of Lords, regarded Dr. Watſon, who had been promoted to the Biſhopric of St. David's, according to the Prelate juſt quoted, for a valuable Conſideration. It was believ'd, ſays his Lordſhip, That he gave Money for his Advancement; and that in order to the reimburſing himſelf, he had ſold moſt of the ſpiritual Preferments in his Gift. In ſhort, he had been accus'd of Simony: And after a ſolemn Hearing before the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, aſſiſted by Six other Biſhops, on the 3d of Auguſt 1699, was depriv'd; but pleaded his Privilege: And thus the Matter came before the Lords; who could not be prevail'd upon by all the Oratory of his Friends to countenance his Appeal; or to conſider him any longer as a Peer, after he ceas'd to be a Biſhop. The Caſe of the Biſhop of St. David's.

He had alſo Recourſe to the Court of Delegates; but They confirm'd the Archbiſhop's Sentence: And thus he remain'd a Convict of Simony, according to the Repreſentations of one Party; and a Sacrifice on Pretence of Simony, according to the Repreſentations of the Other: For tho' (k) Sixty-five Witneſſes appear'd againſt him at his Trial, and a Variety of Facts were alledg'd in Support of the Charge, the Jacobites never allow'd the Proofs to be ſufficient, or the Trial authentic.

But then, however bad the Man was, (and one of his Judges (Burnet) pronounces, He was one of the Worſt he ever knew in Holy Orders) or however ſcandalous his Deportment was, it may be reaſonably queſtion'd, whether in an Age ſo factious and ſo licentious as That notoriouſly was, he would ever have been proſecuted for being corrupt, if he had not alſo been diſaffected. For the Maxim of Lord Keeper North's, To puniſh obnoxious Men by any Law that could be made to reach them, was not unknown to the Court of King William, tho' it was not ſo often put in practice by his Miniſters, as by Thoſe of King Charles.

"The

(k) See a Summary of the Proceedings againſt him, publiſh'd by A. Baldwin, 1701.

A. D. 1697. Motion to remove Bishop Burnet from the Duke of Gloucester, over-rul'd.

"The next Attempt (says Bishop Burnet, speaking of the Proceedings of the House of Commons) was to turn me out from the Trust of educating the Duke of Gloucester: Some objected my being a Scotchman: Others remember'd the Book that was order'd to be burn'd: (His pastoral Letter which maintain'd, That the King, had a Right to the Throne, by his Conquest over King James) So they press'd an Address to the King for removing me from that Post: But This was likewise lost by the same Majority that had carry'd the former Vote."

And, surely, This was one of the lowest Interludes that was ever play'd by a Party: For, as he had not sought the Employment, but, on the contrary, had declin'd it, so it ought to be remember'd to his Honor, that when he was, in a Manner, forc'd to accept it, he would have resign'd his Bishopric, under an Apprehension, That his Duty as a Tutor to a Prince of such Expectations, would interfere with his Duty as a Pastor: Nor would he accept it at all, except under an express Proviso, That the Duke should reside all the Summer at Windsor, which was in the Diocese of Sarum, and that he should be allow'd Ten Weeks in every Year, to visit the other Parts of it: And whereas the Profits accruing to him from this new Employment amounted to about 1500 l. per Ann. his private Charities from that Time amounted annually to the like Sum: Which seem'd to indicate, That he look'd on this new Promotion as a Deodand; and that he made it a Point of Conscience to distribute the Product of it accordingly: A Circumstance which would have greatly rais'd his Character, if he had not us'd all possible Caution to conceal it; that the Purity of his Intentions might not be debas'd by any Mixture of vain Glory.

Proceedings of the Commissioners for inspecting the Irish Forfeitures.

But the Point on which the Party had laid the greatest Stress, and which the Community, as a Community seem'd to be most concern'd in, was the Result of the Enquiry made by the Parliament-Commissioners into the Irish Forfeitures, and the Distribution which the Court had made of them, in order to a Resumption: But as that Distribution had been made wantonly and corruptly, so the Enquiry, and the Proceedings grafted upon it, were altogether as factious and malevolent.

Of these Commissioners, which were Seven in all, and all presum'd to be Anti-Courtiers, Four were dispos'd to put every Circumstance to the Torture, with a View to enflame the Report, and Three were for the Court, under the Pretence of Candor and Moderation. The Four first were Annesley, Trenchard, Hamilton, and Langford; the Three last, the Earl of Drogheda, (l) Sir Francis Brewster, and Sir Richard Levins.

In what particular Way, or thro' what particular Channel These were influenc'd, does not appear; but who Those corresponded with, and that They were directed by the Faction they left behind, will be made apparent in the Sequel. A. D. 1699.

Some Difference of Opinion had occasionally broke out in the Course of their Transactions, and the Four had as often endeavour'd, tho' in vain, to give the same Bias to the Three, which they had taken Themselves. All the Seven had sign'd the several Books which contain'd the Particulars of their Enquiry: But when the Secretary had drew up the Report or Abridgment of the Whole which was to be made to Parliament, agreable to the Instructions he had receiv'd from the Four as the Majority, the Minority not only disagreed to Eight several Articles of it, but enter'd a Sort of Protest against them; and moreover join'd in an Appeal to each House of Parliament, which they address'd to the Lord Chancellor, and the Speaker of the House of Commons severally; and in which They alledg'd, after a proper Preamble, 1st, That they gave a general Consent, that the Secretary of the Commission should draw up the said Report, but no particular Directions concerning the same: 2dly, That, when the Draught was produc'd, they excepted to several of the many Paragraphs contain'd in it, Some for not being within the Power given by the Act; and Others as not warranted by Deposition or other Proofs: And then proceeded in the very Words that follow, "And after many Debates with the other Commissioners, we, desiring to comply with them as much as possible, agreed to Eighty-two Paragraphs of the Report, containing more than all that related to the Books, and excepted only to about Eight Paragraphs, tho' we were not fully satisfy'd of several of These which we had pass'd, in the Manner they were express'd: And when in these said Matters our Reasons could not prevail, but that they over-rul'd us by a Pretence of a Majority of Four against Three; and having labour'd to influence us by private Letters, Instructions and Directions which they affirm'd they had receiv'd from several Members of the honorable House of Commons, we did not insist farther, on having these Eight Paragraphs left out of the Report: But when the Report, which was engross'd, came to be sign'd on Tuesday the 28th Instant, (November) as we were content the other Four should sign and seal the same as they thought fit, so we desir'd to sign and seal the same, as an Approbation of all contain'd therein, except these Paragraphs; and accordingly on that Part thereof, address'd to the House of Commons, one of us did write Words to the Effect following, "We agree to the above Report, except the 8th, 10th, 25th, 32d, 66th, 78th, 79th Paragraphs, and the Paragraph wherein the private Estate of the late Duke of York is included; to which we cannot agree for Reasons which we will be ready to lay before your Honours, when you

A Session amongst them.

Three dissent and appeal to Parliament.

(l) He was one of Those, who in 1692, set forth the Mal-Administration of the Irish Affairs at the Bar of the House of Commons. See P. 403.

A. D. 1699. you are pleas'd to require them from us:" And, afterwards, we ſign'd and ſeal'd the ſame, praying the other Commiſſioners to ſign and ſeal as they thought fit; and offering to ſign and ſeal the other Part of the Report addreſs'd to his Majeſty and the Houſe of Peers: But they then inſtantly pretending to make an Order againſt what we did, refus'd either to ſign with us, or in a Space left for them above our writing, and haſtily took away the other two Parts of the Report which we had offer'd to perfect, and alſo took from us that Part which we had already perfected. We then adjourn'd by Conſent till Four in the Afternoon this Day, (the 29th) And, underſtanding, That they had pretended to make an Order for cancelling the Report which we had ſign'd and ſeal'd; and, ſeeing at the Time of our Meeting, That moſt of the Papers belonging to our Commiſſion were taken away, we, with all Speed, deliver'd to them a Memorial under our Hands and Seals, offering thereby to ſign and ſeal the other two Parts of the Report, in the Manner we had done the Former; and to leave in them a greater Space for the other Commiſſioners to ſign and ſeal above us; and, if deſir'd, to amend even That which was done before, praying them, not to cancel what we had perfected. We alſo put them in Mind, That we had often made requeſt to them, to compare the original Depoſitions which were taken before us, and were much blotted and interlin'd, and capable of great Alterations, with the Entries thereof in our Books; and that we might all of us ſign and ſeal the ſaid Entries: And we alſo pray'd them to give us Copies of thoſe Paragraphs to which we had agreed, and, more eſpecially, Thoſe to which we diſſented, that we might be the better able to repreſent to the moſt Honorable the Houſe of Peers the Reaſons of our Diſagreement to thoſe Paragraphs. But finding no Succeſs, and the other Commiſſioners owning to us, That they had after our Adjournment the laſt Night, and after we were gone away, cut off that Leaf of the Report on which we had written our Conſent, and put our Hands and Seals; and They inſiſting, that, unleſs we would declare our Conſent to all the Paragraphs, we ſhould declare it to none: And refuſing abſolutely to let us ſign the ſaid Report in any Manner that might expreſs our Diſagreement to any Part of it, we think ourſelves under a Neceſſity of applying to your Lordſhips, to lay this Matter before the moſt Honorable Houſe of Peers, that we may have an Opportunity to ſhew, that we have join'd in the Execution of all the Matters requir'd of us by the ſaid Act; and likewiſe the Reaſons why, being upon our Oaths, we could not agree to thoſe Paragraphs we excepted to."

Thus ſtood the Affair when the Commiſſioners ſet out for England with their Report, which was preſented by the Four who prepar'd it, to the Houſe of Commons the 15th of December following, in which they repreſented, "That they had met with great Difficulties in their Enquiry, which were occaſion'd chiefly by the Backwardneſs of the People of Ireland to give Information, out of fear of the Grantees, whoſe Diſpleaſure in that Kingdom was not eaſily borne; and by Reports induſtriouſly ſpread and believ'd, that their Enquiry would come to nothing: That nevertheleſs, it appear'd to them, That the Perſons outlaw'd in England, ſince the 13th of February, 1688, on account of the late Rebellion, amounted in Number to Fifty-ſeven, and in Ireland, to 3921. That all the Lands in the ſeveral Counties in Ireland belonging to the forfeited Perſons, as far as they could reckon, made 1,060,792 Acres, worth per Annum 211,623*l.* which by computation of ſix Years Purchaſe for a Life, and thirteen Years for the Inheritance, came to the full Value of 2,685,138*l.* That ſome of thoſe Lands had been reſtor'd to the old Proprietors, by Virtue of the Articles of Limerick and Galloway, and by his Majeſty's Favour, and by Reverſal of Outlawries, and royal Pardons, obtain'd chiefly by Gratifications to ſuch Perſons as had abus'd his Majeſty's Royal Bounty and Compaſſion: And that beſides theſe Reſtitutions, which they thought to be corruptly procur'd, there were Seventy-ſix Grants and Cuſtodiums, under the Great Seal of Ireland, of which they made a Recital: As, to the Lord Romney three Grants now in being, containing 49,517 Acres; to the Earl of Albemarle in two Grants 108,633 Acres in Poſſeſſion and Reverſion; to William Bentinck, Eſq; Lord Woodſtock, 135,820 Acres of Land; to the Earl of Athlone two Grants containing 26,480 Acres; to the Earl of Galloway one Grant of 36,148 Acres, &c. That, indeed, the Eſtates ſo mention'd, did not yield ſo much to the Grantees as they were valu'd at; becauſe as moſt of them had abus'd his Majeſty in the real Value of their Eſtates, ſo their Agents had impos'd on them, and had either ſold or let the greateſt Part of thoſe Lands at an under Value: But that, after all Deductions and Allowances, there yet remain'd 1,699,343*l.* 14*s.* which they lay before the Commons as the groſs Value of the Eſtates forfeited ſince the 13th Day of February, and not reſtor'd."

Now, this laſt was one of the Paragraphs excepted to by the three Diſſenters, and, therefore, ought to be given, together with the reſt, in their own Words, which were as follow, viz.

Par. 8. "Particularly, the Books of the Commiſſioners of the Revenue relating to the Forfeitures, are ſo ill and confuſedly kept, as much delay'd us in our Proceedings: But This we do not attribute ſo much to the Commiſſioners of the Revenue, as the Shifting this Enquiry from one Commiſſion to another, which has been done five Times ſince the Battle of the Boyne: So that no Commiſſioners, if they had been diſpoſ'd to it, have been able to make any ready View of the Forfeitures, and digeſt them into Method.

Par. 10. Beſides This: There appear'd to us a very great Backwardneſs in the People of

A. D. 1699. of this Kingdom to give any Information, which, in our humble Opinion, does not proceede from any Diſlike to the Buſineſs of our Commiſſion, or Diſobedience to the Authority that ſent us, but from the Fear of the Grantees, and the Perſons in Power, whoſe Diſpleaſure in this Kingdom is not eaſily borne. Beſides, Reports ſeem'd to us to have been induſtriouſly ſpread abroad, and generally believ'd, That our Enquiry would come to nothing, and was only the Effect of a ſudden (or crude) Reſolution; which hinder'd many Perſons from making conſiderable Diſcoveries: But we humbly conceive, if ſuch Fears were remov'd the Forfeitures would appear much greater.

Par. 25. And here we think it proper to take Notice to your Honours, That as well by the general Report of the Country, as by ſeveral Obſervations of our own, it appears probable to us, That many of the Perſons aforeſaid have obtain'd his Majeſty's Favour by Gratifications to ſuch Perſons, as have abus'd his Majeſty's Royal Compaſſion. But when we touch'd on this Subject, we found Difficulties too great to be overcome; moſt of theſe Matters being tranſacted in private, and with Perſons out of this Kingdom: However, we ſhall lay before your Honours ſome Inſtances, wherein it appears to us, That Money has been given to reſtore Perſons forfeiting to their Eſtates.

Par. 32. John Bourk, Eſq; commonly call'd Lord Bophin, agreed to pay 7500*l.* to Mr. Andrew Card, for the Uſe of the Lord Albemarle, in Conſideration he would procure his Majeſty's Letter to have him reſtor'd to his Eſtate and Blood; 3000*l.* of the ſaid Sum was to be paid when he was reſtor'd to his Eſtate, and the Reſidue ſome Time after. In purſuance of the ſaid Agreement, a Letter was ſent to the Lords-Juſtices to be communicated to the Commiſſioners of the Court of Claims, in favour of the Lord Bophin, in order to have him adjudg'd within the Articles of Galloway; but nothing being done thereon, it was agreed, That a Bill ſhould be tranſmitted into England, in order to paſs into a Law in Ireland, to reſtore the Lord Bophin to his Eſtate and Blood: The Conſideration ſuggeſted in the Bill, was to educate his Children in the Proteſtant Religion, and to let his Eſtate to Proteſtants. It was further provided in the ſaid Bill, That 9000*l.* ſhould be rais'd upon the ſaid Eſtate for Payment of Debts, and a certain Part of the ſaid Eſtate appropriated for the Maintenance and Proviſion for the Children; but, in reality, 7500*l.* of the ſaid Money, was to be paid to the Earl of Albemarle, and the Remainder, as we believe, to the other Perſons concern'd in negotiating the ſaid Agreement. This Bill was brought into the Houſe of Commons of Ireland; but the Agreement taking Wind, and the Houſe relenting, that their Authority ſhould be made uſe of to ſupport ſuch a clandeſtine Bargain, and finding ſeveral Allegations in the Bill falſe, they rejected it: Afterwards a new Agreement was made, viz. That there ſhould be a Grant to the Lord Roſs in Truſt, That the Money to be advanc'd for procuring the ſaid Grant, ſhould be firſt rais'd out of the Eſtate; and next, That the Profits ſhould be apply'd to the Payment of Debts, and after to the Uſe of the Family of Clanrickard: In purſuance of which Agreements, a Letter was procur'd from his Majeſty, and 3000*l.* paid to Thomas Broderick, Eſq; for the Benefit of the Lord Albemarle. A. D. 1699.

Par. 66. As we inform'd your Houſe before, ſoon after the Battle of the Boyne, Commiſſioners under the Great Seal of Ireland were appointed, who had Power to ſeize and diſpoſe of the forfeited Goods and Chattels to his Majeſty's Uſe: Theſe appointed Sub-commiſſioners in the ſeveral Counties then in his Majeſty's Poſſeſſion; who made Returns of great Quantities of Goods and Chattels, which they valued at 1355552*l.* but at ſo moderate Computations, that every Horſe was valu'd at 20*s.* every Cow or Ox at 15*s.* Sheep at 2*s.* 6*d.* a Piece, and other Things proportionable: So that it appears very probable to us, That if the ſaid Goods had been diſpos'd of to the beſt Advantage, they might have yielded between two and three hundred Thouſand Pounds. But before that could be done, upon Repreſentation of the then Commiſſioners of the Revenue, the Power of diſpoſing by the ſaid Commiſſioners of Forfeitures, was ſuperſeded by a Letter from his Majeſty, within nine Days after the granting their Commiſſion, and plac'd in the Commiſſioners of the Revenue. By this Means ſo much Time was loſt, before their Books and Goods ſeiz'd by the Sub-commiſſioners could be tranſferr'd to the Officers of the Revenue, that the greateſt Part of them were either embezzled by the Sub-commiſſioners of Forfeitures, or the Collectors of the Revenue, or elſe plunder'd by the Army at their Return into Winter Quarters; ſo that it does not appear to us, that there ever was accounted for to his Majeſty, above the Value of 44,000*l.* Beſides theſe, there were great Quantities of other Goods appear'd in the Inquiſitions which never came to his Majeſty's Uſe, and many more were ſeiz'd by private Men: Indeed, the Plunder, at that Time, was ſo general, that ſome Men in conſiderable Employments were not free from it; which ſeem'd a great Reaſon why this Matter had not been more narrowly ſearch'd into: Particularly, the Lord Coningſby ſeiz'd a great many black Cattle, to the Number of 300, or thereabouts, beſides Horſes, which were left in the Park after the Battle of the Boyne, and which we do not find were ever accounted for to his Majeſty: He alſo ſeiz'd all the Plate and Goods in the Houſe of Sir Michael Creagh, Lord Mayor of Dublin, for the Year 1689, which are generally thought to amount to a great Value: But this laſt is ſaid to be by Grant from his Majeſty. There were ſeveral rich Goods, and other Houſhold Stuff, deliver'd by the Commiſſioners of the Revenue to the then Lords Juſtices, the Lord Sidney, and the Lord Coningſby, which we

A. D. 1699. we do not find were ever return'd, accounted for to his Majesty, or left in the Castle at their Departure from the Government.

Par. 78. Besides all the Forfeitures beforemention'd, there are great Numbers of Persons guilty of the late Rebellion, and within no Articles, and never prosecuted; and very many have appear'd on the Exigent, which, to this Day, are continued under Bail; and some of them were this last Summer-Assizes try'd and acquitted. And, indeed, it does appear to us, That the Free-holders of this Kingdom, thro' length of Time, and by contracting new Friendship with the Irish, or by inter-purchasing with one another, but chiefly thro' a general Dislike of the Disposition of the Forfeitures, are scarce willing to find any Persons guilty of the late Rebellion, even upon full Evidence.

Par. 79. By reason of this Delay of Prosecution, many good Estates, by the Death of Parties, had been lost to his Majesty.

Coming to the private Estate in the last Place, They finish thus, "We shall now conclude our Report, by laying before your Honours another Grant of a considerable Value, which we are apprehensive does not fall within the Letter of our Enquiry: But since the Benefit of some forfeited Leases or Holdings are therein granted, we chose rather to lay the whole Grant before you, than be thought deficient in executing any Part of our Duty, or what might be expected from us. A Grant under the Great Seal of Ireland, dated the 30th Day of May 1695, pass'd to Mrs. Elizabeth Villiers, now Countess of Orkney, of all the private Estates of the late King James, (except some small Part in Grant to the Lord Athlone) containing 95,649 Acres, worth per Annum 25,995*l.* 18*s.* value total 337,943*l.* 9*s.* The Particulars whereof, viz. The Number of Acres in each County and Barony, the Value per Annum, and the Value total, appear in a Book deliver'd in with this Report, November 9. There is payable out of this Estate 2000*l. per Ann.* to the Lady Susannah Bellasis for her Life, and also 1000*l. per Ann.* to Mrs. Godfrey for her Life; and almost all the old Leases determine in May 1701; and then this Estate will answer the Values above-mention'd. Sign'd, Francis Annesley, John Trenchard, James Hamilton, and Henry Langford."

It is here to be observ'd, That in the Protest of the Three dissenting Commissioners, or, as they term'd it, their Memorial, it is asserted, That this last Paragraph was much alter'd from what it was on the 24th Day of October, or at any Time after till the 23d of November, when it appear'd, That mention was first made of the forfeited Leases, tho' without any Specification of their Tenure or reserv'd Rents, which constituted part of their Objection to it: And if This was the Effect of Party-Management, as it certainly was, to the not suffering the Appeal which the Three dissenting Commissioners had made to the House, by way of Letter to the Speaker, in Justification of their Conduct, to be read, ought to be plac'd to the same Account: And, perhaps, a more notorious Instance of Prepossession, is hard to be met with.

But, indeed, the whole of their Proceedings on this invidious Head, partook, in some Degree, of the same Perverseness and Disingenuity: For having premis'd in the Question form'd on the Issue of the Debate, That they had perus'd and examin'd the Report, they came to the following Resolution, viz. That a Bill be brought in to apply all the forfeited Estates and Interests in Ireland, and all Grants thereof, and of the Rents and Revenues belonging to the Crown within that Kingdom since the 13th of February 1688, to the Use of the Public. And what is still more extraordinary, tho' such insuperable Objections lay against the Word examine, with so high a Hand was this Vote carry'd, that the Courtiers durst not divide the House upon it: And hence the Malcontents were encourag'd to order a Clause to be added to the said Bill for erecting a Judicature to determine Clames touching the said forfeited Estates: And under the Cover of that Clause to resolve farther, That they would not receive any Petitions from any Person whatsoever: And that they would take into Consideration the great Services perform'd by the Commissioners, &c. Resolution of the House.

While the Bill was yet in Committee, another Incident also arose, which serv'd yet farther to manifest the Want of Candor now grown habitual in the Majority: For the Courtiers having, adroitly enough, observ'd, That there might be Room to derive some Advantage to their Cause from the Hint contain'd in that Passage of the Appeal made by the Three Dissenting Commissioners, in relation to the private Letters, Instructions, and Directions which the Four had receiv'd from Members in London, and having, in order thereto, procur'd all the additional Light they could concerning it, They resolv'd to complain in their Turn, in hope to work up such a Counter-Storm, as might serve to mitigate, at least, the Fury of the First.

Accordingly, Mr. Montagu, on the 15th of January, inform'd the House, That Mr. Arthur Moore, a Member, and the Writer of one of these Letters, had therein directed the Commissioners, to make a seperate Article of the Lady Orkney's Grants, because That might reflect upon Somebody; which Word Somebody, Mr. Montagu would have it, stood for the King, and, consequently, carry'd such a Meaning, as deserv'd the Censure of the House: But the House, not being in a Humour to precede on ministerial Evidence, and, on the contrary, lying in wait for every Advantage that offer'd against every ministerial Purpose, call'd upon him to make good his Charge, by producing his Witness: This he endeavour'd to avoid, by urging the Obligations which lay upon him, not to discover what had pass'd in private Conversation: But no Excuse being allow'd, he nam'd Mr. Methuen, Lord-Chancellor of Ireland, as the Informer; who deny'd, That he had ever mention'd any such Thing: And thus Mr. Montagu in a Fit of Zeal for the King, exposes himself. [Tindal.]

Mr

A. D. 1699. Mr. Montagu found himſelf the Victim of his own Refinements: And while the Perplexity and Confuſion laſted which this Incident had thrown him into, the adverſe Party not only obtain'd a Vote, That the ſaid Report was falſe and ſcandalous, but grafted a farther Motion upon it, That the Four Commiſſioners who ſign'd the Report, had acquitted themſelves in the Execution of their Commiſſion, with Underſtanding and Integrity: This, however, was ſo warmly diſputed by the Minority, (who inſiſted, That it was proſtituting the Honor and Juſtice of the Houſe to paſs ſuch a Vote, before the Commiſſioners on both Sides had been heard for themſelves) that the Debate was adjourn'd till the next Day, when the ſaid Commiſſioners were order'd to attend, and did attend accordingly.

The Iriſh Commiſſioners examin'd at the Bar of the Houſe.

What paſs'd on this Occaſion, is ſtill extant in print; the very Words made uſe of by the ſeveral Parties having been taken in Short-Hand; no doubt with a View to ſuch Publication.

Sir Richard Leving was call'd in firſt, and by the leading Queſtion put to him from the Chair, it appears, That Mr. Secretary Vernon had been involv'd in the Debate of the preceding Day, as well as Mr. Montagu: For the Speaker open'd the Examination by ſaying, That the Houſe having been inform'd of ſomething Sir Richard had ſaid to that worthy Member, did require him to give an Account of it; and, by the way, intimated, He was confin'd to examine him to that Point only. Sir Richard's Reply was in theſe Words, "Mr. Speaker; I ſhall very readily obey the Commands of the Houſe: But before that, I would inform you, (if it be the Pleaſure of the Houſe) of all that then paſs'd." And the Speaker rejoin'd, "Pray take your own Method: Give an Account of what you know."

Sir Richard Leving.

With this Licence, therefore, he paſs'd at once to the Article of the private Eſtate; and as if it had been the only Point in diſpute amongſt them, his whole Diſcourſe turn'd on that Hinge ſolely; apparently, not more for ſtating the Merits of the Caſe, than for expoſing Thoſe who had ſo inſidiouſly brought it into queſtion: For he began with ſaying, "That a Debate had ariſe among them on that Head: That he had given it as his Opinion, it ought not to be reported, becauſe it was not within their Power by the Act, which confin'd their Enquiries, to Forfeitures ſince the 13th of February: That the contrary was maintain'd by another of the Commiſſioners, who ſupported his Opinion by urging, That if King James had not forfeited it before, it became a Forfeiture by his coming into Ireland on March 15, and committing Treaſon againſt King William and Queen Mary: And that on the other Hand again, it was objected, this private Eſtate being parcel of the Poſſeſſions of the Crown of England, and the Crown being veſted in King William and Queen Mary by Act of Parliament, all the ſaid Poſſeſſions were veſted in Them, together with it."—And having thus taken his Ground, he proceeded to raiſe ſuch perſonal Batteries upon it, as he thought would affect his Four Antagoniſts the moſt. Againſt One he urg'd, That he had taken Occaſion to ſay, in the Courſe of the Diſpute, That he did not diſlike the 30th of January; and that, on the contrary, he lik'd both the Day and the Deed: Againſt Another, That the Grant [of the ſaid Eſtates] was a villanous Grant; and therefore fit to be expos'd: Againſt a Third, That, one of the Commiſſioners having ſaid, "If we take it [the ſaid Eſtate] not to be within our Commiſſion, why will you do it? Why will you report it? For it will fly in the King's Face," He (the Third) made the following Anſwer, "Why, the Commiſſion flies in the King's Face: If you won't fly in his Face, you can't execute this Commiſſion, or you muſt not execute it, one of the Two." And he concluded in theſe Words, "Upon This it was farther urg'd, That this Matter ſhould be reported; and one of the Commiſſioners ſaid, Tho' it was not clearly within the Act, yet he had receiv'd ſeveral Letters from ſeveral Members of this Houſe to report this Matter: And he ſaid, It was as good (or contain'd in the Letter, that it was as good) do nothing as not to report it. There was, upon This, an Expreſſion by one of the Commiſſioners, That a great Perſon was concern'd; [that was my Lady Orkney] and the Application of That was, That if he was ſo tender of that Perſon, we ſhould not join with them in any Thing elſe. For, Sir, the Debate was grown to this Paſs, whether if we did not join in this Thing, we ſhould join in any Thing elſe. This, I think, is the Subſtance of what I told that worthy Member: If I am aſk'd as to any other Perſon, I ſhall give you a true Account."

A. D. 1699.

So much inflammatory Matter, it muſt be preſum'd, could not be ſcatter'd, as a Criſis like This, without a ſuitable Effect: But Particulars not being ſpecify'd, all we can ſay is, That the Inclination of the Houſe being more violent to diſgrace the Accuſer than the Accus'd, ſuch Queſtions were chiefly put to him, as were likelieſt to confound him either by his own Anſwers, or the Replications of his Adverſaries.

Thus the firſt Queſtion put to him was, Who was preſent at the Diſcourſe, when it was ſaid, That the reporting the private Eſtate, would be, to fly in the King's Face, &c. And the Perſons he nam'd in anſwer to it, were Lord Drogheda, Sir Francis Brewſter, Mr. Anneſly, Mr. Trenchard, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Langford, the Secretary of the Commiſſion, (Mr. Hooper) and himſelf: And, in Anſwer to the reſt, which had all the ſame Tendency to involve him with Particulars, as well as to ſharpen the general Indignation againſt him, he ſpecify'd Lord Drogheda as the Commiſſioner who objected to the reporting the private Eſtate, becauſe it would be flying in the King's Face: And Mr. Hamilton, who reply'd, That the Commiſſion flew in the King's Face, &c. Mr. Langford to be the Man who maintain'd, That Kings might forfeit as well as Others,

A. D. 1699. with that additional Circumſtance concerning the 30th of January: And Mr. Trenchard and Mr. Anneſly to be the Perſons who ſaid, They had Letters from Members directing them to report the private Eſtate: After which being aſk'd, If he had ſeen any of thoſe Letters? He ſaid he had been ſhewn one from Mr. Arthur Moore, by Mr. Anneſly; but that he did not think it came up to the Point urg'd over Night; namely, That if they did not put the ſaid Eſtate into the Report, They had as good do nothing.

The reſt of the Commiſſioners which were in Town, namely, Brewſter, Anneſly, Trenchard, and Langford, with their Secretary Hooper, being then call'd in, Brewſter confirm'd moſt of the Particulars ſet forth by Leving, except, That inſtead of mentioning Moore as the Writer of the private Letter, cited by Anneſly, he mention'd Mr. Harcourt.

Sir F. Brewſter.

Mr. Anneſly.

But Anneſly (who ſaid, He had never been abſent from Buſineſs an Hour, or even a Moment, during the whole Time of their Commiſſion) deny'd, on his Reputation, his Credit, and all that was dear to him, That the Words charg'd upon Hamilton, or any Thing like them, had ever fallen from any of the Commiſſioners in his Hearing: He alſo declar'd, That he never had any Letter from Mr. Harcourt which took the leaſt Notice of the private Eſtate: And he added, by way of Recrimination, That ſome hot Words had paſs'd among the Commiſſioners on that Head; in the Courſe of which, Brewſter had ſaid to Trenchard, He had as good Friends in the Houſe of Commons as He, and ſhould be as well heard: That the Latter in his Reply had ſaid, "I don't value "what you can do, if you won't be an Evi- "dence againſt him:" And that he, Anneſly, would have taken more Notice of what paſs'd, if he had thought Sir F. Brewſter, who had ſo highly reſented Mr. Trenchard's Retort, would have made his Words good at the Bar of the Houſe.

Mr. Trenchard.

Mr. Trenchard was queſtion'd next, whoſe Anſwer was in theſe Words, "I was preſent at the Debate about the private Eſtate, which was manag'd with great Warmth, and much ſaid on both Sides: But I do not remember one Word which this Gentleman ſpeaks of, that was directly ſo ſaid: I do own there were ſome Words that might give Umbrage to this Accuſation, with Thoſe that were reſolv'd to miſunderſtand them. The Occaſion was This: My Lord Drogheda, as I remember, or Sir Richard Leving, ſaid, It would be flying in the King's Face to report this Grant: Upon which one of the Commiſſioners reply'd, We have heard too much of this Argument already, and 'tis Time to have done with it: We were not ſent here to flatter: And, if the enquiring into the Miſmanagement of the Forfeitures be a Flying in the King's Face, then our whole Commiſſion is a Flying in the King's Face: 'Tis not diſhonoring but vindicating his Majeſty, to ſhew, He has been abus'd by ill Men; and I doubt not but he will deſert them when he has diſcover'd it, as the beſt and wiſeſt Princes in all Ages have done. More than This I do affirm upon the Reputation of a Gentleman, and the Word of an honeſt Man, was not ſaid, whilſt I was at the Board."

Being aſk'd, who ſaid the Words he had repeated, he anſwer'd, 'Twas I, Sir: And again, Whether he could recollect nothing of the like Nature ſaid by Hamilton, he affirm'd, That all Hamilton ſaid in relation to this Matter, was to this Effect, "That, ſince They had enquir'd into the private Eſtate, They ſhould be thought brib'd and corrupted if they did not report it: Laſtly; being yet farther aſk'd, What paſs'd in his Chamber, where, he being indiſpos'd, the Commiſſioners had met the next Day after this Debate, he reply'd, "I never treaſure up "what is ſaid in private Converſation, and "if I did, I ſcorn to tell it."

Langford not only confirm'd all Trenchard had ſaid, but alſo aſſerted, He had not heard Hamilton ſpeak one Word relating to the King on this Point: And the Houſe would not ſuffer him to be examin'd as to the Words he had been accus'd of ſaying himſelf. Mr. Langford.

Laſtly; Mr. Hooper, being addreſs'd to by the Speaker in theſe Words, "Mr. Hooper, you hear to what Purpoſe you are call'd in," made the following Anſwer, "Yes, I do: The whole Matter ſeems ſtrange to me: I have not been abſent from the Board, except when I was ſick at Limerick, one Hour during the whole Execution of this Commiſſion: Nor did I hear one Word ſpoken, reflecting upon his Majeſty, unleſs the Inſinuation, That doing our Duty, would be flying in the King's Face, which I think was a great Reflection upon him; and I think Mr. Trenchard has very well repeated his own Words: I am ſure in Subſtance they are the ſame. I am confident there was no Letter produc'd while I was at the Board from any Member: And, I believe, by what Converſation I had with the Four Commiſſioners, They never had any but what was fit to be produc'd: And for the Subſtance of what Mr. Anneſly and Mr. Trenchard have ſaid, I know it to be true. I never heard Mr. Hamilton ſpeak but with great Honor of the King: And I do poſitively aſſert, That, to the beſt of my Memory, he never ſaid any ſuch Thing as is alledg'd againſt him, at the Board. I am confident I was preſent at all the Debates about the private Eſtate, and do remember the Three diſſenting Commiſſioners did immediately declare themſelves againſt the inſerting it in the Report: Three others that are preſent, did as readily declare for it: So that Mr. Hamilton being in a Manner ſolely left, to determine the Matter, complain'd, That it was a great Hardſhip upon him: "For, ſays He, my "Lord Orkney is my Relation, and my "Friend; and, beſides, I am a Tenant to "the private Eſtate: And 'tis very ſevere, "that the Deciſion of this Matter ſhould "lye upon me." He added, "He ſhould "be very well pleas'd if the Objection had "been made ſooner, and, perhaps, it might "have had more Weight with him." And truly,

Mr. Hooper.

A.D. 1699. ſure, Mr. Speaker, it did not appear, that there was one of the Commiſſioners for above Five Months, but ſeem'd to be peremptory for the reporting it: And, accordingly, Sir Richard Leving and Sir Francis Brewſter, join'd in the Examination of many Witneſſes to the Value of it at Limerick and other Places, till about Five Days before the Power of the Commiſſion ceas'd, when I mov'd the Board, That I might have ſome Direction about that Eſtate: And they made an Order, That I ſhould immediately prepare the Report, and put this in it: And Mr. Hamilton gave this Reaſon, when he join'd with the Commiſſioners, "We have "made ſo great a Noiſe about this Eſtate, by "examining ſo many People to the Value, "and ſending for the Rent-Rolls of it, that "it is now the public Diſcourſe, that it "will be reported: And I know the World "muſt needs ſay, That we are brib'd "and corrupted if we do it not. If it was "poſſible, I ſhould be glad to be excus'd: "But I will rather loſe my Friend, I will "rather loſe my little Eſtate, than be thought "guilty of Bribery and Corruption." And ſo gave his Conſent to the reporting of it: And for the Words relating to flying in the King's Face, I affirm, They are falſe."

Sir F. Brewſter. Here Brewſter again took Leave to ſay, "That, when the Debate was about the private Eſtate, and theſe Words were ſaid about flying in the King's Face, which my Lord Drogheda and others will take their Oaths of, and, I believe, Mr. Hamilton will not deny at the ſame Time, This was ſaid by Mr. Trenchard, I hear you talk of flying in the King's Face; I hope 'tis not flying in his Face: But this I muſt tell you, 'Tis a villanous Grant, and ought to be expos'd. Upon his ſpeaking ſo, Words aroſe, and that Gentleman gave me ill Language: But my Language was not ſo bad, but he was forc'd to beg my Pardon at the Board; and I did not his: There He ſtands: Let him deny it if he can."

Mr. Trenchard. And Mr. Trenchard reply'd, "Sir, it is true, I did aſk his Pardon; and the Occaſion was This: As Mr. Anneſly has acquainted you, I was provok'd by his opprobious Language to reply, I fear'd him in no Capacity, but as an Evedence, which he took very hainouſly: He repeated the Word Evidence: He ſaid, It was below a Gentleman, below a Man of Honour: That ſuch a One ought to be ſhun'd by all civil Converſation: That I had better have ſtuck a Dagger in his Heart than have call'd him an Evidence; which now I think, Mr. Speaker, he won't reſent ſo highly. This put the Board in great Diſorder; and one of the Commiſſioners whiſper'd to me, (I think it was the abſent Member; but I am ſure all agreed in it) You know Ha'is a very ſimple old Fellow; and tho' he gave the Affront, you are in the Wrong, that you are capable of being angry with him. Truly, Sir, I was conſcious to myſelf, That I was much to blame to ſuffer myſelf to be provok'd by him: And therefore, that the Debate might be interrupted no longer, I aſk'd his Pardon. As to the other Part I am charg'd with, That I call'd the Grant of the private Eſtate a villanous Grant, I directly deny it: 'Twas poſſible I might ſay, It was an extravagant Grant, an unreaſonable Grant, an unconſcionable Grant: That the King was impos'd upon and deceiv'd in this Grant, to give That for 5000*l. per Ann.* which is worth between 25 and 26,000*l.* Theſe are Words that amount to it, and might fall from me; but that I us'd the Word villanous, I poſitively deny: 'Tis a Word I don't uſe in my ordinary Converſation; a Word that never comes out of the Mouth of a Gentleman, and is falſe."

A.D. 1699.

The Speaker, at the Inſtance of Moore, then call'd upon Anneſly; as did alſo Harcourt and Sloane, which laſt Gentleman had ſent him Two, to produce their Letters, and they were produc'd accordingly: Anneſly ſaying on that Occaſion, That he thought it would be more for their Service to ſhew them, leſt They might be ſuſpected for what they did not deſerve.

Letters from Members produc'd, without Conſequence.

But tho' they were produc'd, it does not appear they were read; and upon the whole Matter, the Houſe came to the following Reſolutions, to wit, "That, there having been divers groundleſs and ſcandalous Aſperſions caſt upon Francis Anneſly, John Trenchard, James Hamilton, and Henry Langford, Eſqrs. Four of the Commiſſioners for the Iriſh Forfeitures, the ſaid Four Commiſſioners have acquitted themſelves with Underſtanding, COURAGE and Integrity. That Sir Richard Leving, one other of the ſaid Commiſſioners, has been the Author of the ſaid groundleſs and ſcandalous Reports upon the Four Commiſſioners before-mention'd: That the ſaid Sir Richard Leving be committed Priſoner to the Tower of London for the ſaid Offence. And he was committed accordingly.

Reſolutions on the whole Affair.

Leving committed to the Tower.

At whoſe Inſtance the Word Courage was added to the Motion of the Day before; what Debate it occaſion'd, and in what Manner it was carry'd, we do not find explan'd.

But however This may be; when the Bill for applying the Iriſh Forfeitures to the Uſe of the Public was read and committed to a Committee of the whole Houſe, the Courtiers reſum'd their Spirit, and ventur'd to move, That the ſaid Committee be empower'd to receive a Clauſe for reſerving a Proportion of the ſaid Forfeitures to the Diſpoſal of his Majeſty: This Proportion had been fix'd at a Third in the former Bill, which the Houſe had perfected and ſent up to the Lords ſome Years before. But the Houſe being at preſent differently conſtituted, would not hear of the ſame Rule of Proceeding: And not only put a Negative on the ſaid Motion, but alſo Reſolv'd, 1ſt. "That the adviſing, procuring, and paſſing the Grants of the Forfeited and other Eſtates in Ireland, had been the Occaſion of contracting great Debts upon the Nation, and laying heavy Taxes on the People. 2dly. That the adviſing and paſſing the ſaid Grants, was highly reflecting on the King's Honor: And the Officers and Inſtruments concern'd in the procuring and paſſing the ſaid Grants, had highly fail'd in the Performance of their Truſt and Duty."

Clauſe of Reſerve to the Bill of Reſumption over-rul'd.

And

A. D. 1699. And how these Procedings were reliſh'd by thoſe in Power, may in part be collected from the following Paſſage out of a Letter of Prior's to Lord Manchester; to wit, "You will ſee by the Enclos'd what a Day's Work has been perform'd by the Houſe of Commons: The Iriſh Grants to be reſum'd; and not even the Third Part to be reſerv'd to the King: And the Miniſtry, ſome of our Friends particularly, meant and aim'd at in the latter Part of their Vote: This all comes like a Torrent; and the Few that would (divert it, muſt be underſtood) cannot. In the Houſe of Lords, the King is a little more civilly us'd."

[Cole's Mem. p. 97.]

A Motion againſt ſuch Miniſters as had obtain'd Grants, meets with the ſame Fate.

However, on the 6th of February, when the moſt violent of the Malcontents diſcover'd an Inclination to become more particular, by moving, That the procuring or obtaining of Grants of Eſtates belonging to the Crown, by any public Miniſter concern'd in the directing or paſſing ſuch Grants to or for their own Uſe or Benefit, while the Nation lay under the heavy Taxes of the late War, was highly injurious to his Majeſty and prejudicial to the State, and a Violation of the Truſt repos'd in them, the Majority prov'd to be on the other Side: And, in order to derive ſome Fruit from the Victory which they had thus luckily obtain'd, by entangling ſome of the adverſe Party in the Snare They had ſet for Others, Thoſe who had the Lead of the Day, inſiſted on having their Bill of Reſumption too; and accordingly obtain'd an Order, for bringing in a Bill, "To reſume the Grants of all Lands and Revenues of the Crown, and all Penſions granted by the Crown, ſince the 6th of February 1684, (being the Day of King James's Acceſſion) and for applying the ſame to the Uſe of the Public."

A Bill of Reſumption order'd for King James's Grants.

But this temporary Advantage only ſerv'd to aggravate the Ferment of the Seſſion: On the 12th, the Party return'd to the Charge againſt Lord Bellomont, in hope to open their way to the Lord Chancellor: And Prior, in a Letter to Lord Manchester, dated that Day, uſes theſe remarkable Expreſſions,

[Ibid. p. 105.] "To-morrow is the great Day, when we expect that my Lord Chancellor will be fallen upon, tho' God knows what Crime he is guilty of, but that of being a very great Man, and a wiſe and upright Judge.——Thus every Day a Miniſter, till at laſt we reach the King."

But tho' it be true, that the Malevolence of the Party was principally levell'd at that Miniſter, this Intelligence was premature: For the Criſis was not as yet ripe for ſuch a perſonal Attack, as is there ſuggeſted: And all that They could carry in the Committee of the whole Houſe on the State of the Nation, with their whole Strength, was the following Reſolution, to wit, "That an humble Addreſs be preſented to his Majeſty, repreſenting to him the Reſolutions of the Houſe of the 18th of January, relating to the Grants of the forfeited Eſtates in Ireland."

Votes ſent by way of Repreſentation to the King.

Indeed; This Reſolution was ſomewhat enforc'd by an Order, for preſenting it to his Majeſty by the Houſe in a Body: But then Care was taken to allow ſufficient Time for concerning a proper Anſwer: For it was not ſo preſented till the 21ſt; by which Time his Majeſty was prepar'd to reply (according to Mr. Prior, civilly but ſmartly) as follows.

A. D. 1700.

The King's Anſwer.

"Gentlemen,

I was not led by Inclination, but thought myſelf oblig'd in Juſtice to reward thoſe who had ſerv'd well, and particularly in the Reduction of Ireland, out of the Eſtates forfeited to ME, by the Rebellion there: The long War in which we were engag'd did occaſion great Taxes, and has left the Nation much in Debt; and the taking juſt and effectual Ways for leſſening that Debt, and ſupporting Public Credit, is what, in my Opinion, will beſt contribute to the Honour, Intereſt, and Safety of this Kingdom."

And the Speaker's Indiſpoſition (whether natural or political is not to be preciſely determin'd) gave Occaſion to adjourn the Houſe, and thereby to defer the Report of the ſaid Reply for Five Days longer.

This Delay, however, whether artificial or otherwiſe, had no ſenſible Operation in Favor of the Court: For when the ſaid Report was made from the Chair on the 26th, it gave Riſe to a warm and vehement Debate, which, on the Iſſue, produc'd the following Reſolve, to wit, "That whoever advis'd his Majeſty's Anſwer to the Addreſs of the Houſe, preſented to this Houſe on Wedneſday laſt, has us'd his utmoſt Endeavour to create a Miſunderſtanding and Jealouſy between the King and his People."

Reſolution thereon.

Irish Commiſſioners re-warded.

Having, moreover, on the 27th of March, taken the Services perform'd by the Iriſh Commiſſioners into Conſideration, They were pleas'd to reſolve, That the Sum of 1000*l.* ſhould be paid to the Earl of Drogheda, F. Annesley, J. Trenchard, J. Hamilton, H. Langford, and alſo to J. Hooper, Eſqrs. And the Sum of 500*l.* to Sir R. Loving, and Sir F. Brewſter, in conſideration of their Expences, which Sums were order'd to be paid out of the ſaid Forfeitures. On the 26th, proceding ſtill in the ſame Track, the Number, Qualification, and Manner of chuſing the Truſtees for carrying the Iriſh Bill of Reſumption into Execution, became the chief Buſineſs of the Day: And the Reſolutions taken thereupon were, That the Number of the ſaid Truſtees ſhould be Thirteen; That no Perſon ſhould be a Truſtee who had any Place of Truſt or Profit, or was accountable to his Majeſty, or a Member of the Houſe: And that the ſaid Truſtees ſhould be choſen by Ballot.

Truſtees choſen by Ballot.

On the 28th the Ballot was taken accordingly; and the Perſons choſe were Francis Annesley, James Hamilton, John Bagg, John Trenchard, James Isham, Henry Langford, James Hooper, Sir Cyril Wyche, John Cary, Sir Henry Sheers, Thomas Harriſon, William Fellows, and Thomas Rawlins: The Two Laſt had equal Voices; and Sir John Worden ſtood before Both of them: But happening to be one of the Barons of the Exchequer in the County of Cheſter, he was ſet aſide, as unqualify'd under the Second Reſolution,

A. D. 1690 Solution, That no Placeman should be a Truſtee.

Laſtly, (not to ſpeak as yet of the Bill itſelf, or the Manner of ſending it up to the Lords) on the 8th of April, They order'd the Iriſh Report, their own Reſolutions of January 18; the Reſolutions of the Commons concerning the Iriſh Forfeitures, on the 4th of April 1690; the King's Speech to both Houſes on the 5th of January 1690-91; their own Addreſs of February 15; his Majeſty's Anſwer; the Reſolution of the Houſe thereon; and the Addreſs of the Commons of March 4, 1692-3, to be printed. And the ſame Day the leading, or rather driving, Party carry'd alſo another Reſolution, which, tho' different in Terms, differ'd very little in Subſtance from That which the Courtiers had rejected upon the 13th of February before: Namely; "That the procuring or paſſing exorbitant Grants by any Member now of the Privy-Council, or by any other who had been a Privy-Counſellor in This or the former Reign, to his Uſe or Benefit, was a high Crime and Miſdemeanor."

Order of the Houſe for printing Votes, &c. concerning the Iriſh Forfeitures.

The Intent of printing this little Collection of Memorials in relation to the Iriſh Forfeitures, was, obviouſly, to beſpeak the good Opinion of the Public in favor of the Houſe; and, by conſequence, to render the Court, in an equal Degree, odious: For in the King's Speech, it is fit to remind the Reader, for Example, was the Promiſe ſo often refer'd to in the Courſe of this Work, and which was conceiv'd in the following Words, to wit, "And I do likewiſe think it proper to aſſure you, That I ſhall not make any Grant of the forfeited Lands in England or Ireland, till there be another Opportunity of ſettling that Matter in Parliament, in ſuch Manner, as ſhall be thought moſt expedient."

And, again; in the Addreſs of the Houſe of Commons March 4, 1692, there was the following Clauſe, "And foraſmuch as the reducing of Ireland hath been of great Expence to this Kingdom, we do alſo beſeech your Majeſty, That (according to the Aſſurances your Majeſty hath been pleas'd to give us) no Grant may be made of the forfeited Lands in Ireland, till there be an Opportunity of ſettling that Matter in Parliament, in ſuch a Manner as ſhall be thought moſt expedient."

Court-Plea, That the King in granting away the forfeited Lands, was guilty of no Breach of Promiſe.

But what Streſs ſoever the Houſe laid on this retroſpective Meaſure, there were Adventurers in the Court-Service, who undertook to convince the Public, That no Regard was due to it; and that, as the King could do no Wrong, ſo in his Diſpoſition of the ſaid Forfeitures, he had done nothing but what was Right.

Vol. II. Thus the Author of an elaborate Piece, entituled, Jus Regium, ſtill extant in the State Tracts of this Reign, and principally levell'd againſt Devenant's Book of Grants and Reſumptions, undertakes to ſhew, not only, That the King had a Right to all thoſe Forfeitures, (and, according to the old Syſtem, he certainly had) but alſo, That he was guilty of no Breach of Promiſe in granting Thoſe now in queſtion: And in order thereto, having firſt recited the Clauſe of the Speech verbatim, as above, he proceeds in theſe Words: "If the King did not make any Grant till there was another Opportunity of ſettling that Matter in Parliament, he was not guilty of any Breach of Promiſe: But that he did not, is plain: At the Time when he made this Speech, (January 5, 1690-91, that is to ſay) the Lords were poſſeſs'd of the Bill that apply'd the Iriſh Forfeitures to bear the Charge of the War: (It had been ſent up ſome Days before by the Commons.) When They met again after their Adjournment on the 13th of March, the engroſs'd Bill lay before them. Will any one ſay, That They had not then an Opportunity of ſettling the Matter? Could not They have paſs'd the Bill if They would? Moſt certainly: But They did what They thought moſt expedient: They let the Bill dye in the Houſe, becauſe (as 'tis before preſum'd) They would not inter-meddle with the Rights and Prerogatives of the Crown. But this was not all the Opportunity the King gave them: The next Seſſion another Bill was brought in to veſt the forfeited Eſtates in Ireland in their Majeſties, to be apply'd to the Uſes of the War. This Bill, which allow'd a Third Part to be diſpos'd of by the King, was loſt in the Lords Houſe, as the Former was. The next Bill that was brought in, fell in the Houſe of Commons: So did ſeveral others in the Years following. After the Claim of the Forfeiture (as 'tis call'd) was thus diſclaim'd by both Houſes, by their giving up thoſe Three Bills, his Majeſty taking this to be a tacit Submiſſion, began to grant away the Forfeitures."

Remark thereon.

Such were the Sophiſtries obtruded by Thoſe in Power on the World for Arguments: But all that is neceſſary both to refute and expoſe them, is a little Recollection: For the Seſſion actually was clos'd when the King made his Speech on the 5th of January, 1690-91: And when the Lord Chief Baron Atkins ſignify'd his Majeſty's Pleaſure, That the Two Houſes ſhould adjourn themſelves to the 31ſt of March, he farther declar'd, They ſhould have timely Notice, if there was to be a Seſſion: But, inſtead of receiving any ſuch Notice, they were directed to adjourn themſelves from Time to Time, till the 26th of May, when they were prorogu'd by Commiſſion: Conſequently; The Lords had not any Opportunity to ſettle the Matter: The Bill was loſt by the Proregation: The next Seſſion the Commons prepar'd Another, which was dropp'd by the Lords as before: And whereas our Author tells us the next Bill fell in the Houſe of Commons, it appears by the Clauſe of their Addreſs, March 4, 1692, above cited, That they put in the ſtrongeſt Clame imaginable to the Benefit of the King's Promiſe: And if ſeveral other Bills, afterwards brought in, were as often dropp'd, every one of thoſe Bills was a Renewal of the Clame: And, indeed, the Fallacies, on which the ſaid Author has reſted this Part of his Vindication, are not more notorious than the repeated Colluſions practis'd

A.D. 1699. practis'd by the Courtiers during this Interval, to obviate a Resumption; the Rectitude of which Measure, is thus explicitly acknowledg'd (almost in the Words of the Preamble of the Bill itself) by one of the most zealous Idolaters of this Reign: "The Rebels having adher'd to his Majesty's Enemies, and maintain'd a desperate and bloody War, which, by his Majesty's Conduct and Courage, with the Assistance and great Expence of England, was reduc'd, it was highly reasonable that the Estates of the Rebels should go in Ease of the Subjects of England, to the public Use."

[Cookshanks cont. Hutchinson, p. 48.]

Estimates, Supplies.

It is now to be observ'd, That while this Affair was in Agitation, the Estimates were brought in, and the Ways and Means of providing for the current Service, were at Intervals attended to; tho' in a Manner which discover'd more Apprehension of bad Management at Home, than of any Danger from Abroad. The Land-Forces were continued on the same Footing as the Year before; but the Seamen were reduc'd to 7000: Burnet says erroneously 9000: Adding, "This was mov'd for by the Tories, and the Whigs readily gave way to this Reduction, because the Fleet was now in another Management." Which is an open Acknowledgment, That, unless the Latter had the Direction, they were as little concern'd for the Safety of the Government as the Former.

Ways and Means.

The Ways and Means adopted were, in the first Place, a Land-Tax of 2*s.* in the Pound, with a borrowing Clause to raise 933,333*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* 2dly, A Provision to apply the Surplus of the old Subsidy ending 25 of December 1699, as also the Surplus of the Civil-List Funds, ending 25 December 1700, to the current Charge. 3dly, A new Duty of 15 per Cent. on East-India wrought Silks, Muslins, &c. and also 22*d.* per Hundred weight on the said wrought Silks; to which was added, a Clause for enlarging the Time for purchasing certain reversionary Annuities. 4thly, The Product of the Plantation-Duties, of the 5*s.* per Ton on French Shipping for one Year from December 25, 1699, and of the 2*d.* 25 per Cent. on French Goods for a Year, from March 31, 1700.

Appropriations,

The Appropriations were as follow: To the Navy, 956,342*l.* under these several Heads; to wit, Recalls and Short-Allowance Money, 300,000*l.* Bounty-Money to Officers, 18,000*l.* Ordinary, 184,342*l.* extra-Repairs, 90,000*l.* 7000 Seamen, allowing 20,000 out of the Articles of Wear and Tear, for sick and wounded, 364,000*l.* Land Service, 390,000*l.* under these Heads, Ordnance, 25,000*l.* Half-pay, 41,000*l.* Guards and Garisons, 300,000*l.* Arrears, 24,000*l.* Circulating Exchequer Bills, 40,000*l.* Interest and Incidents, 7,279*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.* In all, 1,393,621*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.*

and Applications.

Now the Sums which the several Grants produc'd were as follow: Land Tax, 933,333*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* 15 per Cent. on India Goods, 132,638*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* ½. Sale of reversionary Annuities, 59,580*l.* Overplus of Civil-List Funds, 80,298*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.* ½. Overplus of old Subsidy, 146,194*l.* 13*s.* 5*d.* ½. Plantation Duties, 2,265*l.* 6*s.* 7*d.* ½. 5*s.* per Ton on French Ships, 787*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* 25 per Cent. on French Goods, 46,295*l.* 15*s.* 5*d.* ½. 22*d.* per Hundred on India wrought Silk, 10,046*l.* 4*s.* 11*d.* Total Product, 1,411,440*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.* ½. Surplus not expended, 17,818*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.* ½.

All these several Dispositions were comprehended in two Bills, One for the Land-Tax, and the Other for imposing the new Duties on East-India Goods, &c. Besides which, the House, during the Process, had been thrown into Committee, as usual on the like Occasion; and the Conduct of almost every Branch of the Revenue, had undergone a very nice Inspection: And as it had been discover'd and voted, That there had been a great Loss in his Majesty's Revenue of the Excise to the Detriment of the Public, in consequence of that Vote, a Clause was provided, to empower the King to farm the Excise, under this Restriction, That no Members of Parliament should be concern'd in the said Farm: (which Power, however, his Majesty was not pleas'd to make use of) And it was also provided, That no Excise-Officer, or Custom-House-Officer, for the future, should be capable of sitting in the House of Commons.

The Money Bills. The Land-Tax and Resumption Bills tack'd.

Besides; The Bill to resume the Irish Forfeitures, was call'd a Bill of Aid or Supply; and the Money to be rais'd by Sale of the Lands, &c. so resum'd, was appropriated to the Discharge of the Transport Debt, Officers Arrears, Sums due for cloathing, and Interest Money due upon Tallies, Orders, Tickets, and Exchequer-Bills. And that the Courtiers might not have it in their Power to put a Negative upon it, without laying the Ax to the Root of the very Government itself, they had recourse to that extraordinary Expedient of tacking it to the Land-Tax Bill; whence it follow'd, That one could not be rejected without rejecting the other: Nor was the two Bills, thus unnaturally join'd, sent up to the Lords till the 2d of April, by which Time, the Pressures arising from a craving State and an empty Exchequer, began to be sensibly felt: Not could they have been borne at all, if it had not been for a Clause of Credit, by which his Majesty was enabled to borrow 220,000*l.* on the Credit of the Exchequer in general.

Grant and Application to the Prince of Wales's Debt.

Again: While the Supply was under consideration, Prince George of Denmark's Debt, which had been recommended from the Throne at the Opening of the Session, was brought into Debate: And tho' upon the Issue they resolv'd, That a Supply should be granted to his Majesty, towards the Payment of his Proportion of the said Debt, they not only provided, the Money so granted should be laid out in England, and settled on the Prince and Princess and their Issue, according to the Marriage-Agreement, but also voted an Address to his Majesty, That he would be pleas'd to use his utmost Endeavours, to induce the other Princes and States concern'd, to pay their Proportions of the said Debt.

In short, the general Current of the Session, was contrary to the Inclinations of the Court.

Thus

A. D. 1699. Further Proceedings on Kidd's Affair.

Thus having taken into consideration several Petitions from the Merchants in relation to Kidd and his Piracies, (a Persuit which they seem'd resolv'd to continue with all the Clamor in their Power to raise) and having also* examin'd Copies of the several Commissions given to the said Kidd; of his Majesty's Warrant for a Grant of Pirates Goods to the Earl of Bellamont and others; of an Indenture between his Majesty and the said Earl; of a Letter from the Lords of the Treasury to that Earl about sending over the Treasure seiz'd in Kidd's Ship; of another Letter to the said Earl about seizing of Kidd; of several Papers receiv'd from the Earl of Bellamont, and of a Petition of the Old East-India Company, before alluded to, They first order'd in a Bill for the more effectual Suppression of Piracy; and some Time after, upon Information that Captain Kidd was sent for home, from the West-Indies, the Commons address'd the King, That the said Captain Kidd might not be try'd, discharg'd, or pardon'd, until the next Session of Parliament; and that the Earl of Bellamont, Governor of New-England, might transmit over all Instructions and Papers, taken with, or relating to, the said Kidd: With which his Majesty comply'd.

Besides, in framing the said Bill, which became a Law, and is still in force, particular Care was taken to give such a Turn to the Preamble, as should make the World believe, the Iniquities practis'd in that Affair, had render'd such a new Law necessary: For, having put the Act of 28 Henry VIII. in relation to Treasons, Felonies, Robberies, Murders, and Confederacies committed on the Seas, at the Head of all, they proceeded as follows, to wit, "And whereas, That since the making of the said Act, and especially of late Years, it hath been found by Experience, That Persons committing Piracies, Robberies and Felonies on the Seas, in or near the East and West-Indies, and in Places very remote, cannot be brought to condign Punishment without great Trouble and Charges, in sending them into England to be try'd within the Realm, as the said Statute directs, insomuch, that many idle and profligate Persons have been thereby encourag'd to turn Pirates, and betake themselves to that Sort of wicked Life, trusting that they shall not, or at least, cannot easily be question'd for such their Piracies and Robberies, by reason of the great Trouble and Expence that will necessarily fall upon such as shall attempt to apprehend and prosecute them for the same: And whereas the Numbers of them are of late very much increas'd, and their Insolencies so great, that unless some speedy Remedy be provided to suppress them, by a strict and more easy way for putting the antient Laws in that Behalf in execution, the Trade and Navigation into remote Countries, will very much suffer thereby. Be it enacted, &c."

Proceedings in relation to the Commission of the Peace.

About the same Time also, the same Party, with the same Views, namely, to run down the Ministry, and more especially the Lord-Chancellor, who was justly esteem'd the Corner-Stone of it, affected to derive additional Matter of Complaint against him, for having made a partial and undue Distribution of the Commissions of the Peace: According to Burnet, he was particularly charg'd for turning many Gentlemen out of it: But then he also suggests, That tho' this Charge was grievously aggravated, there was no just Grounds for it: For, after admiting, That such Persons as had refus'd to sign the Association had been so turn'd out, he adds, They were turn'd out by Order of Council, on the Representations of the Lords Lieutenant of every County: As also, That the Lord Chancellor was even so cautious, as to procure a particular Order for every Individual: "And in such a Time of Danger, says he, it was thought, That Those who did not enter voluntarily into it, were so ill affected, or at least so little zealous for the King, that it was not fit they should continue Justices of Peace." But however this may be, the House order'd a Bill to be prepar'd for the qualifying Justices of Peace, and appointed a Committee to inspect the said Commissions; as also those of the Deputy Lieutenants, as they stood then, and as they had stood for Seven Years pass'd: Which Committee having made Report to the House, That not only many Persons dissenting from the Church of England, but Men of small Fortunes, and who, consequently, had an entire Dependance on the Court, were put into those Places, the House (prudently declining to set any Brand on the Dissenters by Name) resolv'd, "That an Address be made to his Majesty, importing, That it would much conduce to the Service of his Majesty, and the Good of this Kingdom, that Gentlemen of Quality and good Estates be restor'd and put into the Commissions of the Peace and Lieutenancy; and that Men of small Estates, be neither continued, nor put into the said Commissions." Which Address being presented to the King by the whole House, his Majesty was pleas'd to reply, "He was of the Opinion, That Men of the best Quality and Estates, were most proper to be entrusted in the Commissions of the Peace and Lieutenancy; and that Directions should be given accordingly." And such an Effect had this Strain of Complaisance on the House, that they return'd their Thanks to his Majesty in a Body; upon which Occasion the King assur'd them, He should always endeavour to do what was for the Good of the Public.

A. D. 1699.

Bill to exculpate such as had neglected to sign the Association.

But in this Interval, (for it was not till within a very few Days of the Close of the Session, that these Compliments were interchang'd between the Throne and the House) they had prepar'd and pass'd another Bill, to prevent Disputes that might arise by Officers and Members of Corporations having neglected to sign the Association, and taking the Oaths in due Time, in which it was declar'd, That it was not reasonable, that such Persons, as through Mistake, or by the not regular holding the Courts where the same ought to be subscrib'd, or for other such like Reasons, had fallen into such Neglect, should be

A. D. 1699. be any ways subject to the Disabilities, Incapacities, and Penalties in the Act of the 7th of his Majesty, for the better Security of his Majesty's Royal Person and Government contain'd.

Bill to prevent the Growth of Popery.

Again: As in the last Session, the House had call'd upon the King by Address to put the Laws in force against Papists and Non-jurors, so the Majority now took the Hint, from a Petition of the Lancashire Clergy, complaining of the insolent Behaviour and Attempts of the Popish Priests, and praying that such effectual Methods as should be thought fit, might be us'd, to prevent the mischievous Effects of their Endeavours, and to stop the Growth of Popery, to appoint a Committee to enquire how far the Laws against Popish Recusants had been put in Execution, and to propose such farther Remedies, as should be found necessary to satisfy the Prayer of the said Petition. Of this Committee, How was Chairman; and the Report he made to the House, was in effect as follows.

"That it did not appear to them, that the Laws against Popish Recusants had generally been put in Execution: That it was their Opinion, That a farther Reward be given to such Persons as should discover and convict Popish Priests or Jesuits: That it would be a farther Remedy against the Growth of Popery, that perpetual Imprisonment be inflicted upon Popish Priests and Popish School-Masters, convicted upon the Oath of one or more Witnesses: That no Person born after the 25th Day of March, 1700, being a Papist, be capable of inheriting any Title of Honour or Estate within the Kingdom of England, Dominion of Wales, or Town of Berwick upon Tweed: And that no Papist be capable of purchasing any Lands, Tenements, or Hereditaments in the said Kingdom, either in his own Name, or in the Name of any Person in Trust for him." And these Resolutions having been adopted by the House, a Bill was order'd to be brought in accordingly.

According to Burnet, as observ'd in the Course of the preceding Session, this whole Proceeding was set on foot to throw an Odium on the King as a Favourer of Papists; and the Promoters of it hop'd, the Court would have oppos'd it: He also adds, "That when the Party saw their Mistake, they seem'd willing to let the Bill fall: And when that could not be done, continues his Lordship, they clogg'd it with many severe and some unreasonable Clauses, hoping, that the Lords would not pass the Act: And it was said, That if the Lords should make the least Alteration in it, they in the House of Commons, who had set it on foot, were resolv'd to let it lye on their Table, when it should be sent back to them. Many Lords who secretly favour'd Papists on the Jacobite Account, did, for this very Reason, move for several Alterations; some of these importing a greater Severity: But the Zeal against Popery was such in that House, that the Bill pass'd without any Amendment, and had the Royal Assent." Thus we are to suppose, the Bishop had the Gift of discerning Spirits, seeing he could distinguish so nicely between Motive and Motive; and satisfy himself, that what was Zeal in one House, was Faction in the other: It is, however, true, the Bill, as sent up to the Lords, did differ materially in one Particular from the Report: For, whereas, by the Report, the Incapacity of inheriting and purchasing regarded the Unborn only, the Bill provided, That all such Papists as did not take the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, &c. in Six Months after they attain'd the Age of Eighteen, should incur the said Incapacities; and the Inheritances they were otherwise entitled to, were to descend to the next of Kin: But then, what regarded Titles of Honor in the Report, was left out in the Bill: Besides; the Bishop not only acknowledged he voted for it, but justifies it in these Words: "I had always thought, That if a Government found any Sect in Religion, incompatible with its Quiet and Safety, it might, and sometimes ought to, send away all of that Sect with as little Hardship as possible: It is certain, that as all Papists must, at all Times, be ill Subjects to a Protestant Prince, so this is much more to be apprehended, when there is a pretended popish Heir in the Case: This Act hurt no Man that was in the present Possession of an Estate; it only incapaciated his next Heir to succeed in that Estate, if he continued a Papist: So the Danger of This, in case the Act should be well look'd to, would put those of that Religion, who are Men of Conscience, on selling their Estates, and in the Course of a few Years, might deliver us from having a Papist left among us." And, lastly, tho' he had before complain'd of the Rigor of the Bill, he procedes to insinuate, it was not rigid enough: For he says, "It wanted several necessary Clauses to enforce the due Execution of it." And as on the one Hand, the Clause which prohibits the sending Children Abroad to be educated in the Romish Religion, is wholly unexceptionable, so it is certain, that never any Clause was more openly or shamefully violated, than that has constantly been from the Day of its Establishment till now.

The Bishop passes in Silence over another Incident, which gave another Ruffle to the Session, and which was almost as ungrateful to the Courtiers, as any of those already discours'd of: And That was, the Application of the the Old East-India Company to Parliament, to be continued as a Company by parliamentary Authority, during the Remainder of their Charter: How, as usual, was their Advocate; and the Majority, tho' compos'd of (m) various Interests, moving all one way for

(m) English, Scots, French and Irish, according to the Distinctions bestow'd upon them in the Title-Page of a railing declamatory Pamphlet, (called, Curlers Remarks upon [illegible] Illegal Practices in several Cabals, compos'd of an Intermixture

A. D. 1699. for the Sake of drawing on a Change at Court, were inclin'd to ſhew them all poſſible Favor for his Sake. Nor were the New Company any longer in a Condition to withſtand their Efforts: Montagu, their great Patron, was no longer Lord of the Aſcendant, either in the Cabinet or the Houſe: And while the Supply was in Suſpence, the Commons of all the Three Eſtates were That which arrogated the moſt Conſideration.

The Old Company began with diſtributing their Caſe in print, at the Door of both Houſes, in which they magnify'd the Equity of their Claims, and the Injuries they had ſuſtain'd: And the New, in like Manner, diſtributed an Anſwer to it, in which, for the Sake of expoſing the corrupt Practices of their Adverſaries, they again expos'd the Corruptions of the Court, with as much Freedom, as if there was not the leaſt Ground to ſuſpect, That to a corrupt Influence in Parliament, they ow'd their Being. But as their Invectives ſerv'd only to exaſperate, ſo the Reſentments they excited were fatal to their Arguments. Paſſion is a more active Principle than Reaſon: And the Prepoſſeſs'd are never ſo happy, as when they have the Pretence of Provocation to excuſe their Partialities. A. D. 1699.

Thus, tho' the Old Company could not prevent the Eſtabliſhment of the New, They made a Shift at laſt to procure the like Eſtabliſhment for themſelves: (For the Bill paſs'd both Houſes) And thus the Nation had Two Eaſt-India Companies by parliamentary Authority, inſtead of one by Prerogative: Notwithſtanding which, 'tis obſervable, That in the Abridgment of the Statutes, this Act, which is of ſo extraordinary a Nature, and which ſo eſſentially concern'd ſo vaſt a Branch of Trade, is rang'd among the private Acts.

Now and then, however, the Courtiers did make a Shift, or rather were ſuffer'd to carry a Court-Point: Thus the Scots, as formerly hinted, having endeavour'd to intereſt their Neighbour Nation, as they call'd the Engliſh, in their Quarrel with the Court in relation of Intereſt) which was ſet forth ſoon after the Cloſe of the laſt Seſſion; and to which is prefix'd the following Comment by way of Contents:

---

The CONTENTS.

A Premonition againſt cauſeleſs Fears; by ſhewing the great Things the King and the Government has done for England, and the ungrateful Returns his Majeſty has encountred from a Mixture of various Intereſts aſſembled at ſeveral Cabals: compos'd of Old Jacobites, Republicans, falſe Friends, new Converts, Place-Mongers, envious and ambitious Murmurers, ſeditious Clubbers and Writers; who are continually

Undermining Royal Authority, retiling the public Miniſtry, and raiſing cauſleſs Jealouſies and Suſpicions, to amuſe the People, and advance themſelves into the Supremacy, by falſe Notions in Government:

Which are examined and refuted; their Suſpicions prov'd falſe and groundleſs; their Deſigns plainly diſcover'd, in contributing toward the Diſbanding the whole Army, ſending away the Dutch Guards, excluding Members of Parliament, &c. And the Ways and Means by which they promote Diſcontents, are detected, &c.

On the other Hand, Thoſe affected by this Repreſentation, ſet forth, in their Turn, a Counter-Peaſquil, call'd, A juſt Rebuke of a late unmannerly Libel in Defence of the Court, entituled, &c. in the Introduction of which they tell the World, "That in the Beginning of the War, the Author of the Former had writ himſelf into a Coach and a Poſt of 300 l. a Year; and that the Peace being like to determine that Reward, he was angling for another by the ſucceſsful Methods of flattering the Court, and abuſing true Engliſhmen under the Name of Spaniſh Patriots, &c." Towards the Middle of the Piece, we alſo find the following remarkable Paſſage:

"In Page 22, he raves againſt an Intermixture of Intereſts againſt the Government, as if he were diſtracted, and had wholly miſtaken his Hypotheſis; for what he employs as Arguments in behalf of the Miniſtry, is totally againſt them: A ſingle Intereſt might be corrupted or biaſs'd by falſe Principles; but where all Intereſts agree, and ſpeak the ſame Things, of neceſſity they muſt be true, and the Perſons accus'd muſt be guilty: In ſuch a Caſe, the general Voice of the People muſt be eſteem'd as the Voice of God: Nor is bringing the King in as a Party, or ſetting up an Intermixture of Intereſts as Enemies to his Majeſty any Excuſe for the Miſmanagements and Abuſes committed by his Miniſters; for many a good Maſter may have ill Servants, and 'tis the King's Misfortune to have too many, who have ſuch Tricks in Keeping Complaints from his Ears, and repreſenting the perſons grac'd as profeſs'd Enemies to his Royalty, that 'tis almoſt impoſſible for any Complaints to reach him, but under ſuch Prejudices, as utterly deſtroy the Importance and Weight of the Matter complain'd of; and by theſe neſarious Arts and Shifts, the Miniſtry maintain their own Reputations with the King, and ſtifle all Complaints againſt them; which if his Majeſty was acquainted with, he would no more keep ſuch Men about him, than he would warm a Snake in his Boſom. We are now under a Diſtemper that was never heard of before in England: All for the King, and none for the Miniſters; and it will be the Wonder of Ages to come, as it is the Torment of this, to ſee ourſelves ruin'd by a few Men, that have no Intereſt or Party in the Nation; of whom a pleaſant Gentleman ſaid the other Day, That one Bravery would carry away all the King's Friends in the Miniſtry, if they were ſeparated from their Employments."

And the Concluſion is in theſe Words:

"Ambition, Envy, Pride and Fancy, which the mercenary Remarker complains of among Malcontents and Place-mongers, are the epidemical Diſeaſes of the Court; and he ſhould firſt have attempted upon the irregular Confinution of his Patrons, before he had poſted up his Bills for the Cure of other People. Of the real Fears and Jealouſies that an extravagant management has brought us under: How like Children do they treat us! And as if the fooliſheſt of nurſes, old Women had been their Teachers, they beat us till we are forc'd to complain, beat us for complaining, and then ſing our Miſeries, that our Injuries and their Injuſtice might be conceal'd from ſuch as would pity and relieve us. They call us Jacobites, becauſe we deſire they ſhould be honeſt; Rebellious, becauſe we deſire Abuſes ſhould be rectify'd: Fearful, becauſe we can't lye ſtill when we are trampled on: And Vain, becauſe we can't fall in Love with ſlavery, and become Vaſſals to a Set of as vain, proud, envious, and ambitious, ſelf-conceited Mimicks as England e'er produc'd, or honeſt Men were plagu'd with.

Sending home the Dutch Guards, he calls an Act of hainous Ingratitude, and diſhonourable to the Nation; and ſeems to be in a Fit of Fears, leſt we ſhould have occaſion for their Aſſiſtance, and he deny'd it. But by what Logic he will make it Ingratitude, I can't imagine. For if I employ Men to do a Job of Work, and I pay em when they have done, no further Obligation lies upon me: So country is now become a Trade, and the Prince employing them as mercenary Journeymen, for a Week, a Year, or longer, may diſcharge thoſe Stipendaries, when they have no further Occaſion for their Service; which our Remarker, and the reſt of his arbitrary Upholders, may take for his Anſwer, unleſs he will have it in the Meaſures of a late true Engliſh Poet.

'Tis true we've ſent among the Dutch,
Their majeſty but of Slaughter;
And England ought to repay all Such,
As at laſt marching off their Hands,
Were pow'r'd to plague after.
The Hogan Troops diſmount'd thus,
As your bewitched ſpeaks it,
In parcy Boys without a Sow,
Came to relieve themſelves, not us,
And all the Kingdom knows it.

Now, if an Invaſion ſhould happen, is there ſo much Danger as is pretended, for the Engliſhmen know the Benefit of their Liberties, ſo well they venture to freely for them; eſpecially when what they defend is not only their own, but the juſt Rights of all Mankind, and will preſerve their Poſterity from being Guppy-Dogs, when they follow the eternal Counſel of God, as Lycurgus calls it, If thou wouldſt be free, chuſe it rather, and ſeek only to overcome their Servants, and their own Men: That enables them to a higher Aſſiſtance; For on this Terms Liberation is certain, and which is better, poſſeſſion is a Deo promiſſa eſt: And God himſelf will own ſuch a Cauſe as this.

A. D. 1699. 1700.

relation to their Darien-Adventure, by the Means of a Pamphlet which they made public, under the Title of, An Enquiry into the Causes of the Scots Miscarriage at Darien; and having thereby greatly incens'd the Court, the said Pamphlet was complain'd of in the House, and certain of the most exceptionable Passages of it having been read, it was, upon the Question, resolv'd, That the said Book, highly reflecting on the Honor of his Majesty and both Houses of Parliament, and tending to create Jealousies and Animosities between the Two Kingdoms of England and Scotland, was a false, scandalous, and traiterous Libel: They also order'd the said Book to be burn'd by the Hands of the common Hangman, and address'd his Majesty to issue his Royal Proclamation for apprehending the Author, Printer and Publisher of the said Libel.

A Scots Pamphlet concerning the Darien-Adventure order'd to be burn'd.

What these exceptionable Passages were, is not express'd; but we may suppose, not irrationally, those inserted below (n) were of the Number: The Address, however, was acceptable at Court: A Proclamation was readily issued, according to the Prayer of it, offering a Reward of 500*l.* for the Discovery of the Parties concern'd in it: And what Partialities on one Hand, and Severities on the other, were farther exercis'd by those in Power, in relation to the Darien-Controversy in general, may best be gather'd from another Scots Author of these Times, who writes as follows: "If their own Kings (those of England meaning) dispense with their Laws, and invade the Rights of their Church, they kick them from their Thrones, and then tell the World, They have abdicated: Yet, at the same Time, they suppose them in acting arbitrarily against us; and tell them, That in so doing, they act against the Sense of both Houses: If we complain of Injuries done us, and Affronts put upon us by a Faction of theirs, in conjunction with some ill Men of our own, straitway we are accus'd of reflecting upon the Honor of both Nations, and endeavouring to stir up War and Sedition, and Proclamations are issued for discovering the Authors of such Complaints: Yet, at the same Time, they suffer us to be libell'd, revil'd upon, villify'd and bely'd, and God himself and the Holy Scriptures blaspheme'd, in villanous Pamphlets, without taking the least Notice of it: Thus in a scurrilous Pamphlet, call'd, A History of Darien, we are bauter'd and laugh'd at, with romantic and foppish Stories: In The Defence of the Scots abdicating Darien, the Honor of the Nation is outrag'd, our Company bely'd, and Religion blaspheme'd; yet the Author rewarded and caress'd by Mr. Vernon, now a Minister of State, but formerly a Licenser of Books for taking off the penal Laws, and overturning the Protestant Religion. In a villanous Lampoon call'd The Pedlar turn'd Merchant, we are expos'd to public Ridicule and Contempt, without any Animadversions upon Authors and Publishers: Nor had any of our own Secretaries of State the Courage to take any Course with these Libellers, or to complain of them, tho' Application was made to them for that End. But if any thing be wrote, to vindicate our Nation from such foul Calumnies, a greater Reward

A Complaint from the same Quarter of the Partialities and Severities of the Government.

(n) To wit: "But to come directly to the Narrative of the Opposition made to our Colony: it is well known, That the Kingdom of Scotland, as many other Parts of Europe, hath suffer'd much for three or four Years past, by bad Harvests, which render'd them incapable of providing Bread for their People at home, and much more of sending Supplies to their Infant-Colony abroad: This was very manifest to some People about Westminster, and Care was taken we should have none for our Money from England, tho' that Nation could have spar'd it; and, perhaps, we might have pleaded it as our Merit, when, in Parliament, we voted his Majesty a Standing-Army, upon his Royal Word, That it was necessary, tho' we had more need to have sav'd the Money, to have bought Bread for Thousands of our People who were starving for Want, &c." State Tracts, Temp. Guil. III. Vol. III. p. 525.

"Our Parliaments have originally a greater Power than That of England: For what the States of Scotland affer'd to the Touch of the Sceptre, their Kings had no Power to refuse, or if they did, the Refolves of the States had the Force of a Law. [Here follow'd a Chain of Influences] But the Truth of the Maxim laid down by our Historians, That the Supreme Power of Scotland is in the States, is so obvious to every one that reads our History, that it cannot be deny'd: And hence it is, That our old Acts of Parliament are often call'd The Acts of the States, and fay, The Three States enacted, &c. For by our original Constitution the King is none of the States, but only Dux Belli and Minister publicus, which was well understood by our Viceroy the Earl of Morton, and the other Deputies from the States of Scotland, when they acquainted Queen Elizabeth in their Memorial, That the Scots arrogated their Kings to that Condition, that they might, when they saw Cause, accept them of that Power which they received from the People; which we have now re-collected, in making the Crown forfeitable by the Claim of Right at the last Revolution: And, perhaps, that's none of the least Causes why our Ruin is now endeavour'd by the Abettors of a growing Prerogative." Ibid. p. 527.

"I may see fit then, that the Parliament of Scotland went on deliberately to advance their Trade, and to make this Act: By which it is evident, That They who advis'd his Majesty to say, [in the Parliament of England meaning] That he was ill serv'd in Scotland, impos'd upon him, have laid a Foundation of Division between him and his Parliament, which are the Two continuent Parts of our Government: And if they be daſh'd against one another, the whole Frame of it muſt of Neceſſity be diſſolv'd. Hence alſo it is evident, That thoſe Counſellers, if Scotſmen ought, by our old Conſtitution, to be call'd to an Account by the Parliament, according to the 1428 Act of Parliament 2 James IV. And if they be Engliſhmen or Dutchmen, we have a Right to demand Juſtice againſt them, as having meddled in our Affairs contrary to the Laws of Nations."

"The Sovereignty of our Nation, and the Independency of the King of Scots upon the Crown of England, being tacitly given up by this Anſwer; and the Parliament of England being poſſeſs'd by our Enemies with a falſe Notion of our Deſign, they put a Stop to our taking Subſcriptions from any Subjects in England, tho' our offering to take in the Engliſh as Sharers, was a plain Demonſtration of the Uprightneſs of our Intentions towards that Nation. This made it apparent, That we had no Deſign, in the leaſt, to ſupplant them in their Trade, but on the contrary, to make them partakers of ours, in order to lay a Foundation for a cloſer Union, and greater Amity between our Two Nations; which, if it had taken effect, our Trade had not been kept down as now it is, by the Frowns of the Court, but might, by this Time, have been arriv'd to the Advancement of the Glory and Strength of the Iſland: Whereas by the Oppoſition made to this noble Deſign, the Nations are more alienated from one another than before, leſſened in their Strength and Trade; and Scotland loſt, as to their Friendſhip, Aſſiſtance, and Intereſt in England on any Occaſion whatever, unleſs proper Meaſures be taken to make up the Breach, and retrieve our former Love and Advantage." Ibid. p. 527.

"It is very certain, That never any King of Scotland before the Union of the Crowns, durſt think to violate their Laws, or to oppoſe the general Intereſt of the Nation; or if they attempted to do it, they were quickly made ſenſible of their being inferior to the Law and the Power of the Nation aſſembled in Parliament, who, till the Acceſſion of our Princes to the Engliſh Throne, retain'd in an undiſputed Poſſeſſion of calling their Kings to an Account for their Mal-Adminiſtration, and of impoſing of their Laws and Liberties, as they ſaw Cauſe." Ibid. p. 534.

A. D. 1699-1700. Reward is offer'd for discovering the Authors, than was offer'd for discovering some of the Regicides: Proclamations are publish'd with more Zeal and Vituperency for that End, than against popish Priests and Jesuits, who, by their Principles and Practices, destroy Mens Souls and Bodies. What Eagerness did our Enemies at Court evidence in prosecuting Booksellers for the Enquiry into the Causes, &c. What Pains and Expence to find out the very Porters who carry'd the Books about? What illegal and barbarous Treatments and Threats did they make use of to a poor Fellow taken up on Suspicion on that Account, keeping him close Prisoner for a Week, without any Oath against him, when his Wife lay in Childbed, and his Family, at the same Time, in a starving Condition, having nothing else but his Labour to depend on? With what Fury and Heat did they prosecute some People in Ireland for but reading it in public? And what Pains and Expence were they at, to bring over a Scots Bookseller from thence, to witness against another Scots Bookseller in London, That he had sent him a Parcel of those Books? What Care to have extravagant Bail from that London Bookseller and others? And what Threats to ruin that Dublin Bookseller, if he would not, contrary to Conscience and Knowledge, swear against the Scots Bookseller in London? &c."

It is, moreover, too notorious to be conceal'd, That in every other Step taken by the Scots Company, or the Scots Nation in relation to that fatal Project, they found their Way cover'd with Thorns: For, in Addition to all the Particulars already recounted, it remains to be told, That, on the 4th of December, 1699, the Council-General of that Company writ a Letter to the Scots Secretary in England, acquainting his Lordship, "That they had prevail'd upon the Lord Basil Hamilton, to go up with an Address to his Majesty, in Behalf of Captain Robert Pinkerton, and thirty more, who were wrongfully detain'd Prisoners at Carthagena since the Beginning of February (then) last past; and, as they were inform'd, most inhumanly treated: That they were daily importun'd by their Relations (who were very considerable) for their Relief; and it was of great Concern to the Company, That something material should be speedily done therein, not only for the Sake of the said Prisoners, but that others might thereby see they did not abandon the Interest of such as engag'd themselves in their Company's Service: Wherefore they entreated his Lordship, That he would be pleas'd to introduce the Lord Basil Hamilton to the King, in presenting the said Address, and to assist him in procuring a gracious Return from his Majesty."

Further Proceedings of the Scots Company.

Their Letter to the Secretary of Scotland.

Thereupon the Lord Chancellor (of Scotland) writ a Letter, (a) January 9, to the Scots Directors, importing, "That his Majesty's Secretaries of State acquainted him, That the King would not allow my Lord Basil Hamilton Access to him, because he did not wait upon his Majesty when he was formerly in London; and that he had never since given any public Evidence of his Loyalty, nor had hitherto own'd his Majesty's Government: But that his Majesty would not refuse to hear what my Lord Basil's Instructions were, being willing to be inform'd of what the Company desir'd: And that if the Lord Basil would give in writing to his Majesty's Secretaries, what he had to represent, his Majesty would receive Information from their Hands of what was demanded, and would give his Answer to the Company: In short, That his Majesty did not refuse the Petition, but would not allow my Lord Basil to be the Presenter of it."

The Chancellor's Letter to the Directors.

A. D. 1699-1700.

At the same Time his Majesty, to give the Company all the Satisfaction seemingly in his Power, wrote to his Council of Scotland, "That whereas the Council-General of the African Company of that Nation, had, by their Letter to the Secretaries of State, desir'd, that they might give their Concurrence to procure a gracious Return to their Petition, which they had sent with Lord Basil Hamilton, and which together with his Instructions, he had communicated to the Secretaries of State; and that they had represented to him what was desir'd in Behalf of the said Company: And that he having refus'd the said Lord Basil Hamilton Access, for the Reasons communicated to the Lord Chancellor by the Secretaries of State; yet being willing to give an Answer to what the Company desir'd, his Majesty was resolv'd, in the Terms of Treaties, to demand from the King of Spain, That Captain Pinkerton, and those of his Crew, who were detain'd Prisoners at Carthagena, should be set at Liberty: That it was his Majesty's Intention to advance the Trade of Scotland; and that the Subjects of that Kingdom should be allow'd the same Liberty of Commerce, that others enjoy'd with English Plantations: But that the three Frigates they demanded, having been given by Parliament for guarding the Coasts, he was resolv'd not to dispose of them, till he had the Advice of his Parliament."

The King's Letter to the Council of Scotland.

In Answer to the said Chancellor's Letter, the Directors sent another to the Secretaries of State for Scotland, containing in Substance, "That the Council-General of their Company, having thought fit to send up one of their Number with an Address to his Majesty, and with Instructions concerning the Contents of their Company's former Petitions, they thought that none could be more capable to discharge that Trust, than the Lord Basil Hamilton, as being thoroughly vers'd in the Course of the Company's Affairs, nor more acceptable to his Majesty, as having no Objections made against him when he was appointed, several Lords of his Majesty's Privy-Council being then present: That they were surpris'd to find by a Letter from The Directors Answer to the Lord Chancellor.

(a) It is remarkable, That Mr. Frier, in a Letter to Lord Manchester at Paris, dated January 18, says, "The King has not yet seen Lord Basil, or any Address from him." Coxe's Mem. p. 98.

A. D. 1699. 1700.

from the Lord Chancellor, That the King would not allow Lord Basil Access, because he had not waited on his Majesty when last in London; but his Lordship being sent by, and having Instructions from, the Council-General, they could say nothing to it, other than intreat their Lordships, That they would use their Interests with his Majesty to allow the Lord Basil to have Access to his Royal Person, lest the Refusal of it might not be only a Discouragement to the Company, and all its well-Wishers, but give Ground to the World to believe, That his not being allow'd Access to his Majesty, was upon Account of carrying an Address from the Company, which every Body knew stood in Need of, and had a just Right to, his Majesty's Royal Favour and Protection." They also writ to the Lord Basil Hamilton, "That as they were sensible of his generous Condescention to their Request, in undertaking so troublesome a Journey to London, at that Time of the Year, purely to serve the Interest of his Country; so they could but heartily regret, That the carrying the Company's Commission, should be the Occasion of putting a distinguishing Mark upon a Person of his Lordship's Quality and Merit, as to be deny'd Access to his Majesty's Person, because he had not waited on his Majesty when last in London. That no Body was so blind but might see thro' that: And that whereas they never heard that his Lordship had ever done any Thing unworthy of his Quality, or inconsistent with the Duty of a loyal and peaceable Subject; so they still hop'd, That by his prudent Management, his Majesty might be undeceiv'd of any Misrepresentation he might have of him; and that he would yet condescend to grant his Lordship Access to his Royal Person with their Address, and give a gracious Answer to the Contents of it, and the other Particulars mention'd in his Instructions."

The Company's Letter to the Lord Basil Hamilton.

In the mean while his Majesty and his Ministers being thus teas'd and embarrass'd by this Pertinaceousness of the Scots, had recourse, to the old Expedient of taking Shelter behind the Parliament of England: And knowing themselves to be strongest in the House of Lords, chose to agitate the Matter first where they were likely to be countenanc'd most.

Accordingly, the Scots Colony was brought into question there, as a Point of great Concern to the Interest of England, and what highly concern'd the Wisdom and Consistency of Parliament to advise his Majesty against. But how plausibly soever the Courtiers maintain'd their Cause, they were so vigorously oppos'd, and so frequently baffled, that the Debate, which was long and obstinate, was adjourn'd, resum'd, and took a Variety of Shapes before any such Question could be form'd, as suited the Purpose of the Court: At length, however, it was mov'd, That the Settlement of the Scotch Colony at Darien, was inconsistent with the Good of the Plantation Trade of this Kingdom; and, on the previous Question, carry'd in the Affirmative by 32 Voices against 26: Notwithstanding which, the Lords Normanby, Nottingham, and Weymouth, and the Bishop of London enter'd their Dissent for the following Reason, "Because, as we conceive, there has not been made appear in this Debate, any Ground sufficient to determine a Point of great Importance: And yet it has been refus'd Time for due Information in a Matter of Trade, which is very obscure, and of the highest Consequence to the Quiet and Welfare of both Nations in this Conjuncture."

Lords Votes, that the Scots Settlement was inconsistent with the Good of the Plantation-Trade.

The next Step was to ground a suitable Address on the Vote thus carry'd: Accordingly, That which follows was prepar'd, agreed to, (tho' not without a Protest of Sixteen Lords against it) and sent down to the Commons for their Concurrence, viz.

"(p) We the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, being, according to our Duty, sollicitous for the Preservation and Increase of the Trade of this Kingdom, on which the Support of your Majesty's Greatness and Honour so much depends, as well as the Security and Defence of your People, have been very apprehensive, That the Steps lately made towards a Settlement of your Subjects of the Kingdom of Scotland at Darien, may tend to the great Prejudice of this Nation, and possibly to the Disturbance of the Peace and good Correspondence with the Crown of Spain, which we conceive is very advantageous to us all: We have therefore taken the same into our serious Consideration, as a Matter of the greatest Importance, and proper to be laid before your Majesty, as the common Father of both Countries. And as we are truly sensible of the great Losses our Neighbour-Kingdom hath sustain'd, both by Men and Treasure, in their Expedition to that Place, which we very heartily lament, so we should not endeavour, by any Interposition of ours, to defeat the Hopes they may still entertain of recovering those Losses, by their farther engaging in that Design, but that we judge such a Prosecution, on their Parts, must end not only in far greater Disappointments to themselves, but at the same Time prove very inconvenient to the Trade and Quiet of this Kingdom.

And Address thereon.

On this Occasion, we humbly presume to put your Majesty in Mind of the Address of both Houses, presented to your Majesty on the 17th of December, 1695; in the Close of which Address, your Majesty will see the unanimous Sense of this Kingdom, in relation to any Settlement the Scots might make in the West-Indies, by Virtue of an Act of Parliament pass'd about that Time in the Kingdom of Scotland, which was the Occasion of the said Address.

And we humbly represent to your Majesty, That having receiv'd Information of some Orders

(p) Mr. Oldmixon introduces this Address to the Proceedings of the foregoing Session; misled, perhaps, by Burnet, who treats of this Affair in so loose a Manner, that there is no collecting from him precisely to what Session it belongs.

A. D. 1699. 1700. Orders your Majesty had sent to the Governors of the Plantations on this Subject, the House did, on the 10th of January last, come to this Resolution, That your Majesty's Pleasure signify'd to the Governors of the Plantations, in relation to the Scotch Settlement at Darien, was agreeable to the Address of both Houses of Parliament, presented to your Majesty on the 17th of December, 1695. And on the 8th of this Instant February, this House came to this farther Resolution, That the Settlement of the Scots Colony at Darien, is inconsistent with the Good of the Plantation-Trade of this Kingdom. All which we humbly hope your Majesty will take into your Royal Consideration: And we are confident your Majesty cannot be thought too partial to the Address of this House, if your Majesty shall, in the first Place, consider the Advantage and Good of the Trade of this Kingdom, by the Preservation and Improvement of which, both these Kingdoms, and all your other Dominions, must on all Occasions principally be defended."

The Commons refuse to concur in it.

But, notwithstanding the artful References in this Address, to the Sense of both Houses as formerly declar'd to the Throne, the Commons could not be induc'd to concur in it: "Some, says Burnet, were not ill pleas'd to see the King's Affairs run into an Embroilment; and Others did apprehend, that there was a Design to involve the Two Kingdoms in a national Quarrel, that by such an Artifice, a greater Army might be rais'd and kept up on both Sides." He also adds, "The Managers resolv'd to do nothing that should take any Part of the Blame and general Discontent that four'd that Nation off from the King: It was farther given out, to raise the national Disgust yet higher, That the Opposition the King gave to the Scotch Colony, flow'd neither from a Regard to the Interests of England, nor to the Treaties with Spain, but from a Care of the Dutch, who from Curaſoe drove a coasting Trade among the Spanish Plantations, with great Advantage, which, they said, the Scotch Colony, if once well settled, would wholly draw from them."

To procede, Their Lordships had thus the whole Merit of their Compliment to themselves: And as to the King's Answer, it was conceiv'd in the following Words.

His Majesty's Answer, in which he recommends an Union between the Two Kingdoms.

"His Majesty having receiv'd a very dutiful Address from the House of Peers, in relation to the Endeavours lately us'd by Some of his Majesty's Subjects of the Kingdom of Scotland, towards making a Settlement at Darien; in which they humbly represent to him their Opinion, That such a Settlement is inconsistent with the Good of the Plantation-Trade of this Kingdom, is pleas'd to let the House know, That he will always have a very great Regard to their Opinion; and to assure them, That he will never be wanting, by all proper Means, to promote the Advantage and Good of the Trade of England: At the same Time his Majesty is pleas'd to declare, That he cannot but have a great Concern and Tenderness for his Kingdom of Scotland, and a Desire to advance their Welfare and Prosperity; and is very sensibly touch'd with the Loss his Subjects of that Kingdom have sustain'd, by their late unhappy Expeditions, in order to a Settlement at Darien. His Majesty does apprehend that Difficulties may too often arise, with respect to the different Interests of Trade, between his two Kingdoms, unless some way be found out to unite them more nearly and completely. And therefore his Majesty takes this Opportunity of putting the House of Peers in mind of what he recommended to his Parliament, soon after his Accession to the Throne, that they would consider of an Union between the two Kingdoms: His Majesty is of Opinion, That nothing would more contribute to the Security and Happiness of both Kingdoms; and is inclin'd to hope, that after they have liv'd near an hundred Years under the same Head, some happy Expedient may be found out for making them one People, in case a Treaty was set on foot for that Purpose; and therefore he does very earnestly recommend this Matter to the Consideration of the House."

A. D. 1700.

A Bill to that Effect prepar'd by the Lords, which stops with the Commons.

This new Commission their Lordships had also the Complacency to undertake; and in consequence thereof, did prepare and send down a Bill to the Commons, appointing certain Commissioners of the Realm of England to treat with Commissioners of Scotland for the Weal of both Kingdoms: But the Commons, being in no better Disposition to comply with this Measure, than with the Former, could not be prevail'd upon to prosecute or approve it.

All these several Incidents happen'd in or before the beginning of March; and on the 25th following, the Marquis of Tweedale presented to his Majesty an Address in the Name of the Scottish Nation, which had been concerted and obtain'd in contempt of the Proclamation against disorderly Petitioning, and which was to the Effect following.

The Scotch national Address.

"That They, being deeply affected with the hard Circumstances of the Indian and African Company of his Majesty's Kingdom of Scotland, both Abroad and at Home, as being of universal Concern to the whole Nation; and his Majesty having been pleas'd, in his Royal Answer to the Council-General of the said Company's Petition, to signify, That he very much regretted the Loss which that Kingdom and the Company had then lately sustain'd; That upon all Occasions his Majesty would protect and encourage the Trade of the Nation; and that he would order the Parliament to meet when he judg'd the Good of the Nation requir'd it: They were thereby encourag'd, in most dutiful and humble Manner, to represent to his Majesty, That as the Estates of Parliament and that Nation, which they represented, had a peculiar Interest in the Concerns of the said Company, as was particularly manifested in their unanimous Address to his Majesty, August 5, 1698, so they humbly conceiv'd nothing could be so conducible to support the Credit and Interest of the said Company under its present Misfortunes, as a

A. D. 1700. Meeting of the ſaid Eſtates in Parliament, and that the Good of the Nation, could, at no Time, require their Meeting more than at preſent: That they doubted not but that under the Influence of his Majeſty's Favour and Protection, together with the Aſſiſtance which might be reaſonably expected from his ſaid Parliament, the ſaid Company might be enabled to proſecute their Undertaking with greater Aſſurance, and better Succeſs, than hitherto they had been able to do, under the many Stops and Difficulties which they met with from Time to Time: That therefore They did, in all humble Duty, moſt earneſtly entreated, and moſt aſſuredly expected, That his Majeſty would order his ſaid Parliament to meet as ſoon as poſſible; which they doubted not would tend to the Honour of his Majeſty, and the general Good and Satisfaction of the Nation."

It is added, That upon the preſenting this Addreſs, one of the Commiſſioners ſignify'd to the King, That it was hop'd his Majeſty would be pleas'd to look upon it, not only as a Petition for allowing the Parliament to ſit, but likewiſe as a Teſtimony of the Nation's Concern for the Intereſt of the Indian and African Company. To which his Majeſty King's Anſwer. was pleas'd to anſwer, "That That would be beſt known in Parliament; and that the Parliament could not ſit before the 14th of May then next enſuing; but that it would ſit then."

We have not as yet done with this Affair: But before we can perſue the Thread of it any farther, it is incumbent on us to diſpatch the remaning Buſineſs of the Seſſion, and ſuch other Matters as, in order of Time, lye before us.

And firſt it is neceſſary to obſerve, That the Party-Managers of the Houſe of Commons, finding, That in the ordinary Courſe A Bill to appoint Commiſſioners for taking and examining the public Accounts. of Proceding, it was no eaſy Matter to fix any particular Charge of Corruption or Malverſation on the Miniſters and Officers who had the Receipts and Iſſues of the Revenue under their Direction, mov'd for, and at length carry'd, a Bill, For appointing Commiſſioners to take, examine and determine the Debts due to the Army, Navy, and for Tranſport-Service; as alſo an Account of the Prizes taken during the late War: The Commiſſioners ſo appointed were two Merchants of London, Thomas Morrice, and Samuel Atkins, and three Country Gentlemen, Thomas Liſter, William Farrer, and George Langton, Eſqrs. to whom all the Powers of Enquiry and Examination were given; that their Report might be as full and complete as poſſible: The Time the ſaid Commiſſion was to be in force, was one Year: The Commiſſioners were allow'd 400*l.* each for their Trouble; and 1500*l.* more was alſo allow'd for Clerks, and incidental Charges. A trifling Conſideration for ſo neceſſary a Service as theſe occaſional Reviews (if properly conducted) certainly are; more eſpecially at the Cloſe of a long and expenſive War! And, becauſe ſeveral Perſons had taken Advantage of the Neceſſity of Officers who had ſerv'd, and of Others to whom Money was due on the Tranſport-Service, it purchaſing their Debentures at an exorbitant Intereſt, (as in the Bill itſelf is ſet forth) the Redemption of Them is allow'd upon Payment of the Principal and of legal Intereſt: To render which Clauſe effectual, a farther Proviſion was made for the Determination of all Diſputes in a ſummary Way, by the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London.

During the ſame Interval likewiſe, a great Cry having been rais'd againſt the Wear of Indian Silks, Stuffs, Calicoes, &c. a Bill was brought in and paſs'd, To prohibit the Uſe of them, except under certain Reſtrictions, after the 29th of September 1701: Which Bill had the following remarkable Preamble: "Whereas, it is moſt evident, That the Continuance of the Trade to the Eaſt-Indies in the ſame Manner and Proportions, as it hath been for Two Years laſt paſs'd, muſt inevitably be to the great Detriment of this Kingdom, by exhauſting the Treaſure thereof and melting down the Coin, and taking away the Labour of the People, whereby very many of the Manufacturers of this Kingdom are become exceſſively burdenſome and chargeable to their reſpective Pariſhes, and Others are thereby compell'd to ſeek for Employment in foreign Parts: For Remedy thereof, Be it enacted, &c.

Laſtly: The Commons found it reaſonable to take off the Duties upon Woollen Manufactures, Corn, Grain, Bread, Biſcuit, and Meal exported; and to provide for the Puniſhment of the Governors of Plantations, for the Crimes by them committed abroad in their Governments, (perhaps with an Eye to Lord Bellomont) by a ſhort Bill, which was thus introduc'd: "Whereas due Puniſhment is not provided for ſeveral Crimes and Offences committed out of this his Majeſty's Realm of England, whereof divers Governors, Lieutenant-Governors, Deputy-Governors, or Commanders in Chief of Plantations, and Colonies within his Majeſty's Dominions beyond the Seas, have taken Advantage, and have not been deterr'd from oppreſſing his Majeſty's Subjects within their reſpective Governments and Commands, nor from committing ſeveral other great Crimes and Offences, not deeming themſelves puniſhable for the ſame here, nor accountable for ſuch their Crimes and Offences to any Body within their reſpective Governments and Commands, Be it enacted, &c."

And now, having thus far diſpatch'd the Buſineſs of the Seſſion, we are to follow the Land-Tax Bill, and Bill of Forfeitures, as ſent up conſolidated to the Houſe of Lords: But by the way, as B. Burnet is pleas'd to call this, both a New Term and a New Invention, ſo it is fit to recollect, That the Old Whigs had us'd it in King Charles the ſecond's Time; and that his Majeſty not only complain'd of it in his Speech from the Throne of May 23, 1678, but further declar'd, He would never be induc'd for any Conſideration, to paſs ſuch complicated Bills again.

"The Method, continues the ſame Prelate, that the Court took in that Houſe to oppoſe

A. D. 1700. oppoſe it, was to offer ſome Alterations that were, indeed, juſt and reaſonable: But ſince the Houſe of Commons would not ſuffer the Lords to alter Money-Bills, This was in effect to loſe it. The Court, upon ſome previous Votes, found they had a Majority among the Lords: So, for ſome Days, it ſeem'd to be deſign'd to loſe the Bill, and to venture on a Prorogation or Diſſolution rather than paſs it."

But, in order to Information, it is neceſſary to be more particular. On the 3d of April the Bill was ſent up; and being taken into conſideration immediately, produc'd a long, perplex'd, and paſſionate Debate, which was adjourn'd till the next Day: At which Time, after another hot Debate, a ſhort Queſtion was put, to wit, Whether it ſhould be read a Second Time? Which being carry'd in the Affirmative by Seventy Lords againſt Twenty-three, the Lords Richmond, Haverſham, (Sir John Thompſon, who had been created a Baron by that Title) Mohun, Stamford, Bolton, Audley, Abergavenny, and Angleſey, enter'd their Diſſents for Proteſt thereon. the following Reaſons, to wit, "Though there be nothing we more earneſtly deſire, and ſhall on all Occaſions, to the utmoſt of our Power, more ſincerely and heartily endeavour, than the Preſervation of a conſtant, right, and good Underſtanding, and Agreement between the two Houſes of Parliament, as That on which the Safety, Welfare, and Happineſs of the Nation, and the Preſervation of the wiſeſt and nobleſt Conſtitution of the World, does ſo much depend; yet we cannot but enter this our Proteſtation againſt a Second reading of this Bill.

1ſt, Becauſe, as we conceive, this Bill does, in one Part, tend very much to the Alteration (if not to the Deſtruction) of that Conſtitution which, we believe, the Supply in the other Part was given to preſerve.

2dly, Becauſe, we conceive, the tacking ſo many and different Matters to a Money-Bill, is not only contrary to all the Rules and Methods of Parliament, but highly dangerous both to the undoubted Prerogative of the Crown, and Right of this Houſe, putting it, as we conceive, in the Power of the Commons to make any Reſolutions of their own as neceſſary as any Supply given for the Support or Emergencies of State.

3dly, We know not how far the juſt Right any private Subject has to his Eſtate may be endanger'd by the Precedent of ſuch a Bill; for if the Titles ſo many Perſons have to their Eſtates may be determin'd by the Commons in a Money-Bill, without either Oath or Appeal, as, we conceive, in this Bill they are, we cannot apprehend, how any ſingle, private Subject, or Miniſter of State, can, for the future, be ſafe; which muſt needs be a weakening the Prince's Hands, and the legal Security every Man now has to his Eſtate."

Conferences between the two Houſes. What follow'd upon the ſecond reading of the Bill, was, the preparing the Alterations above-mention'd, and ſending them down to the Commons, who rejected them unanimouſly, and aſſign'd their Reaſons at a Conference for ſo doing. On the other Hand, the Lords, who were by no Means ſatisfy'd with thoſe Reaſons, demurr'd to the Bill: And the Commons, by way of Quickener, reſolv'd, To take the Report of their Commiſſioners concerning the Iriſh Forfeitures into farther Conſideration, and order'd a Liſt of the Privy-Council to be laid before them. On the 9th, however, the Lords deſir'd another Conference for preſerving a good Underſtanding between the two Houſes, in which their Lordſhips inſiſted warmly on their Amendments, and the Commons as warmly refus'd to admit them. A. D. 1700.

The next Day produc'd another Conference of the ſame Kind, which had the ſame Iſſue: As a laſt Expedient, therefore, the Lords demanded a free Conference, and order'd Counter-Reaſons to be drawn up in ſupport of the ſaid Amendments: But when the two Committees met, thoſe of the Commons, inſtead of making any Reply, ſignify'd, They had Orders, To return the Bill and leave it with their Lordſhips: Which being reported, produc'd a new Ferment among the Lords: For never were They more divided than now, between the Regard that was due to the Neceſſities of the State, and the Stimulations they felt as well from the King's Reſentments as their own; as appears by the Diviſion on the two ſeveral Queſtions which were put on the Iſſue of the Debate; namely, Whether they ſhould adhere to their Amendments? And whether they ſhould agree to the Bill without any Amendments? The Diviſion on the Former being, Contents, 43; Not Contents, 53: And on the Latter, not Contents, 34; Contents, 59. Nor did the Affair end here: For the Lords Norfolk, Mohun, Haverſham, Sey and Seal, Angleſey, Ferrers, Raby, Bridgewater, Colpeper, Howard, Southampton, Sandwich, Londſdale, Abergavenny, Stamford, Audley, Herbert, Richmond, Pembroke, Bolton, and North and Grey, proteſted againſt the Bill, for the Reaſons given to the Commons at the Conference; which Reaſons were as follow.

1ſt, Becauſe the Reaſons given by the Proteſt on paſſing the Bill. Commons againſt their Lordſhips Amendments, do no way relate to the Matter contain'd in the ſaid Amendments.

2dly, Becauſe tho' there be nothing in the ſaid Amendments relating to Aids and Supplies granted to his Majeſty in Parliament, yet the Commons have thought fit to take occaſion thereupon to aſſert a Claim to their ſole and entire Right, not only to the granting all Aids in Parliament, but that ſuch Aids are to be rais'd by ſuch Methods, and with ſuch Proviſions, as the Commons only think proper: If the ſaid Aſſertions were exactly true, (which their Lordſhips cannot allow) yet it could not, with good Reaſon, follow from thence, that the Lords may not alter, or leave out, according to their Amendments, when the ſaving Eſtates of innocent Perſons, and of ſuch as have been outlaw'd after their Death, makes ſuch Amendments neceſſary.

3dly, And the Lords think it unreaſonable and unjuſt to veſt in the Truſtees any greater, or

A. D. 1700. or other Eſtate, than was in the forfeiting Perſon, or than the King may legally have; ſince thereby not only many innocent Perſons, who come in by Deſcent or Purchaſe, or other valuable Conſiderations, might ſuffer equally as Criminals, but 'tis poſſible, that Men, who, with the utmoſt Hazard of their Lives, have been defending the Government, may forfeit as Traitors: And they cannot apprehend, that by any Law of this Land, or by any Rule of Reaſon or Juſtice, any Perſon ought to be outlaw'd after Death, ſince 'tis condemning a Man unheard, and allowing him no Opportunity of making his Innocence appear.

4thly, The Lords admit the Reſumption of the forfeited Eſtates in Ireland to be a Thing neceſſary, by reaſon of the great Debt due to the Army and Others, which they earneſtly deſire to ſee diſcharg'd, and are therefore very willing and deſirous to give their Conſents to any reaſonable Bill the Commons ſhall ſend them up to that Purpoſe: But the Lords can by no Means conſent, That the Commons ſhall take upon them to diſpoſe of any of the ſaid Forfeitures to any private Perſons, it being the ſole and undoubted Right of the Crown to be the Diſtributer of all Bounties, and being contrary to all the Laws and Courſe of Parliaments, to give Aids, Supplies, or Grants to any but the King only; and as the contrary Practice is totally new and unprecedented, ſo, in Proceſs of Time, it may become of the laſt ill Conſequence to the Public.

5thly, The Lords cannot agree to the Clauſes that create an Incapacity in the Commiſſioners or Managers of the Exciſe for ſitting in this Parliament, becauſe the Qualifications of Members to ſerve in Parliament, is a Thing (if proper to be meddled with at all) that hath been thought fit by the Commons to be in a Bill by itſelf; and the joining together, in a Money-Bill, Things ſo totally foreign to the Methods of raiſing Money, and to the Quantity or Qualification of the Sums to be rais'd, is wholly deſtructive of the Freedom of Debates, dangerous to the Privileges of the Lords, and to the Prerogative of the Crown: For by this Means, Things of the laſt ill Conſequence to the Nation, may be brought into Money-Bills; and yet neither the Lords, nor the Crown, be able to give their Negative to them, without hazarding the Public Peace and Security: And it ſeems a great Hardſhip to the Counties and Places who chuſe ſuch Members, to deprive them of their Services, ſince they knew them to be Commiſſioners of Exciſe at the Time they choſe them; and ſince the Commons admit them to be proper Perſons to ſerve either in Exciſe or Parliament, tho' not at the ſame Time: So that there ſeems to be no other Reaſon of diſtinguiſhing theſe Commiſſioners, but what is common to all other Officers of the Crown; and the Queſtion, Whether ſuch an Alteration may be convenient, muſt needs be a Doubt with the Lords, ſince the Commons have not been able this very Seſſion to ſatisfy themſelves with the Bill, and the Conſiderations they have entertain'd upon that Subject: The Lords do ſeriouſly conſider the Dangers and Inconveniencies that are likely to happen by the Loſs of this Bill, and by the Difference betwixt the two Houſes, and are heartily ſorry for them, and deſirous to avoid them by all the Means they can; as does manifeſtly appear, by having comply'd and overlook'd the Irregularities of Bills of the like Nature, and, at the ſame Time, by entering in their Books, to be ſeen by every Body, their juſt Senſe of the Wrong, and their Reſolutions of aſſerting that fundamental Right, of the Exerciſe of which there are many Precedents extant in their Books: But ſince they find, that ſuch their kind Intentions of maintaining a good Correſpondence with the Commons, has had no other Effect but to introduce greater Impoſitions upon them, and ſuch as will certainly prove deſtructive to the antient and excellent Conſtitution of our Government, ſince the Lords have no Objection to the Reſumption, nor no Deſign to invade the leaſt Right of the Commons, but only to defend their own, that they may tranſmit the Government and their own Rights and Privileges to their Poſterity, in the ſame State and Condition that they were deriv'd down to them from their Anceſtors; they think themſelves wholly diſcharg'd from being in the leaſt acceſſary to any ſuch Dangers or Inconveniencies, and conceive they are ſufficiently juſtify'd before God and Man, notwithſtanding ſuch Innovations and Invaſions upon our Conſtitution and our Laws, as muſt neceſſarily prove the Deſtruction of them."

Comments upon the whole Affair.

Upon this whole Proceeding, we have moreover certain Comments, which ought all to be inſerted, for the Sake of forming a right Notion of theſe Times.

Says B. Burnet, "Upon the Apprehenſions of This, (a Prorogation or Diſſolution as above) the Commons were beginning to fly out into high Votes, both againſt the Miniſters and the Favourites: The Lord Somers was attack'd a Second Time, but was brought off by a greater Majority, than had appear'd for him at the Beginning of the Seſſion. During the Debates about the Bill, he was ill; and the worſt Conſtruction poſſible was put on that: It was ſaid, he adviſ'd all the Oppoſition that was made to it in the Houſe of Lords; but that, to keep himſelf out of it, he feign'd that he was ill: Tho' his great Attendance in the Court of Chancery, the Houſe of Lords, and at the Council Table, had ſo impair'd his Health, that every Year, about that Time, he us'd to be brought very low, and diſabled from Buſineſs. The King ſeem'd reſolv'd to venture on all the ill Conſequences that might follow the loſing this Bill; tho' thoſe would probably have been fatal: As far as we could judge, either another Seſſion of that Parliament, or a new one, would have baniſh'd the Favourites, and begun the Bill anew, with the Addition of obliging the Grantees to refund all the mean Profits: Many in the Houſe of Lords, that in all other Things were very firm to the King, were for paſſing this [Vol. II. p. 239, 240.]

A. D. 1700. this Bill, notwithſtanding the King's Earneſtneſs againſt it, ſince they apprehended the ill Conſequences that were like to follow, if it was loſt. I was one of theſe, and the King was much diſpleas'd with me for it: I ſaid, I would venture his Diſpleaſure, rather than pleaſe him in that, which I fear'd would be the Ruin of his Government: I confeſs, I did not at that Time apprehend what Injuſtice lay under many of the Clauſes in the Bill, which appear'd afterwards ſo evidently, that the very ſame Perſons, who drove on the Bill, were convinc'd of them, and redreſs'd ſome of them in Acts that paſs'd in ſubſequent Seſſions: If I had underſtood that Matter aright and in Time, I had never given my Vote for ſo unjuſt a Bill: I only conſider'd it as a Hardſhip put on the King, many of his Grants being thus made void; ſome of which had not been made on good and reaſonable Conſiderations, ſo that they could hardly be excus'd, much leſs juſtify'd: I thought the Thing was a ſort of Force, to which it ſeem'd reaſonable to give way, at that Time, ſince we were not furniſh'd with an equal Strength to withſtand it: But when I ſaw afterwards what the Conſequences of this Act prov'd to be, I did firmly reſolve, never to conſent again to any Tack to a Money-Bill, as long as I liv'd. The King became ſullen upon all this, and upon the many Incidents that are apt to fall in upon Debates of this Nature: He either did not apprehend in what ſuch Things might end, or he was not much concern'd at it: His Reſentment, which was much provok'd, broke out into ſome Inſtances, which gave ſuch Handles to his Enemies, as they wiſh'd for; and they improv'd thoſe Advantages, which his ill Conduct gave them, with much Spite and Induſtry, ſo as to alienate the Nation from him. It was once in Agitation among the Party, to make an Addreſs to him againſt going beyond Sea; but even that was diverted with a malicious Deſign. Hitherto the Body of the Nation retain'd a great Meaſure of Affection to him: This was beginning to diminiſh, by his going ſo conſtantly beyond Sea, as ſoon as the Seſſion of Parliament was ended; tho' the War was now over. Upon this, it grew to be publicly ſaid, That he lov'd no Engliſhman's Face, nor his Company: So his Enemies reckon'd it was fit for their Ends to let that Prejudice go on, and encreaſe in the Minds of the People, till they might find a proper Occaſion to graft ſome bad Deſigns upon it."

[Cole's Mem. p. 121, 122.] Says Mr. Prior in a Letter to Lord Marchefter, dated April 10, "God knows how the Buſineſs will turn, or where this Violence of the Houſe of Commons will end. The Lords ſeem as yet to adhere to their Point: On Wednesday we expect to ſee the Iſſue of all This. Seymour plainly ſaid To-day, That the Original of all This, proceed from the Miniſters; and from the Chief of them, the Chancellor, many other angry Things of this Kind have been vented. —Our Friend (meaning Mr. Montagu) has ſaid nothing of late in the Houſe of Commons: My Lord Chancellor is very ſick. This is the Abbregé of our Caſe." And again, the next Day, in another Letter to the ſame Lord, "Yeſterday was, indeed, a great Criſis, (q) from the Morning, when it was doubtful, whether the Lords would adhere to their Amendments or no, the Commons fell directly upon Impeaching. The Perſons they nam'd, were my Lords Portland and Albemarle; the Articles upon which they were going; For procuring to themſelves exorbitant Grants. In this State the Affair laſted, till after the ſecond Conference with the Lords: And immediately upon the Managers returning from the Conference, the Houſe, tho' they thought the Lords would recede, lock'd themſelves up till Ten at Night, of which you ſee the good Effect in the Votes: They threw Fire about at every Body; had a great Mind to fling at our Friend Charles; you ſee what they would have done to my Lord Chancellor; and how Duke Schomberg and Lord Portland ſuffer in their Addreſs, That Strangers ſhould not be Privy-Counſellors. God knows whither this Heat would have gone, if it had not been timely diſſipated by every Body's ſtriving to come in: So that this Bill paſs'd: Upon the Main, we have Like for ſix Months longer: and Alors comme alors."

A. D. 1700.

There is ſtill another Citation to be made in its Place: But then we muſt here obſerve, That the Motion againſt the Lord Chancellor, was for an Addreſs to his Majeſty, To remove him from his Preſence and his Councils for ever: That the Motion for an Addreſs againſt Strangers, was to this Effect, That no Perſon, who was not a Native, except Prince George of Denmark, be admitted to his Majeſty's Councils in England or Ireland: That we are aſſur'd, the Compliance of the Lords, was owing to the Requeſt of the King, ſignify'd in a private Meſſage by Lord Albemarle, which does not ſquare with B. Burnet's Account: And that his Majeſty having given the Royal Aſſent to That and ſuch other Bills as the Seſſion had produc'd, the next Day commanded the Earl of Bridgewater (who had officiated as Speaker of the Houſe of Lords, during the Chancellor's Abſence) to prorogue the Parliament, which was (r) done accordingly, without a Speech; his Majeſty not thinking what they had done worth

[Boyer, Kennet, Oldmixon.]

Parliament prorogu'd without a Speech.

(q) Perhaps, inſtead of the Word from, the Words for in, ſhould have been us'd in this Place.

(r) "Before we leave this Seſſion of Parliament, we muſt take Notice of a Paſſage that made at that Time a great deal of Noiſe: The Commons having appointed one Mr. Sayburn to preach before them on the 30th of January, that Miniſter, who, it ſeems, was tainted with Republican Principles, inſtead of aſſerting the Rights and Prerogatives of Monarchy, and ſuiting his Sermon to the Occaſion, which was a Day of Humiliation for the Murder of King Charles I. by his rebellious Subjects, he exalted the Power of the People; preach'd up the exploded Opinions that were the firſt Cauſe of that bloody and horrid Parricide: and would have perſuaded his honourable Auditors, that the Obſervation of this Fact, which has always been religiouſly kept by all Parliaments, ſhould be utterly abolith'd. Beſides which it was remark'd, worth his Thanks; and, not unwiſely, avoiding to give any poſitive Proof in public of his Reſentment.

A. D. 1700.

Various Accounts of Lord Sommers's Diſgrace.

As to what follow'd hereupon in the Cabinet, it is variouſly and imperfectly told.

"The Leaders of the Tories [ſays B. Burnet] began to inſinuate to the Favourites, the Neceſſity of the King's changing the Miniſtry, in particular of removing the Lord Sommers, who, as he was now conſider'd as the Head of the Whigs, ſo his wiſe Counſels, and his modeſt way of laying them before the King, had gain'd him a great Share of his Eſteem and Confidence; and it was reckon'd, That the chief Strength of the Party, lay in his Credit with the King, and in the prudent Methods he took to govern the Party, and to moderate that Heat and thoſe Jealouſies with which the King had been ſo long diſguſted, in the firſt Years of his Reign." And again, afterwards: "But now the Tories ſtudied to get it infus'd into the King, That all the hard Things that had been of late put on him by the Parliament, were occaſion'd by the Hatred that was born to his Miniſters; and that if he would change Hands, and employ others, Matters might be ſoftned and mended in another Parliament: With this the Earl of Jerſey ſtudied to poſſeſs the Earl of Albemarle; and the Uneaſineſs the King was in, diſpos'd him to think, that if he ſhould bring in a Set of Tories into his Buſineſs, they would ſerve him with the ſame Zeal, and with better Succeſs, than the Whigs had done; and he hop'd to throw all upon the Miniſters, that were now to be diſmiſs'd.

The firſt Time that the Lord Sommers had recover'd ſo much Health as to come to Court, the King told him, it ſeem'd neceſſary for his Service, that he ſhould part with the Seals, and he wiſh'd, that he would make the delivering them up his own Act: He excus'd himſelf in this; all his Friends had preſs'd him, not to offer them, ſince that ſeem'd to ſhew Fear or Guilt: So he begg'd the King's Pardon, if in this he follow'd their Advice; but he told the King, That, whenſoever he ſhould ſend a Warrant under his Hand, commanding him to deliver them up, he would immediately obey it: The Order was brought by Lord Jerſey, and, upon it, the Seals were ſent to the King. Thus the Lord Sommers was diſcharg'd from this great Office, which he had held ſeven Years, with a high Reputation for Capacity, Integrity, and Diligence: He was in all Reſpects the greateſt Man I had ever known in that Poſt: His being thus remov'd, was much cenſur'd by all, but thoſe who had procur'd it: Our Princes uſed not to diſmiſs Miniſters, who ſerv'd them well, unleſs they were preſs'd to it by a Houſe of Commons, that refus'd to give Money, till they were laid aſide. But here a Miniſter (who was always vindicated by a great Majority in the Houſe of Commons, when he was charg'd there, and who had ſerv'd both with Fidelity and Succeſs, and was indeed cenſur'd for nothing ſo much, as for his being too compliant with the King's Humour and Notions, or at leaſt for being too ſoft or too feeble in repreſenting his Errors to him) was remov'd without a Shadow of Complaint againſt him. This was done with ſo much haſte, that thoſe who had prevail'd with the King to do it, had not yet concerted who ſhould ſucceed him: They thought, that all the great Men of the Law were aſpiring to that high Poſt, ſo that any one, to whom it ſhould be offer'd, would certainly accept of it: But they ſoon found they were miſtaken; for what, by reaſon of the Inſtability of the Court, what by reaſon of the juſt Apprehenſions Men might have of ſucceeding ſo great a Man, both Holt (Lord Chief Juſtice) and Trevor (Attorney General) to whom the Seals were offer'd, excus'd themſelves. It was Term-time, ſo a Vacancy in that Poſt put Things in ſome Confuſion. A temporary Commiſſion was granted to the three Chief Judges, to judge in the Court of Chancery; and after a few Days, the Seals were given to Sir Nathan Wright, in whom there was nothing equal to the Poſt, much leſs to him who had lately fill'd it. The King's Inclinations ſeem'd now turn'd to the Tories, and to a new Parliament: It was for ſome Time in the Dark, who had the Confidence, and gave Directions to Affairs; we, who look'd on, were often diſpos'd to think, that there was no Direction at all, but that every Thing was left to take its Courſe, and that all was given up to Hazard."

According to Mr. Oldmixon, "The King had ſome Time before the Prorogation of the Parliament, given my Lord Sommers a Hint of the Neceſſity he ſhould be under to part with him, in order to accommodate Matters with thoſe in the Oppoſition: And he took the Liberty to ſpeak to his Majeſty in Words to this Effect: "That he knew very well "what his Enemies aim'd at, by their abu-"ſing and perſecuting him as they had of "late done; that the Seal was his greateſt "Crime, and if he quitted it, he ſhould be "forgiven: But, knowing what ill Uſe would "be made of it if it were put into their "Hands, he was reſolv'd, with his Majeſty's "Permiſſion, to keep it in Defiance of their "Malice, and to ſtand all the Trials they "ſhould put upon him, with the Supppnt "of his Innocence, and the Hopes of being "ſerviceable to his Majeſty: That he fear'd "them not; and did not doubt but if he "would be as firm to his Friends as they "would be to him, they ſhould be able to "carry whatever Points he had in View for "the public Welfare in a new Parliament." The King ſhook his Head a little, as a Sign remark'd, that he omitted praying for the Parliament, and every Branch of the Royal Family. The next Day a Motion being made, and the Queſtion put, That the Thanks of the Houſe be given to Mr. Stephens for his Sermon, it was carry'd in the Negative, and reſolv'd, That for the future, no Perſon be recommended to preach before the Houſe, who is under the Dignity of a Dean in the Church, and has not taken his Degree of Doctor in Divinity." Life of King William, Vol. III. p. 449, 450.

A. D. 1700. Sign of his Diffidence, and only said, It must be so." (s)

Boyer, and after him Kennet, tells the Story thus, "The King sent the Earl of Portland to the Lord Chancellor Sommers, to demand the Great Seal of him: Whether his Majesty made this Step by his own Determination, or by the Impulse of his New Favourite, who headed a growing Party, History cannot affirm; but 'tis most certain, that thereby his Majesty lost abundance of true Friends, without gaining any real ones."

In Cole's Memoirs, which were either gutted to his Hand by those who knew their Consequence more than he, or which are very unfairly given by him to the Public, there is not one Letter which turns on this great Incident: And this is so much the more strange, because Prior, writing to Lord Manchester, April 18, says, "At the End of a Session of Parliament, you know, we always talk of a Change of the Ministry, we do so at present, but upon what Ground I know not." As also, because his Lordship, in his Reply, interjects, "I think, instead of a Change in the Ministers, we should have a New Parliament: That would be more for the King's Service." And because Prior again, on the 2d of May following, (as if that Minister was already appriz'd of Lord Sommers's Disgrace) writes as follows, "My Lord Chief Justice Holt having been here, (at Hampton-Court that is to say, where the King then was) and with the King in private, has given People occasion to say, That he has refus'd the Seals: If it be so or not, I cannot say; but as yet the Seals are not dispos'd of."

Various Facts and Circumstances serving to illustrate the Cabinet-History of these Times.

The Reader, out of all this Matter, may reason and judge for himself: But for his farther Assistance, it may be recollected, 1st, That, notwithstanding the moderate and complaisant Part which Lord Sommers had acted in relation to the King, he had, on so many Occasions, preferr'd the Interests of his Party to the Inclinations of the King, that he could not but partake of his Majesty's Displeasure, as often as he interpos'd his Credit and Services as a Skreen for them; consequently, was so much the easier shook by the Storm which his Enemies rais'd against him. 2dly, That if, according to Burnet, his Lordship pleaded the Advice of his Friends as an Excuse, for not resigning the Seals at his Majesty's Instance, that Advice was perfectly conformable to a Maxim of his own: For he himself had endeavour'd to dissuade Lord Orford and Montagu from resigning. 3dly, That Holt was rather a Rival than a Friend to Sommers, as appears by his whole Conduct in the Bankers Case, and more especially in the House of Lords, where it was brought by Appeal during the last (t) Session; and where he was made use of to lower the Chancellor's Credit as a Lawyer: So that if the Seals were offer'd to Holt, it can scarce be presum'd, That he refus'd them in Deference to Lord Sommers's superior Ability. 4thly, That, after his Majesty had remov'd the Latter, he continued still in pursuit of some Temperament to pacify the Whigs; as appears by that other Document above referr'd to, which is now to be inserted, and which is of no less Authority, than that of a Letter under the King's own Hand to Lord Galway, at the very Interval when the Disposal of the Seals was yet in Suspence. A. D. 1700.

Hampton-Court, May 11. 1700.

[Tindal.] "It is a good while since I writ to you last: The Reason is, that, being always uncertain of the Issue of the last Session of Parliament, I was unwilling to answer any of your Letters: You may judge, what Vexation all their extraordinary Proceedings gave me, and I assure you, your being depriv'd of what I gave you, with so much Pleasure, was not the least of my Griefs: I hope, however, that I shall be in a Condition to acknowledge the good Services you have done me, and you may depend upon it, I shall earnestly seek occasion so to do: It ought to be some Satisfaction to you, in the just Resentment of what concerns you, that no Body could blame your Conduct; on the contrary, all appear'd satisfy'd with it, and the Vote, which passed in Anger the last Day, concerns you but indirectly: And I can assure you, that you was in no way the Occasion of it. There have been so many Intrigues, in this last Session, that, without having been on the Spot, and well inform'd of every thing, it cannot be conceiv'd. It will be impossible for me to continue the Commission of the Lords Justices in Ireland, as it is at present; so I have resolv'd to send thither the Duke of Shrewsbury as Viceroy, and that you command the Army under him: Do not think that this will be a Degradation; no Body here will take it to be so; and I know that every one wishes it, and believes it absolutely necessary for my Service: I am fully persuaded, as I hope that you will not refuse to accept of this Command, nor relinquish my Service: I assure you, I never had more occasion, than at present, of Persons of your Capacity and Fidelity: I hope I shall

(s) "The Gentleman from whom I had this Incident, had it from my Lord Sommers himself; and I have the more Reason to believe it, because their Intimacy had been so great, as that my Lord, when he was Solicitor-General, was very near concluding a Treaty of Marriage with a young Lady that Gentleman's Kinswoman; which I speak of my own Knowledge, and the rather, because it is probably the only Treaty of that Kind, which his Lordship ever enter'd into." Oldmix. Vol. II. p. 208.

(t) "On the 6th of December, 1699, there was an Appeal from the Determination to the House of Lords, and, after hearing Council and the Sentiments of the Judges, a Day was set apart for debating it. Lord Sommers, with his usual Modesty and Candour, open'd his Reasons to the House, and some Lords, in an unprecedented Manner, call'd upon Holt, Chief Justice, to answer him, tho' a Peer of their own Body, and Chancellor: But Sommers, not daunted by that peculiar Circumstance, reply'd upon Holt with great Spirit and Energy. The Judgment however was revers'd on the 23d of January, and a Protest enter'd: No Liberate or Warrant for payment issued upon this Reversal; but in the same Session an Act pass'd to apply the Revenue of Excise, as a Security for 820,000*l.* and a weekly Payment of 3,700*l.* to the Civil List, on account of the Necessity of Affairs, subject, at the same Time, to the Charge of an annual Payment of three per Cent. on the whole Principal due to the Bankers, from and after the 25th of December, 1705, which Principal was made redeemable on payment of a Moiety." T. M. Rep. cited by Mr. Tindal.

A. D. 1700. shall find Opportunities to give you Marks of my Eſteem and Friendſhip, and I would not engage you in this, were I not aſſur'd that no Hurt can happen to you from it: But I know it will meet with a general Approbation, and doubt not your Friends will ſay the ſame, and I am glad to tell you, you have a great many, and among all Parties.

WILLIAM R."

5thly, That whatever Temperament the King propos'd to the Party, his beſtowing the Seals on Sir Nathan Wright, which was done on the 21ſt of May, render'd it of none Effect: For, whether the King (as it has been ſaid) offer'd them to Treby, who was a Tool of their own, and Treby was indue'd to refuſe them, that his Majeſty might be forc'd to reinſtate Sommers, or not, it is certain, That his Grace of Shrewſbury was ſo far from accepting the Lieutenancy of Ireland, that he reſign'd the Chamberlain's Key, which he ſent up to the King by Mr. Secretary Vernon, inſtead of delivering it into his Majeſty's own Hand; and then, and not till then, put his Reſolution in force of going abroad, in order to the Re-eſtabliſhment of his Health.

6thly, That, notwithſtanding this Act of Uncomplaiſance, his Majeſty had recourſe to other Expedients to conciliate the good Graces of theſe Importants: For he oblig'd Lord Jerſey to accept of the Chamberlain's Key in lieu of the Secretary's Seals: He authoris'd Vernon to officiate in both Provinces, till he could be able to determine, who ſhould be his Collegue: He made Lord Romney, his old Favourite, if any Engliſhman in his Service ever deſerv'd that Name, Groom of the Stole: And he would have perſuaded Lord Sunderland to come to Town, in order to concert with him ſuch farther Palliatives as might beſt moderate the Fervor of the Times: But he excus'd himſelf; being, as it was then ſaid, unwilling, That what was done ſhould be imputed to his Advice.

Cole's Mem. P. 155.

And, laſtly, That his Majeſty, finding himſelf thus abandon'd by his old Friends, and being undetermin'd in what Degree to confide in his new ones, reſolv'd once more to take Breath in Holland; carrying with him, as uſual, none but Blathwayte, his Secretary at War, to act under him as an Engliſh Miniſter; and leaving the Regency in Truſt with the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Lord Keeper Wright, the Lord Preſident (t) Pembroke, the Lord Privy Seal Lonſdale, the Lord Steward Devonſhire, the firſt Lord of the Admiralty Bridgewater, the Governor to the Duke of Glouceſter Marlborough, and the firſt Lord of the Treaſury Tankerville: So that the Secretary of State, Vernon, tho' officiating for both Provinces, was not permitted to ſhare in that high Honour.

Progreſs of the Second Treaty of Partition.

And now it is Time to reſume the Courſe of the Second Partition-Treaty, which in this Interval, was not only brought to Perfection, but began to be in Operation.

And firſt it appears, That the extraordinary Deference manifeſted to the good Will and Pleaſure of France, in the private Audience which Lord Manchester had ſought and obtain'd, had all the Effect expected from it: That is to ſay, it drew Aſſurances from M. de Torcy, as well as from the King, That the ſlow Proceedings of the States, had been ſufficiently explain'd and accounted for: That M. de Tallard would be order'd to return to the Britiſh Court, to reſume his miniſterial Function there: And that the Moſt Chriſtian King was in the beſt Diſpoſition imaginable, to live in the cloſeſt Terms of Friendſhip with his Majeſty.

But, in proportion as the Impreſſion, which this extraordinary Sweetener had made, began to wear out, their Impatience to bring ſo deſirable a Meaſure to an Iſſue, began to diſcover itſelf again: They demurr'd to every little Point Lord Manchester had in charge to ſolicit: They grew importunate in their own Demands: They urg'd, They had now a good Opportunity of managing for themſelves at the Court of Spain, the Queen being out of Humour with the Court of Vienna, (and That of London ſcarce having one Perſon in it which did not eſpouſe the Reſentments of M. de Canaillet, their late Embaſſador to King William): And when Lord Manchester would have palliated Matters, by inſinuating, That if M. de Tallard had not quitted Holland ſo abruptly, probably the States would have been quicker in their Motions, M. de Torcy bluntly reply'd, They had nothing to do with the States, having only treated with England: (and yet, as we have before ſeen, they would not ſign with England, without the Concurrence of Holland) That M. de Bonrepos was return'd to Paris, ſo that they had no Miniſter there; ſeeming (theſe are Lord Manchester's own Words) to inſiſt very much on this Point, That it was not in the leaſt their Buſineſs: That ſeveral Months were paſs'd ſince the Time They had reaſon to think this Matter would have been finiſh'd: That they had Propoſals of Treaties from all Parts, but that the King was more deſirous of treating with England, than with any other Power, &c.

Cole's Mem. P. 90. 91.

The Dutch agree to it with ſome Reſerves.

In the mean Time, however, M. de Tallard was diſpatch'd with new Inſtructions to London; and ſoon found by Experience, That the driving England into the Toils, was the way to drive Holland too: For the Province of Zealand firſt, and that of Holland afterwards, conſented to become Parties in the Treaty, under certain Reſerves, namely, That M. de Tallard ſhould be ſent over to the Hague, in order to put the laſt Hand to it there: That when ſign'd and ratify'd, it ſhould be regiſter'd in the Parliament of Paris, &c.

But even theſe Reſerves held the Matter in Suſpence ſome Time longer: For the Court of France would not ſo much as hear at firſt of the Regiſtering Point: Declaring, with ſome Warmth, That the Parliament of Paris, (t) About this Time made a Knight of the Garter, together with the Earl of Albemarle.

A. D. 1700. Paris was no more than a Court of Juſtice: And alſo, That there was a Neceſſity of keeping the Matter a Secret, which could not be done, if any of them was comply'd with. On the other Hand, ſtill ſuch an Expedient had been adopted in Holland, as render'd the ſaid enregiſtering Clauſe palatable to France, namely, That the Treaty ſhould be ſo enregiſter'd, as ſoon as the Emperor had acceded to it; and Till France had agreed, That the Treaty ſhould firſt be ſign'd by the Engliſh and French Miniſters at London, M. de Tallard, according to his own Repreſentations, could not undertake for the Succeſs of his Endeavours: But, as ſoon as theſe Temperaments were admitted on all Sides, and the Count de Briord was diſpatch'd by the Moſt Chriſtian King, to officiate as his Plenipotentiary at the Hague, England, agreeable to what King William had before offer'd, made no Difficulty to leap the Gulph, nor Holland to follow her Exemple.

The Treaty ſign'd. It was the 21ſt of February, O. S. or 3d of March, N. S. when the Treaty was ſign'd at London, by the Earls of Portland and Jerſey, and M. de Tallard: And on the 25th of March following, N. S. it was ſign'd by M. de Briord, and the Plenipotentiaries for the States at the Hague.

An Abſtract thereof. To confirm by new Obligations the good Intelligence re-eſtabliſh'd between his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, his Britannic Majeſty, and their High Mightineſſes, by the late Treaty of Ryſwick, and to prevent, by ſeaſonable Precautions, ſuch Incidents as might occaſion a new War in Europe, were in the Preamble declar'd to be the Motives of making it: And the Matters ſtipulated were compris'd in Sixteen Articles, to the following Effect: To wit, The Treaty of Ryſwick was ſolemnly confirm'd; and, in caſe his Catholic Majeſty ſhould die without Children, the Dauphin was to have, for himſelf and his Heirs, the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, and alſo the Iſlands on the Italian Coaſt, belonging to Spain, namely, St. Stephano, Porto Hercole, Orbitello, Telamone, Porto Longone, and Piombine, the City and Marquiſate of Final; and the Province of Guipuſcoa. The Dauphin was likewiſe to have the Duchies of Lorrain and Bar; and the Duchy of Milan was to be given to the Duke of Lorrain and his Heirs, in lieu of Lorrain and Bar; but the County of Bitche was to remain in ſovereignty to the Prince of Vaudemont. The Archduke Charles was to have, for himſelf and his Heirs, the Kingdom of Spain, and all that belong'd to it, in, and out of Europe. The Emperor was to have three Months Time given him to come into this Treaty: And, in caſe the Archduke ſhould die without Children, the Succeſſion was to go to ſome other Child of the Emperor, to whom he ſhould be pleas'd to give it; except him, who ſhould be Emperor or King of the Romans: And this Part of the Monarchy of Spain, was alſo never to go to the Prince who ſhould be either King of France, or Dauphin. In caſe the King of Spain dy'd without Iſſue, the whole of the Succeſſion was to remane in the State it ſhould then be in: None of the Claimants were to ſeize any Part; but, on conforming A. D. 1700. to the Conditions of the Treaty, might take Poſſeſſion of the Portion allotted to them by it: And in caſe of Difficulty, the Contracting were to uſe their utmoſt Endeavours to remove it by Force of Arms: In caſe any of the ſaid Parties ſhould be attack'd, on Account of the ſaid Treaty, or on Account of carrying it into Execution, all were to aſſiſt each other with all their Forces, and to render themſelves Guaranties thereof: All Kings, Princes, and States were to become Parties in it that would: The ſaid Two Kings and States-General were at Liberty to invite what Powers they pleas'd not only to accede to it, but alſo to become joint Guarantees: If any of the Princes concern'd in the Partition ſhould form any Enterpriſe to aggrandiſe themſelves at the Expence of the reſt, under any Pretext whatſoever, the Guaranty ſhould be underſtood to extend ſo far, that all the Kings, Princes and States, who accepted thereof, ſhould be oblig'd to employ their Forces againſt any ſuch Enterpriſer; and for the Maintenance of the Regulations contain'd in theſe Articles, and in caſe any Prince whatſoever ſhould oppoſe the Partition ſo to be made, the ſaid Two Kings and States ſhould be oblig'd to co-operate againſt him with all their Forces, and ſhould agree, after the ſigning of the preſent Treaty, on the Proportion each was to contribute by Sea and Land, to ſuch Service.

This was the Subſtance of the firſt Fourteen Articles; and the Two laſt regarded the Enregiſtering the ſaid Treaty, &c. and the Exchange of the Ratifications.

A ſeperate Article. There was alſo a ſeperate Article, in which the contracting Parties provided, 1ſt, That in caſe the King of Spain ſhould refuſe Lamberty 4 to enter into the ſaid Treaty, and contrarywiſe ſhould procede to demoliſh the Towns, Places and Ports belonging to the Dauphin's Share, the ſaid Parties ſhould oppoſe the ſame by all Sorts of Means. 2dly, That They would employ their good Offices with his Catholic Majeſty, that the Provinces which compos'd the Dauphin's Share, might not be taken out of the Hands of the Governors which then held them; or in caſe any Change was made, it might be made only in Favor of native Spaniards: And, 3dly, That his Britannic Majeſty and the States-General, ſhould engage to keep, by way of Depoſit, the ſolemn Acts of the Moſt Chriſtian King and of the Dauphin, which in Conformity to the 4th Article of the Treaty, were to be put into their Hands: And at the Time they were ſo put into their Hands, to declare, That neither the Emperor nor the King of the Romans ſhould be admitted into the ſaid Treaty, till they alſo had in like Manner executed the ſolemn Acts requir'd of them by the Sixth Article, which were to be expreſs'd in ſuch Terms, as ſhould be ſatisfactory to the Parties concern'd, agreeable to a Model thereunto annex'd.

Both this Article and Model were formally ſign'd by the ſeveral Miniſters both at London and the Hague, who ſign'd the Treaty,

A. D. 1700. as was also the (w) secret Article which follows, to wit.

And also a secret Article.

"His Britannic Majesty, his Most Christian Majesty, and the Lords the States-General, having a Desire to prevent a War, which might be occasion'd by the Death of the King of Spain, without Children, have agreed on a Treaty about the Succession, &c. And, as it is said in the Fourth Article of the said Treaty, That the Duchies of Lorrain and Bar shall be yielded to the Dauphin, in exchange for the Duchy of Milan, which should be given to the Duke of Lorrain; and, as the Two Kings and the States-General think, that nothing is more proper for the Ends propos'd, they will make use of all their Interest, either jointly or seperately, to engage the said Duke of Lorrain to consent to it.

But, as it is necessary to determine, who shall be the Prince to whom the Duchy of Milan shall be committed, and what shall be given to the Dauphin for Reparation, in the room of the Duchies of Lorrain and Bar, if, against all likelihood, the Duke of Lorrain will not give his Consent to this Exchange, notwithstanding the good Offices and continual Applications, repeated during the Life of the King of Spain, or to the Time hereunder agreed to after his Death; the said Two Kings and the States-General, above-named, have agreed, That, in that Case, his Britannic Majesty and the States-General shall chuse one of these Alternatives, at the End of the said Term, after the Death of his Catholic Majesty; that is, to consign the Dutchy of Milan into the Hands of the Elector of Bavaria, to enjoy it for him, his Children, Males or Females, his Heirs, Successors, and Descendants, Males or Females, born or to be born, for ever, in intire Property and full Possession; ordering, in exchange, Navarre, to the Dauphin, to enjoy it, he, and his Children, Males and Females; his Heirs, Successors, or Descendants, born, and to be born, in intire Property, and full Possession; or, instead of Navarre, the City and Duchy of Luxemburg, and the County of Chiny: Or else to give the Duchy of Milan to the Duke of Savoy, to enjoy it, for his Children, Males and Females, his Heirs, Successors, and Descendants, Males or Females, born, or to be born, in intire Property and full Possession; ordering, in exchange, for the Share of the Dauphin, the City of Nice, the Valley of Barcelonetta, and the Duchy of Savoy, to enjoy it in Perpetuity, and full Possession, he, his Children, Heirs, Successors, and Descendants, Males or Females, born, and to be born.

Moreover, the Two Kings and the States-General have agreed by this secret Article, That, tho' it is not said in the Seventh Article of the said Treaty, sign'd at London the 21st of February, and at the Hague the 25th of March, 1700, that a Prince shall be agreed on, to whom the said Portion of the most serene Archduke shall be given, in case the Emperor and the King of the Romans will not subscribe to the said Treaty after the Term of three Months shall be expir'd, to be counted from the Day on which it shall be notify'd: Nevertheless, the Emperor shall be allow'd to subscribe, during two Months, to be reckon'd from the Day on which the Death of his Catholic Majesty shall be made known to him by his Britannic Majesty, his Most Christian Majesty, and the Lords the States-General: But, in case his Imperial Majesty refuses to enter into it in the Time above-nam'd, the Two Kings and the States-General shall agree, at the End of the Time above-appointed, on a Prince, to whom the said Portion shall be given, and the Remainder of what is in the said Seventh Article, from which what is above-said does not derogate, shall be punctually executed.

It is further agreed, That, if the most serene Archduke should go into Spain, or enter into the Duchy of Milan, tho' it is said in the Eighth Article of the said Treaty, to which this secret Article refers, that he cannot go thither before the Death of his Catholic Majesty, but by the common Consent of the Two Kings and the States-General, his Britannic Majesty and the States-General engage themselves to use all their possible Endeavours and Might, and even to come to Acts of Hostility, if it be necessary; in short, to take all convenient Measures, in concert with his Most Christian Majesty, to oblige his Catholic Majesty and the Spaniards to send him back out of Spain, or out of the Duchy of Milan, without any delay.

This Article shall have the same Force as if it had been, Word for Word, inserted in the Treaty, to which it refers, and shall be enregistered by the Parliament of Paris, immediately after the Death of his Catholic Majesty without Children."

Such was the Scope and Purport of this unprecedented Negotiation: And before we can be at Liberty to consider, whether King William acted most as a Frenchman, a Dutchman, or an Englishman in it, we must of necessity turn to B. Burnet, who not only undertakes to let the World into his Majesty's secret Motives, but also asserts, That he had most of them from his own Mouth: And, in Deference to the very Shadow of so great an Authority, it will be fit to make use of the Bishop's own Words, which are as follow.

Burnet's Account of this Transaction from the King's own Mouth.

"While the King was at Loo this Summer, a new Treaty was set on foot, concerning the Succession to the Crown of Spain: The King, and the States of the United Provinces, saw the Danger to which they would be expos'd, if they should engage in a new War, while we were yet under the vast Debts that the Former had brought upon us: The King's Ministers in the House of Commons assur'd him, That it would be a very difficult Thing to bring them to enter into a new War, for maintaining the Rights of the House of Austria. During the Debates (w) Not one of these Particulars is to be found in the English Collection of Treaties.

A. D. 1700. bates concerning the Army, when ſome mention'd the Danger of that Monarchy falling into the Hands of a Prince of the Houſe of Bourbon, it was ſet up for a Maxim, That it would be of no Conſequence to the Affairs of Europe, who was King of Spain, whether a Frenchman or a German: And that as ſoon as the Succeſſor ſhould come within Spain, he would become a true Spaniard, and be govern'd by the Maxims and Intereſts of that Crown: So that there was no Proſpect of being able to infuſe into the Nation an Apprehenſion of the Conſequence of that Succeſſion. The Emperor had a very good Claim; but as he had little Strength to ſupport it by Land, ſo he had none at all by Sea; and his Treaſure was quite exhauſted, by his long War with the Turk: The French drew a great Force towards the Frontiers of Spain, and they were reſolv'd to march into it, upon that King's Death: There was no Strength ready to oppoſe them, yet they ſeem'd willing to compound the Matter: But they ſaid, the Conſideration muſt be very valuable, that could make them deſiſt from ſo great a Pretenſion; and both the King and the States thought it was a good Bargain, if, by yielding up ſome of the leſs important Branches of that Monarchy, they could ſave thoſe in which they were moſt concern'd which were Spain itſelf, the Weſt-Indies, and the Netherlands. The French ſeem'd willing to accept of the Dominions in and about Italy, with a Part of the Kingdom of Navarre, and to yield up the reſt to the Emperor's ſecond Son, the Archduke Charles: The Emperor enter'd into the Treaty, for he ſaw he could not hope to carry the whole Succeſſion entire; but he preſs'd to have the Duchy of Milan, added to his hereditary Dominions in Germany: The Expedient that the King propos'd was, That the Duke of Lorrain ſhould have the Duchy of Milan, and that France ſhould accept of Lorrain inſtead of it: He was the Emperor's Nephew, and would be entirely in his Intereſts: The Emperor did not agree to this, but yet he preſs'd the King, not to give over the Treaty, and to try if he could make a better Bargain for him: Above all Things, he recommended Secrecy; for he well knew how much the Spaniards would be offended, if any Treaty ſhould be own'd, that might bring on a diſmembring of their Monarchy; for tho' they were taking no Care to preſerve it, in whole or in part, yet they could not bear the having any Branch torn from it. The King reckon'd that the Emperor, with the other Princes of Italy, might have ſo much Intereſt in Rome, as to ſtop the Pope's giving the Inveſture of the Kingdom of Naples: And which way ſoever that Matter might end, it would oblige the Pope to ſhew great Partiality, either to the Houſe of Auſtria or the Houſe of Bourbon; which might occaſion a Breach among them, with other Conſequences, that might be very happy to the whole Proteſtant Intereſt: Any War that might follow in Italy, would be at a great Diſtance from us, and in a Country that we had no Reaſon to regard much: Beſides, that the Fleets of England and Holland muſt come, in concluſion, to be the Arbiters of the Matter. A. D. 1700.

Theſe were the King's ſecret Motives, for I had MOST of them from his own Mouth: The French conſented to this Scheme; and if the Emperor would have agreed to it, his Son, the Archduke, was immediately to go to Spain, to be conſider'd as the Heir of that Crown: By theſe Articles, ſign'd both by the King of France and the Dauphin, they bound themſelves, not to accept of any Will, Teſtament, or Donation, contrary to this Treaty, which came to be call'd the Partition Treaty. I had the Original in my Hands, which the Dauphin ſign'd."

The Terms, Will, Teſtament, and Donation, it muſt be own'd are very emphatical: But if no ſuch Terms are to be found in the Act of Renunciation, which was prepar'd by the contracting Parties, for the Signature of the Emperor, on his Acceſſion thereto, (as it is certain there are not) it may be fairly inferr'd, That the Biſhop truſted to his Memory in compoſing this Paragraph, inſtead of laying the ſaid Original before his Eyes, as he ought to have done. Then as to the Archduke's immediate going to Spain, in caſe the Emperor agreed to the Partition, the Secret-Article above inſerted, ſhews, That no one Circumſtance was more cautiouſly or expreſſly provided againſt than That; and if the French Court did afterwards ſeem to relent a little on that Head, it was by way of voluntary Conceſſion, and the Merit of it, if any, as we ſhall ſee in its Place, belong'd only to themſelves. And, laſtly, as to the Emperor's entering into the Treaty, which his Lordſhip ſo confidently affirms, all the Authorities extant are diametrically oppoſite to that Affirmation. For Exemple: In the (x) Ninth Letter of King Lewis to M. de Briord at the Hague, dated May 10, (N. S.) his Majeſty writes as follows, "M. le Comte de Briord, your Letter of the 6th of this Month, (May) will not ſuffer me to doubt, That the Penſioner has not forwarded the neceſſary Orders to the Sieur Hop (the Dutch Miniſter at the Imperial Court) for the Direction of his Conduct, as to the Execution of the Treaty: I have inform'd you of Thoſe which I have given on that Head to the Marquis de Villars; the Principal is, That they ſhould Both act in concert: But then I am of Opinion, That the Communication ſhould be made ſeperately; that the Emperor ſhould receive it from my Envoy forthwith; and afterwards from the Envoy of the States-General, in the Name of the King of England, and of his Maſters; Explain'd from authentic Papers.

(x) The whole Collection was publiſh'd at the Hague in the Year 1718, partly in Cypher: But, tho' thoſe Parts are generally deciphered by way of Note at the Bottom of the Page, That I might alſo know, how far thoſe Notes might be rely'd upon, I call'd in the Aſſiſtance of my Friend Dr. Gregory Sharpe, whoſe leaſt Accompliſhment is a Maſtery in the Art of Deciphering, and who had the Goodneſs to re-examine the whole Collection, to correct what was erroneous, and ſupply what was defective, as far as the Data in ſo ſhort a Tract would give Leave.

A. D. 1699. Maſters; who is alſo to urge every cogent Reaſon which ought to induce the Emperor to ſubſcribe to the Meaſures taken for the Maintenance of the Peace. The Count de Tallard has agreed, (with the Court of England muſt be underſtood) That neither the ſecret Article, nor the ſeperate Article, ſhall be communicated; and for that Reaſon M. de Villars is not, for the preſent, to be made acquainted with the Contents of them."

By the way, to account for Mr. Hop's acting in this double Capacity on this important Occaſion, it ought to be known, That England had no Miniſter at the Imperial Court at this Juncture, unleſs the Secretary of the laſt Envoy, who ſtill remain'd at Vienna, might be call'd one: And farther, that the Moſt Chriſtian King had inſtructed M. de Tallard, to obtain a Declaration here, That when a Miniſter ſhould be ſent thither from hence, (as Mr. Sutton ſoon after was) he ſhould uſe no Language there but what was conformable to That us'd by Meſſieurs de Villars and Hop; which is a new Proof, That the Emperor neither did nor could enter into the Treaty till after it was made; when, to ſpeak properly, it was rather to be impos'd upon him than communicated to him.

England had then no Miniſter at Vienna.

[Lettres de Louis XIV. au M. Briord, p. 13.]

Beſides: Lord Manchester, in a Letter to Lord Jerſey, dated from Paris, May 8, expreſſes himſelf as follows: "I deſir'd, He (M. de Torcy) would let me know when He would mention the late Treaty to the Emperor's Miniſter, and what Meaſures they intended to take, that I might act conformable to them: He ſaid, He ſhould not take Notice of it, till next Tueſday Se'nnight, that (for, when) they would ſend Orders to M. de Villars, (with a Copy of the Treaty) to communicate it to the Emperor, and to ſend back the Courier at the Expiration of Eight Days, in caſe he had no Anſwer, and to declare, That the King ſhould look upon it as a Refuſal: That leſt the Emperor might engage the Pope, the French Embaſſador at Rome is to communicate it alſo, and to deſire it may be kept a Secret; that they think proper to act in the ſame Manner with the Republic of Venice; and they will impart it to their Embaſſador here, about the ſame Time they mention it to the Emperor's Miniſter: As for Spain, they thought it not yet proper. He ſaid, They ſhould now ſoon ſee the Succeſs of this great Affair; and the King (William meaning) would have the Honor of it; and the Caſe was extremely chang'd in Two Years: That the French King had now all the Obligations and Intereſt to wiſh for the Life and Welfare of our King; aſſuring me of the great Concern He was under ſome Time this Winter, when they hear'd from M. de Tallard, That he was a little indiſpos'd: This, I take, is not unlikely, it being plainly their Intereſt; elſe I ſhould not eaſily be perſuaded of their good Intentions."

Again: In another Letter, dated May 19, his Excellency ſays, "Yeſterday M. de Torcy acquainted the Emperor's Miniſter of the whole Affair: He ſeem'd mightily ſurpriz'd, and complain'd much of the Proceedings of our King; taking Notice of the many Engagements that had been made between our Maſter and him." It is true, M. de Torcy's Anſwer, which follows, as recited in the ſame Letter, creates ſome little Perplexity; for the ſaid Recital is made in theſe Words: "To which M. de Torcy anſwered, That He thought he had no Reaſon to complain, after what had paſs'd on that Subject at Vienna; and that the Emperor had been inform'd of every Thing that was now agreed to: That this Matter was not of a new Nature: For that there had been a ſecret Treaty between the Emperor and France concerning the Succeſſion of Spain in 1668." But then there is a glaring Falſhood in this Anſwer of M. de Torcy's, if it was really ſuch as it is here repreſented: For, as we have already ſeen, when the Treaty was to be communicated to the Emperor in form, an expreſs Proviſion was made, That the ſeperate and ſecret Articles ſhould not be communicated to him: Beſides; the References to what had paſs'd on this Subject at Vienna, might relate to all that had paſs'd there, in regard to a Partition: And if it ſhould be admitted, That he had been inform'd by either Party underhand of what was then doing, there is an infinite Difference between ſuch partial, uſeleſs, Information, and his entering into the Treaty, as the Biſhop affirms he did. The King of Spain was inform'd of what was doing, as appear'd by M. de Caneille's angry Memorial: And therefore it cannot be preſum'd, after the Noiſe which his Diſgrace occaſion'd in Europe, that the Imperial Court was wholly ignorant of what concern'd them ſo much to know.—"When I ſaw M. de Torcy (continues his Excellency) He told me all that had paſs'd; and I was glad to hear of this ſecret Treaty, That being a good Argument to (y) M. de Zinzendorf (the Imperial Miniſter at Paris).—He ſoon took Notice of it to me, and began in much the ſame Manner, as with M. de Torcy. I told him, I wonder'd to ſee him ſo much ſurpriz'd, ſince, for ſome Time, he always aſſur'd me, There was ſuch a Matter in Agitation, and that it was concluded."

Thus, not to wander too far, every new Occurrence ſerves to ſhew, That the Emperor did not enter into the Treaty, and that the Biſhop's Story, out of what Mouth ſoever deliver'd, is not to be depended upon.

It muſt, however, be acknowledg'd, That Lord Manchester, in the ſame Letter, makes a Merit of his having brought M. de Zinzendorf to be in part convinc'd, That the King had obtain'd as good Conditions for the Emperor as he could; and he adds, "That after the Diſcourſe which had paſs'd between them, the Latter went again to M. de Torcy, to

(y) Who made no Difficulty to acknowledge the Fact; as alſo, That France was in Virtue thereof to have Naples, Sicily, all Flanders, and the Philippine Iſlands: But then he added, That the Count Auverſperg who ſign'd it, was baniſh'd for his Reward. Vide Cole's Mem. p. 139.

A.D. 1700. Spaniſh Suit to M. de Torcy for the Whole Monarchy.

to demand a Copy of the Treaty; at which Time he aſk'd, as of himſelf, 1ſt, Whether France would conſent to the Archduke's going into Spain during the Life of his Catholic Majeſty? To which M. de Torcy anſwer'd, Yes; provided the Emperor accepts the Conditions. 2dly, Whether in caſe the Spaniards ſhould make Choice of a Prince of France during the Three Months allow'd his Imperial Majeſty to demur, the French Court would, in ſuch Caſe, reject the Offers of Spain? To which it was reply'd in the Affirmative as before; provided the Emperor accepted, ſign'd and ratify'd within the ſaid Term; otherwiſe not. 3dly, Whether, the Ceſſion of Naples ought not to be limited, as in his Opinion it ought, to the Deſcendants of Queen Mary Thereſa; and ſo as never to be incorporated with the Dominions of France? And the Anſwer was, That This would be accommodated without any Difficulty. Laſtly, Whether there was any Room to hope, That France would change or modify ſome other Particulars in the Treaty? And to this alſo M. de Torcy moſt complaiſantly return'd, That the King was in ſo good a Diſpoſition, that he would come into any Thing; this Treaty not being of ſuch a Nature as to be unalterable, provided the Alterations made in it, were made by the common Conſent of France, England, and Holland.

Truſt of the Italian Miniſters of the Treaty.

About the ſame Time the Treaty was imparted to all the Courts of Europe, and to all the foreign Miniſters reſiding at Paris, who expreſs'd themſelves upon it variouſly, according to their various Intereſts. The Spaniard only ſaid, It was a Matter above his Underſtanding; and according to Lord Mancheſter, Thoſe of Italy were moſt alarm'd; becauſe the Poſſeſſion of the Italian Ports would render the French, in effect, Maſters of their Country; and becauſe thoſe Poſſeſſions were annex'd to the Crown of France.—For, they ſaid, continues his Excellency, which is extremely remarkable, If they were to go to a younger Son, That might make all that Matter eaſy.

The French make it public to the whole World.

About the ſame Time alſo the Moſt Chriſtian King communicated the Affair to the Duke of Orleans; and indeed to his whole Court; purpoſely that it might become the Talk of the whole World; which was done without any (x) Preconcert with England, notwithſtanding the repeated Profeſſions of the French Miniſters, and even of King Lewis himſelf, That he would take no one Step without the Participation of his good Brother of England; which Profeſſions were carry'd to ſuch a Height of Cajollery, that M. de Torcy once took Occaſion to tell Lord Mancheſter, That from thenceforth it would be very convenient for France and England always to act in concert in the Affairs of Europe: And ſo tranſported was his Excellency with the fine Words he was daily fed with, That in one of his Letters to Lord Jerſey, he breaks forth into theſe Expreſſions, "It is certain the Credit and Reputation of the King was never ſo great here as it is now. Tho' I can never be perſuaded they love him, yet I am confident they eſteem him, and deſire his Friendſhip." Which deſerves ſo much the more Notice, becauſe in another Diſpatch, not many Days before, he inſerted an Article which ſhew'd, That they had alſo their Meaſures to keep with the abdicated King and his Party, and did actually beſtow all the Countenance upon them they could, tho', at this Time, it was out of their Views to undertake any Thing for their Service. The ſaid Article was as follows: "Laſt Thurſday was a great Day here: The Prince of Wales, as they call him, went in State to Noſtre Dame, and was receiv'd by the Archbiſhop of Paris with the ſame Honours as if the French King had been himſelf there: After Maſs, he was entertain'd by him; and your Lordſhip may eaſily imagine, That all the Engliſh that are here, ran to ſee him. I muſt confeſs I am ſurpriz'd to ſee Things of this Nature ſo often done, conſidering the preſent State of Affairs."

A.D. 1700. M. de Torcy's Inſinuation to Lord Mancheſter, That the Two Courts ought to act always in concert.

Laſtly, to ſhew what Misjudgments public Miniſters may make in Matters of public Concern, we need only conſider the Quotation that follows out of a Letter from Mr. Stanhope, lately recall'd from Madrid, and now ſtation'd at the Hague, to Lord Mancheſter, to wit: "I am glad to find by your Excellency's Favor of the 28th of May, the Court where you are ſtill ſeems to deſire to make fair Weather with us, of which there can hardly be a ſurer Mark than the Treaty lately made public there, concerning the Succeſſion of the Spaniſh Monarchy. I wiſh myſelf at Madrid for ſome Days, to ſee how thoſe haughty Gentlemen will rage and ſtorm to ſee themſelves diſpos'd of like Slaves, without ſo much as aſking their Conſent. I am alſo pleas'd to think into what an Agony this will put the holy Father of Rome and his whole College of Cardinals: They will infallibly labour all they can to make a League of all the Princes and States of Italy to keep out the French, and that may conduce much to keep us quiet at home."

Mr. Stanhope's exulting Letter concerning the Treaty.

It is now Time to interject the Progreſs of the Rupture of the North, which deſerves ſo much the more Conſideration, becauſe of the Part which the Courts of England and France took in it, and becauſe of the frequent References to it in the Courſe of their reciprocal Negotiations with each other.

[Cole's Mem. p. 139.]

As

(x) Says Lord Mancheſter to Lord Jerſey in his Letter of March 17, N. S. "M. Briard being gone ſome Days ago for Holland, M. de Torcy told me, that Matter began to take Air; and he believ'd it would do much more ſo, after the Proceedings in Holland."

Lord Jerſey replies, March 14, O. S. "If the Buſineſs takes Air, as M. de Torcy ſays, I believe it comes from the French. Your Lordſhip is to recommend the Secrecy of it. I have Orders to do the ſame Thing here to M. Tallard: But it will be hard to keep a Secret, when People have a Mind to talk."

And Lord Mancheſter again, April 7, N. S. rejoins, "I mention'd (to M. de Torcy) the Deſire the King has, that the Affair might be kept as ſecret as was poſſible, which he believ'd would be very difficult; tho' the only Means of doing it, was, on all Occaſions that ſhould happen to declare, There was no ſuch Thing agreed on."

A. D. 1700. Confederacy against Sweden.

As yet we have only treated of the Affair of Holstein, and of the Offers made to the King of Denmark by the mediating Powers, in order to the setting on foot such a Negotiation, as might adjust the Matters in Dispute: But we are now to widen our Views, by taking in a much larger Scope: For, according to Lamberty, the Czar returning from his Travels into Italy, to appease a Revolt in his own Dominions, had an Interview with King Augustus in Poland, at which it was agreed, to take Advantage of the present Troubles in Holstein, to overwhelm Sweden on all Sides: The Saxon Troops quarter'd in Lithuania being to fall into Livonia, while the Danes invaded Holstein: And the most pressing Instances were to be us'd with the Elector of Brandenburgh to make an Attempt on Pomerania, while the Russians made their Effort on the Side of Narva. On the Consequence of which formidable Confederacy, the King of Denmark rejected the Offer so made, as above specify'd, and made himself Master of Holstein, where his Forces liv'd at Discretion: The Saxons also, on their Side, without any previous Complaint, did not fail to enter Livonia in a hostile Manner, and to lay Siege to Riga: Not so much presuming on their Ability to reduce so strong a Place, as on the Inclination of the Inhabitants to throw off the Swedish Yoke, and to return to their old Masters, (Livonia having antiently been a Fief of the Republic of Poland) which they were invited to do, by the Manifesto set forth by Fleming the Saxon General.

[Tom. I. p. 32.]

New Treaty between Sweden and the Maritime Powers.

The Court of Sweden in the mean Time foreseeing this Storm, and well knowing of what Importance the Assistance of the Maritime Powers might be of in the Affair of Holstein, enter'd into a new Defensive Treaty with them, which was sign'd at the Hague and at London the 13th of January, O. S. 1699-1700. By this Treaty the Former of May 4, O. S. 1699, as also Those of Osnabrug, Munster, Nimeguen and Ryswick, were confirm'd; the contracting Parties engag'd themselves to the reciprocal Guaranty of all their Dominions, as also, to defend each other against all Attacks and Violations; provided Redress could be obtain'd no other way: The Proportion of Succours was stipulated at 6000 Men: In case these should not be found sufficient, they were to enter into new Engagements for more: And tho' it was lawful for any other Prince to become a Party, it was under the Restraint of a common Consent: The whole consisted of Eighteen Articles, to which were added six seperate or secret Articles more, by the Second of which, the whole was in a Manner converted into a subsidiary Treaty: For it was thereby provided, That in case the King of Great Britain or the States should be obliged to take Arms in Defence of the Treaty of Ryswick, the King of Sweden should be oblig'd to furnish 10,000 instead of 6000, to be maintain'd and pay'd, from the Moment they set out from their Posts in Pomerania and Bremen: And as to the Fourth Article, we find it thus translated from the Original Latin: "Forasmuch, also, as the Tranquility of the North is what the Confederated Powers abovementioned have very much at Heart; and whereas, for that End, they have each of them severally constituted themselves heretofore, as Sureties and Guarantees of the Treaty concluded at Altena, between the King of Denmark and the Duke of Holstein Gottorp; and since they are of Opinion, that the said Tranquility of the North depends very much on the Observation of this Treaty, they have, therefore, thought fit to bind one another again by this same Treaty, to be Sureties and Guarantees of the said Treaty of Altena: And this Suretyship and Guaranty shall, for the present, take place against any Attack or Violence whatsoever: And as for the Controversy between the King of Denmark and the Duke of Holstein Gottorp, it shall be referr'd to the Negotiation at Pinnenberg, there to be decided as soon as possible."

By the Fifth Article, an express Provision was made for the Emperor and King of Spain to accede, if they thought fit: And by the Sixth, the King of Great Britain and the States engag'd to use their utmost Endeavours with his Catholic Majesty, to pay the King of Sweden for the Swedish Ships unjustly taken in the Course of the late War, by the Subjects of Spain: Both which Stipulations, according to the Aspect of Affairs at the Time of signing the said Treaty, might as well have been omitted, for any Purpose they were likely to serve, except that of amusing the Court of Sweden.

The Swedes demand Succours against the Danes and Saxons.

However this may be, as soon as the Saxons and Danes had struck their Blow, and it appear'd the Former had meditated the Siege of Riga, and the Latter that of Tonningen, his Majesty of Sweden call'd upon his Allies for Succours, and was not only favorably heard, but also vigorously assisted: For a strong Squadron, consisting of Thirty English and Dutch Men of War, arriv'd in the Sound, July 20, commanded in Chief by Admiral Rooke, and under him, for the Dutch, by Admiral Allemonde, was sent into the Baltick to join the Swedish Fleet; and 7000 Lunenburghers and 3000 Dutch, were order'd to pass the Elbe, and re-inforce their Army at Bremen. A Measure, concerning which Bishop Burnet writes as follows: "Upon the Swedes Demand of the Auxiliary-Fleets, that were stipulated both by the King and the States, Orders were given for equipping them here, and likewise in Holland: The King was not willing to communicate this Design to the Two Houses, and try if the House of Commons would take upon themselves the Expence of the Fleet: They were in so bad a Humour, that the King apprehended, That some of Them might endeavour to put an Affront upon him, and oppose the sending a Fleet to the Sound, tho' Others advis'd the Venturing on This: For no Nation can subsist without Alliances sacredly observ'd, and this was an antient one, lately renew'd by the King: So that an Opposition in such a Point, must have

A Fleet order'd to the Baltick.

Bishop Burnet's Comment thereon.

A.D. 1700. have turn'd to the Prejudice of thoſe who ſhould move it." But, unfortunately, neither in the Treaty juſt recited, nor the proviſional Treaty of May 1698, is there any one expreſs Article, by which any one of the Contracting Parties is oblig'd to ſend a Fleet to the Aſſiſtance of the Other: On the contrary, the Stipulations of thoſe Treaties relate to Land-Forces only; and according to the ſecret Articles of the laſt, ſeem'd to have no other or farther View, than to ſecure a Body of 10,000 Swedes for a valuable Conſideration in the Service of the Maritime Powers, in caſe of Neceſſity. And as to his Majeſty's communicating his Purpoſe to Parliament, there was, perhaps, no Obligation upon him to do it, unleſs he had ſtood in Need of their Aſſiſtance to carry it into Execution. Indeed, it does not appear, That his Majeſty had any ſuch Purpoſe, till the Seſſion was too far advanc'd, and the Party-Ferment grown abundantly too high, to admit of the Communication of any ſuch ambiguous Affair, in which England, as England, was ſo remotely if at all concern'd. The firſt Mention we meet with of it, is in a Letter of Lord Jerſey's to Lord Manchester, dated March 18, and the Seſſion was clos'd April 11: And we may alſo collect from a little Anecdote recited by M. de Lamberty, That the King of Denmark had Leiſure to be inform'd of the Diſtempers which prevail'd in the Houſe of Commons, before he reſolv'd to throw away the Scabbard; and that the King of England had other Motives than Thoſe of Policy or the Obligation of Treaties, for engaging himſelf ſo far in the joint Quarrel of Sweden and Holſtein againſt Denmark; which Anecdote is as follows; to wit, That his Majeſty of Denmark being one Day at Table, took Occaſion to ſay, That while King William was at Variance with his Parliament, he would be able to do but little in Europe: Which being reported to his Majeſty, he expreſs'd the Diſpleaſure it gave him, by ſaying to the Marquis de Foret, who was attach'd to the Daniſh Court, and was then in the Service of King Auguſtus, That he would make Denmark know He was ſtill able to do ſomething in Europe.

Funded in Holſt. Eaſts.

[Tom. I. p. 63.]

An Anecdote concerning the Rupture in the North.

It is, however, to be acknowledg'd, That this Confidence of the King's was owing entirely to the Connivance of France; as That in like Manner was owing to the Criſis, which oblig'd her to ſacrifice every other Conſideration to her Intereſt in the Partition-Treaty.

Some neceſſary Obſervations on the Swediſh Treaty.

And firſt it muſt be obſerv'd, That the laſt Treaty with Sweden was ſign'd while the Two Courts of England and France were yet parleying about the Acceſſion of Holland; conſequently while it was yet dubious, whether the Iſſue would be productive of a cloſer Union, or of a Rupture: The ſaid Treaty, therefore, muſt be conſider'd as a Precaution againſt the worſt; and in that Light, we are not to wonder, That it was not communicated to the French Miniſters: But why it was not communicated to Lord Manchester, as we ſhall find it was not, is not ſo eaſy to be accounted for; If either for want of Ability or Integrity he was not qualify'd for his Poſt, Thoſe were blameable who beſtow'd it on him: And, whether he was or was not, the Incident we are now to bring forward, in his own Words to Lord Jerſey, being unfavorable to his Character, could not but be the ſame to his Miſſion. "The good Concluſion, ſays his Excellency, of the Affair, (the Partition-Treaty meaning) which M. de Torcy acquainted me with, puts this Court in good Humour; and I am apt to think all Matters here will go better than they have done. He diſcours'd about the Affairs of the northern Crowns, and took occaſion to tell me, That he had heard, that England, Holland and Sweden had made a League. I ſaid I knew nothing of it; and I ſuppos'd, the Cauſe of the Report was, the Endeavours the King and the States us'd to prevent a War in thoſe Parts; and that I had never heard of a League, or any Thing of that Nature, only from M. Palmquiſt, (the Swediſh Reſident at Paris) a little before I came to him. He ſaid, It was He who had told him of it. I perceiv'd, He was a little uneaſy at this Report; and let fall a Word, as if the French King was alſo preſs'd to enter into an Alliance. I told him, That what was lately tranſacted in England, was a Demonſtration of the King's Intention, not to act any Thing that could be prejudicial to France; neither did I believe there were any Grounds for this Report. I ſaw afterwards Count Zinzendorf, who was full of it; and from him came the firſt Report, he having had it from Holland. I ſuppoſe he expected ſome Light from me: But I anſwer'd him much in the ſame Manner, as I had done M. de Torcy. When he found I did not believe it, he went ſo far as to tell me Two of the Articles. It is neceſſary his Majeſty ſhould be acquainted with This; that ſo he may let me know how I ſhall behave myſelf, in caſe this Report ſhould gain Credit here." Again; in another Diſpatch of that Day Month, that is to ſay March 17, he procedes thus: "All are in Expectation to ſee what Meaſures England and Holland will take in relation to this Affair in the North; and now the Diſcourſe of the late Treaty begins again: But this Court is ſatisfy'd nothing relates to the Prejudice of France; and They have Reaſon, after what has paſs'd." And Lord Jerſey's Anſwer to all this, is contain'd in this ſingle Line, I have laid your Letter of the 7th Inſtant, N. S. before the King.

A.D. 1700.

Conduct of France in relation to the Northern Quarrel.

In the mean Time, however, his Excellency receiv'd Inſtructions to tell M. de Torcy, (theſe are the Secretary's Words) "That his Majeſty would be glad to know what Meaſures the King of France had order'd his Miniſters to take in the Affair of the Saxon Irruption into Livonia; and you may aſſure him, (continues his Lordſhip) That his Majeſty will uſe his Endeavours towards the hindering the Progreſs of this Evil, and will contribute all he can to the Quiet of Europe." In the ſame Diſpatch was alſo the Intimation, above referr'd to, concerning the Orders

A. D. 1700. Orders given for fitting out a Squadron for the Northern Seas.

These Instructions Lord Manchester obey'd; and in his Answer, having signify'd as much, That he could not see any Inclination in the Court of France to intermeddle in the Broils of the North, otherwise than by endeavouring to persuade the Princes concern'd to make up the Quarrel as fast as they could: That on his imparting to M. de Torcy his Majesty's Intention to send a Squadron into the Baltick, that Minister gave it as his Master's Opinion, That he hop'd there would be no Occasion for coming to that Extremity: That the bare Apprehension of such a Measure, would be sufficient to bring the King of Denmark to Reason: That it ought, at least, to be deferr'd as long as possible, lest it should render the Danes obstinate, &c.: That in case it should be found necessary at last, the Weight of England and Holland alone would be sufficient: That the King his Master would act as a Mediator, but would take no Part on either Side, &c.

The Secretary Jersey's Answer to this, imported, That he should continue to represent the ill Consequences of a War in the North as before: That no doubt Denmark was courting France, and made large Offers and Promises: That his Majesty did not, however, doubt but that France would take the propereſt Methods to prevent those Consequences: And that as to the Squadron, it would require so much Time in fitting, that probably the very Noise of such a Preparation might produce the Effect desir'd.

The Embassador's next Dispatch was writ before this last of the Secretary's came to Hand, and contains some Particulars with Relation to the Conduct of Sweden towards France at this Juncture, which are so much the more curious, as they were related to Lord Manchester by M. Palmquist, the Swedish Resident, himself: It seems that Minister, having obtain'd a private Audience of the Most Christian King, presented a Letter to his Majesty from his Master, demanding his Assistance against Poland, as Guaranty of the Treaty of Altena: And, in order to bespeak a favorable Answer, not only signify'd, That the late Treaty between Sweden and the Maritime Powers, contain'd nothing prejudicial to his Interest, but also, That it was not as yet ratify'd: Thereby seeming to intimate, That if his Most Christian Majesty thought it worth his while to bid higher, the Market was not yet so absolutely foreclos'd, but that there was Room for a new Bargain. But if this was the Lure he threw out, King Lewis was not at present in a Humour to stoop to it. On the contrary, having signify'd, by way of Answer, That since he had assur'd him there was nothing contrary to his Interest in the late Alliance which his Master had contracted, he would believe it, tho' he should be able to judge better when he saw it, He added, That in the present Dispute, he should no otherwise interpose, than with his good Offices. And we shall find, That, notwithstanding this Advance to the Court of France, Sweden had also her Managements at Vienna.

The Swedish Resident has a private Audience of King Lewis.

A. D. 1700.

This, however, is a new Confirmation, That the Court of France had nothing at Heart but the Spanish Succession: And, indeed, we meet with so many Instances of the like Nature, as puts an End to all Hesitation. For in another subsequent Dispatch of the same Minister's, he says, M. de Torcy had repeated to him all the Orders his Master had given to his Ministers; and told him, He might assure his Majesty, the Most Christian King would take no one Step without his Knowledge, nor any Treaty without his Approbation: Only, said He, It is not proper for him to declare against the Kings of Denmark and Poland, for fear that, finding themselves wholly abandon'd, they should throw themselves into the Arms of the Emperor, which, in some Measure, defeated all the Precautions which had been taken. And yet again, in another, That the same M. de Torcy had yet farther assur'd him, That he had declar'd to the Ministers of those Two Powers, That they were to expect no Assistance from France; and that it was with great Difficulty the King was hinder'd from declaring against them.

Lastly; King Lewis himself, in his own Dispatches to M. de Briord at the Hague, directs him to inform the Pensioner, That he could with they would not be in Haste to send out their Squadron to the Baltick, since it was possible the good Offices of France, England and Holland, if unaccompany'd with Menaces, would be better receiv'd, and operate with more Success: And that, in case of the King of Spain's Death, which seem'd to be at hand, it might be inconvenient to have their Ships so far from home. In another Place, his Majesty not only informs his said Minister, That his Purpose was, to interfere in the Troubles of the North no otherwise than by his good Offices; but also, accounts for his Conduct by urging, like M. de Torcy above, That a contrary Procedure might put Denmark and its Allies under a Necessity of taking Measures with the Emperor. In a Third, He recapitulates the daily Representations made to him by the King of Denmark, That it was the Interest of France to hinder him from being overwhelm'd by the joint Forces of England and Holland, or from receiving the Law at their Hands, &c. And also his own Replies, which, it seems, were of the following positive and explicit Nature, That it was in his Danish Majesty's own Power to avoid both these Inconveniencies if he pleas'd, by taking the first honorable Pretext to accept of Peace, in which his good Offices might be greatly serviceable: That he was not to expect him to kindle a new War in Europe, by sending him Succours: And that if he had such Apprehensions of being so overwhelm'd, his Business was to make the more Haste towards an Accommodation, &c.

But, if France had any particular Purpose to serve, as it is probable she had, by endeavouring to dissuade the Maritime Powers from

A. D. 1700. from an arm'd Interpoſition, ſhe was diſappointed in it: For thoſe Powers could not be induc'd to think, that any other Kind of Interpoſition would be effectual: So, alſo, on the other Hand, if they had any conceal'd Views in importuning France to cooperate in the ſame Service, as they certainly did, they were diſappointed too: His Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty remaining as firm, Not to take any Part in the Adventure againſt Denmark or Poland, as not to take any Meaſures on their Behalf. "It is by no Means convenient for me to join my Forces with theirs (ſays his Majeſty to M. de Briord): For over and above the Reaſons which I have already ſpecify'd, the Good of my Service will not permit me to ſend my Ships on a uſeleſs Errand to the Baltick, at a Time when the Death of the King of Spain may oblige me to employ them in the Ocean and the Mediterranean: And if the Penſioner ſhould urge, That it is neceſſary for the Execution of the Treaty that Europe ſhould be at Peace when that Event ſhould take place, it is not leſs true, and it is ſtill more neceſſary, That I ſhould have my Forces at my own Command, to employ them where I think proper."

The other Reaſons his Majeſty refers to, were to this Effect, That he was under no Obligation to aſſiſt Sweden: That during the Negotiation of the laſt Treaty which M. d'Avaux had ſign'd at Stockholm, he had offer'd to enter into cloſer Engagements with that Crown, which they for corrupt Reaſons of their own had declin'd: That if the Maritime Powers were Guarantees of the Treaty of Altena, he was not: That tho' he was Guaranty of the Treaty of Oliva, it was between Poland and Sweden, and not between Sweden and Saxony; and it was in the Capacity of Elector, that King Auguſtus had broke into Livonia: And, laſtly, That what Pretences ſoever Sweden might form upon him in Virtue of that Treaty, the firſt Duty incumbent on a Guaranty, was to employ his good Offices, which he had done the very inſtant of a Rupture, by ſending an Envoy to the King of Poland, even before Sweden had requir'd it.

K. Lewis ſends an Envoy to K. Auguſtus.

But the very ſending an Envoy to King Auguſtus, was a great Condeſcention on the Side of France, and as flattering a Circumſtance to his Poliſh Majeſty: For, conſidering the Manner in which his Election had been made, the Diſappointment of the Prince of Conti, and the conſequential Defeat of the French Deſigns on that Republic, (to ſay nothing of the Clames which the Moſt Chriſtian King ſtill had on the Town of Dantzick) he had no Reaſon to expect any ſuch Compliment, which was of ſo much the more Conſequence, as it imply'd alſo an Acknowledgment of his new Dignity.

The Ends he propoſ'd to force by the Means of that Prince.

It is true, his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, by this Time, began to find out, That his Reſentments ought to give way to his Intereſts: The Emperor, it ſeems, was as much afraid of a War on that Side of Europe as France, and, therefore, had not only ſet forth a Declaration againſt the Procedure of the Saxons in Livonia, but had actually caus'd a Body of Troops to advance towards Poland: And giving an Account of this Event to M. de Briord, his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty procedes thus: "And in proportion as the Emperor ſeperates the King of Poland from his Intereſts, it becomes the more convenient for me to obſerve the Neutrality I have propos'd to myſelf; and by that Means to preſerve Things in ſuch a State, as may enable me, when Time ſhall ſerve, to concert Meaſures with that Prince: For when the Troubles of the North ſhall be appeas'd, it will be in his Power to make a powerful Diverſion, in order to oblige the Emperor to accept the Conditions of the Partition-Treaty."

A. D. 1700.

Having then order'd M. de Briord to inform the Penſioner of the freſh Aſſurances he had given the King of Denmark, That he had nothing to expect from him; accompany'd with freſh Advices to accommodate Matters, before the Arrival of the joint Squadrons of the Engliſh and Dutch, he procedes to open a new and delicate Vein of Matter, in ſubſtance as follows: "It ſeems to me, by a Word which the Penſioner has dropp'd to you, as if he was in queſt of Pretences, to excuſe England and Holland from furniſhing the Succours which are requir'd by the Treaty, for carrying it into Execution; naming, in particular, the Troubles of the North, and intimating, That the Force they were oblig'd to ſend thither to induce an Accommodation, was a ſufficient Reaſon to exempt them from joining their Forces with mine. But tho' I cannot believe they will uſe this Language when that Matter ſhall come in queſtion, theſe Diſcourſes of the Penſioner confirms my former Opinion, That it would have been better if the Engliſh and Dutch had not ſent their Ships on this Errand, nor engag'd themſelves ſo far in the Quarrel. But Diſſuaſion comes too late now, and you muſt now conduct yourſelf according to the Orders given you in my Laſt. The Intelligence which I have receiv'd from the Marquis de Harcourt, (the French Miniſter at Madrid) will inform you, That the Spaniards are preparing a conſiderable Armament at Cadiz: That both the Ships and the Troops which they are to carry, are in good Condition; and that the Proviſions they are to take on board, are not ſufficient for a Voyage to the Indies. As, therefore, they may be deſtin'd for the Reception of the Archduke, it is neceſſary, That you ſhould communicate this Advice to the Penſioner; and that you inform me, what Meaſures he thinks adviſable to hinder a Meaſure ſo contrary to the Execution of the Treaty."

Affairs to be apprehenſive, That the Spaniards were preparing to ſend for the Archduke.

The Uſe which was to be made of this falſe Alarm, (for ſuch in effect it was) is obvious: But merely to ſound the real Intentions of England and Holland, in caſe it ſhould be found neceſſary to carry the Treaty into Execution by Force, was not the only Uſe to be made of it: France wanted a Pretence for a Fleet; This afforded one; and in his Majeſty's very next Diſpatch, dated April 29, he Makes it a Pretence to prepare a Fleet.

A. D. 1700. gives M. de Briord to underſtand, That, for fear of the worſt, he had order'd a Squadron of Twelve Men of War to be provided at Toulon: That he, M. de Briord, was to appriſe the Penſioner of this Meaſure: That he, the King himſelf, had order'd M. de Tallard to appriſe King William of it: Which Precautions he thought fit to take, that even in caſe thoſe Powers were not as much convinc'd of his Sincerity as they ought to be, they might not have Cauſe to entertain the leaſt Inquietude concerning the ſaid Armament: And that as to the other Powers to whom the Treaty had been imparted, he did not in the leaſt doubt but that, in conſideration of the preſent Conjuncture, they would think the Reſolution he had form'd, abſolutely neceſſary for carrying it into Execution.

On this Squadron, which was commanded by M. de Nesmond, as alſo of a Second commanded by M. de Pointis, which was by this Time ready to put to Sea, tho' his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty did not think fit to make mention of it, we ſhall hear more in its Place: But before we reſume the Progreſs of the Partition-Treaty, and of the Affairs of Spain, it will be proper to diſpatch what remains to be told concerning the Troubles of the North, which the Maritime Powers attended to with ſo much the more Diligence, in proportion as they became more and more perſuaded, That the Baltick would be left to them, provided they did not interfere in the Mediterranean.

Offers his Mediation to Denmark.

His Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty did not, however, loſe Sight of their Proceedings in thoſe Parts: On the contrary, M. de Chamilly, his Miniſter at the Court of Denmark, had Orders to offer his Mediation, and was furniſh'd with all poſſible Inſtructions to render it acceptable: But the Duke of Holſtein would not hear of it in any Shape; nor was his Daniſh Majeſty over much inclin'd to it, as thinking, reaſonably enough, that the Arts of Negotiation, how exquiſitely ſoever conducted, would ſcarce counter-balance the arm'd Interpoſition of Sweden and the Maritime Powers. Mediation, beſides, had been in a Manner worn out in the Hands of the Emperor, the Elector of Brandenburgh, and the Houſe of Lunenburgh, at the Conferences of Pinnenbergh: The Form of that Mediation ſtill ſubſiſted; and, therefore, his ſaid Majeſty did not think it prudent to accept the Compliments of France on any other Footing, but that of becoming a joint Mediator with Thoſe who had ſo long and ſo ineffectually officiated in that Capacity already, which was not agreable to France.

The next Expedient offer'd, was a ſhort Armiſtice in order to a ſpeedy Peace: But tho' Riga was reliev'd on one Side, and Tonningen on the other, the Danes would not give Ear to it, but on condition that the Swedes and Lunenburghers quitted the Daniſh Part of Holſtein, as they offer'd to quit the Duke's Territories.

At the ſame Time alſo, as if to put the beſt Face imaginable on their Affairs, their Land-Forces, commanded by the Duke of Wirtemburgh, paſs the Stoer, and tho' but 12,000 ſtrong, march'd in a Bravade up to the Lines of the Confederates, which were 20,000 Effectives. Nor was this all: For they order'd their Fleet to the Enterance of the Sound, and gave out, They would defend it againſt the joint Squadron of England, Holland and Sweden; the Engliſh and Dutch being already at Anchor before Landſkroon, and the Headmoſt of them not two Leagues diſtant from the Danes.

A. D. 1700.

France, in the mean Time, being equally afraid that Denmark ſhould be overwhelm'd, and that Sweden ſhould thereby acquire ſuch a Superiority as would deſtroy the Balance of the North, undertook to moderate the Operation of a Meaſure, which ſhe had in vain endeavour'd to prevent: For the King himſelf, in his Letters to M. de Briord at the Hague, from Time to Time enlarg'd on the Inconveniencies to be apprehended from ſuch an Event; on the Managements that would be requiſite in order to prevent it, and on the Reſtrictions which ought to be given to the Commanders of the two Fleets, in caſe they were to act under the Flag of Sweden.

France endeavours to moderate their Proceedings.

His Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty alſo intervenes with theſe artful Hints, ſeveral others concerning the Conduct of Sweden, on one Hand, at the Imperial Court, and of Brandenburg, on the other; not ſo much by way of Index to the Northern Affairs, as by way of Caution in regard to the Partition-Treaty.

Thus, for Example, mentioning the Aſſurances which England and Holland had given him, of the Facility they found in inducing Sweden to accede to it, he proceeds thus: "I have, nevertheleſs, had my Doubts, concerning the Conduct of that Crown, ever ſince I have been inform'd, That the Swediſh Miniſter at Vienna, was ſecretly order'd to enter into any of the Emperor's Meaſures with relation to the Spaniſh Succeſſion, provided his Imperial Majeſty would declare for Sweden againſt Denmark and Saxony."

Conduct of Sweden.

And with regard to Brandenburgh he writes thus: "The Suſpicions which I have long entertain'd of the Elector of Brandenburgh increaſe: The King of England has certainly a greater Aſcendancy over him, than any Body: But I doubt much whether even He will be able to retain him, as long as he continues to flatter himſelf with the Hopes of gaining ſuch great Advantages by the Means of his Engagements with Denmark and Poland: Nothing but Events can undeceive him: And the Dread of ſeeing Sweden in a Condition, which may one Day be the Caſe, of recovering theſe Provinces which he holds only by the Complaiſance of that Crown." Again, in another Diſpatch, "I cannot doubt of the Connections of the Elector of Brandenburgh with the Enemies of Sweden: But as they are founded on the chimerical Idea, which he is full of, it may not be difficult, perhaps, to engage him in a Neutrality, by diſabuſing him in his Hopes to ſee his Pretenſions admitted: It is, nevertheleſs, to be fear'd, That the Emperor will take his Advantage of the Elector's and of Brandenburgh as repreſented by King Lewis.

A. D. 1700. Elector's irregular Ambition to engage him in his Intereſt, even to the Prejudice of other Princes of the Empire: For it has occur'd to me, and no doubt to the Penſioner alſo, That the ſaid Elector will contend with all his Power for admitting the Suffrage of Bohemia in the Electoral College, in caſe the Emperor will give him the Title of King of Pruſſia; (which is the chimerical Idea above alluded to) conſequently the Emperor will become Maſter of the Empire, and the Princes of which it is."....[Here the Cypher is inexplicable] And afterwards his Majeſty proceeds with the ſame Thread thus: "You will talk to the Penſioner agreeable to my Orders; you may, on this Occaſion, even remind him of the vexatious Effects of the Innovation in favour of the Duke of Hanover: And it is certain the Emperor would have found much more Difficulty in carrying his Point with regard to the Vote of Bohemia, if it had not been for the Creation of a Ninth Electorate."

Different Conduct of England and France in the Empire with regard to the Ninth Electorate.

Thus the Growth of the Emperor's Power is diſcours'd of, as the Thing which the Maritime Powers, as well as France, was, at this Time, moſt apprehenſive of: And the only Difference in point of Conduct among them was This, That France acted uniformly againſt it, by every Mode and Mean of Oppoſition; as in the Caſe of the Ninth Electorate, and this new Pretenſion of the Elector of Brandenburgh; whereas the Maritime Powers had their Managements to obſerve, and did obſerve them accordingly: The Houſe of Lunenburgh they had detach'd from France, by that very Bribe of the Electorate; with the Addition of ſubſidiary and eventual Conſiderations: And while France avowedly protected the Duke of Brunſwick Wolfenbuttle, the Landgrave of Heſſe, the Duke of Saxe-Gotha, and other Princes who had proteſted againſt that Novelty, They made uſe of all their Intereſt in the Empire to eſtabliſh the Structure They had rais'd.

K. William hated by the E. of Brandenburgh.

With regard to the Elector of Brandenburgh, They did not however manifeſt the ſame Zeal, becauſe They could not place the ſame Confidence in his Friendſhip: For tho' King Lewis is pleas'd to preſume, That King William, of all the Princes of Europe, had the greateſt Aſcendency over him, it is certain that Preſumption was either a Feint or Preſumption only. For the Elector, partly thro' Envy and partly thro' Reſentment, had, by this Time, conceiv'd a ſtrong Prejudice againſt his Majeſty of Great Britain, whom he had before ſo highly honour'd and ſo greatly aſſiſted; not ſo much becauſe of their Nearneſs in Blood, as becauſe he ſeem'd to be animated with the ſame vindictive Spirit againſt France. Mr. Creſſet, who had Orders from his Majeſty to ſound his Electoral Highneſſes Intentions with reſpect to the Holſtein-Affairs, ſignifies to the Earl of Manchester more than once, That the Viſion of Royalty had turn'd his Head; that as what concern'd his Majeſty, his Malice was ſincere; and that his Stay at Berlin was not only uſeleſs, but alſo a Proſtitution of his Majeſty's Dignity. A. D. 1700.

His Electoral Highneſs ſaid to have his Head turn'd with the Idea of a Crown.

[Cole's Mem. p. 126, 128.]

But this Viſion of Royalty, as Mr. Creſſet calls it, and that chimerical Idea diſcours'd of by King Lewis, we find explan'd in the Memoirs of the Houſe of Brandenburgh, with a Spirit of Freedom and Ingenuity which cannot be too much applauded.

According to that excellent Writer, no Seaſon was ever more favorable to the Ambition of Princes, than the latter End of the Seventeenth Century; as appear'd by the Succeſs of the Prince of Orange in England, and of King Auguſtus in Saxony: And it was the ſudden Acceſſion of Title and Dignity to thoſe Two Princes, which inſpir'd the Elector of Brandenburgh with the Fanaticiſm of Royalty.

The Incident which gave Riſe to it.

Naturally fond of Parade, Ceremony, and Oſtentation, which govern'd all the Actions of his Life, he could not ſee thoſe Two Princes get the Start of him in point of Rank and Elevation, without repining at their Fortune, and repining at his own: Our Author juſt mentions an arm'd Chair, and a Chair without Arms, plac'd one Remove behind it, as an Incident which had like to have embroil'd King William and the Elector for ever; but does not ſtay to explane, That the Ruffle aroſe at the firſt Interview between thoſe Two Princes, after the Revolution, when his Majeſty inſiſted as pertenaciouſly on every Punctilio belonging to his new Dignity, as if to mortify a prouder Man than himſelf was the ſupreme Pleaſure of Royalty.

Inſtead, therefore, of taking Advantage of the Times to enlarge his Dominions, his Electoral Highneſs compounded for an Addition of Title, and his Meaſures of all Kind were directed accordingly.

Of Two Titles propos'd to his Conſideration, namely, King of the Vandals, or King of Pruſſia, he choſe the Latter: But when he conſulted his Miniſters upon it, the wiſeſt and beſt of them would have diſſuaded him from a Perſuit, which they treated as frivolous and impracticable; and thereby only beſpoke their own Diſgrace. The Elector's Heart was fix'd on a Crown: A Crown he was reſolv'd to have; and a Miniſter he found, who not only undertook to put him in poſſeſſion of one, but who alſo had the good Fortune to ſuccede in it, as we ſhall ſee in its Place.

His fluctuating Meaſures.

But, in the mean Time, nothing could be more wavering than the Conduct of his Electoral Highneſs: Sometimes deſpairing of his Point, he temper'd with Denmark and Saxony: Sometimes obſerving the cloſe Union between France, England, and the States, he ſeem'd diſpos'd to embrace the Partition-Treaty, as the neareſt and ſureſt way to his favourite End: And ſometimes miſtruſting that Union to be but of ſhort Duration, he thought of nothing but making his Court to the Emperor, as if he was the only Diſpenſer of Crowns and Sceptres in the Univerſe.

To Mr. Creſſet he promis'd to obſerve a Neutrality on certain Conditions: But as ſoon

A. D. 1700. soon as the Lunenburgh Troops were in Motion to join the Swedes, he diſpatch'd thirteen Squadrons and eleven Battalions to hover over Zell; after which hearing Preparations were making for tranſporting a Body of Swedes into Pomerania, he order'd his own Forces to halt, and then ſent a Miniſter to the King of Denmark and the Princes of Lunenburgh, to preach the Neceſſity of an Accommodation.

The Danes leave the Sound open to the united Fleet, which enters under the Holſtein-Flag.

In the mean Time, the Engliſh and Dutch Squadron (having been join'd by the Swedes, all as Auxiliaries of Holſtein, and all acting under the Duke of Holſtein's (a) Commiſſion, which Sir George Rooke refus'd to accept of, till he had his Majeſty's expreſs Orders for it) advanc'd towards the Entrance of the Sound, which the Danes immediately quitted; retiring behind the Flats to Copenhagen.

[Cole's Mem. p. 153.]

The Danes endeavour to amuſe Rooke by accepting the Mediation of England.

And now the Court of Denmark, in order to ſuſpend the Storm which ſeem'd ready to burſt upon it, and in order thereby to gain Time for better Conditions than in ſuch Circumſtances were like to be obtruded upon them, prevail'd with Count Chamilly, the French Miniſter, to amuſe Sir George Rooke with a Letter, ſignifying, That his Daniſh Majeſty had accepted the Mediation of England and the States, jointly with France, in conſequence of a Propoſal to that Purpoſe, made by Lord Manchester at Paris to M. de Torcy; inferring, That the Operations of Fleets and Armies, were not ſuitable to the Character of Mediators; and requiring him, in deference to this new Expedient, to reſt on his Arms till he had freſh Orders.

In ſupport of this Letter, his Daniſh Majeſty did alſo declare in Form, That he accepted the ſaid Mediation, and would have perſuaded his Majeſty's Miniſters Greg, (who reſided at Copenhagen) Robinſon, (who did the ſame at Stockholm, but who upon this Occaſion accompany'd the Fleet to Elſineur) and Creſſet, to acquieſce in it.

But the Fallacy being ſuſpected at firſt, (and it was prov'd and acknowledg'd afterwards) Rooke, by the Advice, and with the Concurrence, of the ſaid Miniſters, ſignify'd in general, That he would contribute all that lay in his Power to the bringing about an Accommodation, which was the general Drift of the Expedition; but excus'd himſelf from any Relaxation of his Orders, without a ſuitable Authority.

In vain.

Thus the Danes had the Mortification to ſee the united Fleet, conſiſting of Fifty-two Men of War of the Line, preſent itſelf before Copenhagen, and their own lying by the Walls under the Canon of the Citadel.

Mr. Stanhope, in a Letter from the Hague to Lord Manchester, ſays, It was in their Power to burn both the Daniſh Fleet and the Daniſh Capital, if they pleas'd: And [T. I. p. 51.] M. de Lamberty inſerts a Project which was fram'd by a Native of Rochel, in aid of the Former of thoſe Enterprizes.

But if the Danes were really ſo much expos'd, it is ſomewhat ſtrange they ſhould continue ſo long intractable as it appears they did: And it is certain our own Gazettes inform us, the Daniſh Fleet was not only protected by the Citadel on one Side, and a Fort newly erected on the other, but alſo by one Hundred and Twenty Pieces of Cannon, mounted on certain flat Bottom'd Veſſels call'd Prahmes.

A. D. 1700.

Copenhagen bombarded.

Beſides, in the Courſe of the Bombardment which did actually follow, but five Shells reach'd the Daniſh Ships, and not above ſeven or eight Men were killed: And whereas it is inſerted by ſome Authors, That the King of Sweden complaining to Rooke, That the Engliſh Shot flew over the Enemy, and the Dutch did not reach them, the Admiral anſwer'd, I was ſent here to ſerve your Majeſty, not to ruin the King of Denmark; and his Majeſty reply'd, Why then you have certainly executed your Commiſſion: For you have made ſuch a War as will make a Peace, it is ſcarce poſſible to reconcile ſuch a Parley with the Date of the Action, if it can be call'd one: For the firſt Bombardment was on the 21ſt of July: On the 24th the Fleet return'd to Landſcroon: On the 26th a new (b) Bombardment was commenc'd, under the Cover of certain Frigates only: And it was not till the 4th of Auguſt, That his Swediſh Majeſty landed in Zeland, with a Purpoſe to beſiege Copenhagen.

It is, however, out of Diſpute, That this ſlight Attempt was conducted upon that moderate Principle: For his Swediſh Majeſty was eager to make uſe of ſo tempting an Opportunity; and, in order thereto, preſs'd the Sea-Officers to waſt over the reſt of his Forces, which, it is ſaid, They either delay'd or declin'd. Nor is it at all unlikely, That ſome Expoſtulations paſs'd between that enterprizing Monarch and Rooke on that Occaſion.

[Gaz. No. 3626.]

It is alſo indiſputable, That this way of making War, by tempering the Swediſh Ardor on one Hand, and humbling the Daniſh Pride and Obſtinacy on the other, did anſwer the End propos'd, of bringing about an Accommodation; which, after a Variety of Conferences, was perfected at a Houſe of the Duke of Holſtein's, call'd Travendale, in the Neighbourhood of both Camps, on the 18th of Auguſt.

Treaty of Travendale.

What the Conditions were, it is needleſs to repeat: But what Mr. Creſſet, in a Letter to Mr. Blathwait at the Hague, ſays, both of them and the Negotiation which produc'd them, is too remarkable to be omitted.

Mr. Creſſet's Account of it.

" I find the Lunenburgh-Miniſters ſpoke like Prophets of the Concluſion of the Peace before the Time. The Truth is, That, having dextrouſly made their own ſeperate, they knew beſt what Facility they could bring to ſacrifice the poor Holſtein-Matters afterwards. I muſt do this Juſtice to Truth, That the Treaty

(a) The Swedes, being forbid by the Treaties ſubſiſting between them and the Danes to paſs the Sound, alſo evaded thoſe Treaties, by paſſing thro' a Strait of their own, call'd Flintrienen. A Copy of Sir George Rooke's Commiſſion is to be found in Lamberty, Tom. I.

(b) In Both but 280 Shells were thrown.

A. D. 1700. Treaty of Travendale would have been as ambiguous to the full, as that of Altena, if Two of us (I am sorry I cannot say Three) had not stickled the last four Days for the better Explication of the Unions, the Communion, (Condominium) and the chief Point, the Jus Armorum: All which (tho' the Lunenburghers were pleas'd) I found in very trimming, oraculous Expressions at my Arrival at Travendale. There is no changing the Duke of Holstein Gottorf's unlucky Situation, but by putting his undoubted Right into its true Light. Whenever the Danish Aggression begins again, it will at least be more evident than formerly, and less disputable. The Danes threaten already, even before the Ratification; and particularly, as I am assur'd, big Words are let fall, of what Use they pretend to make of an English Parliament next Winter." And again, "The Lunenburghers bore very hard upon the Elector of Brandenburgh at the End of our Contestations, and would have excluded him from being any way mention'd in the Treaty, as having been Mediator. I thought it very hard to refuse a little historical Honour to so great a Prince, a Protestant, and so near a Relation to his Majesty. Besides: Of the Three old Mediators, none but the Elector of Brandenburgh continued in his Office to the End. I, therefore, thought it but just to support Mr. Buse as well as I could in that Attack, and to have his Master nam'd as Mediator."

As to the Lunenburgh-Points, the Principal was, That Denmark should not oppose the Ninth Electorate, and the Primogeniture in the House of Hanover, by open Force, nor engage in any Enterprise against the Princes of that House or of Zell. And possibly this afforded the French Ministers in those Parts a Pretence for quitting the Conferences, before the Accommodation was perfected: and also to his Most Christian Majesty for refusing his Guaranty. For in his Letters to Count Briord, he often insists on the Expediency of protecting those Princes of the Empire, who made it a common Cause to oppose the said Electorate: He also complains in pretty strong Terms, of Zell and Hanover, for intermingling their Interests in this Negotiation; Declares, They have no relation to the Point in hand; and intimates, That the Conferences to re-establish the Peace of the North were not likely to take Effect, if they were thus embarass'd with Matters entirely foreign to the Dispute.

The French Court displeas'd at the Ninth Vote in the Electoral College.

His Majesty had before discover'd some Displeasure at the Proceedings of the English and Dutch Fleet, in bombarding (tho' ineffectually) the capital City of Denmark; and requir'd M. de Briord to put the Pensioner in mind of the Promise he had given, That nothing of the like Nature should ever be attempted again: So that if it be true, as some Writers affirm, that King William, affecting to disapprove Rooke's Conduct in that Particular, did afterwards order him to commit no further Hostilities against the Danes, we ought, perhaps, to place that Forbearance to the Account of France.

Yet, farther: When the Most Christian King had receiv'd the News of the Treaty, he writes to M. de Briord thus: "I am not surpris'd, that the Pensioner has avoided entering into any Detail with you on that Head. The King of England and the States-General can hardly justify their Conduct in that Affair with regard to me, after all I have done to procure them the Mediation, in consequence of their own Applications to me for that Purpose." But the Turn given at the Hague to these and the like Expressions of Displeasure, was, That the French were angry with the Lunenburghers for the advantageous Conditions they had obtain'd. A. D. 1700.

That of England as much exalted.

And the Court-Language us'd in England and Holland on this Occasion, express'd nothing but Triumph and Exultation. The King's Vigor on one Hand, his Moderation, and the glorious Figure he made in acting thus as the Arbiter of the North, were Topicks which our Ministers seem'd to take particular Pride and Pleasure in displaying: And it must be own'd, so thoroughly was the Measure persued, That the united Fleet did not leave the Baltick, till the Swedes were return'd in Safety to their own Coasts. A Precaution which was somewhat more necessary, because the Danes call'd the Treaty a Force put upon them, as soon as it was made; and gave out, That they should pay little Regard to it, if the Squadron of the Guarantees was withdrawn.

But if the Pride or Peevishness of the Court of England was gratify'd by this Expedition, the Interest of France was the great Movement in Process during the whole Interval. Even Denmark, in hope of better Terms, had promis'd to accede to the Treaty of Partition, tho' the repented of having done so, the Moment she found it did not turn out to her own immediate Advantage.

Sweden desirous to the Partition-Treaty.

On the other Hand, Sweden, tho' so powerfully succour'd by the Maritime-Powers, was not over-forward to explane herself on that Topick. "The Ministers of that Crown, (says Mr. Robinson in a Letter to Lord Manchester) seem to think the Circumstances of their Affairs ought to excuse them at present from taking any Part in it; since the Emperor has so many Ways to incommode them, especially while the War the King of Poland has begun against them continues. They seem much persuaded, that their Friends will not press them to expose themselves, but rather first help them to a State of Safety, and then they shall be in a Condition to make Returns."

The Bishop of Munster and Duke of Saxe-Gotha, willing to embrace it for Subsidies, &c. Considerations.

Of the Princes of Germany, Those were best inclin'd to declare for the Treaty who were avow'd Opponents to the Ninth Electorate, and who were for that Reason ready to enter almost into any Measures of any Kind with France. The Bishop of Munster and the Duke of Saxe-Gotha, are particularly mention'd by King Lewis himself in his Letters to M. de Briord, as particularly forward to embrace the Treaty, provided They might have suitable Subsidies by way of Consideration. "It is the common Answer, says his Majesty, of all the Princes of Germany to every Demand. And tho' They are told, That They are not likely to be call'd upon for Troops, it will be no eaſy Matter to avoid making them ſome Allowance on that Head. But then it is abſolutely neceſſary to defer that Expedient as long as poſſible: For if any one of Them is gratify'd, all will inſiſt on being taken into Pay." His Majeſty had alſo in a former Letter, admitted the Neceſſity of complying, in caſe their Compliance was to be obtain'd no other way: And, which is ſcarce credible, he directs M. de Briord to enquire, what Proportion of the Expence the States would take upon them, as he had already directed M. de Tallard to enquire concerning the like Proportion to be furniſh'd by England: So that the Maritime Powers had not only ſuffer'd him to carve for himſelf what Share he pleas'd out of the Spaniſh Succeſſion, but were to contribute to the Expence of putting him in poſſeſſion.

(p. 67, 70, 90.)

A. D. 1700. Subſiſtence the ſpirit Domeſt of the German Projects.

K. Lewis expects the Maritime Powers to contribute towards them.

True Nature of the queſtion in England concerning a Standing Army explain'd.

And that we may, once for All, be ſatisfy'd of the true Nature of the Queſtion concerning a Standing-Army in England, which had been ſo paſſionately contended for by his Majeſty, we need only inſert another Paragraph from one of his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty's Letters, to wit: "I make no Doubt of the King of England's vigorous Oppoſition to the Project form'd to reduce the Forces in the Pay of the States: For ſince the Reduction made in England, it will not be poſſible for him to maintain his Conſideration, except by keeping up the Eſtabliſhment in Holland, where he has always been regarded as Maſter."

Creſſet's Account of the Conduct of the Princes of Lunenburgh in relation to the Treaty. [Cole. p. 215.]

But to return back to the German Princes:—In a Letter from Zell to Lord Manchester, Mr. Creſſet writes as follows: "Your Excellency ſees I am now got into my old Walks in the Houſe of Lunenburgh, carrying my Pack of Spaniſh Merchandize about with me from Court to Court. As yet I do not ſee many Cuſtomers fond of it. The Anſwer at Berlin upon that Subject, when the Elector was preſs'd to it, has been made too public, ſince it was no Ways to the Advantage of our Treaty; ſo that the Marquis de Bonac and myſelf, have reſolv'd not to publiſh what theſe Princes ſay to us on theſe Occaſions, unleſs their own Miniſters begin to make a Merit of it, firſt in the Court of Vienna, and elſewhere, as it is not doubted but they will. However, I am perſuaded, that it is for the King our Maſter's Service, not to keep your Excellency in the Dark upon any Conſideration whatever. I muſt only beg you will pleaſe to inſinuate to the French Miniſters, (without Affectation) that I am very myſterious with your Excellency upon theſe Matters, becauſe of a Promiſe mutually made between M. de Bonac and me, for keeping the Anſwer ſecret, and for not writing it to any but our reſpective Secretaries of State. I ſhall now inform your Excellency, That from Hamburgh, I went firſt directly to the Princes of Brunſwick-Wolfenbuttle, where I found the French Miniſter, and, in concert with him, perform'd in his Majeſty's Name, the Ceremony of the Invitation into the Guaranty in queſtion. The Anſwer thereto not being ready there no more than in other Places, I left M. de Bonac to ſolicit it, who thinks he ſhall ſuddenly bring it after me, himſelf in Perſon, to the Court of Zell, where he may appear, tho' he be contraband at Hanover. I have, for the firſt Time in my Life, play'd the Fryar Envoy in that Court of Hanover, and have preſs'd the Elector to explain himſelf, who, I can aſſure your Excellency, will very induſtriouſly avoid doing ſo for many good Reaſons; no body having ſuch nice Meaſures to obſerve with the Emperor as his Electoral Highneſs has. I had a long and ſecret Conference two Days ago, with the double Miniſtry of Zell and Hanover, at a Place call'd Engſen, equally diſtant from the Two Courts, the Reſult of which can give but ſmall Satisfaction as yet: They declare themſelves like the Oracles of old in doubtful, ambiguous Terms, upon which nothing can be founded: And I fear a plain Reſolution can ſcarce be expected to be drawn from them."

A. D. 1700.

In Switzerland, M. de Puyſieux for France, M. de Harvaert (either a Hollander or a Native of Orange) for England, M. Valkenier for the States, ſolicited the Cantons to enter into the Guaranty of the Treaty on theſe Terms, That they ſhould engage to ſtop up all their Paſſes againſt the Imperial Troops, in caſe the Court of Vienna ſhould diſpute the Execution of it: And that They ſhould furniſh the Allies with as many Troops as They could ſpare, for a ſuitable Conſideration. But when the Diet was aſſembled, They declin'd entering into any ſuch Engagement, and continued ſo firm in this Reſolution, That a Bribe of Two Hundred Thouſand Livres, offer'd by the firſt of thoſe Miniſters, was rejected.

M. de Harvaert's Account of the Swiſs Cantons.

[Cole. p. 213.]

The Duke of Lorrain, of all the Princes in Europe, being moſt at the Mercy of France, was of all the moſt eaſily induc'd to acquieſce in a Treaty which he was not in a Condition to diſpute: All, therefore, that he contended for was, That he might not be oblig'd to quit Lorrain, before he was put in poſſeſſion of Milan: That Milan ſhould remane to his Heirs in perpetuity, in the ſame Manner as Lorrain then did: That the Dauphin ſhould renounce all Claim on that Duchy: And that Matters ſhould not be finally ſettled with the Emperor, till the Inveſtiture of his new Dominions had been obtain'd. He alſo deſir'd to be excus'd from having any Thing to do with the Guaranty, as having neither Money nor Troops to make it good: And King Lewis himſelf became his Advocate with the Maritime Powers to become Guarantees of the Treaty he was to ſign with France; which is ſo much the more obſervable, becauſe this Treaty had been carry'd on without their Participation.

Lord Manchester's of the D. of Lorrain.

It is true, the French Court did make ſome ſlight Excuſes for this ſeperate Procedure: But then at the very ſame Time, it is reaſonable to think, they committed another Treſpaſs nearly of the like Nature, by their Manner of treating with Portugal, for the Acceſſion of that Court to the

A ſeperate Treaty between France and Portugal.

A.D. 1700. tion of the Spaniſh Monarchy. Lord Mancheſter, in his Diſpatch to the Earl of Jerſey, dated June 26, makes the following Report: "M. de Torcy then told me, That the Treaty had been communicated to the King of Portugal, who talk'd of it as if he could never conſent to it; and, accordingly the French Miniſter there ſent away, on the 24th Inſtant, the Courier. When the King perceiv'd This, he ſoon chang'd his Mind, and ſo another was diſpatch'd, by whom he agrees entirely to the Treaty on the following Conditions. 1. If the Emperor does not conſent within the Time limited, That then he may be one in the naming another Prince. 2. That he may have Two Places yielded to him, that formerly belong'd to Portugal: One was Alacantara; but I do not remember the other. 3. That if he be attack'd by reaſon of this Treaty, Thoſe who are concern'd in it ſhall be oblig'd to aſſiſt him. M. de Torcy did ſeem to think it was worth granting him the Terms, ſince it was the only way of engaging him heartily in it: And as to the firſt Article, They ſhould ſtill be Three againſt One."

It is true, this very Diſcourſe of M. de Torcy's, may be call'd a Communication of the Meaſure; and King Lewis himſelf, in a Letter to M. de Briord, dated July 15 following, ſignifies, That he had not only imparted the Portugueſe Propoſitions, but had alſo receiv'd his Majeſty's Anſwer: And in the ſame Diſpatch he moreover directs the ſaid Miniſter to impart the ſame to the Penſioner; tho', continues his Majeſty, I make no Doubt but he has been appriz'd of it already by the King of England. And in his preceding Diſpatch to the ſame Miniſter, having mention'd ſome Apprehenſions entertain'd by King William, that the French Miniſter at Berlin ſhould communicate the Treaty to the Elector of Brandenburgh, without any previous Concert with the Engliſh Miniſter there, he ſignifies a firm Purpoſe, not to take a ſingle Step but in Conjunction with England and Holland.—But ſtill it appears, The Treaty was on foot at the Court of Liſbon, before England and Holland were appriz'd of any ſuch Purpoſe, and above Two Months before, Mr. Methuen, the Engliſh Miniſter at Liſbon, had even Information of the Treaty directly from his own Court: For in a Diſpatch of his to the ſame Lord, he obſerves, That the firſt News he had from England of the Treaty, was in a Letter from Lord Jerſey, enclos'd in another from Lord Mancheſter, dated July 11. The ſaid News was moreover accompany'd with Inſtructions to notify it to the Court of Liſbon, which he did accordingly on the 13th of Auguſt, tho' as a Matter of Form only: For by this Time the Treaty of Guaranty with France was ſo far advanc'd, That it would have been ſign'd on the 15th, if the French Embaſſador, juſt as he was going to ſet his Hand to it, had not obſerv'd, That the Portugueſe had inſerted a Clauſe in one of the Articles, by which They might afterwards have pretended, That They were not oblig'd to make a War on the Emperor or Spain, till They began it. This occaſion'd a Diſpute between the Embaſſador and the Portugueſe Commiſſioners: But all was, at laſt, accommodated to the Satisfaction of the Embaſſador, and the Treaty was ſign'd on the 18th following.

A.D. 1700.

Notwithſtanding which, ſo late in the Year as the 13th of October, Mr. Methuen "receiv'd by an Expreſs, (which came from Paris to the French Embaſſador) his Majeſty's Commands to propoſe to the King of Portugal the Terms or Projects of Two Acts of Acceſſion and Admiſſion (theſe are Mr. Methuen's own Words, as they are given to the Public by Cole) for his being comprehended in the Guaranty of Repartition, That of Acceſſion to be ſign'd by the King of Portugal; and That of Admiſſion by his Majeſty." Adding, "I have, at laſt, prevail'd with the King of Portugal to ſign That of Acceſſion, which will be ſent to England by the ſame Expreſs which carries This. So that the King of Portugal will be Guarantee of the Treaty for the Diviſion of the Spaniſh Monarch, without any particular Treaty or Convention with England or Holland for that Purpoſe."

Of the Elector of Bavaria's Sentiments concerning the Partition-Treaty, nothing preciſe and poſitive is ſaid in any of the State-Papers before us: But that his Diſpleaſure was equal to his Diſappointment, is eaſy to be conceiv'd. The Pretenſions of his Family had been highly conſider'd in the former Treaty; and in This he had been wholly forgot.

Cafe of the Elector of Bavaria.

And as to the Duke of Savoy, it may be reaſonably ſuppos'd, That He alſo was not without his Reſentments on the ſame Account; as ſtanding by the Will of Philip the IVth, next in the Succeſſion to the Houſe of Auſtria: But if ſo, He, as well as the Elector, had his Reaſons for concealing the Chagrin which would only have ſerv'd to heighten the Triumph of his Adverſaries: And both France and the Maritime Powers might be reckon'd in that Number: For the Latter could not forgive his Defection, nor the Former the extravagant Price it had coſt. When, therefore, the Treaty was imparted to him, he was contented with making great Profeſſions in ſuch general Terms, as ſerv'd rather to draw his Conduct into Suſpicion, than to remove all Suſpicion concerning it: For the French Miniſter at his Court, was thereupon inſtructed to let him know, That the King his Maſter had reaſon to expect a more explicit Anſwer; eſpecially ſince it was diſcours'd, he had already enter'd into a Treaty with the Emperor: And that tho' his Majeſty did not give Credit to ſuch Diſcourſe, it was nevertheleſs neceſſary for him, the Duke, to behave at ſuch a Criſis in ſuch a Manner, as ſhould alſo convince the World in general, That He had no ſuch Purpoſe. The Duke's Anſwer to this, as reported by King Lewis to M. de Briord, was, That he had enter'd into no Meaſure nor Engagement with the Emperor: And that he well knew how contrary every ſuch Engagement would prove to his true Intereſts.

And Duke of Savoy.

[Cole, p. 193.]

P. 193.

But,

[Cole, p. 192.]

Ibid. p. 192. M. Methuen, the Engliſh Miniſter at Liſbon, not inform'd of the Partition-Meaſure, till the French were on the Point of ſigning the ſaid Treaty.

A. D. 1700. But, agreeable to the Politics of that Court, which, perhaps, are influenc'd by Situation, as well as Ambition or Intereſt, his Royal Highneſs neverthleſs continued to act a double Part: And while he had Couriers continually paſſing and repaſſing between Turin and Vienna, he diſpatch'd M. de la Tour, his chief Miniſter, once more with a Commiſſion to the Courts of Verſailles and Leo; in the Front of which he was order'd to declare, in addition to what had already been declar'd, That his Maſter did not diſpute the Dauphin's Right: But that he hop'd ſome Conſideration would be aſſign'd him for the Pretenſions he had to urge, and which he was willing to wave on reaſonable Terms.

This, however, was kept a profound Secret from Lord Manchester, who was taught to believe, That M. de la Tour's Errand, was only to ſolicit the Payment of certain Debts due to his Maſter from the Crown of Spain. But then we gather from King Lewis's Letters to M. de Briord, not only, That This was a Point; but alſo, That the Claims and Pretenſions of his Royal Highneſs were ſo far ſettled and adjuſted by M. de la Tour with the French Court, That only the Deciſion upon Two Propoſitions were left to the King of England.

It is now high Time to make a Tranſition to the Courts of Vienna and Madrid, which as moſt affected by the Partition-Treaty, were moſt concern'd in the Operations of it.

Conduct of the Court of Vienna. And, firſt, as to That of Vienna, the general Anſwer they gave to M. de Villars, Mr. Sutton, and M. Hop, was, That They were ſo much amaz'd at a Procedure ſo every way extraordinary and unwarrantable, that They could not come to any Reſolution upon it, till They were made acquainted with the Sentiments of his Catholic Majeſty: And Mr. Sutton gives it as his Opinion, That They would make no Difficulty of rejecting it, if they diſcover'd any Proſpect of bettering themſelves.

But even this very Heſitation furniſh'd France with Pretences to ſtrengthen her Party by every Meaſure and every Art that Policy could furniſh: And aware of this very Effort, while the Imperial Miniſters put their whole Intereſt and Influence in the King and Queen of Spain to the Stretch on one Hand, They did not omit any Effort or any Practice that might either amuſe France, or create Jealouſies in her new Allies, the Maritime Powers, on the other.

Thus they affected to negotiate with [Cole, p. 150.] France concerning Alterations in the Treaty, in caſe they ſhould accept it; offering, in particular, both to M. de Villars at Vienna, and to M. de Torcy at Paris, the Weſt-Indies in lieu of the Dominions allotted to France in Italy: And when M. de Torcy ſaid, The Propoſition was of ſuch a Nature, that he could not even lay it before the King his Maſter, becauſe the Maritime Powers would never agree to it: M. de Zinzendorf reply'd in effect, That the French were able to keep themſelves in poſſeſſion, by their Fleets and Armies, whether the Maritime Powers would or not. Finding, however, that this Propoſition was not like to be receiv'd, he made a new one, namely, That France ſhould have Sardinia and Luxemburgh in lieu of Lorrain, and the Emperor Milan. He alſo ſaid, It was impoſſible the Emperor ſhould agree to the Ninth Article, That Spain ſhould never deſcend to any one who ſhould be at the ſame Time Emperor or King of France: And ſuch a Relenting was diſcover'd on this Head by M. de Torcy, That he aſk'd, Whether the Emperor would ſign the Treaty, in caſe this Article was ſuppreſs'd?—King Lewis himſelf alſo informs [P. 79] M. de Briord, That the ſame M. de Zinzendorf had intimated plainly enough, That the Emperor would cede to him the Low-Countries, in caſe he would treat directly with him: But then, in the very ſame Paragraph, he directs that Miniſter to caution the Penſioner againſt all the Artifices which the Imperial Miniſters would not fail to employ, in order to create a Jealouſy which might be fatal to the Meaſures he had taken with England and Holland.

Offers made by M. Zinzendorf to France.

But then the Imperial Miniſters at Vienna, as well to eſtabliſh a Belief of their Sincerity in theſe Offers, as to give Vent to their Reſentments, did not only complain in the ſtrongeſt and ſharpeſt Terms of the Conduct of the Maritime-Powers, and of King William in particular, but alſo undervalued his Weight and Importance: Intimating, That having loſt the Hearts of his People, and his Government being thereby grown weak and contemptible, he no longer deſerv'd that Conſideration which he had the Preſumption to arrogate.

This Intractableneſs of his Imperial Majeſty was, however, Matter of Aſtoniſhment to the Treaty-Makers, who behav'd as if they thought themſelves rather entitled to Acknowledgments for having left him any Part of the Succeſſion, than obnoxious to Complaints for having depriv'd him of ſo much: And this Behaviour of Theirs was founded, no doubt, on their own Power to preſcribe, and his ſuppos'd Inability to ſtand his Ground againſt them: For, according to Mr. Sutton's Account, his whole Force did [Cole, p. 231.] not exceed 70,000, of which 30,000 were neceſſary for the Security and Tranquility of Hungary: But of Theſe, it is ſaid the Cavalry were half diſmounted; nor were any of their Corps compleat. It is added, That their Garriſons were in as bad a Condition as their Troops; and their Finances in a worſe than either; the Imperial Treaſury being between Twenty and Thirty Millions of Florins in debt, (for which they paid extravagant Intereſt) and with all, ſo low in Credit, that for ſome Time paſs'd it had been found no eaſy Matter to ſupply the Emperor's Neceſſities.

The Emperor declares Neutrality. But, notwithſtanding theſe Difficulties, and every other diſcouraging Circumſtance, on the 30th of July Count Harrach, in the Emperor's Name, inform'd M. de [illegible]. That his Imperial Majeſty, conſidering the King of Spain to be in good Health, and of ſuch an

A.D. 1700. an Age that he might very well, with the Bleſſing of God, hope for Iſſue of his own, did not think it becoming, eſpecially him that was his Uncle, to make a Diviſion of his Succeſſion: That he hop'd this Anſwer would not interrupt the good Intelligence between himſelf and his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty; and that he would not procede to the Nomination of a Third, which would but embroil Matters the more: That when the Succeſſion happen'd to fail, he, the Emperor, thought it juſtly belong'd to him: And that after the Extinction of the Male Line of the Houſe of Auſtria, it belong'd to the Duke of Savoy."

The like Anſwer was the ſame Day given to M. Hop, but not to Mr. Sutton till afterwards; whether thro' Accident or wilful Neglect is not explan'd, tho' not improbably the laſt: For we find that Gentleman complaining, upon another Occaſion, That he had apply'd for an Audience, for three Days ſucceſſively, without being able to obtain one.

Now what induc'd his Imperial Majeſty to refuſe the Portion allotted him, was certainly, the Confidence he repos'd in the Affection of the King, and the good Offices of the Queen of Spain; tho', as Mr. Sutton ſhrewdly obſerves, It was not eaſy to ſee how any Act of theirs in his Favor, could ſet aſide the Meaſure already agreed upon, to diſpoſe of the Succeſſion another way.

Reſolution of the Council of Spain.

Beſides: At the very firſt Council that was held at Madrid, after the Treaty had been notify'd in form, it was reſolv'd, upon the Iſſue, by All preſent, but the Count d'Aquilar, That the beſt Advice they could give his Majeſty was, To declare a Prince of France to be his Succeſſor: Which was certainly chuſing the leaſt Evil: For, thereby, they had not only a reaſonable Proſpect of preſerving their Dominions entire, but alſo of making that very Power for their Guardian and Protector, which had, hitherto, been their Deſtroyer.

At this Council, it is ſaid, the King was not preſent: And it is wholly uncertain, whether in his ſubſequent Conduct he was directed by his Prejudices in favor of the Houſe of Auſtria, or his Concern for his People: For as the Emperor's rejecting the Treaty was the only viſible Means of preventing its being carry'd into Execution, ſo the holding him in dependance, by the Hope of the whole Succeſſion, was the only probable Means of inducing him to reject it.

The King of Spain ſigns a Will in favor of the Houſe of Auſtria. [Coxe, p. 245.]

But, however this may be, Lord Manchester ſays, It was ſo manag'd, That in June the King of Spain ſign'd a Will in favor of the Archduke, which was ſent to Vienna, where it excited all that Firmneſs, which, till the Secret came to be known, was ſo unaccountable to all Europe.

France betrays ſome Jealouſy of the Maritime Powers.

France, in the mean while, tho' exceedingly attentive to every Incident that happen'd in the Court of Spain, ſeem'd as if wholly ignorant of This; and the Jealouſies ſhe diſcover'd from Time to Time, ſeem'd rather to regard her new Friends and Allies the Maritime-Powers, than the Intrigues of the Imperial Miniſter at Madrid. Thus, for Example, we find the Moſt Chriſtian King, at one Time, complaining to M. de Briord of the Reports affectedly ſpread thro' the Empire, concerning the real Sentiments and Intentions of the Maritime-Powers, as if they were by no Means favorable to the Treaty they had been at ſo much Pains to make: "And tho', continues his Majeſty, I cannot prevail on myſelf to queſtion their Sincerity, yet 'tis expedient that the Miniſters of thoſe Powers reſiding at foreign Courts, ſhould receive ſuch preciſe Orders from their Maſters, as ſhould remove all Doubt on thoſe Heads: And 'tis certain both the Conduct and the Diſcourſes of thoſe Miniſters, has been ſuch as ſeem'd to argue thoſe Powers did not deſire to carry the Treaty into Execution."

A.D. 1700.

At another: He tells the ſame Miniſter of ſecret Conferences held at Madrid between the Marquis de Leganez, and Mr. Shombergh (for Schonenbergh) in the Night Time, in Places remote from the Reſidence of either: Adding, "You will ſee whether the Penſioner will communicate the Subject-Matter of Them, either to you or to M. de Tallard."

And yet again, when it was confirm'd on all Hands, that the King of Spain was incurably relaps'd, and the Maritime-Powers, inſtead of complying with the Inſtances of France, to make the requiſite Proviſions to enforce the Treaty in caſe of need, on the contrary inſiſted on enlarging the Term allow'd to the Emperor, and for ſuſpending all Action till the Term was elaps'd; his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty inſiſted ſtrongly on the Neceſſity of other Meaſures, and expreſs'd his Diſſatisfaction as ſtrongly at the Coldneſs and Unwillingneſs ſhewn by the Penſioner to come into them: "I ſee, ſays his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty to M. de Briord, That his Inſtances, which are directly oppoſite to the Purport of the Treaty, are ſupported by no one ſolid Reaſon. Thus, far from being convinc'd by them, I am every Day more ſenſible of the Neceſſity of employing my Forces, without loſs of Time: It is the only way to oblige the Emperor to ſubſcribe. Were I, on the other Hand, to accord what is demanded, the Emperor would make uſe of the Interval to form Alliances, and to recruit and augment his Forces, in order to pour them into Italy. You are, therefore, not to allow the Penſioner Room to believe, That I ought to deſiſt from that Clauſe which is the principal one of the Treaty, even if I could prevail on myſelf to conſent to it. Even the King of England and the States ought to have their Fears of ſuch a Change: For in ſuſpending all Action, the Spaniards will begin to hope, I will accept the Monarchy entire for one of my Grandſons, which the whole Nation wiſh to diſpoſe of in that Manner: And they will accordingly prefer ſuch a Diſpoſition, as will con-center all their Dominions under one and the ſame

A. D. 1700. Prince. I much approve the new Inſtances which the King of England and the States have made to the Emperor, on receiving the News, That the King of Spain was at Extremity: But nothing can give ſo much Force to thoſe Inſtances, as to declare, at the ſame Time, That the Treaty ſhall be punctually executed after the Death of the Catholic King, if God ſhall ſo diſpoſe of that Prince. Thus I am perſuaded, That if the States were now to begin to arm, it would have the beſt Effect imaginable at this Juncture: Nor can I comprehend for what Reaſon the Penſioner appears ſo reſerv'd, with regard to a Meaſure ſo conformable to the Engagements which They have made with me."

Diſcourſe of M. de Torcy to Lord Manchester.

The Language of M. de Torcy to Lord Manchester all this while, was conformable to that of his Maſter's: Nay; he began to complane of Coldneſs and Indifference from the Time the Emperor refus'd to embark in the Treaty; and it appear'd the Maritime Powers were not inclinable to make uſe of Menaces on that Occaſion: According to him, the Courts of Vienna and Madrid had come to an Agreement, That the Imperial Troops ſhould march into Italy: And ſo much Credit did this Aſſertion meet with, That the ſaid Powers order'd their Miniſters to join with thoſe of France in proteſting againſt it; which was ſo much the more extraordinary, ſeeing the French had ſent twelve arm'd Gallies to take Poſt at Meſſina; and ſeeing alſo, that M. de Pointis had under the Pretence of making the Governor of Ceuta another frivolous Offer of Aſſiſtance againſt the Moors, hover'd with ſeven Men of War on one Side, while M. de Neſmond, with Twelve, anchor'd in the Bay of Cadiz on the other; which ſeem'd to be all ſo many precautionary Meaſures, for the taking Poſſeſſion of the Inheritance as ſoon as it fell: And as the Emperor was a Claimant too, it ſeem'd but reaſonable, That he ſhould be at equal Liberty to take ſimilar Precautions.

Joint Repreſentation of the French and Engliſh Miniſters at the Court of Spain.

Againſt admitting Imperial Troops into Italy, the ſaid Miniſters did nevertheleſs make their Repreſentations, tho' ſeverally, and were ſeverally anſwer'd: For M. Echonenberg was told, That his Catholic Majeſty had the ſame Liberty which other Princes had, to recruit the Foreign Troops in his pay; and to introduce thoſe Recruits in what Manner, and at what Time, he thought proper. But to M. Blecourt, the French Miniſter, this ſeeming Firmneſs was greatly qualify'd, by an Intimation, That at preſent, the King did not ſee any Occaſion to recruit the ſaid Foreign Troops in his Pay: And, as if in concert with the Court of Madrid, the Emperor was afterwards induc'd, to aſſure M. de Villars, That, except Recruits for the Regiments he already had in Italy, it was not his Purpoſe to ſend any Troops thither.

But if this Conceſſion of his Imperial Majeſty was made in Compliment to the Court of Spain, it muſt be ſuppos'd that he was rather amus'd than ſerv'd by the Queen: For A. D. 1700. as ſhe was almoſt the only Perſon who affected to be in his Intereſt, ſhe was the fitteſt Perſon to delude him: And it was afterwards more than ſuſpected, That ſhe had by this Time alter'd her Courſe, tho' pretending to be ſtill bound to the ſame Port: Indeed, her Majeſty had many Inducements for ſo doing: For the Council of Spain were ſtill as violent and as unanimous as ever for adopting a Son of France: Her Majeſty knew ſhe, alone, was by no Means, able to withſtand the Torrent, much leſs turn it the other way: And conſcious as ſhe certainly was, That ſhe was by no Means a Favourite either of the Nobility or the People, Self-Preſervation requir'd her to make fair Weather with the Party that was likely to be uppermoſt.

However this may be, (for what Preciſion can be obtain'd in Matters of this Nature, unleſs Cabinet-Miniſters would condeſcend to write Truth of themſelves) when the Catholic King was almoſt in his laſt Agonies, he was either prevail'd upon to order his former Will in favour of the Archduke to be cancell'd, or Advantage was taken of his Condition, (which was miſerable beyond Expreſſion) to act as if he had given ſuch Orders, and to procure his Hand to another Will; by which he bequeath'd the Inheritance entire, to the Duke of Anjou, ſecond Son to the Dauphin, to the Duke of Berry next, then to the Archduke and his Heirs; and, laſtly, to the Duke of Savoy and his Heirs; on a Suppoſition, That the Renunciation of the late Queen of France, was no other that a proviſional Meaſure, to prevent the Union of the Two Crowns on the ſame Head.

King of Spain's Death-Bed-Will in favour of the Duke of Anjou.

This Will was made the 2d of October, and yet Schonenberg, the Jeweſh Reſident for England and Holland at Madrid, was ſo ill inform'd of what paſs'd at Court, That he inform'd his Maſters, it was done on the 3d. He alſo inform'd them, That the King, ſoon after, thinking himſelf ſomething better, expreſs'd ſo much Indignation againſt the Junto who induc'd him to take that Step, that he recall'd the Powers he had given them, to act diſcretionally in the urgent Affairs of the Kingdom: That he afterwards ſign'd another Will, &c.—But no Article of this Kind had the leaſt Foundation.—On the contrary, he left the Adminiſtration in the Hands of that very Junto, with Cardinal Portocarrero at their Head, with all the Powers neceſſary for preſerving the Peace, and carrying on the Operations of Government.

All the Favor ſhewn to the Queen was, That her Dowry was enlarg'd from 300,000 to 400,000 Ducats a Year: Beſides which, ſhe was to have her Choice of the four general Governments, Flanders, Naples, Sicily, or the Milaneſe; and in caſe ſhe choſe to make her Reſidence in Spain, ſhe had Liberty to reſide in which of the principal Cities ſhe pleas'd.

His Death.

This Settlement having been thus made, and Nature being worn out in the King, at appear'd

A. D. 1700. appear'd by the (c) Diſſection of his Body, he breath'd his laſt on the firſt of November, about Three o'Clock in the Morning. The ſame Day an Expreſs was diſpatch'd from the Junto to the Court of France with the News, and alſo with two Copies of the Will: And on the 6th the Imperial Embaſſador deliver'd to the ſaid Junto, a written Proteſt againſt the Will, in which he declar'd it in his Maſter's Name to be null and void.

The Junto alſo gave a Copy of the ſaid Will to M. Blecourt, the French Envoy, at the ſame Time that they gave Orders for diſpatching an Expreſs of their own; and ſuch was the ſuperior Diligence of the French Courier, that he arriv'd at Verſailles on the 9th about Noon; whereas the Spaniard did not arrive till the next Day.

The ſame Day that the firſt of theſe Meſſengers arriv'd, Lord Manchester not only had Intelligence of this great Event, but diſpatch'd an Account of it to Mr. Secretary Vernon; in which he takes occaſion to ſay, "I can ſee They are very well pleas'd here with all theſe Circumſtances; and what Effect they will have, Time muſt ſhew: Tho' I am of Opinion, They will keep firm to the Treaty, as that is moſt for their Advantage."

Lord Manchester's Opinion of the Diſpoſition of France.

In two Hours after the firſt Expreſs arriv'd, a Council was held in Madam de Maintenon's Lodgings, at which that Lady as well as the King aſſiſted; together with the Chancellor, the Duke de Beauvillier, and M. de Torcy. The Dauphin, it ſeems, was in the Field Hunting, and conſequently unapprin'd till his Return of what had happen'd: But the next Morning another Council was held in the ſame Place, at which his Royal Highneſs took his Seat: And the ſame Evening a Third, in which the great Reſolution was taken that is ſoon to be explain'd.

Several Cabinet Councils held at M. de Maintenon's Lodgings.

But firſt it will be neceſſary to ſpecify the Propoſitions adjuſted with the Court of France by M. de la Tour, in lieu of his Maſter the Duke of Savoy's Pretenſions to the Auſtrian Succeſſion, and left to the Deciſion of the King of England; becauſe the Conduct of Savoy, in the Courſe of theſe Negotiations, or rather in Conſequence of them, was urg'd as one of the Reaſons to juſtify the Conduct of France: And it is in the following Words they are ſtated by Lord Jerſey, when for the firſt Time communicated to the Earl of Manchester: "The Firſt is, That France ſhould have the Duchy of Savoy, and the Kingdom of Sicily, the Duke of Lorrain to have the Kingdom of Naples; and the Duke of Savoy to have Milan join'd to Piedmont. Theſe Propoſitions came firſt from la Tour; but it is evident France had before agreed to them: For Count Tallard, in the laſt Audience he had of the King, did own, That the King of France was willing to accept of either of thoſe Propoſitions, tho' he was not under any Engagement with the Duke of Savoy." His Lordſhip adds, That the King declin'd coming to any Determination on this Head, till he return'd to England: And farther appris'd his Excellency, in Confidence, that his Majeſty was more inclin'd to the firſt Propoſal, in order that a Means might be found out to have Sicily otherwiſe diſpos'd of than to France, which the King was endeavouring: To the Elector of Bavaria, that is to ſay; (tho' it is not acknowledg'd in this Letter) not more to re-conciliate the good Graces of his Electoral Highneſs, than to ſilence the Clamours which prevail'd againſt the Treaty; more particularly, as calculated to throw all the Trade of the Levant into the Hands of France.

Negotiations concerning the Pretenſions of Savoy.

[Cole, p. 238.]

A. D. 1700.

King William endeavours to procure Sicily for the Elector of Bavaria.

But Lord Jerſey certainly falls into an egregious Miſtake, in ſaying, The King was moſt inclin'd to the Firſt, as is apparent by the very Reaſon he himſelf aſſigns for that Inclination of his Majeſty; namely, That Sicily might not fall to the Lot of France: For, according to the ſaid firſt Propoſal, Sicily was allotted to France: By the Word firſt then in this Place, we muſt ſuppoſe his Lordſhip meant the firſt Part of the Second Propoſition, namely, That France ſhould have Savoy and Piedmont, rather than Sicily and Savoy: And that This was actually the Caſe, can ſcarce be doubted, when it is farther conſider'd, That King Lewis in his Letters to M. de Briord, acknowledges, He had rather the Duke of Savoy would make Naples and Sicily his Option, preferable to Milan and Piedmont; and afterwards complains, That, contrary to the Language us'd by M. de la Tour at the Hague, (where he had ſignify'd both to the Penſioner and M. de Briord, That his Maſter was ready to accept the firſt Alternative) the Miniſters of his Royal Highneſs had declar'd in their Maſter's Name, That Naples and Sicily not being agreeable to him, They could never agree to any other than Milan.

A ſhort Turn of the Court of Savoy.

In a Word, this ſhort Turn of the Court of Savoy, together with what has been already ſaid concerning the Elector of Bavaria, ſufficiently explanes what thoſe Endeavours of his Majeſty (King William) were which are juſt touch'd upon in Lord Jerſey's Letter.

And now it is fit we ſhould procede to the great Reſolution we were prepar'd for above, which is reported by Lord Manchester to Lord Jerſey, from the Mouth of M. de Torcy, in the following Words: "This Morning (November 12) I was with M. de Torcy, who began with ſaying, That he did not doubt, but I was ſenſible, That ſince they had an Account of the King of Spain's Death, and the Diſpoſition he had made by his Will, great Difficulties muſt have ariſen, that Conference between M. de Torcy and Lord Manchester.

(c) The Body of the King having been open'd, ſays Edmund Curl, all the noble Parts were found to be very much corrupted; the Heart not being bigger than an Egg of a Pigeon, and ſoft as Marl: The Liver was infected, and it contain'd a Stone of the Bigneſs of a Bean, and black like roaſted Coffee. All the other Entrails, excepting the Spleen, were almoſt rotten. The Body has been imbalm'd, and is to be tranſported To morrow to the Royal Tomb of the Edwards." If Kings would conſeſcend to read, what a Leſſon to mortify Royal Vanity!

A. D. 1700. that the King had well consider'd the Occasion, and the Intent of the late Treaty with England, &c. which was, To prevent a War in Europe: That the Emperor not having sign'd, and the Duke of Savoy actually refusing to accept of Naples and Sicily: That there having appear'd Discontent both in England and Holland against the French being Masters of those two Kingdoms, in relation to the Trade of the Levant: Besides, That none of the Princes, that the Treaty had been communicated to, had promis'd more than a Neutrality; the King could not but think, there was a necessity of accepting of what the King of Spain declar'd in favour of the Duke of Anjou. Then he read me the Motives which he had drawn up, that I might the better inform his Majesty. I desir'd he would let me take the Copy, which I send your Lordship, and most that passed is contained in it: You may easily imagine, I had little to say when he told me the Resolution the King had taken. It is certain, that the Proceedings of the Emperor have put them in some Measure on this Necessity. For M. de Torcy observ'd to me, That if the King had refus'd, the Archduke had then a double Title, viz. That of Philip the IVth. and that of the late King's Will; and he could not tell but the Spanish Embassador had Orders to send Word to Vienna: That the Moment the Emperor consented to the Treaty, the Duke of Savoy had a good Title; and his Humour is so well known, that we are sure, he would not slip such an Opportunity; and then there must have been a War not likely to be soon ended, whatever the Success would be: That whole Kingdoms must be conquer'd, the Spaniards being entirely against dividing their Monarchy: That the Ships we and Holland were to furnish (fifteen that is to say) would not be sufficient for such a War; that it was very doubtful whether England and Holland would engage themselves in a greater Expence, which must necessarily be the Consequence. That it was certain, that the Treaty was more advantageous to France, and was what the King could have wish'd. He then ended, saying, That the King hop'd, that the Strength of these Reasons would so far prevail with the King our Master, that there might still be the same good Understanding as ever, which was so necessary for the Good and Quiet of Europe. I made no other Answer than that I would faithfully acquaint the King with what he had said to me by order." And towards the Close of his Letter his Excellency subjoins, "I cannot tell what Resolution the King will take, and I am far from giving my Opinion; tho' if your Lordship will permit me, I cannot see but we must acquiesce. You are sensible of the Posture of our Affairs, and of the Discontent there was in England against the Treaty; insomuch that my Lord Portland, and all that were concern'd in it, (of whom it must be remember'd Lord Jersey himself was a Principal) were the next Session to be sacrific'd if possible."

In which the Acceptance of the Will is declar'd.

Such was the Declaration made to the Minister of England at the Court of France on this signal Occasion; and such were his Excellency's Sentiments thereon. As to the Memoir that was given to him, we are already appris'd of the Nature of it: But we are farther to be inform'd, That a Copy of it was two Days afterwards sent to M. de Briord at the Hague, accompany'd with Instructions from his Majesty, to use the same sort of Language to the Pensioner: And that his Majesty moreover expres'd himself on this Occasion to the following Effect: "You are also to convince him, (the Pensioner) That the Emperor, not being engag'd, there was no Security that the Treaty could be carry'd into Execution: And in Truth, we should not have been expos'd to any Embarrasment on that Account, if the King of England and the States-General had in earnest press'd the Emperor to accede, in lieu of giving him secret Hopes, That he should not be forc'd to do it: If they had not try'd the Force of more affecting Experiments on the Duke of Savoy; if they had more sincerely endeavour'd to induce the Kings of the North, and the Princes of the Empire to embrace the Treaty; and, in short, if they had in Time agreed on the Proportion of Succours necessary for the Execution of the Treaty.—But as yet they must not be reproach'd with any thing."....

A. D. 1700.

Matter of Complaint urg'd by King Lewis against the Maritime Powers.

In this Interval it must be observ'd, King William was return'd to England; and that his Majesty might have the quickest and surest Intelligence of what had pass'd in the French Cabinet, in relation to the Will, Lord Manchester dispatch'd his Secretary Mr. Chetwynd, with the Letter above quoted: On the 4th, O. S. between Three and Four in the Afternoon, Mr. Chetwynd arriv'd in London; and tho' M. Lamberty affirms, his Majesty advis'd with none but Lord Portland, (with whom continues he, ridiculously enough) and the Courier, he remain'd for a long while in close Consultation, the Fact was quite otherwise: For Lord Manchester, as we have seen, having sent his Advices to the Lord Chamberlain Jersey, instead of the Secretary of State (Vernon) the Secretary takes care to let his Excellency know, That he was in the Secret notwithstanding; by signifying, That he had been call'd in to the reading of the whole Dispatch, and also by imparting his Majesty's Commands thereon; which he did the very same Day, in these very Words, which are not without some Perplexity, to wit: "His Majesty did not expect, that the Treaty should be laid aside in the Manner he finds it, and at the first Instant, when it should take place: Therefore his Majesty has directed me to tell you in the Letter, Mr. Jolly (a Servant of Lord Manchester's) will bring you in relation to the Duke of Savoy's Proposal,—That his Majesty did not think any Variation would be made from the Treaty, till the Emperor's Mind was known, whether He would accept it or not, for which two Months was allow'd, from the Notification of the King of Deliberations in England.

The Order given to Lord Manchester in pursuance to the Declaration made to Mr. de Torcy.

A. D. 1700. of Spain's Death: That it is ſtill his Majeſty's Opinion in this Caſe likewiſe, That the Emperor's Reſolution ought to be expected for the preventing thoſe Troubles which the Treaty was made to avoid; and This his Majeſty would have you acquaint M. de Torcy with, but he does not think you ſhould demand any (d) Audience of the King on this Occaſion."

The Duke of Anjou declar'd King of Spain.

But before theſe Sentiments of his Majeſty could reach his Embaſſador, tho' they were diſpatch'd by an Expreſs the ſame Day, the Moſt Chriſtian King had accepted the Will in form, and (e) declar'd his Grandſon King of Spain.

Another Conference between L. Manchester and M. de Torcy.

On the 23d however, (N. S. that is to ſay) Lord Mancheſter acquainted M. de Torcy with the Orders he had receiv'd from the King his Maſter, to which that Miniſter reply'd, That the laſt Anſwer from the Emperor, which was of the 6th Inſtant, and which he read to Lord Mancheſter, was as far as ever from accepting the Treaty: And his Lordſhip obſerving in return, That This was during the Life of the King of Spain; M. de Torcy rejoin'd, That he was ſatisfy'd, the Emperor never would have agreed to it; and that, as the Caſe ſtood, if France had rejected the Will, the Archduke would have had a Title to the whole Succeſſion. This, we are to underſtand, was the Subſtance of what paſs'd between theſe two Miniſters on this extraordinary Occaſion: And all that Lord Mancheſter adds, as of himſelf, in relation to it, is thus expreſs'd: "I do find, they do here expect, that I ſhould ſay ſomething in anſwer to what I have acquainted you and my Lord Chamberlain with, concerning the Motives that induc'd them to accept the Will: And I am of Opinion, that M. de Tallard will not go to England, till they know the King's Thoughts on that Matter. I muſt own to you, that I ſhall make but a ſtrange ſort of Figure at Court, till I have ſome Orders of that Nature." But all the Anſwer his Excellency could procure, was, That which follows from Mr. Secretary Vernon: "I have receiv'd your Excellency's Letter of the 24th Inſtant, N. S. and have laid it before his Majeſty; but the King has not given me any Thing in command at preſent to write to you. Their Reſolutions are taken; therefore his Majeſty may be allow'd to conſider a little, what may be the Conſequence of ſo ſudden a Change in that Court; as, likewiſe, to expect what are the Sentiments of other Princes and States, who are equally concern'd in the Preſervation of the Peace of Europe, and the preventing the Balance of Power being broken, by the uniting too many Dominions under any one Prince, which was the juſt Foundation of the late Treaty."

His Lordſhip's Remark thereon.

Mr. Secretary Vernon's Anſwer.

Deliberations in Holland on this Event.

And now it is Time to conſider the Courſe of this Tranſaction in Holland; where it ſo happen'd, That on the ſame Day, that the Count de Goes, the Imperial Miniſter, receiv'd an Expreſs from his Court, ſignifying, That the Emperor would never give his Conſent to any Treaty for dividing the Spaniſh Monarchy, M. de Briord alſo receiv'd an Expreſs from his Maſter, directing him to inform the Penſioner of what had paſs'd in Spain, and the Motives which had induc'd his Majeſty to depart from the Treaty, and accept of the Will. Both theſe Miniſters communicated the Contents of their Diſpatches the ſame Day, to the Penſioner accordingly. On the Morrow, the States-General aſſembled ſooner than ordinary to deliberate thereon; but came to no Reſolution: In the Evening of the ſame Day, Thoſe in the Secret of Affairs diſcuſs'd the ſame Points among themſelves; and M. Lamberty has given an Abſtract of their Debates, which, like the Former, produc'd no Iſſue: For, it ſeems, nothing could be done till they had receiv'd their Cue from the King of England. On the 22d, N. S. his Majeſty's Diſpatches arriv'd. The next Day the whole Affair was again debated in the Aſſembly of the States, for twelve Hours together; when their High Mightineſſes reſolv'd, in effect, to adopt the Sentiments of his Majeſty, and to ſuit their Conduct to his. Accordingly Orders were ſent to M. Heemſkirk, the Dutch Miniſter at Paris, to preſent a Memorial to the Moſt Chriſtian King, humbly to repreſent, "That their High Mightineſſes did not expect his Majeſty would have taken a Reſolution ſo contrary to the late Treaty, which they believ'd was to be obſerv'd in all Things by the contracting Parties, and which was to be departed from by none except by common Conſent: That the Time in which the Emperor might ſtill accede, in Virtue of the ſecret Article, not being yet expir'd, their High Mightineſſes, in conformity thereto, had again invited his Imperial Majeſty, in the moſt preſſing Manner, to accede: That for theſe Reaſons, they hop'd his Majeſty, in conſidering this Affair anew, would have the Goodneſs to make new Reflections upon it; and that they had ſent Orders to their Embaſſador to pray his Majeſty to perſiſt in obſerving the ſaid Treaty, and every Article it contain'd."

A. D. 1700.

Dutch Memorial to the Moſt Chriſtian King.

This Memorial, which was deliver'd in writing, both by the States Deputies to M. de Briord at the Hague, and alſo by M. Heemſkirk, to M. de Torcy to be preſented to the King, was dated November 25: And M. Heemſkirk having deſir'd a written Anſwer, Advantage was taken of that Circumſtance, to give him ſuch a one as might ſerve as a Sort of Manifeſto to all Europe: For all the eſſential Points contain'd in the Memorial given by M. de Torcy to Lord Mancheſter, were contain'd in it; as alſo moſt of Thoſe communicated to that Miniſter by Word of Mouth. But over and above all Theſe, certain peculiar Refinements were ſuperadded, which, perhaps, deſerv'd rather more Con-

The Anſwer thereto.

(d) And yet our Hiſtorians are not only pleas'd to ſay, Lord Mancheſter did demand a private Audience, but alſo to narrate what paſs'd at it.

(e) November 16, N. S.

A.D. 1700. Conſideration than they met with. Thus in the very opening, it is maintain'd, "That the Execution of the Treaty would have produc'd infinite Troubles: That while his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty obſerv'd the Spirit, he was not liable to the leaſt Imputation for abandoning the Letter: That the ſame Motive which had induc'd him to make the Treaty, had induc'd him to accept the Will, namely, the Deſire of Peace: That all the Diſadvantage redounding from this Change of Meaſures, redounded to himſelf: That his Majeſty had therefore Reaſon to believe his Allies would praiſe his Moderation, rather than complain of his Conduct, &c." And if to theſe we add two or three remarkable Features more of this great Original, we can ſcarce fail of conceiving an adequate Idea of it, viz. "No Body doubts, but the Emperor would have accepted the Will. The Succeſſion to Spain for his Second Son, had been the Aim of his long Negotiations at Madrid, his Treaties in the Empire tended to the ſame End. He refus'd to ſubſcribe to the Partition with this only Hope. It was ſcarce to be believ'd, that, being on the Point to reap the Fruits of ſo much Labour, he ſhould content himſelf with thoſe Offers which he had till then conſtantly rejected." ....." In order to preſerve the Peace, it was then neceſſary to employ Means differing from thoſe propos'd by the Treaty: The moſt natural, the moſt ſuitable to the Maintenance of the general Peace, and the moſt conſiſtent with Juſtice, was That which the King has taken, by accepting the Teſtament of his late Catholic Majeſty: If any Prince has a Right to oppoſe his laſt Diſpoſitions, it is ſufficient to read them, to judge, that this Right belongs only to the Dauphin. He being willing to deſiſt from it in favour of his Son, the Will executes itſelf, without Trouble, without Effuſion of Blood; and the People of Spain receive with the Peace, Him, whoſe Birth, the Diſpoſition of the late King, and the univerſal Wiſhes of all the Eſtates of the Monarchy, call to the Crown. If any Power ſhould undertake to attack ſo many united Rights, that Power would charge itſelf unneceſſarily with the odious Name of, Diſturber of the public Repoſe: It would begin an unjuſt War, without Likelihood of Succeſs. But if this War ſhould appear unjuſt when undertaken by ſuch Powers as thought themſelves intereſted to croſs the Advancement of a Prince of France, would it ſuit the Equity of the King, and his Tenderneſs for the King of Spain, to turn his Arms againſt a Nation, whoſe only Fault was, The offering the Crown of one of the moſt potent Monarchies of Europe, to a Grandſon of his Majeſty; and the aſking him to do them the Favour of accepting it? The Eminence of Kings cannot diſpence them from making known the Equity of the Wars they undertake. What Reaſons then could his Majeſty, who is ſo juſt, give, to have Recourſe to Arms, in order to divide a Monarchy yielded to its lawful Heir?.....All Things well examin'd, the States-General will, perhaps, find, That ſo many conſiderable Eſtates, acquir'd by France, according to the Diſpoſition of the Treaty, might give a juſt Jealouſy of its Power: And if they were to chuſe, it is likely, They would ſtill prefer the preſent State of the Monarchy of Spain, govern'd by a Prince of France without any Diviſion of its Eſtates, to the Execution of the Treaty according to the Terms. The Diſcourſe of the People in England and Holland, had already prevented what the Government would decide on this Occaſion: And their Complaints on the uniting the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily to the Crown of France, ſhew'd openly their Uneaſineſs for their Commerce in the Mediterranean." ....." Theſe Reflections will, probably, perſuade the States-General, that Juſtice, the Advantage of Peace, and the Spirit of the Treaty itſelf, did not allow the King to take any other Reſolution than That, of accepting the Will of the late King of Spain: That it ſuits with the particular Intereſt of the Republic of Holland: That it is agreable to the Intereſt of all Europe. The Misfortune then would be general, if it was poſſible for his Majeſty, after the Declaration he has made, to comply with the Inſtances contain'd in their Memorial: And He is thoroughly perſuaded, That they never intended to obtain the Effects of it. They are too clear-ſighted to have form'd Deſires ſo contrary to their Underſtanding and the true Intereſt of that Republic: If they were capable to forget Both ſo far, as actually to deſire his Majeſty would execute the Conditions of the Treaty, they would have ſhewn the Means to accompliſh the Partition without a War, and with the general Conſent of all Europe: They would, at leaſt, have nam'd the Princes that were ready to join their Forces to guaranty all the Articles of it: They would have declar'd thoſe which Holland would have given as well by Land as Sea. Nevertheleſs the Memorial contains nothing like it: The States propoſe only to grant to the Emperor the Term of two Months, mention'd in the Secret Article of the Treaty."....." In ſhort, the Delay of two Months would have been eſteem'd by the Spaniards a Refuſal of the Will."....." In which Caſe the Regency of Spain, in Conformity to the ſaid Will, would have been oblig'd to conſign the Crown to the Archduke, and the Emperor would obtain, in conſequence of the Delay only, which the States propoſe, what he has ſought after with ſo much Solicitude: So that, under the ſpecious Pretext of executing the Treaty, they would for ever aſſure the Grandeur and the Power of the Houſe of Auſtria: His Majeſty is, however, diſpos'd to believe, That they have not entertain'd ſuch a Deſign: They know too well, that if their Intereſt to deſerve by their good Conduct the Honour of his Affection, and the Continuance of the Marks of his Friendſhip. He is therefore perſuaded, That, in reflecting farther than they have hitherto done on the Marks he gives of his Attention to the public Tranquility, to the Sacrifice which he is willing to make, on that Account, of the conſiderable Eſtates, which were to have been

A.D. 1700.

A. D. 1700. been united to his Crown, they will change their Complaints into Thanks; and, very ſoon congratulating the King of Spain on his Acceſſion to the Crown, will endeavour to deſerve from the King the ſame Marks of his Goodneſs and Protection, which they and their Anceſtors formerly have receiv'd of his Majeſty and the Kings his Predeceſſors."

Lord Manchester's Reflections thereon.

A Copy of this Memorial Lord Mancheſter was alſo permitted to take; and in transferring it to Mr. Secretary Vernon, he takes occaſion to ſay, "You will ſee by it, what They expect from Us. The only Reflection I ſhall make is, That they take their Reaſons to be of ſuch Force, that they wonder, what they have done is not approv'd of." That alſo his Court might not be ignorant of one minatory Circumſtance which came to his Knowledge, he cloſ'd his Diſpute with the following Paragraph: "They begin to ſay here, That as for Holland, if they are diſſatisfy'd, the King of Spain ought to bring them to Obedience, as formerly belonging to that Monarchy; and if we diſpute, the little Gentleman at St. Germains is to be made uſe of. I wiſh That may not be the Conſequence at laſt, tho' we ſhould act otherwiſe."

But, in order to know what the real Diſpoſition of France was at this Time, we muſt conſult the Moſt Chriſtian King's own Diſpatches to M. de Briord, which accompany'd this very Memorial: And for the better underſtanding of it, we muſt throw in ſome Conſiderations with regard to the Elector of Bavaria, and the Part he began to play, the Moment his Hopes of obtaining the Kingdom of Sicily, by the Management of King William, were at an End; and he diſcern'd, That his Hold of the Netherlands, even as a Subſtitute, depended on his conforming in all Things to the good Will and Pleaſure of France.

The Deſignation of the Elector of Bavaria aſcrib'd to the Tories.

[Oldmixon, Vol. II. p. 815.]

Thoſe of our own Writers, indeed, who are for making the Tories anſwerable for all the Diſorders, Miſchiefs and Misfortunes of this Reign, ſurmiſe, That his Electoral Highneſs would never have aſſum'd that Part, if he had not been prompted to it by their Perverſeneſs. They tell us, He ſent a Miniſter into England, to inform himſelf exactly of the Situation of our Affairs, and of the Likelihood of the Parliament's entering immediately into Meaſures for preventing the Duke of Anjou's taking Poſſeſſion of the Throne of Spain: That this Miniſter was inſtructed to aſſure his Britannic Majeſty, That the Elector his Maſter would declare for the Confederacy, (tho' no ſuch Thing was then in Being, unleſs the Bargain which had been made for dividing the Spaniſh Monarchy might be ſo call'd) and keep the Netherlands out of French Hands, in caſe he might have preſent Aſſiſtance, &c. (which was impoſſible). And that, finding there muſt be a new Parliament, probably ſuch another as that then in being, he return'd with ſuch a melancholy Account, as determin'd his Electoral Highneſs to ſhape his Courſe thro' a different Channel: All which, however true in Fact, will not, by any Means, authoriſe any ſuch Application: For the Perverſeneſs of that Parliament, was not merely a Tory-Perverſeneſs: The Tories, on the contrary, as we ſhall ſee in its Place, were now uppermoſt at Court; and advis'd a Diſſolution, becauſe they had not ſuch an Aſcendency in it, as was requiſite for Court-Purpoſes. Beſides; how well ſoever the Elector was inclin'd to act a (f) double Part, and trim between the Courts of Vienna and Verſailles, as long as the King of Spain lived, and there was any Degree of Uncertainty which of the Rival-Intereſts would prevail, it is out of all Doubt, That he did not demur a Moment to acknowledge the new King, and to make his Court to him, by all the Profeſſions and all the Services in his Power.

A. D. 1700.

The Matter of Fact diſcuſs'd.

My Lord Mancheſter, in his Diſpatch to Mr. Secretary Vernon of November 17, N. S. ſays, "Count Monaſterol is come from the Elector of Bavaria: He has no Character, but has Orders to inform himſelf what is doing. He tells me the Elector ſent one to England the Day he came away." In that of the 20th of the ſame Month, he adds, by way of Poſtcript, "I am told, that the Duke of Anjou has wrote to the Elector of Bavaria, to notify to him his Acceſſion to the Crown of Spain." And again afterwards, "Juſt as I was ſending away my Letters, Count Monaſterol came to me. He tells me, That it was the Spaniſh Miniſter that wrote to the Elector in the Name of the King; and that he has learn'd nothing of what they intended to do." And in a Third Diſpatch of the 24th, he writes thus: "Count Monaſterol had Yeſterday an Audience of the King of Spain; and you know already what has paſs'd at Bruſſels. M. de Bedmar is this Day expected with a farther Compliment from the Elector of Bavaria: And it is ſaid, That the Elector will ſee the King of Spain on the Way, tho' he cannot come hither by Reaſon of the Ceremonial."

The Duke of Anjou proclaim'd at Bruſſels.

Thus, in Six Days from the firſt Mention of Count Monaſterol's Arrival at Paris (which was, at leaſt, as ſoon as the other Bavarian Miniſter arriv'd at London) we find him acknowledging the new King in form: And as to what had paſs'd at Bruſſels, our own Gazettes inform us, That on the 19th at Night, his Electoral Highneſs having receiv'd an Expreſs from the French Court, importing, That the King of France had accepted the Will, he immediately gave the neceſſary Orders for proclaiming the Duke of Anjou, which was done with all poſſible Ceremony the next Day. No. 3655.

A Courſe of Informations drawn from K. Lewis's Letters, ſhewing the real Diſpoſition of France with regard to Peace or War.

And now we are brought to King Lewis's own Diſpatches to M. de Briord above-mention'd; in which we learn, not only, that the Marquis de Bedmar was arriv'd at Paris, but alſo, that the Elector, had, by him, given ſufficient

(f) Among the Princes who had paid their Court to King William this Summer in Holland, he had been one.

A. D. 1700 sufficient Security for his good Behaviour: For, having directed that Minister to make a proper Acknowledgment of Don Bernard de Quiros's Merits and Services, he proceeds to say, "The Marquis de Bedmar has foretstall'd the Account he (Quiros) has given you of the Spanish Forces in Flanders; and has made me sensible, that they are stronger than I imagin'd: He has also shewn me, That, touching the Places belonging to the King of Spain in those Parts, nothing was to be fear'd from the Dutch Troops in garison there; and that on the contrary, in case of the least Movement on their Parts, they would find all the Danger lay on their Side." Nor is this all: For in the Sequel, resuming the same Subject, his Majesty expresses himself as follows: "The Marquis de Bedmar is already on his Return to Brussels: His Presence is necessary in the Netherlands, tho' the Elector of Bavaria has forgot nothing to testify his Zeal and his Fidelity: But it is proper that there should be many Eyes to watch the Motions of the Dutch Troops."

Thus, tho' the Elector did, all this while, continue his Minister at London, and did as certainly hold the Maritime Powers in play, he nevertheless made such Advances to the young King, and undertook so largely for his Service, as shew'd either, that he was retain'd by France, or that such was his Infincerity, That he could not be retain'd at all. And that, in consequence of this double Conduct, he fell into Suspicion with France, as also, that he embrac'd the Part of France at last we shall see. But first the Sequel of these Dispatches, which is to shew the real Disposition of France with regard to the States, must be given: And upon this Head, his Majesty instructs his Minister as follows, to wit, "It is necessary to penetrate, if possible, the Sentiments of the States-General in relation to those Troops; whether they have still any Hopes to retain them in the said Places, where they have nothing to fear on my Part, or whether it is their Intention to withdraw them of their own proper Motion, without waiting to have them dismiss'd by my Grandson. In either Case it is so necessary to be appriz'd of their Resolutions and Preparations, both by Sea and Land, at such a Conjuncture, that I shall think all the Expence of such Services well employ'd.—I do not limit you to any Sum: Particulars you are to inform me of, and I will cause them to be paid."

There is in this Place an incurable Defect in the Cypher; and here and there an uncertain Number has created some Uncertainty in the Passages already given, tho' without any Violence to the apparent Drift of the whole. His Majesty then takes occasion to signify, That he has had the Memoir read to him, which Don B. de Quiros had presented to the States-General, with Approbation; That the Answers which he had given to M. Dykvelt at a Conference, were equally strong and just. After which he procedes as follows: "And the more inclin'd the States appear to gain Time, the more needful it is, to press them to an Explanation: But as you observe, This ought A. D. 1700 to be done not only without Menaces, but even in such a way, as should indicate a total Indifference as to the Party they might think fit to chuse: For in truth, they themselves are most interested in their own Declarations: And if they are such as have a Tendency to rekindle the War, the Damage will be theirs. Thus the only Step which I pretend to take with regard to them, is, to apprise them in form of the Resolution I have made, to accept the Will of the King of Spain. I send you the Letter I have writ to them for that Purpose. The Necessity of sending me an Answer, will oblige them to declare their Sentiments: But you are not to make the least Advance to oblige them: It is fit they should know by this Conduct, That their Deliberations are absolutely indifferent to me; and that all I desire to know is, what I am to expect from their Purposes for the future."

All this is contain'd in his Majesty's Dispatch of November 30. In that of December 11, he acknowledges the Receipt of Two from M. de Briord, informing him, of the different Motions in Holland, and the Reasons which ocurr'd, to believe, That the Partisans of the King of England were busy in exciting the States to engage in a new War. After which he procedes thus: "During the Last, the Deputies for secret Affairs had the same Powers to conclude such Treatics, as were said to be for the Good of the States, as are demanded now; whence it is reasonable to believe, that the Government of Holland thinks in earnest of forming a new League: But I am nevertheless of Opinion, That unless they are sure of Support, they will not dare to take a Step which has a Tendency to rekindle the War: I am even inform'd, That the King of England is already convinc'd, they have declar'd their Sentiments with too much Precipitation: He sees the English Nation too backward to engage in a new War, which would expose their Commerce to a Rupture with Spain: And the Prorogation of the Parliament is a certain Proof of the little Confidence which he places in the Affections of his Subjects: So that the Hollanders being as yet sustain'd by no Alliance, will enterprise nothing in earnest against the Spanish Towns in the Low-Countries. On the contrary, it occurs to me, They are in pain for the Troops they have in Garison there: It is nevertheless certain, that it would be abundantly more for the Interest of Spain, that those Troops should be immediately withdrawn. I should be glad to have your Sentiments concerning the best Manner of removing them: For, in short, if the Spaniards were completely Masters of those Places, the secret Intrigues of the Elector of Bavaria would no longer be of any use. That Prince continues to assure me, That he has no Engagement with any other Power: And that he will never be wanting in any Point of Duty as Governor of the Netherlands to the King my Grandson: But these Assurances do not altogether accord with the close Intelligence which seems to subsist between the King of England and

A. D. 1700. and Him; and which the frequent Expeditions of Couriers between London and the Hague also indicate. Time will discover the Truth. You are, nevertheless, to observe the same Exactitude during the Interval, in acquainting me with all you can learn, of the Measures and Resolutions of this Prince. The Resident of Sweden (Palmquist) has given me to understand, That M. Lillierost, (the Swedish Minister at the Hague) has signified to him, That the States-General are aware of all the mischievous Consequences to be apprehended from a new War: That They shall never think of rushing into one, till they are convinc'd I shall take Advantage of the new Union between my Crown and That of Spain, to introduce my Troops into the Flemish Towns: And that their Fear of such an Event, is, in Truth, strong enough to prompt them to the most desperate Measures, I have already observ'd to you. Hence, I think it for the Good of my Service, to re-assure the Hollanders on that Head: You, therefore, are on all Occasions to enforce the Sincerity of my Intentions to preserve the Peace; in order to convince them, That, having desir'd to preserve it with the late King of Spain, it was not to be suppos'd, for the Future, I would break it, for the Sake of making Conquests in the Dominions of the King my Grandson: That they may depend upon it, my Forces shall never enter into them; unless he should be oblig'd to demand my Assistance to repel the Enterprizes of his Neighbours: And that in consequence, it belongs to those who dread a War, and the Entrance of my Troops into the Low-Countries, to regulate their Conduct in such a Manner, that nothing may trouble the Peace. I do not doubt, that M. Lillierost will do all in his Power to confirm the Assurances you give of the Sincerity of my Intention: For the Interest of his Master will correspond with the Conduct of his Embassador: And if it were otherwise, I should lay no Stress on his Services."

Again: In a Third, dated December 15, (acknowledging also Two other Letters from M. de Briord of the 7th and 9th, in which he had farther inform'd his Majesty, That the States had as yet come to no Resolution on the present State of their Affairs: And that the different Movements he observ'd amongst them, rather discover'd their Inquietude than any settled Purpose to rekindle the War) He discovers a firm Persuasion, That they would not rush on a Measure so contrary to their Interests, in case they were convinc'd, He had no other Intention than to maintain the Peace: And that the Orders he had given, and was then giving, (to M. de Briord that is to say) would dissipate their Fears. "I would have you then take every Opportunity, continues his Majesty, to re-assure them on this Head; and in particular, to let the Pensioner know, That I have not the least Design on any of the Places belonging to Spain: I desire only to maintain the Tranquility of the Catholic Netherlands: And the States-General have nothing to apprehend from the Motions of my Troops, so long as they do not themselves take any Step to trouble the Peace. You may assure him I do not seek for any Pretence to introduce my Troops into those Places: But at the same Time, it is necessary those Places should be secure on all Sides. I will even enter into any reasonable Engagements which the States-General can demand on that Head, provided they will, at the same Time, withdraw their Troops, which at present are of no use there: But it is not proper, that you should make this Proposition to the Pensioner, according to the Overture made by M. de Lillierost: 'You are to confer with M. de Lillierost only: And if he can promise you, That the Hollanders will withdraw their Troops, I hereby authorise you to engage on my Behalf, That none of Mine shall be put into the Places of the Low-Countries.'"

A. D. 1700.

In the Sequel of the Dispatch, he condescends to justify himself with regard to some Complaints of the States, as, That he had refus'd to give an Audience to their Embassador, and that their Letters to him had been open'd; both which he not only denies, but also wonders, That any Pretext should be taken from thence, to occasion a Failure in the Credit that was due to M. de Briord's Letters.

Making then a Transition to the State of Affairs on the Side of Italy, he signifies, That the Advices he receives from Milan, giving him the most precise and positive Assurances of Orders given by the Emperor for the March of an Army of 30,000 Men into Italy, he found it indispensably necessary on his Side, to cause a suitable Number of his Troops to rendezvous in Dauphiné, in order to assist the Prince of Vaudemont, agreeable to the Requisition he had made.

And, at last, returning to the States, he instructs M. de Briord, to inform himself of the Designs of the Hollanders, the Engagements they should enter into either with the Emperor or other Princes, and the Orders they gave for the Augmentation of their Troops, or the arming their Ships, with his usual Exactness: And he concludes with the following Remark, which the Editor of his Letters was either unable or unwilling to decypher; to wit: "I observe, by the Account you give me, That the Alacrity which appears at present in the Negotiations carrying on with the Princes of the Empire, differs widely from the Dilatoriness of the Pensioner, when negotiating with the same Princes, to bring them into the Partition-Treaty."

And yet again, in another Dispatch, dated the 24th of December, having once more hinted how desirable a Thing it was, That the States should withdraw their Troops; and touch'd, at the same Time, on the ill Consequences which might follow the obliging them to dislodge with too much Precipitation, he proceeds thus: "It is certain, That as to England, the greatest Part of the Nation dread a War; and that hence they are led to prefer the Measure of the Will,

A. D. 1709. to That of the Partition-Treaty: Conſequently, the King of Great-Britain will find great Oppoſition in his Parliament, in caſe he is diſpos'd to carry Things to a Rupture; as well becauſe he can neither ſhew the Neceſſity of it, nor anſwer for the Event, unleſs furniſh'd with a ſufficient Cauſe for undertaking it. But it would be giving him a Pretext ſpecious enough, to enflame the Spirits of the Engliſh, and ſmoothing the Way to all his Deſigns, if we ſhould oblige the Hollanders by Force to abandon the Spaniſh Towns: For in ſuch Caſe, the Introduction of my Troops in their Room, would authoriſe all the Rumours which are ſpread abroad, of ſecret Treaties and Conventions, for giving up the Low-Countries. I learn beſides, That the Dutch Troops in thoſe Places, ſcarce out-number the Spaniſh; ſo that the Danger is ſo much the leſs preſſing: And if any Foreign Troops ſhould move that Way, Mine ſhould be ready to march at the firſt Demand of the Elector of Bavaria; or the other General Officers of the King of Spain: I am, therefore, convinc'd, That Force muſt be deferr'd as long as poſſible: And that, nevertheleſs, all other Means muſt be us'd to diſlodge the Hollanders, and to leave the Spaniards in the ſole Poſſeſſion of their own Towns. M. Lillieroot's Propoſal affords a natural Opening for a Propoſition to the States to that Effect: As I have no Intention to revive the War, and as, on the contrary, I have no Averſion to the Alliance, propos'd by that Miniſter, for the Maintenance of the Peace; I have already caus'd Mr. Palmquiſt to be inform'd, That if the King of England and the States-General are in a Diſpoſition to open a Treaty for that End, againſt all ſuch as would trouble it, I ſhall enter into it with Pleaſure. You are to ſignify as much to M. Lillieroot: And you are alſo to add, in conformity to what has been already ſaid to M. Palmquiſt, That the public Tranquility being thus confirm'd, it will be no longer of any Uſe to continue Dutch Troops in the Towns of Spain; ſeeing their very Continuance there could anſwer no other End, but to cauſe Suſpicion and Diſtruſt: That one of the Articles of the new Alliance, ought to contain a Proviſion for the withdrawing the ſaid Troops, on which Condition I will engage, not to replace them with any of mine, as long as the ſaid Alliance ſubſiſts. This appears to me the only Meaſure which can be taken at preſent: It is proper, nevertheleſs, not to give an entire Credit to M. Lillieroot, on the Subject of the Elector of Bavaria; and to keep that Prince in Dependence by the Hopes of the Advantages he may derive from his Attachment to the King of Spain. Beſides, The Eſtates he holds in the Empire, together with Thoſe of the Elector his Brother, render their Alliance conſiderable in the preſent Conjuncture of Affairs; and I have thought proper to make him the Offer of a Treaty, &c." In the next Paragraph, his Majeſty acknowledges the Expediency of authoriſing Don B. de Quiros to reſume his miniſterial Function in the King his Maſter's Name with the States-General, which ſeems to argue, A. D. 1709. that M. de Briord had ſuggeſted that Expedient himſelf. But what is more remarkable, his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty ſends the Credential Letter for Quiros, ſign'd by the young King, and acknowledging him in the Quality of his Embaſſador Extraordinary, to M. de Briord, that the Former might receive it at the Hands of the Latter: And this Credential was accompany'd with another Letter, relating to the evacuating the Spaniſh Towns, which was to be kept in reſerve, till a proper Criſis for demanding thoſe Towns in form.

Thus the Diſmiſſion of the Dutch Troops out of thoſe Towns, is the Conſideration which is always uppermoſt: And here we have the real Secret of the Diſpoſition of France not only with regard to the States, but of Peace and War in general.

The Swediſh Propoſal referr'd to in this laſt Diſpatch, Lord Manchеſter, in a Letter to Mr. Secretary Vernon, dated December 29, calls the Project of a League between England, France, Spain and Holland, for the Security of Flanders, with a Proviſion, That any other Prince might enter into it: This he calls M. Lillieroot's Propoſal; ſays, That Palmquiſt often preſs'd him on the Head of an Accommodation; but that M. de Torcy had communicated the Project to him; at the ſame Time, taking occaſion (in anſwer to a Suppoſition of his Lordſhip's, That all Things in Flanders, under the ſaid League, were to remain as they were) to declare, That as the King did not intend to ſend any Troops thither, ſo it could not be expected, That the Dutch ſhould remane there, or any but ſuch as belong'd to the King of Spain. His Lordſhip adds, "I have long perceiv'd, This was their Deſign. I only ſaid, That I thought Spain could never apprehend any thing from the Dutch Troops remaining there, tho' I could not tell, but it might excite Apprehenſions if they were remov'd. He would have argued this Matter, but I avoided it: I am confident, That if in Spain it ſhould be approv'd of, it would be oppos'd here: Yet if the Emperor can make any Head, ſo as to be able to give them Trouble, and Portugal ſhould be diſſatisfy'd, as I hear they are, I cannot but think they may be brought to what Terms we pleaſe." Towards the Concluſion of this Diſpatch, his Lordſhip mentions certain Motions of the French Troops towards Thionville and Straſburgh; and then ſubjoins this Reflection: "I know they are oblig'd by This, to withdraw all their Forces from Flanders, which ought to convince us, as They ſay, That They have no other Deſign but to prevent the Emperor and his Allies from breaking in upon them."

The real Diſpoſition of King and alſo Parliament.

To this the Secretary's Anſwer was as follows: "His Majeſty commanded me to acquaint you, That he does not know what M. Lillieroot's Project is, any farther than the Account you give of it, nor does he know upon what Grounds he propoſes it: But he ſuppoſes, it ariſes from M. Lillieroot or M. Palmquiſt, without any Directions

A. D. 1700. tions from the King of Sweden: His Majesty approves of what you reply'd to M. de Torcy, upon his explaining, That it was the Intention of that Court, not to allow of the Continuance of the Dutch Troops in Flanders: If these Methods are perfued, it will be hard to make it understood, That they are Means to free People from their Jealousies and Apprehensions."

Thus All was cold, dry and reserv'd on our Side: And as well to make this more apparent, as to confute a Forgery which has been grafted on M. de Tallard's Return to England at this Crisis, it will be necessary to specify what pass'd on his Arrival, and at his first Audience, as the same is narrated to Lord Manchester by Mr. Vernon.

And the first Thing he touches upon, is an Irregularity in his Deportment on that Occasion: For the Count having notify'd his Arrival to that Minister, and at the same Time demanded an Audience of the King, which was assign'd him for the next Day; he, nevertheless, went to Hampton-Court, where the King then was, of his own Accord, the Day before: Nor was this all; for at the Court-Gate he met the Secretary, who stopp'd to make him acquainted with the King's Pleasure: Which, it seems, not being exactly conformable to his own, "He said, (these are the Secretary's own Words) That being there, he thought fit to go and make his Leg to the King; which I told him, he might do, as he thought fit. I went away for London; but I hear he came into the Bedchamber before the King went to the Treasury: The King stopp'd a little to speak to him about his Journey, and so went on to the Treasury; and the Embassador return'd to London. He went again next Day to his Audience: I was not there; but I hear it was very short. He deliver'd his Letter to the King, saying very little at the presenting of it; and then stood silent: The King said something to him about his own Inclinations to preserve the Peace of Europe; in manifesting whereof, he might, perhaps, have advanc'd too far: But he was very desirous that all the World should be satisfy'd of his Dispositions towards the public Tranquility. I understand the Embassador's Answer was to this Effect: That his Master had the same Inclinations to Peace; and thought he had given a Proof of it, by accepting the King of Spain's Will. His Majesty seem'd not to understand how that could be made out; and the Embassador proceded no farther; but only made a particular Compliment on his own Account; how much he valued the Honour of returning hither again to assure his Majesty of his profound Respect; and so took his Leave, and went immediately back to London. His Majesty had not open'd the Letter while the Embassador was with him; it not being usual: But reading it afterwards, he finds it there said of the Embassador: "He will explain distinctly the Reasons that "have oblig'd us to prefer the public Tran-"quility to our private Interests, by accept-"ing, as we have done, the Will of the "late Catholic King in favour of the King "our Grandson." And, therefore, his Majesty seems a little surpris'd, That he did not enlarge farther at his Audience, or desire some other Time for the doing of it. I return'd the Embassador the Visit that Evening. He told me, He had been at Hampton-Court, at the Time I had appointed him: That he was but a very short Time with the King: And that he having deliver'd the Letter, he had discharg'd his Commission. While I was with him, a Servant came in to tell him, There was a Gentleman arriv'd from France to speak with him: So That shorten'd my Visit too; and we had no Talk of any Business." A. D. 1700.

To this it may be necessary to add, That the same Minister, in another Letter to the same Embassador, dated December 20, O. S. says, "In the mean Time I can only acquaint you, That M. Tallard now comes regularly to Court once a Week. He was at Kensington on Tuesday last, in the same Manner as you go to Versailles, without having any Thing to say to the King: I did not see him there, nor have I seen him any where else: But I hear he talks of going away in February: And they say some of his Chapel at least are going away sooner." As also, That thro' all the rest of his Letters, there runs a similar Vein of Assurances, That M. de Tallard never did come to any farther Explanation or Expostulation with the Court of England, during his Stay in this Kingdom.

If, therefore, any thing so remarkable did occur, as the Circumstance presently to be explan'd, it will follow, either That the Secretary of State was not in the Secret, or that the Ministers still kept themselves on the Reserve with Lord Manchester: Neither of which, at this Crisis, there is the least Reason to imagine; as we shall see by the several Instances of Confidence repos'd in each, in the Course of Affairs.

A certain Creature of the French Court, who calls himself M. le Marquis de Langallarie, having furnish'd his Enemies with Matter to disgrace him, took Refuge in Germany, where he set forth a Book of Memoirs, containing some Facts sufficiently authenticated, and as many Fictions: Among the Latter of which, we have been, and shall be, furnish'd with sufficient Proofs, to place the pretended Anecdote which follows: Namely; That the King of England, having receiv'd Advice from his Envoy at Madrid, of certain Intrigues carrying on there by M. de Harcourt, to prevail with his then Catholic Majesty to make a Will in favour of a Prince of France, did, thereupon, dispatch Mr. Prior with a Letter writ with his own Hand (which Prior was to deliver to none but his Most Christian Majesty) representing what he had been made acquainted with; and insisting on full Satisfaction therein, before he sign'd the Partition-Treaty which was then depending: That Prior having, accordingly, presented the said Letter to his Majesty, He not only disown'd the whole Thing, but gave his Royal Word, That whatsoever should happen at the Court of Spain, He would never

A Fiction of M. de Langallarie, in relation to a Letter under King Lewis's own Hand to King William.

A. D. 1700. never renounce the Treaty: And that M. de Tallard, in his Audience of King William, on his Arrival in England, after the Will had been accepted, enlarging on the Sincerity of his Maſter, that Prince took the Opportunity to produce the Letter under his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty's own Hand, containing the Promiſes above-mention'd, and to deliver it to the Embaſſador, who, being till then wholly ignorant of what had paſs'd, immediately withdrew in Confuſion, unable to extenuate ſuch a notorious Inſtance of Perfidy.

Adopted by Dr. Hare, Dr. Hare, late Biſhop of Chicheſter, while a Controverſial Writer, finds it for his Purpoſe to recite the ſame Story, tho' he does not think fit to give it in Mr. Prior's Name; as apprehending, no doubt, That immediate Confutation would have been the Reſult: and Mr. Tindal, And Mr. Tindal, on Dr. Hare's Authority, has interwove it with his Hiſtory, tho' inſerting at the ſame Time Mr. Cole's Papers by way of Note, but without connecting them with his Text, for ſeveral Sheets together.

and confuted. From thoſe very Papers of Mr. Cole, Lord Manchеſter's own Account of what paſs'd in conſequence of Mr. Prior's Miſſion, has already been inſerted in this Work, (P. 822, 823). And tho' it is true, That, during his Lordſhip's Audience of the Moſt Chriſtian King, his Majeſty did refer to ſome Paper or Papers which the two Kings had reciprocally ſign'd, it appears even by the ſaid Reference, not only that the ſaid Paper was of ſome ſtanding, conſequently could not be any ſuch Letter as is thus confidently diſcours'd of, but alſo, that it was ſome Preliminary by which a Proviſion had been made, That the States ſhould ſend over a Perſon with proper Powers to ſign the Treaty in England: But as, on the one Hand, it is not to be conceiv'd, that the Court of England, with ſuch a Letter in Hand, would have ſuffer'd the Tables to have been ſo turn'd upon them in relation to the Will, without making ſuch an Uſe of it, as ſhould have expos'd the Perfidy of France to all Europe; ſo, on the other, an Incident aroſe out of the Parley between M. Zinzendorf and M. de Torcy, concerning the Treaty recited P. 861, which fully ſhews, the Engliſh Court had no ſuch Authority to produce, as we are told, was contain'd in the ſaid Letter. For Lord Manchеſter, having firſt inform'd Lord Jerſey, That M. Zinzendorf's ſecond Queſtion, and M. de Torcy's Anſwer to it, were thus ſtated, That is to ſay, Queſtion, Si les Eſpagnols vouloient choiſir un Prince François pendent le Terme donné de trois mois, ſi en ce Cas, on conſent a ne pas attendre les Propoſitions d' Eſpagne? Anſwer, Oui, on y conſent, the Laſt of thoſe Miniſters repeats the Queſtion and Anſwer in the very Words ſo given by Lord Manchеſter, then directs him, to ſee in Diſcourſe, whether M. Zinzendorf underſtood it in that Senſe, and alſo to take care, that it be ſo explain'd to M. de Torcy, as ſhould leave no Room for any Difficulty. And yet, when A. D. Lord Manchеſter, in his next Diſpatch, gives him to underſtand from M. de Torcy's own Mouth, That he, M. de Torcy, in his Anſwer to M. Zinzendorf, had added the Proviſo before-mention'd, to wit, That the Emperor acceded to the Treaty within the ſaid three Months, otherwiſe not, the whole Matter is let fall; which, certainly, would not have been the Caſe, if King William had already been in poſſeſſion of a Promiſe under King Lewis's Hand, Not to accept of a Will in prejudice of the Treaty.

Here, therefore, we may reſume the Series of Affairs; or rather inſert ſuch remarkable Incidents, as we have hitherto paſs'd over in Silence, for the Sake of continuing that Series to a proper Pauſe.

Death of the Duke of Glouceſter. And of Theſe, That which concern'd this Nation moſt, and which it has ſince been moſt ſenſible of, was the Death of the only Son of the Princeſs of Denmark, and the only Perſon, after her Royal Highneſs, included in the new Settlement of the Crown: He was call'd Duke of Glouceſter; and it has been generally underſtood, that he was ſo by poſitive Creation, as well as Nomination: But a late Enquiry has diſcover'd, That his Patent was never made out: A ſuperſtitious Perſuaſion to the Prejudice of that Title, having both then, and ever ſince, deterr'd the Court from making uſe of it.

His Highneſs had receiv'd the uſual Compliments on his Birth-Day, which was the 24th of July, when he completed the Eleventh Year of his Life, at Windſor, and had danc'd at the Ball given to the Nobility and Gentry, without making any Complaint, or ſeeming to have any Diſorder: But that Night he found himſelf fatigu'd, and the next Day grew extremely ſick, and complain'd of his Throat. (g) Dr. Hannes, as it muſt be gather'd from his own Letter to the King, was then call'd in: On the 26th, he was hot and feveriſh: On the 27th he was bled, and in the Evening (his Fever ſtill encreaſing) bliſter'd: The next Morning between Three and Four o'Clock, Dr. Gibbons was call'd in, and about Noon the ſame Day Dr. Radcliff, tho' he did not reach Windſor, according to his own Account, till Six in the Evening: From this Time all the Three Phyſicians proceed by Conſultation, and, as it muſt be preſumed, Agreement of Opinion: But, however this may be, his Fever being of the malignant Kind, accompany'd with Eruptions perhaps occaſion'd by ſome Intemperance on his Birth-Day, and being enflam'd with cordial Draughts, which were preſcrib'd, as Dr. Radcliff, in his Letter, informs the King, to reſiſt the Malignity, the Conſtitution which was tender and feeble ſunk under it, about Midnight, between the 29th and 30th.

Of his Parts and Acquirements, Biſhop Burnet, his Preceptor, makes very [illegible] Mention.

(g) See a Letter to a Friend concerning the Sickneſs and Death of the Duke of Glouceſter, with the true Copies of three Letters to the King from Hannes, Gibbons, and Radcliff, publiſh'd for the rectifying the many miſtaken Reports on that moſt lamented Loſs.

A. D. 1700. Mention; but of his Diſpoſition, makes no Mention at all: The ſame Prelate ſays, The Princeſs attended him with great Tenderneſs, but with a grave Compoſedneſs, which amaz'd all who ſaw it: And that ſhe bore his Death with a Piety and Reſignation, remarkably ſingular: He alſo adds, That the Nation was greatly alarm'd at his Loſs; with an Exception to the Jacobites, whom he repreſents as growing very inſolent upon it; and as ſaying, That now the chief Difficulty was remov'd out of the Way of the Prince of Wales's Succeſſion. Biſhop Kennet, in the Words of Boyer, alſo ſignifies, That the Republicans were as much pleas'd with this Removal, as the Jacobites, tho' for a different Reaſon: His Lordſhip alſo follows the ſame Writer, in aſſerting, The King had ever expreſs'd a great Love for the Duke of Glouceſter, and was certainly very much affected with his Death: But B. Burnet, who beſt knew the Diſpoſition of his Majeſty towards this young Prince, and what his Majeſty's Behaviour was in conſequence of his Death, is wholly ſilent on this Head: And ſome Circumſtances which are ſcatter'd up and down Cole's Collection of State-Letters, (tho', by the Way, he has either ſuppreſs'd or overlook'd the Account which muſt have been ſent from the Secretary's Office to Lord Manchester of that Event) ſeem to indicate, That his Majeſty did not take it very much to Heart: For his Lordſhip, writing to Mr. Blathwayte at the Hague, takes Occaſion to ſay, "I have had the melancholy News of the Death of the Duke of Glouceſter: I ſuppoſe I ſhall have Orders to notify it to this Court; and in what Manner it is to be done; whether my Coaches and Livery are to be put into Mourning, and if I am to aſk public Audience, and deliver Letters to all the Royal Family: If ſo, you will ſend me Copies of the Letters, that ſo I may frame my Diſcourſe accordingly: I deſire you will be full in your Directions; for I doubt, as he was Heir preſumptive, the Mourning will be the deeper." To this Mr. Blathwayte anſwers, "As to your Lordſhip's Mourning on the late ſad Occaſion, his Majeſty thinks it enough, That your Lordſhip, and ſuch Gentlemen as attend near your Perſon, do put on cloſe Mourning for Three Months." The like Inſtructions are repeated in another Letter to his Lordſhip of the ſame Day; that is to ſay, Auguſt 22, without the Addition of one Syllable concerning the Notification: And yet in a Third, dated September 5, he begins thus: "I have the Honour of your Excellency's Letter of the 27th paſs'd, and am expecting to hear what Reſolution will be taken by the Court of France in reference to the Notification of the Duke of Glouceſter's Death, upon the laſt Orders I ſent your Lordſhip." Nor was this the only Difficulty which occurr'd to Lord Manchester: For in his Diſpatch to Vernon, dated September 8, we find him writing thus: "Laſt Night I receiv'd Letters from their Royal Highneſſes for this Court, which will not be receiv'd here, unleſs there is a Letter at the ſame Time from his Majeſty; nor, indeed, can I offer them, without being impower'd to do it, either by you, or by Mr. Blathwayte, as you ſee by the Incloſ'd, I freely tell Mr. Griffith, (Secretary it muſt be preſum'd to one of their Royal Highneſſes) whom I have deſir'd to conſult with you and my Lord Marlborough upon this Matter. There is ſo much Time already paſs'd, that I wait with ſome Impatience for your Directions in what Manner the Duke of Glouceſter's Death is to be notified, &c." Again, on the 15th, to the ſame Miniſter, "I have yours of the 29th of Auguſt, wherein you take Notice of the Princeſſes Letters. I am ſorry this Matter was not concerted with the King, which might have prevented theſe Difficulties, which I did, in ſome Meaſure, foreſee; and, therefore, I wrote fully on this Subject to Mr. Blathwayte. His Anſwer was, That, on this melancholy Occaſion, all that would be needful was, to put myſelf and my Gentlemen in mourning. Since my Illneſs, my Secretary has wrote to Mr. Cardonnel, (Secretary to Lord Marlborough) to explane whether any Notice is to be given to this Court. He deſires him to acquaint me, That there are no Orders given to notify the Duke of Glouceſter's Death to any Court whatſoever: So you ſee how this Matter ſtands." On the 22d thus: "I receiv'd by the laſt Poſt a Letter from the Earl of Jerſey, (then at Leo) wherein he mentions, That the King would have me notify the Duke of Glouceſter's Death to the French King; but he takes no Notice of any Letter I ſhould deliver at the ſame Time; and eſpecially ſince I have the Princeſs's Letter.....I hope my Orders by the next Poſt will be plain; for on the ſame Day my Lord Chamberlain wrote, Mr. Blathwayte writes me, that the Reaſon he had not ſent me any Orders was, That the King did not think it neceſſary. And laſtly, in a Poſtſcript on the 29th, thus: "As I was ſending away my Letters, I receiv'd one from Mr. Blathwayte, whoſe Stile is ſuch, that I am now ſtill under more Difficulties; He giving me no Anſwer to what I deſir'd of him in relation to the Princeſs's Letters, whether I am to deliver them or no: His Words are theſe, "We are expecting "to hear how the bare Notification of the "Duke of Glouceſter will be receiv'd in the "Court of France." I cannot tell what I ſhall do, becauſe the late King is at Fontainbleau: (where the French Court then was) But I believe I ſhall go thither."

How ſlightly paſs'd over by the King.

In ſhort, it all ended in what is here call'd a bare Notification, which was civilly receiv'd, and the Court did in conſequence go into Mourning: But then M. de Torcy did not fail to inſinuate, That the Merit lay on their Side, by ſaying to Lord Manchester, when the Latter was preparing the Ground for his Audience, "That while there was ſo good an Underſtanding between the Two Courts, he need not doubt but whatever came from the King would be well receiv'd."

And now it is Time to mention a Paſſage of Lamberty's, (Tom. I. p. 121.) which not only deſerves Notice, but alſo Chaſtiſement:

A. D. 1700. The Princess assisted by Lamberty of ill Designs in notifying his Death to the K. her Father.

The said Passage is thus translated by Mr. Cole: "The other singular Affair is, That the Duke of Glocester, who was the Hope of the English, coming very unfortunately to dye, the Princess Anne of Denmark, his Mother, sent, very clandestinely, an Express to the Court of St. Germains to notify his Death there. The Earl of Manchester, who was Embassador from England at Paris, and who watch'd that Court, was advis'd of it. He dispatch'd his Secretary Chetwynd under other Pretences for Loo, to inform the King of it. It was because such a Sort of a Step, so contrary to what the Princess Anne had always shewn, made it appear, that she had ill Designs."

How unjustly.

Now, were it a Fact not to be disputed, That the Princess did actually send such a Notification to the King her Father, the Inference does not follow, That, therefore, she had ill Designs. On the contrary, had she ever corresponded with her Father, after what had happen'd to him in England, she might have been held inexcusable in a moral Light, if she had not corresponded with him on such an Occasion as this. A bare Notification was but an Act of filial Duty; and if it was no more, nothing ill could be the Result of it. But if, notwithstanding the Obligations which lay upon her, and which even the Abdication could not dissolve, it was Matter of Offence and Blame to correspond with him at all, a Correspondence wholly political, and which had for its Object nothing less than the opening a Prospect of the Succession once more to the pretended Prince of Wales, would have been abundantly more blameable and offensive.—Tradition has handed down several strange Stories of this Kind:—But traditionary Evidence is very rarely so qualify'd, as to be fit for historical Evidence.—All, therefore, that can be advanc'd at present, in relation to this tender Topic, must be drawn from two Letters of Lord Manchester's to Mr. Vernon, dated November 3, and December 11, N. S. In the Former of these we find the Paragraph which follow; to wit: "Three Days ago Mr. F. Graham, Brother to the late Lord Preston, came over to St. Germains, and went away Post this Morning to Flanders, in order to embark for England in some of those Ports. It is believ'd, that he is sent over by Sir Charles Musgrave, and other Parliament Men, with Proposals, in order to get the Succession settled upon the pretended Prince of Wales on certain Conditions." And in the Latter This: "I cannot tell from whence They have at St. Germans an Apprehension that the pretended Prince of Wales will be carry'd away into England with his own Consent; and upon this they have encreas'd his Guard: Whereas he had formerly but Six, he has now Fourteen. They think their Game so very sure, that there is no Occasion he should make such a Step: Besides; the changing his Religion will never be suffer'd; and they have lately declar'd, That they would rather see him dead."

But whatever Correspondences, and from whatever Quarter, were, either constantly or occasionally, directly or indirectly, kept up with the Court of St. Germains, M. Lamberty is wholly in the Wrong in asserting, That Lord Manchester was advis'd of any such Express so clandestinely sent thither by the Princess of Denmark; and that Mr. Chetwynd's Errand to Loo was to inform the King of it. The Letter which Mr. Chetwynd carry'd with him to Lord Albemarle, is extant in Cole's Collection; and contains nothing more than an Account which he had receiv'd of a Design against the King's Life; and which he thought to be of such Importance, (tho' it prov'd to be a mere Imposture) that he chose to send his Secretary with it, for fear of any Miscarriage or Delay. It bears date August 12, N. S. being the very Day that his Lordship receiv'd the pretended Discovery; and Mr. Chetwynd set out the same Day for Holland, which was before the News of the Duke of Glocester's Death reach'd Paris: So that every Circumstance in M. Lamberty's Narrative being false, it may be reasonably inferr'd, That the Fact is not true.

A. D. 1700. A Falsity in his Assertion detected.

The Court of St. Germains, in the mean Time, was not the only one that was agitated by the Death of the Duke of Glocester: For as the Line of Succession was no longer observ'd, there was Room for Pretensions and Intrigues of all Sorts. In consequence of the Abdication, the Duchess of Savoy was nearest in Blood to the Throne, after the Princess of Denmark: But her Religion was a Bar insurmountable: And, as on the other Hand, it was understood, that something of a Family-Claime, how remote and feeble soever, was nevertheless to be consider'd, in every new Settlement, his Majesty had already engag'd his Vote and Interest to the Electoress of Hanover, who was a Protestant, and descended from King James I. by the Princess Elizabeth, marry'd to the Palsgrave of the Rhine: When the Former Bill of Settlement was on foot, he had recommended her to his Ministers; they had recommended her in Parliament, and, as we have seen, had the Commons prov'd as tractable as the Lords, she had then been included in it.

The procuring an Electoral Cap for the Duke of Hanover, had, no doubt, soften'd the Disappointment: But as the Attraction of a Throne grew so much the stronger, by the Removal of an Heir, it was thought advisable to press the same Point with more Importunity and Ardour than ever.

The Electoress of Brandeburg and Hanover visit King William at the Hague.

A Journey of the Electoress in Person to the Hague, was thought the most probable Method of carrying this great Point: And it was so manag'd, that the Electoress of Brandeburg, her Daughter, desir'd, and obtain'd her Consort's Leave, to accompany her thither. The Title of King was still ringing in his Ears: He could be satisfy'd with no other Sound: And whatever flatter'd his Hopes of obtaining it, was sure of his Approbation.

This has been touch'd upon already: It also, That it had produc'd a Change in his Ministry: Dankelman, for opposing his Master's Will and Pleasure, was not only disgrac'd but imprison'd; and Colbe, (since Count de Wa-

A. D. 1700. (Wartemberg) boldly undertaking what the other declin'd, obtain'd that Aſcendancy which he had forfeited.

That King William was on ill Terms with his Electoral Highneſs, has alſo been intimated already; not without a Retroſpect to the original Cauſe: But by this Time the Addition of more Fuel had increas'd the Flame: His Majeſty had not only endeavour'd to diſſuade the Elector from proſecuting this darling Point of his, but had actually interpos'd in Dankelman's Behalf, which had render'd the Breach wider than ever.

[Cole's Mem. p 224.] Lamberty.

When, therefore, the Electoreſs his Conſort obtain'd Leave to accompany her Mother, together with the Electoral Prince her Son, to Holland it muſt be ſuppos'd, That ſhe charg'd herſelf with ſome Commiſſion in regard to the Title, he ſo anxiouſly coveted, as well as gratify'd Madam Colbe with a Stool in her Preſence, which by Some was ſaid to be, the Price of the Leave ſo obtain'd.

But however this may be, or with what agreable Proſpects ſoever theſe great Ladies flatter'd themſelves with in the Courſe of their Journey, it may be preſum'd, their Reception was not altogether ſuitable.

His Majeſty having paid them one ceremonious Viſit, ſets out for England next Day.

For whereas they did not arrive at the Hague till the 27th of October, his Majeſty, having only made them one ceremonious Viſit, perſiſted in the Diſpoſition he had made, to ſet ſail for England the next Day; and probably this extreme Coldneſs and Neglect on his Side, however in Court-Language qualify'd and excus'd, was That which induc'd Count Dohna, who attended the Electoral Prince, to treat the King with ſo little Ceremony, when he ſnatch'd this very Opportunity to notify to him, in a very Cavalier Manner, his Maſter's Intentions, To oppoſe the Swedes with all his Forces, in caſe they fell into Saxony, in order to make Repriſals there, for the Saxon Irruption into Livonia: For his Swediſh Majeſty had already taken different Meaſures; and his Miniſters had made all the Merit they could of the Change; tho' it was owing more to the Neceſſity of his Affairs, than to any Motive of Complaiſance, which was no Ingredient in his Character.

Count Dohna makes him a rough Declaration concerning the Intentions of the Sweden to fall into Saxony. Lamberty.

But (to poſtpone the Livonian Affair a little longer) it is not altogether certain, That his Majeſty was not as much diſpleas'd with the Hanover as the Brandebourg-Viſit. For in a Letter of Mr. Stanhope's to Lord Manchester we have the following remarkable Sally; to wit: "Our Two Electoreſſes will be here To-morrow; and they ſay, That She of Hanover deſigns for England: If ſo, nobody doubts, but it is to ſolicite for her Son, to recommend him to the Parliament's good Graces: But in order to that very End it may be, ſhe would do him more Service, by ſtaying at Home."

A Remark of Mr. Stanhope's on this Viſit. [Cole, p. 227.]

The Acceptance of the Spaniſh Will favours Me to the Intereſt of Brandenburg and Hanover.

But how much ſoever the King's Heart was at this Time ſet againſt either or both theſe Suits, the Change put upon him by France, (which follow'd ſoon after) in preferring the King of Spain's Settlement by Will, to the Settlement made by the Partition-Treaty, made ſuch a Change in the general Current of Affairs, That his Majeſty (who from that Moment perhaps had a new Confederacy in his Eye) could no longer refuſe the Two powerful Houſes of Brandebourg and Lunenbourg any thing. A. D. 1700.

Till then all the Princes and Powers of Europe were apprehenſive, That if the Houſe of Brandebourg was gratify'd with a Royal Title, all the other Electors would alſo inſiſt on being coin'd into Kings; and for that Reaſon, were deaf to his Importunities: But from that Inſtant, the Criſis became altogether as favorable; and the Emperor yielding firſt, all embark'd in the ſame Intereſt, and found the ſame or the like Reaſons to follow his Exemple.

The Province of Ducal Pruſſia, which was now to be erected into a Kingdom, had belong'd to, and was ſtill claim'd by, the Teutonic Order: Hence it was not adviſable on one Hand, for the Emperor to grant the Inveſtiture; and, on the other, it was held a Diminution of the Honour, to accept it on ſuch Terms.

To avoid, therefore, both theſe Difficulties, it was agreed, That the Elector ſhould aſſume, and the Emperor acknowledge: The Conditions of this Acknowledgment were, That the new King ſhould furniſh 10,000 Men in the Imperial Service, in caſe of a War, during the whole Continuance of that War, at his own proper Expence: That he ſhould in like Manner furniſh a Company for the Gariſon of Philipſburgh: That he ſhould act in concert with the Emperor in all Things: That his Royalty ſhould not, in any Reſpect, vacate the Obligations which lay upon him on account of his German Dominions to the Imperial Throne: That he ſhould renounce all Subſidies and Arrears of Subſidies, due to him from the Emperor: And (with ſome little Reſerve) that he ſhould engage to give his Vote for the Election of the Heirs-Male of the Houſe of Auſtria to the Imperial Throne.

Treaty between the Emperor and the Elector of Brandebourg for acknowledging his Electoral Highneſs King of Pruſſia.

This Sketch of the Treaty, is taken from the Royal Memoirs of Brandebourg, before cited: But, according to Lamberty, the Engagements in relation to the 10,000 Men, was reciprocal: The Arrears renounced, amounted to no more than 100,000 Crowns; and the Acknowledgment of the new Kingſhip was extremely narrow'd: The Title allow'd him by the Emperor, and us'd by the Imperial Miniſters in their Addreſſes to him, was no other than King IN Pruſſia; as in England the Earl of Derby was call'd King IN Man: And in the Emperor's Letters of Felicitation, inſtead of addreſſing him in the Stile of, your Majeſty, he continued to make uſe of That of, your Dilection, which is the common Addreſs of the Emperor to all the Princes of the Empire.

On the other Hand, that we may ſee what Meaſure of Conduct his Electoral Highneſs obſerv'd at this Criſis with the Court of France, we muſt adjoin a Paſſage from one of Lord Manchester's Letters to Mr. Vernon, dated January 8; to wit: "M. Spanheim has had a private Audience of the King, when

A. D. 1700. when he presented a Letter from the Elector of Brandebourg, and shew'd the Reasons, why his said Master did intend to take upon himself the Title of King. He declar'd, That the Elector had no other Engagements with the Emperor, but the renewing a Treaty which was made with the late Elector in 1680: That the Emperor's acknowledging him, was in no other View than what he hop'd from other Princes. All the Answer the King made was, That he should see it by the Letter, and then he would consider of what he had said.—Here is no Likelihood of the King's owning him: And M. Spanheim expects soon to be recall'd."

The Elector, however, having made sure of the Emperor, England, and Holland, and by their Assistance having abundant Reason to rely on the like Complaisance from most of the Princes of Europe, resolv'd to make his Appearance on the public Stage, in the Character, and with the splendid Additions of State and Parade, he had so long panted for.

Accordingly, having repair'd to Koningsburgh, with a splendid Train of Courtiers, he caus'd himself to be proclam'd King by his Heralds, properly accompany'd with Guards, Drums, Trumpets, &c. in Words to this Effect: "For as much as it has pleas'd Providence to erect the Duchy of Prussia into a Kingdom; and its Sovereign the most serene and most puissant Prince Frederic is become King thereof, be the same made known to every Body by this Proclamation." And in a Manner agreeable to this Preface, was his Coronation celebrated: For he put on the Crown with his own Hands, tho' he had just before erected a Bishopric in that Province, and given it to the first Preacher of his Court, that he might be so much the better qualify'd to play his Part in the Shew, (as it was sarcastically call'd by the new Queen herself, who seems to have had a sovereign Contempt for the frivolous Ostentation of her Lord): He also erected a new Order of Knighthood (at the Instance of M. Lamberty, as he himself assures us) in honour of so extraordinary an Event: And Feasts, Balls, Plays, &c. made up the rest of the Pageantry exhibited on this Occasion.

Crowns himself, tho' he had made a Bishop to perform that Office.

The different Sentiments of different Courts thereon.

That a Ceremonial of such an extraordinary Nature, unless temper'd by some political Considerations as extraordinary, should not be relish'd at the Court of Rome, is not to be wonder'd at. Pope Innocent XII. was dead; and the News of the King of Spain's Death quickening the Conclave, Cardinal Albani had been unexpectedly rais'd to the Pontificate in his stead, by the Name of Clement XI. Not being of the French Faction, he was admitted against the Grain by the French Cardinals: But being enough a Politician to know his own Interest, as well as the Interest of the Church, the Court of France did not despair of finding their Account in an Election, which they did not foresee, could not prevent, and were not prepar'd for.

A new Pope.

But if a new Pope could not be brought to bear the Erection of a new Heretical King-

A. D. 1700. dom, for ecclesiastical Considerations, the Republic of Poland discover'd the like Repugnance for secular Considerations: Ducal Prussia, had been a Fief of theirs; and Royal Prussia was still in Subjection to them: When, therefore, the Envoy of the new King had his first ceremonial Audience of King Augustus, not one single Pole could be induc'd to give his Attendance on that Occasion: In order, therefore, to re-conciliate their good Graces, the new King took his Opportunity to make a formal Declaration, That the Title he had assum'd, should in no Respect be understood to extend to Royal Prussia; nor even to prejudice the Clames of the Republic on Ducal Prussia; which were of such a Nature, that, upon Failure of Male Heirs in the House of Brandebourg, the said Duchy was to revert to Poland. This quieted the Clamours of the Republic: And for the Sake of his Electoral Dominions, which Brandebourg (tho' in pain for itself) had undertaken to secure against the Swedes, took immediate Advantage to acknowledge the Self-erected Monarch in Form.

It is true every Advance that he made on the Side of Poland, had a Counter Operation in Sweden: But the Emperor, England, and the States being now his Advocates, and Sweden being under a Necessity at this Time, to observe such Managements as should entitle her to the Consideration of those Powers, it was easy to foresee, That some Temperament would soon be found out to obtain from his Swedish Majesty the Concession desir'd: And as to Denmark, having so much to fear from Sweden, in case of a Revival of the old Quarrel, she discover'd all the Facility imaginable to oblige a Power whose Countenance and Support she was likely to stand in Need of.

But the Electors of Mentz, Treves, Cologne, and Palatine, were not so easily induc'd to admit a Superior, as the superior Powers already mention'd to admit an Equal: The Elector of Cologne in particular, as Grand Master of the Teutonic Order, not only protested against this Innovation, but also laid Clame to the very Province, thus converted into a Kingdom, in right of the said Order: And, lastly, That so singular a Transaction might produce Effects as singular, a certain Prince of Radzevil, at that Time residing at Paris, also enter'd his Protest against it, before a Notary-Public, as an Usurpation; and in all the defamatory Terms he could muster up. [Lamberty, Tom. I.]

And now for the Livonian Affair: Which will serve yet farther to shew what an Alteration the Politics of Britain had undergone, by its Alliance with the Continent: For tho' we could not send a Squadron to her to restore the Peace, as we had done to the Baltick, we could interpose by another Method, which has been often found as effectual. There was one M. Picard, it seems, who [Lamberty, having a due Degree of his Majesty's good T. I. p. 143. Opinion and Confidence, was by him sent into Poland, in order to try what Impression the Offer of a good Subsidy would make on

A. D. 1700. the Disposition of King Augustus: As also properly furnish'd with Bills of Exchange, to make the like pecuniary Applications, in case of ill Success with his Polish Majesty, to the leading Members of the Diet, in order to obtain such Votes and Resolutions by their Influence, as should oblige him to sheath the Sword.

All Senates it seems, as well as all Princes, were at this Time suppos'd liable to Corruption: And any Management that promis'd Success, was esteem'd so much the more expedient, because Apprehensions were still entertain'd of the Czar and his Designs; tho' he had, over and over again, assur'd the foreign Ministers about him, and also caus'd his own Ministers resident in foreign Courts, to repeat the like Assurances, in his Name, That it was his sincere and firm Purpose to live in Amity with Sweden, according to the Terms of the Treaty he had ratify'd in the November preceding, as also of his Letter to his Swedish Majesty, dated April 24, 1700: And even tho', among these Assurances, particular Care had been taken to urge, That King Augustus would do well to expedite a Peace with Sweden, seeing he was not to expect the least Assistance from the Czar.

What Advances M. Picard made in his Negotiations, is not particularly specify'd: But tho' his Polish Majesty, in the Course of the Year, was pleas'd to be very prodigal of his Compliments to the Maritime Powers; (As, that he had abandon'd his Enterprize on Riga, out of Tenderness to the Merchants and Factors of England and Holland settled in that Place, &c.) He still kept the Field; and prosecuted his Measures to reduce the Province: The Truth was, he had receiv'd Assurances from the Czar, in a Letter under his Hand, (notwithstanding all his former Professions and Declarations) That he had sent Orders to the Governor of Novogorod, to declare War and commence Hostilities against Sweden: And that he design'd to join him in Person with all possible Expedition.

And how sincere soever his Czarian Majesty had prov'd to Sweden, he kept his Faith with Poland: For he caus'd his Declaration of War, which was frivolous enough, to be publish'd accordingly: And having, about the same Time, imprison'd the Swedish Minister at Moscow, not only order'd his Forces to lay siege to Narva, but also took upon him to conduct the War in Person.

On the other Hand, the King of Sweden had already landed his Forces at Carelscroon; and having advanc'd with all possible Expedition towards the Enemy, on the 20th of November, being the Day Twelve-Month, when his Czarian Majesty had sworn the Peace with Sweden, in presence of the Swedish Embassador) came up with them, and after a desperate Engagement, which lasted Four Hours, storm'd their Camp, and obtain'd a complete Victory: In what Manner, and with what Circumstances on both Sides, may be seen at large in the Military History of that Monarch.

Battle of Narva.

It is now Time to return home: And as well for the clear Understanding of the Measures already discours'd of, as Those which are still behind, we ought to begin with a State of the Cabinet; which might have been rationally expected from Bishop Burnet, a Lord of Parliament, a Retainer to the Court in his Capacity of Preceptor to the Duke of Gloucester, a busy Party-Man, and who had in a more particular Manner made it his Province to explane the political Phænomena of his own Times.

A. D. 1700.

But whatever Opportunities he had of obtaining proper Intelligence, either he did not obtain it, or his Prejudices would not suffer him to make a full Use of it: And thence it often happens, that, instead of meeting with the Information we had a Right to expect, we are involv'd in Intricacies and Perplexities, which it is not in our Power to solve.

Having all along represented the Parliament then subsisting, (tho' call'd under a Whigish Direction) as intractable, as resolv'd to force a Change of the Ministry upon the King, and as to such a Degree obnoxious to him, That he would have dissolv'd them in Anger, if his Ministers had dar'd to venture on so bold a Measure, He takes the Hint from the premature Death of his Royal Pupil, to declame as follows.

"The Nation was falling under a general Discontent, and a Dislike of the King's Person and Government: And the King, on his Part, seem'd to grow weary of us and our Affairs; and partly by the Fret, from the Opposition he had of late met with, partly from his ill Health, he was falling as it were into a Lethargy of Mind: We were, upon the Matter, become already more than half a Commonwealth; since the Government was plainly in the Hands of the House of Commons, who must sit once a Year, and as long as they thought fit, while the King had only the Civil List for Life, so that the whole Administration of the Government was under their Inspection: The Act for Triennial Parliaments, kept up a standing Faction in every County and Town of England: But tho' we were falling insensibly into a Democracy, we had not learn'd the Virtues that are necessary for that Sort of Government: Luxury, Vanity, and Ambition, increas'd daily, and our Animosities were come to a great Height, and gave us dismal Apprehensions. Few among us seem'd to have a right Notion of the Love of their Country, and of a Zeal for the Good of the Public: The House of Commons, how much soever its Power was advanc'd, yet was much sunk in its Credit; very little of Gravity, Order, or common Decency appear'd among them: The Balance lay chiefly in the House of Lords, who had no natural Strength to resist the Commons." And, having set forth the Death of the King of Spain, the Acceptance of his Will, &c. he procedes in these Words: "It might have been expected, that, when such a new, unlook'd for Scene was open'd, the King should have lost no Time in bringing his Parliament together, as soon as possible: It was prorogu'd to the 20th of November, and the King had sent Orders from Holland,

A.D. 1700. Holland, to signify his Resolution for their meeting on that Day: But the Ministers, whom he was then bringing into his Business, had other Views: They thought they were not sure of a Majority in Parliament for their Purposes, so they prevail'd with the King to dissolve the Parliament; and after a Set of Sheriffs were prick'd, fit for the Turn, a new Parliament was summon'd, to meet on the 6th Day of February, but it was not open'd till the 10th."

Again; having touch'd on the King's cold and reserv'd Manner upon so high a Provocation, he undertakes to account for it by telling us, "That he had set the Earl of Rochester at the Head of his Councils, who was to bring the Tories into the Service, (at whose (b) Door, against a Variety of Evidence recorded by himself, he lays all the Opposition of the Reign) That he had secretly engag'd himself to them, before he went last to Holland: And that it was in order to manage these new Ministers and their Party, so that they might concur with him in a new War, which he saw was necessary, he kept so strict a Guard on his real Sentiments and Inclinations."

But so loose and desultory a Story, will scarce satisfy an inquisitive and intelligent Reader: His Majesty had certainly made an Opening to the Tories before he went abroad, but then it was by no Means with an Exclusion to the Whigs, as appears not only by the Offers he made to the Duke of Shrewsbury, but also by retaining Vernon in the Secretary's Office: In short, the same Fact seems also to shew, That the King, at this Crisis, proceeded on the same Maxim in regard to the Whigs, which he had set out with in regard to the Tories; and which B. Burnet is pleas'd to tell us, had like to have prov'd fatal to him: That is to say, of giving one Party the Lead, without breaking entirely with the other.

As at his Majesty's Departure to Holland, he chose to leave one of the Provinces in the Secretary's Office vacant, so when the Lord Privy-Seal Londsdale dyed, which was in July, at his Seat in Westmoreland, he suffer'd the Duties of that Office to be discharg'd by Commission till his return: Nor is it reasonable to think, That any Measures of Government were fully resolv'd upon, till Lord Jersey went over to Holland, which was in (c) August. At this Time, He was the only Englishman in the King's Confidence: It was even said, in so many Words, That he was the Handle by which the great Turn now making in the Administration was made: And tho' He was not in the Secretary's Office, it appears, that our Ministers abroad corresponded with him as their Principal: But that any such Orders were sent from Holland for the Meeting of the Parliament on the 20th of November, as are specify'd by the Historian-Bishop above cited, is untrue: For in a Letter of Mr. Vernon's to Lord Manchester, dated October 14, O.S. he writes thus: "We have nothing of Moment stirring here: At the King's Arrival, People expect to hear of a new Lord Privy-Seal, and a new Secretary; and when the Parliament shall meet, whether the same or a new one, which, in the mean Time, they speak differently of, every one according to their Fancy." On the 19th following, his Majesty landed at Harwich: On the 21st Mr. Vernon writes again to the same Minister thus: "His Majesty has appointed the Council to meet here (at Hampton-Court) To-morrow, to resolve, to what Time the Parliament will be prorogu'd; which, I suppose, will be the 21st of next Month." And the Parliament was prorogu'd accordingly: After which, to wit, on the 28th of October, touching once more on the doubtful Situation of Things, he adds, "People are still in expectation whether we shall have a new Parliament or not, which cannot be long unresolv'd." And it has been already observ'd, That the News of the King of Spain's Death, did not reach Kensington till the 4th of November (being his Majesty's Birth Day) in the Afternoon: By which Time, it may be collected, the Court-Disposition was made. For on the 25th, (of October) his Majesty was induc'd to pay a ceremonious Visit to the Princess of Denmark at Windsor: On the 28th, Lord Jersey signifies to Lord Manchester, "That his Majesty had renew'd his Orders to him, to correspond with his Excellency on the great Affair:

A.D. 1700. [M. S.]

(b) The whole Passage is so remarkable on many Accounts, that it deserves to be interwove with the Web of the Times: As follows.

"The Earl of Rochester was now set at the Head of his Business, and was to bring the Tories into his Service: They had continued, from his first Accession to the Throne, in a constant Opposition to his Interest: Many of them were believ'd to be Jacobites in their Hearts, and they were generally much against the Toleration, and violent Enemies to the Dissenters: They had been backward in every Thing, that was necessary for carrying on the former War; they had oppos'd Taxes as much as they could, and were against all such, as were easily levied and less sensibly felt by the People; and were always for Those, that were most grievous to the Nation, hoping that by those heavy Burthens, the People would grow weary of the War and of the Government. On the contrary, the Whigs, by supporting both, were become less acceptable to the Nation: In Elections, their Interest was much sunk; every new Parliament was a new Discovery, that they were become less popular, and the others, who were always opposing and complaining, were now cried up as the Patriots. In the three last Sessions, the Whigs had shew'd such a Readiness to give the King more Force, together with a Management to preserve the Grants of Ireland, that they were publickly charg'd as Betrayers of their Country, and as Men that were for stuffing the King with an Army; in a Word, they were accus'd of having made a Compliance with the Humours and Interests of Courts and Favourites, so they were generally censured and exclaim'd And now since they had not succeeded to the King's Mind, some about him possess'd him with this, That such as they would not, or could not serve him. In favour of those Notions and Principles lay against those Things, wherein those former Proceedings did naturally lead them to make the Party great and powerful; it was also said, That the great Application made to every Thing the King desired, and the Submissions that had been of late put upon him, flowed the less from the Hatred born to those who were employ'd by him, as what they had brought in their Friends and Creatures into Play. And they were now studying to recover the Favour of Posterity; which would make them easy, if not well with, in complying with what the King might desire for the Future. The Whigs did also begin to complain of the King's Conduct, of his minding Affairs so little, of his being so much out of the Kingdom, and of his ill Choice of Favourites; and many imputed the late Miscarriages to Errors in Council, which they could neither prevent nor redress."

(c) See a Letter from the King to Lord Orkney, dated August 15, in Tindal; signifying his Purpose to continue Lord Rochester Lord Lieutenant, and requiring Lord Orkney's Thoughts upon it.

A. D. 1700. Affair: The same Day Mr. Vernon informs him, That the King had acquainted Lord Tankerville with his Design to remove him from the Head of the Treasury-Board to the Privy-Seal's-Office, in order to re-instate Lord Godolphin in his old Province: On the 7th of November Lord Tankerville was actually made Lord Privy-Seal; and Sir (k) Charles Hedges was taken from the Admiralty, and preferr'd to be Secretary of State: On the 20th, the Parliament was farther prorogu'd to January 26: On the 2d of December a List of Sheriffs was publish'd in the Gazette: On the 4th, Mr. Montagu was made a Lord, in consideration of his good and faithful Services: On the 12th Lord Godolphin was put in possession of the Treasury; as also Lord Rochester was nominated in form Lord Lieutenant in Ireland: And on the 19th his Majesty in Council was pleas'd to dissolve the Parliament, and order'd the Writs to be issued for a new one.

Mr. Montagu made a Lord.

But tho' it is to be understood, That by this Time, and by these Steps, the Tories had obtain'd a complete Ascendancy at Court, Burnet himself cannot help acknowledging, That they obtain'd it by a Sort of Compromise. His Words are these: "And that the most eminent Men of the Whigs might not oppose them in the new Parliament, They got Mr. Montagu to be made a Baron, who took the Title of Halifax, which was sunk by the Death of the (l) Marquis without Issue-Male: What Share the Duke of Shrewsbury (who was still the Head of the Whigs in Point of Rank and Dignity, who pass'd a whole Night at Hampton-Court, (October 28) and who soon after set out for (m) France) for want of Access to that Collection of his Letters which is still extant in the Hands of a noble Lord, cannot be explain'd: But then there is one of Prior's, (who by the Favour of Lord Jersey had no inconsiderable Share in the Secret, and who, upon the Resignation of the celebrated Mr. Locke, was made one of the Lords of Trade in his Room) which, containing the best Comment as yet to be met with, on the State of Affairs at this Time, must be admitted to supply that Defect: It is address'd to Lord Manchester; bears Date December 10; and, is conceiv'd in the following Terms; to wit: "I am indebted to my good Lord Manchester for two or three Letters, and it would be unreasonable, if I did not take the Opportunity of Mr. Chetwynd's Return, to tell your Lordship what I know of the State of Things here: That we shall have a new Parliament, is (I think) certain, (at least, as far as I can see into the Matter). What sort of a Parliament it may prove, I cannot any ways foresee; but sure there never was so much Work, as at present, in securing Parties, and bribing Elections: Whig and Tory are railing on both Sides, so violent, that the Government may easily be overturn'd by the Madness of either Faction. We take it to be our Play to do nothing against common Sense or common Law, and to be for those that will support the Crown, rather than oblige their Party; and in order to This, Men are preferr'd who are look'd upon to be honest and moderate. In this Number, (whether with Reason, or not, Time must decide) we comprehend our Lord-Keeper (Wright) and our new Secretary (Hedges): Lord Rochester and Lord Godolphin are in the Cabinet-Council; the Latter is at the Head of the Treasury, the Former (we take it for granted) is to go Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, tho' it be yet a Secret. The two Companies are to be brought to an Agreement, if possible; and Mr. Montagu's being made a Peer, (we take for granted) may contribute to this Union, since being in the House of Commons, he would make an ill Figure, if he either declin'd to support the New, or should find too great an Opposition in his endeavouring so to do. As to the great Affair, I presume the King will wholly defer it to the Parliament, and act conjointly with their Consent, which I take to be the only Method. All that I can say more on this Head is, that I take it to be happy for the King, that the Will is preferr'd by the French, at a Time when every body was peevish against the Court (tho' with what Reason God knows) about the Treaty. Count Tallard makes a foolish Figure here; I do not know as yet what he says to the King on this Occasion: But every body observes his Excellency to be very melancholy and desponding; and one may judge he has Reason to be so, as to his own Particular, concerning the Part he has been made to act, however his Country may in general approve their Monarch's Breach of Truth and Treaty. This, I think, is the present Figure of our Affairs, which I am glad to write to so good a Friend as my Lord Manchester, tho' to most of the World here, I am of Opinion, that to say least, is to do best. Your Friend, my Lord Jersey, grows very much a Minister, and is in a fair way of being very great. As

A Letter of Prior's concerning the State of Affairs.

A. D. 1700.

(k) Mr. Lockyer, who undertakes to explane our Party-Affairs at this Period, without understanding them, idly supposes Mr. Hedges was remov'd to make Room for him: He also puts Sir John Leake, Seymour, Musgrave, and Harcourt at the Head of the whole Squadron, whereas the Three Latter were veteran Tories, and represents them as treating with Lord Portland to prevent a Dissolution, whereas they were for a Dissolution; and were declar'd Enemies to that Foreigner.

(l) The Marquis, it seems, (who had desir'd Mr. Montagu, if ever he was made a Peer, to assume the Title he had worn) did not dye till this Year, tho' B. Burnet has plac'd his Death in the Year 1695: And we have fallen into the same Mistake formerly, by following him.

(m) Mr. Vernon, in one of his Letters observes, his Grace had fallen into a violent Fit of Bleeding at his House at Croston, which had never happen'd to him before in the Country; and infers, This would hinder his coming up to Town so soon as he intended..... And in the same Letter, wherein he mentions the Hampton-Court-Visit, he says, The Duke talks of going to France at the End of the Week..... On the other Hand; In the Manuscript Sketch of the Lives and Characters of the great Men of their Times lying before me, is the following Passage: "His leaving England, at a Time when the Partition-Treaty began to be question'd, gave his Enemies occasion to say, That he had flown from the Storm..... The Manner of the French King's receiving him at Fontainbleau, That he was still upon some Intrigue of State..... King William's obliging him to go to that Court against his Inclinations, look'd as if his Majesty was in the Plot to render him suspected to the People; which, it seems, he became to such a Degree, That, upon his proceeding to Rome, they fancy'd he was become a Re-Convert to the Roman Catholic Faith."

A. D. 1700. As to my own Affairs, I have a great many Friends that would set me up at Cambridge: I know I shall find great Opposition from Mr. Hammond's Party there, and great Trouble, in case I should throw him out, from those Men, who will never be satisfied, let me act as I will or can. If your Lordship thinks it convenient, I know you will not refuse me your Letter to the University."

Of the Jacobite and Republican Managers at this Crisis.

Of the Paper War carry'd on by the Press during this Struggle, and the detestable Virulence manifested equally on both Sides thorough the whole Course of it, a bare Mention will be sufficient in this Place, because the same Topic will of Necessity occur again, and become too considerable an Object to be pass'd over in this cursory Manner. But then it is fit to be remember'd here, That the Republican Spirit once more began to shew itself, at this extraordinary Crisis, as well as the Jacobite: For as the Latter left no Stone unturn'd to recommend the (pretended) Prince of Wales to the Favor of the Public, that a positive Exclusion at least might not lye against him, so the Former were for taking Advantage of the Gap made in the Succession by the Death of the Duke of Glocester, to exclude the whole Royal Family, and extinguish Royalty itself for good and all.

As the Jacobites were still of Two Sorts; namely, Compounders and Non-Compounders, according to the Distinctions given to the Two Factions of Melfort and Middleton, the Papers they set forth, differ'd in their Turn and Manner accordingly: Of the violent Sort, one had been publish'd this Summer in the Name of Charnock, justifying the Assassination Plot, and hinting, That if King James had, for some Reasons, rejected the like Proposals formerly, he might not be displeas'd with the Thing when done: And the Whigs did not fail to make a very politic Use of it, not only by abusing the Jacobites plentifully, but also by repeating some such Experiments on the King's Disposition, as plainly shew'd, They were well acquainted with the weakest Part of it. This is to be seen in a Pamphlet of Theirs, call'd, The present Disposition of England consider'd: In which having premis'd the Necessity of a new War to chastise France, and bring the Spaniards to repent their hasty Submission, they procede to tell his Majesty out of his own A. D. 1700. Declaration, That he came to remove Evil Counsellors, &c: As also, That it was They who in the Convention subdued the Regency, and put the (n) Crown on his Head, (These are their very Words); and who in the next Parliament recognis'd him in the most emphatical Terms: And that unless the Rubbish of the Two late Reigns is remov'd, and the Kingdom rightly dispos'd by the Choice of a good Ministry, there is no Security for his Royal Person, on whose LIFE, under God, was their Dependance. On the other Hand, Lord Manchester writing of this very Paper to Mr. Vernon, says, "As for Charnock's Paper, it is said to be writ by Ferguson: Others give out, That it is maliciously design'd to asperse Those of St. Germains." And certain it is, That in our Party-History, we shall meet with many Instances of the like Impostures.

[State Tracts, Vol. III.]

But however this may be, the Jacobites, in other Papers, calculated to incite a parliamentary Enquiry into the Birth of the said pretended Prince, discours'd in a very different Strain; professing to keep such a Guard on their Lips, that nothing should escape tending to the Vindication of King James, to the Dishonour and Prejudice of King William, against the Settlement of the Succession, or in the least to impose on the Authority of Parliament.

[Observations on the Royal Succession, Fol. p. 1.]

On the other Hand, in proof of what has been advanc'd concerning the Republicans, we must have Recourse to a Tract still extant, (tho', perhaps, but in very few Hands) under the Title of, The Free State of Noland, which was publish'd at this Crisis, and which is introduc'd with such an Account of the Country so call'd, its Inhabitants, Laws, &c. as leaves not the least Room to doubt, what Purposes the Piece was to serve: To wit.

"As for Noland in particular, it very much resembles England, both in Soil and Climate: Also, (tho' it may seem incredible) they are of the same Religion, speak the same English Language, and have the English Laws: And their Government (till of late Years) was exactly conformable to the Monarchy of England; but the Royal Line wholly failing, they are now a Free State.

For when their last King died suddenly without Heirs, (which also happen'd in an Interval

---

n) All the other Services of the Party are in the same Piece, enumerated in the same modest Manner, without the least Mention of the Rewards They had receiv'd from his Majesty; After which, They proceede to load their Breach with as unreserv'd a Bitterness, under the Heads of Disaffection, Corruption, and whatever else could blast them in the Opinion either of Prince or People. On the other Hand, That nothing may be left untouch'd that may any way advance their Cause, they indirectly make their Court to the Princess of Denmark, as follows.

"If we consider how often his Majesty's Life has been in danger, and what a short Length our Succession is reduc'd to, with what Concern and Anxiety of Mind must it possess us, having always Reason to apprehend the Practices of our irreconcilable Enemies? Their Malice is in perpetual Motion, either in Action or in Counsels; poisoning the World with the publish Opinions they shed against the Government: Their Libel of last Summer, under the Name of Charnock's Letter, is the most execrable Paper that ever saw the Light: The late Duke of Glocester was hardly cold in his Grave, when this Monster came out of the Press; it impudently act nowledges all the late Plot, and defends the intended Assassination as a Thing lawful, necessary and just. The Author tells us, The Publication of it was reserv'd to a proper Season: As soon as the dear young Prince was dead, and thereby one of the Branches of our Settlement cut off. Then it seems was the proper Season to spread this Book of Devils, and to raise the infernal Spirit of the Party to murder the best of Kings."

And yet (notwithstanding the Concern here shewn for the dear young Prince) Doctor Drake, in the Preface to his History of the Parliament, (of 1701) brings the following Charge against the Party which this Piece so [illegible] to wit: "They were not contented to shew their Highness a constant Neglect and Slight themselves, but their whole Party were instructed to treat her with the Disrespect but Spite: They were busy to [illegible] false and scandalous Aspersions; and so far they succeeded Affront, as to make her, at one Time, almost the common Subject of the Table-Talk of almost every Coffee-House and Drawing-Room, which they promoted with as much Zeal, Application and Venom, as if a Bill of Exclusion had then been on the Anvil; and These were the introductory Ceremonies."

A. D. 1700. Interval of Parliaments) the Peers met with all Speed at their uſual Place; giving Notice forthwith to the Members of the laſt Houſe of Commons to meet there likewiſe. And now their great Buſineſs was, to chuſe a new King: And by the unanimous Concurrence of Lords and Commons, they choſe a Man of the higheſt Quality, who ſhall here be call'd Ariſtæus. He was a Perſon moſt accompliſh'd in every Reſpect; and had been the late King's chief Miniſter and Favorite, to the great Satisfaction and Delight of the whole Kingdom: So that now they elected him their King, without any Difficulty.

But the excellent Ariſtæus ſeriouſly excus'd himſelf, and would by no Means accept the Crown: He adviſ'd them, rather, to keep the Power in their own Hands; and to ſettle themſelves in the happy and glorious Condition of a free State. He told them, That both he and the late King (who was the beſt of Men, and a true Lover of his People) had long conſider'd and adviſ'd about ſuch a Government, and had digeſted it for them: A Government wherein all Sorts and Degrees of People ſhall find their Account, and feel their Condition better'd; ſhall be enrich'd, advanc'd, and adorn'd with the Spoils of the Monarchy; and ſhall have thoſe Advantages ſhar'd amongſt them, which in a Monarchy are engroſs'd and ſwallow'd up by one Man: Where the Peers will be in greater Splendor and Honour, where the Gentlemen will have a mighty Increaſe of Dignity, and where Trade and the learned Profeſſions will have high Encouragement: Where alſo the meaner Sort, by their Right of Suffrage in Elections, will oblige the great Ones (who are the Candidates) to treat them kindly, and without any Appearance of Inſolence or Oppreſſion.

But he chiefly inſiſted upon the great Strength which this Government would give them againſt foreign Enemies: Making it plain to them, that the Nation would be infinitely ſtronger in a well order'd, free State, than under a Monarchy; eſpecially a mixt one: Telling them further, That this was no more than needful in regard of the great Power of their Enemies; that the neighbouring Idolaters (who were furiouſly bent to deſtroy the Chriſtians) were exceeding potent; eſpecially one over-grown, abſolute Monarch, that was ready to devour all that Part of the World: So that it greatly concern'd them to provide for a vigorous Oppoſition."

Thus far by way of Narrative; and then the following Paſſage, in a different Type, is ſlipp'd in as a Kind of Parentheſis.

"We find that Cardinal Maraxin had the ſame Sentiments with Ariſtæus, concerning the Powerfulneſs of a free State. A Book of his Letters is publiſh'd in Engliſh; many of which Letters were written while he was engag'd in the Pyrænean Treaty with Don Lewis de Haro: And in the ſeventeenth Letter, and the 135th Page of the printed Book, there is this Paſſage.

"We ſpoke of the Engliſh Affairs ſeveral Times; agreeing, That the Republic of England eſtabliſhing itſelf, was a Power to be redoubted by all its Neighbours; ſeeing A. D. 1700. without Exaggeration, it would be a hundred Times more formidable than that of their Kings."

This Letter is directed to Monſieur le Tellier, who was one of the Miniſters then at Paris, and it bears Date the 25th of Auguſt, 1659: At which Time our famous long Parliament was yet in being, but their Continuance doubtful: The very Thoughts of which Parliament, made Mazarin and all France to tremble."

The Sequel contains the Plan of a Republic formally laid down: And in the Courſe of our Story, we ſhall meet with ſeveral Occurrences of the ſame Tendency, which will manifeſt clearly enough, That the Republicans had their Hopes, and were forming their Schemes during this Interval, as well as the Jacobites.

And now we are to interweave another Scots Affairs. Section of the Affairs of Scotland, which were ſtill in the ſame Ferment, on account of the Darien Adventure; and might have produc'd ſome ſtrange Reveulſion in that Kingdom, if the Malcontents had been all of one Mind; or if a ſuitable Degree of Countenance could have been obtain'd from France. But we ſhall find no Countenance could be obtain'd from France at this Criſis; as well becauſe of the Meaſures which the French Court were oblig'd to keep with King William, as for fear of giving Offence to the Spaniards, who had a more immediate Intereſt in deſtroying the Scots Colony, than even the Dutch themſelves: And as to the Malcontents, they were a Medley of all Parties: And of the Preſbyterians and Jacobites, which were the Principal, the Latter appear to have been abundantly more active than the Former.

In the Beginning of May, when the Scots Parliament was to meet, agreeable to the King's Promiſe, Lord Mancheſter informs Lord Jerſey, There was nothing ſtirring at St. Germains: And, on the other Hand, at Edinburgh, ſcarce a Day paſs'd, without ſome new Effort to increaſe the national Flame: To manifeſt which, we need only cite a few Paſſages out of a very curious and ſcarce Tract, call'd, A ſhort Speech prepar'd to be ſpoken by a worthy Member at the enſuing Seſſion, &c. which may alſo be eſteem'd Hiſtorical, in ſome degree, as well as Argumentative: To wit.

"We have for Enemies Spain, powerful in the Weſt-Indies; the French, powerful at Sea, who have often beg'd of the Spaniard the Liberty to deſtroy us: We have been abandon'd at home in Word and Deed. 'Tis declar'd we have no Right to the Place where we have ſettled our Colony, becauſe our Settlement in that Place contradicts a certain Agreement for the Diviſion of the Spaniſh Monarchy, and breaks the Meaſures of a Catholic League for the Extirpation of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Remainders of Liberty throughout the World. We are expos'd to be treated as Pirates; and tho' neither the Engliſh nor Dutch Nation be our Enemies, yet the Engliſh and Dutch COUNSELLORS (who, to the Diſhonour and Ruin of

A. D. 1700. this Nation, meddle too much in our Affairs) are our mortal Foes. What shall I say of Scotsmen, who concur in such Advice? If ever there were Reason to complain of evil Counsellors, sure it must be of Those of this Nation at this Time: Yet these Men have the Confidence to look us boldly in the Face, tho' their impudent Contrivances to ruin the Colony of Caledonia, and murder such Numbers of them in the West-Indies, be notoriously known. What shall I say of a Man (Carstares) who, without any other Character to protect him, than such as to the utmost aggravates his Crime, is at the Root of all the Mischief that has, or is like to fall upon this Nation. Who is it, that having the Right to destroy a noxious Beast, has not at the same Time the Right to destroy such a one? Those are the Enemies of your Company and Colony, which you have been at great Charges and unspeakable Pains to erect, establish, and maintain; that you might bring this Nation from Poverty and Reproach, to Honour and Wealth; our poor People from under the perpetual Tentations of stealing, lying, cheating, nay, and, after all, the Necessity of Starving, for want of Bread, to that Ease, Plenty, and Satisfaction, which always accompany Industry.

These are the Men, who this Day oppose the giving a reasonable Tax to support so good and glorious a Design, and would divert the Money which the Nation is willing to give to another Use:...To maintain a perpetual Standing Army.

Is there any Pretext for this Standing Army, that can be nam'd by Men of the least Ingenuity? Has the bad Usage I mention'd before, or the many Indignities put upon this Nation of late, afforded any? No! no thing has been able to provoke us: We have always, and in every Thing, complied with his Majesty beyond our Power; yet we are condemn'd to lose our Liberties: We are condemn'd to die, without any Guilt alledg'd against us: We are to have no Trade, because inconsistent with a Standing Army: Our only Commerce is to be in Soldiers; by whom, that we may be Gainers, we are to have a Superplus over and above what we can pay. In which sort of Commerce, if any Nation was ever a Gainer, I appeal to History.

This Nation has of late been in a starving Condition: And I wish that the Blood of many thousands may not be requir'd of divers, whose Duty it was in their several Stations to have provided for them: Yet during all that Time, we were to maintain an Army of idle Fellows, without the least Necessity; and in order to keep up 4 or 5000 of them, starve 30 or 40,000 innocent People: Since if the Pay of that Army had been prudently employ'd in buying of Corn, it would have been sufficient to save the Lives of the one and the other.

But when all Pretexts of Fears from a Foreign Invasion have fail'd; when no Indignities in point of Honour; no extraordinary Losses of vast Numbers of our People, and Treasure of the Nation; no Endeavours to create Animosities between the two Nations, have been able to provoke us, to give the least Pretence for the Standing Army, the evil Counsellors have had recourse to Force and Bribery: They have drawn the greater Part of the Standing Army near and about the Town in Time of Parliament; by which those Gentlemen who, last Session, voted for a Standing Army, may already see what Use is to be made of them; and will have their Names branded with Infamy to all Posterity, if they now vote for keeping them up any longer. They have remitted 20,000*l. sterl.* into Scotland, (which, they say, Mr. Carstares has done by way of Holland for the more close Conveyance, and that by my Lord Portland's Means); they have procur'd many new Warrants for Pensions, of which probably the first Term only will be paid, and perhaps not that same; for when the Villainy is done, the Villains become useless. They have brib'd divers others with new Titles of Honour, for the most infamous of all Actions: The Twelve Years Duration of the Parliament, having given Occasion to the evil Counsellors to know the Pulse of every Man: And that no Artifice may escape them, they not only endeavour'd to corrupt the whole Representatives of Boroughs at one Dash, by a Tack of the Customs, (tho' God knows a very few reap the Benefit) but have also, at this Juncture, erected little, pitiful, inconsiderable Villages into Royal Boroughs, in order to have the same represented in Parliament by Persons secur'd to their Interest beforehand. And whenever the Representative of any Shire or Borough dies, 'tis too well known what Care is taken to have his Place immediately supply'd, viis & modis, by some Court-Myrmidon, a Guard or Dragoon-Officer, or some such. By all which Means, we may, in Time, expect to see the Officers of the Army (if kept on foot) muster'd in the Senate-House; and then the Country freed from the Charge and trouble of sending any other Representatives to serve in Parliament. I shall not insist on the spliting of State-Commissions among Members of Parliament, and granting sham Commissions pro tempore for the same Offices."

The Writer then procedes to assert a Thing wholly improbable; to wit, That the same evil Counsellors had contriv'd to furnish King James with 40,000 Louisdores, to spirit up his Party in that Kingdom, in order to furnish themselves with Matter, to procede against all Those in Opposition as Traitors: After which, he comes to the Close of his Matter in these Words.

A. D. 1700. "To conclude: Tho' we are remote from public Intelligence, and the Presbyterian-Party seems struck with incurable blindness; yet I hope the Parliament will not wilfully shut their Eyes, but seriously consider the fatal Consequences of a Standing Army; and how absolutely necessary it is to disband at least the far greater Part of our Forces, even tho' we had no other pressing Occasions for our Money at this Juncture."

To

A. D. 1700. A Session of Parliament.

To procede; The Duke of Queensbury officiated as the King's Commissioner: And B. Burnet (who seems to think the History of his own Country, during this Interval, scarce worth mentioning) asserts, "Great Pains were taken, by all Sorts of Practices, to be sure of a Majority." Which reflects not a little Credit on the Piece just quoted.

The King's Letter.

The 21st of May was the Day of Meeting. The King, in the Front of his Letter, again asserts, That his Intention was to have held the Session in Person, if the present Circumstances of Affairs abroad would have given him Leave: And This is accompany'd with a refreshing Hint of the Design which had brought him over to Britain; namely, The Relief and Happiness of the Three Kingdoms. His Majesty then urges, The breaking out of a War in some Places of Europe, (Holstein and Livonia that is to say) the great Arming by Sea and Land, the uncertain State of the public Peace, and the continued Designs of their Enemies both at Home and Abroad, as so many Reasons, which could not but convince them, how necessary it was for their Safety, That the Forces be maintain'd, and sufficient Funds granted for that End: He bewails, in the next Place, the Misfortunes and Losses the Nation had sustain'd in their Trade; promises to concur in any Thing that would promote and encourage it; recommends the Establishment of the Manufactures, and the Improvement of the native Product; gives them full Assurances, That he would maintain their Religion, Laws, Liberties, and Presbyterian Government, as it was establish'd, &c.

His Grace the Commissioner, according to Custom, gloss'd on these several Heads, and in particular when he came to That of Trade, thus enlarg'd: "And I do so particularly know his Majesty's good Mind in this Matter, That I can give you Assurances of obtaining any Thing that shall be reasonably propos'd."

And the same Court-Pattern was also follow'd by the Lord Chancellor (o) Marchmont, who, in his way, took Occasion to observe, That all the Sufferings which had befallen Scotland during the late War, had been owing to their ungrateful Countrymen; (alluding to the Rising under Lord Dundee, and presuming no body would dare to recollect the Glence-Massacre) and the Use he made of it, was, to suggest, That he hop'd to see the Time, and that it was not far distant, when the Parliament of Scotland would consider the great Losses and Prejudice sustain'd by their Fellow-Subjects, those worthy Persons who then bore the Burden and Heat of the Day: But then his Conclusion was, That the providing for the Forces, and their putting an entire Trust and Confidence in his Majesty, was the only Business which at that Time lay properly before them.

Such was the Manner of opening the Session. But it soon appear'd, That the mere hanging out a Flag of Truce, was not sufficient to procure a Cessation: In order, therefore, to prolong the Parley, the House was adjourn'd till the 24th: By which Time all the Expedients for a Pacification having been found ineffectual, the Campaign was open'd, by the Delivery of a strong Remonstrance from the Darien Company, reciting all the Losses, Disappointments, and Hardships They had sustain'd. This was follow'd by several other Petitions and Addresses; all complaining of Grievances, and soliciting Redress: And one from the Shire of Haddington, more particularly taking up the very Topics of the King's Speech, represented, "That, instead of enjoying the Blessing of a happily-concluded Peace, by the Re-establishment of their Foreign Trade, Encouragement of Home-Manufactures, Employment of their Poor, Improvement of their native Product, and the lessening the public Burdens, They, to their unspeakable Loss, and almost Ruin of the Nation, found their Trade Abroad sensibly decay'd, and their Corn carried out, by the Importation of Commodities from Places where Theirs were prohibited: That their Woollen and other Manufactures at Home, receiv'd not that Encouragement which the Good of the Country requir'd; and more especially, that their Company trading to Africa and the Indies, met with so much Opposition from Abroad, and got so little Support at Home, that, after so great a Loss of Men, and Expence of Treasure, it was too probable that their Settlement in Caledonia would fall a second Time, under the same unlucky Circumstances as at first, if not prevented. That yet, after all those Hardships the Nation groan'd under, numerous Forces were kept on Foot, which occasion'd then, in Times of Peace, heavy and unnecessary Taxes, while their much wealthier Neighbours were disbanding their Troops."

A. D. 1700. The Company's Remonstrance. Petition of Haddingtonshire.

Nor, when these Petitions, Addresses, &c. were read, was there any Want of the same Spirit within Doors which had been so active without. On the contrary, the Facts asserted being too notorious to be deny'd or disputed, it was mov'd, That the Parliament should resolve, "That the Colony of Caledonia in Darien, was a legal and rightful Settlement in the Terms of the Act of Parliament of 1695: And that the Parliament would maintain and support the same." And the Majority manifestly inclining to resolve accordingly, the Commissioner fearing the Consequence of such a Vote, and having no other Means to prevent it, did immediately adjourn the Parliament for three Days: But all his Endeavours in that Interval to extinguish or even moderate the Flame which rag'd so fiercely, were ineffectual: The Parliament met again in the same Ferment, and with the

A sudden Adjournment.

(o) Sir David Home, of Pedvaneth, Outlaw'd by King Charles II. and created Earl of Marchmont by King William, perhaps for his steady Opposition to his Majesty's Two Royal Uncles; against whom he had been engag'd successively with Shaftesbury, Monmouth, and Argyle, and the Prince of Orange. He was said to be so given to declaiming, That every Answer he gave was a Speech.

A. D. 1700. The Parliament adjourn'd.

the ſame Diſpoſition as before: So that his Grace was forc'd to apply the Prerogative again, and adjourn them for twenty Days more; which he did with the following Speech.

The Commiſſioner's Speech.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

I am troubled with ſuch a Cold and Hoarſeneſs, that not being able to ſpeak much, nor in a Condition to ſtay any Time here, I ſhall therefore only tell you, That, as I was ever firm and faithful to my King, ſo I was ever zealous for the Honour and Intereſt of my Country; and at this Time I hoped to have done acceptable Service to Both: For I can boldly ſay, That I have Power and Inſtructions for every thing that appear'd neceſſary or convenient for the Good and Advantage of the Nation, as to their Religion, Property, Liberty, Trade, and, particularly, what could be of moſt ſolid Uſe to our African and Indian Company. But ſeveral Things have occurr'd, wherein I find myſelf oblig'd to conſult his Majeſty, and ſo muſt of Neceſſity adjourn for ſome Days."

But neither did this plauſible Speech qualify the Meaſure, nor wholly anſwer the Ends propos'd by it: For the Majority of the Members met that very Evening, and agreed to an Addreſs, which, according to B. Burnet, was drawn in ſo high a Strain, as if they were reſolv'd to perſue the Effects of it with an armed Force.—But which does not altogether anſwer ſo warm a Deſcription: For the Addreſſers, having complain'd of their having been interrupted by a ſudden Adjournment while they were debating a Motion concerning their Colony at Darien, which they conceiv'd was not agreeable to the 40th Act of the 11th Parliament of King James VI. wherein it is enacted, That nothing ſhould be done or commanded, which might directly or indirectly prejudge the Liberty of free voting, and Reaſoning of the Eſtates of Parliament: As alſo, That by a ſubſequent Adjournment of Twenty Days, the Parliament was not permitted to come to any Reſolution in the preſſing Concerns of the Nation, which they could not think conſiſtent with that Article of their Clame of Right, whereby it was declar'd, That for the Redreſs of all Grievances, ſtrengthening and preſerving of the Laws, Parliaments ought to be frequently call'd and allow'd to ſit, and the Freedom of Speech and Debate ſecur'd to the Members; did, in the Sequel, earneſtly intreat his Majeſty, "That he would be pleas'd to allow his Parliament to meet on the Day to which it was then adjourn'd; and to ſit as long as might be neceſſary for redreſſing the Grievances of the Nation:" And do not appear to have made uſe of any Menaces at all.

An Addreſs of the Majority to the King.

To preſent this Addreſs to his Majeſty, the Lord Roſs, and the Lairds of Grubbet and Torwoodlie, were deputed; and they ſet out poſt for London accordingly: As at the ſame Time did alſo the Earls of Argyle, Annandale, and Seafield, on behalf of the Adminiſtration.

It was the 30th of May when the Parliament was adjourn'd; and on the 11th of June following, the Addreſs was preſented to the King; Lord Roſs, in the Name of the Reſt, expreſſing ſome Importunity for an Anſwer, which his Majeſty, however, declin'd, ſaying, That he could give none; but that They ſhould know his Intentions in Scotland. With this Anſwer, therefore, ſuch as it was, the Deputies were oblig'd to return; and were receiv'd by the Party (at the Head of whom the Duke of Hamilton openly acted) with ſuch Acknowledgments, as ſeem'd to argue, That to return from Court with the ſame Sentiments which a Man carry'd thither, was a ſort of Triumph over the Corruptions of the Times.

A. D. 1700.

His Majeſty declines giving any Anſwer.

In this Interval, the Parliament had been again adjourn'd by Proclamation; which, together with the cold Reception of their Deputies at Court, had contributed to throw the City of Edinburgh into a violent Agitation: For the Printers of the Speech juſt quoted, and other ſimilar Pieces, having been taken into Cuſtody, the Mob, headed by certain Gentlemen, whom we find diſtinguiſh'd with the Title of Captains, roſe and reſcu'd them; (tho', confiding either in the Goodneſs of their Cauſe, or the Strength of their Party, they afterwards ſurrender'd themſelves): And before theſe ill Humours could be diſpers'd, freſh Matter was collected by a Proclamation for apprehending the ſaid Captains; as alſo, by the Advices receiv'd from Spain, that Pincarton, and ſeveral of his Crew, which had been taken by the Spaniards, were condemn'd as Pirates, and would have been hang'd, if it had not been for the Interceſſion of the Engliſh Conſul at Seville: All which rais'd the national Flame to ſuch a Pitch, That the Malcontent-Members talk'd of ſitting by force; Adjournments by Proclamation not being legal; at leaſt, ſuch was the Language us'd in their Name at St. Germains, according to Lord Manchester's Intelligence: To which they added alſo, That the Army was well inclin'd to them: That they wanted nothing but Money, to declare the Throne vacant, under Pretence, That the King had not protected them; and to reſtore King James.

Another Act. ſurament by Proclamation.

Ferment thereon.

And now it was that his Majeſty was adviſ'd, to take that Meaſure upon himſelf, which, it ſeems, neither his Commiſſioner, nor his Council in Scotland could ſupport any longer: Accordingly, July 26, he ſet his Name to a Letter, addreſs'd to the Duke of Queenſbury, his ſaid Commiſſioner, in which he declar'd, "That if it had been poſſible for him to have agreed to the Reſolve offer'd to aſſert the Right of the African Company's Colony in America, tho' that Method ſeem'd to him unneceſſary, yet his Majeſty had, from the Beginning, readily gone it, at the earneſt Deſires of his Miniſters, and for his Peoples Satisfaction, all other Conſiderations ſet apart: But ſince that Things were much chang'd, his Majeſty being truly ſorry for the Nation's Loſs, and moſt willing to grant what might be needful for the Relief and Eaſe of the Kingdom, he aſſur'd them, That he would be ready to concur with his Parliament, in every Thing that could be reaſonably

The King's Letter to the D. of Queenſbury, and Privy-Council of Scotland.

A. D. 1700. reasonably expected of him, for aiding and supporting their Interests, and repairing their Losses, that his good Subjects should have just Grounds to be sensible of his hearty Inclinations to advance the Wealth and Prosperity of that his Majesty's antient Kingdom. That his Majesty was confident, That that Declaration would be satisfying to all good Men, who would certainly be careful both of their own Preservation, and of the Honour and Interest of the Government; and not to suffer themselves to be misled, nor give any Advantage to Enemies and ill designing Persons, ready to catch hold of any Opportunity, as their Practices did too manifestly witness: Concluding, That his Majesty's necessary Absence, had occasion'd the late Adjournment; but as soon as God should bring him back, he was fully resolv'd his Parliament should meet."

This Letter was also publish'd in a Proclamation; probably in hope to put a Stop to the National Address which the Party had prepar'd, and which they were soliciting Hands to, all over the Kingdom: But if so, it had not the desir'd Effect; and even while that Measure was agitating, they had

An Association sign'd. Recourse to another; namely, an Association, whereby They promis'd, on their Honour and their Conscience, not to wear any Foreign Manufactures, nor drink any French Wines: And This, the Privy-Council holding it to be of dangerous Consequence, and contrary to the Act of Parliament which abolish'd the old League and Covenant, and withal declar'd all such Engagements, without the King's Leave, illegal, was also encounter'd by a Proclamation, forbidding all Persons to sign it: But still without Effect: For it was sign'd by Numbers of the Nobility and Gentry notwithstanding, who had lost all Reverence for a Government, which seem'd to have lost all fatherly Concern for them. And yet that the Parliament, which was now not only so alienated, but even exasperated against the Court, was the very same which under the Name of a Convention, had set the Crown of Scotland on the King's Head, the Mention that was made above of its long and corrupt Duration, will not suffer us to forget: Then as to the Use made by the Jacobites of these Distempers, Lord Manchester thus writes to Mr. Vernon, September 18, N. S. to wit: "I am told there is a Sort of Address lately come from Scotland, sign'd by the D— of H——, (meaning the Duke of Hamilton) and a Hundred Noblemen and Gentlemen more. I will endeavour to get a Copy of it, tho' I believe it will be hard to procure. They assure the late King, That They are ready to execute whatever may be for his Service, when he shall please to make use of Them. It is said, that the late King, in the last Visit which the French King made him, which was on the 16th Instant, took Notice of it to him, in hopes he would promise to assist him; which he evaded, by telling the late King, That he thought his chief Aim ought to be upon England; and that the more he rely'd on his Party in Scotland, the more he would oblige his Friends in England." And in another Dispatch, dated December 4, he says, "One Mr. Gourdon is lately come from Scotland, and is suppos'd to be sent by Duke H——n and Lord Kennure." But then very little Stress is to be laid on Intelligence so slenderly founded: That is to say, on what is suppos'd, what is said, what is told, &c. A Copy of the Address spoken of, never was procur'd: Most probably it was no other than the National Address which was as much a Presbyterian as a Jacobite-Measure: And in a subsequent Dispatch, dated the 22d of the same Month, he destroys all he had advanc'd before, by saying, in positive and explicit Terms, "The late King resents the Proceedings of Scotland, and declares it publickly: So that several of the Scots have retir'd from St. Germains to Paris." And hence it may be infer'd, That the poor Scots were in equal Disgrace with King James and King William, for adhering to the Interest and Honour of their Country, against the Dutch on one Hand, and the French on the other. A. D. 1700.

K. James declares against the Proceedings of the Scots Malcontents.

It is therefore, perhaps, not to be wonder'd, That, finding themselves at once so beset and so abandon'd, They should, by degrees, grow weary of a fruitless Opposition, and incline to a Compromise; more especially as the doubtful State of Affairs on the Continent, laid his Majesty under a sort of Necessity, to bid so much the higher for their good Will, for the Sake of being safe at Home.

A Second National Address for the Blessing of Parliaments.

It must not, however, be understood, that they rush'd into a Compromise all at once, or that the Interest of the Community was as much consider'd in it as that of Individuals: On the contrary, as in other Treaties, the Few devour'd the Many; and it appears by the National Address, that the Body of the Nation stood upon as high Terms as ever: But the very Time which such a Measure took up, and the open Manner of its Operation, gave the Court sufficient Opportunity to abate the Force of it, and thereby to weaken the Effect: Thus before it could be presented, the King had order'd the Parliament to meet; and when it was presented, he declin'd taking any Notice of it out of Parliament.

A Meeting order'd before it can be presented.

Besides: The King's Letter was conceiv'd in the most soft and insinuating Terms imaginable; promising and declaring his Resolution to give the Royal Assent to all Acts that should be offer'd to him for the better establishing the Presbyterian Government, the preserving and securing personal Liberty, more especially for making up the Losses, and promoting the Concerns of the African and Indian Company, &c. So that nothing was to be wanting on his Part, to make his People both happy and contented.

The Company were not, however, wanting to give in another warm Representation on the first Day of the Session; and Care was taken to superinduce the National Address upon This, which consisted, as may be easily imagin'd, of all the Enflammatories which could in decent Terms be collected together.

A. D. 1700. The Contents of the first Address.

For it imparted, "That they had formerly petition'd his Majesty for the Meeting of a Parliament, to support and assert their Company's trading to Africa and the Indies; which the said Parliament declar'd, by an unanimous Address on the 5th of August, 1698, to be their own and the whole Nation's Concern: And his Majesty having been graciously pleas'd to allow the Parliament to meet again on the 21st of May, 1700, they could not but then express their Sorrow for the unexpected Adjournment thereof, without their being permitted to do any Thing towards the End of their Meeting.

That they did, in all humble Manner, concur with the dutiful Address then lately presented to his Majesty, from the Plurality of Members of Parliament, representing the Prejudices arising to the pressing Concerns of the Nation from that Adjournment, and to the Rights and Liberties of Parliament, from the Manner of it: And that it was to their unexpressible Regret, that his Majesty did seem to be prevail'd upon, by the Misrepresentations of evil Counsellors, to issue out Proclamations, further adjourning the Parliament from Time to Time, whilst not only their said Company stood in Need of the Countenance, Support, and Protection promis'd to it by his Majesty in Parliament; and more especially upon the Misfortunes that had then lately befallen it, by the Success of their Enemies against its Colony of Caledonia; and whilst the Nation itself remain'd under the Pressure of such Grievances, as could only be redress'd in Parliament.

That, to the End his Majesty might have a just View thereof, they humbly represented to him, how indispensibly necessary it was, That the Protestant Religion be secur'd against the Growth of Popery, Immorality, and Prophaneness: That the Freedom and Independency of that antient Kingdom, and the Nation's Right and Title to Caledonia, as holding of his Majesty's Crown of Scotland, be asserted and supported: That the good Inclinations of his Majesty, and Successors of Scotland, be preserv'd from foreign Influence, as well as from the Misrepresentations and pernicious Counsels of unnatural Countrymen: That the Frequency and Sitting of Parliaments be secur'd and ascertain'd, pursuant to the Claim of Right: That dangerous Influences upon the Freedom of Parliaments, either by Gratuities, Pensions, and Farms of any Branch of the Revenue, and the disposing of any Part of the Revenue, or annexed Property of the Crown, otherwise than according to Law, for the necessary Support of the Government, be prevented: That the public Credit be restor'd, and an Enquiry made into the Application of the Funds laid on, and appointed by Parliament, for the Support of the Government, and Payment of the Army: That the Security of the Nation and Government be settled, in a duly-regulated National Force, instead of a Standing Army, so burthensome to the Country, and dangerous to its Liberties: That the Manner of applying the Security, which they had by the Clame of Right, for the personal Freedom of the Subject against long and arbitrary Imprisonment, as well as against Persuits upon old and obsolete Laws, be especially declar'd: That the Trade of the Nation be encourag'd and advanc'd, by duly regulating its Export and Import, by discharging prejudicial Branches thereof, by fixing their current Money, by encouraging Manufactures, by employing the Poor; and more especially by countenancing and assisting their said Company, in the Prosecution of its lawful Undertakings: And that all such Articles of Grievances presented to his Majesty by the Estates of that Kingdom, in the Year 1699, as had not been redress'd; together with such other Grievances as the Parliament should, at the Meeting thereof, find the Nation aggriev'd with, be redress'd in Parliament. A. D. 1700.

That his Majesty having, by his Royal Letter, of the 29th of May, 1699, been graciously pleas'd to declare, and give full Assurance to their Representatives, in the Meeting of the Estates, which settled the Crown and Royal Dignity of that Realm on his Majesty, That they should always find his Majesty ready to protect them, and to assist the Estates in making such Laws as might secure their Religion, Liberties and Properties; and to prevent and redress whatsoever might be justly grievous to them, That his Majesty would never believe, the true Interest of his People and the Crown, could be opposite: And that his Majesty would always account it his greatest Prerogative, to assent to such Laws as might promote Peace and Wealth in this Kingdom.

They, therefore, reckon'd it their Duty humbly to desire, and assuredly to expect, That his Majesty would be graciously pleas'd to satisfy the longing Desires and earnest Expectations of his People."

But if the Practices try'd by the Commissioner, had so far prevail'd, that no material Use could be made of this poignant Remonstrance, they were not able to procure a Disavowal of it: On the Contrary, a Vein of the same indignant Humour ran through the whole Session; but then it gradually diminish'd, as the Session drew towards an End: For what by the Force of National Concessions, and personal Applications, such a Temperament was at last found, as serv'd to close the Wound, tho' the Scar will for ever remain. And the Loss of that Clame which Scotland was induc'd to relinquish then, Great-Britain has since had sufficient Reason to lament. The Dispute accommodated.

The Particulars of the Job, are only to be found in the Memoirs of Secret Service: But the ostensible Part of it is contain'd in the following Vote of January 21; to wit: "That, in Consideration of their great Deliverance by his Majesty, and in that next under God, their Safety and Happiness depended wholly on the Preservation of his Majesty's Person, and the Security of his Government, they would stand by, and support both his Majesty and his Government, to the utmost of their Power; and maintain such Forces as should be requisite for those Ends." Which Vote is utterly irreconcileable with every Clause

of

A.D. 1700. of their National Addreſs: For according to That, they ſtood as much in Need of a Deliverance as ever: And the plain Engliſh of the ſaid Vote is, That the Government which had once made a Sacrifice of the Rights of the People, could never be ſafe without a Standing Army.

The Commiſſioner and his Agents did, however, give way to a Reduction: But then the Manner of making it was ſuch, that the King was gratify'd as much as the People were reliev'd: For the Number of Troops being fix'd at 3000, a Letter from his Majeſty was produc'd, deſiring he might have 1100 more on his own Account, which was readily comply'd with: And upon the whole Matter it is remember'd, that the Duke of Queenſborough had the Garter, and the Earl of Argyle was created a Duke, in Acknowledgment of the Services perform'd by them, in the Courſe of this turbulent Affair.

The Commiſſioner rewarded with a Garter, and the Earl of Argyle made a Duke.

The Management of the Truſt repos'd by Parliament in the Commiſſioners for reſuming and re-diſpoſing the forfeited Eſtates, was the only material Tranſaction at this Time depending in Ireland: And before we can attend the opening of the new Parliament at Weſtminſter, it will be expedient to procede with our Deduction of Foreign Affairs, as near to that Period, as the Order and Relations of Things will admit.

King Lewis ſalutes his Grandſon the King of Spain.

As ſoon, therefore, as it had been reſolv'd in the French Cabinet to accept the Will, his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty ſaluted his Grandſon King of Spain; and caus'd all the Honours to be paid to him, which were due to the Royal Dignity: M. de Harcourt was diſpatch'd to Madrid to prepare his Way: The Duke de Beauvilliers, tho' ſaid to be the only Miniſter who in the Cabinet oppos'd the Acceptance of the Will, was nevertheleſs entruſted with the Care of the young King's Perſon: The proper Notifications were made in form to all the Courts where it was believ'd no Difficulty would be made to acknowledge him: The King his Grandfather, by a ſolemn Inſtrument, afterwards as ſolemnly enregiſter'd in the Parliament of Paris, reſerv'd to him all the Rights which were deriv'd to him from his Birth, in the ſame Manner as if he had actually continued to reſide in France: And in the Beginning of December he ſet out, with a Royal Train to take Poſſeſſion of his Kingdom: The Dauphin, in the Courſe of theſe Events, having ſignify'd his perfect Acquieſcence in theſe happy Words, It ſhall be my Glory to ſay, The King my Father, and the King my Son. And as to the Proteſt which the Dukes of Orleans and Chartres enter'd againſt the ſaid Will, it ſeems to relate only to the Prejudice done to them, by the Subſtitution which follows, of the Archduke, in caſe the Duke of Berri's Line ſhould fail.

A.D. 1700. The D. of Anjou's Claims and Rights reſerv'd by a ſolemn Inſtrument.

Proteſt of the Dukes of Orleans and Chartres.

We muſt not, however forget, That while the Preparations were making for the young King's Departure, with all the Circumſtances of Expence, Pomp, and Magnificence, which the Wealth and Grandeur of France could furniſh, the Treaty between the Two Kings and the Elector of Bavaria, according to the Marquis de Langallarie, was perfected, tho' it is eaſy to prove it was not perfected ſo ſoon.

As that Writer, moreover, aſſures us, He was entruſted by the Court of France with the Conduct of the whole Negotiation, and that the Elector in conſequence of it, did, in a Hunting Habit, pay a Viſit to the Two Kings at Verſailles, before Philip ſet out to take Poſſeſſion, it will be fit to throw in a Remark or two in this Place, which will ſerve at leaſt to ſhew, how little Streſs ought to be laid on his Credit. For Example, tho' he pretends to be minute and preciſe in his Informations, he gives no more than the bare (p) Project of the Treaty, as he receiv'd it from M. Chamillard: And tho' he ſpecifies, That he had Four Conferences with the Marquis de Bedmar upon it, in the Courſe of which, all Difficulties were remov'd, and the Affair ſettled to the Satisfaction of both Parties, he does not ſpecify any one Particular in which the Treaty differ'd from the Project, nor even fill up the Blank

M. de Langallerie's Account of the Treaty between the Two Crowns and the E. of Bavaria.

(p) To wit, I. That his Electoral Highneſs will keep the Treaty ſecret that ſhall be concluded between the two Kings and himſelf.

II. That he ſhall permit the Troops of France upon a certain Day, to enter into all the Strong Places of the Low-Countries.

III. That thoſe Places being provided with French Garriſons, he ſhall conſent that the Foreign Troops that are therein, be diſarm'd and made Priſoners of War, [which did not happen to be the Caſe.]

IV. That in caſe the War happen to break out between the two Kings and the other Powers of Europe, upon the Subject of the Spaniſh Succeſſion, his Electoral Highneſs ſhall be engag'd to leave the Low Countries, and go in Perſon into Bavaria.

V. That he would conſent that the Marquis de Bedmar may have the Government of the Low-Countries during his Abſence.

VI. That his Electoral Highneſs being arriv'd to his Dominions in Bavaria, ſhall form a Party with the Princes and Circles of the Empire, under the Pretence of an Aſſociation to maintain Peace.

VII. That he would receive into his Dominions a Body of French Troops, with ſuch a General as the Moſt Chriſtian King ſhall think fit to command them.

VIII. That he ſhall make ſuch a Diverſion on that Side with his Troops, as ſhall be thought neceſſary, as well to diſturb the Empire, as to ſtop the Progreſs of the Arms of the Emperor in Italy, in favour of the two Crowns.

IX. That he ſhall perſwade the Elector of Cologn, his Brother, to embrace the Intereſt of the Two Kings, and to permit the French Troops to enter into ſuch Places of his Electorate, as they ſhall ſee convenient.

Theſe are the Demands of the Two Kings from the Elector; now we will ſee what they have promiſed him.

I. That his Electoral Highneſs of Bavaria ſhall have a Subſidy of —— during his Life, to be paid Quarterly; and that the Elector of Cologn, his Brother, ſhall likewiſe have a Subſidy of —— to be paid after the ſame Manner.

II. That the Two Kings ſhall engage themſelves to defray the whole Charge of the War that his Electoral Highneſs ſhould make in Bavaria, in order to diſturb the Empire.

III. That if it ſhould pleaſe God to bleſs his Electoral Highneſs's Arms ſo far as to dethrone the Emperor, the Two Kings will employ all their Power to place his Electoral Highneſs upon the Imperial Throne.

IV. That the Government of the Spaniſh Low-Countries ſhould be aſſured to him and his Poſterity for ever.

V. That the Two Kings will employ their Arms to bring to Reaſon the Chapters of Cologn and Liege, which are divided againſt the Elector his Brother.

VI. That the Two Crowns will never make an End of the War, without the Participation of his Electoral Highneſs, and firſt of all re-eſtabliſh him in his Dominions, and alſo the Elector of Cologn, in caſe the Arms of the Allies ſhould diſpoſſeſs them.

A. D. 1700. Blank left in the Former, for the Subſidy to be granted to the Elector for his Services, which he would certainly have done, had he been as deep in the Secret as he pretends to be: Nay; he does not even give the Dates either of ſigning or ratifying: And, laſtly, he ſays, the Treaty was ſign'd by the Two Kings, tho' it has not of late been uſual, for Princes to ſet their own Hands to Inſtruments of that Nature.

And of another ſecret Treaty for ceding the Netherlands and the Milaneſe to France.

Again: As to what the ſame Writer farther ſuggeſts concerning another ſecret Treaty between the Two Kings, before their Seperation, no Reliance can be plac'd upon it. He aſſerts, indeed, That by this Treaty, his Catholic Majeſty ceded the Netherlands and the Milaneſe to the Crown of France for ever, as a Conſideration for the Part which that Crown was to take, in ſettling the Duke of Anjou in his Kingdom, and maintaining him there againſt all Oppoſers: That He farther engag'd himſelf to act in concert with, and according to the Counſels of, his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty in every Thing: As alſo, That he would permit no Nation but the French to trade in the Weſt-Indies: That, on the other Hand, his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty oblig'd himſelf to ſatisfy the Elector of Bavaria and Prince Vaudemont, for their Pretenſions on thoſe Countries, ſo to be ceded to France: And moreover to aſſiſt the ſaid Catholic King, his Heirs and Succeſſors, with all his Forces, either offenſively or defenſively, as the Nature of the Caſe ſhould require; the Two Crowns from thenceforward being to have but one Intereſt, and to ſtand and fall together. But then the very Baſis of the Bequeſt which his late Catholic Majeſty had made, was, That the Monarchy ſhould not be diſmembred: Nor was the young King of an Age, or in a Condition, to ſign ſuch a Treaty; not having as yet taken Poſſeſſion of his Throne, nor received the Homage of his Subjects: So that every ſuch Act, ſo made and concluded, would have been ipſo facto void.

This, however, muſt be acknowledg'd, That Lord Manchester informs Mr. Vernon, January 15, "That nothing was wanting to complete the Union between France and Spain, but the ſettling the Trade: And that it was ſaid, All Impoſitions would be taken off the Commodities and Manufactures on both Sides: So that, ſays He, If the French can properly furniſh the Weſt-Indies, we may ſuffer greatly."

The Court of Vienna in great Perplexity, but reſolves to ſend Troops into Italy.

The Emperor, in the mean while, had no ſooner been made ſenſible of the fatal Turn which Things had taken at Madrid, than he fell into all the Perplexities and Uncertainties which great Diſappointments, great Pride, and great Weakneſs always occaſion.... One of the firſt poſitive Meaſures, if not the firſt which he took, regarded the Milaneſe, which he clam'd, agreeable to his former Declaration, as a Fief of the Empire: For on the 22d of November, he iſſued his Imperial Mandate to the Inhabitants of that Duchy, as his Feodatories, which they were to obey in all Things, on pain of being treated as Rebels: And he alſo made the beſt Diſpoſition he could for enforcing it by a ſuitable Body of Troops: Rather hoping that ſome unforeſeen Incident would fall out in his Favour, than having any rational Ground to promiſe himſelf Succeſs: For as his Affairs were in the loweſt Condition imaginable, according to Mr. Sutton's Repreſentation, ſo his Credit and Intereſt in the ſeveral Courts of Europe were, if poſſible, yet lower. Mr. Stanhope, writing to Lord Manchester from the Hague, December 10, ſays, "The Emperor's Court makes a great Noiſe, and talks of ſending an Army into the Milaneſe early in the Spring: But little is to be expected from a Prince ſo irreſolute, and whoſe Finances are in ſo lamentable a Diſorder: Beſides, That the German Name, by their barbarous Actions in the laſt War in Italy, is become much more odious than the French: And, beſides, that their unreaſonable Project of reviving his antiquated Pretenſions to the Imperial Fiefs, has made all there fear, and, conſequently hate, the Nation." Lord Manchester alſo makes uſe of the like Language to Mr. Vernon, December 18, to wit: "They (the French) ſeem to value but little what the Emperor can do, yet they are reſolv'd to take right Meaſures in caſe of the Worſt. The Poſture of Affairs at Vienna is ſuch, that, if the Princes of Italy were not reſolv'd to oppoſe the Imperialiſts, yet they could not be in a Condition to march theſe three Months: But, it ſeems, there is ſuch Hatred againſt them there, by reaſon of their Proceedings in the late War, That I find, by all the Italian Miniſters, that they like the French Troops better than Germans: So that I cannot ſee, but the great Preparations that are now talk'd of, will come to nothing. The Emperor would be glad that Others would undertake his Cauſe."

[Cole, p. 160.]

A. D. 1700.

What Intereſt he had in the Empire, and among the Swiſs, we ſhall ſee in its Place: And what Aſpect the State of Affairs continued to wear in Holland, even when the great Noiſe of his Deſigns on Milan was reported by Mr. Stanhope, may be gather'd from another Part of the ſame Letter, in which it is ſaid, "They (the States) ſeem to be grown much cooler, and more moderate, than they were at the firſt News, (of the Will) when they talk'd of nothing but War: And I am now fully perſuaded, the Party for acknowledging the new King, will, e'er long, prevail by a great Majority. One ſaid To-day, They would have been pleas'd if their Embaſſador at Paris had done it, tho' without Orders: For then they had been at liberty to have own'd or diſown'd his Action, according as they had found it ſuit with their Intereſt afterwards."

And yet B. Burnet is pleas'd to write, [illegible] this Period as follows: "All this while, the new Miniſters talk'd of nothing but Negotiations, and gave it out, That the King of France was ready to give all the Security that could be deſir'd, for maintaining the Peace of Europe. At this Time, the Emperor ſent over to England a Miniſter, to ſet forth his Title to the Spaniſh Monarchy, ſetled

A. D. 1700. settled on his Houſe by antient Entails, often repeated, and now devolving on him by an undoubted Right, ſince by the Renunciation made by the late Queen of France, (as was ſtipulated by the Treaty of the Pyrenees, and then made by her in due form) this could not be call'd in Queſtion. Our new Miniſters were ſcarce civil to the Emperor's Envoy; and would not enter into any Conſultations with him: But the Dutch, who were about the King, and all the Foreign Miniſters, ſpoke in another Stile: They ſaid, That nothing but a General Union of all the Powers in Europe, could hinder the Conjunction of the Two Monarchies: So, by what Thoſe, who talked often with the King, gave out, it came to be ſoon known, That the King ſaw the Neceſſity of a new War, but that he kept himſelf in a great Reſerve, that he might manage his new Miniſters and their Party, and ſee if he could engage them to concur with him."

Beſides; concerning this Imperial Envoy, Mr. Secretary Vernon, December 30, thus expreſſes himſelf to Lord Mancheſter: "Count Wratiſlaw, the Emperor's Envoy, arriv'd here on Saturday laſt. He goes To-morrow to Hampton-Court, where his Majeſty has appointed him a private Audience. I hear he already begins to diſcourſe both of the Emperor's Pretenſions, as well to the Spaniſh Succeſſion, as to the Fief of Milan: And that they are about publiſhing a Manifeſto at Vienna, in Maintenance of each of thoſe Titles; and are reſolv'd to juſtify them, tho' they ſhould ſtand alone in the Defence of them. But they ſay, They cannot fall alone, ſince their Ruins muſt draw others after them." Thus it appears, That Count Wratiſlaw was receiv'd as ſoon as he arriv'd: And as to the Opinion entertain'd of his Miſſion, the ſame Lord Mancheſter, who was not one of the new Miniſters, in his Anſwer to Mr. Vernon, ſays, "I am of Opinion, that I partly know the Propoſals that M. Wratiſlaw will make: But I cannot ſee the Emperor is able to perform his Part: And it is ſaid, that Prince Louis of Baden, is not for having the Emperor engage in a War."

Confuted. To confute this officious Calumny, no more, indeed is neceſſary, than a plain Survey of the diſtracted Condition of Europe at this Conjuncture, and almoſt of every State in it; which was ſuch as not only ſhew'd a General Union to be impoſſible, but might alſo have deterr'd any Man living, from taking any Meaſure to precipitate a Rupture, who had any Regard to Conſequences. And if the Biſhop had recollected the Suggeſtions in Lord Somers's Letter to the King from Tunbridge, concerning the Deadneſs and Want of Spirit, ſo univerſally ſpread thro' the Nation in relation to a new War, ſurely he would not have ventur'd to ſtain his Paper with it.

But the Court of England had now a particular Reaſon for retarding their Deciſions, which the Biſhop, it ſeems, was not made acquainted with; and which it is Time to explane, as far as the imperfect Traces left of it will admit. A. D. 1700.

A new Project to diſcover the Temper of the Spaniards. Schonenberg, the Jewiſh or Flemiſh Reſident for England and Holland, at the Court of Madrid, had, in his firſt Diſpatches from thence, not only ſpoke of the Acceptance of the Will by the Court of France in Terms (q) of Ap- [Cole, p. probation, but actually expreſs'd his Surprize, 255.] that Lord Mancheſter had not given him an Account of the obliging Quickneſs they had manifeſted on that Occaſion: Hence it is reaſonable to think, a Reſolution was taken to aſſociate another Perſon with him in his Charge at that Court: But, whether this Conjecture is rightly founded or not, it is in the following Manner that Mr. Vernon writes to Lord Mancheſter, December 10, O. S.

"I now ſend you back Mr. Chetwynd, his Majeſty having thought it proper that he ſhould bring you the incloſ'd Letter for Monſieur Schonenberg, which his Majeſty would have you ſend to Madrid by the quickeſt and ſafeſt way you can think of. I ſend you the Letter unſeal'd, that you may ſee it contains the Copy of an Inſtruction which his Majeſty gives to Dr. Aiglionby, (a Civilian) who is appointed to carry his Majeſty's Anſwer to the Letter that his Majeſty receiv'd the laſt Week from the Regency of Spain, notifying the King's Death, and the Diſpoſition he made of the Crown. He is order'd to go by the way of the Groyne, and I believe will ſet forward To-morrow. His Majeſty would be glad that he might reach Madrid, before the KING of Spain's Arrival there; it being of Conſequence that no Time ſhould be loſt in executing theſe Inſtructions: But ſince he may be delay'd by contrary Winds, his Majeſty has thought fit that a Copy of the Inſtructions ſhould be ſent directly, and with Speed, to Mr. Schonenberg, that he may, in the mean Time, make his Majeſty's Intentions of living in his former Friendſhip with Spain rightly underſtood; and uſe his Endeavours either to keep them in, or bring them to the ſame Diſpoſition towards us: Your Excellency, therefore, ſeeing of how public a Concern it is, that this Letter be ſpeedily convey'd to Madrid, you will take the moſt effectual Way for it, and ſend it by an Expreſs of your own, if you can't find any other good Hand to truſt it to.

His Majeſty thinks Mr. Schonenberg will underſtand it, as it is in Engliſh; but not being aſſur'd of it, I believe it will be neceſſary that your Excellency ſhould intruſt Mr. Chetwynd to put it into French, and ſo to forward it with the Tranſlation, enjoining him to be ſecret in it, ſo as neither to ſpeak of it there, nor to take any Notice of it, in what he may write to England. He knows nothing at preſent of what he carries, and therefore your Excellency is more at

(q) In another of his Letters, M. Schonenberg alſo makes uſe of theſe Expreſſions: "It is almoſt inconceivable, how much Animoſity the Ill-intention'd at this Court ſhew againſt England and the united Provinces."

A. D. 1700. at Liberty to communicate it to him, or not, as you think fit.

Now your Excellency ſees what will be his Majeſty's Conduct towards Spain, if he meets with ſuitable Returns from thence, his Majeſty would have it ſerve as an Inſtruction to you, how to govern yourſelf in the Converſations you may have an Opportunity for with the Spaniſh Ambaſſador reſiding at Paris, or with ſuch of the Grandees as are coming thither from the Regency, to prevent their taking any ill Impreſſions, in relation to his Majeſty and his Kingdoms: But you will defer acquainting him with what his Majeſty has now order'd, ſince it may be doubted what Uſe he would make of ſuch an Information in that Court. It ſeems fit, likewiſe, that nothing be ſaid of the Particulars to the Emperor's Miniſter."

The very next Day after Lord Manchester had receiv'd this Diſpatch, he ſent Mr. Jolly, before-mention'd, with a French Paſs to Madrid, where he arriv'd ſafely on the 4th of January, N. S. But in his Return with Schonenberg's Reply, was unfortunately drown'd in croſſing a River in Navarre; by which Means the Papers he was charg'd with, fell into the Hands of the Spaniſh and French Courts.

Of their Contents, as alſo of Dr. Aiglionby's Inſtructions, we have nevertheleſs no other than a brief Abſtract in Mr. Vernon's Letter to Lord Manchester, of February 17, to wit: "You know all we have ſent to Spain; which is, Aſſurances of Friendſhip, if they have the ſame Diſpoſition on their Side; and to exhort them to preſerve their Liberty: If this be an Offence, it is impoſſible to avoid it with France." The Occaſion of this Interjection, we ſhall ſee in its Place. And again, three Days after, "He (Schonenberg) has ſent me a Duplicate of his Letter of the 18th, (of January) which Mr. Jolly ſhould have brought. I don't ſee what Exceptions are to be taken to it to make ſuch a Noiſe about. He repeats the Points of his Inſtructions, and how he has perſued them by his Applications to the Regency, by the Secretary of State, and other Hands: And that they return'd uncertain Anſwers, referring thoſe Matters rather to be treated of in France, not daring ſo much as to promiſe us their Friendſhip and good Correſpondence, without firſt aſking Leave from the French Court: And when he preſs'd their Secretary, that their new King might notify to his Majeſty his Acceſſion to the Throne, as he did to the Dutch, he ſhrugg'd up his Shoulders, and made no Anſwer to it."

Which proves abortive.

[Tom. I. P. 373.] M. Lamberty alſo gives an Account of a Conference between the Regency of Spain and Schonenberg, as reported to the young King, which apparently is the very Conference thus alluded to by Mr. Vernon; tho' for want of the Lights contain'd in theſe Letters, that Writer could not aſſign it the Place which properly belong'd to it. According to him, the ſaid Conference aroſe from an Order of his Catholic Majeſty, dated January 4, (the Day Mr. Jolly arriv'd at Madrid) to the ſaid Regency, directing them to let the ſaid Envoy know, That he (the King) thought it ſtrange, That his Maſters the States-General, had not as yet recogniz'd and congratulated his Majeſty on his Acceſſion to the Throne; which being communicated to him, he made his own Uſe of it, by anſwering, Firſt, That he would do his beſt Offices with his Maſters in relation to that Point: And then, (tho' his other Maſter the King of Great Britain had not been nam'd) by proceeding to ſay, That he could alſo appriſe them of the Pleaſure his Britannic Majeſty receiv'd, in the Diſpoſition which his late Majeſty had made in his Will: That his ſaid Majeſty, and the States-General, deſir'd to maintain the Friendſhip, the good Correſpondence, and the Treaties which had till then ſubſiſted between them and the Crown of Spain; towards which they would contribute all that lay in their Power: That they flatter'd themſelves there was the ſame Diſpoſition on the Part of Spain to concur in the Renovation of the ſaid Treaties, with all the Clauſes which could render them firm and ſtable, as well for the Convenience and Utility of the Subjects of the three Powers, as for the general Tranquility of Europe: That the beſt Proof which Spain could give of her Deſire to preſerve a good Underſtanding with Great Britain and the States, would be, to continue the Netherlands for ever united to the Spaniſh Crown, under the Government of their King, in order to avoid all Occaſions of Jealouſy and Inquietude to his Neighbours: That this could never be ſo well done, as by continuing the Dutch Gariſons in the Barrier Towns, ſubject to the Order of the Spaniſh Governors, in the ſame Manner, as they then were: That all they had in view, was to continue that Country under the Domination of Spain in its preſent State: That, in order to demonſtrate how ſincerely the ſaid Powers deſir'd to live in the good Correſpondence with the Crown of Spain above expreſs'd, it would be moſt agreeable to them to be made acquainted, after the uſual Manner, with the Acceſſion of a new King to the Throne of Spain, and of his Arrival at his Court of Madrid, to the End, that they might acknowledge ſuch King of Spain, with all the Demonſtrations of Friendſhip, and all the proper Solemnities us'd on the like Occaſions between Allies ſo antient and ſo ſtrict, as the King of Great Britain, the States-General, and his Catholic Majeſty, (when ſuch Notification had been made) Philip the Vth."

A. D. 1700.

Thus it appears plainly enough, That the Article of the Dutch Gariſons in the Barrier-Towns, was the great Hinge of Peace or War; and that if theſe Propoſitions had been favorably receiv'd, Count Wratiſlaw would have been diſmiſs'd as coolly by the King, as it is ſaid, he was receiv'd by the new Miniſters.

But in this Interval, his Majeſty had been over and over again inform'd, That the Regency of Spain was French all over. "One would think, ſays Schonenberg, December 16, the Junto had made a Vow to abandon

A.D. 1700. abandon the Fate of the Monarchy to the Arbitration and good Will of France." "I am inform'd juſt now, ſays Lord Mancheſter, 1700-1. January 1, That an Expreſs is come from Madrid, and that the Regents have deſir'd the French King to accept of the General-ſhip of the Monarchy of Spain, and that they have ſent Orders to all the Viceroys, Governors, &c. in all Parts, to obey his Orders punctually in all Matters whatſoever." This again is verify'd by Mr. Vernon, on the Authority of Schonenberg. Lord Mancheſter again, January 10, further ſuggeſts, That by another Expreſs the Regency of Spain had acquainted the Moſt Chriſtian King, That Spain ſhould be included in whatever Treaty France ſhould think fit to make; as alſo, that ſuch Treaties might be ſign'd without waiting for ſpecial Authorities from them. Adding, "It is certain, That the King ſaid on this Occaſion, That he was Le premier Miniſtre du Roy d'Eſpagne." And the Excuſes made by the Spaniards for repoſing all at once ſuch an unlimited Confidence in their antient and till then irreconcileable Enemy, were to this Effect, That being threaten'd with a War on all Sides, and being utterly unable to defend themſelves on any, they had nothing for it, but by the Exceſs of their Reſignation, to merit a ſuitable Protection.

But there is ſtill another Reaſon, (beſides the Inclination of the Maritime Powers, thus clearly expreſs'd to acquieſce in the Death-Bed Settlement of his late Catholic Majeſty, provided the Dutch might have the Barrier in their Hands as before) why Count Wratiſlaw's Propoſals were not adopted, without reſerve, as ſoon as they were made, which will be explan'd in its Place. And before we diſmiſs this Topic, it will be neceſſary to rectify another Miſtake of M. Lamberty's in relation to the Diſcoveries made by the Accident of M. Jolly's Packet falling into the Hands of the Spaniſh Court: For the Inquiſitor-General, the Confeſſor of the late King, and the Queen herſelf, being oblig'd to leave Madrid about this Time, under all the apparent Marks of Diſgrace, he adopts the Whiſper of thoſe Times, which was, That the ſaid Confeſſor having reported to ſeveral Perſons, That the late King, in his laſt Moments, had enter'd a ſort of Proteſt againſt his own Will, by ſaying, It had been forc'd from him, certain of the Grandees, with the Queen at their Head, had, thereupon, form'd a Party in favor of the Emperor: And that this being reported in the ſaid Packet, Cardinal Porto-Carrero diſpatch'd an Expreſs to the young King, then upon his way to Madrid, with a Narrative of the whole, which he receiv'd at Tartas, and which occaſion'd the Letter he writ from thence to her Majeſty; in civil Terms, requiring her to make choice of any City in Spain for the Place of her Reſidence, except Madrid: But, tho' it be true that this Letter was [Vole. p. 290.] dated from Tartas, it was dated January 10; whereas M. Jolly was not diſpatch'd from [Ibid. p. 302.] Madrid till the 18th: Add to this, That Mr. Vernon acknowledges a Diſpatch from Schonenberg, dated December 18, in which the Latter ſignifies the Intention of the Regency to get the Queen remov'd before the King's Arrival: That Lord Mancheſter, in his Anſwer ſays, "What you mention about the Queen of Spain, is certain; and ſhe has deſir'd the Protection of France: And, laſtly, That it does not appear, by any Overt-Act of any Kind, That the Emperor had any Party among the Grandees at all.

A Miſtake of Lamberty's rectify'd.

A.D. 1700. 1.

[Ibid. p. 285.]

In ſhort, it appears, That Schonenberg had no ſooner communicated what he had in charge in relation to the Barrier-Towns, than the Reſolution was taken, to put that Affair out of the Queſtion for good and all, as in part appears from one of Lord Mancheſter's Letters, dated January 29, N.S. in which he writes as follows: "I ſaw in a Letter from Spain, which came from good Hands, That on the 5th of January, (which, it deſerves Note, was the next Day after Jolly's Arrival at Madrid) the Regency had ſent an Expreſs to France, upon Advice that they had receiv'd from de Quiros, That Holland was reſolv'd to make War, &c.: That they thought it abſolutely neceſſary, that the French Troops ſhould march into Flanders, and then oblige the Dutch to declare what their Intentions were." It is true, this Intelligence was not exactly conformable to the Fact: For the Motion reſolv'd on, was of a Nature ſomewhat different: But that the ſaid Reſolve was made, as ſoon as Schonenberg's Overture could be diſcuſs'd in the French Cabinet, is manifeſt from every Occurrence which follow'd upon it.

The Regency of Spain require the French to ſend Troops into the Barrier-Towns.

Thus, for Example, Lord Mancheſter having obſerv'd, January 19, that M. de Bouffliers was departed for Liſle, in his next of the 22d, proceeds in theſe Words, "It is certain, They here fear a War, and do believe it will end in it; which was the Reaſon why M. de Bouffliers went away ſo on a ſudden: And it is ſaid, He is to concert ſome Meaſures with the Elector of Bavaria. Count Monaſterol is much at Court, and has not been with me ſince his Return. I do not know but it is right he ſhould act ſo; yet when I conſider that the Elector of Bavaria would do any Thing rather than loſe his Government, I cannot but be, ſometimes, a little apprehenſive of what is tranſacting there; which makes me give you this Hint, tho' his Majeſty may be better inform'd." He had expreſs'd the ſame Suſpicion on the 12th. On the 2d of February he alſo repeats his Apprehenſions, That ſomething was doing in Flanders: And how well theſe Apprehenſions were founded, we ſhall ſee preſently.

Motives thereto.

But firſt we are to take Notice, That the States-General had, on the 15th of January, reſolv'd, to enter into Conference with M. de Briord (who was at that Time indiſpos'd) for the Confervation of the Peace, and of the Security which they had hitherto plac'd in the Barrier of the Spaniſh Netherlands: That on the 25th, the Secretary to the Dutch Embaſſy at Paris preſented a ſuitable Memorial, which was to all Appearance favorably receiv'd: That the Court of England being made acquainted with this Step, by their Lordſhips Order, Lord Mancheſter receiv'd Inſtructions

The States take the Hint to open a Negotiation with France. In which England takes a Part.

A. D. 1700-1. Inſtructions (which were dated January 16, O. S.) to ſecond the ſaid Propoſal, in caſe the Anſwer given to it was ſuch as ſhew'd an Inclination in that Court to comply with the ſame. That on the 4th of February, his Excellency did accordingly comply with thoſe Inſtructions, by the Interpoſition of M. de Torcy; who, in his Maſter's Name, reply'd, That he might aſſure his Britannic Majeſty, That the Moſt Chriſtian King was entirely diſpos'd to enter into any Negotiation which might contribute to a ſolid and firm Peace: And that, notwithſtanding all theſe Plauſibilities, the French Court believing, That the King and the States had made theſe Overtures only to gain Time, were determin'd, on their Sides, not to loſe an Hour.

Lord Mancheſter, when he had laſt mention'd his Fears of what was doing in Flanders, (to wit, February 2) adds, "I cannot but think that the States muſt have Notice, That This is to be fear'd: And I have now more Reaſon to think ſo than ever." And how right a Judgment he made in this, appears by the Reſolutions of the ſaid States in that very Interval, that is to ſay, January 29, N. S. which aroſe from the Intelligence they had receiv'd from the Barrier, That the French Troops were in motion; and which contain'd freſh Orders for their Embaſſador Heemſkerk, to renew his Inſtances to ſet on foot a Negotiation; accompany'd with an explicit Declaration, That the Rumours which had prevail'd abroad of their Purpoſe to enter into a new War, were falſe and groundleſs.

Lord Mancheſter acts for Holland, as well as England, by expreſs Orders.

And, Heemſkerk being at that Time on his Death Bed, their Lordſhips requeſted Lord Mancheſter to be their Solicitor in his Room, who was furniſh'd with proper Credentials from Holland, and with Inſtructions from England to obey them.

But Military Motions on theſe Occaſions, are much ſwifter than thoſe of the Cabinet: Thus on the very Day (namely, February 6) that Lord Mancheſter deliver'd his Memorial to M. de Torcy in the Name of the States-General, requeſting that Conferences might be open'd as ſoon as poſſible, a ſufficient Number of French Troops were introduc'd into all the Barrier-Towns from Luxemburgh to Oſtend and Nieuport, with ſo much Secrecy, that the Dutch Officers in thoſe Places had not the leaſt Suſpicion of ſuch an Event, till it had actually taken Place; and were forc'd to accept the Compliment that was made to them, (to wit, That theſe new Inmates had Orders to live with them as with good Friends) with the beſt Grace they could.

The French Troops take Poſſeſſion of the Barrier notwithſtanding.

And on the Morrow after this notable Meaſure had been thus effected, de Quiros preſented a Memorial to the States, complaining firſt, That their High-Mightineſſes, inſtead of conforming to the new Meaſures which his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty had been oblig'd to take in order to prevent a War, by acknowledging the King of Spain their Maſter in that Quality, had made uſe of all Sorts of Means to form new Leagues againſt him, &c. and then proceding as follows.

The Memorial of the Spaniſh Miniſter to the States thereon.

"That his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty has expected quietly till now, that your Lordſhips would come out of your firſt Reſentment, which was with Care inſpir'd into you, and might make ſuitable Demarches to ſecure a ſolid Peace, and a laſting one, ſuch as ſuits the Intereſt of your Provinces. A. D. 1700-1.

That his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty has forgot nothing to engage your Lordſhips to make theſe Demarches: That he had not only given you Advice of the Reſolution he had taken, before his declaring it, but alſo, that whilſt it was public, he was willing to inform you by one of his Letters, to which his Ambaſſador had added the ſtrongeſt Aſſurances of his Majeſty's Affection for your Lordſhips, of the Deſire he had to maintain the Union eſtabliſh'd by the laſt Treaty of Peace, confirm'd afterwards by thoſe of an Alliance: That, in ſhort, his Majeſty had caus'd it to be inſinuated to you, that he was diſpos'd to enter into new Tyes of Friendſhip: That it was aſk'd, in his Name, of your Lordſhips, what Aſſurances you deſir'd for the future, promiſing to give them to you, provided they were juſt and reaſonable: That if your Lordſhips fear'd that he would introduce his Troops in the Spaniſh Places, he engag'd himſelf never to let them enter into them; and that he would be contented that the Care of them ſhould be entruſted with the Spaniſh Troops, who alone have a Right to keep them for the King my Maſter, who, at the ſame Time, gave Notice to your Lordſhips of his Acceſſion to the Crown, by a Letter which I deliver'd myſelf to Mr. de Lier, then Preſident of the Week. [Here he enlarg'd on the Power as well as the Moderation of the Moſt Chriſtian King, in order to ſhew the Advances he had made in a more meritorious Light; obſerving, That from his Conduct, it might alſo be thought he fear'd a War. And then proceding thus] That your Lordſhips, on the contrary, look upon it as your Advantage, whilſt very far from anſwering to the Advances made by his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, your Lordſhips did not ceaſe to negotiate with foreign Courts: That nothing is talk'd of in Holland but Preparations for War, to arm Ships, to keep conſiderable Sums of Money ready, to augment the Troops: That the Officers of thoſe which your Lordſhips have in the Catholic Low-Countries, raiſe actually their Recruits, as well in the Towns as in the Countries belonging to the King my Maſter: That, in ſhort, every Thing ſeems to be in motion here: That all Things here ſeem diſpos'd for War, at the ſame Time that the Emperor cauſes his Troops to march as well for Italy as for the Rhine; which he would, in all likelihood, not do, if he was not aſſur'd that your Lordſhips would ſupport his Intereſt, by making a Diverſion in the Catholic Low-Countries, by ſupporting the Pretenſions of the Emperor on ſome of the Places of that Country, and by helping ſome other Princes alſo to ſell them; which might have happen'd, if his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty had not immediately us'd his Precautions ſo neceſſary for the

A. D. 1700. the Security of the Spaniſh Low-Countries, eſpecially in the Condition they are in at preſent, whilſt the Troops which your Lordſhips have in the Places, are very much ſuperior to thoſe of the King my Maſter. That his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty did very well know, at firſt, the Importance of making the Dutch Troops quit them; but being perſuaded that your Lordſhips deſir'd Peace, he thought till now, that the public Good requir'd that he ſhould ſuſpend it: But that at laſt it was no longer poſſible to leave thoſe Troops in the Places of a King whom they did not own; and that, beſides this, his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty having been deſir'd, by the King my Maſter, to take care of the Security and Conſervation of the Places of the Netherlands, till he arrives at Madrid, and till he be in a Condition to do it himſelf; his ſaid Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty thought that it was not prudent to defer any longer to guard them from the Danger which threatned them: So he found it neceſſary to write to his Electoral Highneſs of Bavaria, to let a Detachment of his Troops march, on the 6th of this Month, into all the principal Places; charging, very particularly, his ſaid Electoral Highneſs, to order the Governors of the Places, in which theſe Troops are to enter, that the Moment they ſhall enter, they are to give Notice to the Troops of your Lordſhips not to be at all uneaſy at it, whilſt the French Troops enter only as Auxiliary Troops, and to ſupport thoſe of the King my Maſter, who had every Thing to fear from a Body of Troops very much ſuperior to his own, in the Places whereof they will not own him to be the Sovereign: That, in ſhort, the French Troops were under the Command of his Electoral Highneſs like them, and that they would do ſervice (r) jointly; and that they had Orders to live with the Troops of your Lordſhips, with all the Union and Civility that could be deſir'd, and which, no doubt, they will execute, according to the Obedience and Diſcipline under which they are uſed to live.

Theſe, my Lords, are the Motives and the Reaſons which his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty has had to cauſe his Troops to enter into the Places of the King my Maſter, and which I have Orders to communicate to you; aſſuring you, nevertheleſs, that their Majeſties are ſtill in the ſame Diſpoſition to entertain the good Correſpondence and Friendſhip with your Lordſhips, and to enter, for that End, into all the juſt and reaſonable Expedients, as if the Troops of France had not enter'd into the Places of the Spaniſh Netherlands."

Such was the Memorial of Spain: And the Effect was anſwerable to it; for the States Deputies having reported it to the States-General, their Lordſhips, on the 9th, came to a long Reſolution upon it, in which, having expreſs'd their Sorrow for the Imputations laid upon them, as if they were inclin'd A. D. 1700. to War, and making Preparations for it, They declar'd in ſo many Words, "That They had been always averſe to it: That They were ſtill the ſame; as knowing War to be irreconcileable with their Intereſt: That they wiſh'd for nothing more than to ſee the public Tranquility preſerv'd, and their own Security eſtabliſh'd..... That having learn'd, not by uncertain Rumours, but certain Advices, the great Armaments of France, and the Motions made on their Frontiers, they had juſt Reaſon to be alarm'd, and to put themſelves in a Poſture of Defence: That in doing this, they had proceeded nevertheleſs with the utmoſt Circumſpection, having done leſs than other Powers had done on the like Occaſion, in order to avoid giving Umbrage: That if their High-Mightineſſes had known the Continuance of their Troops in the Barrier-Towns had given Cauſe of Offence, They would have withdrawn them long ago: That as ſoon as they did come to ſuch Knowledge, which was before they made the Overture above-ſpecify'd, they did give Orders to withdraw them, tho' they had been ſtation'd there on a contrary Principle; that is to ſay, for the Security of thoſe Places, inſtead of giving Uneaſineſs by their being there: That they had caus'd the Elector of Bavaria to be inform'd of this their Intention, that Orders might be given for their Diſmiſſion: And that, upon the whole, they hop'd M. de Quiros himſelf would ſecond this Repreſentation of theirs with his good Offices, that all Cauſe of Exception, in relation to thoſe Troops, might be ſo much the ſooner remov'd, &c."

It is to be obſerv'd, That M. de Briord (as well on Account of his Indiſpoſition, as becauſe he was not thought ſo well qualify'd to manage the Cabals and Factions which divided and diſtracted the Councils of the States, as M. d'Avaux, who had ſo long reſided in Holland, and who had been particularly obnoxious to King William while Prince of Orange) had been recall'd; and the Latter appointed to ſucceed him. That in their Reſolution, the States had not only touch'd on this Incident, but alſo preſs'd to have his Departure haſten'd, for the Sake of haſtening the Negotiations: As alſo, That M. de Tallard had actually receiv'd his Audience of Leave of his Majeſty; which was on the French Side as cold as poſſible: For the Embaſſador preſented no Letter of Revocation from the King his Maſter; nor aſſign'd any Reaſon for it, nor mention'd any Purpoſe of his Court to appoint a Succeſſor: And all the Compliments and Profeſſions he made, were from himſelf: And his Majeſty, on the contrary, having ſignify'd how well he was ſatisfy'd with his Behaviour here, was pleas'd to go ſo far out of his way, as to deſire him, to let his Maſter know at his Return,

M. d'Avaux goes to the Hague.

[Cole, p. 503]

M. de Tallard takes his Audience of Leave.

(r) And yet R. Burnet (on the Credit of Longuerue's Private perhaps) hardly ſays, the Dutch Troops were made Priſoners of War; in which he is follow'd by Mr. Tindal, who had Lamberty and Cole, (in both which Compilers this Memorial is to be found) open before him.

A. D. 1700-1. turn, How willing he had been to live in Friendſhip and good Intelligence with him.

This happen'd February 3, O. S. and the Day before, M. d'Avaux (whoſe Credentials were dated February 2, N. S.) had had his firſt Audience of the States; at which Time he preſented a (1) Memorial, in which he declar'd, That he was ready to enter into Conferences with their Deputies: That he and M. de Briord were entruſted with the neceſſary Powers, if they were diſpos'd to enter into new Engagements for the Preſervation of the Peace: That the King his Maſter had no Thoughts of making uſe of his Power, or of his Union with the King of Spain, to begin a new War: That his Deſire was, That this Event might ſerve to maintain the general Peace: And that he was ready to give all the Aſſurances on this Head, which could be reaſonably demanded of him."

M. d'Avaux's Memorial to the States.

Conference between Lord Mancheſter and M. de Torcy.

With the ſame fair Face M. de Torcy alſo receiv'd Lord Mancheſter, when he came to preſent the Reſolution of the States, in relation to the Entrance of the French Troops into the Barrier-Towns; on which Occaſion, He, M. de Torcy, reply'd to the Effect following: "That their High-Mightineſſes ought not to be ſurpris'd, that the King had poſſeſs'd himſelf of them for their new Maſter: That it was a good while ſince the Regency of Spain had requeſted him to do ſo; notwithſtanding which, he had ſo long deferr'd it, to remove, if poſſible, all Cauſe of Animoſity or Diſtruſt: That, hearing of nothing but War from all Parts, he had been no longer able to withſtand their preſſing Inſtances: That it would not have been prudent to ſuffer himſelf to be ſurpris'd: And that to mark the Sincerity of his Intentions, and his Zeal for Peace to all the World, he would make no Manner of Uſe of the Advantage he had over their Troops; having already given his Orders to leave them at Liberty either to ſtay or retire, as their Lordſhips ſhould think fit, even without enquiring whether any French or Walloons were amongſt them. Adding, moreover, That as to what related to the Flotilla at Cadiz, the ſame Liberty had been given, by expreſs Order, to all thoſe concern'd in it to withdraw their Effects in Safety, and without the leaſt Moleſtation, as had been us'd in former Times: And that, in return, his Majeſty flatter'd himſelf with the Hopes, That now, while M. d'Avaux was in Holland, proper Means would be found out to content their High-Mightineſſes in relation to their Security."

This was Lord Mancheſter's Account of what paſs'd, which he ſent to the States: But in his Diſpatch to Mr. Vernon three Days before, (to wit, February 15) he drops another Circumſtance, which deſerves a particular Notice; as ſerving to ſhew, in the cleareſt Manner, That, in caſe the Barrier might might be left, for the future, in the Hands of Spain, and the Emperor was entirely excluded from any Share of the Spaniſh Succeſſion, France was, in earneſt, diſpos'd to maintain the public Tranquility: And that, on the contrary, if any Portion was to be carv'd out of it, on any Pretence, or for any Purpoſe whatſoever, it was to be carv'd out with the Sword. This other Circumſtance then is thus expreſs'd: "When I took Notice to M. de Torcy, That I thought they would have deferr'd any Thing of this Nature, till they had ſeen what Succeſs M. d'Avaux might have had, He own'd to me, That they would have done it, had they not had Notice, That Endeavours would be us'd to procure Flanders for the Archduke; and it was neceſſary to prevent ſuch a Proceeding; ſince the accepting of the Will of the late King, was in order to keep the whole Monarchy entire; and the dividing of any Part, would never be conſented to."

A. D. 1700-1.

Laſtly: Mr. Vernon having been order'd to aſk M. de Tallard, (who had not as yet left the Kingdom) what Directions he had receiv'd, upon what Lord Mancheſter had repreſented to his Maſter, in the Name of the King and the States, that Miniſter reply'd, That he was to give his Majeſty the like Aſſurances in the Name of his Maſter, which M. de Torcy had given to Lord Mancheſter: And, contrary to the Practice of that Nobleman, He choſe to do it in Perſon. Accordingly; At his Audience, he expreſs'd himſelf in the like general Terms: And his Majeſty enquiring, If he had nothing in particular to propoſe in relation to the public Security? He anſwer'd in the Negative: But added, That if his Majeſty had any Propoſal of that Nature to make, and thought fit to communicate it to him, He would tranſfer it to his Maſter: To which his Majeſty rejoin'd, That when He had, He would direct Mr. Vernon to communicate it to him.

A Conference between Mr. Vernon and M. de Tallard.

[p. 310.]

And now it was, That Count Wratiſlaw's Negotiations began to take a favorable Turn; that is to ſay, when the Fate of the Barrier was decided; which, as we have ſeen, was in the Beginning of February, N. S. And as we have alſo ſeen, Wratiſlaw did not arrive here till December 28, O. S. All which is ſufficient to evince, That the Coldneſs (if any) ſhewn to that Miniſter, did not flow from the new Miniſters alone, or from any Body elſe, for Conſiderations merely Engliſh.

Count Wratiſlaw's Negotiations in England take a favorable Turn.

And that his Negotiation did, at this Criſis, take a favorable Turn, we need only refer to Lamberty; who, having enumerated all the Precautions taken by the States againſt a farther Surprize, by ſummoning all their general Officers, ordering their Fortifications to be repair'd, a large Fleet to be equipp'd, new Levies to be made, &c. all under the moſt plauſible Pretences, (for fear of giving the leaſt Umbrage) procedes to ſay, in ſubſtance, That on the 21ſt of February, (N. S.) an Expreſs from Count Wratiſlaw in England, arriv'd

(1) Which (as Mr. Vernon informs Lord Mancheſter) M. de Tallard caus'd to be printed and publiſh'd in England, in French and Engliſh, three or four Days before the King receiv'd it by the Dutch Poſt.

A. D. 1700. arriv'd at the Hague, where he ſtay'd but a few Days, and then continued his Journey to Vienna: That in this ſhort Interval, M. de Goes, the Imperial Miniſter in Holland, had a Conference with the Penſioner, which turn'd on the Matters ſo negotiated in England, and which afterwards gave Riſe to ſeveral other ſecret Conferences, of ſuch a Nature, that, in the Courſe of them, it was thought fit to call upon the Regency of Amſterdam, to empower their Deputies to tranſact certain important Points, without being oblig'd to recur to their Principals: That the ſaid Regency, inſtead of complying, urg'd the Reaſonableneſs of their being in the whole Secret of Affairs; ſeeing, That the greateſt Part of the Expence of the Province of Holland was defray'd by them: And, That all they could be brought to, was, "That if the King of England was convinc'd of the Neceſſity of a War, and could bring the Commons of his new Parliament to be of the ſame Opinion, They would join in the ſame Meaſure." Whence it is apparent, That the chief City of the Union was ſtill more unwilling to come to a Rupture with the Two Crowns, than the new Miniſters of England.

The Pope offers his Mediation to the Emperor.

This was the State of Things in Holland: And in this Interval the new Pope had ſent a Nuncio to Vienna, to make an Offer of his Mediation; as alſo, to ſignify his Readineſs to procure the Low-Countries for the Archduke Charles, as the Price of an Accommodation, provided the Emperor would engage not to ſend any Troops into Italy. But his Imperial Majeſty, without taking any Notice of this Offer, (which he juſtly look'd upon as a mere Feint to amuſe and perplex him) ſimply reply'd, That He would make no Difficulty to accept the Mediation ſo offer'd by his Holineſs, provided the French would recal the Troops they had already pour'd into Italy: As alſo, That Naples and Sicily, Milan and the Netherlands, ſhould be put into neutral Hands; the two Former into thoſe of his Holineſs, and the two Latter into thoſe of ſuch other Powers as ſhould be afterwards agreed upon.

Which is evaded.

This was enough to ſhew, That no pacific Project was likely to ſuccede: And about the ſame Time the Venetians, agreeable to their uſual Prudence, came to a Reſolution, to obſerve a ſtrict Neutrality in all Events; or, as it is explan'd by themſelves, to treat thoſe as Friends who behav'd as Friends to them; and, on the contrary, to treat thoſe as Enemies, who offer'd the leaſt Violence to the Republic.

Ambiguous Conduct of Portugal at this Criſis.

Laſtly: A Criſis was now come, when France had ſome Reaſon to regret the Succeſs of her own perfidious Intrigues in order to ſeperate Portugal from Spain: For it was obvious, That in caſe of a Struggle for the Spaniſh Succeſſion, the Court of Portugal would almoſt have the caſting Voice.

Nor was that Court at all ignorant of her preſent Advantage, or unpractis'd in the Turns and Doubles uſual on ſuch Occaſions. To the Emperor and the Maritime-Powers, their Miniſters magnify'd the Forces they had on foot, the Opportunities which their Situation afforded to make Incurſions into Spain, and the favorable Diſpoſition they were in to take their Part in any ſuch Meaſures as ſhould be agreed upon, for preſerving a due Degree of Equality among the Powers of Europe: And This they ſeem'd to do with ſo much the more Earneſtneſs and Shew of Sincerity; becauſe the Regency of Spain had quarter'd the Arms of Portugal in the Shield Royal; and in the Patents iſſued by the new King, he had ſtil'd himſelf King of Portugal, which had been renounc'd in form by the Treaty of 1667: But then they alſo added, That there was the utmoſt Neceſſity for keeping theſe Advances of theirs ſecret: And that if ſuitable Reſolutions were not form'd, they ſhould be oblig'd to acknowledge the ſaid new King, and to govern themſelves accordingly. A. D. 1700.

In effect, They had already acknowledg'd him: And ſo much Time being unavoidably waſted in the Manner already repreſented, without opening any near Proſpect of re-eſtabliſhing a new Grand Alliance in lieu of That, ſo ungracefully diſſolv'd by the Peace of Ryſwick and the firſt Partition-Treaty, his Portugueſe Majeſty thought it adviſable to make ſure of a back Game, by lending an Ear to the Offers of France, by becoming an Advocate for Peace, which, in a Letter to the States, he adviſ'd them to preſerve, and by actually ſuffering his Miniſters to enter into ſuch Engagements, as were utterly irreconcileable with the Parts they acted, and the Language they us'd, in the Courts above-ſpecify'd.

Parliaments ſeldom acquainted with the true State of Things.

Such was the Face of Europe when the new Parliament of England was to have their firſt Meeting. But we are not to ſuppoſe, That Many in either Houſe had the Advantage of any ſuch Premiſes as now lye before us, to direct the Judgment they were to make on the State of Europe, and the Part moſt ſuitable to the Intereſt and Honour of England, which the Parliament was to act upon it. The Advantage in Debate which Miniſters derive from their ſuperior Knowledge of Facts, is often the only Superiority they are poſſeſs'd of: And under ſome myſterious Pretence or other, they generally take care to foreclose all Enquiry. But tho' it may be true, that ſome Affairs are not fit to be communicated to a popular Aſſembly, it does not follow, that popular Aſſemblies, who are to provide for the Public Neceſſities, ought to be kept wholly in the Dark, as to the real State of the Public, which we ſhall find was nearly the Caſe at preſent.

Few Governments are entitled to entire Confidence, tho' All demand it: And when the beſt are complimented with it, the Conſtitution ſuffers: For Uſe, in ſuch Inſtances, ſoon becomes Abuſe; and a Gap once made in the Mound of Liberty, is ſeldom, if ever, cloſ'd again.

It muſt, however, be confeſs'd, That, unleſs the Court could, at this Criſis, have come to a Reſolution, to act ſo as no Court had perhaps acted before, that is to ſay, without Guile,

A. D. 1709-10. Guile, much Management was now neceſſary, ſo to diſpoſe and conduct the ſeveral interfering Points of Buſineſs in ſuch a Manner, as that Ends and Purpoſes might be anſwer'd, and yet Facts and Motives be conceal'd.

Court ſecretly inclin'd to a War.

To ſtimulate a due Degree of Reſentment againſt France for having preferr'd the Will to the Treaty, and againſt the Two Crowns for having rejected the Propoſitions made by Schouenberg, in relation to the Barrier, was, at Bottom, no doubt the favorite Point of the King; and yet an enflammatory Uſe could not as yet be made of that enflammatory Circumſtance, of admitting French Troops into the Towns of the ſaid Barrier: For it was not to be preſum'd in England, That, in caſe the Dutch Troops had continued Maſters there, the Duke of Anjou would have been acknowledg'd without any Difficulty, and the Emperor left to ſtruggle for a Share of the Succeſſion by himſelf.

Again: Tho' the Acceptance of the Will was to be decry'd as an outragious Breach of Faith, the Zeal of the new Miniſters did not prompt them to extol the Treaty ſo broken as a Maſter-piece to Policy, which ought to be the Pole-Star of all their Meaſures: On the contrary, tho' it did not become them as Servants of the King to call it in queſtion themſelves, they certainly were not diſpleas'd with the Proſpect of its being call'd in queſtion by Others: And, perhaps, even the King himſelf had ſo much the leſs Senſibility on that Head, when he found the Streſs of the Storm was to fall on Thoſe only whom he had diſmiſs'd, conſequently had qualify'd for Diſgrace.

The Partition-Treaty univerſally odious.

Beſides; this Treaty, which had been expos'd in all Languages, and was in (t) every Hand, was ſo univerſally odious, that no State-Proceſs of any Kind, could be deriv'd from it.

And under all theſe wayward Conſiderations, the Succeſſion was to be ſettled anew. The King's Life, it was manifeſt, could not be depended on: There was but one Life more in the Remainder: And his Majeſty (which was, perhaps, the moſt cogent Conſideration of all) was by no Means diſpos'd to leave that Work in the Hands of his Succeſſor.

Such, therefore, being the equivocal Nature of the Conjuncture, it was obvious, that the King's Speech at the opening of the Seſſion, would border more on Myſtery than Revelation: And while the moſt efficacious Means of perplexing under Pretence of informing, were yet in debate, Intelligence was receiv'd, That the Malecontents, that is to ſay, the Followers of the late Miniſtry, intended to divide the Houſe on the Choice of a Speaker. As, therefore, the late Speaker Littleton was known to be their Man, it was thought a wholeſome Expedient to take him off: Accordingly, having been ſent for [Cole. P. 303.] to Kenſington on the 3d of February, and ſpoke to by the King, he was eaſily perſuaded to gratify his Majeſty at the Expence of his Party; and in order thereto, promis'd to be abſent himſelf from the Houſe the firſt Day.

A. D. 1709-10. The King frowns on Mr. Littleton to diſcourage the Choice.

But tho' the Party loſt their Man, they did not give up their Meaſure; And ſuch was the Ferment on all Hands, that the Day of Meeting was put off by Prorogation, from the 6th to the 10th of February, under the Pretence of giving the Members Time to come up to Town, but in reality, to explore ſuch farther Expedients, as were moſt likely to qualify it.

So obſtinate, however, was the Aſperity diſcover'd on both Sides, that no Temperament could be found ſufficiently efficacious: And thus when the Day of Meeting came, Mr. Harley was nominated for the Chair on one Hand, and Sir Richard Onſlow on the other: This produc'd a Diviſion; and on the Iſſue, 249 Voices declar'd for the Former, and but 125 for the Latter.

The Whigs for Sir R. Onſlow: Mr. Harley choſen.

This ſeem'd to argue, That the new Miniſters were Maſters in all Things: And they would have been ſo, perhaps, if they had treated with the Court on a broader Baſis, and had made room there for more of their Party as well as for themſelves:—But the Plan of taking in none but moderate Men, left the Duke of Leeds, Marquis of Normanby, Earl of Nottingham, and Others, at Liberty in the Houſe of Lords; and what was of much worſe Conſequence, left Seymour, Muſgrave, Finch, How, Harcourt, Shower, &c. in Poſſeſſion of the Houſe of Commons: For tho' Mr. Harley was comprehended in it, he had ſtill his Managements with the Party: And tho' both the Secretaries of State were at this Criſis Commoners, They had but little Credit there, and leſs Authority. So that his Majeſty, in diſmiſſing the Whigs, becauſe they could no longer do his Buſineſs in Parliament, had done enough to diſoblige Them, but not enough to gain the Tories; and ſo met with ſuch Treatment from Both, as once gave him Occaſion to ſay, in a Pet to Lord Halifax, That all the Difference he knew between the Two Parties, was, That the Tories would cut his Throat in the Morning, and the Whigs in the Afternoon.

The new Cabinet not Scheme ſufficient for the new Parliament.

But to proceed:—The Speaker having, the next Day, been preſented and approv'd, his Majeſty made the following Speech to both Houſes; to wit.

" My Lords and Gentlemen, King's Speech.

Our great Misfortune in the Loſs of the Duke of Glouceſter, hath made it abſolutely neceſſary, that there ſhould be a farther Proviſion for the Succeſſion to the Crown in the Proteſtant Line, after me and the Princeſs. The Happineſs of the Nation, and the Security of our Religion, which is our chiefeſt Concern, ſeems ſo much to depend upon this, that I cannot doubt but it will meet with a general Concurrence: And I earneſtly recommend it to your early and effectual Conſideration.

The Death of the late King of Spain with

(t) M. de Longuerue takes upon him to ſay, That he had ſent a Copy of it to the Dutch Gazettes by the King his Maſter's Order.

A. D. 1700. with the Declaration of His Succeſſor to that Monarchy, has made ſo great an Alteration in the Affairs Abroad, that I muſt deſire you very maturely to conſider their preſent State; and I make no Doubt but your Reſolutions thereupon will be ſuch, as ſhall be moſt conducing to the Intereſt and Safety of England, the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion in general, and the Peace of ALL Europe.

These Things are of ſuch Weight, that I have thought them moſt proper for the Conſideration of a new Parliament, to have the more immediate Senſe of the Kingdom in ſo great a Conjuncture.

I muſt deſire of you, Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, ſuch Supplies as you ſhall judge neceſſary for the Service of the current Year; and I muſt particularly put you in Mind of the Deficiencies and Public Debts occaſion'd by the late War, that are yet unprovided for.

I am oblig'd farther to recommend to you, that you would inſpect the Condition of the Fleet, and conſider what Repairs or Augmentations may be requiſite for the Navy, which is the great Bulwark of the Engliſh Nation, and, ought, at this Conjuncture moſt eſpecially, to be put into a good Condition; and that you would alſo conſider, what is proper for the better Security of thoſe Places where the Ships are laid up in Winter.

The Regulation and Improvement of our Trade, is of ſo public Concern, that I hope it will ever have your ſerious Thoughts: And if you can find proper Means of ſetting the Poor at work, you will eaſe yourſelves of a very great Burthen; and at the ſame Time add ſo many uſeful Hands to be employ'd in our Manufactures, and other public Occaſions.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I hope there will be ſuch an Agreement and Vigour in the Reſolutions you ſhall take, upon the important Matters now before you, as may make it appear, we are firmly united among ourſelves; and in my Opinion, nothing can contribute more to our Safety at Home, or to our being conſiderable Abroad."

It is to be here obſerv'd, That on the Day the King firſt went to the Houſe, to wit, the 10th, his Majeſty receiv'd Advice by an Expreſs, That the Court of France had granted Permiſſion to the Dutch Troops in the Barrier-Towns to march home; but that there were extraordinary Movements among the French Troops in thoſe Parts: That on the 13th, Vernon inform'd Lord Mancheſter, the Negotiations on foot were like to be carry'd on in Holland; adding, That he hop'd the King's Speech would be look'd upon as a Proof we were in a peaceable Diſpoſition. And that his Lordſhip, in his Anſwer, ſays, "I ſee we are peaceably inclin'd. They have the Speech alſo at Court. I hear they do not know what to make of it, and ſtill ſuſpect us."

What Biſhop Burnet has ſo boldly pronounc'd of this Parliament, muſt next be conſider'd. His Words are theſe.

B. Burnet's Account of the Completion of this Parliament.

"As ſoon as our Parliament was open'd, it appear'd that the French had a great Party in it: It is certain, great Sums came over this Winter from France; the Packet-boat came ſeldom without 10,000 Louis d'Ors; it brought often more: The Nation was fill'd with them; and in ſix Months Time, a Million of Guineas were coin'd out of them: The Merchants, indeed, ſaid, That the Ballance of Trade was then ſo much turn'd to our Side, that, whereas we were wont to carry over a Million of our Money in Specie, we then ſent no Money to France; and had at leaſt half that Sum ſent over to ballance the Trade: Yet this did not account for that vaſt Flood of French Gold, that was viſible amongſt us: And, upon the French Ambaſſador's going away, a very ſenſible Alteration was found in the Bills of Exchange: So it was concluded, that great Remittances were made to him, and that theſe were diſtributed among thoſe who reſolv'd to merit a Share in that Wealth, which came over now ſo copiouſly, beyond the Example of former Times."

A. D. 1700.

He does not, indeed, ſay, That this French Party was a Jacobite-Party: But having in his next Page taken Occaſion to ſay, That the Tories were a great Majority, it follows, according to the uſual Courſe of Party-Reaſoning, That what is not ſo expreſs'd, is nevertheleſs ſo to be underſtood. On the other Hand, Lord Mancheſter writing to Mr. Vernon concerning the Court of St. Germains, December 22, ſays, "They are apprehenſive of a new Parliament in England, for fear ſome of their Friends ſhould be left out, which makes me wiſh there may be one." And again, on the 12th of February, thus: "At St. Germains they do not like our Parliament; but they pretend to have ſuch Aſſurances, that they do not value it; and ſay, That however Matters turn, it will be for their Advantage; the Catholic Zeal being ſufficient to reſtore them." Then as to the Over-flow of French Gold, and the ſcandalous Uſe it was ſaid to be apply'd to, in the Gazette of February 6, we find the following Proclamation, which for the Sake of the Teſtimony it contains, deſerves to be inſerted entire: To wit.

Partial and diſingenuous.

[Cole, p. 270.]

[Ibid. p. 302.]

The Charge of Money being ſhrink'd by France con-ſider'd.

"At the Court of Kenſington, Feb. 5, 1700.

Preſent, The King's moſt Excellent Majeſty in Council.

It having been repreſented to his Majeſty in Council, That certain Pieces of Gold of French and Spaniſh Coin, call'd Louis d'Ors, or Piſtoles, do paſs, and are accepted in Payment in the Kingdom at the Rate of Seventeen Shillings and Six-pence a-piece, which is near Six-pence more than the real Value, his Majeſty taking the ſame into his Royal Conſideration, and being deſirous to prevent the Damage that may accrue to his good Subjects by the great Quantity of ſuch French Louis d'Ors, and Spaniſh Piſtoles, which have of late been, and may, hereafter, be imported into this Kingdom, in caſe the ſaid Louis d'Ors or Piſtoles ſhould continue to be receiv'd for more than the intrinſic Value; his Majeſty with the Advice of his Privy-Council, is therefore pleas'd to order, as it is hereby order'd, That Notice ſhall be given in the Gazette, That the ſaid French Louis d'Ors, and Spaniſh Piſtoles, be not hereafter receiv'd for more than Seventeen Shillings apiece."

A Proclamation in relation to the French and Spaniſh Coins.

A. D. 1700-1. Thus it appears, That the Matter which, paſſing thro' the Hands of this accurate, judicious, and upright Hiſtorian, had ſo black a Conſtruction put upon it, might poſſibly be no more than an ordinary Occurrence in the way of Trade. Gold, whether in Coin or Bullion, is a Commodity, and will always find its way to the beſt Market: Thus while Six-pence was to be got in England on each of theſe Pieces, it was worth the Remitters while to ſend them hither from all Parts: But when this Advantage was thus taken off by Proclamation, the Inducement ceas'd, and the Traffic with it.

Now Sir Iſaac Newton was the Perſon who mov'd for the Proclamation, as appears by his own Memorial to the Treaſury: The Mint-Books ſhew, That the Silver Coinage of this Year roſe in proportion to the Gold: For if the Gold coin'd was 26,742 lb. wt. the Silver was 37,477 lb. wt. Beſides, in the Reign of George I. the like Overflow of foreign Gold, produc'd the like Regulation, at the Inſtance of the ſame Great Man: The Money coin'd out of it was, 1,400,000*l.* The Whigs were then Lords of the Aſcendant: And if the Biſhop's Reaſoning is good, what is the Conſequence?

As nothing, however, ought to be ſuppreſs'd which ſeems to favor the Biſhop's Story, two Paſſages from Lord Manchеſter's Letters to Mr. Vernon ſhall be in this Place inſerted, that the Reader may have all the Evidence extant on both Sides before him; to wit: In a ſeperate Paper inclos'd in his Pacquet of April 16, N. S. he writes thus: "I am aſſur'd, That there are often Inſtructions ſent from this Court, which are communicated to Members of Parliament, thoſe whom they call here, well inclin'd to a Peace, and ſo, conſequently, for the Good of their Country. They inſinuate to them, That the French King has no Deſign againſt England, neither will he ever promote the Intereſt of the Prince of Wales, unleſs the Nation ſhall approve of it, on certain Terms and Conditions: That their Liberties are in Danger, if ever they admit of an Army again in England. They alſo tell them, how all Europe is for France, and what Treaties they have made: That the Emperor cannot have the leaſt Hope of Succeſs: They obſerve here Meaſures which they are deſir'd to take; and are reſolv'd, whatever is done in England not to reſent it. In order to this, there are ſeveral Emiſſaries in London; and I am told of one M. Peuſſin, who, during the late War, was in Italy, and afterwards at Conſtantinople, and lately an intimate Friend of the Cardinal de Bouillons, whoſe Procedings he diſcover'd to the French King, and was forc'd to fly out of Rome. It is not long ſince he diſappear'd from hence. Whether he appears publicly at London, I cannot tell. It is thought, that if there be Occaſion, he may aſſume a Character from the French King. This is ſo nice a Matter, that if I had it not from one who can have no Intereſt to deceive me, I ſhould take no Notice of it. The like is doing in Holland." And on the 20th following, he adds, "I cannot but tell you, That it is ſaid privately, That French Money is ſtirring amongſt you, as well as at Vienna." A. D. 1700-1.

To neither of theſe Paſſages is there any Reply of the Secretary's to be found; which is ſtrange enough, if any Streſs was laid on the Information: And it is obvious, That what is ſaid in the Laſt concerning French Money, is rather more applicable to Miniſters than Members, conſidering the Mention that is made of Vienna in the ſame Breath. Laſtly: Tho' it ſhould be admitted, That the French Court had their Correſpondents in the Houſe, it is utterly inconceivable, that their Number ſhould be Many, or that they ſhould have any Influence but what aroſe from Reaſon and Argument.

But the Truth of the Matter is, That the Biſhop having ſet the Brand of Tory on this Parliament, as above-mention'd, thinks himſelf authoris'd to vilify them at Pleaſure: And it is as true, That all he ſays of them, is calculated to be a Libel on them and their Proceedings; tho' it often happens, That by over-loading the Piece, it recoils upon himſelf. Thus he ſays, That the Majority, to make the Matter ſure, reſolv'd to clear the Houſe of a great many that were engag'd in another Intereſt: Whence we are to underſtand, That the Houſe was to be clear'd of them, merely on that Account: And yet he admits, That a moſt ſcandalous Practice had been brought into uſe of buying Votes, with ſo little Decency, that the Electors engag'd themſelves by Subſcription to chuſe a blank Perſon, before they were truſted with the Name of the Candidate: As alſo, That the Matter was ſo well prov'd, that ſeveral Elections were declar'd void, and ſome of the Perſons ſo choſen, were for ſome Time kept in Priſon. Now the Perſons thus juſtly treated, were old Shepherd, and his two Sons, one Allen, and one Cotesworth, all of the New Eaſt-India Company: Of Theſe, old Shepherd was the Principal: The Boroughs purchas'd by them were Bramber, Wooton-Baſſet, Ilcheſter, Malmſbury, Andover, and Newport: And the Biſhop himſelf ſums up the Merits of the Caſe in theſe very Words: "The Old Eaſt-India Company had driven a Courſe of Corruption within Doors with ſo little Shame, that the New intended to follow their Example; but with this Difference, that whereas the Former had bought the Perſons who were elected, They reſolv'd to buy Elections." His Complaint, however, That great Partiality appear'd in theſe Procedings, was unqueſtionably well founded: But then the like Partiality having been uniformly practis'd ever ſince, That cannot be call'd the Peculiar of this Parliament which has been the Diſgrace of All: And whereas his Lordſhip cloſes his Account of this Tranſaction in the Terms that follow: "Thus, for ſome Weeks, the Houſe ſeem'd to have forgot all the Concerns of Europe, and was wholly employ'd in the weakening of one Side, and in fortifying the Other; it is incumbent on us to correct ſo notorious a Miſrepreſentation.

The Purchaſe of Elections acknowledg'd by Burnet.

Every body knows, That, upon the firſt aſſembling of a new Parliament, a ſtanding Committee is appointed to conſider and determine

A.D. 1700-1. termine the Merits of conteſted Elections; and that ſtated Days are appointed by the Forms of the Houſe for theſe Hearings; in the Courſe of which, the other Buſineſs of the Seſſion goes on regularly, notwithſtanding theſe occaſional Interruptions.

It was in the ſame cuſtomary Manner the Buſineſs of this Seſſion was conducted: And tho' it cannot be ſaid, that the Houſe receiv'd the Report of the Speech, approv'd, acknowledg'd, and echo'd back the Contents of it the ſame Day in which it was deliver'd, according to the Practice ſince brought into uſe, it is nevertheleſs notorious, That they ſhew'd all the Regard to his Majeſty's Requiſitions from the Throne, which was conſiſtent with their Duty as Repreſentatives of the People.

Thus, on the 14th of February, the Speech was reported; and it was thereupon Unanimous Vote to ſtand by the King, &c. reſolv'd Nem. Con. That the Houſe would ſtand by and ſupport his Majeſty and his Government, and take ſuch effectual Meaſures, as might beſt conduce to the Intereſt and Safety of England, the Preſervation of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Peace of Europe: And that the ſaid Reſolution ſhould be preſented to his Majeſty by the whole Houſe. What they promis'd, they alſo made good, as we ſhall find in the Courſe of the Seſſion; which will be abundantly ſufficient to prove the Miſrepreſentation charg'd on the Hiſtorian-Biſhop.

Reflections upon it. But before we procede any farther, it will be neceſſary to obſerve, That tho' the Vote above-ſpecify'd was carry'd in the general Nemine Contradicente, that particular Clauſe in the Tail of it, and the PEACE of EUROPE, not only gave Riſe to a long and warm Debate, but to a Diviſion of the Houſe, whether it ſhould ſtand or not: Seymour, How, Muſgrave, &c. were for the Negative: And, as their Adverſaries gave out, the Reaſon why they were ſo, was, becauſe, It was plainly declaring for a WAR: So that in political Language, Terms are ſometimes inverted it ſeems; and this was ſuch a Sort of an Oracle, as Janus himſelf would have deliver'd.

[Jura Populi Ang. 4to. p. 59. Burnet, Vol. II. p. 258.]

It is true, our Miniſters had not interpreted a fuller Phraſe in the King's Speech, to wit, the Peace of ALL Europe, the ſame way: On the contrary, Mr. Vernon, as we have ſeen, makes a Merit to my Lord Manchester, and thro' him to the Court of France, of the peaceable Inclinations, thus expreſs'd from the Throne: And we ſhall have Reaſon to be convinc'd, as we go on, that he continu'd the ſame Vein of Correſpondence with that Nobleman for ſome conſiderable Time longer.

If, therefore, the Court was ever ſo eagerly bent on military Meaſures, it is plain, they did not as yet think it adviſable to avow any ſuch Purpoſe: And, indeed, whatever that Purpoſe was, if the People of England, who had been ſo lately the Bubbles of the Continent, had ruſh'd headlong into a ſecond Continent-War, as a Principal, for the Breach of the worſt Treaty that perhaps was ever made, in the moſt unprepar'd Condition imaginable, againſt an Enemy arm'd at all Points, and by the Meaſures he was taking with Portugal, Maſter of every Port from the Bay of Biſcay to the Dardanels, it A.D. 1700-1. would have argued national Phrenzy beyond Exemple.

But the Party which ſeis'd this ſtrange Opportunity, to declare for War, by a Clauſe which ſeem'd to have no other Object but Peace, and which could not, by any Kind of Torture, be ſtretch'd beyond an arm'd Negotiation, had nothing national in their Thoughts but a national Deluſion. They had loſt the King; They knew his Foible; and They reſolv'd to recover him, if poſſible, by any Means whatſoever: Perhaps They carry'd their Views yet farther to his Succeſſor: How much Lady Marlborough was her Favourite, what Uſe was to be made of her, and how much Lord Marlborough's Heart was ſet on being a Captain-General, They could not be ignorant: The Noiſe of a new War, They, moreover, preſum'd would ſilence old Complaints: And, laſtly, the Harveſt of Jobs which the Laſt had produc'd, had ſo ſharpen'd their Appetites for Another, that nothing but a ſuitable Crop could appeaſe it.

The Clauſe was however carry'd by 181 Voices, againſt 163, which has given one of our ingenuous Party-Hiſtorians the Hint [Oldmixon, Vol. II. p. 217.] to ſay, That this Vote, cold and undeciſive as it was, (ſpeaking of the whole Vote which was unanimous, as we have ſeen) could not not be carry'd without great Difficulty.

He that deſires only to collect and to recite, is aſham'd of ſuch Digreſſions as Theſe.... But as Aſſertions ſo hardily made will have weight till they are expos'd, 'tis abſolutely neceſſary to deſtroy what is falſe, before we can hope to eſtabliſh what is true.

The Addreſs founded on this Vote, was preſented to the King on the 17th following; upon which Occaſion his Majeſty expreſs'd himſelf as follows.

King's Anſwer. "I thank you for this Addreſs, and your ready Concurrence to thoſe great Ends therein mention'd, which I take to be extremely important to the Honour and Safety of England: And I aſſure you, I ſhall never propoſe any Thing, but what is for our common Advantage and Security. Having this Occaſion, I think it proper to acquaint you, That Yeſterday I receiv'd a Memorial from the Envoy Extraordinary of the States-General, a Tranſlation whereof I leave with you: As to the Firſt Part of it, I think it neceſſary to aſk your Advice; as to the Latter Part, I deſire your Aſſiſtance."

And here it might be expected that we ſhould inſert the ſaid Memorial: But as it was the Peculiar of this Seſſion, that our Parliamentary and Foreign Affairs had a conſtant Relation to each other, it will be neceſſary to intertwiſt the two Veins in their natural Order: And this will oblige us to inſpect the Reſolutions of the States, before we can procede any farther with our own.

A ſecond Memorial of M. d'Avaux to the States-General. M. d'Avaux had follow'd his firſt Memorial to the States, of February 13, N. S. with another on the 16th, which he alſo caus'd to be printed: And in This, after a Mixture of Cajolleries and Complaints, he ſignify'd, That, notwithſtanding all that was paſs'd, his Majeſty had receiv'd their Two Memorials

A.D. 1700-1. Memorials with Pleaſure: And that, as they ſeem'd calculated to perſuade him, their Lordſhips were in earneſt diſpos'd, to concert with his Majeſty the moſt effectual Means of ſecuring their Repoſe, he had ſent the ſaid Memorialiſt to receive ſuch Propoſitions, as they had to make for that End. But then, continued He, at the ſame Time that his Majeſty has calmly obſerv'd the extreme Diſguſt which the Government of the United Provinces has openly expreſs'd of his Intentions, he cannot diſapprove the Conduct of the Catholic King, ſo juſtly founded on That of your Lordſhips, ſince his Acceſſion to the Throne of Spain. The Memorials of his Embaſſador and his own Letter, remane unanſwer'd; which, together with the conſtant Refuſal of your Lordſhips to acknowledge him in quality of King of Spain, which has been made appear even on ſuch Occaſions as do not deſerve a Repetition, are not Methods to eſtabliſh Confidence.

The Wiſdom of your Government renders it hard to believe the Reports which are current, of a Project form'd to recogniſe that Prince, on Condition of ſeperating the Low-Countries from the Monarchy of Spain, and giving them to the Archduke. There is very little Likelihood, That the King of Spain, in the very Beginning of his Reign, would purchaſe a Peace at ſo dear a Rate. But if theſe Reports ſhould be abſolutely falſe; if what is alſo ſaid, That Arms, Ammunition, and every Preparative for War, was collecting in Holland, ſhould be equally falſe; and even there was no Negotiation on foot for new Alliances, it would be impoſſible for the King of Spain to ſee, without Uneaſineſs, his Towns fill'd with Troops, whoſe Maſters would not acknowledge him to be the lawful Sovereign of them: This Refuſal of your Lordſhips, it is, which has oblig'd him to apply to his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty for the Succours which he has given him: But his Majeſty withal declares, That, after having taken the Precaution abſolutely neceſſary, to eſtabliſh the lawful Authority of the King his Grandſon, he is entirely diſpos'd to adjuſt immediately the Means of maintaining the Peace.

Thus the Continuance of the Peace depends on your Lordſhips: And it will be continued for a long Time to come, if it be true, that your Lordſhips deſire it ſo ardently, as it is declar'd you do, in the laſt Memorial deliver'd on your Behalf by the Earl of Manchester, the King of England's Embaſſador. If the Treaty of Ryſwick, punctually obſerv'd to this Hour, is not ſufficient to remove all Cauſe of Alarm from your Lordſhips, as well for your Security as for your Commerce, his Majeſty is ready to receive new Propoſitions: But then they muſt be equitable in themſelves, and ſuch as his Majeſty can admit: Time is precious: And if the under-written Embaſſador may be allow'd to make ſo free a Repreſentation, and your Lordſhips are ſincerely inclin'd to Peace, you will not furniſh the leaſt Cauſe to ſurmiſe, That, under the ſpecious Pretence of Negotiation, your real Purpoſe is to procraſtinate Matters, till you are in a Condition to make War: Neither the Conſtitution of your Government, nor your Expectation of Anſwers from the King of England, hinder you from explaning yourſelves: You ought to be acquainted with the Intentions of that Prince: You ought to know, that he is inclin'd to maintain the Peace, ſince you truſted to his Embaſſador the Reſolutions you have taken to that End. His Majeſty perſuades himſelf theſe Reſolutions of your Lordſhips are conformable to the Intereſt you have in the public Repoſe: And that you will ſoon explane yourſelf in ſuch a Manner, that all cauſe of Diſtruſt being remov'd, he may continue to give you, on all Occaſions, the Marks of Eſteem and Affection, which he has ever preſerv'd for your Republic."

A.D. 1700-1.

Into what a Ferment this artful Paper muſt have thrown the ſeveral Factions of the Republic, is obvious to every Imagination; and how good a Judgment Mr. Stanhope made of the Event, appears from the Reſolution taken upon it by the States-General, to own the Duke of Anjou as King of Spain; in order to ſtop the Reports cited in the Memorial, That it was not their Intention to own that Prince, except on a certain Condition, which they did not think fit to ſpecify in their Reſolve: At the ſame Time, they alſo ſignify'd their Purpoſe to keep up the ſame good Neighbourhood, Friendſhip, and good Underſtanding with him, which they had kept up with his Predeceſſors: And declar'd, They were ready, with the Intervention of the King of Great-Britain, to enter into a Negotiation with their Moſt Chriſtian and Catholic Majeſties, for the Eſtabliſhment of the general Peace, as well as their own particular Security: Adding, That, having recall'd their Troops out of the Spaniſh Netherlands, and given the moſt convincing Proofs in their Power, of their ſincere Deſire to preſerve the Peace, &c. by thus acknowledging the King of Spain, and referring their own Demands to a future Negotiation, they hope they have anſwer'd all that was expected of them; and that in conſequence, his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty will alſo recal his Troops out of the ſaid Netherlands, &c.

Their Lordſhips Reſolution thereon.

Thus, on the very Day that the Parliament of England met, conſequently before any Meaſure of theirs could be urg'd as a Motive, their Lordſhips of the Union gave up the Partition-Treaty, ſubmitted to the Will of the late King of Spain, and declar'd for a Negotiation.

On the 22d, they farther reſolv'd to put this Reſolution in force, by cauſing a ſuitable Letter to be ſent to the young King of Spain; and alſo a new Anſwer to his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty's Letter of November 29, notifying the Duke of Anjou's Acceſſion to the Crown of Spain. Both were as full of Reſpect and ſeeming Cordiality as could have been requir'd: And the Latter having been diſpatch'd to M. Hemeſkerke at Paris, to be preſented by him or his Secretary, it is worthy of Remark, That an Excuſe was ſent

They ſend a new Anſwer to K. Lewis's Letter, which paſſed at the Ld. Portland's Audience.

A.D. 1700-1. sent by the same Express to Lord Manchester, for not giving it in Charge to him; to this Effect, "That it might have embarrass'd him; seeing They were not acquainted with his Master's Intentions with regard to the Recognition of the King of Spain".

About the same Time also, they gave Orders to M. Geldermalsum, their Minister in England, to apprise his Majesty of the whole Proceeding; which he did accordingly in a formal Memorial, being the same communicated, as above-hinted, to the House of Commons.

But before we can lay it before the Reader, it will be necessary to shew the Effect of the States Letter at the Court of France, which shall be done from the most unquestionable Authorities.

Which is extremely well receiv'd.

Lord Manchester, in his Dispatch of March 2, to Mr. Vernon, writes as follows: "The Letter from the States was deliver'd to M. de Torcy by the Secretary of the Dutch Embassador. It was extremely well receiv'd, and the King will write to them. I hope to send the Copy of this Letter in my next. M. de Torcy did tell me, That the King did intend to withdraw his Troops out of Flanders, as soon as the Troops which the King of Spain was raising there were complete. This, I suppose, will not be, till all other Matters are settled with the States, which will soon be, in case they desire nothing but the renewing of Treaties with Spain, &c." His Lordship also, not over politicly, signify'd to the States, "That he had interpos'd in the Affair as much as his Character would permit; and that he had thereby drawn those Acknowledgments from M. de Torcy, above specify'd, with this farther Particular, That his Majesty was so pleas'd with their Letter, that tho' it did not require an Answer, he would nevertheless answer it."

King Lewis's Answer.

This Answer came accordingly: It was dated March 3, N. S. and contain'd the following Expressions: "We see with Pleasure the Part you take in the Accession of our Grandson to the Crown of Spain, and the Desire which you shew, to contribute to the maintaining the general Tranquillity happily re-established by the late Treaties. You must also not doubt but that my Intentions are exactly conformable to what you desire: And remembering always our antient Friendship, and that of the Kings our Predecessors for your Republic, we shall be very glad, that our present Union with the King of Spain may serve to procure you new Securities for your States, and new Advantages for your Commerce."

A Third Memorial of M. d'Avaux to the States.

Lastly: M. d'Avaux, by express Order of the King his Master, presented another Memorial to the States, in which, among other Things, he took Occasion to observe, That the free Leave given to the Dutch Troops to return, was an indisputable Proof of his Majesty's Desire to keep the Peace, and to leave the flourishing State of their Commerce unmolested: That such being his Disposition and Purpose, they might depend on finding all the Facilities from him which could contribute to their Repose. That, however, it would be easy to find such Expedients in the Conferences he was to open with their Deputies, as would render it solid and permanent. That, as soon as all Cause of Distrust was remov'd, and all Things were restor'd to their primitive State, his Majesty did assure them positively, He would no longer concern himself about the Augmentations they should think fit to make to their Forces, or their other Preparations for War: That as soon as the Barrier Towns were in full Security, he should withdraw his Troops, and leave them to the King of Spain's own Keeping: That their Lordships could not be surpris'd, that his Catholic Majesty was anxious for the Security of those Places at such a Crisis: And that the Continuance of his Most Christian Majesty's Troops therein, during the Negotiations, ought not to give them the least Inquietude; seeing their Inclination to Peace, after such Assurances as they had given the King his Master, could not but be sincere, &c."

The Memorial of the States-General to his Majesty.

And now the Dutch Memorial to the Court of England, which B. Burnet says, was penn'd with great Spirit, and in a very moving Strain, ought to be brought forward; which was to this Effect; to wit: "That they having consider'd, That their Delay of owning the Duke of Anjou for King of Spain, was subject to malicious Interpretations, as if their Aim had been only to gain Time to put themselves into a warlike Posture, they thought themselves oblig'd to acknowledge the Duke of Anjou without any Condition; reserving to themselves to stipulate, in the Negotiation ready to begin, the necessary Conditions to secure the Peace of Europe; in which Negotiation, they are firmly resolv'd to do nothing without the Consent of his Majesty, and the other Powers interested in the Maintenance of the Peace, as they have expressly declar'd to the Embassador of France: That, therefore, they pray'd him to send to his Minister at the Hague, necessary Instructions and Orders to act conjointly in this Negotiation; and that nothing be concluded but wherein England and Holland may equally find their Security, and which, at the same Time, may tend to strengthen the public Tranquility. But as it may happen not to be possible to agree with France and Spain on reasonable Conditions, and that, the Negotiation being interrupted, they may be suddenly attack'd by the numerous Troops, which France has order'd to move towards their Frontiers, their Envoy is to represent to his Majesty the urgent Necessity they should have, in so great a Danger, of the Assistance of England, and to desire him to get the Succours, stipulated by the Treaty, in readiness, that they may rely on them, if Occasion requir'd."

Thus, in communicating this Paper to the House of Commons, almost as soon as he had receiv'd it, his Majesty, tho' in the Hands of a Tory Ministry and a Tory Parliament, was induc'd to wave his Prerogative in a Manner which had been rarely practis'd before, and which, except in the Course of

A. D. 1700. of this Seſſion, has been rarely imitated ever ſince.

Addreſs of the Commons thereon. And the next Day but one after this Communication, the Commons voted an humble Addreſs to his Majeſty, That he would be pleas'd to enter into ſuch Negotiations, in concert with the States-General and other Potentates, as might moſt effectually conduce to the mutual Safety of theſe Kingdoms and the States-General, [to which the Words before ſtickled for were alſo added] and the Preſervation of the Peace of Europe: And giving him Aſſurances of Support, and Aſſiſtance in Performance of the Treaty made with the States-General March 3, 1667." Which was all the States had demanded. They alſo reſolv'd, That the ſaid Addreſs ſhould be preſented to his Majeſty by the whole Houſe, which was accordingly done; and his Majeſty's Anſwer was as follows.

King's Anſwer. "Gentlemen,

I thank you heartily for the Advice you have given me, and your unanimous Reſolution to ſupport and aſſiſt me, in making good the Treaty mention'd in your Addreſs: And I will immediately order my Miniſters Abroad, to enter into Negotiations in concert with the States-General, and other Potentates, for the attaining thoſe great Ends which you deſire. Nothing can more effectually conduce to our Security, than the Unanimity and Vigour you have ſhew'd on this Occaſion: And I ſhall always endeavour, on my Part, to preſerve and increaſe this mutual Truſt and Confidence between us."

Thus we are to underſtand from the Face of this Reply, That the Commons divided the Memorial in queſtion right, as to the Former and Latter Parts of it, ſo doubtfully recommended to them by the King; and that his Majeſty was perfectly ſatisfy'd with the Advice they gave him: But, as the Diviſion was left to themſelves, and a Houſe of Commons is generally a Compoſition of very diſſimilar Ingredients, if any Member or Members had taken it into their Heads, That the King had deſir'd their Advice concerning the Recognition of the King of Spain, and had, in conſequence of ſuch a Conceit, mov'd for the ſaid Recognition, on the ſame Principle which had already determin'd the Conduct of the States, it would not perhaps have excited much Wonder, it could not have afforded any juſt Cauſe of Complaint, and poſſibly might have been held, tho' not acknowledg'd, an acceptable Service: Even thoſe Expreſſions in the King's Speech, to wit, "The Death of the King of SPAIN, with the Declaration of HIS Succeſſor," imply'd a ſort of Acquieſcence in what had been done: And the Objections which lay againſt a Recognition, aroſe rather from Matter of Form, than any real Repugnance any where. The Miniſters who knew we had receiv'd no formal Notification, either from the King or Regency of Spain, and, conſequently, that we could not as yet acknowledge him with any Grace or Decency, knew alſo, that we had ſolicited ſuch Notification which had not been vouchſaf'd to us: So that the Miniſters themſelves, if conſiſtent with themſelves, could not have oppos'd ſuch a Motion, on any other Pretence, than the Impropriety of meddling with a Matter not immediately before the Houſe: And yet Biſhop Burnet has ventur'd to write as follows.

" A Deſign was laid in the Houſe of Commons, to open the Seſſion with an Addreſs to the King, that he would own the King of Spain: The Matter was ſo far concerted, that they had agreed on the Words of the Vote, and ſeem'd not to doubt of the Concurrence of the Houſe; but Mr. Monkton oppos'd it with great Heat, and among other Things ſaid, If that Vote was carry'd, he ſhould expect that the next Vote to be put, would be for owning the pretended Prince of Wales: Upon this Occaſion it appear'd, how much popular Aſſemblies are apt to be turn'd, by a Thing boldly ſaid, tho' the Conſequence is ever ſo remote; ſince the Connection of theſe two Points lay at ſome Diſtance, yet the Iſſue of the Debate was quite contrary to that which was deſign'd: It ended in an Addreſs to the King, to enter into new Alliances with the States, for our mutual Defence, and for preſerving the Liberty and Peace of Europe: Theſe laſt Words were not carry'd without much Difficulty: They were conſider'd as they were, indeed, an Inſinuation towards a War."

No ?, there is ſcarce a Circumſtance in this Paſſage which is not ſome how or other exceptionable: Inſtead of the Votes being carry'd with Difficulty, the King himſelf acknowledges it to be unanimous: What Difficulty theſe laſt Words occaſion'd, aroſe in the former Vote, as above explan'd: The Memorial of the States, which gave Riſe to the Vote, is not ſo much as mention'd here, which was the Place for it: If the Words of any ſuch Motion to acknowledge King Philip had been agreed on, we have ſhewn already in what alone they could be blameable: And as to any Deſign form'd to open the Seſſion with ſuch an Addreſs, Facts and Dates demonſtrate, (to ſay nothing of the Contents of his own Legend) That the Seſſion was not open'd with any ſuch Debate: Nor, indeed, is any Trace of any ſuch Motion, in relation to the King of Spain, to be found in the Journals.

But, in order to extinguiſh for ever the falſe Lights held forth by this Ignus fatuus of an Hiſtorian, let us confront his whole Teſtimony, and all the Uſe he makes of it, with the Words of Mr. Vernon, in his Letter to Lord Manchester of February 20: " I do [Cole, p. 323.] not doubt but you have our Parliament-News from many Hands. However, I muſt not omit ſending you the Vote that paſs'd this Day both in the Committee and in the Houſe, upon conſidering the Dutch Envoy's Memorial. You will ſee it has fully anſwer'd all his Majeſty's Deſires; and I muſt needs ſay, That I never ſaw ſo great a Spirit in the Houſe of Commons, and ſuch a Reſolution to preſerve Holland as well as England: I hope it will have that good Effect on your Side, as to produce a fair Diſpoſition to treat upon reaſonable Terms, that a War may be prevented; which I ſee we ſhall not decline, if we are forc'd into it by Neceſſity: But if France has any Inclination for Peace, we may ſtill hope for it."

O

A.D. 1700-1. An intercepted Letter of Lord Melfort's communicated to both Houses.

On the same Day that the King communicated the Dutch Memorial to the Commons, he also caus'd to be communicated to both Houses a Letter from the Earl of Melfort, address'd to his Brother the Earl of Perth, and dated February 18, N. S. which had been brought to England in the French Mail of the 19th: And an Incident which having been made such a Handle of, to practise on the Fears of the Public, by his Majesty, his Ministers, and his Parliament, certainly deserves to be set in a proper Light to Posterity: And yet B. Burnet has not so much as mention'd it; possibly, because if he had, it would have also oblig'd him to mention the Address of the House of Lords, which had been all this Time preparing; which had been communicated to the Commons for their Concurrence, but rejected by them; and which contain'd a Paragraph, scarce to be reconcil'd with that Prelates Account of the Proceedings of the Session.

We will begin with the said Address, which was as follows.

Lords Address thereon, &c.

"We the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, return our most humble Thanks and Acknowledgments to your Majesty, for your Concern express'd for the Protestant Religion in your gracious Speech, and your Care for its future Preservation, by recommending to our Consideration a farther Provision for the Succession to the Crown in the Protestant Line.

We are highly sensible of the Weight of those Things your Majesty is pleas'd farther to recommend to our Consideration; and therefore humbly desire you will be pleas'd to order all the Treaties that have been made between your Majesty and any other Prince or State, since the late War, to be laid before us, that we may be enabled to give our mature Advice, when we are inform'd of all those Matters necessary to direct our Judgments.

And we humbly desire of your sacred Majesty, That you will enter into Alliances with all those Princes and States who are willing to unite for the Preservation of the Balance of Europe: Assuring your Majesty, that we shall most readily concur in all such Methods which may effectually conduce to the Honour and Safety of England, the Preservation of the Protestant Religion, and the Peace of Europe. A.D. 1700-1.

And we humbly return our farther Thanks to your Majesty, for the Letter communicated to this House the 17th of February Instant; and having taken it into our immediate Consideration, we humbly desire of your Majesty to issue the necessary Orders for seizing the Horses and Arms of the Papists and other disaffected Persons, and for putting the Laws in execution for removing them from London; and that you will be pleas'd to give Directions for a Search to be made after Arms and other Provisions of War, which in that Letter are said to be in Readiness.

In the mean Time humbly addressing to your Majesty, That Order may be given, for the speedy fitting out of such a Fleet, as your Majesty in your great Wisdom may think necessary, in this present Conjuncture, for the Defence of your Majesty and the Kingdom."

To which his Majesty was pleas'd to answer.

"My Lords,

I thank you for this Address, and for the Concern you express in relation to our common Security both at Home and Abroad: I shall give the necessary Orders for those Things you desire of me, and take Care for setting out such a Fleet, as may be necessary for our common Defence in this Conjuncture."

Thus, it seems, the Letter had its weight with the Lords: And as for the Commons, they thought it incumbent on them to make a Provision for the Defence of the Kingdom, by authorising the Exchequer the very next Day to borrow 500,000 l. for the Service of the Fleet at 6 per Cent. and 50,000 l. for the Subsistance of the Guards and Garisons; soon after which, they order'd 30,000 Seamen for a Summer Guard; for which they are handsomely abus'd by B. Burnet, as having put the Nation to a needless and useless Expence.

And now it is Time to come to the Letter itself, which shall be inserted (u) entire, to evince, (u) As follows.

My dearest Brother,

Since I promis'd to put in writing what we had not Time to talk fully of, I am set down to it in the Morning, that my Letter may be ready for the Messenger, if any call. I told you all that I had heard at Versailles, and the favourable Audience I had of Madam Maintenon; for which I beg it of you to return my most humble Thanks to the Queen, and beg her to be so good, as to thank Madam Maintenon, and know of her, what can be done in that Matter: It will be a great Charity in the Queen. I told you, among other Things, the great Fleet the King intends to put out this Summer; the Orders being given, and the Money ready, the Stores full, and every one concern'd active in their Station. There is no doubt but this Fleet will be Master of the Sea for some Time, if not for all the Summer; because the Dutch dare not stir, till the English be ready; and they have long Debates, yet, before they can be in a Condition to act, if they have the Will: and it is a Question, if they will have it at all. The King never had so favourable a Conjuncture, if he can persuade this King, that his Affairs are really in the Circumstances they are in; but there is the Difficulty. The King and Queen have more Authority with the King, and with Madam de Maintenon, than any other in the World can have; but that is not all: There should be some one, acceptable to the Ministers, who should lay before them those Proofs their Majesties cannot enter into the Detail of, and explain the Reasons, make Plans and Memoirs, by their Majesties Approbation, to convince them of the Necessity, and shew the Easiness of restoring the King, the Glory it brings their Kingdom, and the Advantage to Religion: How this will be done, their Majesties are wise enough to consider; and, I think, it is not a Subject for me to enter upon; but their Friends, in general, who know not the Half of what I know in this Matter, think, that it will not be well done by a Protestant Minister, (Middleton) lazy in his Temper, an Enemy to France by his Inclination, tainted with Commonwealth Principles, and against the King's returning, by any other Power than that of the People of England, and upon Capitulation and Terms; who is suspected of giving Aid to the Commanders, if not worse: That Mr. Carrol is qualify'd, no body doubts, but, in Society with the other, those who must be instrumental, will not trust him as they ought; so that, so long as the other is within Distance of penetrating the Affairs, they will never think themselves secure: And yet the King has no such Game to play, as by these very Persons who are thus dissident; namely, the true Church of England Party, the Catholics, and the Earl of Aran; and I shall say something of every one of them.

The King cannot but be sensible, that the true Church of England Party, and their principal Head, now the Bishop of Norwich, has been silent for a long Time; and their Majesties may remember, what Weight the Court of France laid upon their joining the King, (I mean the Non-swearing Clergy) in case of a landing: Therefore, all Arts should be used, without Delay, to get them to enter into a Correspondence again;

A. D. 1700-1 evince, That we misrepresent no Part of it, in saying, That it contain'd no such Matter as ought to have alarm'd a great Kingdom, or that could have alarm'd a wise one: And that it contain'd some such, as, considering the Temper of the Times, ought not to have been made public. On the Superiority of the French Fleet, and the Favorableness of the Conjuncture, to make use of it in restoring King James, while the English and Dutch were in a Condition to put to Sea, the Writer does, indeed, insist in pretty strong Terms: But then he states the Difficulty of bringing King Lewis to make use of it, as what was scarce to be surmounted: And as to the Intelligence contain'd in this Article, Lord Manchester did, by every Post, furnish much better: The French had all the Coasts of Spain, as well as their own, to cover: And This could not be done against the Maritime-Powers, without suitable Preparations: Nor could any Thing more ridiculous be suppos'd, that than they should entertain any Design against England, when they had Spain to secure.

In short, the Whole seems to be little more than the the impotent Effort of a turbulent Man to obtain Credit, and thereby force himself into Business; intermix'd with A. D. 1701 frivolous Complaints, that a more discrete and moderate Man had the Preference in his Master's Favour; (which was one of the Articles that in point of Policy ought not to have been made public) And even as to the seven Regiments of Catholic Horse and Dragoons, which he raves about, it plainly appears, That some Years had past'd, since his Project concerning them had been exploded.

What is farther remarkable concerning it is This, That it was not publish'd altogether faithfully: For when Mr. Vernon first mentions it to Lord Manchester, he cites the following Expressions from it; to wit: "That this Opportunity must be improv'd, now the Court of France is dissatisfy'd with the Prince of Orange, for his Treacheries discover'd in their Hands." And some such Expressions were actually contain'd in the Post-script to it; whereas, in the printed Copy of the Letter, it is certain, there are no such Expressions to be found.

A Proof, that the Letter was not publish'd quite faithfully.

Now, the Reason which the Secretary assigns for making this Citation is, because his Majesty did not know what to make of the Passage, unless it referr'd to the Letters found again; and every Impediment ought to be remov'd, I say, without Exception. And though, sometimes, it is of hard Digestion for Sovereigns, who ought to be obey'd, without reserve, to yield to the Humours of Subjects, yet Prudence shall teach them, when they cannot, without injuring their Affairs, do what they would, to do what they can; and remember the Fable of the Dog, who lost the Substance, by catching at the Shadow. Assurances from the Nonjurors, the founded and most venerable Part of the English Church, would be of great Use at this Time, to persuade France to undertake this great Affair; for, besides their own Example, at a landing, and their preaching and writing to the People, that their Religion was in no Danger, it is most certain, they know better than any other can do, what the Church of England, in general, would do for the King's Service; and they, being to run all the Hazard, would be better believ'd at the French Court than any other, as I found by Experience.

---

As to the Catholics, and other Associates with them, unfortunately for the King, they were thought to have too much Inclination for me, and to have been reckon'd as useless to the King: And I must beg Leave to say, that Undertaking was the best Feather in his Wing; and was most justly thought so by him and the Court of France, even to that Degree that they pretended, if this and the other Article concerning the Clergy, could be made appear, they would concur with the King to invade England. They confisted of Seven Regiments of Horse and Dragoons; their Arms, Trumpets, Kettle-drums, Standards, &c. were all ready, and are yet in Surety: Their Men were all listed, and their Officers chosen, and they had twenty Horses to a Troop: which Troops lying at a Distance, in a Horse-country, twenty Horses would soon have mounted the rest: Those who could not divine the Greatness and Use of the Undertaking, blamed the Rashness of it; and even some Churchmen have not been disapprov'd, for endeavouring unfaithfully (because contrary to the King's written Orders) to break the Design: But I desire you now, for all this, to believe, that you have not such an Argument to use to the Court of France as this: And, if you can make it appear, as it might have been, some Years ago, I should have very good Hopes of this Summer's Work: nay, let the King have what other Hopes, even Promises, you please, from the Court of France, this is to be put into the Circumstances it was in: For, if there will ever be a landing in England, to purpose, it must be before they can be arm'd; and they cannot be arm'd, before the Parliament come to a Resolution concerning the War; and, considering the few Troops in England, suppose these Men to be no better than Militia, what a Diversion would it be? It is not necessary for me to say any more of this Article, till I know whether their Majesties have as good an Opinion of this Undertaking as I have: If so, I shall shew what I think is to be done in it; if otherwise, I save the Pains. As to the Earl of Arran, it would be of great Use to have an Understanding with him: He will have arms, where * —— can pay: His all is at stake, and he ought to be wary with whom he ventures to deal. I think it better for the King's Service, that the Court-party prevail'd, in the Manner they have done, in the Parliament of Scotland, than that the Country party should have got their Will: Opposition swells the Water to a Flood; and so long as the Country-party is not discourag'd, they gain more Ground in the Kingdom, than they lose in the Government: So that the Dissatisfaction to the Government will increase; and one may judge of the Nation in general, which is of another Temper than this pretended Parliament, or rather, Presbyterian Rabble, in representing the Nation: For, since even in it there is such a Struggle against the Government, what would there be in a free Parliament, which the Prince of Orange durst never hazard to call? The Nation then, at least a great Part of it, being dissatisfied to this Government, it is of great Consequence, that the Earl of Arran may know what to do, in case of an Invasion of England; or in case he and his Friends be oblig'd, for Self-preservation, to rise in their own Defence. The Army, who are, and ever were, well affected, are to be gain'd by Money; and a little goes a great way with them: The disbanded Troops would be engag'd, and the Officers are well inclin'd: The Places of Strength would be secur'd, and such as can be put in Defence, without Expences fortify'd. To do all this, at least such a Part of them as can be begun with, a small Sum will serve; and he ought to have Hopes of it, and of the Command.

These being the only Heads to be discours'd of, and much to be said of every Part, it is not to be thought, that the Letter can carry a final Conclusion; for it may be, upon Discourse, I might change my Mind, or be more confirm'd in it, and see further. This makes me insist again to you, upon two Things, as appearing to me absolutely necessary to put Things upon a right foot: The first is, the removing of all Impediments out of the way, and sending all Suspected Persons to Champagne or Burgundy, according to their Guilt: And the second is of the last Use, both to their Majesties and the Prince; which is, the establishing of such a Number, under no Qualifications, to talk of their Affairs in their Majesty's Presence; with whom we can freely converse, and propose what may be for their Majesties Service.

As for the First, it will be for the King's Reputation, both at the Courts of Rome, France, and with all his true Friends in England, for many Reasons: As for the Second, it is according to Scripture, In the Multitude of Counsellors there is Safety. Nothing is so dangerous, as to determine what one will do, and then hear Reasons against it, and imitate the deaf Adder, who heareth not to the Voice of the Charmer, let him charm never so sweetly. Reasons, against a Resolution taken, offend; and the more Force they have, they offend the more; whilst, before the Resolution be taken, Reason has its Effect, and the Determinations are not the Effect of Humour and Fashion, but of Prudence and Justice. If in any Thing I fail, I'll swear it is want of Understanding, and not of Will: And I beg, that their Majesties may be perswaded, that it is no Humour nor Vanity, but their Service I have in my View; who am,

My dear S. Senior,
Most humble servant.

* Middleton.

P. S. There are no Letters from England which I expected and am promis'd.

I forgot to tell you, That the Conjuncture ought to be improven, so long as the Court of France have the Opinion of the Prince of Orange's Treachery discover'd lately in their Hands.

Journ. of the Commons.

A. D. 1700-1. found on Mr. Jolly, the Contents of which he was not acquainted with: And the Embaſſador anſwers, "It was grounded on the Reports of Paris, which went ſo far, that they ſaid, There was a Deſign to poiſon the King of Spain."

Two Conferences between the Engliſh and French Miniſters concerning the ſame.

And, laſtly, in Cole's Papers, we have Two Conferences between the Miniſters of England and France upon this Incident, which alſo deſerve to be inſerted, for the Sake of manifeſting the whole of its Operation. The Former, as contain'd in a Letter from Mr. Vernon to Lord Manchester, and the Latter, in his Lordſhip's Reply.

Whitehall, Feb. 20, 1701, O. S.

"I ſend you, incloſ'd, the Earl of Melfort's Letter, printed by Order of the Houſe of Lords: I ſuppoſe, there will be no Queſtion made at St. Germains, whether the Letter be genuine or not; at leaſt, Monſieur de Tallard does not call that in Doubt, tho' he ſeems much offended at the Letter's being communicated to the Lords and Commons. He endeavour'd to ſpeak with me on Monday Night, but I was gone to Kenſington; and, upon his writing to me next Morning, that I would appoint him a Time when he might ſpeak with me, I went to him: He was full of Expoſtulation, of the Letters being carry'd to the two Houſes, by my Lord-Chamberlain and myſelf, as if it were done to create an Animoſity between the two Nations, and to give the Alarm, That the French had form'd a Deſign to invade England; whereas this appear'd to be only a chimerical Notion of Melfort, who (as he often repeated) was un fou & un extravagant; that he was baniſh'd from the Court of King James, and had nothing to do in the Court of France; that his waiting upon Madam de Maintenon, was only to get two of his Daughters put into the Nunnery of St. Cyr; that he had no Acceſs to the French Miniſters, but was ſpinning Cobwebs of his own; and there ought to have been no Occaſion taken from thence, to create Jealouſies and Miſunderſtandings: That the French had ſhewn their Diſpoſition to to live in Friendſhip with England; and he thought Care ought to be taken, on our Side, not to give any Grounds to believe, that we were picking a Quarrel with them; and This he thought neceſſary to tell me, as a Matter that deſerv'd Attention.

I told him, The Letter contain'd ſomething that might appear notional, and like a Project of his own: But other Parts of it laid down Facts, that it extremely concern'd us to provide againſt; ſuch as the fitting out a Fleet in France, that was like to be Maſter of the Sea this Summer: That we could make no Proviſion for our Safety, but in Parliament; and therefore it was fit they ſhould be acquainted with our Danger, and that the Proofs of it ſhould be laid before them: That, in France, they could diſpatch every Thing dans le cabinet: We had not ſo ready a Way in England, but what we did muſt be publicly, and dans le marché. Whoever had ſuppreſs'd ſuch an Advice here, might juſtly have expected an Accuſation of Treaſon againſt him. A. D. 1700-1.

He ſaid, He did not diſown, but they were fitting out Ships to Sea; but they did it upon the Preparations making in Holland, where they were at work, Night and Day, as well Sundays as other Days, to get out their Fleet; therefore, they could not do leſs in France: But they were not fitting ſo many Ships, as was repreſented; and that they had no Thoughts of being at Sea theſe three or four Months.

I told him, I ſhould be glad there might be no Occaſion for any Fleets coming out on either Side: I was ſure, all that we aim'd at was, to be on the Defenſive; and I ſhould be much better pleas'd, and think it more our Intereſt, to be diſarming our Ships, than arming them. As to the Character he gave my Lord Melfort, of fou & inſenſé, when we ſaw him treated as ſuch in France, we ſhould be willing to have the ſame Opinion of him; till then, we could not but remember what an Inſtrument he had been, in promoting the intended Aſſaſſination and Invaſion; and muſt be concern'd, that he is bringing himſelf again into play, upon the ſame Bottom: And, by his way of writing, at leaſt, one muſt ſuſpect, that he is admitted into Converſations with the French Miniſters. It ſeem'd very extraordinary, that he ſhould preſs the improving this Opportunity, now the Court of France had Reſentments, upon the Diſcovery of ſome Treachery they thought his Majeſty guilty of. He ſaid, This was a pure Fiction of Melfort's. I told him, I was glad to hear them ſay ſo; and his Majeſty was very well ſatisfy'd, that he had given no Occaſion for any ones having ſuch hard Thoughts of him. I aſk'd him, once or twice, whether he knew of any Diſcovery of this Kind? He ſaid, He never heard any Thing like it; and there was no ſuch Thing, in reality.

In concluſion, he ſaid, That People ought rather to appeaſe Jealouſies on both Sides, than inflame them. I told him, He could contribute a great deal towards it; and, I hop'd he would make uſe of his Power: What I could do, in any Caſe, would be inconſiderable; but no Endeavours of mine ſhould be wanting to remove Miſunderſtandings, and ſo ſecure the public Peace."

Paris, March 9, 1701.

"The Conference I had with Monſieur de Torcy, was much the ſame with what you had with the Count de Tallard; his Diſcourſe turning in the ſame Manner, that the expoſing the Letter, was only to create and excite Animoſities in the Nation: That it ſhew'd a Deſire of breaking with France. That he had ſent for Lord Melfort, who was with him this Morning, and did own, that he had wrote a Letter of that Date, and that it was loſt, which he believ'd gave Occaſion for the framing of this: That he had mention'd ſomething in it of Madam de Maintenon, whom he had ſeen about his private Affairs; but he denies almoſt all that is in the Letter. As for that of the

A. D. 1700-1. Bishop of Norwich, he could have no Grounds to say it, since he hardly knew him, and he was satisfy'd to the contrary. As for Lord Arran, he was convinc'd he was not in King James's Interest; that he was rather setting up for himself, as having some Pretence to the Crown of Scotland. In short, I found his Opinion was, that it was contriv'd only to frame a Design to incense the Nation, and to break with France, &c. He said, That I was sensible how little Credit Lord Melfort had at this Court, or at St. Germains: He read the Letter to me, as also a Paper cry'd about the Streets of London, of a new Plot or Conspiracy of France against England. The Answer I made him was, That by my last Letter, I had some Account of this Letter: That, by as much as I knew of it, I did not in the least doubt but they were Lord Melfort's Thoughts, and wrote by him; but at the same Time I was satisfy'd, that the French Court was far from taking such Measures: That, as to the communicating it to the Parliament, if he knew our Constitution, he would know, that it was impossible to do otherwise in this Conjuncture, when greater Preparations, by Sea and Land, were never known to be made than are actually making now in France; which was no Secret, nor did I believe, that there was any Desire that it should be so: That he must forgive me, if I thought Lord Melfort was not so despicable a Person, since I saw him often at Court, which, here especially, is no Sign of it, since Men of that Character were not permitted to approach so near the King: That, not having yet my Letters of the last Post from England, I could not tell what Effect it had caus'd; but that my Opinion was still, that we were far from desiring a War; neither could it be our Interest, unless we were oblig'd to it for our own Security, and consequently that of Holland. I also took Notice of the Expression of the Discovery of some Treachery, which the King was suppos'd to be guilty of, and which I did not understand, unless it meant the extravagant Reports that were at Paris, of Letters found, which my Servant, who was drowned, brought from Madrid: And I did not doubt but he knew the Substance of them very well, and was convinc'd of the contrary of the Reports. I told him also, That the Proceedings of the Viceroy of Navarre, in opening the Letters, and sending them to Madrid, could not be any ways justifiable, since he could easily see, that they were directed to a public Minister residing at the Court of France. He did own, he could not tell the Meaning of that Expression, since the King was far from having any such Thoughts: He seem'd to know nothing of the Letters, but he had heard of this Accident; but he condemn'd very much the opening of them. I said further, That, as for the Paper cry'd about the Streets, I did believe it was not done by Order; that they printed what they pleas'd in England, tho', if the Authors were discover'd, they were liable to be punish'd: Because it is not sent to me, I am of Opinion, it is such a Paper as we have often at London; but, I do assure you, it makes more Impression here than the Letter: Endeavours are us'd to make it to be believ'd, that it was forg'd only to serve a Turn, as they say has been the Custom at the Beginning of Parliaments: This must reflect on the Honour of his Majesty; and I did venture to say to Monsieur de Torcy, That, in case it could be suppos'd such a Letter was forg'd, I did not doubt but I might produce the Original, if there was any Occasion. I wonder he did not mention to me what had pass'd between you and Monsieur de Tallard: In short, I am told, they take it for granted, that we shall enter into a War; And, as I happen'd to come a little later to Versailles Yesterday than usual, the whole Court had it, that we had declar'd War; but, when they saw me, it soon put a Stop to that Report."

A. D. 1700-1.

To conclude on this Head, Melfort at last own'd the Letter, and was disgrac'd for his Pains; having been first refus'd Admission at St. Germains, and afterwards sent by a Lettre de Cachet to Angers: Which was doing all that could be done, to extinguish our Apprehensions on his Account.

Melfort disgrac'd and sent to Angers.

Whether the Allegations on the French Side, That the Letter was made public by our Court, purposely to inflame the Nation, were ill or well founded, must be gather'd from the whole of the Evidence: That our Ministers talk'd only the Language of Peace, we have Proofs in abundance in Vernon's and Manchester's Letters; and that Language, whether real or feign'd, was but suitably countenanc'd by the defensive Measures of the House of Commons: But that there was nevertheless a Cabinet-Management, thro' some Channel or other, to precipitate a War, is obvious to Suspicion, tho', perhaps, it cannot be circumstantially prov'd: For all we can as yet discover by the closest Inspection, is, That the King put his Confidence at this Crisis, in Lord Albemarle only: That Lord Jersey acted as Minister under Albemarle; that Vernon and Hedges rank'd under Jersey; and that, tho' Lord Rochester is, invidiously but artfully, put at the Head of the new Ministry by the Whig-Writers, the Lords Marlborough and Godolphin had a much larger Share in the Management than he.

A secret Management somewhere to precipitate a War.

The Instructions given to Mr. Stanhope at the Hague, in consequence of the Commons Address, were as follows.

The Instructions given to Mr. Stanhope.

"WILLIAM R.

Whereas our loyal and dutiful Subjects, the Commons in Parliament assembled, have, by their humble Addresses, pray'd that we would be pleas'd to enter into such Negotiations, in concert with the States-General of the United Provinces, and other Potentates, as may most effectually conduce to the mutual Safety of these Kingdoms, and the States-General, and the Preservation of the Peace of Europe; and that we have promis'd them immediately to order our Minister abroad to enter into such Negotiations accordingly: You are therefore to enter forthwith into such

A. D. 1700-1. such Negotiations with the Miniſters of France and Spain, and other Potentates, at the Hague, in concert with the Miniſters of the States-General, in order to obtain the Conditions following, and in all other Matters which the ſaid States ſhall think neceſſary for their farther Security.

1. That the Moſt Chriſtian King ſhall order all his Troops that now are, or ſhall be, in Gariſon in any of the Spaniſh Towns in the Netherlands, actually to retire from thence, ſo as the ſame may be entirely evacuated of French Troops, within ſuch Time as ſhall be agreed upon in the Treaty; and that he ſhall engage not to ſend any Forces into any of thoſe Towns or Countries.

2. That no Troops, but ſuch as conſiſt of National-born Subjects of Spain, or Germans, continue in the Spaniſh Netherlands; except ſuch Troops as are to be plac'd, and remain in the cautionary Towns, mention'd in the next Article.

3. That for the better Security of us, and the States-General, and quieting the Minds of our People, there ſhall be deliver'd to us, and to the ſaid States, cautionary Towns, within ſuch Time as ſhall be agreed by the Treaty, to be kept by our Gariſons reſpectively, and none other, viz. to us, the Towns of Nieuport and Oſtend; and to the States-General, the Towns of Luxemburg, Namur, and Mons, in the Condition they now are, to be kept by our Gariſons, and thoſe of the ſaid States, reſpectively, during ſuch Times as ſhall be agreed upon; with a Proviſo, that the ſame be done without Prejudice to the Rights and Revenues of the Crown of Spain.

4. That no Towns or Countries belonging to the Spaniſh Netherlands, nor any Ports whatſoever belonging to the Crown of Spain, ſhall be exchang'd with France, or any ways deliver'd up, or put under the French Government.

5. That our Subjects ſhall enjoy the ſame Liberties and Privileges, in all Parts of the Spaniſh Dominions, as well by Sea as on the Land, as they did at the Time of the Death of the late King of Spain, and in as ample a Manner, as the French or any other Nation does, or ſhall do hereafter.

6. That the Emperor be invited to join in this Treaty; and that any other Princes or States, who think fit to unite for the Preſervation of the PEACE of Europe, may be admitted into the ſame.

7. That the States be deſir'd to begin the Negotiations aforeſaid, if the French Ambaſſadors do not; and you are to move them thereto.

8. You are to give a free Communication of theſe your Inſtructions, and ſuch others as you ſhall receive from us, and of all Proceedings on this Subject, to the Penſioner, and deſire a reciprocal Communication from him, as a Matter for our Service.

9. You ſhall obſerve ſuch further Inſtructions and Directions on this Subject, as you ſhall from Time to Time receive from us, or one of our principal Secretaries of State, with whom you ſhall conſtantly correſpond, and tranſmit to him an Account of all Matters which ſhall happen in the Courſe of your Negotiation, and of all Occurrences of Moment that ſhall come to your Knowledge. W. R." A. D. 1700-1.

As the Article which related to the Emperor was of a very ambiguous Kind, ſo it ought to be obſerv'd, that theſe Inſtructions were dated February 28: And that in a few Days afterwards, Mr. Stepney was ſent Envoy Extraordinary to the Emperor, at a Weeks Warning, with Orders to conſer with the Penſioner, and the Imperial Miniſter at the Hague, de Goes, by the way: And we ſhall, in the Sequel, come to a Letter of his to Lord Manchester, which ſhews plainly enough, That his Errand was rather to concert the Plan of a new War, than to promote an Accommodation: Which ought to be remember'd, not ſo much for the Credit of the new Miniſters, as to confute the Charge brought againſt them.

Proceedings of the Commons to retrieve the Credit of Exchequer-Bills.

And here it may not be unfit, to produce ſome farther Proofs, That the Houſe of Commons was not for ſome Weeks wholly employ'd in Party Matters; as the pretended Hiſtorian of his own Times untruly aſſerts. Upon the Change which had been made in the Miniſtry, the Creatures and Dependants of Thoſe ouſted, affected to be in pain for the Owners of Exchequer-Bills, and ſuch other Creditors of the Public, as had either no Security for their Loans, or ſuch Securities as were deficient; as if the public Faith had been ſafe only in their Keeping; and the Removal of Perſons, had remov'd the very Landmarks of all Property veſted in the Funds: And ſuch an Effect had their Artifices, that Exchequer-Bills fell near 20 per Cent. under par, to the great Prejudice of the Revenue, and Embarraſment of Thoſe who had the Management of it: To ſay nothing of the Uſe that was made of it to blaſt the Government abroad, where it was reported and believ'd, That there was a Stop of Credit in the City. [Cole. p. 514.]

But tho' the creating this Grievance was a Party-Meaſure, the redreſſing it was ſurely a national Service: And yet this Service was perform'd, in a good Degree, ſo early in the Seſſion as the 22d of February, by an unanimous Vote, "That Proviſion ſhould be made from Time to Time, for making good the Principal and Intereſt due on all parliamentary Funds, granted ſince his Majeſty's happy Succeſſion to the Throne." And this was follow'd by a Bill for renewing Exchequer-Bills, which by frequent Aſſignments and Endorſements had been fill'd up, and reducing the Intereſt of 5*d.* a Day for 100*l.* to 4*d.* which having paſs'd thro' the Forms of both Houſes, receiv'd the Royal Aſſent March 13, being the only Act of the Day.

That, however, the Miniſters might neither have the Reputation nor the Uſe of theſe ſalutary Proceedings, the public Creditors were now taught to be diſſatisfy'd with a Proviſion of ſo indefinite a Nature, and to clamour for a Diſcharge of all Arrearages on the Debts unprovided for, which were ſaid to amount to Three Millions, or there-

A. D. 1700-1. thereabouts, at once: A Sum which, in those Times, was held to be impossible to be rais'd, together with what was absolutely necessary for the current Charge, within the Year; or if rais'd, must either have exhausted the People on one Hand, or excited such Discontent on the other, as might have prov'd dangerous to the Government.

Lenders on the Leather Duty receiving 8 per Cent. for their Money, clamour for Part of their Principal.

Of these Clamours, there is one extraordinary Instance which deserves to be remember'd: For among the Resolutions of the general Committee, there being one for raising the Sum of 35,310*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* for a Years Interest of the Debt owing on the Leather-Duties, the principal Proprietors importun'd the House, upon the Report, for Payment of Part of their Principal, tho' they had 8 per Cent. for their Money.

But every new Regulation that was made in our Money-Matters, (and the Session produc'd several; more especially for restraining the Exorbitances which the Use of Exchequer-Bills had given Rise to) is said to have drawn down upon the Managers some new Abuse: And this injurious Treament, gave Rise to the following Reprizal, which is to be found in a Folio Tract of these Times, call'd, A Justification of the Proceedings of the House of Commons.

A Tory Remark on the Conduct of the former Ministers in relation to Exchequer-Bills.

"When Exchequer-Bills were first issu'd out on a Deficient Fund, and afterwards without any Fund at all, it was propos'd, That, instead of issuing out Bills on high Interest without a Fund, Bills with little or no Interest might be issu'd on a secure Fund, which would sink a certain Number of them every Year, and, in a reasonable Time, discharge the whole Debt, without farther Difficulties: By this Means, the whole Debt of Exchequer-Bills had been discharg'd by this Time, and above a Million of Money, paid for Circulation thereof, sav'd to the People; whereas now, the Debt still remains a heavy Clog upon the Nation.

But this Proposal was not accepted: 1st, Because this substantial Project had put an End to all other Projects for raising Money; and, consequently, to the Merit of some Persons that depended thereupon. 2dly, There would then have been no Room to create Dependancies, and to establish Offices for useful Parliament-Men, as Trustees for the circulating Exchequer-Bills, and at good Salaries from the King. 3dly, Some considerable Men would have lost an Opportunity of subscribing large Sums in other Persons Names, for circulating Exchequer-Bills, without paying in one Penny of Money to the Exchequer, and thereby have lost a Rent Charge of several thousand Pounds a Year, (as Interest Money without a Principal) to their own private Use."

By the Word Trustees, it must be observ'd, was meant the Trustees for the Contractors on one Hand, and for the Government on the other: For when this Exchequer-Expedient was brought into play, the Credit of the Public was so feeble, that it requir'd the Aid of private Security to support it: And to this End, the Exchequer was empower'd to contract with Persons of known Ability, at so much per Cent. to advance Money for exchanging Exchequer-Bills, or rather to indorse these Bills, and thereby give them a readier Circulation: There had been seven Contracts of this Kind: The Trustees were in Number Eleven: Five for the King, and Six for the Contracters. The last of These were Francis Eyles, Esq; Sir Theodore Janssen, Gilbert Heathcote, Esq; George Doddington, Esq; Sir James Bateman, and (x) Sir Henry Furnese: The Consideration for this Service was 3 per Cent: When the Credit of these Bills were at this Crisis fallen thus low, the Contractors were call'd upon by the Lords of the Treasury, to pay in their first Payment, of one Fifth of what they had subscrib'd: And a Clause was inserted in the Act above-specify'd, to dissolve the said Contract.

A. D. 1700-1.

Whether this was occasion'd by any Difficulty on the Side of the Contractors to comply with this Call, is not easy to determine: These were all Dependents on the old Ministry: The Difficulties brought on the New in their Money-Matters, was the Effect of Practice: The like Practice has been often since brought into play for Party-Purposes: And Experience has shewn, That whoever can obtain the Direction of the Money-Market, in doubtful Times may direct the Administration.

Impartiality, indeed, does oblige us to acknowledge, That the old East-India Company were accus'd of being as deep in engrossing Money and Bank-Notes at this Time, as any Persons whatsoever; and of coming with a Demand of 50,000*l.* on the Exchequer for their Bills at once: But if the Charge was well laid, most certainly their Purpose only was, to put themselves into a Condition to bid against their Rivals: And we shall find their Conduct was suitable to it. [Villany of Stock-Jobbers detected, 410; p. 8.]

Again: Our Historian-Bishop, having, in his confus'd, unmethodical Way, pass'd thro' more than half the Session, procedes to say, "While all these Things were in a Ferment all Europe over, the declaring a Protestant-Successor after the Princess and such Issue as she might have, seem'd to be forgot by our Parliament, tho' the King had begun his Speech with it." He also says, "That tho' the new Ministers spoke of it with much Zeal, the Manner in which it was manag'd did not carry in it great Marks of Sincerity: It was often put off from one Day to another, and it gave Place to the most trifling Matters: At last, when a Day was solemnly set for it, and all People expected, that it should pass without any Difficulty, Harley mov'd, that some Things previous to That might first be consider'd. He observ'd, That the Haste the Nation was in when the present Government was settled, had made us go too fast, and overlook many Securities, B. Burnet's Account of the Succession Bill.

(x) Sir H. Furnese and Mr. Heathcote having been return'd Members for this Parliament, were expell'd; under the Pretence, of being disabled to sit, by a Clause in the Act of the 5th and 6th of K. William and Q. Mary, for granting to their Majesties certain Duties upon Salt, &c. disqualifying certain Persons therein describ'd, from being Members. A strange Instance of Party-Over-Righteousness!

A.D. 1700-1 curities, which might have prevented much Miſchief; and therefore he hop'd they would not now fall into the ſame Error. Nothing preſs'd them at preſent; ſo he mov'd, they would ſettle ſome Conditions of Government as Preliminaries, before they ſhould procede to the Nomination of the Perſon, that ſo we might fix every Thing that was wanting to make our Security complete. This was popular, and took with Money: And, indeed, it had ſo fair an Appearance, that none would oppoſe it." He then procedes to blame the Uſe that was made of a Method which he admits to be unexceptionable; talks of SOME WEEKS being ſpent upon theſe Preliminaries; ſays, the King was alarm'd at them, becauſe almoſt every Particular that was propos'd, imply'd a Reflection on him and his Adminiſtration: And then makes uſe of theſe very Words: "When ſome Time had been ſpent in theſe Preliminaries, it came to the Nomination of the Perſon: Sir John Bolles, who was then diſorder'd in his Senſes, and ſoon after quite loſt them, was ſet on by the Party to be the firſt that ſhould name the Electoreſs-Dowager of Brunſwick, which ſeem'd done to make it leſs ſerious when mov'd by ſuch a Perſon. He was, by the Forms of the Houſe, put into the Chair of the Committee." And, laſtly, he adds, That the Bill was ſtill put off for many Weeks: That the Call for it was coldly receiv'd: That it was very ill attended, &c. All which defamatory Matter is plainly taken from an abuſive Tract publiſh'd by the Whigs, and, perhaps, written by himſelf, towards the latter End of this Year, call'd, A plain Proof, That all the Tories are Jacobites.

Such is the Biſhop's Repreſentation: And now for the Fact.

The Matter of Fact. On the 1ſt of March, being preciſely the fifteenth Day after the King's Speech had been reported to the Houſe, the Clauſe in relation to the Succeſſion, was taken into Conſideration by a Committe of the whole Houſe, who came to certain Reſolutions, which were reported on the 3d, and with Two Amendments agreed to.

Theſe Reſolutions were as follow.

Reſolv'd, That for the preſerving the Peace and Happineſs of this Kingdom, and the Security of the Proteſtant Religion by Law eſtabliſh'd, it is abſolutely neceſſary a farther Declaration be made of the Limitation and Succeſſion of the Crown, in the Proteſtant Line, after his Majeſty, and the Princeſs, and the Heirs of their Bodies reſpectively.

Reſolv'd, That farther Proviſion be firſt made for the Security of the Rights and Liberties of the People.

Thus it appears, That the Two Parts of the Bill, to make a farther Limitation of the Crown, and a farther Proviſion for the Security of the People were coeval: And when Faction does act in the Manner that Patriotiſm would act, as in taking the popular Part of the Bill into Conſideration firſt, the Managers of theſe Times certainly did, Malice itſelf ought to be ſilent for its own Sake: For whoever complains in the wrong Place, may not be heard in the right. A.D. 1700-1

It likewiſe appears, That, on the 12th following, not only all theſe previous Points were ſo far ſettled that a Bill was order'd in upon them, but alſo, That the Ducheſs-Dowager of Hanover had been nominated and admitted, as the Perſon in whoſe Favor this mighty Donation was to be made: In Proof of which, it will be proper to inſert the Votes of that Day, which were as follow.

Reſolv'd, That all Things relating to the well governing of this Kingdom, which are properly cogniſable in the Privy-Council, ſhall be tranſacted there; and all Reſolutions taken thereupon, ſhall be ſign'd by the Privy-Council. Plan of the ſaid Bill.

That no Perſon whatſoever, that is not a Native of England, Scotland, or Ireland, or the Dominions thereunto belonging, or who is not born of Engliſh Parents beyond Seas, (altho' ſuch Perſon be Naturaliſ'd, or made Denizen) ſhall be capable to be of the Privy-Council, or a Member of either Houſe of Parliament; or to enjoy any Office of Place or Truſt, either Civil or Military.

That no Perſon whatſoever, that is not a Native of England, Scotland, or Ireland, or of the Dominions thereunto belonging; or who is not born of Engliſh Parents beyond the Seas, (altho' ſuch Perſon be Naturaliſ'd, or made Denizen) ſhall be capable of any Grant of Lands, Tenements, or Hereditaments, from the Crown, to himſelf, or any Other in Truſt for him.

That upon the farther Limitation of the Crown, in caſe the ſame ſhall hereafter come to any Perſon, not being a Native of this Kingdom of England, this Nation be not oblig'd to engage in any War, for the Defence of any Dominions or Territories not belonging to the Crown of England, without the Conſent of Parliament.

That whoſoever ſhall hereafter come to the Poſſeſſion of this Crown, ſhall join in Communion with the Church of England as by Law eſtabliſh'd.

That no Pardon be pleadable to any Impeachment in Parliament.

That no Perſon who ſhall hereafter come to the Poſſeſſion of this Crown, ſhall go out of the Dominions of England, Scotland, or Ireland, without Conſent of Parliament.

That no Perſon who has an Office under the King, or receives a Penſion from the Crown, ſhall be capable of ſerving as a Member of the Houſe of Commons.

That farther Proviſion be made, for the confirming of all Laws and Statutes, for the ſecuring our Religion, and the Rights and Liberties of the People.

That the Judges Commiſſions be made Quam diu ſe bene geſſerint, and their Salaries aſcertain'd and eſtabliſh'd: But upon the Addreſs of either Houſe of Parliament, it may be lawful to remove them.

That the Princeſs Sophia, Ducheſs-Dowager of Hanover, be declar'd the next in Succeſſion to the Crown of England, in the Proteſtant

A. D. 1700-1. teſtant Line, after his Majeſty, and the Princeſs, and the Heirs of their Bodies reſpectively: And that the farther Limitation of the Crown, be to the ſaid Princeſs Sophia, and the Heirs of her Body, being Proteſtants.

Again: Mr. Conyers held the Chair of the Committee regularly till the Bill was order'd to be brought in, which was the very Day theſe Reſolutions were adopted by the Houſe: The Perſons appointed to bring it in, were Mr. Conyers, Mr. Gwyn, Sir Thomas Littleton, Sir John Bolles, Mr. Attorney-General Trevor, Mr. Harcourt, Mr. Lowndes, and Sir Rowland Gwin. Moſt of theſe Gentlemen were eminent for their Experience in Buſineſs: And even Sir John Bolles himſelf had been appointed of ſeveral Committees, during the Courſe of the Seſſion: Whence it is ſufficiently manifeſt, that the Lunacy ſince imputed to him, was either not ſuſpected then, or had not broke out in any ſuch Inſtances, as amounted to a Diſqualification.

But if the Bill was diſhonor'd by ſuch a Chairman, and by ſo poor an Attendance, ſurely there was no Occaſion to run the Riſque of weakening its Authority to future Times, by recording ſuch Circumſtances: And if it was of ſuch ineſtimable Value, as we ought in point of Duty to eſteem it, ſurely the Merit of paſſing it, ought to atone for all Defects in the Manner of it. That the Court-Whigs had either no Share, or very little, in this Merit, is pretty manifeſt: For had They, who number'd 129 on the firſt Day of the Seſſion for Sir Richard Onſlow, but even countenanc'd it with their Preſence, they would either have been the Majority in the Committee, or would have oblig'd their Antagoniſts to have attended it better.

Cavils refuted. Then as to the Cenſures paſs'd on the Limitations, how well they become the Lips of Thoſe who utter them, let Thoſe decide, who recollect the Language made uſe of when King Charles the IId. was reſtor'd without any; and when the Excluſion of the Duke of York, by Act of Parliament, was ſo peremptorily and violently drove on, even to the Hazard of the public Peace.

Beſides; if the ſaid Limitations did really imply any Reflection on the King and his Adminiſtration, it follows, That Experience had already ſhewn the Neceſſity of them: And if they ſo much diminiſh'd the Value of the Gift, as that it was ſcarce worth acceptance, the Parliament, in caſe of Refuſal, could then but have done what they have done ſince, ſo much to their own Honour, we muſt preſume, and to the Advantage of theſe Kingdoms: That is to ſay, have taken the Act into better Conſideration; which, according to a Phraſe made uſe of by our Hiſtorian-Biſhop, which will be cited in its Place, was the Merit which the Well-wiſhers of the Act reſerv'd to themſelves.

And yet, to be candid, we ſhall be forc'd to acknowledge, notwithſtanding all the plauſible Things which either have been or which can be ſaid in Defence of the Limitations, That what was propos'd to be obtain'd by ſeveral of them, might have been obtain'd by a much ſhorter way, if the Court-Views at this Time could have been made to co-incide with the true Intereſt of the Country. A. D. 1700-1.

It cannot be unknown to any body converſant with the Occurrences of theſe Times, That, at or about the Commencement of the Seſſion, Mr. Toland ſet forth a Treatiſe in the Nature of, A Recital of what paſs'd in a Conference between Two Friends, ſuppoſ'd to be Whig and Tory, on the Succeſſion, under the Title of, Limitations for the next foreign Succeſſor, or new Saxon Race.

Suggeſtion in a Pamphlet of Toland's.

In the ſecond Page of this Treatiſe, he contends for the Reaſonableneſs of Limitations, by urging, That if we made Terms with the Prince and Princeſs of Orange, who had both Merit and an antecedent Title to the Crown, we might very well demand a farther Security for our Religion, Liberty, and Property, from thoſe who had no other Clame but what aroſe from our own good Will.

In proceding, he ſuppoſes, That, being to elect a Succeſſor, the Nation might be allow'd the ſame Liberty which the Spaniards took in beſtowing their Crown, to chuſe out of the Houſe of Hanover, or that of Brandenburg, which of the Sons they pleas'd: And then recommends it to be well weigh'd, Whether we ought to make any of thoſe Princes Kings of England, without obliging them at the ſame Time to renounce their foreign Dominions: "For, ſays He, if our Crown ſhould fall upon either of thoſe Families, They will fall under mighty Temptations, to enlarge their Dominions beyond Sea, in order to make the Communication betwixt their old and new Dominions more ſpeedy and eaſy. This the Family of Hanover may attempt by falling down upon the Elbe and the Weſer, and ſwallowing up Hamburgh, Bremen, Verden, &c. and the Houſe of Brandenburg might do the like, by falling down the ſame Rivers and the Rhine. All theſe Things, how remote and chimerical ſoever they may ſeem at preſent, ought to be conſider'd, &c.

After this, coming to the Terms and Limitations themſelves, he ſuggeſts, They ought to be ſuch as were at firſt put into the Clame of Right, but afterwards, by Neglect or Treachery omitted: And then ſpecifies Fifteen Articles, which would, indeed, have render'd both the King and his Throne of a Piece. And the Tory, in the Conference, having taken Occaſion to aſk, What Prince would accept the Crown on ſuch Terms? The Whig replies, "The Kingdom of England may reaſonably give the ſame Anſwer that rich Fortunes give their ſtingy Sweethearts in conſideration of their Fortune, They may let them alone." Adding, "If the Prince upon whom we devolve our Crown, does not think it worth his while to grant us ſuch Security, That none of its Jewels (I mean the Privileges of the People) ſhall be embezzled, I am

of

A.D. 1700-1. of the Opinion, That it will not be worth our while to court such a Governor."

And, lastly, he takes a great deal of Pains to prove, That we are not to come to a final Conclusion of this Affair, either as to the Conditions or the Person, without the Concurrence of the Scots; for fear they should make a different Choice, and thereby throw both Kingdoms into Confusion.

More Cavils refuted.

Such was the general Drift of this Piece, which deserves at least to be set in Opposition to the Sophistries of B. Burnet. And now all that remanes to be added on this Topic, in reference to him, regards the Complaints he makes, of the Length of Time wasted in carrying the Bill thorough the Forms of the House, which being more Matter of Cavil than any thing else, scarcely deserves notice: For when the Heads of the Bill were settled, the Affair was understood to be in a Manner completed; as appears from these Words of Mr. Vernon to Lord Manchester, March 30: "We have made some farther Progress To-day about the Succession, and I hope we may come to a Conclusion To-morrow." Meaning a Conclusion of the Plan, which was accordingly concluded on the 12th, as we have seen. And, Secondly, Mr. Cresset writing to same Lord from Zell, April 8, says, "The great Restrictions tagg'd to the Limitation of the Crown in the House of Hanover, diminishes the Value of it. However, I am glad the Nation has done ITSELF Right in the first Place, and likewise Justice to this great Family..... If your Excellency thinks fit to write to her Electoral Highness on this Occasion, I will take care to present it, and to accompany it with such Expressions as your Excellency shall direct." Whence we must infer, That even the Courts most interested in the Event, were no longer in Pain for it, after the said Heads were agreed upon.

The Process of the Bill.

But we will, to be as candid as possible, give the Stages of the Bill: On the last Day of March it was presented to the House by Mr. Conyers: On the 7th of April it was committed to a Committee of the whole House: On the 13th, Sir John Bolles was plac'd in the Chair, by which Time the Two Factions were, as we shall see, in the Midst of their Broil: On the 6th of May, the Chairman of the said Committee made his Report, That the Committee had gone thro' the Bill, and made several Amendments: And These, by order, were to have been reported on the 8th: But on that Day the famous Kentish Petition was presented, and the bare Expectation of it had already occasion'd such a Ruffle in the House, as will be shewn in its Place, that one would have thought the Party who sprung this Mine, had done it purposely to blow up the Bill: Nor was this all: For on the same Day, another Vein of public Business was open'd, of such a Nature, as seem'd to warrant a Suspicion, That the Delivery of the said Petition, just at that Crisis, was the Result of a Pre-concert: On the 10th, however, the said Report was receiv'd; on which Occasion, it is remarkable, that the Minority struggled hard, to reject the Clause concerning the Judges; and also that Other which provided, That no Officers should be Members of Parliament, after the new Settlement took Place: But in vain: The Bill was then order'd to be engross'd; and on the 14th, by a Nemine-Contradicente Vote, pass'd and sent up to the Lords. A.D. 1700-1.

Upon the whole, If the Bill had been posted thro' the House, such an indecent Expedition would have furnish'd juster Cause of Complaint, than the most tedious Revisions: An Affair of greater Importance never came before Parliament: And if the Delays complain'd of, were really affected, such was the Ferment of the Times, that it is reasonable to think, one Party was, to the full, as much answerable for them as the other.

Proceedings of the Lords on the said Bill.

In the House of Lords, it seems, more Expedition was us'd in passing it: And yet B. Burnet himself, tho' led by his Prejudices to doubt the Sincerity of the Tories in a Measure which they actually accomplish'd, and to suggest, That these Limitations were design'd to raise Disputes between the Two Houses, had like to have gratify'd them with that very Opportunity which he would have us believe They waited for: For Coke affirms, "That out of his Zeal for the Protestant Succession, He, the (y) Bishop, was standing up to move for Amendments, when a great many of the young Lords, by a very signal Providence, cry'd out, No Amendments! No Amendments." [Detection, Vol. III. p. 98.]

This Story, and another to the following Effect, That when the Bill was return'd to the Commons, without Amendments, several Members express'd their Dissatisfaction, by saying aloud to the Messenger, The Devil take you and your Bill! Coke tells on the Credit of Lord Sommers, who, according to him, had told it to many: So that the Bishop himself is within the Vortex of his own Invective; which shall be made yet farther appear by his own Words, viz. "Many of the Lords absented themselves on design: Some little Opposition was made by the Marquis of Normanby: And Four Lords, the Earls of Huntington and Plymouth, and the Lords Guilford and Jeffreys, protested against it. Those who wish'd well to the Act, were glad to have it pass'd any way, and so would not examine the Limitations that were in it: They thought it of great Importance to carry the Act, and that at another Time those Limitations might be better consider'd."

Lastly: If merely the non-expediting the Bill is Matter of Blame, the King himself is obnoxious to his Share of it. For either at the End of May, or on the 2d of June, the Lords, by Address, inform'd his Majesty, That

(y) He was Chairman of the Committee to whom the Bill was refer'd: And it is admitted in the Party-paper, call'd, A plain Proof, that all the Tories are Jacobites, That several Amendments were design'd; which it is there pretended were drop't, for fear the Bill should be lost.

A. D. 1700-1. [Cole, p. 590.] That it was ready for the Royal Aſſent: And it was expected, that on the Wedneſday following, he would have come to the Houſe to paſs it into a Law; inſtead of which, he caus'd their Lordſhips to be inform'd, That He would come to paſs it as ſoon as conveniently he could; and he did not paſs it till the 12th following.

The Bill carry'd by a Tory Miniſtry and a Tory Parliament.

Upon the whole, ſuch is the Matter of Fact, That, under a Tory-Adminiſtration, and by a Tory-Houſe of Commons, this great Point was carry'd: And whether Either or Both were under a French or Jacobite Influence, as our Hiſtorian Biſhop, together with all the Party-ſcandal-Mongers of the Times, have repeatedly maintain'd, let the Impartial judge from all that has already been ſaid, and from the Paſſages that follow out of Lord Manchеſter's Letters to Mr. Vernon; to wit, of March 2: "What his Majeſty mentions (in his Speech) in relation to our own Succeſſion, will, if done, prevent in ſome Meaſure any ill Deſigns againſt his Perſon, or That of the Princeſs: But, at the ſame Time, were they not otherwiſe engag'd, it would produce no good Underſtanding, ſince it takes away the Pretenſions of Savoy; and, conſequently, That of this Family here (of France muſt be underſtood) I do believe they will take no Notice of it to me: But, I aſſure you, That on the Death of the Duke of Glouceſter, They were very uneaſy till they were ſatisfy'd, that the Houſe of Hanover was not in the Act of Settlement." And of April 1: "Neither can we expect but that, whatever Terms they grant now, they will break with us again, on Account of our Succeſſion, which, as I am told privately, ſtrikes to the very Heart."

Tho' diſpleaſing to the Court of France.

A Propoſal of Six Lords to the Miniſtry of Savoy.

Lamberty alſo mentions another Circumſtance, which, if true, ſerves to ſhew, That what Averſion ſoever was diſcover'd to the Settlement of the Throne in the Hanover-Line, it did not proceed ſolely from that Attachment to the excluded Family which is call'd Jacobitiſm: For he aſſerts, That Six Lords made an Offer to the Court of Savoy, to throw out the Hanover-Bill, and tranſfer the Succeſſion to one of his Sons, provided he would ſend him to be educated in England, and in the Religion of the Engliſh Church; which his Royal Highneſs thought fit to refuſe; for what Reaſon, is not ſpecify'd.

But if theſe Six Lords were not of the Miniſtry, it is plain, They had no Proſpect of ſucceeding in what They undertook; and it is not conceiveable, That any ſuch Offer would have been made, by thoſe that were: In ſhort, all the Roman-Catholic Princes of the Blood were excluded by the very Words of the King's Speech, as well as the very firſt Act of Settlement: And that very Excluſion was the greateſt [illegible] of the Bill.

A. D. [illegible]

That the Crown of England, at ever ſo great a Diſtance, was an Object which the Court of Savoy could not overlook, is manifeſt even from the Proteſt which their Envoy deliver'd, by the ſpecial Order of his Maſter to the Lord-Keeper, as Speaker of the Houſe of Lords, and alſo to the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons. But they knew the Door was ſhut againſt them; and perhaps ſo much the more cloſely, because of the Duke's Defection from the Grand Alliance; which had happened ſo lately, That it could not be ſuppos'd, his Majeſty, whoſe Memory was as tenacious on ſuch Occaſions as any Princes whatſoever, had already forgotten it.

The ſaid Proteſt, as preſerv'd by Lamberty, was to this Effect: To wit. [Vol. I. p. 503.]

Proteſt of the Duke of Savoy.

"Anne of Orleans, Ducheſs of Savoy, &c. Princeſs of the Blood of England by the Princeſs Henrietta her Mother, Princeſs Royal of Great Britain, puts ſo high a Value on that Prerogative, that ſhe gladly embraces the Occaſion which offers, to diſplay it before the Eyes of all the People of England, as a Teſtimony of the Pride ſhe takes in deriving a Right from thence to that auguſt Throne. (x) Being inform'd, therefore, That the Parliament now ſitting, have the Order of Succeſſion under Conſideration, ſhe repreſents to the King, and to the ſaid Parliament, That being the only Daughter of the late Princeſs Henrietta, ſhe is the neareſt Heir, after the King and the Princeſs of Denmark, according to the Laws and Cuſtoms of England, which have always preferr'd the neareſt Branch to the more remote. Her Right being thus manifeſt to the whole World, and inconteſtable, needs not be enforc'd by any other Allegations: But then ſhe cannot help proteſting againſt every Deliberation and Deciſion which ſhall be contrary thereto, in the beſt and moſt efficacious Manner in her Power, or practis'd in the like Caſes: In which ſhe is directed by Cuſtom rather than Neceſſity; becauſe ſhe has ſo high an Idea of the Wiſdom and the Juſtice of the King and Parliament, that ſhe has nothing to apprehend on their Part, which can be injurious either to her or her Children."

Mr. Vernon's ſenſible Behaviour upon it.

Concerning the Delivery of this Proteſt, Mr. Vernon alſo thus writes to Lord Manchеſter, March 27: "The Envoy of Savoy was with me on Monday laſt, to tell me the Orders he had receiv'd from his Maſter, to make a Proteſtation in the Name of the Ducheſs of Savoy for aſſerting her Right to the Crown after his Majeſty and the Princeſs: And he would have known, in what Manner it would be moſt agreable to his Majeſty,

(x) In the French of Lamberty thus.

C'eſt pourquoi, etant informée, qu'on a deliberée de regle l'ordre de la Succeſſion a la Couronne d'Angleterre dans le Parlement aſſemblée. Elle repreſente au Roi, & a cet même Parlement qu'en qualité de Fille unique de la feue Princeſſe Royalle Henriette ſa mere, elle eſt la premiere Apellée, apres le Roi Guillaume, & la Princeſſe de Dannemarck, &c.

In Engliſh, by B. Kennet and Mr. Tindal thus.

That, therefore, being inform'd, That it had been reſolv'd in the Parliament, that, being the only Daughter of the late Princeſs Henrietta her Mother, ſhe was the next in Succeſſion after his Majeſty William III. and the Princeſs Anne of Denmark, &c.

A. D. 1700-1. Majesty, That it should be communicated to the Parliament. I told him, That his Majesty took no Cognizance of what was doing in either House of Parliament, nor concern'd himself about it, till it was presented by both Houses in a Bill, or by either House in an Address. I told him farther, as from myself, That Protestations of this Nature, were Things unheard of here, and what nobody would advise him to: That I could understand it no otherwise, than protesting against an Act already pass'd about twelve Years ago, which excludes all Papists from the Succession here, and is now a Fundamental of our Constitution. Notwithstanding This, I hear he has sent his Protestations in a Letter directed to the Lord-Keeper, and our Speaker, which was deliver'd by two of his Gentlemen and a Public Notary, who is to make an authentic Attestation of the Delivery of it. Mr. Harley tells me, That, suspecting what he brought, he did not open his Letter, but told them, He was no other than a private Person out of the Chair: Whether my Lord-Keeper has observ'd the same Caution, I know not."

His Royal Highness embraces the Party of the Two Crowns.

And to This, all that need be added, is, That, while the Affair of providing for a Continuance of the Protestant Succession was holding this Course, the Duke of Savoy embrac'd the Party of the Two Crowns on very advantegious Terms to himself: For the young King of Spain was to marry his youngest Daughter without any Dowry; and he himself was to be Generalissimo of the Allied Army in Italy, with a Subsidy of 50,000 Crowns a Month, on Condition of furnishing 8000 Foot and 2500 Horse.

Conduct of Zell and Hanover at this Crisis.

Of the Proceedings of the House of Hanover during this Interval, it is not to be imagin'd, that a satisfactory Account can be given: But such of the Footsteps as can be trac'd, shall be given as they lye. Towards

[Cole, p. 264.] the Close of the preceding Year, Mr. Creffet represents the Two Courts of Zell and Hanover, as wholly at the Devotion of the King, as relying with a full Confidence on his Royal Conduct as to public Affairs; but expresses some Apprehensions of a strong French Cabal at the first of these Courts, which zealously assisted the Envoy of France in all his Designs, and also of the Duchess herself, who employ'd all her Power, which was

[Ibid. p. 296.] daily encreasing, the same way. In the Beginning of February, the same Minister represents the said Courts as invited on the one Hand by Denmark, to abandon the Duke of Holstein, in which Case Denmark would sacrifice the Branch of Wolfenbuttle to their Discretion: And on the other, to go Halves in the projected Expedition of the Swedes into Saxony; but as still dispos'd to take no Resolution without the Participation of his Majesty. In the Letter before cited, wherein the Restrictions tagg'd to the Limitation

[Ibid. p. 354.] of the Crown are mention'd, he says, "The said Courts do all the Service they can to the Public, being perfectly well-intention'd; 5000 Men are already march'd from hence towards Holland; and some other Regiments are order'd to be in a Readiness.....But these poor Princes cannot make Brick without Straw." And in his Letter of June 20, he writes thus: "The good old Princess has been so pester'd of late with the Letters of forward People almost unknown to her, that she is to be pity'd for the Trouble she takes in answering them all." To which Passage, no Man acquainted with Courts and Courtiers, will want an Interpreter. A. D. 1700-1.

Lastly: If we look a little forward, in order to close this Section, we shall find, That the King having appointed the Earl of Macclesfield to carry the Garter to the Elector of Hanover, as also to congratulate the Two Courts on the Election of the Princess of Sophia and her Lineage to the Throne of England, the Presents made to his Lordship on that singular Occasion, amounted to upwards of 7000*l. Sterl.*

Parliamentary Affairs resum'd.

Having thus thrown all the Lights in our Power on this memorable Affair, we must now resume the Course of our parliamentary Proceedings, which being of a Nature altogether peculiar to this Session, cannot be prosecuted without frequent interruptions.

In order to which, it will be necessary to premise, That if Mr. Vernon was under any Mistake when he told Lord Manchester, That the Commons in granting the Succours demanded by the States, had granted all his Majesty desir'd, it is nevertheless certain, They had then granted all they intended to grant, for the actual and immediate Service of the Continent: And here the Current of Business, or, at least, of Closet-Business, came to a Stand.

Disposition of the new Ministers.

The new Ministers and the new Parliament were for a Moderate Management Abroad as well as at Home: They were for acting as Auxiliaries, but not as Principals; and were ready to assist the Dutch, but unwilling to undertake the Reduction of Provinces for their Sake, or Kingdoms for the House of Austria, which the former Ministry had in effect given away.

One of their Writers had set forth in print, "That Leagues and Confederacies were useless to England, which, as an Island, was able to defend itself against the World. That our Manufactures and Trade had the Command of every Market: That our Fleets were able to protect and cover our Trade, in spite of all Mankind: And that the Concern we took in the Affairs of our Neighbours, only serv'd for a Pretence to raise Armies to enslave us at Home." This was, in the main, the Creed of the Party; and it would have been happy for us, if it had been the Rule of our Conduct.

Their Rivals, on the contrary, (tho' they had gone such amazing Lengths, by the Means of the Two Partition-Treaties, towards rendering France an Over-match for all the rest of Europe, merely to avoid the Expence and Hazard of a new Continent-War, on Account of the Spanish Succession, which was the Basis of the Grand Alliance) were not asham'd now to make their Court, by clamouring for a War at all Hazards, and even to drive the House of Commons on

A. D. 1700-1. addreſſing the King to do, what was in his own Prerogative to do, whenever he thought fit; and what, ſtrictly ſpeaking, did not belong to their Province.

In what Degree, or after what Manner his Majeſty ſignify'd his Approbation of their Conduct in this Particular, cannot be aſcertain'd: But ſome Degree of Countenance and Encouragement, They certainly met with: If we have not poſitive, we have preſumptive Proofs: The Tories, as we have ſeen, had as yet but few Places in the Adminiſtration; and no doubt were put on their good Behaviour for more. By the Death of the Earl of Bridgewater, the Admiralty-Board wanted a Head; and yet, inſtead of ſupplying the Vacancy out of that Party, the King thought fit to place the Earl of Pembroke there, tho' he was, at the ſame Time, Preſident of the Council: And tho' we cannot explane the underhand Intrigues to which this Management was owing, we may, nevertheleſs, conclude, That if Place and Power had the ſame Influence in thoſe Days, which they have had ſince, this Neglect on one Side, could not fail to produce a ſuitable Degree of Reſentment on the other. Whence it will follow, that all thoſe cautious Meaſures, which B. Burnet and other Party-Writers reſolve into a French Management, had their Riſe from the ſame Appetites, Paſſions, and Diſappointments, which have ſet the ill Humours of Mankind afloat from the Beginning of the World to this Day. It was in the Power of the Houſe of Commons, to make Reprisals on the Cabinet; and the Uſe they made of that Power was ſuch, as ſo diſturb'd the Surface of Things, That, in the Controverſy which enſued, the true Form and Colour of every Thing was loſt.

In treating of the preceding Seſſion, it was obſerv'd, That Thoſe who had accus'd the old Miniſtry of Mal-Adminiſtration, and who lay in wait for Proofs, had recourſe to an Act for appointing and empowering Commiſſioners to take, examine, and determine the Debts due to the Army, Navy, and Tranſport-Service: The Payment of theſe Debts had, during the ſaid Seſſion, been demanded by a Number of diſbanded Soldiers, tumultuouſly aſſembled at the Door of the Houſe of Commons; and it may be recollected, That a Proviſion was made, for their Payment, out of the Sale of the Forfeitures to be reſum'd in Ireland.

Report of the Commiſſioners of Accounts.

Soon after the Meeting of Parliament, theſe Commiſſioners made their Report, (tho' not a perfect one) in which, was one Section, relating to the Prizes taken during the War, and the Conduct of the Commiſſioners which had been appointed by the Crown to diſpoſe of and account for the ſame. On this Section the Leaders of the Majority faſten'd; For no Account had been deliver'd in, nor could any be procur'd: The Secret of This was ſuppos'd to be in Parkhurſt and Poſchall, two of the Commiſſioners, both of whom were Members: It was alſo ſuppos'd they had great Confederates; and that if hard preſs'd, they would make Diſcoveries to procure an Abſolution for themſelves. Theſe, therefore, were called upon in their Places; and not anſwering to the Satisfaction of the Houſe, were, upon the Queſtion, committed to the Tower, for Neglect of Duty and Contempt of the ſaid Act: After which a new Order was made for the ſaid Commiſſioners of Prizes to make up their Accounts, and tranſmit them to the ſaid Commiſſioners of Accounts in three Weeks. A. D. 1700-1. Commiſſioners of Prizes committed to the Tower.

The Affair did not end here: Confinement had not the deſir'd Effect on the Priſoners: And the Commiſſioners of Accounts not having had Time to perfect their Report, a Reſolution was taken to renew the Act; out of which new Matter of Debate and Contention aroſe; as when the Relation of Things require it, will be made appear.

The next Expedient which was made uſe of to trouble the Waters, was drawn from the Proofs which had aroſe as above, of the corrupt Practices made uſe of in Elections, by certain of the Directors and Agents of the new Eaſt-India Company. This was conducted by Sir Edward Seymour, with all the Skill and Dexterity which he had acquir'd in ſuch a Length of Practice, and which ſhew'd him to be a Maſter in parliamentary Management: For, tho' B. Burnet, in order to blaſt his Teſtimony, has Recourſe to Recrimination, pronouncing, That he had dealt in Corruption all his Life, it was at firſt reſolv'd, without a Diviſion, That he had made good his general Charge; and then, Nemine Contradicente, That the Thanks of the Houſe ſhould be given to him, for the great Service he had done the Public in detecting the Bribery and Corruption which had been practis'd in the Elections of ſeveral Members: And this Command the Speaker executed in the Manner and Terms following; to wit: "Sir Edward Seymour, The Houſe has had a long Examination of ſeveral corrupt Practices tending to the Deſtruction of the Conſtitution: They are ſenſible the Diſcovery thereof is owing to your Reſolution, to your Love of the Public, and is brought about by your (a) Charge and by your Conduct. It is an Honour, Sir, to you, that you are deſcended from Anceſtors who have been ſucceſsful in commanding the Armies and Fleets of this Kingdom, and from a Protector of this Realm: But it is your perſonal Honour that you have protected the Conſtitution of this Place. As the Houſe have expreſs'd their Zeal and Indignation againſt Thoſe who have endeavour'd to undermine and ruin the Foundation of our Liberties, ſo they are deſirous, at the ſame Time, That your Name may ſtand upon Record, as being the Means by which it is brought about; therefore, they have commanded, That the Thanks, &c."

Thanks of the Houſe given to Sir E. Seymour.

Thus

(a) It is thus in the Journals; but no doubt it ought to be Courage.

A.D. 1700-1. Thus far it may be ſuppos'd, the Majority had nothing in view, but merely to diſgrace their Opponents: But when the Manner of making good their Vote to aſſiſt the States-General, according to the Treaty of 1677, they certainly carry'd their Views farther.

They had now the faireſt Opportunity imaginable to make their Court to the King, without being inconſiſtent with themſelves, or incurring the leaſt Danger of Cenſure from any Quarter, by granting new Levies for the 10,000 Men demanded: But being as unwilling as ever to truſt the King with an Army, and having, moreover, ſome Managements to obſerve with the oppoſing Members in the Iriſh Parliament, who paſſionately deſir'd to ſee their Military Eſtabliſhments reduc'd, they did by the King in this Inſtance, as he had done by them in relation to his Service; that is to ſay, They gratify'd him by Halves; as appears by the following circumſtantial Vote, which had nothing but the Gloſs of Unanimity to render it palatable: To wit.

Twelve Battalions voted for the Aſſiſtance of the Dutch.

"Reſolv'd, Nem. Con. That Twelve Battalions, part of the ſtanding Forces now in Ireland, ſhall be, by new Levies, made up 10,000 Men, and ſent to the Aſſiſtance of the States-General; and no new Levies to be made in Ireland, or elſewhere, to ſupply the ſaid Twelve Battalions drawn out of Ireland."

But then this narrow Meaſure was very artfully palliated by this Plea, That by this Means half the Levy-Money was ſav'd, and the whole Expence of Officers: For ſo it is [P. 27.] aſſerted in the Piece laſt quoted; and thence we cannot help inferring, That no new Commiſſions were iſſued on this Occaſion; nor did the Party forget to obſerve, with a particular Emphaſis on the ſame Occaſion, That, while the Partition-Treaty was carrying on or concluding, which was a League offenſive and defenſive with the French King, the then Miniſters and their Creatures, labour'd with all their Might to eſtabliſh a large Standing Army in England, under the Pretence, That the ſaid King had only made Peace, in order to break the Confederacy, and then to reſtore King James.

The Proceedings of both Houſes, in relation to the Partition-Treaty, challenge our Attention next; and having been ſomewhat odly connected with the Courſe of our foreign Affairs, the two Threads muſt be interwove together, which may be ſo much the more conſiſtently done, ſince Both will equally illuſtrate what was advanc'd above, That from a certain Point of Time, the Current of the Seſſion took a Turn leſs favorable to the Purpoſes of the Court.

Conferences at the Hague.

The Inſtructions given to Mr. Stanhope we have ſeen; but the Letters which accompany'd thoſe Inſtructions, ought alſo to be ſeen, in order to a full Underſtanding of the Story: For that Miniſter did not follow them exactly: And the Preamble of the Paper he deliver'd to M. d'Avaux on his Maſter's Behalf, differs widely from That of the ſaid Inſtructions: For Exemple: Whereas in the Former, the Deſire of the Houſe of Commons ſignify'd by their Addreſs, is given as the Reaſon for opening Negotiations with the Courts of France and Spain, the Reaſon aſſign'd in the Latter, was drawn from the Partition-Treaty, of which his Majeſty clam'd the Effect, as well to eſtabliſh the general Tranquility of Europe, as the particular Security of his own Kingdoms: And what was abundantly more material, the States, inſtead of confining their Demands to the Three Towns ſpecify'd in the ſaid Inſtructions, to wit, Luxemburgh, Namur, and Mons, added Seven more to their Liſt, namely, Venlo, Ruremonde, Stevenſwaert, Charleroy, Dendermonde, Damme, and St. Donas, making Ten in all: And in his Diſpatch of March 25, to Lord Mancheſter, Mr. Stanhope himſelf touches the Fact in the following tender Manner: "You will obſerve ſome Alterations from [Cole, p. 338.] the firſt Project, and ſome Points in particular more enlarg'd upon; which you will pleaſe charitably to believe, I have my Reaſons for doing as well as the States."

A.D. 1700-1.

Propoſals made to M. d'Avaux different from the Inſtruction given to M. Stanhope.

Then as to the Reception theſe Propoſals met with from M. d'Avaux, it is briefly but fully recited in the ſame Diſpatch, as follows: "M. d'Avaux, after hearing both the Papers read, ſeem'd greatly ſurpris'd, ſaying, That as He expected, we would demand to have the French Troops withdrawn out of the Spaniſh Netherlands, ſo he came prepar'd to give Satisfaction in that Article, by aſſuring them, It ſhould be done, as ſoon as the King of Spain ſhall have Forces of his own to guard the Country: But as to the other Articles, they were ſuch as we could not have rais'd higher, if we had gain'd Four Battles againſt his Majeſty: So it was impoſſible, He could give them any other Anſwer at the preſent, than that, He would tranſmit them to the King, as he did the ſame Night. He added, That it ſeem'd as if they reſolv'd to have War, and confirm'd the Advices he had from their Miniſter at Vienna, That they had lately concluded and ſign'd a League with the Emperor. From this Charge the Deputies every one of them clear'd themſelves, by abſolutely denying, There was any ſuch Treaty: And that it is notorious to all the World, the Manner of their State inclining to Peace, when they may have it with Security, which is all they aim at by theſe Propoſals. Thus the Matter is like to reſt, till the Orders come from Verſailles, where, poſſibly, it may not be ſo heinouſly repreſented, as by M. d'Avaux here. The Article about the Emperor will puzzle them moſt, becauſe no body yet knows what will ſatisfy him. In ſhort, if we muſt have War, I am pleas'd to ſee, we neither fear it here, or in England; but think ourſelves as well prepar'd for defence, as any Enemy can be to attack us. However, a reaſonable Peace, would certainly be better for us all."

M. d'Avaux's Anſwer.

It is remarkable, That the puzzling Article about the Emperor, tho' in the Paper deliver'd by the States, was not inſerted in Mr. Stanhope's: As alſo, That when the States

Deputies

A.D. 1700-1. Deputies made their Report to the States-General of what had paſs'd at the Conference, they took care to ſpecify the Demand of Nieuport and Oſtend on the Behalf of his Britannic Majeſty, as a Circumſtance which made an eſſential Difference in the Two Papers: And that Mr. Stanhope, in another Letter four Days afterwards, ſignifies not only, That the French Miniſters exclam'd againſt thoſe Demands as moſt unreaſonable; as alſo, that they labour'd underhand, to create Jealouſies among the Dutch, by urging, How prejudicial it might one Day prove to their Government, to have theſe Places in the Hands of the Engliſh, "but, continues He, with little Succeſs as thoſe I converſe with tell me, tho' they own that great Induſtry is us'd by the French to ſpread the Poiſon."

Lord Manchester's Repreſentation of the Behaviour of the French Court.

Laſtly: Lord Manchester makes the following Repreſentation of what happen'd between him and M. de Torcy, on this ſignal Occaſion; to wit.

"I can aſſure you, that the Demands of the States, as well as ours, ſurpriſe them here very much; and tho' I expected it would be ſo, even as I had Reaſon to think what the Propoſitions would be, yet when I found ſo many Towns demanded, and ſaw the Manner in which they expreſs'd it, I prepar'd myſelf accordingly to diſcourſe with M. de Torcy. He began with exclaiming extreamly againſt the States, and told me, That he might with great Reaſon ſay, That the Memorial they had given was inſolent, and ſufficient to try the Patience of the King: That it would be printed, to ſhew to the World the Manner in which they treated Him and Spain: Yet, nevertheleſs, the King was reſolv'd not to begin the War; but he would oppoſe thoſe that ſhould attack him. I endeavour'd to palliate the Matter, and ſaid, That we ſhould have been very glad if the Propoſitions had come firſt from M. d'Avaux: That in Negotiations of this Nature, the Propoſals ſeem at firſt extraordinary; but when they were digeſted, and Expedients were propos'd, they came often to a happy Concluſion, which I hoped theſe would do: That I did believe that the King, when he accepted the Will, never intended that we, nor the States, ſhould be in a worſe Condition, in regard to our Security, than by the Treaty: That tho', by the Emperor's not ſigning it, there remain'd, as might be alledg'd, no Obligation towards him; yet as to England and Holland, That was ſtill in force, or at leaſt an Equivalent: And I left him to judge, if the Archduke had been King of Spain, whether our Troops would not have been in theſe Places now demanded, or in moſt of them. That, ſince the Queſtion was not about diſmembring the Spaniſh Monarchy, I was in hopes, that any thing that did not tend to that, would have been agreed to. I preſs'd him to know what they intended to propoſe. He ſaid, That were the Hollanders entirely Maſters of Flanders, their Demands could not be greater; and that it did not deſerve an Anſwer: But that M. d'Avaux's Orders would be to tell them, That the King would never conſent to any Thing of this Nature, but would obſerve ſtrictly the Treaty of Ryſwick. renew what other Treaties were neceſſary, and withdraw his Troops when the King of Spain ſhall have ſufficient of his own to guard his Places. He took Exceptions againſt almoſt every Paragraph, as to the renewing the Treaty of Munſter, that they ſhould demand that, as if that Treaty was broke: That as to what was mention'd of the Emperor's being ſatisfy'd in his Pretenſions, that could tend to nothing leſs than the diſmembring of the Spaniſh Monarchy. As to that of Munſter, he muſt own, That when new Treaties were made, it was uſual to confirm old ones: That as for the Emperor, we could not tell yet what his Demands would be, and it was neceſſary to know them. I endeavour'd to ſhew him, That it was impoſſible England could think itſelf ſafe, as the Face of Affairs was now, without having what we demanded: But it would be too tedious to relate all that paſs'd. He did not expreſs himſelf in regard to the King, as he had done in relation to the States: But I found that Mr. Stanhope's Memorial is as much diſlik'd as that of the States. At laſt I ſaid to him, That I did not doubt but the King's Reſolutions would be very prudent; and that when I had the Honour to ſee him next, this Matter would be farther conſider'd, and that there might be ſtill Means found out to come to an Accommodation; which he gave me no ſort of Encouragement to expect, eſpecially in this Manner. You will ſee that the whole Matter is now public: I acquainted M. de Zinzendorf with what had paſs'd at the Hague: He waited alſo on M. de Torcy, where he expreſs'd, how ready the Emperor was to ſacrifice his own Rights, in ſome Meaſure, to procure a Peace to Europe, if there could be Means found out to give him any reaſonable Satisfaction; and that, at the ſame Time, other Princes might find their Security. The Anſwer made him, was of the ſame Nature with what I had.

A.D. 1700-1.

I did not imagine, that the States nor we ſhould have open'd the whole Matter at firſt, tho' I do not doubt but they had their Reaſons for it, and they know beſt what is neceſſary for their Security: I am of Opinion that we cannot expect much from theſe Conferences; and I judge ſo, becauſe this Court has Meaſures to keep, ſo as not to loſe the Affections of the Spaniards, by ſeeming to yield to any Terms or Conditions, which they may be diſpos'd to grant, before they are ſure what will ſatisfy us: So on the other Side, I ſuppoſe we are unwilling to diſoblige the Emperor, but would endeavour to ſatisfy him in his Pretenſions. Thoſe, I think, will never be granted, unleſs he has Succeſs in Italy; and even then, France muſt be brought to the laſt Extremity, before ſhe yields up whole Countries, for that is the Caſe of the Emperor. I am not determin'd, but that a War might be more advantageous on all Accounts, than any Conditions we can now expect: But if our Deſign is to prevent a Rupture,

A. D. 1700-1. Rupture, the only Method muſt be, to know firſt what the Emperor expects, and what would ſatisfy us and Holland, and that ſhould be agreed upon as Preliminaries, underhand, between the Penſioner and M. d'Avaux without ſigning: Or, if his Majeſty ſhould think it proper, I might manage it, ſo as not to engage the King nor the States farther than they pleaſe, and to know which of thoſe Demands this Court conſents to: For that they will come to Terms, is certain; but the Difficulty is in putting this in a right Method: I muſt confeſs, that I am at a Loſs how to act now, ſince I find that the Demands far exceed what I was acquainted with."

Having thus the Matter of Fact clearly enough ſtated before us, it will be proper to annex Dates; becauſe our Hiſtorian of his own Times, who of all Hiſtorians is the moſt negligent of Dates, pretends to cover his Narrative of theſe Tranſactions by them, as follows.

B. Burnet's Inferences from Dates.

"While the Houſe of Commons was going on, minding only Party-Matters, a Deſign was laid in the Houſe of Lords, to attack the Partition-Treaty, and ſome of thoſe who were concern'd in it: They began with an Addreſs to the King, That he would order ALL the Treaties made ſince the Peace of Ryſwick, to be laid before them. This was comply'd with ſo ſlowly, that they were not brought to the Houſe till the 26th of February, and no Notice was taken of them till the 10th of March: It ſoon appear'd that this was done by a French Direction. The Court of France (perceiving that the Dutch were alarm'd at their Neighbourhood, and were encreaſing their Force, both by Sea and Land, and were calling upon their Allies to furniſh their Quotas, which they were bound by Treaties to ſend to their Defence) enter'd upon a Negotiation with them at the Hague, to try what would lay theſe Fears. Upon this, in the Beginning of March, the States, in conjunction with Mr. Stanhope, the Engliſh Envoy at the Hague, gave in Memorials, in which they inſiſted on the Violation of the Partition-Treaty, and particularly on the French poſſeſſing themſelves of the Spaniſh Netherlands: They alſo deſir'd, That the Emperor might have juſt Satisfaction in his Pretenſions, and that in the mean while, Luxemburgh, Namur, Mons, and Ath, might be put in their Hands; and Oſtend and Newport, into the Hands of the Engliſh; and both they and the Dutch might have a free Trade, as before, to all the Spaniſh Dominions. The French ſeeing theſe Demands run ſo high, and being reſolv'd to offer no other Security for the Peace of Europe, but the renewing the Treaty of Ryſwick, ſet all their Engines at Work in England, to involve us into ſuch Contentions at Home, as ſhould both diſable us from taking any Care of foreign Affairs, and making the reſt of Europe conclude, that nothing conſiderable was to be expected from England. As ſoon as the News of thoſe Memorials could come to England, the Marquis of Normanby, and the reſt of the Tories, took up the Debate concerning the Partition-Treaty."

A. D. 1700-1.

Now this Addreſs for ALL the Treaties, which we are told the Lords begun with, was no other than a Clauſe in their Addreſs to the King in Anſwer to the Speech. 2dly, The Commons had voted a like Addreſs February 15. 3dly, The ſlow Compliance with theſe Addreſſes, was the Fault of the Secretary's Office, which ſurely could not be ſuppos'd to be under a French Direction. 4thly, The partial as well as ſlow Compliance with theſe Addreſſes, ſeems to ſhew, what was abundantly more natural and probable, That the Court of Kenſington had ſo far the Direction, and not the Court of France. 5thly, That, whereas the firſt Motion to appoint a Day of the Lords for taking the Partition-Treaty into Conſideration, was the 10th of March, the Propoſals deliver'd to M. d'Avaux, on the Behalf of England and Holland, were not deliver'd till the 11th: And, 6thly, That his Majeſty's Meſſage to both Houſes, in relation to theſe Propoſals, was not ſent till the (b) 18th. So that the Deſign of taking the Partition-Treaty into Conſideration, as theſe very Dates evince, was not only laid at the very opening of the Parliament, but alſo the ſaid Treaty was brought in queſtion, even before the Conferences at the Hague were open'd.

Examin'd.

But this is not all: For whereas the Biſhop craftily ſuggeſts, That ALL the Papers were brought to the Houſe by the 26th of February, in order to derive Matter of Calumny from their being ſuffer'd to lye on the Table till the 10th of March without Notice, the Truth is, that many material Papers were ſtill wanting; as appears by the following Minute in the Lords Journals of the 12th, (being the Day appointed for the Conſideration) and which alſo ſeems to indicate, That the Queſtion of the Day had been, Whether their Lordſhips ſhould procede on the Papers already before them, or whether they ſhould apply for the reſt, agreeable to the Words of the Addreſs: For the ſaid Minute is thus expreſs'd; to wit: "The Houſe came to this Agreement, That the Lord-Chamberlain do humbly move his Majeſty, That ALL Matters or Papers any way relating to the Negotiation of the Treaties, be laid before this Houſe."

And compar'd with the Lords Journals.

On the 14th, certain other Papers were accordingly brought from the Secretary's Office, which having been read and debated, a Committee was appointed, "to draw up and ſtate the Fact, as to the Treaty then in debate, and all Things and Circumſtances relating (b) Which was two Days before the Lords agreed on their Addreſs. As, yet the ſame Writer, in another Place, (to wit, p. 782.) ſtrains to the Charge as follows.

"As ſoon as they was over, (the Diſcuſſion of the Addreſs, meaning) the Earl of Jerſey did, by the King's Order, bring to the Houſe of Lords the Memorials that had been given in at the Hague: and then, by comparing Dates, it was eaſy to conjecture, why the Partition-Treaty had been ſet ſo long on the Table; and it ſeem'd as if it was taken up at laſt, only to blaſt this Negotiation: A French Management appearing very plainly in the whole Steps that had been made."

A.D. 1700. relating thereunto, and to draw an Addreſs to be preſented to his Majeſty thereupon."

A Committee appointed to ſtate Facts in relation to the Partition-Treaty.

This Committee was form'd of the Dukes of Devonſhire, Bolton, and Leeds, the Marquis of Normanby, the Earls of Peterborough, Stamford, Thanet, Kingſton, Burlington, Shaftſbury, Nottingham, Rocheſter, Abingdon, Marlborough, Romney, and Orford, the Viſcounts Weymouth and Longueville, and the Lords Willoughby, la War, Ferrers, Wharton, Mohun, Colepeper, Lexington, Berkeley, Craven, Guildford, Godolphin, Cholmondeley, Herbert, and Hallifax.

Of this Committee, which, it is obvious, was compos'd of both Factions, the Earl of Nottingham was Chairman; and the very next Day, his Lordſhip made the following Report of ſuch Facts as had been drawn up and ſtated by them, in relation to the ſaid Treaty; to wit.

Their Report, and the Debates it occaſion'd.

1. That by the Treaty of Partition, Naples, Sicily, &c. were to be given to the Dauphin.

2. That the Emperor was not a Party to this Treaty, tho' principally concern'd.

3. That no Miniſter of the States-General met with the Plenipotentiaries of England and France, as were requir'd by the Powers at the making the Treaty in London.

4. That there were no Inſtructions in writing to our Plenipotentiaries, tho' the Powers were unlimited; and that if there were verbal Orders given, yet it appears not to us they were conſider'd in any Council.

5. That the Treaty was not conſider'd in Council before it was ratify'd.

6. That it appears, That the Warrant for Ratification, was counterſign'd by one of the Plenipotentiaries.

7. That the Treaty was tranſacted and ſign'd, and the Great Seal affix'd to it during the Sitting of the Parliament.

Every one of theſe Particulars occaſion'd a Debate: For tho' Facts are Facts, and theſe were ſtated with a good Degree of Preciſion, the Houſe was free to adopt or reject at Pleaſure.

The Firſt, however, was admitted with a ſmall Alteration: But the Second was abſolutely thrown out by the Majority; no doubt becauſe the Lords, who were moſt for keeping Meaſures with the Cloſet, were unwilling to bring forward a Circumſtance, which prov'd, That the Emperor, whoſe Quarrel we were now again eſpouſing, had then been ſacrific'd. And yet this Article might have been objected to, on a different Account: For tho' it was reaſonable, That no Treaty of Partition ſhould be made, without the Emperor's Conſent, it was not to be conceiv'd, he could be a Party in This, which was calculated to compel him to come in: Upon this Occaſion, however, ſixteen Lords enter'd their Diſſent, no doubt for ſuch Reaſons as had occurr'd in the Debate, as follows.

1ſt, Becauſe it was manifeſt by the Treaty itſelf, that the Matter of Fact was true.

2dly, Becauſe the Emperor, as They conceiv'd, had been the moſt proper to have been treated with on this Occaſion; for it was more prudent and ſafe to have treated with the Emperor to have reſtrain'd the Pretenſions of France, than with France to leſſen the Dominions of Auſtria, which, in full Strength, and in Conjunction with the moſt conſiderable Powers in Europe, and with the Expence of more than ſixty Millions Sterling to our Share, was ſcarce able to withſtand the Arms of France. A.D. 1700.

3dly, But, admitting that the Emperor was not the moſt proper to be treated with; yet to prevent the Umbrage which might be taken, by uniting too many Dominions under one Prince, eſpecially ſuch a Prince as, without any Additions, was formidable to Europe, of all others the Emperor was the moſt improper to be left out of ſuch a Treaty, for he was moſt concern'd in it; and our Miniſters could not, or at leaſt did not ſufficient ſupport his Intereſts, or the juſt Ballance of Europe: But, on the contrary, as the Houſe had been inform'd by one Lord who ſign'd this Treaty, it was concluded againſt the expreſs Deſire of the Emperor.

The Third had the ſame Fate with the Second, which drew on a Second Proteſt founded as before, on the Reaſons urg'd in the Debate.

1ſt, Becauſe the Truth of this Propoſition, was Reaſon enough for aſſerting it; and it muſt certainly be of fatal Conſequence, if Miniſters, without any Directions, by Inſtructions in writing, ſhall preſume to act contrary to the very Commiſſion that empowers them: And in this Caſe, the Aſſiſtance of the Dutch Miniſters was the more neceſſary; becauſe the Emperor was no Party to this Treaty, and the States-General were more immediately concern'd than we were to promote his Intereſts.

2dly, But if this Treaty was concerted with the Dutch Miniſters in 1699, before his Majeſty's Return into England, as was aſſerted by one of the Lords who ſign'd it afterwards in London, 1ſt, This Treaty was made by thoſe who had no Authority to tranſact it; for the Power was not granted by his Majeſty till the 2d of January following. 2dly, As they acted without Power, ſo without Inſtructions too in writing, which never was practis'd in any former Tranſaction Abroad.

Laſtly: It was conceiv'd, That neither of the foregoing Facts ought, in Reaſon, or according to the Method of Parliament, to be order'd to be omitted, becauſe, till the Committee had form'd the Addreſs perſuant to the Order, it was impoſſible to know what Uſe would be made of thoſe Facts: For as they might have been improperly apply'd, and then would have been juſtly rejected, ſo there might have been ſo great Uſe made of them, and ſo oppoſite to the Deſign of the Houſe in the intended Addreſs, that it would be improper to omit them.

Thirteen Lords were govern'd by theſe Reaſons; and the Debate was afterwards adjourn'd till the next Day; when the Fourth Article was taken into Conſideration, and gave Occaſion to many Severities. And here a very extraordinary Piece of Management offers; which is thus touch'd upon by Mr. Vernon, in his Diſpatch of the ſame Day, to Lord Manchester: "My Lord Portland, finding himſelf cloſe preſs'd in this Examination, thought

A.D. 1700-1. thought it would be a Juſtification to him, to name ſome Lords of the Cabinet-Council, that were preſent a little before the Treaty was ſign'd, when a Draught of the Treaty was read at his Lodgings: But thoſe Lords remembring, likewiſe, the Objections made to it at the ſame Time, that Defence might as well have been omitted. I hear my Lord Portland mention'd likewiſe, in a Committee of the Houſe of Lords, as if he had proceeded in that Treaty upon ſome Advice I had writ to him in Holland; but he not producing any ſuch Letter, nothing was ſaid to me at a Committee of the Lords, tho' I attended them To-day, concerning the Meeting abovemention'd, where the Treaty was read."

B. Burnet treats the ſame Paſſage ſomewhat more circumſtantially; as follows.

"The Earl of Portland, apprehending that This [meaning the tranſacting an Affair of ſuch Importance without written Inſtructions, or the Advice of the Cabinet-Council] might fall too heavy on him, got the King's Leave to communicate the whole Matter next Day to the Houſe: So he told them, That he had not concluded the Treaty alone, but had, by the King's Order, acquainted ſix of his chief Miniſters with it, who were the Earls of Pembroke and Marlborough, the Viſcount Lonſdale, the Lords Sommers and Halifax, and Secretary Vernon: Upon which thoſe Lords, being likewiſe freed by the King from the Oath of Secrecy, told the Houſe, That the Earl of Jerſey, having in the King's Name call'd them together, the Treaty was read to them, and that they excepted to ſeveral Things in it; but they were told, That the King had carry'd the Matter as far as was poſſible, and that he could obtain no better Terms: So, when they were told, That no Alterations could be made, but that every Thing was ſettled; they gave over inſiſting on Particulars: They only adviſ'd, That the King might not engage himſelf in any Thing that would bring on a new War, ſince the Nation had been ſo uneaſy under the laſt. This was carry'd to the King; and a few Days after that, he told ſome of them, That he was made acquainted with their Exceptions; but how reaſonable ſoever they were, he had driven the Matter as far as he could: The Earl of Pembroke ſaid to the Houſe of Lords, He had offer'd the King thoſe Advices, that he thought were moſt for his Service, and for the Good of the Nation; but that he did not think himſelf bound to give an Account of that to any other Perſons: He was not the Man ſtruck at, ſo there was nothing ſaid, either againſt him or the Earls of Marlborough or Jerſey. Upon this, the Debate went on: Some ſaid, this was a Mockery, to aſk Advice, when there was no Room for it: It was anſwer'd, The King had aſk'd the Advice of his Privy-Council, (for Cabinet-Council) and they had given it; but that, ſuch was the Regal Prerogative, that it was ſtill free to him to follow it or not, as he ſaw Cauſe."

But tho' the King, perhaps, is not queſtionable for ſuch a Strain of the Prerogative, ſuch as obey what Commands he thinks fit to give, which are not only pernicious in themſelves, but for that Reaſon, expreſſly diſavow'd by his Council, are either anſwerable to Parliament for their Conduct, or, otherwiſe, all the Fundamentals of Whiggiſm fall to the Ground. A.D. 1700-1.

And This is tacitly admitted in the Minute which their Lordſhips agreed upon, when the Houſe was reſum'd; tho' the Edge of that Vote was turn'd againſt the Meaſure, not againſt the Managers of it: For the ſaid Minute was conceiv'd as follows.

"Whatever verbal Orders or Inſtructions were given, yet it appears not to us, That the Draught of the Treaty when perfected, was conſider'd at any Council when the King was preſent, or that it was adviſ'd, or approv'd by any Council or Committee of Council."

It is moreover obſervable, That the Sixth Fact, ſettled by the Lords Committees, to wit, That the Warrant for Ratification was counterſign'd by one of the Plenipotentiaries, had a perſonal Direction: But as this was introduc'd by the Whig-Lords, purpoſely to involve Lord Jerſey in the Proſecution, the Tory-Lords purpoſely overlook'd it: For as it is manifeſt, That he was at the Bottom of the whole Meaſure, ſo it is equally manifeſt, That he was ſtudiouſly exempted from all Conſequences notwithſtanding.

But to procede: This Minute was the only material Point of this Day: And when the Debate was again reſum'd on the Morrow, the Propoſition firſt made to the Houſe, was drawn up in theſe Words.

"That it appears, that there were Powers dated the 1ſt of July, to treat with the Emperor, the Dutch and French Miniſters, for ſecuring the mutual Friendſhip, upon Terms moſt ſuitable to the Circumſtances at that Time; and we are inform'd, that accordingly there was ſome Progreſs made in that Negotiation: But, afterwards, there were new Powers granted the 1ſt [by Miſtake for 2d] of January, to treat with the French and Dutch Miniſters only; and the Treaty for the Partition of the Spaniſh Monarchy, was concluded without the Emperor."

And after Debate thereupon, this Queſtion being put, Whether the ſaid Propoſal ſhall go to the Committee, to be one of the Heads for the Addreſs? It was reſolv'd in the Negative: After which, ſix Lords enter'd their Diſſents, but without aſſigning Reaſons: And (c) then it was farther propos'd by Lord Wharton, "That it appears, that the French King's Acceptance of the Will of the King of Spain, is a manifeſt Violation of the Treaty; and humbly to adviſe the King, That in all future Treaties with the French King, his Majeſty do procede with ſuch Caution, as may carry along with it a real Security."

After Debate thereupon, a warm Debate enſu'd, and upon the Iſſue this Queſtion being

(c) It is ſaid the King kept himſelf on the Reſerve at firſt, and went to Hampton-Court the firſt Day of the Debate: It appears, the Earl of Portland behav'd almoſt as an Accuſer in the Part he play'd, in order to diſculpate himſelf; and for theſe Reaſons, the Whig Lords, tho' the Majority, having made their own Party good as they thought, left his Majeſty to ſhift for himſelf.

A.D. 1700-1. being put, Whether the ſaid Propoſal ſhall go to the Committee, to be one of the Heads for the Addreſs? It was reſolv'd in the Affirmative: Againſt which eight Lords enter'd their Diſſent; the following Reaſons having been urg'd in the Courſe of the Debate.

"1. Becauſe it might be conſtru'd to be an Approbation of the Treaty, which, as They conceiv'd, was not intended by the Houſe.

2. Becauſe it was impoſſible to know the full Meaning and Extent of Real Security."

The Motion which occaſion'd the laſt Proteſt, was made by Lord Wharton, or, according to Mr. Vernon, by ſuch as [Cole, p. 348.] were of the Addreſs: "And, continues that Miniſter in the ſame Letter, if it occaſions its being laid aſide, I think there will be no Inconvenience in it: I hear that is under Debate." This Letter was dated the 20th, two Days after the King had ſent the Meſſage to both Houſes concerning the Conference at the Hague, which Meſſage was dated the 27th. But if any ſuch Hopes had been entertain'd, they were not well grounded: For, notwithſtanding the apparent Diſpoſition of the Majority, to moderate the Cenſures beſtow'd on the Treaty, the Addreſs was not only carry'd, but it was alſo order'd, that the whole Houſe ſhould attend his Majeſty with it: And tho' it was conſiderably ſoften'd, what remain'd was ſufficient to ſhew, That a worſe Thing could ſcarce have befallen this Country, than its being carry'd into Execution, as will appear by the Addreſs itſelf, which was as follows.

The Addreſs againſt the ſaid Treaty.

"We your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, having read and conſider'd the Treaty made with the French King, together with the ſeparate and ſecret Articles which your Majeſty has been pleas'd to communicate to us, do with all Humility repreſent to your Majeſty, That to our great Sorrow, we find the Matter thereof to have been of very ill Conſequence to the Peace and Safety of Europe: For beſides the Occaſion it may have given to the late King of Spain, to have made his Will in favour of the Duke of Anjou, if this Treaty had taken effect, the Prejudice to your Majeſty and your Subjects, and indeed to all Europe, by the Addition of Sicily, Naples, ſeveral Ports in the Mediterranean, the Province of Guipuſcoa, and the Duchy of Lorrain, had been not only very great, but contrary to the Pretence of the Treaty itſelf, which was, To prevent any Umbrage which might be taken by uniting two many States and Dominions under one Head.

And by all the Informations we have yet had of the Progreſs of this fatal Treaty, we cannot find, That the verbal Orders and Inſtructions, if any were given, to your Majeſty's Plenipotentiaries, were ever conſider'd in any of your Majeſty's Councils, or that the Draught of this Treaty was ever laid before your Majeſty at any Meeting of your Council, much leſs that it was debated or approv'd by any Council, or Committee of Council: We, therefore, think ourſelves oblig'd in Duty to your Majeſty, and Juſtice to our Country, moſt humbly to beſeech your Majeſty, That for the future your Majeſty will be pleas'd to require and admit, in all Matters of Importance, the Advice of your natural-born Subjects, whoſe known Probity and Fortunes, may give your Majeſty and your People a juſt Aſſurance of their Fidelity in your Service: And in order hereunto, to conſtitute a Council of ſuch Perſons, to whom your Majeſty may be pleas'd to impart all Affairs, both at Home and Abroad, which may any way concern your Majeſty and your Dominions: For as Intereſt and natural Affection to their Country, will incline them to wiſh the Welfare and Proſperity of it much more than others who have not ſuch Tyes upon them; ſo as their Experience and Knowledge of their Country will alſo render them more capable than Strangers of adviſing your Majeſty in the true Intereſt of it; ſo we are very confident, That after ſuch large and repeated Demonſtrations of your Subjects Duty and Affections, your Majeſty cannot doubt of their Zeal in your Service, nor want the Knowledge of Perſons fit to be employ'd in all your moſt ſecret and arduous Affairs.

And ſince it appears, That the French King's accepting the King of Spain's Will is a manifeſt Violation of this Treaty, we humbly adviſe your Majeſty, in future Treaties with the French King, to procede with ſuch Caution, as may carry along with it a real Security."

A Motion to ſend it to the Commons for their Concurrence, over-rul'd.

The Debates concerning it did not however terminate here: For thoſe who had driven it thus far, and who were ſtill deſirous to drive it ſomewhat farther, now preſs'd to have it communicated to the Commons, for the Sake, as they alledg'd, of their Concurrence: But this was oppos'd with as much Violence as it was preſs'd, and in the End (d) over-rul'd, which occaſion'd a Proteſt of Three Lords without Reaſons, and of Twenty-three with; of what Import, may be gather'd from the Paragraphs that follow.

"1. Becauſe it was conceiv'd, the laſt Clauſe in the Addreſs, did neceſſarily imply a War, and that a very long one, by reaſon of the Extent unintelligible (at leaſt to Them) of a Real Security, and the great Improbability of obtaining any Terms of that Kind; and ſince this neceſſarily imply'd great Supplies, which could not be granted without the Houſe of Commons, their Concurrence in this Addreſs was abſolutely neceſſary; and that it was very improper for Them to deſire that of (d) So that Boyer was greatly miſtaken, in aſſerting, as he does, in his Life of King William, Vol. III. p. 474. That the Lords ſent a Meſſage to the Commons, to acquaint them, "That there having been lately a Treaty made with France, extreamly dangerous in itſelf, and tranſacted alſo in a moſt irregular Manner, the Lords had thought fit to communicate it to the Houſe of Commons, and to deſire them to appoint a Committee for meeting a Committee of the Lords, in order to their joint Conſideration of ſome Method to be uſe'd in making ſuch an Application to his Majeſty about this Matter, as might, for the future, prevent any Proceedings of this Kind." It is probable, ſuch a Point was ſtarted; but certain, it ſo, it miſcarry'd.

A.D. 1700. of the King, which for want of such Concurrence of the Commons, it is to be conceiv'd his Majesty would not think fit or prudent for him to grant.

2. It was conceiv'd all the other Parts of the Address, were very fit to be communicated to the House of Commons; for upon the Success of it, depended the future Happiness of this Nation: And as the Readiness of the Commons to join in any proper Measures towards it could not be doubted of, so it was reasonable to think their Concurrence in it would highly contribute towards the obtaining a gracious Answer from his Majesty: And They could not but think it reasonable, That the Advice of the whole Nation, assembled in Parliament, should be made known to his Majesty upon that Occasion.

3. Having desir'd the House of Commons, to permit Mr. Secretary Vernon, a Member of their House, to come to a Committee of Lords, to inform them of some Matters relating to this Treaty, there was Matter of Apprehension, that the House of Commons might think it extraordinary, and not suitable to the good Correspondence which is highly necessary between the two Houses, not to acquaint them with the Things which had come to their Knowledge partly by the Information of their own Member.

4. And having been otherwise inform'd of some Transactions relating to this Treaty, between the Earl of Portland and Mr. Secretary Vernon, by Letters, of which we have not had a full Account, it may be very useful to the Public to communicate this Address to the Commons, who have better Opportunity than the Lords have had, of enquiring into this Matter, which seems to be yet in the Dark, and which their own Member might help to explane to them."

Those who had carry'd the Address, did not, however, obey the Order they had establish'd, to attend the Delivery of it. For as Mr. Vernon informs Lord Manchester, the Lord-Keeper carry'd it alone, and found no more than Two or Three of the Lords in waiting, at Court, to make the Shew of a House. A Circumstance, which may be thought, perhaps, more favorable to their Lordships Characters as Courtiers, than as Senators. His Majesty's Answer contain'd a brief but handsome Evasion in the following Words.

" My Lords,

This Address contains Matter of very great Moment: I will always take care, that all Treaties I make, shall be for the Honour and Safety of England."

It now behooves us to return to the Commons: And, in order to do Justice to their Procedings, his Majesty's Message twice before alluded to, must first be inserted.

The King's Message.

" WILLIAM R.

His Majesty having directed Mr. Stanhope, his Envoy Extraordinary, and Plenipotentiary at the Hague, to enter into Negotiations in concert with the States-General of the United-Provinces, and other Potentates, for the mutual Security of England and Holland, and the Preservation of the PEACE of Europe: And the said Mr. Stanhope having transmitted to his Majesty Copies of his Demands, made by himself and the Deputies of the States, upon that Subject, to the French Ambassador there, his Majesty has thought fit to communicate the same to the House of Lords, it being his Majesty's gracious Intention to acquaint them, from Time to Time, with the State and Progress of these Negotiations."

A.D. 1700.

This Message was certainly of the most gracious and condescending Kind; and, as it may be suppos'd, was rather calculated to mollify the Rancour of the reigning Party, than to furnish them with a Pretence to discharge it, with double Bitterness on the other.

But the Contrast which appear'd when the Contents of this Message were compar'd with the Conduct of the Court in the Partition-Treaty, was so strong, that a popular Assembly, form'd as this was, of Elements not to be reconcil'd, could not help being dazzled with it: And it is besides observable in the Course of the Debate, which this Message occasion'd, That the officious Petulance of the Latter, (Party) render'd the Procedure more bitter, than perhaps was at first intended by the Former.

That the Memorials deliver'd to M. d' Avaux at the Hague, were founded on the Partition Treaty; and that the Lords had already censur'd that Treaty, created the Disposition (or at least furnish'd the Pretence) which appear'd in the House to do the same, is acknowledg'd by Mr. Vernon to Lord Manchester: But when the Motion for an Address of Thanks for his Majesty's gracious Message was made, the Question was stated in the following moderate Terms; to wit: " That an humble Address be made to his Majesty, to return the Thanks of this House for his gracious Message, wherein he is pleas'd to communicate his Royal Intentions, to acquaint this House from Time to Time, with the State and Progress of these Negotiations into which his Majesty has enter'd, pursuant to the Address of this House."

Proceedings in the House of Commons.

[Cole. p. 550.]

Journal of the Commons.

And this we must suppose was the neutral Language of the Ministers, who not being able to prescribe to the House, so qualify'd what they had to propose, That it might not give Offence on one Hand, and yet on the other, might serve as a Ground-work for such Additions and Amendments, as might answer their most sanguine Purposes.

Thus the Debate was no sooner open'd, than the Sticklers for a War propos'd to add the following Words, And for his Majesty's Care of these Nations and the PEACE of EUROPE: A fierce and obstinate Debate ensued; in which the great Privilege, of Freedom of Speech was more freely exercis'd, than had ever been known before: Mr. How in particular, calling the Treaty a felonious Treaty; Others, with equal Severity, maintaining, That it was not more iniquitous than impolitic: And the Question being at last referr'd to a Division of the House, it was carry'd in the Negative by 193 Voices against 187: A slender Majority it is true; but a Slenderness easily accounted for: Because, on all these Occasions, the whole Corps of Court-Whigs

A. D. 1700-1. Of the flying Squadron, as well as

Whigs not only voted as one Man, but were also join'd by many of the moderate Tories in Office, who, perhaps, thought it an Office-Duty to ſtrain a Point, for the Sake of a perſonal Compliment to his Majeſty.

But then this ineffectual Effort ſeems only to have ſet an Edge on the Proceedings of the oppoſite Party: For the next Amendment that was offer'd, came from them, in the following Words: "Alſo, to lay before his Majeſty, the ill Conſequences of the Treaty of Partition to this Kingdom, and the PEACE of EUROPE." This, again, was follow'd by Another in theſe, "paſs'd under the Great Seal of England, during the Sitting of Parliament." And This by a Third as follows: "Whereby ſuch large Territories of the King of Spain's Dominions were to be deliver'd up to the French King." All which being ſo contriv'd, as to coincide with each other, were ſeverally adopted by the Houſe, without a Diviſion, and interwove with the general Reſolution, that was to ſerve as an Inſtruction to the Committee, appointed to draw up an Addreſs conformable thereto.

This Committee was compos'd of Forty-five Members, with an almoſt equal Mixture of Whigs and Tories: Among the Former were Sir Thomas Littleton, Sir Richard Onſlow, Lord Coningeſby, Lord Catts, Lord Spencer, Lord Hartington, Mr. Smith, Mr. Cowper, Mr. Monckton, Sir Rowland Gwyn, Sir Joſeph Jekyll: and among the Latter, Sir Edward Seymour, Sir Charles Muſgrave, Mr. Finch, Mr. Howe, Sir Humphry Macworth, Sir Bartholomew Shower, Mr. Hammond, Mr. St. John.

The next Day, March 22, the Addreſs was reported by Sir Edward Seymour; and being thought by Some rather more pointed than was warrantable by the Votes of the Houſe, a Motion was made for reading and conſidering it Paragraph by Paragraph, which paſs'd in the Negative without a Diviſion.

It was drawn up in theſe Words.

Theſe Addreſs directed againſt the Partition-Treaty.

"Moſt Gracious Sovereign,

Whereas nothing can more conduce to the Safety and Honour of your Majeſty and this Nation, than taking the Advice of your Engliſh Councils, we your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Commons in this Parliament aſſembled, do, with all Humility, return your Majeſty our hearty Thanks for your gracious Meſſage, wherein you are pleas'd to communicate your Royal Intentions to acquaint this Houſe with the State and Progreſs of thoſe Negotiations into which your Majeſty has enter'd, purſuant to the Addreſs of this Houſe; which Method, had your Majeſty been advis'd to take before the Treaty of Partition was perfected, (which was paſs'd under the Great Seal of England during the Sitting of Parliament, and without Advice of the ſame) we had been prevented from laying before your Majeſty, what we are now bound in Duty (tho' with Grief) to do, the ill Conſequences of that Treaty to this Kingdom and the Peace of Europe, which ſo directly tended to encreaſe the Power and Greatneſs of France, by delivering up to the French King A. D. 1700-1. ſuch large Territories of the King of Spain's Dominions, and to the Deſtruction of the Trade of this Kingdom, to which Treaty may juſtly be aſcrib'd the Dangers which now threaten both this Kingdom and the PEACE of Europe."

It was by ſpecial Order preſented to the King by the Houſe in a Body: And it is remark'd by Mr. Vernon, that the Speaker on this trying Occaſion, was much better attended than the Lord-Keeper had been: Notwithſtanding all which, and the quick Senſe which his Majeſty had of the Practice thus try'd upon him, he did not think it prudent to enter into any Expoſtulation upon it, as appears by his Anſwer to the ſaid Addreſs, which was as follows.

"Gentlemen,

I am glad you are pleas'd with my communicating to you the State of the Negotiations I have enter'd into, purſuant to your Addreſs; I ſhall continue to inform you of the Progreſs that ſhall be made in them, and be always willing to receive your Advice thereupon; being fully perſwaded, that nothing can contribute more effectually to the Happineſs of this Kingdom, and the PEACE of Europe, than the Concurrence of the Parliament in all my Negotiations, and a good Underſtanding between me and my People."

Thus a Meaſure which every one of the Miniſters, except the immediate Agents in it, and which, conſequently, reſted on the King himſelf, had diſown'd, was condemn'd by both Houſes of Parliament, as well as by the People with one Voice; whether by a French Management or not, the Reader is now able to determine for himſelf.

It is true, Mr. Vernon, in his Diſpatch to [Cole, p. 351.] Lord Manchester of March 24, ſays, "I believe M. de Tallard will repreſent that Day's Proceedings (the 22d that is to ſay) as advantageous to their Deſigns. I hear he diſpatch'd a Courier that ſame Night; ſo that he will be beforehand in the Relation; but no certain Judgment can be made what will be approv'd, or diſapprov'd of, till the Propoſals themſelves come under Debate." Which the Houſe, as he before ſuggeſts, avoided meddling with, till the Anſwers to them ſhould be alſo communicated: And no doubt, ſo far as theſe Debates and Diſſentions ſerv'd to ſhew, that our great Men were more diſpos'd to cut one anothers Throats, than to perſue any national Purpoſe whatſoever, this Suggeſtion of Mr. Vernon's was well grounded: But then it concludes no farther: And tho', in his next Diſpatch, he alſo ſays, "You will find both [Ibid. p. 353.] the Lords and Commons have cenſur'd the late Treaty of Partition in their Addreſſes to his Majeſty, which I ſuppoſe will not be diſagreable News to that Court, ſince they care ſo little to hear of it." Nothing, at this Time, is more demonſtrable, than that they cenſur'd it, for the Sake of cenſuring the Miniſters under whom it was made; and not for the Sake of diſculpating France for the Breach of it.

Beſides:

A.D. 1700-1. Besides: It is not unusual, perhaps, for Ministers to drop such Insinuations as these, in order to bespeak suitable Answers: But if so, the Practice in this Instance did not altogether operate in the Manner expected: For These that follow, are Lord Manchester's Words: "All I could perceive by his (M. de Torcy's) other Discourse was, That he thought the Proceedings in England somewhat extraordinary, in the Manner they treated the French King: But he said also, That the King of England was not much better us'd. I find they intend not to take the least Notice of any Thing that passes in Parliament, neither will they do any Thing to provoke the Parliament."

[Ibid.]

1701. What Emotions the Proposals made at the Hague occasion'd in the Court of France, have been already explan'd in Lord Manchester's Letter: What Effects they produc'd, we also find particularis'd in the following Letter of Mr. Stanhope's, dated at the Hague, April 5, N. S.

Sense of the States in relation to the Conduct of France.

"M. d'Avaux receiv'd his Courier last Saturday Morning early, and about Eleven visited me, when he own'd the Courier was come, but pretended to know nothing, telling me his Letters were not then decypher'd. The same Evening he demanded an Hour of the Pensionary, and told him, His Master had no other Answer to give to our Proposals than, That he is ready to renew and confirm the Treaty of Ryswick, which is all the Security we are to expect. He then ask'd him, If he had communicated the same to me; who answer'd, He had seen me that Morning, but had not then decypher'd his Letters. The other urg'd him again, Whether he did not intend to tell it me? To which he reply'd, He had no Orders to do it: For if the King of England has any Thing to demand of his Master, he has his Ambassador at Paris, and there is a French Minister at London, by either of whose Hands it may more properly be represented than here at the Hague, where he has a Commission only to treat with the States. However, to try him a little farther, by giving him an Opportunity, I return'd his Visit Yesterday Morning: But it pass'd all in common Discourse, and he said not a Word to me of the Business, nor did I think it convenient to ask him, after what I had heard before. Last Night, the States Deputies desir'd a Conference with me this Morning; wherein they gave me, in form, an Account of all this I knew already, by a Resolution of the States; and at the same Time told me, That, at my Requisition by his Majesty's Order, their Fleet of Twenty-four Capital Ships, and Sixteen Frigates, is ready to go presently to join ours in the Downs; and that they hope and desire the 10,000 Men we are to send to their Assistance by Land, may be speedily ready also; since by the French Motions on their Frontiers, and other Advices, they fear they shall suddenly have Occasion for them. All this I shall write this Night to England.

Mr. Stepney has been here three Days, and I believe in as many more will pursue his Journey towards Vienna: The Emperor's Minister here is very silent.

A.D. 1701.

Count d'Avaux has intimated by another Minister, his confident Agent, that he expects the States Resolution in eight or ten Days, otherwise he must be gone. All his underhand Trinketing with the Pensionary will come to nothing, nor will they ever be able to disunite us, as their Design is: I know all that passes, which amounts to no more yet, than general Hopes of giving them Satisfaction apart, excluding our King and the Emperor: But this I dare assure your Excellency, if we do not abandon this State, they will never seperate from our Interests. A good Vote or two of the Commons, will settle our Matters as we desire; and I doubt not but this French Haughtiness will conduce much towards it."

And what were the Consequences in England, the Journals of the Commons inform us: For therein we find, That on the last Day of March, Mr. Secretary Hedges presented the Copies of the Resolutions of the States, as also of a Memorial, to the King, from their Minister in London, conformable thereto, together with the following Message.

"WILLIAM R.

The Answer of France communicated in a Message from the King to both Houses.

His Majesty having receiv'd an Account from Mr. Stanhope, his Envoy Extraordinary at the Hague, that the French Ambassador there had declar'd to the Pensionary, That the King his Master had no other Answer to return to the Demands made by the States-General of the United Provinces, than that he is ready to renew and confirm the Treaty of Ryswick, it being all the Security the States are to expect; and that he has no Orders to give any Answer to his Majesty's said Envoy: But if his Majesty has any Thing to demand, it may be done by his Ambassador at Paris, or to the French Minister at London; and that he has no Commission to treat with any but the States. And his Majesty having also receiv'd two Resolutions of the States, and a Memorial from their Envoy here, relating to the Ships they are sending to join his Majesty's Fleet, and the Succours they desir'd may be hasten'd to them, by Virtue of the Treaty made the 3d of March, 1677, his Majesty has thought fit to communicate the whole to this House, that they may be particularly inform'd of the present State of Affairs Abroad, where the Negotiations seem to be at an End, by the positive Answer the French Ambassador has given to the States: Which his Majesty recommends to the serious Consideration of this House, as a Matter of the greatest Weight and Consequence; and desires that they will give his Majesty such Advice thereupon, as may be for our own Security, and that of the States-General, and the PEACE of EUROPE."

Thus the King himself having, by the Height of his own Demands, bespoke such an Answer, as he had receiv'd, avows his own Readiness to put an End to the Negotiation, again uses the very Words which the Faction for a War had made such an equivocal

A. D. 1701. vocal Uſe of, and thereby endeavour to extort in a Manner ſuch Advice from the Houſe, as was moſt ſuitable to his own Inclinations.

But if any Hope had been entertain'd of ſurpriſing the Houſe into any ſuch Vote or Votes, as might tend to involve the Nation as a Principal in a new Continent War, the Event was not anſwerable: For, in order that they might have Time for ſuch a Concert as the Criſis requir'd, they poſtpon'd the Conſideration of the ſaid Meſſage till the 2d of April following: And, upon the Iſſue of the Debate of that Day, Reſolv'd, Nemine Contradicente, "That the humble Advice of this Houſe be given to his Majeſty, to deſire, That his Majeſty will be pleas'd to carry on the Negotiations in concert with the States-General, and take ſuch Meaſures therein, as may moſt conduce to their Security: And that his Majeſty will perſue the Treaty made with the States-General the 3d of March, 1677; and to aſſure his Majeſty, That this Houſe will effectually enable him to ſupport the ſaid Treaty of 1677."

The Commons Vote of Advice.

It is obvious, That a Vote of Advice, which fell ſo far ſhort of his Majeſty's Deſires, could not be very acceptable to him: And yet the Language us'd in his Name, by way of Anſwer, was altogether as ſmooth, as any he had us'd before: For, according to the Report of Mr. Secretary Hedges, it was to the Effect following, which are the very Words of the Journal.

The King's Anſwer.

"That according to the Advice of the Houſe of Commons, his Majeſty has given Orders to his Envoy Extraordinary at the Hague, to carry on the Negotiation in concert with the States-General, and to take ſuch Meaſures therein, as may moſt conduce to their Security. His Majeſty thanks you for the Aſſurance you have given, that this Houſe will effectually enable him to ſupport the Treaty of 1677, and will perſue the ſame as you adviſe: He does not doubt, but the Readineſs you have ſhewn upon this Occaſion, will very much contribute to the obtaining ſuch a Security as is deſir'd."

Proof from original Papers, that the Proceedings of the Commons were exactly conformable to the State of Things abroad.

And now, in order to ſhew how rationally the Commons proceded, and, at the ſame Time, how conformably to the Proceedings and State of the Continent, it will be expedient to inſert certain original Papers in this Place, which, it is preſum'd, will put the Matter out of Controverſy; to wit.

"Propoſitions made by Count Schlick, the Emperor's General, to the Elector of Cologn at Bon, on the 10th of April, N. S. 1701.

The Count of Schlick, General of the Armies of his Imperial Majeſty, being arriv'd here on Thurſday laſt in the Evening, had the next Day, about Noon, an Audience of his Electoral Highneſs; in which, as alſo at the Conferences held with him afterwards, he ſaid, That his Imperial Majeſty having indiſpenſable Reaſons to purſue his Right to the Monarchy of Spain, by all poſſible Means, he with'd that his Electoral Highneſs would make no Engagements with the Powers that diſpute it with him; and that in caſe of a Rupture, he would unite himſelf with his ſaid Imperial Majeſty and his Allies, as being thereto incited by two powerful Motives; of which one is, The ſtrict Alliance which the Electoral Houſe of Bavaria has with the Houſe of Auſtria; and the other is, The general Intereſt of all the Empire, from which the Crowns of France and Spain will withdraw the Netherlands and the Dutchy of Milan: And it being to be fear'd, that by their Union, they may put themſelves in a Condition to ſubdue, in Time, all the reſt of the Empire, if the Princes, that are Members of it, don't make uſe of this Opportunity to hinder it, France being not yet ſo terrible as it would ſeem to be.

He has repreſented beſides, That his Imperial Majeſty, being not any more engag'd on the Side of Hungary, he may employ all his Forces againſt that Crown with more Succeſs than ever; and that, on the other Hand, the Engliſh and Dutch will make their laſt Effort to help his Imperial Majeſty in all his Deſigns; as well to revenge themſelves of the French their deſpiſing the Treaty of Partition, as to maintain their Religion, their Liberty, and their Commerce: And if his ſaid Electoral Highneſs would enter into Concert with his Imperial Majeſty, and with them, he had Orders to agree with him, in their Names, about all the Advantages and Conditions he could deſire; promiſing to himſelf a favorable Reſolution upon this, whilſt the Queſtion was about the Liberty of Europe, and chiefly about that of the Princes of the Empire, who otherwiſe ran the Riſque of loſing for ever their Sovereignty, and of being treated hereafter, as, formerly, the Biſhops of Toul, Metz, and Verdun have been treated, and very lately the Biſhop of Straſburg. He adds, That if, againſt all Expectations, his Electoral Highneſs would not come over to his Reaſons, it was to be fear'd, that when the Standards of the ally'd Powers ſhould be rais'd about his Country, they could not have that Regard for him, as if he had united himſelf with the ſaid Powers.

This is the Subſtance of what was repreſented: But Count Schlick was very much ſurpris'd, when, in the Place of receiving the favourable Anſwer which he expected, he was told, That his Electoral Highneſs being intruſted with his Archbiſhopricks and Biſhopricks, he will always prefer their Advantage to that of his Houſe and Parentage, when they cannot agree the one with the other: And that if he was to act according to the Nearneſs of Blood, it would be conſider'd whether the Princes of France, deſcended from the Dauphineſs his Siſter, are not nearer to him than the Archdukes of Auſtria, for the which he ſhall nevertheleſs always retain all imaginable Veneration: That, as to what regards the Empire, he aſſur'd his Imperial Majeſty, that he will never ſeperate himſelf from it, when the French and the Spaniards ſhall preſume to attack the Rights of the Empire; but as they

A.D. 1701. they have hitherto proteſted, that they will own to belong to the Empire all that the Kings of Spain have ever own'd, it did not ſeem to him, that they have room, on the Part of the ſaid Empire, to diſapprove their Conduct in this Reſpect, nor to meddle with the particular Affairs betwixt the Houſes of Auſtria and Bourbon, nor to diſturb the common Repoſe. That the Circles of Franconia and Suabia have, upon that Foot, found it convenient to aſſociate themſelves, and to invite ſeveral other Circles and Princes to join with them, in order to be able to preſerve the Tranquility they enjoy ſince the laſt Peace, and of which his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty promiſes to let them taſte the Sweets: That if the Court of Vienna, as the farthеſt off, does not at preſent find the French Forces formidable, theſe Countries, who are more expos'd, have the more Reaſon to apprehend them: That when heretofore Spain was ſtill united to the other Allies, his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty did nevertheleſs alone reſiſt almoſt all the Powers of Europe: That beſides this, if his Imperial Majeſty is not any more oblig'd to keep up an Army againſt the Turks, he will be oblig'd, according to his Projects, to ſend one into Italy, as conſiderable as that which he has had in Hungary: That it muſt nevertheleſs be own'd, that by the Union of the Engliſh and the Dutch, with may Proteſtant Princes and States, great Armies can be rais'd; but that it had been ſeen in the laſt War what the Catholics, and eſpecially the Eccleſiaſtics, had got by it, of which there remain ſtill diſmal Marks in the Countries of Cologn and Liege: That the King of England was a Prince of an unſettled Health, and the Engliſh Nation inconſtant, and at preſent almoſt exhauſted: That the Hollanders had been always for War, and that, afterwards, they have been the firſt to treat ſeperately, to the great Diſadvantage of their Allies: That, from all Times, the Country of Liege had found Advantages in a Neutrality; and that the only Time it had declar'd itſelf, it had been ſo ill treated, that the States had heartily pray'd his Electoral Highneſs to procure them, by all Means, in this Conjuncture, a good Neutrality: And if that Name is odious in the Sight of the whole World, they may content themſelves with the Effect. That for the reſt, his Electoral Highneſs has thought fit to unite himſelf to the other eccleſiaſtical Electors, at an Aſſembly held at Lobuſſen, where they had reſolv'd to join with the aſſociated Princes, and Circles, with a Deſign, that his Imperial Majeſty ſhall not be leſs ſatisfy'd with this, than he ſhew'd to be with the Aſſociation of the two abovemention'd Circles: And that, laſtly, his Electoral Highneſs, truſting to the Equity and Juſtice of his ſaid Imperial Majeſty, cannot believe that he will begin to uſe ill the Electors and other Princes, only for the Care they take for the Preſervation of their Dominions, and their not engaging in a Quarrel, which does not hitherto concern the Body of the Empire."

"Mr. STEPNEY to the Earl of MANCHESTER. A.D. 1701.

My Lord, Frankfort, April 21, 1701.

You will have heard at how ſhort Warning his Majeſty has commanded me to Vienna: Thus far I am come on my Way thither, and ſhould have made more Diligence, if the Penſionary and Count de Goes had not judg'd it neceſſary, that I ſhould viſit on the Way up the Rhine, the ſeveral Electors, (who are my old Acquaintance) and obſerve what Effect Count Schlick's Remonſtrances may have had on them. I found the Elector Palatine as zealous as the Emperor and we could wiſh him; but as I have advanc'd into the Empire, I have leſs Reaſon to be ſatisfy'd with their Proceedings. I forwarded to Mr. Stanhope, a Project of Neutrality which France propoſes to ſeveral Princes and States in the Empire, deſiring him to ſend your Lordſhip a Copy: It has made great Progreſs. The two Circles of Franconia and Suabia, (who, during the late War, were eſteem'd the Baſtions of the Empire) have been the firſt to enter into theſe Engagements, under the Name of Aſſociations. The Elector of Bavaria, (whom we have Reaſon to ſuſpect) was to ſign Yeſterday: The Elector of Cologn own'd to Count Schlick, that he was engag'd three Weeks ago: He has receiv'd Money from France, and to has his Brother Bavarian, with which this laſt is now raiſing 10,000 Men, and the other 5000: The Commiſſions were dealing about as I paſs'd thro' Bonn. The Elector of Treves means well, but his Situation obliges him to follow this ill Example; and he told me, he intended to ſend a Deputy to Frankfort on the 30th of this Month, to ſign the ſaid Aſſociation with the other Princes of this Electoral Circle of the Rhine, at the Invitation of the Elector of Mentz, who is ſole Director of this Circle. The two Directors of the Upper Rhine, are the Elector Palatine, and his Brother the Grand Maſter, (as Biſhop of Worms): They hitherto ſeem firm to the Auſtrian Family; but ſtanding by themſelves, are likely to prove but of little Uſe. By this unexpected Defection in the Heart of the Empire, it will be impoſſible for the Emperor to offend France, tho' he were never ſo well diſpos'd and prepar'd for it: He has no Sphere left for Action: The Door is barr'd againſt him from Auſtria to Duſſeldorp; and, were he in a Condition to force a Paſſage, his doing it would be contrary to his Coronation Oath, and the Conſtitution of the Empire. Thus has France found an eaſy Way to fence itſelf againſt any Attack this way, and I give the Game for loſt. A ſtrange Thing, that the Emperor ſhould be ſo negligent of his greateſt Intereſt, as not to make ſure of theſe Princes, when he could not but foreſee the Want he ſhould have of their friendly Aſſiſtance. This News, I fear, will give no great Encouragement to our Parliament to declare for an Empire ſo divided in itſelf, &c.

G. STEPNEY."

A.D. 1701. Lord MANCHESTER to Mr. Secretary VERNON.

" SIR, Paris, April 16, 1701.

I have none of yours to acknowledge, and little to acquaint you with by this Poſt: The only News at Court is, That the Elector-Palatine has let the King of France know, That he is ready to ſign the Treaty of Neutrality with the reſt of the Princes in Germany, as to his Perſon and his Country; but as for his Troops, he is oblig'd by a Treaty to leave them at the Diſpoſition of the Emperor. If all that they ſay here is true, the Emperor is like to make War by himſelf, &c.

Mr. STANHOPE to the Earl of MANCHESTER.

" My Lord, Hague, April 19, 1701.

In Anſwer to your Excellency's Favour of the 15th Inſtant, the Count d'Avaux has yet made no new Propoſal here, nor do we expect any, unleſs our Houſe of Commons comes about to make ſome vigorous Votes ſuitable to their Beginning, which we are in hourly Hopes of receiving by the Letters we expect. I the leſs expect any Propoſals from this State more moderate than the Former, ſince the Reſolution and Unanimity I obſerve in this People to be ſatisfy'd with nothing leſs; having heard this Day from a conſiderable Man at Amſterdam, that, provided England gives them only the Succours ſtipulated by the Treaty of 1677-8, as they cannot do leſs, they are content to hazard the War againſt France and Spain, in Conjunction with the Emperor and their German Allies. Monſieur Briord is very pleaſant in his Complaint of our King's Power over this State, as if his Maſter had not a much greater over the whole Monarchy of Spain. We believe not a Word of the (r) Treaty M. d'Avaux brags ſo much of, as defenſive and offenſive with Portugal; and that in caſe of a Rupture, neither Engliſh nor Dutch Ships will be receiv'd in any Ports of that Kingdom; tho' he ſhews his Maſter's Letter for it, with this Inference thereupon, Et que le Roy d'Angleterre ſonge a cette heure s'il voudra faire la Guerre," [and now let the King of England think whether he would make War]. I am, &c.

Then, as to the Reception of the Engliſh and Dutch Propoſitions by the Regency of Spain, Schomenberg writes as follows to Lord Manchester, " An extraordinary Courier ſent by the Court of France, and bringing the News of the ſaid Propoſitions, arriv'd here [P. 365.] (at Madrid) two Days ago: The Duke of Harcourt communicated them immediately to the Miniſters, treating them as ridiculous: And as if the Dependence of this Court on the good Pleaſures of France is an abſolute Submiſſion, they did immediately declare, That they reſign'd themſelves entirely to all that the Moſt Chriſtian King ſhall pleaſe to determine in This, and in every other Affair, in which this Monarchy is concern'd."

[366] Laſtly: In full Juſtification of the Houſe of Commons, Mr. Stanhope writes that to Lord Manchester: " The late Votes of the Houſe of Commons, to enable the King to make good to this State our Treaty in 1677-8, has put a new Spirit into this People; and two or three more ſuch, may make your Court not ſo backwards to a Negotiation, nor think our Propoſals ſo unreaſonable." And Mr. Vernon to the ſame Lord thus: " I don't doubt [P. 370.] but you hear directly from Holland, that the States have paſs'd a Reſolution, containing their Thanks to his Majeſty for the Care that has been taken of complying with the Treaty of 77; and to aſſure his Majeſty, That they will not act ſeperately from England. His Majeſty intends This ſhall be communicated to the Houſe of Commons:" And on the 24th of April, being three Days after this Letter was writ, an Extract of the ſaid Reſolution was communicated accordingly.

But his Majeſty had, nevertheleſs, his Reſerves on this Head of parliamentary Communications, as will appear by what follows.

Some Time in the Beginning of April, M. de Tallard quitted the Engliſh Court for good, and (leaving M. Pouſſin, formerly mention'd in a Letter of Lord Manchester's, to officiate as Secretary of the Embaſſy in his ſtead) was on his Arrival at Verſailles, rewarded with the Cordon bleu, and the Government of Foix, with Leave to ſell it, that he might put 200,000 Livres into his Pocket.

King of Spain's Letter of Notification to the King of England.

But at the very Inſtant of his Departure, and before M. Pouſſin had enter'd on the Functions of his Miniſtry, on the 19th of April, N. S. that is to ſay, M. de Torcy took an Opportunity to give Lord Manchester a Letter, telling him, It was for the King; and that M. de Tallard being come away, he deſir'd his Excellency would take Care of it: His Excellency in reply aſk'd, From whence it came? And, tho' inform'd it was from the King of Spain, as alſo, that it was to notify his Acceſſion, charg'd himſelf with the Tranſmiſſion of it to England; which, if he had thought fit, he might have evaded very eaſily.

This Letter was dated at Buen-Retiro, March 24; and the Receipt of it is acknowledg'd by Mr. Vernon April 14, O. S. who alſo acknowledges, it was read the Night before in the Cabinet-Council: The Contents were neither uncourtly nor unartificial: For, in ſuggeſting, That ſince he had taken Poſſeſſion of all the Kingdoms and Dominions belonging to him, he could no longer delay giving his Majeſty Notice of it: He alſo inſinuated a Sort of Excuſe, for not having notify'd his Acceſſion before; and he alſo aſſur'd his Majeſty, That he deſir'd nothing more than the Cultivation of a mutual Friendſhip with his Majeſty and his Crown.

Of what paſs'd in the Cabinet on this ſignal Occaſion, Mr. Vernon is wholly ſilent; nor (r) It was not as yet ſign'd.

A.D 1701. [P. 268.] is the Subject resum'd in any of the subsequent Letters which have been preserv'd in Cole's Collection: And yet Lord Manchester acknowledges the Receipt of one dated April 17, which is omitted: But Bishop Burnet, tho' not a Cabinet-Counsellor, assures us, There was some short Debate concerning it, but that it was never brought into any farther Deliberation there, which is somewhat strange, considering what he subjoins; to wit: "That the Earl of Rochester, and the rest of the new Ministry, prets'd the King to own the King of Spain, and to answer his Letter; urging, That since the Dutch had done it, it seem'd reasonable, that the King should likewise do it; and that they prevail'd at last, but with much Difficulty." For if the Debate was short, and it was never renew'd, it must follow, either, That the King did not need much pressing, or else his Majesty found the Arguments they made use of irresistible.

B. Burnet's Account of his Majesty's Reasons of Acknowledgment.

The Bishop adds, "The Thing was kept secret, and was not communicated to the Privy-Council, or to the Two Houses; nor did the King speak of it to any of the foreign Ministers: The Paris-Gazette gave the World the first Notice of it: This being carry'd in such a Manner, seem'd the more strange, because his Ministry had so lately condemn'd a former one, for not communicating the Partition-Treaty to the Council before it was concluded; and yet had in a Matter of great Consequence, so soon forgot the Censure they had thrown out so liberally upon the Secrecy, with which that Matter had been transacted."

Observed upon. Thus Party-Impertinence is to pass for History; and that This was nothing else, is notorious. The King had solicited this Letter of Notification, as hath been shewn already: Consequently having receiv'd it, he could do no less than acknowledge it: Besides; as we were jointly concern'd with the States in the Negotiation at the Hague, we could not avoid treating on the same Basis with them: And they had acknowledg'd the King of Spain, without so much as apprising the King of England of their Intentions to do so: Then, as the Cabinet-Council had, in the whole Course of this Reign, held the Place of the Privy-Council, in imparting it to his Cabinet, it may be said, He imparted it to his Council: And it is admitted, the Measure was not only approv'd, but advis'd by them; whereas the Partition-Treaty was neither regularly imparted, nor approv'd at all. Again; as to the Two Houses, tho' his Majesty had engag'd himself to communicate the Progress of the Negotiation to the House, he had engag'd himself to communicate nothing else: And, lastly, as to the Secrecy of the Transaction, it must be suppos'd, the King himself was in part answerable for it: For nothing could have serv'd the Purpose of the new Ministers, to avoid being Principals in a general War, better, than the making it known: Nor was the Secrecy observ'd any where except at Home; our Ministers residing in foreign Courts were inform'd of it; and made and receiv'd Compliments upon it, in the most open Manner. A.D 1701.

And here it is high Time to observe, That Mr. Tindal has inserted, among his Notes, certain Extracts from a Manuscript, written, as he says, by a very considerable Person of these Times; as also, That B. Burnet has either made great Use of the said M. S. or the Writer of it has made great Use of B. Burnet's History: The same Points, the same Circumstances, are touch'd in the same Manner, in Both: And that one of these Extracts, is deliver'd in the following Terms.

"One Advantage our Friends had, to let the King see they were not dispos'd to quarrel with any Thing he did, tho' it was visibly the Effect of their Counsels who design'd their Ruin. The King had assur'd both Houses, That he would acquaint them with the whole Progress of the Negotiation; yet an Incident happen'd of great Consequence, in which they carry'd their Designs, without advising either with Council or Parliament. The King of Spain, after long Deliberation about it, at last wrote to the King: By the Date, and other Circumstances, it appear'd, That Mr. Harley knew why he mov'd the House to leave the Matter of owning the King of Spain to the King. This was a Thing of such Consequence, that one would have thought it deserv'd to be well consider'd at Home, and to be communicated to our Allies Abroad, before it was done."

Now the Date of the Letter we have already before us: The (f) Answer was dated April 17, just Eight Days after the Affair had been laid before the Cabinet; and, consequently, whoever recollects, that Mr. Harley could not have made the Motion here talk'd of, at any other Time, than (f) To wit.

"William the Third, by the Grace of God, King of Great-Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. to the most serene and most potent Prince the Lord Philip the Fifth, by the same Grace, King of Spain, both Sicilies, Jerusalem, Hither, &c. Archduke of Austria, Duke of Burgundy, Brabant, and Milan, Earl of Hapsburg, Flanders, Tyrol, &c. our most dear Brother and Cousin, Greeting. Most serene and most potent Prince, Brother and Cousin, we have receiv'd the Letters of your Majesty of the 24th of March last past, which were for many Reasons very acceptable to us: as well because they gave us Notice of your happy Arrival in your Kingdom of Spain, of which you have taken Possession, taking upon you the Government of the Dominions thereunto belonging, as that you have assur'd us, that your Majesty has a Mind that the very antient Friendship and Correspondence betwixt the Two Crowns, shall remain inviolable. We have, indeed, willingly embrac'd this Opportunity to congratulate your Majesty on your happy Accession to the Crown of Spain, and to certify to you, how much we value you, and how great a Desire we have that your Majesty should know, that we will, with great Application, do all that we can, that the mutual Union, subsisting betwixt us, by Treaties and Friendship, be closer united, and that the Advantages of both Nations may every Day be more and more promoted and flourish, which we hope will also end in the Advantage and Prosperity of all Europe. For the rest, we recommend your Majesty to the Care and Protection of Almighty God. Given at our Palace of Kensington, the 17th of April, in the Year of the Lord 1701, and the Thirteenth of our Reign. Your Majesty's most loving Brother and Cousin,

WILLIAM R.

Ja. Vernon."

A. D. 1701. than when the first Memorial of the States (containing their Acknowledgment of the King of Spain, without any Condition or Reserve) was under Consideration, which was February the 19th, cannot help concluding, not only, That Dates, as manag'd by these Writers, only serve to confute themselves; but also, from the Part thus ascrib'd to Mr. Harley, that there was no such Design form'd by the Party, as both these Writers discourse of, almost in the same Words, to open the Session with a Vote, for an Address to the King, to own the King of Spain.

But if, by way of Plea for any such Vote, any of them, at any Time, did make use of the Language in this Manuscript imputed to them, to recommend such a Vote; to wit: "That it was no Matter who was King of "Spain; and that whoever was King of "Spain, must know his own Interest, must "be govern'd by Spanish Councils, must "be true to their antient Allies, &c." They talk'd like rational Men: And their Arguments have been verify'd by Facts, which would have been abundantly more glaring, if Spain had not been afterwards dismember'd of those Provinces, which render'd the Alliance of the Maritime-Powers of such Importance to her Interest.

Hitherto both Houses had thought fit to confine their Censures to the last Partition-Treaty, without meddling at all with the first: But a bare Censure of the Measure, would not wholly answer the Ends of Those who had brought it into question: On the other Hand, it appear'd from the Altercations which had pass'd in the Lords Committee, That the Earls of Portland and Jersey, were the only Persons who could be made answerable for it: And tho' no Favour was intended to the Former, it was scarce possible to procede against him on this Head, without involving the Latter, who, in exchange for his Services in the Cabinet, had been taken into the Protection of the Party.

In order, therefore, to make the necessary Discriminations, and yet serve the great Purposes in View, it was so contriv'd, that the House of Commons should take the Ball at the Rebound, and procede by the following Method.

Proceedings of the Committee in relation to the Second Partition-Treaty.

A Committee was appointed to examine the Journals of the House of Lords, and to report their Procedings in relation to the Treaty of Partition: This Report was made by Sir Edward Seymour, on the 26th of March; and it was order'd at the same Time, That all the Members of the House should attend the Service of the House on the 29th following, upon Pain of incurring the Displeasure of the House.

On the said 29th, the House resolv'd itself into a Committee, to consider the State of the Nation, and of the Treaty of Partition: Colonel Granville was put into the Chair: The Debates of the Day was such as might have been naturally expected from the Occasion and the Purpose in View: The Resolution they came to was This, 1. That William Earl of Portland, by negotiating and concluding the Treaty of Partition, (which was destructive to the Trade of the Kingdom, and dangerous to the Peace of Europe) was guilty of a high Crime and Misdemeanor. But then, as if Time was to be allow'd for some Sort of Management, the Report was not receiv'd till Tuesday the 1st of April following: And upon the Report, the House not only agreed with the Committee, but resolv'd without a Division, That the said Earl should be impeach'd of high Crimes and Misdemeanors: Besides which, they order'd Sir John Leveson Gower to impeach him, at the Bar of the House of Lords; and appointed a Committee to prepare Articles against him; which Committee was compos'd of Mr. Finch, Sir Christopher Musgrave, Sir Godfrey Copley, Mr. Bridges, Sir Thomas Powis, Lord Mordaunt, Sir John Leveson Gower, Colonel Granville, Sir Humphry Mackworth, Sir Bartholomew Shower, Mr. Hammond, Mr. How, Sir Edward Seymour, Dr. Davenant, Mr. Bertie, Sir William Coryton, Mr. Dolben, Mr. Attorney-General, Mr. St. John, Mr. Gwyn, Mr. Conyers, and Sir Rowland Gwyn.

The next Step they took, was to call upon the Lords at a Conference, for the Particulars of what had pass'd between Lord Portland and Mr. Vernon, in relation to the Partition-Treaty; as also for what other Informations they had obtain'd in relation to any Negotiations or Treaties of Partition of the Spanish Monarchy, by Letters or otherwise.

They apply to the Lords for the Papers communicated to them.

This Step was taken April 2: And the Lords demurring for several Days, on the 8th the House resolv'd (without a Division) to apply to his Majesty by an Address, for a Copy of the Grand-Alliance and the Two secret Articles, as also of the First Partition-Treaty, together with the Powers and Instructions for negotiating the late Treaties: To which Application, Mr. Vernon, in his Majesty's Name, the next Day made Answer, "That his Majesty had been pleas'd to give Order for the Treaties and Powers to be laid before the House: But that there were no Instructions for either of those Treaties in Writing."

And to his Majesty by Address.

The next Day the Lords agreed to the Conference demanded by the Commons on the 2d; and in Compliance with the Purport of it, the Marquis of Normanby deliver'd to the Managers of the Commons, Two Papers in Latin, the one dated at Kensington, January 2, 1699-1700, and containing the full Powers granted to the Earls of Portland and Jersey for signing the last Partition-Treaty; and the other dated at Loo, July 1, 1699, containing the like full Powers to the same Lords, to treat with the Ministers of the Emperor, France, and the States, for the Conservation of the Peace, (without any Mention by the Way of the Spanish Succession): As also the following Paper, which was laid before their Lordships by Lord Portland, but not sign'd by him, and the Question and Answer which follow'd it: To wit.

Lord

A. D. 1701.

Lord PORTLAND's Paper.

" At the Beginning of the Summer in the Year 99, when I was in Holland at my Country-Houſe, and when the King would have me be concern'd in the negotiating of this Treaty with the EMPEROR, the French King, and the States; being very unwilling to meddle with Buſineſs again, from which I was retir'd, before I would engage myſelf, I advis'd with my Friends in Holland, and writ into England to Mr. Secretary Vernon, as my particular Friend, Whether it was adviſable for me to engage in any Buſineſs again! To which Mr. Vernon anſwer'd in ſubſtance, That This would not engage me but for a little while: That I being upon the Place, and generally acquainted with the Foreign Miniſters, it would be eaſier for the King, and properer for me, to be employ'd in it than any body elſe, that muſt be otherwiſe ſent for on purpoſe."

" The Earl of Portland being deſir'd by the Lord Somers, with the Leave of the Houſe, to declare, if he pleas'd, Whether the Lord Somer's Name was mention'd in the Letter he receiv'd from Mr. Secretary Vernon? The Earl of Portland declar'd, That if he had remember'd any ſuch Thing in the Letter, and had not inſerted it in the Paper which he had deliver'd to the Houſe, he ſhould have thought he had deceiv'd the Houſe."

And here it is again incumbent on us, to cite the Teſtimony of the Hiſtorian of his own Times, who repreſents this Section of our Story as follows.

B. Burnet's Account of Lord Portland and Mr. Vernon's Behaviour at this Criſis.

" England was all this while very unwilling to engage; yet for fear we ſhould at laſt have ſeen our Intereſt ſo clearly, that we muſt have fallen into it, thoſe who were practis'd on to embroil us, ſo that we might not be in a Condition to mind Foreign Affairs, ſet on foot a Deſign to impeach the former Miniſtry.

The Handle that brought this about, was given by the Earl of Portland: When he was excuſing his own Part in the Partition-Treaty, he SAID, That, having withdrawn himſelf from Buſineſs, and being at his Country-Houſe in Holland, the King ſent to him, deſiring him to enter upon that Negotiation: Upon that, he wrote to Secretary Vernon, to aſk his Advice, and the Advice of his other Friends, whether it was fit for him to meddle in that Matter, ſince his being by Birth a Foreigner, ſeem'd a juſt Excuſe for not engaging in a Thing of ſuch Conſequence. To this Secretary Vernon anſwer'd, That all his Friends thought he was a very proper Perſon to be imploy'd in that Treaty, ſince he had known the Progreſs of all thoſe Treaties, and the Perſons who were employ'd on that Occaſion; and he nam'd the Lord Somers among thoſe who had advis'd this. The Earl of Portland had miſtaken this Circumſtance, which did not belong to the laſt Partition-Treaty, but to That of the Year before, in favour of the Prince Electoral of Bavaria. The Houſe of Commons hearing of this, requir'd Secretary Vernon to lay before them that Letter, with his Anſwer to it; for the Earl of Portland ſaid, That he had left all Papers relating to that Matter, in Holland. Vernon ſaid, He had receiv'd no ſuch Letter in the Year 1699; ſo that led them to enquire farther, and they requir'd him to lay before them all the Letters he had relating to both Treaties: He ſaid, thoſe were the King's Secrets, writ in Confidence by the Perſons he employ'd: But in ſuch a Caſe, a Houſe of Commons will not be put off: A Denial rather raiſes in them more Earneſtneſs in following their Point: It was ſaid, the King had diſpens'd with the Oath of Secrecy, when he order'd all Matters to be laid before them, and they would admit of no Excuſe. Vernon, upon this, went to the King, and told him, ſince theſe were his Secrets, he was ready to expoſe himſelf to the Indignation of the Houſe, and to refuſe to ſhew his Letters: But the King ſaid, His refuſing to do it, would not only raiſe a Storm againſt himſelf, from which the King could not protect him; but it would occaſion an Addreſs to the King, to order him to lay every Thing before the Houſe, which, in the State that Things were in then, he could not deny: Vernon, upon theſe Orders given him, at two different Times carry'd all the Letters, and laid them before the Houſe of Commons: It appear'd by Theſe, that he had communicated the Treaty to the King's Miniſters, who were in Town, about the End of Auguſt 1698: That Lord Somers being then at Tunbridge, he went to him; and that he had communicated the Project, both to the Earl of Orford and the Lord Halifax: Several Objections were made by them to many Parts of the Treaty, which were mention'd in Vernon's Letters; but, if better Terms could not be had, they thought it was better to conclude the Treaty, than to leave the Spaniſh Monarchy to be over-run by France, or to involve Europe in a new War: Lord Somers had alſo put the Seals to Blank Powers, for concluding this Treaty. When all this was read, thoſe, who were ſet on to blow up the Flame, mov'd the Houſe to impeach ſome of the Miniſters, who had been concern'd in this Tranſaction."

Thus, tho' the Biſhop thought fit to paſs over ſeveral material Circumſtances in relation to Lord Portland's equally fallacious and futile Plea, and to alter others, yet he nevertheleſs acknowledges enough to indicate, That the Letters produc'd by Mr. Vernon, ſerv'd as well to entangle Lord Somers in his own Query, as to expoſe Lord Portland, and unravel a great Part of that pernicious Negotiation, in which the Emperor was ſo far from having any Concern, that the total Sacrifice of his Pretenſions, was the great Object which all the Parties concern'd had in View.

But whereas he alſo ſays, That Vernon, at Ibidem. Two different Times, did carry ALL the Letters, and lay them before the Houſe, it is fit to obſerve, That neither did he communicate ALL the Letters in queſtion to the Houſe, nor was the Communication he did make by the King's Permiſſion, made at Two different Times: It is true, That on the

A.D. 1701. 11th, (of April) he did present to the House the Treaties, Powers, &c. call'd for on the 5th, making Fifteen Papers in all (which, by the Way, again farther demonstrates, how imperfectly the Addresses of both Houses, at the Beginning of the Session, had been comply'd with; and how solicitously every Thing relating to the Bavarian Treaty, had been thrown into Shadow): But then the Order for the Letters, tho' made the same Day, was not made till after those Papers had been presented: And whether the Letters presented the next Day, by the same Minister, were all that the House requir'd, let the Reader judge from what follows, which is the Order of the House verbatim; to wit: "That Mr. Secretary Vernon do lay before this House, all the Letters and Copies of Letters, which have pass'd between himself and the Earl of Portland in the Years 1698, 1699, or at any other Time, with relation to any Treaty concerning the Partition of the Spanish Dominions."

Order of the House for all Papers, &c.

Besides: The Letters so presented, were but Twenty-four in all; all of them dated between the 14th of August, N.S. and the 7th of November, 1698: And of These, not one was of Mr. Vernon's writing; which also serves to manifest, how little B. Burnet's Narrative is to be depended upon: So that the House were in possession but of one Half of the Correspondence; and it seems, were so well satisfy'd with it, That they made no farther Demand, for farther Information.

Whether the Acquiescence of the House on this Occasion, was the Result of any Remains of Tenderness for the King, who was deeply affected by this Inquisition, or of the Partiality so justly complain'd of by B. Burnet, (which visibly drove the Current of the Prosecution with an Over-violence against some, and yet under such a Management, that it pass'd almost without a Murmur by others) is out of our Power to determine: But in the Account of their Proceedings, publish'd by Order of the House, they took Care to specify, That all the said Letters were dated in the Year 1699.

What Mr. Vernon himself thought proper to say to Lord Manchester on this remarkable Incident, also deserves some Notice; to [Cole, p. 367.] wit: "I had rather you should hear from other Hands, what I have been compell'd to by an Order of the House; and in what Manner it has been push'd to Impeachments against my Lord Somers, Lord Orford, and Lord Hallifax:—But I hope they will not be prosecuted." To which Lord Manchester reply'd, "The obliging People to shew all Letters, will make it impossible to serve the King as one ought, without being expos'd to the Humour of a Party." And Mr. Vernon rejoins as follows: "The producing of Letters, must be allow'd to be an extraordinary Case; and what may occasion great Caution in Correspondencies for the future: But I hope a Thing so circumstanc'd, will never happen again: And for what is pass'd, I must leave it to others who are rightly inform'd, to judge where the Blame originally lay."

A.D. 1701. [Ibid. p. 370.]

To proceed: The Letters so communicated, were referr'd to a Committee to be translated; for tho' relating to the Government of England, and passing between Ministers in the Service of England, they were written in French: On the 14th, these Translations were presented to the House by Sir Godfrey Copley: And having been read, as also the Bavarian Treaty and the Grand Alliance, for the Sake of exposing the Inconsistency of the Two Measures, the Serjeant was order'd to go with his Mace, to summon in the Members from the Courts, and other Places adjacent; which having been done, and the Debate open'd, the Partiality above glanc'd at, became manifest: For, instead of including all the Parties concerned in the Transaction in the same Charge, Mr. Vernon, and Sir Joseph Williamson, who was concern'd with Lord Portland in some of the Letters, and sign'd the Treaty jointly with him, were exempted, and the whole Fury of the Day was pointed against the Lords above-mention'd by Mr. Vernon.

The Letters communicated by Mr. Vernon referr'd to a Committee.

And now it was that Lord Somers, the first of them, came to a Resolution to face the Storm, while it was yet rising, in hope to weather it by the Force of his own Abilities, and his own personal Credit in the House of Commons, which had been greatly serviceable to him, not only in former Parliaments, but even in This: As appear'd by the Issue of the Debate of March 2d, when Kidd's Affair was once more resum'd; and after a long and warm Debate, the Question being put, That a Grant pass'd under the great Seal of England, to Richard Earl of Bellomont and others, of the Goods, Merchandizes, Treasure, and other Things therein granted, which should be taken by Captain Kidd, from Thomas Too, John Ireland, and others in the said Grant mention'd as Pirates, before their Conviction, was illegal and void, it was carry'd in the Negative by 198, against 185, (g).

Matter in Kidd's Grant over-rul'd.

Accordingly,

(g) The next Day an Address was voted, That his Majesty would be pleas'd to give Order, That Kidd might be proceeded against according to Law: Upon which he writ a Letter to Sir Edward Seymour, (who was the Leader in this Prosecution, and who had treated the Grantees on all Occasions at a Corporation of Pirates) desiring to be heard by the House, which was admitted; but what he had to say was so frivolous, that the Journals only say, That he was heard, and that he was remanded back to Newgate. A Rumour, That he had been carry'd to some other Place besides the House of Common, (by which he to be understood the House o lons of the Lords, said to be his Accomplices) also gave rise to an Examination of the Keeper and Turnkeys of Newgate; which, in like Manner, went off in Smoke: And, in short, every Practice, fair or foul, that Artifice could invent, or Malice enforce, was made use of, in hope of extorting fresh Matter against the Accus'd.—But then, the more odious the Authors of these Practices appear, the more Honour belongs, in this Case, to that Majority which could not be induc'd to expose them for any of those Considerations, which, in factious Times, too often constitute both the Strength and Merit of a Party.

And, lastly, in Justice to the Lords involv'd in this Affair, it ought to be remember'd, That the King himself, being certain'd with a Dinner at some Noblemen's House, soon after the Session broke up, took occasion to say at Table, "That if by the Laws of England he might be a Witness, he could, of his own Knowledge, justify the said Lords, in all they had done therein."

State Trials, Temp. Geo. III. Vol. III. p. 251.

As to Kidd, he was try'd for Piracy on the 8th and 10th of May, and executed the 23d following.

A. D. 1701. Lord Somers heard before the House of Commons

Accordingly, having caus'd the House to be inform'd, That he desir'd to be heard, an Order was made for his Admission; and Candles having been first brought in, his Lordship made his Entrance with the Ceremonies usual on the like Occasions: These over, his Lordship rose up, and standing uncover'd at the Back of the Chair assign'd him, began his Apology: Which, it is pretty evident, was at the Expence of the Measure in question.

Bishop Burnet, indeed, tells us, He had obtain'd the King's Leave to tell every Thing, and pretends to give a Sort of Abstract of his Speech: But if that Abstract is a faithful one, his Lordship but ill supported the Dignity and Lustre of the great Character he had establish'd.

But that Historian has drawn his Narrative into Suspicion, by omitting a Circumstance which is upon Record, and which shews, That Lord Somers, on that great Occasion, did not dishonour the rest of his Life.

Before his Admission, it had been order'd, That he should be ask'd from the Chair, Who it was inform'd him, That there was a Debate in the House relating to his Lordship? And the said Question, after he had done speaking, being put to him accordingly, his Lordship made the following Reply; to wit: "That he was strangely surpris'd at a Question, that he never knew was put to any Man that came to desire the Favour of being heard: And that if the Question was ask'd, to bring the least Prejudice to any Man in England, he would not only be content to lye under the Censure of the House, but suffer the worst Thing that might befal him upon Earth, rather than do a dishonorable Thing." After which follows this other Article in the Journals: "And then his Lordship withdrawing, came back, and desir'd, to leave with the House a Letter, his Lordship acquainted the House that he had receiv'd from his Majesty, (and which, he said, he had his Majesty's Leave to acquaint the House with) and also a Copy of his Lordship's Letter, which he sent to his Majesty in Answer thereof; which Letter and Copy his Lordship had mention'd in what he had offer'd to the House, and he left the same accordingly, and then withdrew (b).

This is all that can be deliver'd, with any Certainty, concerning this Event: For of the Debate which follow'd, or even the Names of those who conducted it, on either Side, no specific Mention is made.

And all that the Journals farther report, is, That the Question being put, That John Lord Somers, by advising his Majesty in the Year 1689 to the Treaty for dividing the Spanish Monarchy, whereby large Territories of the King of Spain's Dominions were to be deliver'd up to France, is guilty of a High Crime and Misdemeanour, the House divided; and it was resolv'd in the Affirmative by 198 against 188. A. D. 1701. Votes to impeach him

The like Question was afterwards put in relation to the Earl of Orford and Lord Halifax; and was carry'd on two several Divisions in the Affirmative; to wit: Against Lord Orford, by 193 against 148: And against Lord Halifax, by 186 against 163. As also the Lords Orford and Halifax.

It was also resolv'd, That the said Lords should be severally impeach'd of High Crimes and Misdemeanors at the Bar of the House of Lords, in the Name of the House of Commons, and of all the Commons of England, by Mr. Harcourt, Colonel Byerly, and Mr. Bruges: Which they did accordingly, the next Day; and severally made their Reports thereof to the House.

The Affair of drawing up Articles against them, was then referr'd to the same Committee, to which the drawing up Articles against Lord Portland had been already referr'd: And the said Committe was farther re-inforc'd by the Addition of Mr. Bromley, Mr. Winnington, Mr. Harley, Mr. Scobel, Sir J. Tredenham, Mr. Paget, Sir T. Meeres, Mr. Tredenham, Mr. Brotherton, Colonel Byerly, and Serjeant Hooper.

The Letters, and Copies of Letters, deliver'd to the House by Mr. Vernon; as also the King's Letter to Lord Somers, and Lord Somers's Answers, were also referr'd to the same Committee: And then, as if the Managers of the Prosecution had foreseen the Fate of it, or were resolv'd to anticipate the Effects of it, a Motion was made, and the Question put, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, That he would be pleas'd to remove John Lord Somers from his Council and Presence for ever; upon which the House dividing, it was carry'd in the Affirmative by 162 Voices against 107.

The like Motions were then made against the Lords Orford, Halifax, and Portland, and carry'd successively without a Division.

All were referr'd to the impeaching Committee, which was empower'd by the House to draw up a suitable Address: And such an Address as those Gentlemen thought suitable, was the next Day reported to the House.

And now the Public was entertain'd with one of the most extraordinary Games that ever was play'd between Two Rival Factions for the Countenance of a King, and the Honours and Profits of a Kingdom: For as the Ministers, to exculpate themselves, had loaded the King, their Prosecutors resolv'd to exculpate the King, as far as they could, by loading his Ministers: Thus the Address, as reported by Mr. Bromley, ran as follows.

"Most Gracious Sovereign, Address to remove the said Lords from the King's Presence and Council for ever.

We your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Commons in Parliament assembled, do humbly crave Leave to represent to your Majesty, the great Satisfaction we have from

(b) Of his Behaviour in the House of Lords, when the last Partition-Treaty was in debate there, the following Account is given by Mr. Tindal out of the M. S. before cited: "And the Lord Somers gave so clear an Account of the Share that himself had in it, that there were not Two in the whole House who did not seem satisfy'd with his Behaviour in that Matter. This was signify'd by shouts and Acclamations that were rais'd higher, and continued longer, than some who had sat there long, had ever observ'd before."

Tindal, p. 472.

A.D. 1701. from our late Enquiry concerning the Treaty of Partition, made in the Year 1698, (on which the Treaty of 1699 was founded) to see your Majesty's great Care of your People and this Nation, in not entering into that Negotiation, without the Advice of your English Counsellors: And finding that John Lord Somers, on whose Judgment your Majesty did chiefly rely in that so important Affair, did, in concert with Edward Earl of Orford, and Charles Lord Hallifax, advise your Majesty to enter into that Treaty, of so dangerous Consequence to the Trade and Welfare of this Nation; and who, to avoid the Censure which might justly be apprehended to fall on those who advis'd the same, endeavour to insinuate, That your Majesty, without the Advice of your Council, enter'd into that Treaty, and under your sacred Name, to seek Protection for what themselves had so advis'd: Of which Treatment of your Majesty, we cannot but have a just Resentment: And that they may be no longer able to deceive your Majesty, and abuse your People, we do humbly beseech your Majesty, that you will be pleas'd to remove John Lord Somers, Edward Earl of Orford, and Charles Lord Hallifax, from your Council and Presence for ever; as also William Earl of Portland, who transacted these Treaties, so unjust in their own Nature, and so fatal in their Consequences to this Nation, and the PEACE of EUROPE."

And, instead of forming and proposing any Question which might contribute to expose the disingenuous, designing, malignant Spirit which dictated this Paper, or the strange Expressions it contain'd, of the Satisfaction felt by a Parliament of England, in discovering, that a Measure they had voted to be of the most pernicious Kind, had been advis'd by English Ministers, the adverse Party made no other Use of it, than to graft such an Amendment upon it, as they thought would contribute most to their Re-establishment in the Cabinet; to wit.

Our Amendment admitted.

"And we humbly crave Leave upon this Occasion, to repeat our Assurances to your Majesty, that we will always stand by and support your Majesty, to the utmost of our Power, against all your Enemies, both at Home and Abroad."

However, this Amendment was carry'd without a Division: But when the same Party, encourag'd by this Success, offer'd a Second, in the following Terms, "And to prevent the ill Consequences that seem to threaten the PEACE of EUROPE, and the Interest and Trade of this Nation, by the present Union of France and Spain:" The Addressers, in order to defeat them in the least exceptionable Manner, had recourse to the previous Question which pass'd in the Negative, by 208 Voices against 120.

This was rejected.

This pass'd on the 16th of April: And as it was to be presented to the House in a Body, it was thought but a Point of Decency, to direct such Members as were of the Privy-Council, by a previous Application to his Majesty, to know, When it would be his Pleasure to receive it; of which Process such an Advantage was taken, as seem'd more consonant to the Subtleties of Court, than the Simplicity and Dignity of Parliaments.

A.D.

In the Reign of Charles II. when the Whigs had the Majority in Parliament, and Parliaments, for their Intractability, were in Disgrace at Court, such Addresses as This had been carry'd with a high Hand, against such Lords as were suppos'd to be most in the King's Favour: And if such Addresses were then complain'd of as grievous and unjust on one Side, they were as highly extoll'd on the other: The same Practice being now reviv'd, it produc'd the same Complaints; but with this Difference as to Parties: The Tories follow'd the Precedent they had formerly condemn'd, and the Whigs adopted the Arguments they had formerly exploded: It was now unjust and injurious to pass a Censure, without a previous Hearing of the Persons so censur'd: And under this Pretence, while the Report of the Address was yet in Debate, a Counter-Address was set on foot in the House of Lords; which was contended for with as much Ardour by the Majority there, as the Former had been contended for by the Majority below: In vain it was urg'd by Those in Opposition, That it was contrary to the Method of proceeding in Parliament, to take Notice in one House of what was passing in the Other, on the bare Report of such Lords, as had attended their Debates: And that it was not proper to address the King on a Subject not properly before them; because it might be productive of some Indecency towards his Majesty, and of some such Controversy between the two Houses, as might prove of ill Consequence to the Publick Service: The Lords who made the Motion, resolv'd to carry it thro'; and did so at last, by a Majority of Twenty Voices.

A Counter-Address moved for in the House of Lords, and carry'd.

Twenty-six Lords, however, enter'd their Dissent, and assign'd the most inflammatory Reasons which had arose in the Course of the Debate; and which being afterwards objected to, were by Order expung'd, tho' not without producing another Protest, sign'd by Twenty-two Lords, of whom the Duke of Ormond was one, to this Effect: "That it was the Privilege of the Peers to enter their Dissent, and it had been the antient Practice to enter also the Reasons of their Dissent; of which the Lords so protesting, were the most proper Judges, as best knowing what Arguments their Opinions were grounded upon; and no Reasons being more proper, than such as they conceiv'd to be grounded on Matter of Fact."

But protested against.

The Address was as follows.

The Address.

"We your Majesty's most loyal and dutiful Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in Parliament assembled, beg Leave to represent to your Majesty, that the House of Commons have severally impeach'd at the Bar of our House, William Earl of Portland, John Lord Somers, Edward Earl of Orford, and Charles Lord Hallifax, of High Crimes and Misdemeanors; and they having acquainted us, That they will, in due Time, exhibit particular Articles against the said Lords, and make good the same, we [illegible]

A. D. 1701. most humbly beſeech your Majeſty, that your Majeſty will be pleas'd not to paſs any Cenſure upon them, until they are try'd upon the ſaid Impeachments, and Judgment be given according to the Uſage of Parliament, and Laws of the Land."

The Lords with white Staves were order'd to preſent This to his Majeſty; and Two of them (to wit, the Duke of Devonſhire, and the Earl of Romney, for the Earl of Jerſey found Means to excuſe himſelf from being concern'd in an Office ſo diſagreable to his Party) did preſent it accordingly; but receiv'd no Anſwer: Which Silence, tho' ſo expedient on the King's Side, who found it impoſſible to gratify one Houſe without offending the Other, gave ſo much Diſſatisfaction to their Lordſhips, that They appointed a Committee to enquire, Whether there was any Precedent of the like Behaviour on the like Occaſions.

The King returns no Anſwer.

His Majeſty under Difficulties with reſpect to the two Houſes.

His Majeſty, as it is eaſy to imagine, was now ſurrounded with Difficulties which it was ſcarce in the Power of human Prudence wholly to remove: But as an Adjournment to gain Time for the Application of Palliatives, was the firſt Expedient to be laid hold of, an Adjournment was accordingly obtain'd from Thurſday the 17th, to Wedneſday the 23d of April: Which Interval, by the Way, ſhould have been reckon'd in, when we were accounting above for the Delay of the Succeſſion-Bill; as alſo Another, occaſion'd by two other Adjournments; to wit, from Friday the 25th, to Tueſday the 29th, and from thence to the 2d of May, on Account of the Speaker's being ſeiz'd with a Quinſey, which Diſorder for ſo long render'd him incapable of performing the Service of the Houſe.

Three Adjournments.

That the Two Factions were not idle during the firſt of theſe Adjournments, cannot be ſuppos'd; but how they were employ'd, neither our Hiſtorians nor our Records have reveal'd.

All that we know is, That when the Commons met again, on the 23d that is to ſay, Mr. Secretary Hedges ſignify'd, That his Majeſty had appointed that Afternoon, at Five o'Clock, for the Attendance of the Houſe upon him with their Addreſs: That They did accordingly give their Attendance: And that his Majeſty's Anſwer was a Maſterpiece in Point of Ambiguity: For tho' it ſeem'd to countenance the Requiſition made in the former Part of the Addreſs, the Emphaſis was manifeſtly laid on the Latter; not without an oblique Inſinuation, That the Faction which anſwer'd his Purpoſes beſt, ſhould have the moſt of his Confidence and Favour: For it was conceiv'd as follows.

The King's Anſwer to the Commons Addreſs, which produces a Vote of Thanks.

"I am willing to take all Occaſions of thanking you very heartily, for the Aſſurances you have frequently given me, and now repeat, of ſtanding by and ſupporting me againſt all my Enemies, both at Home and Abroad; towards which, nothing, in my Opinion, can contribute ſo much as a good Correſpondence between me and my People: And therefore you may depend upon it, that I will employ none in my Service, but ſuch as ſhall be thought moſt likely to improve that mutual Truſt and Confidence between us, which is ſo neceſſary in this Conjuncture, both for our own Security, and the Defence and Preſervation of our Allies."

A. D. 1701.

But how ambiguous ſoever this Language appears to us, the Houſe affected to underſtand it ſo well, That, upon the Report, it was reſolv'd, Nemine Contradicente, "That the humble Thanks of the Houſe ſhould be given to his Majeſty for his ſaid moſt gracious Anſwer."

As if, alſo, it was to be, in like Manner, underſtood without Doors, That his Majeſty and his faithful Commons were on the beſt Terms imaginable with each other, Mr. Secretary Hedges, the ſame Day, imparted to that Houſe, by his Majeſty's Command, a Copy of an Extract out of the Regiſter of the States-General, in which they reſolve, not to take any Step in the Negotiation with France, without his Majeſty's Concurrence; and return him their hearty Thanks for the Proviſion he was making for their Aſſiſtance, as before intimated: And, on the other Hand, the Commons agreed to the Reſolution which they had come to in their general Committee the Day before, That an Aid OF 3*s.* in the Pound ſhould be laid on Land, &c. which Vote of Agreement was accompany'd with this remarkable Circumſtance: For it having been mov'd by way of Amendment, That the Word OF ſhould be left out, and the Words NOT EXCEDING ſubſtituted; the Queſtion was put, That OF ſhould ſtand as part of the ſaid Vote, and it was reſolv'd in the Affirmative without a Diviſion: Upon which Text, and the general Diſpoſition of the Houſe, we find a remarkable Comment in Mr. Vernon's Letter to Lord Manchеſter of the ſame Day; to wit: "There ſeems to be a very good Diſpoſition to go on with raiſing the Supplies that have been voted. The Committee voted Yeſterday 3*s.* in the Pound, &c.: And the Houſe have this Day agreed to it: And I ſuppoſe, they deſign to lay another Shilling upon Land, towards diſcharging of Exchequer-Bills."

A Reſolution of the States-General communicated to the Commons.

They vote 3s. in the Pound on Land.

[Cole, p. 374.]

Nor was even This all: For, in the Juſtification of their Proceedings, ſet forth at the End of the Seſſion by Thoſe who had had the Management of it, it is ſaid, "This gracious Anſwer from his Majeſty, went to the very Heart of Thoſe that had all along been endeavouring to create a Miſunderſtanding betwixt the King and the Commons: They had told the King ſtrange Stories what they could do for him, and how much this Houſe of Commons was againſt his Intereſt: But his Majeſty, whoſe Judgment is ſo great and piercing, who always judges by Mens Actions, and not by their Words, (and who had ſufficient Experience of the Fidelity of ſome Perſons, when they were not contented to get vaſt Eſtates in his Service, but muſt, at laſt, endeavour, by ſiniſter Ways and Means to lay their own Crimes upon the innocent and ſacred Perſons of their Prince) ſaw through their thin and Cobweb-Pretences, and abhorr'd ſuch mean and baſe Deſigns, to ſhelter themſelves from Juſtice by a fatal Diviſion, to the Ruin of their native Country."

[P. 22.]

A.D. 1701

But what Uſe ſoever was made of theſe Adjournments, and what Conceſſions ſoever they produc'd, the predominant Party could not be prevail'd upon to go ſuch Lengths in gratifying the Court as their Rivals. On the 2d of May, the Houſe having reſolv'd itſelf into a Committee of Ways and Means, the ſeveral Branches of the Revenue aſſign'd to his Majeſty for the Service of his Houſhold, or Civil-Liſt, were taken into Conſideration; and it being made appear, That, by the Savings which aroſe upon it, from the Non-payment of 50,000*l. per Annum.* allotted as a Dower to King James's Queen, of 30,000*l. per Annum.* fallen in by the Death of Catherine the Queen-Dowager, and of 20,000*l. per Annum* more by the Death of the Duke of Glouceſter, 100,000*l. per Annum.* might be apply'd to the current Service, without any Diminution of the Proviſion intended for his Majeſty, a Queſtion was ſtated and mov'd accordingly.

The Savings ariſing on the Civil-Liſt apply'd to the Current Service.

which diſcredits the Court, and for that Reaſon is oppos'd by the Whigs.

But tho' no Propoſition was ever more reaſonable or equitable than This, ſo averſe was the (i) Court to Reſumptions of every Kind, ſo willing were all thoſe in Office to conſider the ſaid Savings, as the Vails of Royalty, and ſo forward was the whole Body of temporiſing Whigs to lay hold on the Occaſion, to make a Tender of their Services at the Expence of their Principles, that the Matter was hotly debated, and not without ſome Difficulty carry'd in the Committee; for which Reaſon the Report was deferr'd till the 5th, that the whole Poſſe of the Party being call'd in, his Majeſty might be once for all convinc'd, That againſt them the united Efforts of his Veterans, Voluntiers, Huſſars and Swiſs, of every Claſs, would be ineffectual.

Accordingly, on that Day, Mr. Conyers reporting, That he was directed by the ſaid Committee, to move the Houſe for Leave to apply the ſaid Sum, (being part of the Sum of 700,000*l.* granted for the Service of his Majeſty's Houſhold, and other Expences and Occaſions) towards the Payment of the public Debts, the Occaſions for which the ſaid 100,000*l.* was given being ceas'd, it was carry'd in the Affirmative by 214 Voices againſt 169.

On the other Hand, ſcarcely was this Conteſt thus decided, before a Meſſage came from the Lords, to put the Houſe in Mind, "That as yet no particular Articles had been exhibited againſt the Lords impeach'd; which, after Impeachments had been ſo long depending, were due in Juſtice to the Perſons concern'd, and agreeable to the Methods of Parliament in ſuch Caſes." To which, after a due Time of Deliberation, the Commons reply'd, "That the Articles againſt the Lords impeach'd were preparing, and, in a ſhort Time, the Houſe would ſend them up to the Houſe of Lords." A.D.

The Lords again remind the Commons of their Impeachments.

Theſe were the only remarkable Occurrences of this Day; but the next (upon which, according to Order, Sir John Bolles was to have made his Report of the Succeſſion-Bill, as before ſpecify'd) produc'd Others, which, in ſome Reſpects, were yet more remarkable than Theſe.

A Diſſention between the Two Houſes, which had been thus apparently beſpoke, was not likely to have ſo quick an Operation as the Beſpeakers of it deſir'd: It was, therefore, thought expedient to try whether a Flame might not be kindled amongſt the People, by the Help of ſome political Combuſtibles artfully ſcatter'd amongſt them: The Quarter-Seſſions for the Peace was to be held for the County of Kent at Maidſtone, on the 29th of April; and proper Care had been previouſly taken, to create ſuch a Diſpoſition in the Minds of the Yeomanry, &c. of thoſe Parts, as ſhould be ſufficiently favorable to any ſuch Experiment. This appear'd by an Expreſſion familiar in their Mouths, to wit, That They had ſown their Corn, and the French were coming to reap it. Mr. Colepeper, tho' abſent, (where or on what Account, is not ſpecify'd) was choſen Chairman; and his Brethren, we are told, paid him ſuch unuſual Reſpect, that They kept the Chair empty for ſeveral Hours, that it might be fill'd by none but him:.....At laſt, however, he arriv'd; and having taken his Place, the Plot began to open: For we may ſafely ſay, that ſuch Movements as That we are now treating of, are not ſpontaneous:.....Certain Freeholders came into Court, and call'd upon the Chairman to make ſome Application to Parliament, in order to ſet forth the Apprehenſions of the People: The Chairman refers them to the Grand-Jury: The Grand-Jury adopt the Motion, and call upon the Chairman to induce the Bench to concur: The Chairman takes this Office upon him: The Bench agree, and deſire the Chairman to draw up a proper Petition: What he writes they approve, as alſo the Grand-Jury, who ſign it, as we are left to underſtand, one and all: Twenty-three Juſtices ſet their Hands next, and then every other Man whom they could preſs into the Service, during ſeveral Days after: On the 6th of May, Mr. Colepeper, his Brother Mr. Thomas Colepeper, Mr. David Polehill, Mr. Juſtinian Champneys, and Mr. William Hamilton, as Deputies for the Reſt, deliver'd it to Sir Thomas Hales, one of the Knights of the Shire, to be by him preſented to the Houſe: But he having conſulted ſome other Members upon it, and finding it was likely to give great Offence to the Houſe, deſir'd to be excus'd: Upon which Mr. Meredith, his Colleague, officiouſly undertook what the other had declin'd, and on the 7th did preſent it accordingly, under the following Preamble, which Manymen at the Quarter-Seſſions at Maidſtone in Kent, to draw a Petition to the Commons.

The Commons receive and Petition accordingly.

(i) B. Burnet owns, It was very unacceptable to the King: And that the new Miniſters found it no eaſy Thing to maintain, at the ſame Time, their Intereſt both with the King and their Party.

A. D. 1701 which the Presenter thought fit to take, when the House order'd, That the said Petition should be brought up to the Table; namely, The signifying, That several of the Gentlemen who sign'd it, were at the Door ready to own the same: Upon which, the next Order was for their Admission; and being admitted accordingly, they severally did own the said Petition, and their Hands to the same.

They were then order'd to withdraw, and the Petition was read, as follows.

The Petition.

"We the Gentlemen, Justices of the Peace, Grand-Jury, and other Freeholders, at the General Quarter-Sessions at Maidstone, in Kent, deeply concern'd at the dangerous Estate of this Kingdom, and of all Europe; and considering that the Fate of us and our Posterity depends upon the Wisdom of our Representatives in Parliament, think ourselves bound in Duty, humbly to lay before this honourable House the Consequence, in this Conjuncture, of your speedy Resolution, and most sincere Endeavour, to answer the great Trust repos'd in you by your Country: And in regard, that, from the Experience of all Ages it is manifest, no Nation can be great or happy without Union, we hope, that no Pretence whatsoever, shall be able to create a Misunderstanding among ourselves, or the least Distrust of his most sacred Majesty; whose great Actions for this Nation, are writ in the Hearts of his Subjects, and can never, without the blackest Ingratitude, be forgot. We most humbly implore this honourable House to have regard to the Voice of the People, that our Religion and Safety may be effectually provided for, that your loyal Addresses may be turn'd into Bills of Supply, and that his most sacred Majesty (whose propitious and unblemish'd Reign over us we pray God long to continue) may be enabled powerfully to assist his Allies, before it is too late.

And your Petitioners shall ever pray, &c."

Remarks upon it.

As this was manifestly a Charge rather than a Petition, insolently and impertinently deliver'd in the Name of the People; and as, in orderly Times, it was never known that any Branch of the Legislature had ever been so deliberately and formally affronted before, it could not but excite a suitable Indignation in the House.

Formerly, when Parliaments were under a Whigish Direction, they had, in so many Words, refus'd to grant the King a Supply, unless they were made acquainted with his Alliances: They had both censur'd and impeach'd his Ministers: They had committed, without Mercy, whoever had presum'd to arraign their Proceedings: They had even insisted on new-modelling the Succession: And they would hear of no Temperament, tho' any Temperament whatsoever had from Time to Time been offer'd to them from the Throne: During which whole Interval, Opposition seem'd to constitute the Sum of parliamentary Merit; and any Man who had recommended Union, would have been branded as a Traitor to his Country.

And yet the Tories who had been so branded at that Time, for adhering to the Prerogative, and who had now follow'd in all Things the popular Pattern set them by the Whigs, (except in clamoring for a War with France) were, now to be run down by the Populace for that very Reason. A. D. 1701.

But however unjustly treated, and justly provok'd, They would, perhaps, have acted more prudently, in throwing the Kentish Petition with Contempt over the Bar, and dismissing the Petitioners with such a Reprimand as their Folly and Arrogance deserv'd, than in proceding against them as the Hot-Heads of the House resolv'd to do, with all the Severity in their Power.

Practices try'd on the Petitioners to induce them to solicite the Clemency of the House.

It seems, however, that some of the Members did endeavour to moderate Matters, by coming out to the Petitioners during the Debate, and persuading them to make some such Submission, as might recommend them to the Clemency of the House: But the Vanity of being held Men of Consequence in the State, had taken such Possession of them, that they could be brought to make no other Concession than what follows, which they sent in to the House in writing, by the said Members; to wit: "We are humbly of Opinion, That it is our RIGHT to petition this honourable House, according to the Statute of 13 Car. II. And as to the Matter of the Petition, we declare we intend nothing offensive to this honorable House."

The Concession they made.

This not proving satisfactory, it was, on the Issue, resolv'd, without a Division, That the said Petition was scandalous, insolent and seditious, tending to destroy the Constitution of Parliaments, and to subvert the establish'd Government of this Realm; as also, That the said Presenters of it should be taken into the Custody of the Serjeant at Arms; which was done accordingly; and wherein behaving rudely, they were as rudely treated, till the House afterwards thought fit, on the Complaint of the said Serjeant, to send them to the Gate-House; which was carry'd on the Question by 169 Voices against 93. "This (says B. Burnet, whose Sally on this Occasion deserves to be inserted entire, and who not only calls Mr. Colepeper, &c. Persons of Quality, but adds, They were visited during their Imprisonment, and treated as Confessors) was highly censured; it was said, the Commons were the Creatures of the People, and upon all other Occasions, they us'd to favour and encourage Petitions: This Severity was condemn'd, therefore, as unnatural, and without a Precedent: It was much question'd, whether they had really an Authority to imprison any except their own Members, or such as had violated the Privilege of their House: But the Party thought it was convenient, by such an unusual Severity, to discourage others from following the Example set them by those of Kent: For a Design was laid to get Addresses of the same Nature, from all Parts of the Kingdom, chiefly from the City of London. The Ministers represented to the King, what an Indignity this would be to the House of Commons; and that, if he did not discourage it, he might look for unacceptable Things from them: It might rather

The Serjeant order'd to take them into Custody.

They are remov'd to the Gate-House.

A.D. 1701. ther discourage, than give Heart to our Allies, if they should see such a Disjointing, and both City and Country in an Opposition to the House of Commons: Some went in his Name, to the eminent Men of the City, to divert it; yet with all this it came so near, for such an Address, in a Common-Council, that the Lord-Mayor's Vote turn'd it for the Negative, so that fell."

Another Message from the King, accompany'd with a Letter from the States-General, &c.

The other Remarkable of the Day, was a new Message from the King to Mr. Secretary Hedges, accompany'd with another Letter to his Majesty from the States-General, and a Letter of Mr. Stanhope's to Mr. Secretary Hedges; all which, at once serving to display the State of the Negotiations at the Hague, as also the notable Use made of it by the Dutch Regency, to quicken the Motions of England, and to assist us, in forming a true Notion of our parliamentary Procedings, require to be made a Part of our History.

Another Message from the King to the Commons, concerning the Negotiations at the Hague.

"WILLIAM R.

His Majesty having lately receiv'd an Account from Mr. Stanhope, of the present Posture of Affairs in Holland, and likewise a Letter from the States-General, which is of the greatest Importance: And his Majesty, who has so perfect a Knowledge of their Country, being intirely convinc'd of the Hardships of their present Condition, and the great Pressures they now lye under, which are particularly express'd in their Letter, has thought it absolutely necessary to communicate the same to this House, that the Expectations the States have of present Assistance from his Majesty, may more fully appear: And his Majesty does not doubt, but this House will be so justly sensible of those immediate Dangers, to which they stand expos'd, as to take the same into their most serious and effectual Consideration; it being most evident, that the Safety of England, as well as the very Being of Holland, does very much depend upon your Resolution in this Matter."

The States-General's Letter to the King.

The States-General's Letter to the King.

"SIR,

After the Protestations, which we have made to your Majesty in our last Letter, of the 23d of April, not to enter into any Negotiation with France, but in concert with England, we have thought fit to ask of the Count d'Avaux, Ambassador Extraordinary of his Most Christian Majesty, if he was inclin'd and authoris'd to re-enter into the Negotiation, in the Manner it was begun, in conjunction with the Minister of your Majesty; as you may see by our Resolution of the 2d of this Month, here annex'd. Count d'Avaux, having sent this to his Most Christian Majesty, presented us, after the Return of his Courier, with the Memorial, of which we join likewise a (k) Copy to this Letter. We have immediately communicated it to Mr. Stanhope, Envoy Extraordinary from your Majesty; and, after having concerted with him about it, we found, in the said Memorial, certain Obscurities, which made us doubt of its true Sense: For that Reason, we thought it necessary, to shew the Count d'Avaux the Letter, which we did ourselves the Honour to write to your Majesty, on the 23d of April last, and our Engagements to take no Measures in the Negotiation, but in concert with you. The Count d'Avaux answer'd our Deputies, That he was come hither only to treat about Means to preserve the general Peace, and to establish our particular Security: That, if we concert on this with your Majesty, he had nothing to say against it; and that he was contented, that your Majesty's Envoy should assist at the Conferences to be held about this; but that he was not at all authoris'd to enter into a Negotiation with us, about the Interests of England, which were to be treated of elsewhere. Upon this, our Deputies represented, That, in the Conferences about a general Peace, your Majesty was equally concern'd with us: That our Security could not, by any Means, be seperated from that of England: That the two Nations had, in this, a common Interest; and that we could not but look upon your Majesty as a principal Party concern'd, as much as we, in the present Negotiations, without our injuring your Majesty. But, notwithstanding several Instances of our Deputies, and all the Reasons they could alledge, Count d'Avaux persisted in the forementioned Answer, saying, That he had no other Orders: That he would send our Resolution (of which your Majesty will here see the Copy) to the Court of France, without giving the least Hopes of an Answer conformable to our Sentiments. Upon the Report, which has been made to us, we have judg'd, that thus they would seperate the Interests of England from those of our Republic. We look upon them as inseparable; and, as it is a plain Case that they are so, we could draw no other Conclusion from this Proceding, but that, on the Side of France, there was a Design to end the Conferences, and to consent to none of the Securities demanded, which are so necessary to the Preservation of the Kingdoms of (k) To wit.

A.D. 1701.

"The under-written Ambassador Extraordinary of the Most Christian King to your Lordships, has sent to the King his Master, the Resolution which you have deliver'd him on the 3d of this Month; by which you shew the Desire you have that the Conferences, which have been begun with him, for the Preservation of the Peace, and for the Establishment of your particular Security, be resum'd conjointly with the Envoy of the King of England: your Lordships declaring at the same Time, That you desire nothing more ardently, than to see that Negotiation soon ended by a good and happy Conclusion: His Majesty, to whom the under-written Ambassador has given an Account of the Answer he made to your Lordships, in relation to the Admission of the Envoy of England, has intirely approv'd of it: Nor has he less approv'd the Assurances which your Lordships give in the Name of the Desire you have to preserve the Peace; and as his Majesty persists in the same Resolution to maintain the general Repose, he will see, with Pleasure, that Means may be found the most conformable to the general Good of Europe, and to secure its Tranquility. It is with this View, that, as soon as he knew that your Lordships had propos'd to re-commence the Conferences, he consented that the under-written should renew them, and that he should * remain at the Hague for that Reason.

Sign'd, The Count d'Avaux.

* He had before signify'd to the Pensionary, That he had Orders to return.

A.D. 1701. of your Majesty, and of our Republic. We are oblig'd to give your Majesty Notice of all this: We protest, that our Interests being the same with those of your Majesty, in this Negotiation, and inseparable one from the other, we shall not suffer them to be divided in any Manner. In the mean while, Sir, we cannot but represent to your Majesty, the pressing Occasion we have to be assisted, without Loss of Time, if we will prevent the Ruin we are threaten'd with, and the apparent Danger in which we are: You know, to the Bottom, the State of our Affairs; and you can easily judge if it be possible, in the Situation in which we are, to resist Forces so much superior, as those of France are: It is that which makes us desire, with so much Earnestness, the Execution of the Treaty, which receiv'd the Approbation of the Parliament, in the Year 1678, betwixt King Charles II. of glorious Memory, and this State. We repeat, now, our most earnest Instances to have quickly the stipulated Succours, and the intire Execution of the said Treaty: We flatter ourselves, that your Majesty will make a serious Reflection on the Condition in which we are, particularly after the positive Assurances which you have given us, that the Resolutions of your Parliament, were to interest themselves vigorously in our Preservation, and to assist us in the Necessity in which we are, by furnishing the Succours we are agreed about. We will tell you, Sir, in what Condition France puts itself; and your Majesty will judge, by that, if our Fear, which reanimates our Demands, be ill founded. France, not contented with having taken possession of all the Places in the Netherlands that remain'd to Spain, has thrown into them, and causes, actually, every Day, formidable Forces to march thither: They draw a Line from the Scheld, near Antwerp, to the Maese: They are going to begin to draw such a Line, according to our Advices, from Antwerp to Ostend: They send a numerous Artillery into the Places, that are nearest to our Frontiers: They make, with great Diligence, many Magazines in Flanders, in Brabant, in Guelderland, and at Namur, which they fill up with all Sorts of Ammunition for War and Subsistence, besides the great Stores for Forage, which they gather from all Parts: They build Forts under the Cannon of our Places: Besides, they have work'd, and work still, continually, to draw the Princes, that are our Friends, from our Interest, to make them enter into their Alliance, or to engage them to a Neutrality at least. In short, by Intrigues and Divisions in the Empire, they make our Friends useless, and increase those of France. Thus we are almost surrounded, on all Sides, except on the Side of the Sea. See here, Sir, without any Disguise, the true Situation, to which we find ourselves reduc'd, without adding any Thing to what is Fact: This makes us hope, that, as your Majesty understands our Affairs perfectly well, you will agree with us, that, at present, our Condition is worse than it was during the late War, and worse than if we were actually at War; whilst they make Forts under the Cannon of our strong Places, and Lines along our Frontiers, without our being able to hinder it, as we might do, if we were at War. A.D. 1701.

These Reasons oblige us to put ourselves in a State of Defence, more than if we were actually attack'd, by overflowing our Country, and even to cut the Dikes, to secure our Frontiers: We are forc'd to employ these Means, and all those we could bear in an open War; so that our Subjects suffer, already, more than they did during the last War. Hitherto, the Winter has serv'd us as a Sort of Security: That Season is over, and we are at the Brink of being invaded and overturn'd every Moment, if we do not get prompt Succours. We promise ourselves, Sir, that it will come from your Side, especially, since it has pleas'd your Majesty to assure us, that your Parliament had taken Resolutions that were favourable for us. As our Necessity is pressing, we pray you to consider well the Extremity in which we are, and the Impossibility of avoiding our intire Ruin, and the Overthrow of our Republic, if we are left in this Condition. We believe, Sir, that the Interests of England are so strictly united with ours, that we would sooner expose ourselves to all Hazards, than suffer that they should be separated, or take any Measures, but in concert with your Majesty. It is quite unnecessary to represent to you, that the Preservation of your own Kingdoms, ought to induce you to prevent our Ruin, whilst we believe their Loss to be inseparable from ours. The Reasons, Sir, are better known to you than to us, as well as the fatal Consequences to which we are expos'd, by leaving us in this Condition. This convinces us, that your Majesty will direct every Thing by your consummate Wisdom, and the good Intentions of your Parliament, in such a Manner, as to shew to all Europe, that nothing is more advantageous to it, than the Alliances with England, and its Friendship. As for us, we expect, without delay, the Accomplishment of the above-nam'd Treaty: And, we pray God, Sir, to preserve the sacred Person of your Majesty in long Health, and your Dominions in a flourishing Prosperity.

Your Majesty's very humble Servants,

Hague, May 13. 1701. The States-General of the United Provinces of the Netherlands.

J. Van Wicher,

By their Order, F. Fagel."

Mr. Stanhope's Letter to Mr. Secretary Hedges.

"SIR,

The Conference, I told you in my last, the States Deputies had invited me to, for next Morning, was to acquaint me in form with the Count d'Avaux's last Memorial; a Copy whereof I then also sent you; and to consider what was fit to be done next: I answer'd, That was wholly their Business, and not properly Mine, farther than to serve them, as I should be always ready to do: For as to all Affairs of the King my Master,

A. D. 1701. fter, I was as much excluded from the Conferences by this Memorial, as by M. d'Avaux's former Anſwer; and deſir'd it might be read before them. They were all of the ſame Opinion. I propos'd then, That it would be convenient to be inform'd, Whether M. d'Avaux underſtood it in the ſame Manner? Which they approv'd, and, conſidering of the Manner, it was agreed, the only proper Way for them was, to demand a Conference with him. To That the Penſioner objected, That having had one Conference already without me, if they ſhould have Another, it might give Occaſion to ſome Ill-minded People to blow it abroad, as if the States were treating of ſomething for their own particular Intereſts, ſeperate from Thoſe of England: I eaſily obviated That, by ſaying, That as I had repreſented to his Majeſty, their former Conference in quite different Colours, as a Product of their great Reſpect and Veneration of his Majeſty, that they would not expoſe his Miniſter to M. d'Avaux's Caprices, till they knew from himſelf, How He ſhould be receiv'd: And the Conference now propos'd would be juſtify'd by the ſame Reaſons, ſince it was deſign'd only for the farther clearing of the ſame Point, as I engag'd to inform you that it was. Being ſatisfy'd with this, they reſolv'd on a Conference; and, after having had it at Five in the Evening Yeſterday, they deſir'd me to meet their Deputies this Morning at Eleven, and deliver'd me the inclos'd Copy of their Reſolution, which was the Subſtance of the Conference on their Part. M. d'Avaux's Anſwer was, He had no Orders to admit me at the Conference with them on any other Terms; but upon their repeated Inſtances ſaid, He would write again to the King his Maſter, for a farther Eclaircifſment, tho' he believ'd nothing would be alter'd. I found them in great Apprehenſions of ſome ſudden Invaſion from the French, by freſh Advices from Flanders, of extraordinary Motions of their Troops there; and of Letters (meaning Orders no doubt) writ to the Governors of all the Towns, not to be open'd till ſuch a Day; and then to be immediately executed all on the ſame Day; of more Forces coming into the Country, and Tranſports of prodigious Quantities of Cannon, Mortars, Bombs, and Ammunition from ſeveral Parts towards their Frontiers: And for theſe Reaſons, They reſolv'd to write this Poſt to M. Guildermaſſon, to move his Majeſty again for the Succours they expected from England, and deſir'd me to do the ſame, as I perform, by letting you know it."

Theſe were the Contents of the ſaid ſeveral Papers; and that the Houſe might have due Time for Reflection, they poſtpon'd the Conſideration of them till the next Day.

Articles againſt Lord Orford, reported, approv'd, and ſent up to the Lords.

After which, in order to convince the Lords, they were not unmindful of the Impeachments they had undertook, they went thro' the Articles prepar'd by their Committee againſt the Earl of Orford, and reported by Sir Bartholomew Shower; which having been read, Paragraph by Paragaph, were order'd to be engroſs'd: Nor did they A. D. 1701. loſe ſight of them the next Day, till they had ſent them up to the Houſe of Lords by Colonel Byerly, with Order to demand, That the Earl of Orford ſhould give ſufficient Security to abide the Judgment of the Houſe of Lords.

Having thus given an Earneſt of their Intention to carry on the Proſecution they had commenc'd, they took his Majeſty's laſt Meſſage, &c. into Conſideration: And after the Contents had been thoroughly debated, Reſolv'd, Nemine Contradicente, "That they would effectually aſſiſt his Majeſty to ſupport his Allies, in maintaining the Liberty of Europe, and would immediately provide Succours for the States General, according to the Treaty of 1677." Which was, certainly, a more conſiderable Advance towards the Purpoſes of the Court, than ever they had made before. Hitherto they had confin'd their Regards to the States only: But now a new Propoſition was admitted; and the Phraſe they made uſe of in relation to the Liberty of Europe, could not be call'd equivocal, as That of the Peace of Europe, ſo often before contended for, certainly was. They alſo reſolv'd, That the ſaid Vote ſhould be preſented to his Majeſty by the whole Houſe: And that his Majeſty ſhould be addreſs'd for an Eſtimate of the Charge of the Succours ſo to be provided.

The very next Day was appointed by his Majeſty for the Attendance of the Houſe with this welcome Vote: And the Anſwer he gave to it, which follows, fully demonſtrates, (if Words can demonſtrate any Thing) That he was fully ſatisfy'd with it: To wit.

" Gentlemen,

I return you my hearty Thanks for the ready Aſſurances you give me of providing immediate Succours for the States-General, and for the Zeal you expreſs for the common Cauſe: I know nothing that can be more effectual for its Support, both at Home and Abroad, than the unanimous Concurrence which you have ſhewn upon this Occaſion: And it will be a particular Satisfaction to me, in my Time, to revive the Glory which the Engliſh Nation has formerly had of maintaining the Liberty and Ballance of Europe."

It is, beſides, extremely remarkable, That the very next Day after the Commons attended the King with the ſaid Vote, Count Wratiſlaw, the Imperial Envoy, drew up a Memorial to his Majeſty, in which he ſet forth the Danger to be apprehended from the exceſſive Power of France by its late Union with Spain, the Injury done to his Imperial Majeſty by that Union, and the Reſolution of his Imperial Majeſty to vindicate his Rights, and oppoſe ſo formidable an Innovation, with all his Power: After which, admitting the Difficulty and Danger of the Undertaking, and that he had no other Confidence but in the Juſtice of his Cauſe, and the Aſſiſtance of the confederated Kings and Princes, among whom his Majeſty had the principal Place, he procedes to demand the Succours

Count Wratiſlaw's Memorial. [Coll. p. 385.]

A.D. 1701. ſtipulated by the Grand-Alliance: As if the ſaid Alliance was ſtill in Force, tho' it had been ſo notoriouſly diſſolv'd by the Treaty of Ryſwick, and the two Partition-Treaties which follow'd it.

And tho' Mr. Cole has not favour'd us with any one Letter of Mr. Vernon's at or about this Criſis, that is to ſay, from May 1, to June 2, his Collection contains one from Lord Manchester dated May 18, N. S. in which having obſerv'd, That the Court of France had order'd Twenty Battalions and Thirty-ſix Squadrons, which had been deſign'd for the Rhine, to march for Flanders, he afterwards procedes in theſe Words:

[P. 386.] "This will increaſe the Apprehenſions of the States-General: But as long as England acts, as it has lately done, their Fears will be eaſily remov'd. I am apt to think, that this Reſolution of ſending more Troops to Flanders, was taken upon the News from England: I cannot yet give any Judgment what Effect it will have here; tho' I can aſſure you, it is what they did not expect. I am ſatisfy'd, that the Nation will take Care of itſelf, notwithſtanding our Factions and Intrigues. The King's Anſwer to the Commons, will certainly pleaſe the Nation; and I hope the Lords will receive the like Anſwer."

Thus we have Evidence upon Evidence, That the Vote of the Commons contain'd all that was eſſential at that Period to the public Service, or that could be rationally requir'd of the King by his Allies.

But the more notorious This was, the more neceſſary Thoſe who had the Aſcendency in the Houſe of Lords held it, to lower the Credit they had obtain'd thereby: And the Method they took for that Purpoſe, was to procure ſuch an Addreſs by way of Anſwer to the King's Meſſage, as ſhould not only ſurpaſs the ſaid Vote on every Court-Topic, but alſo ſaddle their Adverſaries with as great a Weight of Odium, on Account of the preſent diſorder'd State of Europe, as They themſelves had been loaded with on Account of the Two Partition-Treaties.

Accordingly, ſuch an Addreſs they did procure; and the Terms they made uſe of, were as follow.

The Lords Addreſs. "We your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, return your Majeſty our moſt humble Thanks, for communicating to us the Letter from the States-General to your Majeſty: It gives us an Opportunity (with great Satisfaction) to repeat to your Majeſty the Aſſurances of our Duty, and Zeal for your Service: And we take this Occaſion further to aſſure your Majeſty, we are very ſenſible of the great and imminent Danger, to which the States-General are at preſent expos'd: And we do perfectly agree with them in believing, that their Safety and ours are ſo inſeparably united, that whatſoever is Ruin to the one, muſt be fatal to the other: And we humbly deſire your Majeſty will be pleas'd, not only to make good all the Articles of any former Treaty to the States-General, but that you will enter into a ſtrict League, offenſive and defenſive, with them, for our common Preſervation; and that you will invite into it all Princes and States, who are concern'd in the preſent viſible Danger, ariſing from the Union of France and Spain: And we farther deſire your Majeſty, that you will be pleas'd to enter into ſuch Alliances with the Emperor, as your Majeſty ſhall think fit, perſuant to the Ends of the Treaty of 1689. Towards all which, we aſſure your Majeſty of our hearty and ſincere Aſſiſtance, not doubting, but, whenever your Majeſty ſhall be oblig'd to engage for the Defence of your Allies, and the ſecuring the Liberty and Quiet of Europe, Almighty God will protect your ſacred Perſon in ſo righteous a Cauſe; and that the Unanimity, Wealth and Courage of your Subjects will carry your Majeſty, with Honour and Succeſs, thro' all the Difficulties of a juſt War. And, in the laſt Place, with great Grief, we take Leave humbly to repreſent to your Majeſty, That the Dangers, to which your Kingdoms and your Allies have been expos'd, are chiefly owing to the fatal Councils, that prevented your Majeſty's ſooner meeting your People in Parliament."

Thus, in direct Contradiction to the Sentence ſo boldly pronounc'd in the Kentiſh Petition, That his Majeſty's Reign was unblemiſh'd, both Parties in turn, charge him to his Face with having been directed by fatal Councils: And yet we are told, in the Extracts taken by Mr. Tindal from the M. S. in his Poſſeſſion, "That ſo tender was one of theſe Parties to the King, (meaning That which prevail'd in the Houſe of Lords) and ſo unwilling to find Fault where his Majeſty's Honour was engag'd, That they choſe rather to let his Acknowledgment of the King of Spain, without the Concurrence of his Parliament, paſs in Silence, than to perplex his Mind as well as his Affairs with new Complaints."

The Addreſs was preſented to the King May 14: His Majeſty's Anſwer was in theſe Words.

His Majeſty's Anſwer. "My Lords,

I thank you for the Expreſſions you make of your Duty and Zeal to my Service, and the Concern you ſhew for the imminent Danger, to which the States-General are at preſent expos'd: I ſhall take into Conſideration your Deſires to me, of entering into new Meaſures with them and other Princes and States for our common Preſervation: And you may be ſure, it ſhall be always my Care to make ſuch Alliances with our Neighbours, as may tend to our own and their greateſt Security; which will be the moſt effectual Means to raiſe the Honour of the Engliſh Nation, in our Days, to the Reputation it hath maintain'd in any former Times."

And while the ſaid Addreſs yet lay on the Lords Table, (on the 13th, that is to ſay) Thoſe of the oppoſite Party, in the Houſe of Commons, by way of Reprisal, mov'd, "That a farther humble Addreſs ſhould be be presented to his Majesty, That he would be graciously pleas'd effectually to answer the Address of the House, for removing the Lords Somers, Orford, Halifax, and Portland, from his Councils and Presence for ever; and on a Division, carry'd their Point by 134 Voices against 111.

A. D. 1701. A Second Address from the Commons to remove the Lords impeach'd, &c.

But the King, who began now to trim between the two Parties with more Nicety than ever, continued mute notwithstanding: And the very next Day after this Motion was thus carry'd, and while the Lords were parading with their Address to Kensington, such an Outrage was offer'd to the House of Commons, as shew'd there was a daring, licentious Spirit Abroad, capable of any Kind of Practice, to serve any Kind of Purpose. A Packet was put into the Hands of the Speaker, by a Woman it was first said, and, afterwards by the Writer of it, surrounded with Sixteen Gentlemen of Quality, who, if any Notice had been taken of him, were ready, as we are also told, to carry him off by Force. This Packet was compos'd of a Letter to the (l) Speaker, and a Memorial to the House: The Letter containing a vin-

A. D. 1701. [The Legion Letter. Hist. of Ass. Pref. 400.]

(l) The said Libel and Letter were conceiv'd and express'd as follows.

" Mr. Speaker,

The enclos'd Memorial you are charg'd with in the Behalf of many thousands of the good People of England.

There is neither Popish, Jacobite, Seditious, Court or Party-Interest concern'd in it: but Honesty and Truth: You are commanded by 200,000 Englishmen, to deliver it to the House of Commons; and to inform them, that it is no Banter, but serious Truth; and a serious Regard to it is expected: Nothing but Justice and their Duty is requir'd; and it is requir'd by them, who have both a Right to require, and Power to compel, viz. the PEOPLE of ENGLAND.

We could have come to the House strong enough to oblige them to hear us, but we have avoided any Tumults, not desiring to embroil, but to save our native Country.

If you refuse to communicate it to them, you will find Cause in a short Time to repent it.

The MEMORIAL.

To the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses in Parliament assembled.

A Memorial, from the Gentlemen, Freeholders and Inhabitants of the Counties of ——— in Behalf of themselves, and many thousands of the good People of England.

Gentlemen.

It were to wish'd you were Men of that Temper, and possess'd of so much Honour, as to bear with the Truth, tho' it be against you; especially from us, who have so much Right to tell it you: But since, even Petitions to you from your Masters,—(for such are the People who chose you) are so haughtily receiv'd, as with the committing the Authors to illegal Custody, you must give us Leave, to give you this fair Notice of your Misbehaviour.

If you think fit to rectify your Errors, you will do well, and possibly may hear no more of us; but if not, assure yourselves, the Nation will not long hide their Resentments: And tho' there are no stated Proceedings to bring you to your Duty, yet the great Law of Reason says, and all Nations allow, That whatever Power is above Law, is burthensome and tyrannical, and may be reduc'd by extraordinary Methods: You are not above the Peoples Resentments; they that made you Members, may reduce you to the same Rank from whence they chose you; and may give you a Taste of their abus'd Kindness, in Terms you may not be pleas'd with: When the People of England assembled in Convention, presented the Crown to his present Majesty, they annex'd a Declaration of the Rights of the People, in which was express'd what was illegal and arbitrary in the former Reign, and what was claim'd as of Right to be done by succeeding Kings of England.

In like Manner, here follows, Gentlemen, a short Abridgment of the Nation's Grievances, and of your illegal and unwarrantable Practices; and a Claim of Right, which we make in the Name of ourselves, and such of the good People of England, as are justly alarm'd at your Proceedings.

1. To raise Funds for Money, and declare, by borrowing Clauses, that whosoever advance Money on those Funds, shall be reimburs'd out of the next Aids, if the Funds fall short; and then give subsequent Funds, without transferring the Deficiency of the Former, is a horrible Cheat on the Subject who lent the Money, a Breach of public Faith, and destructive to the Honour and Credit of Parliaments.

2 To imprison Men who are not your own Members, by no Proceedings, but a Fate of your House, and to continue them in Custody, sine die, is illegal, a notorious Breach of the Liberty of the People, setting up a dispensing Power in the House of Commons, which your Fathers never pretended to; a bidding Defiance to the Habeas Corpus Act, which is the Bulwark of personal Liberty; destructive of the Laws, and betraying the Trust repos'd in you: The King, at the same Time, being oblig'd to ask you Leave, to continue in Custody the horrid Assassinators of his Person.

3. Committing to Custody those Gentlemen, who, at the Command of the People (whose Servants you are) came in a peaceable Way to put you in Mind of your Duty, is illegal and injurious; destructive of the Subjects Liberty of Petitioning for Redress of Grievances, which has, by all Parliaments before you, been acknowledg'd to be their undoubted Right.

4. Voting a Petition from the Gentlemen of Kent insolent, is ridiculous and impertinent; because the Freeholders of England are your Superiors; and is a Contradiction in itself, and a Contempt of the English Freedom, and contrary to the Nature of parliamentary Power.

5. Voting People guilty of Bribery and ill Practices, and committing them as aforesaid, without Bail, and then, upon Submission and Kneeling to your House, discharging them, after exacting exorbitant Fees by your Officers, is illegal, betraying the Justice of the Nation, selling the Liberty of the Subjects, encouraging the Extortion and Villainy of Goalers and Officers, and discountenancing the legal Prosecution of Offenders in the ordinary Course of Law.

6. Prosecuting the Crime of Bribery in some, to serve a Party, and then proceeding no further, tho' Proof lay before you, is partial and unjust, and a Scandal upon the Honour of Parliaments.

7. Voting the Treaty of Partition fatal to Europe, because it gave so much of the Spanish Dominions to the French, and not concerning yourselves to prevent their taking possession of it all: DESERTING the Dutch, when the French are at their Doors, till it be almost too late to help them, is unjust to our Treaties, and unkind to our Confederates, dishonourable to the English Nation, and shew you very negligent of the Safety of England, and of our Protestant Neighbours.

8. Ordering immediate Hearings to trifling Petitions, to please Parties in Elections; and postponing the Petition of a Widow, (meaning Mary Stout, of Hertford, presented March 13.) for the Blood of her murder'd Daughter, without giving it a reading, is an illegal Delay of Justice, and dishonourable to the public Justice of the Nation.

9. Addressing the King to displace his Friends, upon bare Surmises, before the legal Trial, or any Article prov'd, is illegal, and inverting the Law, and making Execution go before Judgment, contrary to the true Sense of the Law, which esteems every Man a good Man, till something appears to the contrary.

10. Delaying Proceedings upon capital Impeachments, to blast the Reputation of the Person, without proving the Fact, is illegal and oppressive, destructive to the Liberty of Englishmen, a Delay of Justice, and a Reproach of Parliaments.

11. Suffering saucy, indecent Reproaches upon his Majesty's Person, to be publicly made in your House, particularly that impudent Scandal of Parliament, John How, without shewing such Resentments as you ought to do; the said John How saying openly, That his Majesty had made a seditious Treaty to rob his Neighbours; insinuating, that the Partition Treaty (which was every way as just as blowing up one Man's House to save another's) was a Combination of the King to rob the Crown of Spain of its due: This is making a Billingsgate of the House, and setting up to bully your Sovereign, contrary to the Intent and Meaning of the Freedom of Speech, which you claim as a Right; is scandalous to Parliaments, undutiful and unmannerly, and a Reproach to the whole Nation.

12. Your Speaker exacting the exorbitant Rate of 10*s. per diem* for the Votes, and giving the Printer Encouragement to raise it on the People, by selling them at 4*d.* per Sheet, is an illegal and arbitrary Exaction, dishonourable to the House, and burdensome to the People.

13. Neglecting to pay the Nation's Debts, compounding for Interest, and postponing Petitions, is illegal, and dishonourable, and destructive of the public Faith.

14. Publicly neglecting the great Work of Reformation of Manners, tho' often press'd to it by the King, is the great Dishonour of God, and Encouragement of Vice, is a Neglect of your Duty, and an Abuse of the Trust reposed in you by God, his Majesty, and the People.

15. Being scandalously vicious yourselves, both in your Minds and Religion, lewd in Life, and erroneous in Doctrine, having public Blasphemers, and impudent Abusers of our Saviour's Divinity among you, and suffering them unreprov'd and unpunish'd, to the infinite Regret of all good Christians, and the just Abhorrence of the whole Nation.

Wherefore, in a sad Prospect of the impending Ruin of our native Country, while Parliaments (which ought to be the Security and Defence of our Laws and Constitution) [illegible]

A. D. 1701. lent Invective againſt what they had done, and a Courſe of arrogant Clames and Preſcriptions to make them acquainted with their Duty: And the Former, charging the Speaker to apply this Petard to the Houſe, under an inſolent Menace, That, otherwiſe, he would ſoon have Cauſe to repent it.

On the Day before it was deliver'd, the Houſe had addreſs'd his Majeſty to put the ſeveral Preſenters of the Kentiſh Petition out of the Commiſſion of the Peace: And the Day it was deliver'd, the younger Colepeper, who had made his Eſcape from the Serjeant, ſurrender'd himſelf: Whence a Report prevail'd, That he had brought this Packet out of Kent; and that the whole Country were at his Heels to make it good; which prov'd to be Report only.

The Sentiments of our Hiſtorians concerning it.

Of this wicked and audacious Inſult to the Legiſlature, B. Burnet, however, makes not the leaſt Mention: But B. Kennet, having at firſt call'd the Memorial a Libel, and the Letter to the Speaker a very inſolent Letter, not only interweaves a conſiderable Part of it in the Body of his Work, but alſo pronounces upon it, "That a Number of prudent, ſober Men, who did not approve of the Wording, or Way of ſending this Memorial, were apt to think the Subject-matter of it, for the moſt Part, true and reaſonable:" And Oldmixon, who aſſerts, That de Foe, (once a Hoſier of London, but now a Party-Writer) had, in his Hearing, taken to himſelf the Honour of being the Author of this Paper, will not believe him capable of it; and afterwards ſuggeſts, That Thoſe who were concern'd in it, were at leaſt a Match for the beſt Lawyers in the Houſe.

It puts the Houſe into a great Ferment.

In what Manner it was communicated to the Houſe, or whether at all according to Form, does not appear by the Journals: All that we find, there is, That the Serjeant having been order'd to go his Rounds with the Mace, to ſummon ſuch Members as he ſhould find to attend the Service of the Houſe, a Complaint was made, of Endeavours to raiſe Tumults and Sedition in order to diſturb the public Affairs; and it was order'd thereon, That a Committee be appointed, to draw up an Addreſs, humbly to lay before his Majeſty, the Endeavours of ſeveral ill-diſpos'd Perſons to raiſe Tumults and Sedition in the Kingdom; and humbly to beſeech his Majeſty, That he will provide for the public Peace and Security. The Committee ſo appointed, conſiſted of Fifty-three Perſons: They were to meet the ſame Day at Five o'Clock in the Speaker's Chamber: They were empower'd to ſend for Perſons, Papers and Records; and were directed to ſit de Die in Diem:.....But, having thought better of it, no Report was call'd for, and the whole Affair was ſilently let fall. A. D. 1701.

That, however, the Houſe was in no ſmall Ferment, appears from a Minute in the Journals, which intimates, That ſuch warm Words had paſs'd between Sir William Strickland and Mr. How, that the Authority of the Houſe was made uſe of to prevent Conſequences: As alſo, from a Paragraph of another Piece, of the ſame brazen Author's, call'd Legions new Paper, or Second Memorial, wherein it is ſaid, That Mr. How, in the Courſe of the Debate ſaid, He was in fear of his Life: That ſeveral other Members were frighted into the Country; and that, in general, the whole Houſe was frighted out of their Wits, as appear'd by their ſenſeleſs Addreſs to his Majeſty, to defend himſelf againſt his People, which they were afterwards aſham'd to preſent.

And it is certain, That in proportion as the Public grew more and more infatuated with their Reſentments againſt France, and their their Truſt, and abuſe the People whom they ſhould protect: And no other Way being left us, but the Force which we are very loth to make uſe of, that Poſterity may know we did not inſenſibly fall under the Tyranny of a prevailing Party, we do hereby claim and declare,

---

1. That it is the undoubted Right of the People of England, in caſe their Repreſentatives in Parliament do not proceed according to their Duty, and the Peoples Intereſt, to inform them of their Diſlike, diſown their Actions, and to direct them to ſuch Things as they think fit, either by Petition, Addreſs, Propoſal, Memorial, or any other peaceable Way.

2. That the Houſe of Commons, ſeparately, and otherwiſe than by Bill legally paſs'd into an Act, have no legal Power to ſuſpend, or diſpenſe with, the Laws of the Land, any more than the King has by his Prerogative.

3. That the Houſe of Commons have no legal Power to impriſon any Perſon, or commit them to the Cuſtody of Serjeants, or otherwiſe, (their own Members excepted) but ought to addreſs the King to cauſe any Perſon, on good Grounds, to be apprehended; which Perſon ſo apprehended, ought to have the Benefit of the Habeas Corpus Act, and be fairly brought to a Trial by due Courſe of Law.

4. That, if the Houſe of Commons, in Breach of the Laws and Liberties of the People, do betray the Truſt repoſ'd in them, and act negligently, arbitrarily and illegally, it is the undoubted Right of the People of England to call them to an Account for the ſame; and by Convention, Aſſembly, or Force, may proceede againſt them as Traitors and Betrayers of their Country.

Theſe Things we think proper to declare, as the undoubted Right of the People of England, whom you ſerve: And in purſuance of that Right, avoiding the Ceremony of petitioning our Inferiors, for ſuch you are by your preſent Circumſtances, (the Perſon ſent is leſs than the Sender) we do publickly proteſt againſt all your aforeſaid Actions; and, in the Name of ourſelves, and all the good People of England, do require and demand,

1. That all the public, juſt Debts of the Nation be forthwith paid and diſcharg'd.

2. That all Perſons illegally impriſon'd, as aforeſaid, be either immediately diſcharg'd, or admitted to Bail, as by Law they ought to be; and the Liberty of the Subject recogniz'd and reſtor'd.

3. That John Hora, aforeſaid, be oblig'd to ask his Majeſty Pardon for his vile Reflections, or be immediately expell'd the Houſe.

4. That the growing Power of France be taken into Conſideration, the Succeſſion of the Emperor to the Crown of Spain ſupported, and our Proteſtant Neighbours protected, as the true Intereſt of England and the Proteſtant Religion requires.

5. That the French King be oblig'd to quit Flanders, or that his Majeſty be addreſs'd to declare War againſt him.

6. That ſuitable Supplies be granted to his Majeſty, for the putting all theſe neceſſary Things in execution; and that care be taken, that ſuch Taxes as are rais'd, be more equally aſſeſs'd and collected, and ſcandalous Deficiencies prevented.

7. That the Thanks of the Houſe may be given to thoſe Gentlemen, who ſo gallantly appear'd in the Behalf of their Country with the Kentiſh Petition, and have been ſo ſcandalouſly us'd for it.

Thus, Gentlemen, you have your Duty laid before you, which 'tis hop'd you will think of: But if you continue to neglect it, you may expect to be treated according to the Reſentments of an injur'd Nation; for Engliſhmen are no more to be Slaves to Parliaments than to Kings.

Our Name is LEGION:

And we are MANY.

P. S. If you require to have this Memorial ſign'd with our Names, it ſhall be done on your firſt Orders, and perſonally preſented."

A. D. 1701. their Paſſion for a War, and as the Difficulties and Controverſies of the Seſſion increas'd, Numbers of Members did abſent themſelves from the Service; nor could be prevail'd upon to return to it, either by Orders, or Letters from the Chair, accompany'd with all the Menaces of the Houſe.

If, therefore, They did, on ſome Occaſions, by yielding to the various Preſſures of the Times, depart a little from the Firmneſs they manifeſted at firſt, it is ſcarce to be wonder'd at. A Noiſe without Doors, is more diſcouraging than Oppoſition within: And when the People are divided in their Opinions, That of the Court, like the Serpent of Aaron, will ſwallow all the reſt.

The Lords, the very Day after the Legion-Memorial had been deliver'd, and while the Commons were yet ſhaking with the Panick of the preceding Day, ſent down Lord Orford's Reply to the Articles they had exhibited; and the ſame Day, by another Meſſage, put them in Mind, That no particular Articles were as yet exhibited againſt the Lords Portland, Somers, and Halifax: To which the Commons reply'd, That the ſaid Articles were preparing, and, in a ſhort Time, ſhould be ſent up to their Lordſhips.

The Lords remind the Commons of their Impeachments.

The Articles preferr'd againſt the Earl of Orford, were in Number Ten, to this Effect.—1. That, during the Preſſures of a burdenſome and calamitous War, he had procur'd from his Majeſty one or more Grants of ſeveral Manors, &c. of a great yearly Value; as alſo, of exorbitant Sums of Money, in violation of his Duty, and to the Diminution of the Revenue. 2. That in Breach of the Truſt repos'd in him, while he was Commander in Chief of the Navy Royal, in or near the Streights of Gibraltar, he had converted great Sums of public Money to his own Uſe, and had unlawfully and unjuſtly procur'd a Privy-Seal, or Privy-Seals, to diſcharge him from accounting to the Public for the ſame. 3. That while he was in the ſame Service, he had receiv'd conſiderable Sums of Money from the King of Spain, as alſo great Quantities of Proviſions, which he ought to have accounted for, but did not; converting them to his own Uſe and Profit; and that he had procur'd and held divers great Offices which were inconſiſtent, &c. 4. That, during the ſaid Interval, he had, clandeſtinely, and contrary to the Law of Nations, ſold and diſpos'd of ſeveral Prize-Veſſels, and their Ladings, without Condemnation, or judicial Proceedings, and converted the Money to his own Uſe. 5. That when that the Eaſt-India Company were complaining of Piracies on their Trade, and ſoliciting Letters of Marque and Reprizal, which were refus'd, the ſaid Earl, jointly with others, did procure a Commiſſion for Kidd, and alſo a Grant of the Goods of the Ships and Goods of certain Pirates; the Contents of which Commiſſion the Board of Admiralty refus'd to communicate to the ſaid Company, in Violation of the Law of Nations, and to the Interruption and Diſcouragement of Trade. 6. That when the Kingdom was under an Apprehenſion of an immediate Invaſion, the ſaid Earl did cauſe Captain Stewart, Commander of the Ship Duke, to deliver over to the ſaid Kidd a great Number of able Seamen, levy'd and provided at the Expence of the Public, againſt their own Conſent, &c. 7. That the ſaid Earl, during the ſaid War, did procure a Grant or Order for his Majeſty's Ship the Loyal, then fitted out for the Service of the Public, to be employ'd in a private Undertaking for the Advantage of himſelf and Others concern'd with him. 8. That thro' Pride and Contempt of Orders, he did unneceſſarily hazard and expoſe the ſaid Navy-Royal, while under his Command; and, contrary to Advice, and in diſobedience to Orders, did overlook many Opportunities of taking and deſtroying the Ships belonging to the French King. 9. That the ſaid Earl, in concert with other falſe and evil Counſellors, did adviſe the King to enter into the Two ſeveral Treaties for dividing the Monarchy and Dominions of Spain; both which Treaties were diametrically oppoſite to the Alliance of 1689, for preventing the Growth of the French Power, were injurious to the Emperor, ruinous to Trade, diſhonorable to Prince and People, and prejudicial to the Intereſt of the Proteſtant Religion. 10. That during the Commiſſion of all and every the ſaid Crimes, the ſaid Earl was one of the Lords Juſtices during his Majeſty's Abſence, firſt Commiſſioner of the Admiralty, Commander in Chief of the Navy, a Privy-Counſellor, and Treaſurer of the Navy.

An Abſtract of the Articles againſt the E. of Orford.

On the other Hand, the Earl, in his Anſwer to the firſt Article, admitted, he had obtain'd a Reverſionary Grant of ſome Houſes, of no great Value, at the End of about Twenty-nine Years: As alſo, of the Remainder of a groſs Sum, amounting to about 2000*l.* a Year for Ten Years; which ſaid Grants his Lordſhip was pleas'd to inſinuate, did not out-weigh the Merit of his Services, and what could not be interpreted into any Violation of Duty, or of any Truſt repos'd in him: That he had ever converted any public Money to his private Uſe, or procur'd any privy Seal, as he was charg'd by the Second Article, he utterly deny'd: Adding, That his Accounts had been made up upon Oath, that they had been legally declar'd, upon a very great and ſtrict Examination, and that he had obtain'd his Quietus:—Only, the Commiſſioners of the Victualling having made ſome unuſual Objections to part of the ſaid Accounts, concerning ſome Proviſions furniſh'd to the Fleet by the ſaid Earl, in the King of Spain's Dominions, his Majeſty was pleas'd to direct and order a Privy-Seal to diſpenſe with the Forms in that Particular; and urging, That the ſaid Earl had drawn no Advantage to himſelf thereby; That the Government had not been in the leaſt defrauded therein: That upon a ſtrict Examination it appear'd, leſs Rates had been allow'd for theſe Proviſions, than were had been allow'd before: That as Circumſtances

His Lordſhip's Reply.

A.D. 1701 the Navy, he had deliver'd in his Accounts, ſome of which lay before the Auditors ready to be declar'd, and the reſt of them being made up and deliver'd in to be examin'd: And that, after juſt Allowances had been made, he did not believe he ſhould appear to be indebted upon the ſaid Accounts. The Third and Fourth Articles, and every Circumſtance in them, he firmly and poſitively deny'd: He alſo deny'd, That ever the Eaſt-India Company had, to his Knowledge, been refus'd Letters of Marque in common Form: And he maintain'd, That Kidd's Expedition was intended for the public Good and Service. As to the Sixth, and the Mention therein made, of the Ship Ducheſs, &c. he alledg'd, the Men taken out of her, to put on Board Kidd, were but ſome of the very Perſons, which had juſt before been taken from on Board Kidd, and were return'd by their own Conſents; not being above Twenty in all; and all Danger of an Invaſion being then over. That as to the Ship Dolphin, what had been done therein, had been done after the Peace was concluded, by his Majeſty's Command, at the Inſtance and Requeſt of other Perſons, and contrary to the Opinion of the ſaid Earl, who was not concern'd in Intereſt therein, till after his Majeſty's Orders were given about the ſaid Ship, when he did take certain Shares therein, at the Deſire of thoſe concern'd; but ſtill without any Breach of Duty, Truſt, &c. The Eighth Article, the Earl wholly deny'd; as alſo the Ninth, declaring, That he had been ſo far from adviſing the Partition-Treaty, that he had objected to, and given his Opinion againſt the ſame: And, laſtly, he argued, That his faithful Diſcharge of the ſeveral Truſts repos'd in him, was enough to juſtify his Acceptance of them.

Articles againſt Lord Somers.

The ſame Day that this Replication was read in the Houſe of Commons, Mr. Harcourt reported the Articles which the Committee had drawn up againſt Lord Somers. Theſe were in Number Fourteen: In the Firſt of which, containing an Abſtract of the Grand-Alliance, and the Bavarian Treaty, it is ſaid, That the ſaid Lord Somers, well knowing the moſt apparent evil Conſequences, as well as the Injuſtice of the ſaid Partition, did not, according to the Truſt and Duty of his Office, diſſuade or endeavour to obſtruct its taking Effect, but, on the contrary, having neither regard to his Majeſty's Honour, nor the Trade and known Intereſt of this Kingdom, or the Peace of Europe, did adviſe his Majeſty to enter into the ſaid Treaty, and did ſo far encourage or promote the ſame, that the ſaid Treaty was concluded and ratify'd under the Great Seal of England; and not only ſo, but as an Agreement between his Majeſty, the French King, and States-General, notwithſtanding the ſaid Lord Somers well knew, that the ſame had been concluded between his Majeſty's Commiſſioners and the French Ambaſſador, or the Commiſſioner of the French King, ONLY; and that the Purport thereof had never been communicated to the States-General, at the Time of the Ratification thereof under the Great Seal of England, notwithſtanding the Negotiation thereof in Holland. A.D. 1701.

The Second, Third, and Fourth Articles deſerve to be inſerted entire; to wit: "That, for the more effectual carrying on the ſaid Treaty, one or more Commiſſion or Commiſſions was or were prepar'd, amended, enlarg'd, or alter'd by the ſaid Lord Somers, without any lawful Warrant for his ſo doing: Whereunto the ſaid Lord Somers, contrary to the Duty of his ſaid ſeveral Offices, and in Violation of the great Truſts repos'd in him, in or about the Month of September, 1698, without communicating the ſame to the reſt of the then Lords-Juſtices of England, or adviſing in Council with his Majeſty's Privy-Council thereupon, did preſume to affix the Great Seal of England. That no certain Perſons of known Honour, Fidelity, and Experience, were therein nominated Commiſſioners, at the Time of affixing the Great Seal of England thereto; but a Blank or empty Space was left in the ſaid Commiſſion or Commiſſions, at the Time of the ſealing thereof, wherein the Commiſſioners Names were to be afterwards inſerted beyond the Seas: Notwithſtanding which, an unlimited Power was thereby granted to the Commiſſioners, whoſe Names were therein afterwards to be inſerted, as aforeſaid, or to either of them, without any written Inſtructions whatſoever to reſtrain, guide, or direct them in the Exerciſe thereof, in his Majeſty's Name to confer and treat with the ſaid Commiſſioner, or Deputy, or Commiſſioners or Deputies of the French King, and alſo with the Commiſſioners or Deputies of the States-General, for preſerving the Public Peace, and touching the Succeſſion to the Crown of Spain: And his Majeſty did thereby engage himſelf to approve, ratify, and confirm whatſoever ſhould be thereupon concluded by them, or either of them.

That the ſaid Lord Somers, contrary to the Duty of his ſaid Office of Lord Chancellor, did affix the Great Seal of England to the ſaid Commiſſion, or Commiſſions, not having firſt receiv'd any lawful Warrant for that Purpoſe: In hopes of concealing which evil and moſt dangerous Practice, the ſaid Lord Somers, after he had ſeal'd the ſaid Commiſſion, or Commiſſions, us'd his Endeavour to procure a Warrant to be tranſmitted to him, for affixing the Great Seal to the ſaid Commiſſion, or Commiſſions, and that it might not be known but that he had it in due Time.

That the ſaid Lord Somers, contrary to the Duty of his ſaid ſeveral Offices, affix'd the great Seal of England to the Ratification of the ſaid Treaty, made in the Year of our Lord 1698, not having firſt communicated the ſame to the reſt of the then Lords Juſtices of England, or adviſ'd in Council with his Majeſty's Privy-Council thereupon: And at the Time of his affixing the Great Seal thereto, one entire blank Sheet, and many other Blanks were left in the ſaid Ratification, with an Intent to be afterwards

A.D. 1701. afterwards fill'd up by other Persons beyond the Seas."

The setting the Seal to the second Partition-Treaty, furnish'd the Matter of the fifth Article: By the sixth he was made answerable; for the Non-Enrollment in the Court of Chancery of the Commissions and Ratifications of and for the said Treaties, which, it was urged, ought to be done by the Prothonotary of the said Court. The seventh contain'd, 1. A Brief of the Lord-Keeper or Chancellor's Oath, well and truly to serve the King and his People, and not to know or suffer the Hurt or disinheriting of the King; or that the Rights of the Crown should be decreased, as far forth as he might let it be; and then a Charge, That, contrary to his said Oath, he had passed many great, unreasonable, and exorbitant Grants under the Great Seal, of divers Manors, Lordships, Lands, &c. belonging to the Crown of England, amounting to a most prodigious and excessive Value; and did also advise, promote and procure divers great, unreasonable and exorbitant Grants to be made of the late forfeited Estates in Ireland, in Contempt of the Advice of the House of Commons, and without any Regard to his Majesty's gracious Assurance thereupon to both Houses of Parliament: And engag'd to procure, and accordingly did procure, divers Acts, prepar'd for confirming the said Grants in Parliament in Ireland, to be approved in Council in England, and afterwards remitted the same under the Great Seal of England, to be passed into Laws in Ireland. The 8th set forth, That, not being content with all the Fees, Profits, and Perquisites legally belonging to the Great Seal, and together with an additional Pension of 4000 l. per Annum, he had, contrary to his Oath, begg'd and procur'd, for his own Benefit, many great and unreasonable Grants of several Manors, Lands, Tenements, Rents, Hereditaments and Revenues belonging to the Crown of England: That, in, or about the Month of April 1697, he did procure and pass a Grant under the Great Seal, without any real Consideration whatsoever to Joseph Jekyll, Esq; of the Manor or Manors of Rygate and Howleigh, of the Value of 12,000 l. and upwards. That, under the Pretence of purchasing divers Fee-Farm-Rents, vested in Trustees for Sale thereof, in pursuance of several Acts of Parliament in the Reign of Charles II. the said Lord, in the same Year, did procure a Warrant from his Majesty to the Commissioners of the Treasury, to contract, or to warrant the said Trustees to contract with Humphry Hetherington, Esq; for as many Fee-Farm Rents, and other Rents then remaining unsold, as should amount to 100 l. a Year, at the Rate of sixteen Years Purchase; and that upon such Contract, the said Rents should be convey'd by Warrant from the Treasury to the said Hetherington and his Heirs, or such as he should appoint. That, under the like Pretence, and by a like Process, the said Lord procured another Grant of as many of the said Rents as A.D. 1; should amount to 700 l. a Year, to be convey'd in like Manner to Richard Aday, Esq; as also another of 600 l. per Annum to Samuel Newton, Esq;. That, in pursuance of Warrants issued from the Treasury accordingly, certain Contracts were made, or pretended to be made, with the said Persons, by which Hetherington became obliged to pay into the Exchequer 12,800 l. Aday 11,200 l. and Newton 9,600 l. And That the said several Manors and Rents aforesaid were granted to the said Jekyll, Hetherington, Aday and Newton, in Trust only, for the said Lord Somers and his Heirs. The ninth yet farther set forth, That the said Lord did enter into several Treaties, and had many Communications with divers Persons entrusted with the Care and Management of the said Rents, particularly Reginald Marriot, Auditor of the Rates, and John Digby, Clerk to the said Trustees; and for encouraging the said Persons to discover such particular Fee-Farm-Rents, &c. as then remain'd undispos'd of, to the Intent that the said Lord Somers might beg the same. He the said Lord, did agree and contract with the said Marriot, to give the said Marriot for himself and his Accomplices, as a Reward for his said Discovery, a full fourth Part of all Rents so discover'd; and accordingly an Assignment of 500 l. per Annum was made, by the Direction of the said Lord, in Trust for the said Marriot, &c. The tenth affirmed, That notwithstanding the said pretended Contracts and Payments, there was not any Sum of Money whatsoever really and bona fide, paid as the Consideration of the said Conveyances: But that such Contracts and Payments of the said several Considerations amounting in the whole to 33,600 were colourably and fraudulently contrived and made by Direction of the said Lord, contrary to his said Oath, in Deceit of his Majesty, and Elusion of the said Act of Parliament. The eleventh maintains, That many Quit-Rents and Copyhold Rents, standing in Charge as Parcel of several Manors, &c. Reserved Rents, Rents before granted on Lease or otherwise, Rents appropriated to special Purposes; also many Quit-Rents, and other Rents annexed to Windsor-Castle, together with many other Quit-Rents belonging to divers antient Manors of the Crown, were convey'd by the said Trustees, thro' the Direction and Power of the said Lord Somers, to the said Hetherington, Aday and Newton, &c. as if the same had been entire Fee-Farm Rents, to the great Vexation and Oppression of many of his Majesty's good Subjects, and erecting many new and unreasonable Charges on other Revenues of the Crown: The twelfth declares, That by the Direction of the said Lord, the said Hetherington, Aday, &c. surrendered 347 l. 11 s. 5 d. ½ on Suggestion, that the same had been before conveyed, or otherwise appropriated, or else were grievable; and that the said Lord in the Year 1699, did, in Breach of his Duty, and contrary to the Laws, procure other Rents of the

A. D. 1701. the yearly Value of 391 l. 0*s.* 3$\frac{3}{4}$d., to be allowed by way of Reprize, to the ſaid Perſons, in Truſt for himſelf, as if the Rents ſo ſurrendered had been really and bona fide purchaſed, in perſuance of the ſaid Acts, for the Sale of Fee-Farm Rents. The thirteenth was compos'd of Kidd's Affair: And the fourteenth charged his Lordſhip with many extraordinary Methods and unwarrantable Proceedings in the Court of Chancery, by which Cauſes had been ſeveral Years delay'd; as alſo with arbitrary and illegal Orders, having revers'd Judgments given in the Court of Exchequer, by his own Authority; and having declared and affirmed in public Places of Judicature, That particular Subjects might have Rights and Intereſts, without any Remedy for Recovery of the ſame, unleſs by Petition to the Perſon of the King only, or to that Effect; which Poſition was highly dangerous to the legal Conſtitution of this Kingdom, and abſolutely deſtructive to the Property of the Subject.

This was the Subſtance of theſe Articles; which on the 19th of May were carry'd up to the Lords by Mr. Harcourt, and on the 24th following his Lordſhip's Anſwer was brought down to the Commons: The firſt Article whereof conſiſted chiefly of a Narrative, tending to ſhew, That the firſt Partition-Treaty was the King's own Meaſure, and that he, Lord Somers, had given his Opinion freely upon it, as appear'd by his Majeſty's Letter, and his Anſwer thereto, formerly inſerted: After which his Lordſhip proceded as follows:

His Lordſhip's Anſwer.

"That, after writing of his ſaid Letter, he had no Account whatſoever, nor heard any Thing of the ſaid Treaty, or knew or heard whether the ſame was proceded upon, or not, until towards the latter End of September following, when he was acquainted by Mr. Secretary Vernon, that he had receiv'd an Account, that a Treaty relating to the Succeſſion of the Crown of Spain had been adjuſted, concluded, and ſigned by the Commiſſioners named by his Majeſty for that Purpoſe, and the Ambaſſador and Plenipotentiary of the French King: And the ſaid Lord Somers doth deny that the ſaid Treaty of Partition, or any Propoſition for ſuch Treaty, or the Tranſactions thereof, was communicated to him the ſaid Lord Somers, nor was he acquainted with the ſame, or the Deſign thereof, or any other Matter relating thereto, at any other Time, or in any other Manner, before he was told of the concluding and ſigning thereof as aforeſaid, than as is herein before mentioned to be done by his Majeſty as aforeſaid, and by his and the ſaid Earl of Portland's Letter herein before mentioned: And the ſaid Lord Somers doth deny he did at any Time whatſoever adviſe his Majeſty to enter into the ſaid Treaty, or any way encourage or promote the ſame; but having made the Objections before mentioned in his ſaid Letter to his Majeſty, againſt the Propoſitions ſo communicated to him as aforeſaid, and clearly laid open ſuch Thoughts and Obſervations as occurred to him upon the ſaid Matter; he did thereby, as he conceived, fully and faithfully diſcharge his Truſt, and the Duty incumbent on him." His Lordſhip then farther ſignified, That, having been inform'd by Mr. Secretary Vernon, that the Treaty was perfected; that he, Mr. Vernon, had a Copy of it; that he had alſo his Majeſty's Command to prepare Inſtruments for Ratification of the ſame, leaving Blanks for the Names of the Commiſſioners of the States General; and Mr. Vernon having accordingly prepared the ſaid Inſtruments and brought them to the ſaid Lord, in order to their being paſſed under the Great Seal, they were paſſed accordingly, his Lordſhip having a good and lawful Warrant for it. His Lordſhip farther acknowledged, in Anſwer to the ſecond and third Articles. That having receiv'd his Majeſty's expreſs Commands (in his Majeſty's (French) Letter from Holland, muſt be underſtood) for ſo doing, which he humbly conceiv'd, and had been advis'd, was a ſufficient Warrant, he did alſo put the Seal to the full Powers, in which, Blanks were left for the Names of his Majeſty's Commiſſioners, which Commiſſioners were to receive their Inſtructions from his Majeſty for the Execution of the ſaid Power, in uſual Manner: But what Inſtructions, or whether any Inſtructions were given in Writing to the ſaid Commiſſioners he knew not. Adding, That he did indeed deſire his Majeſty, that a particular Warrant for the ſaid Commiſſion, which, as Mr. Vernon informed the ſaid Lord, had been before ſent to his Majeſty, might be ſign'd and return'd; not that he doubted his Majeſty's ſaid Letter to be a ſufficient Warrant, but that ſuch Warrant might be more proper to be produced, if Occaſion ſhould require, than his Majeſty's ſaid Letter, which by Reaſon of other Matters therein contain'd might not be produc'd, without his Majeſty's Permiſſion. To the fourth, in the ſame Courſe of Acknowledgment, his Lordſhip reply'd, That he had affix'd the Great Seal with the like Blanks to the Ratifications, which he conceiv'd he might lawfully do; and that he did not communicate the ſaid Treaty to the reſt of the Lords Juſtices, or to the Privy-Council, becauſe of his Majeſty's Command to keep it ſecret; and becauſe it was unneceſſary, in regard his Majeſty had then by his Commands, perfected the ſame Treaty, ſo that the ſame could not be alter'd. In Anſwer to the fifth, his Lordſhip deny'd, That he had any Knowledge of the ſecond Treaty, or of any Tranſaction in order thereunto; ſave only, that a Draught of the ſaid Treaty, having been read over in Preſence of divers of the Privy-Council (of whom his Lordſhip was one) he and Others then preſent, did make ſeveral Objections thereto, but were told by his Majeſty's Plenipotentiaries, who were alſo preſent, That the ſaid Treaty was ſo far perfected, that nothing could then be alter'd therein:

A. D. 1701.

A.D. 1701. And his Majeſty, afterwards by his Warrant, requiring the ratifying of the ſaid Treaty under the Great Seal, he did accordingly affix the Great Seal to ſuch Ratification; being, as he conceiv'd, obliged ſo to do. To the ſixth, which regarded the enrolling the Treaty in the Court of Chancery, his Lordſhip anſwer'd, That it was not incumbent on him as Lord-Chancellor, to ſee ſuch Commiſſions enroll'd: That they were brought to the Great Seal by the Secretaries of State ready engroſs'd; and when ſeal'd were taken away by him: And that this Care of enrolling Treaties, if neceſſary, belonged to the Prothonotary. To the ſeventh, That the Grants he had paſs'd (which he believed were not ſo conſiderable as Thoſe which, in the like Number of Years, had been paſs'd in moſt of his Predeceſſors Times) had been regularly paſs'd thro' the proper Offices, and brought ſuch Warrants with them, as he thought himſelf obliged to obey. That he neither adviſ'd, promoted or procur'd any Grants of any forfeited Eſtate in Ireland, for any Perſon whatſoever, nor any Act or Bill for confirming any ſuch Grant: And that all Bills of that Nature were firſt approved and paſs'd by the Privy-Council of England; by whoſe Order the Great Seal was affix'd thereto. To the eighth, That the Penſion he had receiv'd of 4000 l. per Annum was no other than had been allow'd to ſeveral of his Predeceſſors. That he had never begg'd, nor us'd any Means to procure any Grant whatſoever for his own Benefit: That what his Majeſty was pleas'd to give him proceeded from his own Motion, and of his mere Bounty, and, as his Majeſty was pleas'd to ſay, as an Evidence of his gracious Acceptation of the ſaid Lords zealous Endeavours for his Service, without any previous Solicitation, either by himſelf, or any Other to his Knowledge or Belief: That his Majeſty, in the Year 1697, did grant him the Manor or Manors of Ryegate and Howley, but that the ſame was far ſhort of the Value ſuggeſted: That he never did pretend to purchaſe, either in his own Name, or the Name of any other Perſon, any of the Fee-Farm Rents; but that his Majeſty, taking Notice, That ſeveral of the ſaid Rents were unſold, and that they were held by the Truſtees, in Virtue of ſeveral Acts of Parliament, for the Benefit of his Majeſty, his Heirs and Succeſſors, did of his own Motion, acquaint the then Lords of the Treaſury, That it was his Pleaſure, that 2,100 l. per Annum of thoſe Rents ſhould be granted to or for the Benefit of the ſaid Lord and his Heirs; and that all proper Methods ſhould be us'd for veſting the ſame for his Benefit, as of his Majeſty's free Gift: And that the ſaid Acts having directed the ſaid Truſtees, on Sale to convey the ſame, purſuant to Contracts to be ſign'd by Lords of the Treaſury, for the Satisfaction of the ſaid Truſtees only, and according to the Method that had been us'd from the Time of making the ſaid Acts, in paſſing Grants of any of the ſaid Rents, even ſuch as were merely of the Bounty of his Majeſty's Predeceſſors, and of his Majeſty; ſuch Warrants were made by his Majeſty to the ſaid Commiſſioners, to contract, or warrant the ſaid Truſtees to contract, for the ſaid Rents; perſuant whereunto ſuch Contracts were made, and ſuch Grants paſs'd, as in the ſaid Article were mentioned: And that the Money alſo mention'd therein, was for the perfecting his Majeſty's ſaid intended free Gift, diſcharged by Tallies ſtruck for that Purpoſe; as alſo, that the ſaid Contracts were not intended or deſign'd to make the Grantees of the ſaid Rents appear to be Purchaſers; the ſaid Lord always acknowledging, he receiv'd the ſaid Grants as his Majeſty's Bounty; and humbly conceiving, it was lawful for him to accept the ſame. To the ninth and tenth, That after his Majeſty had given his ſaid Directions for the ſaid Grants for the Benefit of the ſaid Lord, it appearing, that his Purpoſe could not be carry'd into Execution, becauſe neither the Lords of the Treaſury, nor the ſaid Truſtees were ſufficiently inform'd what Rents were undiſpos'd of; as alſo that the proper Information could not be had, unleſs by the Means of the ſaid Marriot and Digby, Application was made to them for that Purpoſe (after his Majeſty's Warrant as above had been obtain'd) and They refuſing to give any Account of the ſame, unleſs they might have one fourth Part of the whole as a Conſideration, the ſaid Lord agreed to their Terms, as he ſuppos'd he lawfully might, it being to his own Loſs and Prejudice, not for any ſuch End as was ſpecify'd in the Article: To all which his Lordſhip added, That no Sum of Money was paid as a Conſideration for the ſaid Grants; that the Payments were diſcharg'd in the Manner and for the Reaſons before ſet forth, and were not colourably or fraudulently contriv'd, in Deceit of his Majeſty and in Eluſion of the ſaid Acts of Parliament. To the eleventh, That the ſaid Lord did believe ſeveral of the Rents mention'd to be granted in Truſt for him had been granted before; and that Others were not in the Power of the ſaid Truſtees to grant, (which was very much to his Prejudice) but that he believed the ſame were inſerted by Miſtake, not of Deſign, the like Miſtakes having been frequently committed in the like Grants; and that he deny'd any of the ſaid Rents ſo granted, to his Knowledge or Belief, belong'd to the Caſtle at Windſor, for any Purpoſe whatſoever; or that any Oppreſſion or Vexation had happen'd to any of his Majeſty's Subjects by Reaſon of the ſaid Grants, and, as he believes, little or no new Charge to the Crown. To the twelfth, That the ſubſequent Grant of 391 l. 0 3$\frac{1}{2}$, in lieu of the 347 l. 11*s.* 3*d.*$\frac{1}{2}$, was not granted as if the ſaid yearly Rent had been bona fide purchaſed, but in lieu and Reprize of the ſame, in order to make good the Intention of the Grant for the ſaid Lord's Benefit, and agreable to uſual Covenants made with the Truſtees in the like Caſes. To the thirteenth, That the Commiſſion granted to Kidd, for the taking and bringing Pirates to a legal Trial, was apprehended to

A. D. 1701. to be neceſſary for the Preſervation of Trade and Navigation; That the Perſons concern'd in the Undertaking fitted out Kidd's Ship at their own Charge: That the Grant of all the Ships, Goods, &c. belonging to the ſaid Pirates, made to the ſaid Undertakers was not without Account: That the ſaid Grant, which was meant as a Recompence to the ſaid Undertakers, was not injudicial to the Subject, or diſhonourable to the King, nor was the paſſing the ſame any Breach of the ſaid Lord's Duty: And that if Kidd had faithfully diſcharged his Truſt, it might have been of great Benefit to the Public, whereas the contrary having prov'd the Caſe, the Owners had loſt all their Expences, &c. And to the thirteenth, his Lordſhip's Reply conſiſted of a full and circumſtantial Denial of every Particular contain'd in it.

The Difference between the Charge and the Reply, little, but in the Colouring.

Thus it appears, that in moſt of the Facts alledg'd the Accus'd and the Accuſers agree; and all the Difference between them conſiſts in the Colours They ſeverally lay upon them: And, putting no Streſs on the extraordinary Attention ſhewn by the King, in the Article of the Grants, to the Merits and Services of a profitable Servant; or on the Knowledge of his own Affairs, ſo unuſual in Princes, manifeſted by his Majeſty, in ſo nice a Diſquiſition into the State of the Fee-Farms, that his Royal Purpoſe might be fully and completely anſwer'd; or on a Conſideration not altogether unnatural, that a Donation ſo vaſt, ſo timed, and circumſtanced, was rather to beſpeak new Services, than to recompence the paſs'd, ſurely, it muſt be admitted, That ſo full and complete a Reſignation of all the Powers of the Seal to the King, while abroad, negotiating a Treaty of the utmoſt Importance, which all his Miniſters condemn'd, unaſſiſted and unadvis'd by any of his Engliſh Council, whoſe Advice alone can authenticate the Sovereign's Command and render Obedience lawful, on a bare Letter from his Majeſty, counterſign'd by no Miniſter, and authoriſ'd by none of the common Forms of Buſineſs, was a Matter highly worthy of the Cogniſance and Reprehenſion of Parliament, tho' Biſhop Burnet, P. 278, ſo dictatoreally pronounces, They had nothing to charge thoſe Lords with: Such however was the Fact! Let Poſterity judge of it!

The Lords inform the Commons that Lord Orford had deſir'd the Day of his Trial might be fix'd.

In this Interval, on the 21*ſt* of May, that is to ſay, the Lords had appris'd the Commons by Meſſage, That the Earl of Orford had deſir'd a Day might be appointed for his ſpeedy Trial, and that their Lordſhips, finding no Iſſue join'd by Application from them, had thought fit to give them Notice thereof: As alſo, That no particular Articles having as yet been exhibited againſt the Earl of Portland and Lord Halifax, They thought themſelves oblig'd to put the Commons in Mind thereof; as what, after Impeachments had been ſo long depending, was a Hardſhip to the Perſons concern'd; and not agreeable to the uſual Methods and Proceedings of Parliament in ſuch Caſes.

To this the Commons reply'd in Subſtance on the 31ſt, That they had prepar'd a Replication to Lord Orford, but choſe to defer the carrying it up, becauſe, from the Nature of the Evidence, they choſe to proceed with the Trial of Lord Somers firſt; adding, That they took their Lordſhips other Meſſage to be unparliamentary and without Precedent; They, as Proſecutors, being the proper Judges of the Time, of conducting their own Proſecution; and that what their Lordſhips had aſſerted concerning the Hardſhip put on the Lords Portland and Halifax, &c. did, as they conceiv'd, tend to the Breach of that good Correſpondence between the two Houſes which ought to be mutually preſerv'd. A. D. 1701. The Commons ſignify their Deſign to proceed againſt Lord Somers firſt.

The ſame Day the Replication of this Committee to the Anſwer of Lord Somers, was reported and order'd to be engroſs'd to this Effect. "That the Commons having conſider'd the ſaid Anſwer, did aver their Charge, againſt the ſaid Lord to be true, and did ſay, he was guilty in the Manner, as he ſtood accus'd; and that the Commons would be ready to prove the ſame, at ſuch convenient Time, as ſhould be appointed for that Purpoſe."

The Lords inform the Commons they had appointed the 9th of June for the Trial of Lord Orford.

The ſame Day alſo, the Lords, on the other Hand, by Meſſage, inform'd the Commons, that they had appointed the 9th of June for the Trial of Lord Orford, to which the ſaid Houſe might reply, if they thought fit: And this was accompany'd with a Repetition of their former Meſſage, concerning the Hardſhip reſting on the Lords Portland and Halifax.

This Meſſage was refer'd to the Conſideration of a Committee; and, before they were ready with their Report, the Lords ſent down another Meſſage, ſignifying, That Lord Somers had alſo deſir'd a ſpeedy Trial: That they would procede to the Trial of any of the impeach'd Lords, that the Commons ſhould be firſt ready to begin with, ſo as no Occaſion was taken from thence, for any unreaſonable Delay; That, having ſearch'd their own Journals, They did not find, that after a general Impeachment, the ſending up particular Articles had ever been ſo long delay'd, ſitting the Parliament: That, therefore, they had reaſon to aſſert, it was a Hardſhip on the Lords concern'd; eſpecially after the Remindings the Commons had receiv'd: And that as the Lords did not controvert what Right the Commons might have of Impeaching; ſo, the Judicature being entirely in them, they thought themſelves obliged to aſſert, That the Right of limiting a convenient Time for bringing the particular Charge before them, for the avoiding a Delay in Juſtice was lodg'd in them, &c." But allow the Commons to begin with Trial they pleas'd.

Lord's Trial

Theſe laſt Words, Limiting, &c. had been ſubſtituted by the Majority of their Lordſhips, in lieu of Theſe, Determining what is a due Time, in which the particular Articles of Impeachment ought to be exhibited; Contents, 43, not Contents, 27; and had occaſion'd a Proteſt, ſign'd by Twenty-one Lords, for this Reaſon: Becauſe the Aſſertion was new: And the laſt

A.D. 1701. laſt Paragraph of this Meſſage, (which contain'd a Sort of Caution to both Houſes, not to exceed the Limits which the Laws and Cuſtoms of Parliaments had already eſtabliſh'd) occaſion'd alſo another Proteſt, ſign'd by Twenty-two Lords, "Becauſe they knew not, that the Laws and Cuſtoms of Parliaments had eſtabliſh'd any certain Limits."

Thus their Lordſhips had ſo far the Start of the Commons: But in a few Hours afterwards, Mr. Harcourt made his Report; The Anſwer of the Commons. which was to this Effect: "That the Commons thought it their undoubted Right, when ſeveral Perſons ſtood impeach'd before their Lordſhips, to bring to Trial ſuch of them in the firſt Place, as they thought ought to be proceeded againſt firſt, to the Intent, that All ſuch Offenders might, in due Time, be brought to Juſtice: That no Day ought to be appointed by their Lordſhips, without ſome previous Signification from the Commons, that they were ready to procede therein: That the Commons could not receive this Meſſage without the greateſt Surpriſe, their Lordſhips Proceedings in this Caſe, being neither warranted by Precedent, nor, as they conceiv'd, conſiſtent with Reaſon or Juſtice; conſequently the Commons could not agree to the Day appointed for the Trial of Lord Orford: That the Commons took their Lordſhips Meſſage in relation to the Lords Portland and Halliſax, to be without Precedent and Unparliamentary: And that they conceiv'd their Lordſhips frequent Repetition thereof in ſo ſhort a Time, manifeſtly tended to the Delay of Juſtice, in obſtructing the Trials of the Impeach'd Lords, by introducing Diſputes, in Breach of the good Correſpondence between the Two Houſes, which ought to be inviolably preſerv'd." And This had no ſooner been order'd up to the Lords, than a Motion was made, for a preſent reading of the engroſs'd Replication to Lord Somers's Anſwer, apparently for the Sake of countenancing the Procedings of the Lords; but overrul'd, on a Diviſion of the Houſe, by 140 Voices againſt 90: On which Occaſion Mr. Monckton and Mr. Robert Walpole, were Tellers for the Yeas.

The Commons, at a Conference, deſire a joint Committee of both Houſes may be appointed. Theſe laſt were the Tranſactions of June 4, and the next Day the Commons reſolv'd to demand a Conference, the Purport of which was, to deſire, That a Committee of both Houſes might be nominated to conſider of the moſt proper Methods of proceding on Impeachments, according to the Uſage of Parliaments.

This Conference was held on the 6th; but without the deſir'd Effect: For the Lords at firſt contented themſelves with appointing a Committee, To inſpect their Journals, and conſider of the Manner of proceding upon Impeachments: And on the 9th, a Motion being made, For a Conference with the Commons, to let them know, That the Lords did not agree to the ſaid Committee, a warm Debate enſued; upon the Iſſue of which, the Queſtion was put, Whether a Committee of that Houſe ſhould not be appointed, to meet a Committee of the Commons, in relation to the Procedings upon Impeachments, and it was reſolv'd in the Negative: Upon which, Twenty-one Lords enter'd their Diſſents, Becauſe, in the Year 1679, the Lords had conſented to a like Propoſal, and therefore a Refuſal now, would be a great Obſtacle to the Lords impeach'd. A.D. 1701.

The ſame Day, that the Commons might keep Pace with the Lords, Mr. Bruges, from the Impeaching Committee, reported the Articles they had prepar'd againſt Lord Halliſax, which were Six in all, to the following Amount, tho' ſo verboſely drawn, as to take up ſeveral Folio Pages.

"That he had obtain'd, and got paſs'd, a Grant to Thomas Railton, Eſq; in Truſt for himſelf, amounting to 13,000*l.* out of the forfeited Eſtates in Ireland, accruing to his Majeſty from Attainders, Outlawries, &c: That he had not repaid into the Exchequer in Ireland, the Sum of 1000*l.* which he had actually receiv'd out of the Profits of the above-mention'd Grant, contrary to a late Act of Parliament: That in the Time of an expenſive War, he not only advis'd the paſſing other Grants, but obtain'd and accepted ſeveral beneficial ones for himſelf, which was a moſt notorious Abuſe of his Majeſty's Goodneſs: That on or about the 6th of May, 1697, he procur'd a Grant from his Majeſty to Henry Seager, Gent. in Truſt for himſelf, of ſo much Beech, Birch, Holly, &c. to be fallen in the Foreſt of Deane, within the Space of ſeven Years, as ſhould be worth or produce 14,000*l.* under Colour of which, Beech to a much greater Value, a great Number of Sapling-Oaks, and many Tons of well-grown Timber, was fell'd and diſpos'd of. That he procur'd a Grant to his Brother Chriſtopher Montagu, of the Place and Office of the Auditor of the Receipt and Writer of the Tallies, in Truſt for himſelf; ſo that the ſaid Lord was, in effect, at the ſame Time, one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Auditor of the Receipts; which Offices were manifeſtly inconſiſtent, and ought to have been a Check to each other: And that he adviſ'd his Majeſty to the Treaty of Partition of the Spaniſh Monarchy."

Theſe being on the Queſtion agreed to by the Houſe, were order'd to be engroſs'd: And Sir William St. Quintin, in the Debate which enſued on that Occaſion, having with more Zeal than Diſcretion, ſuffer'd the following Expreſſions to eſcape him; to wit: "I do not oppoſe the carrying up theſe Ar-"ticles: For, I think, they are to thoſe "Lords eternal Honour and Reputation." He was call'd upon to explane himſelf; and he was glad to eſcape the Diſpleaſure of the Houſe by a lame Apology, and a Prayer for Pardon.

And ſcarce was the little Ruffle occaſion'd by this Incident over, before another Meſſage was brought down from the Lords, not in Anſwer to the Deſire of the Commons expreſs'd at the Conference of the 6th, for a joint Committee of both Houſes, which deſerves very particular Notice, but to their Meſſage of the 4th. In This their Lordſhips ſignify'd, That, in declaring themſelves ready to procede to the Trial of any of Lords Anſwer to the Commons Meſſage of June 4.

A.D. 1701. of the Impeach'd Lords, whom the Commons ſhould be firſt ready to begin with, they had given a full Proof of their Willingneſs to comply with the Commons in whatever was reaſonable: Whence it follow'd, That as the Commons had no Occaſion to begin any Diſpute on that Head, ſo their Lordſhips had been careful to avoid the entering into a Controverſy which ſeem'd at that Time to be of no Uſe. That they thought themſelves oblig'd to aſſert their undoubted Right to appoint a Day for the Trial of any Impeachment, if they ſaw good Cauſe for it, without any previous Signification from the Commons of their being ready to procede: Which Right was warranted by many Precedents, and was conſonant to Reaſon and Juſtice; and their Lordſhips according to the Example of their Anceſtors, would always uſe that Right, with a Regard to the equal and impartial Adminiſtration of Juſtice, and with a due Care to prevent all unreaſonable Delays. That This being the Caſe, their Lordſhips could not but wonder, That the Commons ſhould make uſe of Expreſſions never us'd before by one Houſe of Parliament to another, and which, if the like were return'd, would neceſſarily deſtroy all good Correſpondence between the two Houſes: That they could not apprehend, how the calling upon the Houſe of Commons, to ſend up Articles againſt two Lords, ſo long impeach'd by them in general Terms, could be ſaid to tend to the Delay of Juſtice: And that, therefore, as the Lords thought the Commons might have forborne that Reflection, ſo they alſo thought, in ſaying no more, their Lordſhips gave a convincing Proof of their Moderation, and of their ſincere Deſire of preſerving a good Correſpondence between the two Houſes, which was ſo neceſſary for the public Security, as well as the doing Right upon Impeachments."

They appoint the 13th for the Trial of Lord Somers.

And this Meſſage had been ſcarce referr'd to the Impeaching Committee, in order to be anſwer'd, before their Lordſhips, by a new Meſſage, not more ingenuous than the Former, caus'd the Commons to be inform'd, That they had appointed the next Friday (the 13th) for the Trial of Lord Somers; to which the Commons the next Day return'd the following Anſwer.

"The Commons, in hopes of avoiding all Interruptions and Delays in proceding againſt the Impeach'd Lords, and the many Inconveniencies which might ariſe thereby, having propos'd to your Lordſhips at a Conference, That a Committee of both Houſes might be nominated to conſider of the moſt proper Ways and Methods of proceding on Impeachments, think, they might juſtly have expected your Lordſhips Compliance with their ſaid Propoſition, inſtead of your Lordſhips Anſwer to their Meſſage of the 4th Inſtant, which they Yeſterday receiv'd: In which Anſwer of your Lordſhips, tho' many Matters of great Exception are contain'd, a ſuitable Reply whereunto would inevitably deſtroy all good Correſpondence between the two Houſes: Yet the Commons, from an earneſt Deſire to preſerve the ſame, as well as to give the moſt convincing Proof of their Moderation, and to ſhew their Readineſs to bring the Impeach'd Lords to ſpeedy Juſtice, at preſent inſiſt only on their Propoſition for a Committee of both Houſes, to ſettle and adjuſt the neceſſary Preliminaries to the Trials; particularly, Whether the Impeach'd Lords ſhall appear on their Trials at your Lordſhips Bar as Criminals: Whether, being under Accuſations of the ſame Crimes, they are to ſit as Judges on each others Trials for thoſe Crimes, or can vote in their own Caſes, as we find by your Lordſhips Journals, ſince their being Impeach'd, they have been admitted to do: Which Matters, and ſome Others, being neceſſary to be adjuſted, the Commons cannot but inſiſt on a Committee of both Houſes to be appointed for that Purpoſe: Their departing from which, would be giving up the Rights of the Commons of England, known by unqueſtionable Precedents and the Uſage of Parliament, and making all Impeachment (the greateſt Bulwark of the Laws and Liberties of England) impracticable for the future."

A.D. 1701.

The Lords demand a preſent Conference.

The Lords, on the other Hand, overlooking this Anſwer for the preſent, thought fit to demand a preſent Conference, upon Occaſion of the laſt Conference, and in order to preſerve a good Correſpondence with the Houſe of Commons, which was comply'd with: And, thereat, the Duke of Devonſhire, as Manager for their Lordſhips, ſignify'd, That their Lordſhips could not agree to the Propoſal of the Commons for a joint Committee, 1. "Becauſe they do not find, that ever ſuch a Committee was appointed on Occaſion of Impeachments for Miſdemeanors: And their Lordſhips think themſelves oblig'd to be extremely cautious in admitting any Thing new in Matters relating to Judicature. 2. That altho' a Committee of this Nature was agreed to upon the Impeachments of the Earl of Danby, and the five Popiſh Lords for High Treaſon, yet it was upon Occaſion of ſeveral conſiderable Queſtions and Difficulties which did then ariſe: And their Lordſhips do not find, that the Succeſs in that Inſtance was ſuch, as ſhould encourage the perſuing the ſame Methods again, tho' in the like Caſe: The Lords obſerving, that after much Time ſpent at that Committee, the Diſputes were ſo far from being there adjuſted, that they occaſion'd an abrupt Concluſion of a Seſſion of Parliament."

Their Lordſhips then maintain'd, The Methods of proceding on Impeachments were ſo well ſettled, that they did not foreſee any Likelihood of any Difficulties: Cited the Caſe of Gaudette and other French Smugglers, impeach'd for Miſdemeanors, in which all the Preliminaries were eaſily ſettled: Obſerv'd the Propoſal came ſo late, that it could produce nothing but the Prevention of the Trials during this Seſſion: And aſſur'd the Commons, That, in caſe any Difficulties ſhould ariſe, their Lordſhips would comply with the Commons in removing them, as

A. D. 1701. far as Juſtice and the Uſage of Parliaments would admit.

The Commons again took the Report of this Matter into Conſideration; and having the next Day made an Order, That a free Conference ſhould be deſir'd with the Lords on the Subject-Matter of the Laſt, ſent up the following Anſwer to the Lords.

The Commons Reply to the Lords Notice of Lord Somers's Trial.

"The Commons, on Monday laſt, receiv'd a Meſſage from your Lordſhips, That your Lordſhips had appointed the Trial of John Lord Somers upon Friday next, on their Impeachment againſt him: In which they obſerve your Lordſhips have not nominated any Place for his Trial, tho' your Lordſhips thought fit to make that Matter on the laſt Impeachment for Miſdemeanor, the Subject of a long Debate.

And they cannot but take Notice, That your Lordſhips have taken as long a Time to give your Anſwer to the Commons Deſire of a Committee of both Houſes, deliver'd at a Conference on Friday laſt, as you are pleas'd to allow the Commons to have, of the Day appointed by your Lordſhips for the ſaid Trial.

Your Lordſhips appointing ſo ſhort a Day, eſpecially whilſt the Propoſition made to your Lordſhips for a Committee of both Houſes was undertermin'd, the Commons take to be ſuch a Hardſhip to them, and ſuch an Indulgence to the Perſon accus'd, as is not to be parallel'd in any parliamentary Proceding.

The Commons muſt likewiſe acquaint your Lordſhips, That their Experience of the Interruption of a former Trial on an Impeachment for Miſdemeanors, for want of ſettling the Preliminaries between the two Houſes, obliges them to inſiſt on a Committee of both Houſes, for preventing the like Interruption.

And they conceive it would be very prepoſterous for them to enter upon the Trial of any of thoſe Lords, till your Lordſhips diſcover ſome Inclination to make the Proceding thereupon practicable; and therefore they think they have Reaſon to inſiſt upon another Day to be appointed for the Trial of Lord Somers: And the Commons doubt not but to ſatisfy your Lordſhips at a free Conference, of the Neceſſity of having a Committee of both Houſes, before they can procede upon the ſaid Trial."

Mr. Harcourt, who reported this Anſwer from the Committee, was the Perſon appointed to carry it up; and at his Heels, Colonel Granville was order'd to deſire a free Conference.

The Lords, in the mean Time, taking into Conſideration the Commons Meſſage of the Day before, fell as uſual into great Debates on the Manner of anſwering it: The Majority inclining to preſcribe ſuch a Method of proceding to the Commons, as they were not likely to ſubmit to, and the Minority contending, tho' in vain, for Mitigations: And the Queſtion being at laſt put, Whether the Houſe ſhould inſiſt on their Reſolution of not calling a joint Committee of both Houſes, it was reſolv'd in the Affirmative, tho' not without a Proteſt of Ten Lords: Becauſe it appear'd to them improper and unparliamentary, to paſs a Vote for inſiſting, before the firſt free Conference was determin'd: or if determin'd, which they did not conceive it was, becauſe, The Vote for inſiſting ſhould have preceded the Meſſage for a ſecond Conference, which their Lordſhips had already reſolv'd to demand, as we ſhall ſee in its Place.

The next Day the Commons order'd Mr. Bruges to carry up the Articles againſt Lord Hallifax; and ſoon after the Courſe of the Diſpute was for a little while interrupted by the King's coming to the Houſe of Lords, to give the Royal Aſſent to the Succeſſion-Bill; as alſo to another Bill for preventing the Inconveniencies that might happen by the (m) Privilege of Parliament, &c. On which Occation, his Majeſty made the following artful Speech to both Houſes.

Royal Aſſent given to the Succeſſion-Bill, &c.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

King's Speech on that Occaſion.

I return you my hearty Thanks for the Care you have taken to eſtabliſh the Succeſſion to the Crown in the Proteſtant Line: And I muſt not loſe this Occaſion of acquainting you, that I am likewiſe extremely ſenſible of your repeated Aſſurances of ſupporting me in ſuch Alliances, as ſhall be moſt proper for the Preſervation of the Liberty of Europe, and for the Security of England and Holland. Your ready Compliance with my Deſires, as to the Succours for the States-General, is alſo a great Satisfaction to me, as well as a great Advantage to the common Cauſe: And as I have nothing ſo much at Heart, as the Preſervation of the Liberty of Europe, and the Honour and Intereſt of England, ſo I make no Doubt of attaining thoſe great Ends, by the Bleſſing of God, and the Continuance of your chearful Concurrence.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The Seaſon of the Year makes it neceſſary to have a ſpeedy Receſs; and the Poſture of Affairs Abroad, does abſolutely require my

(m) Concerning which, B. Burnet bears Witneſs as follows. "Another very good Act paſs'd this Seſſion, concerning the Privilege of Parliament: Peers had, by Law or Cuſtom, a Privilege for themſelves and their Servants, during the Seſſion, and at leaſt twenty Days before and after: Of late they have reckon'd forty Days before and after, in which neither they nor their Servants could be ſued in any Court, unleſs for Treaſon, Felony, or Breach of the Peace: The Houſe of Commons had alſo poſſeſs'd themſelves of the ſame Privileges but with this Difference, That the Lords pretended theirs was a Right, not ſubject to the Order of the Houſe of Lords; whereas the Commons held, that their Privilege was ſubject to the Authority of their Houſe: Of late Years, Seſſions were long and continu'd by intermediate Prorogations, ſo that the whole Year round was a Time of Privilege: This made a great Obſtruction in the Courſe of Juſtice; and none, who were to proſecute, could be ſu'd for Debt: The Abuſe was carry'd further, by the Protections which ſome Lords gave, or rather ſold, to Perſons, who were no way concern'd in their Affairs; but when they needed this Shelter, they had a pretended Office given them, that was a Bar to all Actions. After many fruitleſs Attempts to regulate their Abuſes, a Bill was brought in the Houſe of Commons, that took away all Privilege againſt legal Proſecutions, in intermediate Prorogations, and did ſo regulate it, during the Sitting of Parliament, that an effectual Remedy was provided for a Grievance, that had been long and much complain'd of."

A. D. 1701. my Presence, for the Encouragement of our Allies, and for the perfecting of such Alliances as may be most effectual for the common Interest: And therefore I must recommend a Dispatch of the public Business, especially of those Matters which are of the greatest Importance."

And now it appear'd, that the Shocks which the House of Commons had receiv'd from without Doors, join'd to the Advantages which the Lords were obtaining over them in the Affair of the Impeachments, (not so much thro' Defect of Matter, as from the Narrowness of their Plan, and the Partialities before complain'd of) had abated their Firmness, and induc'd them to bid for some additional Strength and Credit, not only by arrogating to themselves the civil Things contain'd in this Speech, but also by sweetening his Majesty in return, and yielding to the Current of the Times: For the House was no sooner return'd, than the Speech was reported from the Chair; and it was resolv'd, Nemine Contradicente, "That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, giving his Majesty the humble Thanks of the House for his most gracious Speech from the Throne, and the Satisfaction he had been pleas'd to express with the Proceedings of the House; and to assure him, That, upon all Occasions, the House would be ready to assist his Majesty, in supporting those Alliances his Majesty should think fit to make, in Conjunction with the Emperor and the States-General, for the Preservation of the Liberties of Europe, the Prosperity and Peace of England, and for reducing the exorbitant Power of France." In the Manuscript cited by Mr. Tindal, it is however acknowledg'd, That some of the Managers were honest enough to oppose these Temporisings to the last, even to the forfeiting their own Credit with most of their Party.

Unanimous Address of the Commons thereon.

[Tindal. F. 474.]

Nor was this unanimous Resolution the only Instance of Court-Complaisance which the Crisis gave rise to: For the Day before, Mr. Secretary Hedges had acquainted the House in his Majesty's Name, "That, when his Majesty was pleas'd to communicate to the House the Letter of the States-General, the extraordinary Occasions they had for immediate Succours so fully appear'd, that the House thought fit to order, That 10,000 Men should be forthwith sent to their Assistance: That the Methods agreed upon and resolv'd by this House were, by taking twelve Battalions from Ireland, and by Recruits here, to make them up 10,000 Men. That his Majesty has thought it more proper and fit for his Service, to take a Battalion of his Guards, consisting of 833 Men, which are to be supply'd by the like Number out of those Troops which come from Ireland: That, altho' there may be no great Reason, considering the true Intention of the Act of Parliament for disbanding the Army, to trouble the House in this Particular, yet, since it has been freely talk'd abroad, as if something were intended that was derogatory to that Act and the Resolutions of this House, his Majesty has been graciously pleas'd to command him to lay this Matter before them, to the End, that if there be any Scruple or Doubt relating thereto, such other Measures may be taken as shall be thought meet." And, immediately after the Entry of the said Message in the Journals, we find the following Minute; to wit: "In which the House acquiesc'd; and express'd their Satisfaction, in his Majesty's Tenderness, not to violate the Act of Parliament, by keeping up more Forces than 7000 Men, which the Law allows." Besides; as if this solemn Acknowledgment of his Majesty's gracious Condescention was not sufficient, the Committee appointed to prepare the Address to his Majesty on the Resolution of the House, thought fit to add the following Clause: "And we likewise crave Leave, upon this Occasion, most humbly to thank your Majesty, for your Majesty's great Care and Tenderness lately signify'd to us, in keeping up such Forces only within this Kingdom, as are allow'd by Law." But on the Report, the House nevertheless thought fit to adhere to their Resolution, and to drop the Clause, which had apparently nothing to do with it.

A Message from the King in relation to a Battalion of his Guards sent to the States-General.

A. D. 1701.

Minute entered in the Journals thereon.

Clause added to the Address by the Committee, rejected by the House.

The said Address was presented to his Majesty by the whole House next Day; and his Majesty's Answer to it was as follows.

King's Answer.

"Gentlemen,

I thank you heartily for the unanimous Assurances you have given me of your Readiness to assist me, in supporting such Alliances as I shall make in Conjunction with the Emperor and the States-General: It will be a good Encouragement to them, to find the Sense of this Kingdom so fully express'd on this Occasion, and will likewise contribute most effectually to the obtaining those great Ends you have now mention'd, on which the Happiness of Europe does so much depend."

State of the Negotiation at the Hague.

For some Time before this, it must be observ'd, the French had abated of their Stiffness at the Hague: The first Concession [Cole, p. 389.] they had made was, That Mr. Stanhope might be present at the Conferences, provided he presented no Memorial: The next was, That M. d'Avaux might receive his [Ibid. p. 391.] Memorials, provided, That nothing should be discours'd of in the Conferences, but what regarded the Interests of England and the States-General: And This, it was said, the Most Christian King agreed to, in order to demonstrate the Sincerity of his Intentions for Peace. M. Poussion, who was now the acknowledg'd Agent of France in London, with the Character of Secretary to the Embassy, however, qualify'd the Last, by intimating to Mr. Vernon, It was also to be understood, That the Memorials to be given, were not to make any Mention of Nieuport and Ostend: But Lord Manchester is express, [P. 395.] That M. d'Avaux had Orders to enter into Treaty with M. Stanhope and the States Deputies without any Restriction: And on the 9th of June, which was the Day before his Lordship's Letter was dated, Mr. Vernon writ to him as follows: "As you shall have Occasion to discourse farther of that Matter, (the

A.D 1701. (the Negotiation that is to say) his Majesty thinks fit, you should make it understood, That it is not the Intention of his Majesty or the States to seperate themselves from the Emperor: But they are still of the same Opinion they had when their Demands were made by Mr. Stanhope and the Deputies of the States: That the giving the Emperor reasonable Satisfaction, would very much contribute towards securing the public Peace: Sir Charles Hedges will have Directions to signify the same by To-morrow's Post to Mr. Stanhope, that he may govern himself accordingly, in what he may have to transact with M. d'Avaux. His Majesty does not think it necessary, that you should deliver This to them in writing, nor speak of it, as if you had positive Orders to declare it, but rather insinuate it, as the most probable Means of procuring a lasting Tranquility, and such as may be depended on."

And now what Reason soever we have to be sick of the Controversy between the two Houses, and to loathe the Artifices practis'd on both Sides, the Laws of History will oblige us to follow the Course of it to the Issue.

No sooner, therefore, was the Resolution taken concerning the Address on the 12th, than the Messengers of the Lords brought down their Lordships Answers to the Messages of the 10th and 11th. To the Former of These they said, That, altho' they took it to be unparliamentary in many Particulars, yet, to shew their real Desire of avoiding Disputes and all Pretence of Delays, they should only take Notice of that Part of it, wherein they propose some Things as Difficulties; which Matters relating wholly to their Judicature, and to their Rights and Privileges as Peers, they think fit to acquaint the Commons with the following Resolutions of the House of Lords:

Forms of the Trials, as prescribed by the Lords.

"(n) 1. That no Lord of Parliament, impeach'd of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, and coming to his Trial, shall, upon his Trial, be without the Bar. 2. That no Lord of Parliament, impeach'd of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, can be precluded from voting on any Occasion, except in his own Trial. After which their Lordships farther took Notice of a Mistake in point of Fact alledg'd in the Message of the Commons, it no way appearing upon their Journals, that the Lords impeach'd have voted in their own Case: And add, The Lords, being well assur'd, that all the Steps that have been taken by them in relation to these Impeachments are warranted by the Practice of their Ancestors and the Usage of Parliament, have Reason to expect the Trials shall procede without Delay."

Then proceding to the Latter, their Lordships thought fit to say, That they could not give a greater Evidence of their sincere and hearty Desire of avoiding all Difference with the House of Commons, than by not taking Notice of the several just Exceptions to which that Message was liable: That they had nothing farther from their Thoughts, than to do any Thing which might have the least Appearance of Hardship with Relation to the Commons: But that the Answer of Lord Somers having been sent down to them on the 24th of May, and they having signify'd their Intention of beginning with his Trial in the first Place, their Lordships had thought it reasonable, considering the Advance of the Session, to appoint the 13th Instant for the said Trial, and had found several Precedents of Trials appointed on Impeachments within shorter Time: That their Lordships thought it incumbent on them to dispatch all the Trials before the Rising of the Parliament, as a Point of Justice, not of Indulgence: But that the Commons might nevertheless see how desirous their Lordships were to comply with them as far as was consistent with Justice, they had appointed the Trial of Lord Somers on the 17th in Westminster-Hall, where the House of Lords would then be sitting." To all which was added, That they agreed to the free Conference, at One o'Clock the next Day, in the Painted-Chamber.

A.D 1701.

They agree to a free Conference.

The Commons, notwithstanding, resolv'd to send back a Reply; and a Reply was accordingly reported by Mr. St. John, and agreed to the next Day; in Substance as follows: "That the Commons had greater Reason to insist on a joint Committee; because the Ambiguity and Uncertainty of their Lordships Messages, had shewn the Methods of former Parliaments to be the most proper Way for Dispatch of Business: That the Commons had been oblig'd to spend their Time in answering their Lordships Messages, which would have been otherwise spent in preparing for Lord Somers's Trial; so that the Delay must be charg'd to Those which gave the Occasion to it: That the Commons having desir'd a Committee of both Houses in order to adjust the Preliminaries of the Trials, could not but think it strange, their Lordships should come to Resolutions on Two of those Points, while the Proposal of the Commons was yet under Debate between the Two Houses, and the Commons had other Difficulties to propose, which not only regarded them as Prosecutors, but all future Impeachments: That tho' the Commons left their Lordships Resolutions to be debated at a Committee of both Houses, yet they could not but observe, That the Second was no direct Answer to the Commons Proposal, which was, Whether Peers impeach'd of the same Crimes, should vote for each other upon their Trial for the same Crimes: And that the Commons could not believe any such Rule, could be laid down in plain Words, where Objections of the Commons to the said Forms.

(n) When this Question was put, the Minority call'd for the previous Question, which being carry'd in the Affirmative, Nine Lords protested; urging, "That, how reasonable soever that Proposition might appear to their Hearts, yet they conceiv'd it very improper so to determine, before they had heard what the Commons had to say upon it."

A. D. 1701 where there was any Regard for Juſtice." The Whole concluding in the following Words.

" And as to what your Lordſhips obſerve, That there is a Miſtake in point of Fact alledg'd by the Commons: This Houſe may take Notice of the Caution uſed by your Lordſhips, in wording that Part of your Meſſage, for they know your Lordſhips are too well acquainted with the Truth of the Fact, to affirm, that the impeach'd Lords did not vote in their own Caſes; and tho' the appearing or not appearing upon your Lordſhips Journal does not make it more or leſs agreeable to the Rules of Juſtice, yet the Commons cannot but add this farther Obſervation from your Lordſhips Journal, that the impeach'd Lords Preſence is not only recorded when thoſe Votes paſs'd, but they alſo find ſome of them appointed of Committees, for preparing and drawing up the Meſſages and Anſwers to the Houſe of Commons; which they do not think has been the beſt Expedient for preſerving a good Correſpondence between the two Houſes, or adjuſting what will be neceſſary upon theſe Trials: And therefore the Commons cannot think it agreeable to the Rules of Parliament for them to appear at a Trial, till all neceſſary Preliminaries are firſt ſettled with your Lordſhip's."

Mr. St. John was then ordered to carry the ſame up to the Lords; and the Managers withdrew to the Conference which had an Iſſue altogether extraordinary: And what furniſhed both Parties with Pretences, to treat each other with more Bitterneſs than ever.——The Matter and Manner of which is thus cited in the Journals; as alſo in the Account printed by Order of the Houſe. To wit, " That the Managers appointed by this Houſe met the Lords at a free Conference, the Subject whereof was open'd by Mr. Harcourt, and immediately afterwards farther argu'd by Sir Bartholomew Shower.

Report of what paſs'd at the free Conference, and the Offence given to the Houſe by Lord Haverſham.

It was inſiſted on by each of them, That the Reaſons offer'd by their Lordſhips at the laſt Conference were not ſufficient for their Lordſhips diſagreeing to a Committee of both Houſes, deſir'd by the Commons at the firſt Conference.

That notwithſtanding thoſe Reaſons, the Commons ſtill thought a Committee of both Houſes abſolutely neceſſary for (n) adjuſting and preventing ſuch Differences as had happened or might ariſe previous to or upon the Trials; and therefore inſiſted that ſuch a Committee ſhould be appointed before the Commons could proceed on any Trial. A. D. 1701

'Twas urged as one Reaſon for ſuch a Committee, That many Difficulties might happen whereby the Trials might be obſtructed, if the Preliminaries ſhould not be firſt adjuſted; as one Inſtance, That Point of ſeveral Lords, being under Impeachments of the ſame Crimes, voting on each others Trials, was mentioned.

The Lord Steward firſt reply'd, and nothing was offer'd by his Grace but what was material and pertinent to the Matter in Queſtion, and agreeable to the Method of Parliament in free Conferences.

That John Lord Haverſham ſpoke immediately after, and in his Lordſhip's Diſcourſe uſed theſe or the like Expreſſions."

One Thing there is, tho' I can't ſpeak to it, becauſe I am bound up by the Orders of the Houſe; yet it muſt have ſome Anſwer: That is, as to the Lords voting in their own Caſe; it requires an Anſwer, tho' I can't go into the Debate of it. The (o) Commons themſelves have made this Precedent, for in theſe Impeachments they have allowed Men guilty of the ſame Crimes to vote in their own Houſe, and therefore we have not made any Diſtinction in our Houſe, that ſome ſhould vote, and ſome not. The Lords have ſo high an Opinion of the Juſtice of the Houſe of Commons, that they hope Juſtice ſhall never be made uſe of as a Maſk for any Deſign. And therefore give me Leave to ſay (though I am not to argue it) 'tis a plain Demonſtration, that the Commons think theſe Lords innocent; and I think the Propoſition is undeniable, for there are ſeveral Lords in the ſame Crimes, in the ſame Fact, there is no Diſtinction: And the Commons leave ſome of theſe Men at the Head of Affairs, near the King's Perſon, to do any Miſchief if their Perſons were inclin'd to it, and impeach others when they are both alike guilty, and concern'd in the ſame

(n) Sir Bartholomew Shower in particular ſaid among other Things, " I hope your Lordſhips will think it reaſonable that every Preliminary ſhould be ſettled before there be any farther Proceeding in this Matter: And the want of this was the Occaſion of Interrupting, or rather the preventing the Trial of the Lord Mordaunt (Temp. Car. II. An. 1666-7) which is a Caſe too well known to your Lordſhips to need any farther Remonſtrance: As to the Reaſon alledg'd by your Lordſhips for the diſagreeing with the Commons in their Deſire of having a Committee of both Houſes, ſurely, my Lords, there can be no Difference between Treaſon and Miſdemeanor: And no Caſe can be cited either in Parliament, or other Proceedings, that can warrant any Diſtinction, as to the Method deſir'd for ſettling Preliminaries, between the one and the other: For the Difference in the Nature of theſe Crimes can only be urg'd for the Accents incurring a different Puniſhment. But, certainly, a Committee to adjuſt ſuch Preliminaries may be as reaſonable in one Caſe as in the other: Your Lordſhips do agree this was practis'd in the Caſe of Lord Stafford: And that is a Precedent full and expreſs in the Point: and that was after a Conference and much Debate: And altho' the Seſſions broke up for want of it, yet the next Seſſions your Lordſhips did think fit to agree to it; and a Committee was had of both Houſes: And tho' your Lordſhips are pleas'd to ſay, it had no great Succeſs, I think, with Submiſſion, the Succeſs was ſuch as we hope for upon this Occaſion, if your Lordſhips will permit the ſame Method to be follow'd: And that was, Juſtice upon the Criminal."

(o) Lord Haverſham would not allow that his Words had been preciſely taken: Thus in his own Account, inſtead of theſe Words, guilty of the ſame Crimes, he ſays, concern'd in the ſame Fact: Inſtead of thoſe below, in the ſame Crimes, in the ſame Facts, he ſays, in the ſame Circumſtances, in the ſame Facts: And yet again, inſtead of the Words if their Perſons were inclin'd to it, and impeach others, when they are both alike guilty, and concern'd in the ſame Facts, he ſays, if they were inclinable to it, it looks as if they thought them all innocent. Which Concluſion of his Lordſhips is not altogether warrantable: For, allowing all the Perſons referr'd to, to be in the ſame Predicament, the Commons might poſſibly hold them all guilty, inſtead of all innocent: So that their Fault did not conſiſt in proſecuting Theſe; but in not proſecuting all.

A. D. 1701. same Facts. This is a Thing I was in hopes I should never have heard asserted, when the Beginning of it was from the House of Commons.

" These Expressions (which, by the Way, were obnoxious only because of the Truths they contain'd; and because the Commons had no Fence on that Side) were instantly objected to by Sir Christopher Musgrave; and the Managers took them to be so great an Aspersion on the Honour of this House, that they thought themselves obliged in Duty immediately to withdraw from the free Conference." As the Managers were withdrawing, his Grace my Lord Steward spoke to the Effect following; " That he hoped we would not think that Lord had any Authority from the House of Lords, to use any such Expressions towards the Commons.

What Debates this Report occasion'd, have not been specify'd: But the Resolutions of the House upon it were as follow. To wit, That John Lord Haversham hath at the free Conference this Day, utter'd most scandalous Reproaches and false Expressions, highly reflecting upon the Honour and Justice of the House of Commons, and tending to the making a Breach in the good Correspondence between the Lords and Commons, and to the interrupting the public Justice of the Nation, by delaying the Proceedings on the Impeachments.

Resolutions of the Commons.

That John Lord Haversham be charg'd before the Lords, for the Words spoken by the said Lord this Day at the free Conference: And that the Lords be desir'd to procede in Justice against the said Lord Haversham, and to inflict such Punishment upon the said Lord, as so high an Offence against the House of Commons does deserve.

Then Sir Christopher Musgrave was order'd to carry the said Charge and Resolution to the Lords, and soon after their Lordships sent down the following Message.

" Mr. Speaker,

and two Messages from the Lords thereon.

The Lords having been inform'd by their Managers, that some Interruption happen'd at the free Conference, which their Lordships are concern'd at, because they wish that nothing should interrupt the public Business, do desire the Commons would come again presently to the said free Conference, which they do not doubt will prove the best Expedient to prevent the Inconvenience of a Misunderstanding upon what has past."

The next Day also their Lordships sent another plausible Message in the following Terms.

" Mr. Speaker,

The Lords have commanded us to acquaint this House, That upon the Occasion of their last Message Yesterday, in order to continue a good Correspondence between the two Houses, their Lordships did immediately appoint a Committee to state the Matter of the free Conference, and also to inspect Precedents of what has happen'd of the like Nature; and that the public Business may receive no Interruption, the Time desir'd by their Lordships for renewing the free Conference being elapsed, their Lordships desired a present free Conference in the Painted-Chamber upon the Subject-Matter of the last free Conference."

A. D. 1701.

But the Commons were now become too stiff to bend, and return'd for Answer. " That the Commons were extremely desirous to preserve a good Correspondence between the two Houses, and to expedite the Trials of the impeach'd Lords, but do conceive 'tis not consistent with the Honour of the Commons to renew the free Conference, until they have receiv'd Reparation by their Lordships doing Justice upon John Lord Haversham, for the Indignity he Yesterday offer'd to the House of Commons."

The Lords, however, the same Day took Care to convince the Commons, That they persever'd in their Purpose of bringing on the Trial of Lord Somers on the 17th, by two other Messages, one of which was to signify that Sir Stephen Fox, Mr. Smith, Mr. Lowndes, Mr. Hervey, and Mr. Gulston, all of them Members, being material Witnesses on his Lordship's Behalf, their Lordships desir'd they might have Leave to attend, in order to give their Testimonies: And the second was to communicate the Rules, which their Lordships had laid down, to be observ'd at the Trial, which were as follow.

Rules laid down by the Lords to be observ'd at the Trials.

" That the whole Impeachment is to be read, and then the Answer; which being done, the Lord-Keeper is to tell the Commons, That now they may go on with their Evidence.

Then the Lord Keeper is to declare, That now the Court is proceding to hear the Evidence, and desire the Peers to give Attention.

If any of the Peers, or the Members of the House of Commons that manage the Evidence, or the Lord impeach'd, do desire to have any Question ask'd, they must desire the Lord-Keeper to ask the same.

If any Doubt doth arise at the Trial, no Debate is to be in the Court, but the Question suspended to be debated in this House.

The Members of the House of Commons to be there before the Peers come.

None to be cover'd at the Trial but the Peers.

That such Peers at the Trial of the impeach'd Lords, who, at the Instance of the said Lord, or of the Commons, shall be admitted Witnesses, are to be sworn at the Clerk's Table, and the Lord Keeper to administer the Oath, and to deliver their Evidence in their own Places.

Those Witnesses that are Commoners are to be sworn at the Bar by the Clerk, and are to deliver their Evidence there.

The Oath to be

The Evidence which you shall give upon the Impeachment of shall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth; so help you God, and the Contents of this Book.

The impeach'd Lord may cross-examine Witnesses viva voce."

Their

A. D. 1701. The Lordſhips alſo by two other Meſſages, the ſame Day ſent down Lord Halifax's Anſwer, reminded the Commons that no Particulars had, as yet, been exhibited againſt the Earl of Portland; and that, in order to keep up a good Correſpondence between the two Houſes, and to put the Charge againſt Lord Haverſham in a Courſe of Juſtice, They had order'd his Lordſhip a Copy of that Charge; as alſo that he ſhould put in his Charge thereto, in order to bring that Matter to a ſpeedy Judgment.

The next Day, being the Day appointed for the Trial, Mr. Harcourt, from the impeaching Committee, reported the Reaſons they had prepar'd, by Order of the Houſe, why they could not procede to the ſaid Trial, which were agreed to, and which, in order to complete this memorable Controverſy, muſt be inſerted entire, together with theſe ſubſequent Orders, Reſolutions, &c. of both Houſes. To wit, "The Commons, in this whole Proceeding againſt the impeach'd Lords, have acted with all imaginable Zeal to bring them to a ſpeedy Trial; and they doubt not but 'twill appear, by comparing their Procedings with all others upon the like Occaſion, that the Houſe of Commons have nothing to blame themſelves for, but that they have not expreſſed the Reſentment their Anceſtors have juſtly ſhew'd upon much leſs Attempts, which have been made upon the Power of Impeachments.

Reaſons why the Commons cannot procede to the Trial.

The Commons on the 31ſt of May, acquainted your Lordſhips that they thought it proper from the Nature of the Evidence, to procede in the firſt Place upon the Trial of the Lord Somers, upon the firſt Intimation from your Lordſhips ſome Days afterwards, that you would proceed to the Trial of any of the impeach'd Lords, whom the Commons ſhould be firſt ready to begin with; notwithſtanding your Lordſhips had before thought fit to appoint which Impeachment ſhould be firſt tried, and affix a Day for ſuch Trial without conſulting the Commons, who are the Proſecutors.

The Commons, determining to expedite the Trials to the utmoſt of their Power, in hopes of attaining that End, and for the more ſpeedy and eaſy adjuſting and preventing any Differences which had happen'd, or might ariſe previous to or upon theſe Trials, propos'd to your Lordſhips, at a Conference the moſt parliamentary and effectual Method for that Purpoſe, and that which in no Manner intrench'd upon your Lordſhips Judicature, That a Committee of both Houſes ſhould be nominated to conſider of the moſt proper Ways and Methods of Proceedings upon Impeachments according to the Uſage of Parliament.

In the next Meſſage to the Commons upon Monday the 9th of June, your Lordſhips thought fit, without taking the leaſt Notice of this Propoſition, to appoint the Friday then following, for the Trial of the ſaid Lord Somers; whereunto, as well as to many other Meſſages and Proceedings of your Lordſhips upon this Occaſion, the

A. D. 1701. Houſe of Commons might have juſtly taken very great Exceptions; yet, as an Evidence of their Moderation, and to ſhew their Readineſs to bring the impeach'd Lords to ſpeedy Juſtice, the Commons inſiſted only on their Propoſition, for a Committee of both Houſes to ſettle and adjuſt the neceſſary Preliminaries to the Trial: Particularly, whether the impeach'd Lords ſhould appear on their Trials at your Lordſhips Bar as Criminals: Whether being under Accuſations of the ſame Crimes, they ſhould ſit as Judges on each others Trial for thoſe Crimes, or ſhould vote in their own Caſes, as 'tis notorious they have been permitted by your Lordſhips to do in many Inſtances which might be given: To which Particulars your Lordſhips have not yet given a direct Anſwer, tho' put in Mind thereof by the Commons.

Your Lordſhips, at a Conference, having offer'd ſome Reaſons why you could not agree to a Committee of both Houſes, to adjuſt the neceſſary Preliminaries, the Commons thereupon deſir'd a free Conference, and your Lordſhips agreed thereunto; at which 'tis well known to many of your Lordſhips who were then preſent, what moſt ſcandalous Reproaches and falſe Expreſſions, highly reflecting upon the Honour and Juſtice of the Houſe of Commons, were utter'd by John Lord Haverſham, whereby the Commons were under a Neceſſity of withdrawing from the ſaid free Conference; for which Offence the Commons have, with all due Regard to your Lordſhips, pray'd your Lordſhips Juſtice againſt the Lord Haverſham, but have as yet receiv'd no Manner of Satisfaction.

The Commons reſtrain themſelves from enumerating your Lordſhips very many irregular and unparliamentary Proceedings upon this Occaſion, but think it is what they owe to public Juſtice and all the Commons of England whom they repreſent, to declare ſome few of thoſe Reaſons why they peremptorily refuſe to procede to the Trial of the Lord Somers on the 17th of June.

Firſt, Becauſe your Lordſhips have not yet agreed, That a Committee of both Houſes ſhould be appointed for ſettling the neceſſary Preliminaries; a Method never until this Time deny'd by the Houſe of Lords, whenſoever the Commons have thought it neceſſary to deſire the ſame.

Secondly, Should the Commons (which they never will do) be contented to give up thoſe Rights which have been tranſmitted to them from their Anceſtors, and are of abſolute Neceſſity to their Proceedings on Impeachments, yet, whilſt they have any regard to public Juſtice, they never can appear as Proſecutors before your Lordſhips, till your Lordſhips have firſt given them Satisfaction, That Lords impeach'd of the ſame Crimes ſhall not ſit as Judges on each others Trials for thoſe Crimes.

Thirdly, Becauſe the Commons have, as yet, receiv'd no Reparation for the great Indignity offered to them at the free Conference

A. D. 1701. rence by the Lord Haverſham: The Commons are far from any Inclination, and cannot be ſuppoſed to be under any Neceſſity of delaying the Trial of the Lord Somers: There is not any Article exhibited by them in Maintenance of their Impeachment againſt the Lord Somers, for the Proof whereof they have not full and undeniable Evidence, which they will be ready to produce as ſoon as your Lordſhips ſhall have done Juſtice upon the Lord Haverſham, and the neceſſary Preliminaries, in order to the ſaid Trial, ſhall be ſettled by a Committee of both Houſes.

The Commons think it unneceſſary to obſerve to your Lordſhips, That moſt of the Articles whereof the Lord Somers ſtands impeach'd, will appear to your Lordſhips to be undoubtedly true from Matters of Record, as well as by the Confeſſion of the ſaid Lord Somers in his Anſwer to the ſaid Articles, to which the Commons doubt not but your Lordſhips will have a due Regard when his Trial ſhall regularly procede."

Theſe Reaſons the Earl of Dyſert was then order'd to carry up to the Lords, and having carry'd them up accordingly, Mr. Secretary Hedges acquainted the Houſe in his Majeſty's Name, "That his Majeſty being like to have Occaſion to draw ſome more Troops out of Ireland for the Plantations, it was thought beſt for the Service, That the Men ſo drawn off as Occaſion ſhould require, ſhould be recruited here in England, rather than in Scotland, or in Ireland: That there was no Occaſion for troubling the Houſe with this: But that his Majeſty had nevertheleſs commanded him to lay it before them: His Majeſty being inclin'd to communicate all Matter of this Nature to them." But ſuch was the Ferment of the Houſe, that, except by an imperfect Entry of the Meſſage in the Journals, no Notice was taken of it, and we can only infer, That the Houſe acquieſced; becauſe nothing appears to the contrary: The Lords were, at this Inſtant, proceeding to what they call'd the Trial of Lord Somers: And the great Object of the Commons was to order (and ſuch an Order was made accordingly)

A Meſſage from the King concerning the Manner of replacing certain Troops drawn from Ireland.

Order, that no Member preſume to attend the Trial of Lord Somers.

"That no Member of this Houſe do preſume to appear at the Place erected for the pretended Trial of the Lord Somers, under the Penalty of incurring the utmoſt Diſpleaſure of this Houſe."

Proceedings of the Lords in relation to the ſaid Trial.

The firſt Queſtion which appears to have been ſtated by the Lords was, "Whether this Houſe ſhall go this Day into Weſtminſter-Hall, in order to procede upon the Trial of the Lord Somers, according to the Order of the Day," which having been long and warmly debated, was carry'd in the Affirmative: Whereupon thirty two Lords deſir'd Leave to enter their Diſſents: But the Reaſons they aſſign'd were ſo injurious to the Houſe, as we are given to underſtand by Biſhop Burnet, that they were expung'd by an Order of the next Day—But they were, nevertheleſs, preſerv'd, it ſeems, and were expreſs'd as follows: To

Tindal, P. 469 wit. "We do conceive it very improper to procede to this Trial before the Preliminaries are adjuſted; eſpecially ſince ſome of thoſe Preliminaries are ſuch as, in our Opinions, are eſſentially neceſſary to the Adminiſtration of Juſtice: And, after ſuch a Proteſtation of the Commons, as they have ſent us againſt the Proceedings to a Trial, and which, we conceive is founded upon Juſtice, and the reaſonable Method of Parliament, we apprehend our Proceeding now to that Trial, may tend to the Diſappointment of all future Trials upon Impeachments."

A Meſſage was then ſent to the Commons to acquaint them, That the Lords intended preſently to procede to the Trial of the Lord Somers: But this Meſſage is not acknowledg'd in the Journals of the Commons.

A new Debate follow'd next on the Queſtion, and previous Queſtions, Whether the Earl of Orford and Lord Halliſax ſhould have Leave to withdraw, which were carry'd in the Affirmative, and that without being proteſted againſt, tho' Biſhop Burnet affirms the contrary: After which the Lord-Keeper deſir'd ſome farther Directions might be given to him, in order to the Trial; and, in particular, propos'd, That the following Proclamation might be made in the Hall, viz. "Whereas a Charge of high Crimes and Miſdemeanors has been exhibited by the Houſe of Commons, in the Name of themſelves, and of the Commons of England, againſt John Lord Somers, all Perſons concern'd are to take Notice, that he now ſtands upon his Trial: And they may now come forth, in order to make good the ſaid Charge." This, alſo, occaſion'd a Debate: But on the Queſtion, Whether this Proclamation ſhould be made? It was reſolv'd in the Affirmative.

The Houſe was then adjourn'd to Weſtminſter-Hall, and there reſum'd; the Proclamation was made, the Articles againſt Lord Somers were read, as alſo his Reply: After which the ſame Proclamation having been again read, the Lord-Keeper declar'd, the Houſe was ready to hear Evidence againſt his Lordſhip: And his Lordſhip mov'd to have his Council heard. And theſe Formalities being over, the Houſe was adjourn'd to the Houſe above, where it being mov'd, to acquit the Lord Somers, a long Debate enſu'd, ſeveral Points were put to the Judges and argu'd by them. And at laſt this Queſtion was propos'd, "That John Lord Somers be acquitted of the Articles againſt him, exhibited by the Houſe of Commons, and all Things therein contain'd, and that the ſaid Impeachment be diſmiſs'd." Which Queſtion, was not only carried, but it was alſo reſolv'd, It ſhould be put in the Court below, Contents fifty ſix, Not-Contents thirty one, The ſaid thirty one then enter'd their Diſſents for ſuch Reaſons as the Houſe thought fit, to order to be expung'd, as they had done the former: And Biſhop Burnet is free enough to ſay, The new Miniſtry, and the Jacobites join'd to ſupport the Pretenſions of the Commons, as if theſe Diſſenters had been compos'd of none but ſuch.

Burnet.

But

A.D. 1701. But among them we find, nevertheleſs, the Names of the Duke of Somerſet, the Earls of Warrington and Peterborough, the Lords Lexington and Cholmondeley, all Whigs; not to forget Thoſe of the Earl of Marlborough and Lord Godolphin; ſo dear to the Whigs afterwards, tho' ſo odious to them now: And it may not be amiſs to add upon this Topic, That, tho' in the two Liſts of diſſenting Peers ſtanding in the Journal of this Day, the Difference in point of Number conſiſts but of one, the Names of the Duke of Northumberland, and the Lords Weſton and Cholmondeley, are to be found in the Firſt, and not in the Laſt: And Thoſe of the Earls of Lindſey and Jerſey, in the Laſt and not in the Firſt.

The next Point diſcuſs'd, was the Manner of proceding in the Hall, on putting this Queſtion, and in declaring the Deciſion: Which having been adjuſted, Candles were order'd, and the Houſe again adjourn'd to Weſtminſter-Hall; where the Lord-Keeper having put the ſaid Queſtion, and collected the Votes upon it, agreable to the Orders he had receiv'd above, declar'd the Majority was for acquitting: As alſo, That John Lord Somers was acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment againſt him exhibited by the Houſe of Commons, and all Things therein contain'd; that the ſaid Impeachment was diſmiſs'd; and, by particular Addreſs to Lord Somers, That he was acquitted.

Lord Somers acquitted by his Peers.

Laſtly: The Lords returning to the Houſe above, ratify'd the ſaid Acquittal, by a ſolemn Vote, and order'd their Proceedings upon the Impeachments to be printed.

The next Day the Commons order'd the Impeaching Committee to inſpect the Lords Journals, and report what they found therein: As alſo, That no Members preſume to go out of Town: And That all Members attend the Service of the Houſe on Friday next the 20th: On which Day they were no ſooner met, than they receiv'd a Meſſage from the Lords, ſignifying, That their Lordſhips had appointed the 23d for the Trial of the Earl of Orford: And that they had ſent down a Copy of the Lord Haverſham's Anſwer to the Charge againſt them; after which the Meſſengers proceded in theſe Terms.

The Lords acquaint the Commons that they had appointed the 23d for the Trial of Lord Orford, &c.

"Alſo, That the Lords, in Anſwer to the Meſſage of the Commons of the 17th Inſtant, ſay, The only true Way of determining which of the two Houſes has acted with the greateſt Sincerity, in order to bring the Impeach'd Lords to their Trials, is to look back upon the reſpective Proceedings.

The Lords do not well underſtand what the Commons mean by that Reſentment which they ſpeak of in their Meſſage. Their Lordſhips own the Houſe of Commons have a Right of Impeaching: And the Lords have the undoubted Power of doing Juſtice upon thoſe Impeachments, by bringing them to Trial, and condemning or acquitting the Parties in a reaſonable Time. This Power is deriv'd to them from their Anceſtors, which they will not ſuffer to be wreſted from them by any Pretences whatſoever.

Their Lordſhips cannot but wonder, that A.D. 1701. the Commons ſhould not have propos'd a Committee of both Houſes much ſooner, if they thought it ſo neceſſary for the bringing on the Trials; no Mention being made of ſuch a Committee from the 1ſt of April to the 6th of June, altho', during that Interval, their Delays were frequently complain'd of by the Houſe of Lords.

The Manner in which the Commons demanded this Committee, the Lords look upon as a direct invading of their Judicature: And, therefore, as there never was a Committee of both Houſes yielded to by the Lords in caſe of any Impeachment for High Crimes and Miſdemeanours; ſo their Lordſhips do inſiſt, that they will make no new Precedent upon this Occaſion. Many Impeachments for Miſdemeanour have, in all Times, been determin'd without ſuch a Committee: And if now the Commons think fit, by an unprecedented Demand, to form an Excuſe for not proſecuting their Impeachments, it is demonſtrable where the Obſtruction lies.

As to the Preliminaries which the Commons mention in particular as proper to be ſettled at ſuch a Committee, they have receiv'd the Reſolutions of the Houſe of Lords therein, by their Meſſage of the 12th Inſtant; from which, being Matters relating intirely to their Judicature, their Lordſhips cannot depart.

As to the laſt Pretence the Commons would make to ſhelter the delaying the Trials, from ſome Expreſſions which fell from the Lord Haverſham at the free Conference, at which Offence was taken, their Lordſhips will only obſerve, 1ſt, That they have omitted nothing which might give the Commons all reaſonable Satisfaction of their Purpoſe to do them Juſtice in that Matter, ſo far as is conſiſtent with doing Juſtice to that Lord; and alſo to preſerve a good Correſpondence with them, as appears by the ſeveral Steps they have taken. 2dly, That this Buſineſs has no Relation to the Trial of the impeach'd Lords; and therefore their Lordſhips cannot imagine, why the Commons ſhould make Satisfaction and Reparation againſt the Lord Haverſham, a neceſſary Condition for the going on with the Trials, and at the ſame Time find no Difficulty in proceding on other Buſineſs."

In Anſwer to which, the Commons return'd by the Lord Mordaunt the following Reſolution: "That the Lords have been acquainted, that the Commons would proceed in the firſt Place againſt the Lord Somers: And that they are ready to go to that Lord's Trial, as ſoon as they have receiv'd Satisfaction for the Affront offer'd to the Houſe of Commons by the Lord Haverſham at the free Conference; and that the neceſſary Preliminaries are adjuſted by a Committee of both Houſes."

The Reply of the Commons.

Mr. Bruges then reported the Particulars already recounted in relation to the Acquital of Lord Somers from the Lords Journal: And the Serjeant having, by Order, gone his Rounds with the Mace, to ſummon the immediate Attendance of all the Members he could find, the Houſe proceeded to take the ſaid Report into Conſideration: What follow'd, was Debate as uſual; in the Courſe of which, it may be very well ſuppos'd, that ſome ſuch Things were ſaid, as B. Burnet glances at: Where he ſays, "The Commons ſaid, They were the only Judges, when they were ready with their Evidence: And that is was a Mockery to go to a Trial, when they were not ready to appear at it:" And it is well if they did not add, That it was alſo a Mockery to call That a Trial, wherein one Party only was preſent.

A. D. 1701

[B. 279.]

But however this may be, the Houſe at length Reſolv'd,

The Reſolutions of the Commons with regard to the Acquittal of Lord Somers.

"1. That the Lords have refus'd Juſtice to the Commons upon the Impeachment againſt the Lord Somers, by denying them a Committee of both Houſes, which was deſir'd by the Commons, as the proper and only Method of ſettling the neceſſary Preliminaries in order to the proceding to the Trial of the ſaid Lord Somers with Effect: And afterwards, by proceding to a pretended Trial of the ſaid Lord, which could tend only to protect him from Juſtice, by colour of an illegal Acquittal; againſt which Proceedings of the Lords, the Commons do ſolemnly proteſt, as being repugnant to the Rules of Juſtice, and therefore Null and Void.

2. That the Houſe of Lords, by the pretended Trial of John Lord Somers, have endeavour'd to overturn the Right of Impeachments, lodg'd in the Houſe of Commons by the antient Conſtitution of this Kingdom, for the Safety and Protection of the Commons againſt the Power of Great Men; and have made an Invaſion upon the Liberties of the Subject, by laying a Foundation of Impunity for the greateſt Offenders.

3. That all the ill Conſequences which may, at this Time, attend the Delay of the Supplies given by the Commons for the preſerving the public Peace, and maintaining the Balance of Europe, by ſupporting our Allies againſt the Power of France, are to be imputed to thoſe who, to procure an Indemnity for their own enormous Crimes, have us'd their utmoſt Endeavours to make a Breach between the two Houſes."

A. D. 1701

The Two firſt of theſe Reſolutions paſs'd without a Diviſion: But on the Laſt, the Houſe divided, and it was carry'd by 145 Voices againſt 88. The Impeaching Committee was then order'd to conſider of the Procedings between the two Houſes relating to the Impeach'd Lords, and to ſtate to the Houſe the Matter of Fact, in order to the Juſtification of the Houſe in their Procedings.

Immediately after which, came down the following Meſſage from the Lords; to wit.

"Mr. Speaker,

In Anſwer to the Meſſage of the Houſe of Commons this Day, the Lords do acquaint the Commons, That they might have known by the Records of the Houſe of Lords, that the Lords have proceded to the Trial of the Lord Somers on Tueſday laſt, being the Day appointed: And the Commons not appearing to maintain their Articles againſt the ſaid Lord, the Lords have, by the Judgment of their Houſe, acquitted him of the Articles of Impeachment againſt him, exhibited by the Houſe of Commons, and all Things therein contain'd; and have diſmiſs'd the ſaid Impeachment.

And the Lords have appointed Monday next for the Trial of the Earl of Orford, on which Day they will procede on the ſaid Trial.

The Commons ſtill preſſing for a Committee of both Houſes, (which the Lords never can conſent to) for the Reaſons already given, their Lordſhips can infer nothing from their perſiſting in that Demand, than that they never deſign'd to bring any of their Impeachments to Trial.

As to the Lord Haverſham, his Anſwer is now before the Houſe of Commons; and the Lords reſolve to do Juſtice in that Matter."

After which an Order, "That no Member of this Houſe do preſume to appear on Monday next at the pretended Trial of the Earl of Orford, upon pain of incurring the utmoſt Diſpleaſure of this Houſe," put an End to the Buſineſs of the Day, and to the Controverſy on their Side: For as to the (q) Reply

---

(q) The Abſtract of it given by B Burnet, is in theſe Words. "He ſaid, his Grant in Ireland was of ſome Debts and Sums of Money, and ſo was not thought to be within the Act, concerning the confiſcated Eſtates: All he had ever receiv'd of it, was 400*l*. If he was bound to repay it, he was liable to an Action for it; but every Man was not to be impeach'd, who did not pay his Debts at the Day of Payment. His Grant in the Foreſt of Dean, was only of the Weedings: ſo it could be no Waſte of Timber, nor a Prejudice to the Navy: The Auditor's Place was held by another, till he obtain'd the King's Leave to withdraw from the Treaſury: As for the firſt Partition-Treaty, he never once ſaw it, nor was he ever adviſ'd with in it: As for the Second, he gave his Advice very freely about it, at the ſingle Time, in which he had ever heard any Thing concerning it." But an Abſtract more to be depended upon follows; to wit.

To the Firſt Article, That he did accept the ſaid Grant, as it was lawful for him to do, without Breach of his Duty, as the Truſt repos'd in him; which Grant hath ſince been taken away by Act of Parliament, and he hath not made clear thereof, as yet, above 400*l*.

To the Second, That he gave Direction, after the ſaid Act paſs'd, to his Agents in Ireland, to do, in relation to the Money receiv'd, as ſhould be adviſ'd by Council there; by whom his Agents were adviſ'd, that the ſaid Monies being receiv'd out of the mean Profits, which were remitted by that Act, were not within the firſt mention'd Clauſe in the ſaid Act.

To the Third, That he ſerved his Majeſty faithfully in his Stations, and his Majeſty graciouſly accepted of his Service; and as a Mark of his Royal Favour, did make, for his Benefit, ſuch Grants as are mention'd in the precedent and ſubſequent Articles, and none other: And as to other Perſons, he only, in conjunction with the other Commiſſioners, did ſign ſeveral Warrants and Dockets for ſuch Grants, as his Majeſty was pleas'd to direct.

To the Fourth, That his Majeſty, out of his Grace and Favour, did grant, in Truſt for him, the Sum of 2000*l*. per Ann. to be raiſed by the Poll of Scots-Peers, Burghs, for the Space of ſeven Years; which Grant was not perfected till to any Timber growing on the ſaid Eſtates: And if any Abuſes were made in cutting the Woods, he was never he is not anſwerable for the ſame, it being done by the Direction of his Majeſty's Surveyor-General, and other his Majeſty's Officers.

To the Fifth, That the Grant of the ſaid Office was done at his Deſire and Requeſt, becauſe he deſired, in three Years Space, to leave his own Employment and Place in the Exchequer, to leave his own Employment and Place in the Exchequer, and to obtain a Surrender from the ſaid Bearers of the ſaid Office, and procure a Grant thereof to himſelf, which has been ſince done, and he conceives was lawful for him to do.

And to the Sixth, That he never did adviſe his Majeſty to enter into or make the ſaid Treaty, or was ever conſulted upon any Clauſe in Article thereof: But when the ſaid Matter was diſcours'd at Twickenham Park, he made ſeveral Objections to the ſame.

A. D. 1701. Reply of Lord Halifax to the Articles of Impeachment, and That of Lord Haverſham, they gave neither of them a Reading; conſequently neither of them could be enter'd in their Journals, nor in the State of their Proceedings, printed by order of the Houſe, as by ſpecial Advertiſement is ſignify'd at the End of the ſaid State.

And in order to ſhew how much their Prudence exceded their Candour, in the laſt of theſe Suppreſſions at leaſt, it will be expedient to inſert the moſt material Part of Lord Haverſham's Paper, as follows.

Lord Haverſham's Anſwer to the Charge of the Commons.

"That the Nature of that Conference was, that it ſhould be free; the Occaſion of it, becauſe either Houſe apprehended the other to be in an Error; and the End of it, that each Side might urge ſuch Facts as are true, and ſuch Reaſons as are forcible to convince. That one Article of the Impeachment againſt John Lord Somers, was, That the Treaty of Partition 1699, was ratify'd under the Great-Seal, which then was in the Cuſtody of the ſame Lord, then Lord-Chancellor of England: That the Commons, on the 1ſt of April, 1701, Reſolv'd, That the Earl of Portland, by negotiating and concluding the Treaty of Partition, was guilty of a High Crime and Miſdemeanour; and, perſuant thereto, lodg'd an Impeachment againſt him in the Houſe of Peers; which Vote and Impeachment could not have Reference to any Treaty, other than the Treaty of Partition of 1699, the Treaty of 1698 not being before the Houſe of Commons, till after the Time of that Vote and Impeachment: And yet the Earl of Jerſey, who then was Secretary of State and a Privy-Counſellor, and actually ſign'd the ſaid Treaty of 1699, as a Plenipotentiary with the Lord Portland, ſtands unimpeach'd, and continues at the Head of Affairs, being Lord-Chamberlain, near his Majeſty's Perſon, and in his Preſence and Councils, (without Complaint): That the Earl of Orford, and the Lords Somers and Halifax, are ſeverally impeach'd for adviſing the Treaty of Partition of 1698, and yet Mr. Secretary Vernon, who then was Secretary of State, and a Privy-Counſellor, and acted in the promoting of the Treaty of Partition of 1698, ſtands unimpeach'd, and ſtill continues one of the principal Secretaries of State; and Sir Joſeph Williamſon, who then was a Privy-Counſellor, and tranſacted and ſign'd the Treaty of Partition of 1698, as a Plenipotentiary, ſtands unimpeach'd. That the Lord Halifax is impeach'd, for that he being a Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, aſſented to the paſſing of divers Grants from the Crown to ſeveral Perſons, of Lands in Ireland; and yet Sir Edward Seymour, Sir Stephen Fox, and Mr. Pelham, who being ſeverally Lords Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, did ſeverally aſſent to the paſſing of divers like Grants from his Majeſty, of Lands in Ireland, ſtand unimpeach'd. That in the Impeachments againſt the Earl of Orford and Lord Somers, one of the Articles againſt them is, for procuring a Commiſſion to Captain Kidd, and likewiſe a Grant under the Great-Seal, of the Ships and Goods of certain Perſons therein nam'd, to certain Perſons in Truſt for them; and yet other Lords, equally concern'd in procuring the ſaid Commiſſion and Grant, ſtand unimpeach'd: That the ſaid Mr. Secretary Vernon, Sir Edward Seymour, Sir Stephen Fox, and Mr. Pelham, notwithſtanding their being Parties in the ſame Facts, charg'd in the ſaid reſpective Impeachments, have been permitted to ſit and vote in the Houſe of Commons, touching the Impeachments and the Matters thereof: That theſe Facts being true, and publicly known, the Conſequences reſulting therefrom (as the ſaid Lord Haverſham apprehended) are undeniable, viz. That the doing of the ſame Thing, by two Perſons in equal Circumſtances, cannot be a Crime in one, and not in another."

A. D. 1701.

The Commons, on the 20th, adjourn'd to the 24th: But the Lords continued to ſit, as well for the Sake of making Repriſals on the Commons, as of completing the Proceſs they had begun. Thus on Saturday the 21ſt, the Houſe being mov'd to conſider what was fit to be done in the Caſe of Lord Haverſham, and the ſaid Lord deſiring to be proſecuted, it was Reſolv'd, "That the Anſwer of the ſaid Lord to the Charge of the Commons, having been ſent down to the Commons, unleſs the ſaid Charge ſhould be proſecuted with Effect before the End of the Seſſion, the Lords would declare and adjudge him wholly innocent thereof."

Vote of the Lords in relation to Lord Haverſham.

On the 23d alſo, reſuming the adjourn'd Debate on the printed Votes of the Houſe of Commons on the 20th, their Lordſhips were pleas'd to Reſolve, "That the Reſolution of the Commons therein, contain'd moſt unjuſt Reflections on the Honour and Juſtice of the Houſe of Peers, and were contriv'd to cover their affected and unreaſonable Delays in proſecuting the impeach'd Lords; and manifeſtly tended to the Deſtruction of the Judicature of the Lords, to the rendering Trials on Impeachments impracticable for the Future, and to the ſubverting the Conſtitution of the Engliſh Government: And that, therefore, whatever ill Conſequences might ariſe from the ſo long deferring the Supplies for this Year's Service, were to be attributed to the fatal Council, of the putting off the Meeting of a Parliament ſo long, and to the unneceſſary Delays of the Houſe of Commons." After which adjourning to Weſtminſter-Hall, they acquitted the Earl of Orford with the ſame Formalities, as they had before obſerv'd in acquitting Lord Somers: Only in this Caſe, the Votes were unanimous; for the Minority now thought it adviſable, not to countenance with their Preſence a Procedure which they could not prevail on themſelves to approve.

and in Anſwer to the Votes of the Commons.

Laſtly: On the 24th they diſmiſs'd the Charge againſt Lord Haverſham, as alſo the Impeachments againſt the Earl of Portland and Lord Halifax: And then recollecting the Impeachment which in the Year 1695, had been laid by the Whigs againſt the Duke of Leeds, and which, notwithſtanding the Hardſhip it was upon him, had never been proſecuted prosecuted or discharg'd, they thought it but reasonable on this Occasion, to extend the Grace of the House to him: And the said Impeachment was dismiss'd accordingly.

A. D. 1701.

That the Supply had been all this while in a sort of Suspence, or at least, that the Commons, during this obstinate Contest, had not thought fit, or could not find Time, to give the last Hand to the Money-Bills, may be collected from the Reference to that Matter in the Votes of both Houses: And the Truth is, That the Bill for granting an Aid to his Majesty, (by a Tax of 3*s.* in the Pound on Land) for defraying the Expence of his Majesty's Guards and Garisons for one Year, and other necessary Occasions, was not sent up to the Lords till the 9th of June: That the Bill for granting to his Majesty several Duties upon Low Wines and Spirits of the first Extraction: Also several additional Duties upon Coffee, Tea, Chocolate, Spices, and Pictures: Also certain Impositions on Hawkers and Pedlars, and 15 per Cent. upon Muslins: Also for improving the Duties upon japann'd and lacquer'd Goods, and for continuing the Coinage Duty, was not sent up to the Lords till the 16th of June: Nor the Bill for appropriating 3,700*l.* a Week out of certain Branches of Excise for public Uses, till the next Day.

A. D. 1701.

And that Posterity may have the Advantage of having the Grants, Appropriations, and State of the actual Charge of the Year, before them at one View, the following authentic Paper is added.

State of the Grants, Appropriations, &c.

GRANTS.

	l.	s.	d.
Land Tax, 3*s.*	1,400,000	00	0
Grants by a Credit on several small Articles from different Dates in 1700 and 1701, to different Dates in 1706, at 6 per Cent. Interest for one Half, and 7 for the other.	300,000	00	0
Loan of 820,000*l.* on 3,700*l.* a Week out of the Hered. and Temp. Excise for five Years, at 6 per Cent. for 400,000*l.* and 7 per Cent. for the remaining 420,000*l.*	820,000	00	0
The Hered. Excise charg'd by this Act from December 26, 1705, to pay 3 per Cent. for ever on the Bankers Debt, redeemable on paying a Moiety of the Principal.
Surplusses of several former Grants	135,342	16	4
	£ 2,655,342	16	4

Note, The Treasury had Power to charge any of the foregoing Revenues, with the Tallies at 6 per Cent. Interest.

APPROPRIATIONS.

	l.	s.	d.	l.	s.	d.
Arrears of Pay and Recalls	200,000	00	0
Bounty Money and the Ordinary	190,000	00	0	1,380,000	00	0
Extra Repairs	90,000	00	0
30,000 Men	900,000	00	0
20,000 allow'd out of this Sum for sick and wounded.
Ordnance Land-Service	25,000	00	0
Guards and Garisons	300,000	00	0
Debts to Clothiers, &c. on Account of the Army	40,000	00	0
For 12 Dutch Battalions for the States, a Year's Pay and Contingencies (6000*l.*) and Levy-money, at 20*s.* a Man, for 5000 Recruits	181,033	02	6	587,033	02	6
Half-Pay	41,000	00	0
Interest of Deficiencies				154,085	04	7½
Premiums, and other Charges of circulating Exchequer-Bills	19,000	00	0	466,666	13	4
Cancelling ditto	447,666	13	4
				2,587,785	00	5½
Out of the Coinage Duties				66,500	00	0
Sundry small Articles out of former Grants				55,228	01	3½
				2,709,513	1	9
Besides which, wanting to complete the Credit on the Land-Tax				12,329	14	7
				(r) £ 2,721,842	16	4

A Reduction of Seamen in the Midst of the Session, occasions an Increase of the Supply.

The Reader will observe, That by the first Appropriation, 1,380,000*l.* was allotted, and actually paid for the Service of the Navy: But a remarkable Incident, notwithstanding, makes it necessary to add, That tho' 30,000 Men were voted for the Sea-Service, the Provision in Prospect for them, for some Weeks, did not exceed 780,000*l.* which it was computed would not be sufficient for above half that Number thro' the Year: This, by a Memorial dated April 26, the Lords of the Admiralty remonstrated to the King; and Orders were, thereupon, issued to reduce all the Ships Companies at once to their lowest Compliment: As this occasion'd Clamours without Doors, (for as Those dismiss'd at the several Ports, were dismiss'd without Pay, because the Treasurer of the Navy had nothing but Exchequer-Bills to issue, which could not be divided into such small Sums as were requisite for that Purpose) these Complaints occasion'd an Enquiry within, which produc'd such Informations concerning the Expediency of the Measure, as induc'd the House to enlarge the Grants as above.

King James's Grants call'd for, and a Bill order'd for the Resumption of the same.

Nor ought it to be forgot, That the Whigs this Session made a new Effort to resume the Grants of King James, by way of Reprisal on the Tories: They call'd for an Account of those Grants, which could not be refus'd; and by which it appear'd, That the Lordship and Manor of Chessington, in the County of Northumberland, and Bishopric of Durham, late the Possession of Ford Lord Grey, had been given by that unfortunate Prince to the Earl of Rochester, together with 4000*l. per Annum*, out of the Post-Office for Ninety-nine Years, in case the said Earl, or his Eldest Son, should so long live; as also,

(r) B. Burnet is pleas'd to reduce the Grants of this Year to a Million and a Half.

A.D. 1701. also, of the Rangerſhip of Richmond-Park for his own Life, and That of his Son: That the real and perſonal Eſtate of John Tucker, late of Taunton, forfeited for Treaſon, had been given to John Lord Churchill, at 6*s.* and 8*d. per Annum.* That a Moiety of the Manor of Moiles Court, and all other the Eſtates real and perſonal of Alice Liſle, or John Liſle her Huſband, both attainted of High Treaſon, had been given to Lewis Earl of Feverſham: That the real and perſonal Eſtate of Reginald Tucker, forfeited for Treaſon, had been given in fee to Sir Theophilus Oglethorpe: As alſo the Manor of Henton Magna, with its Appurtenances, another Forfeiture, for Twenty-one Years at 200*l. per Annum* Rent: And that various other Forfeitures, &c. &c. had been diſtributed among Others of the ſame Party.

A Bill was alſo brought in and receiv'd, for reſuming the ſaid Grants; but apparently, without any Purpoſe of ſuffering it to paſs thro' the Forms of the Houſe: For after it had been read once or twice, we hear no more of it.

Controverſy between the two Houſes in relation to the Bill of Accounts.

It remaines yet farther to be ſpecify'd, That on the 25th of March, the Commons order'd a Bill, to take and ſtate the public Accounts, to be brought in: That on the 17th of April, the ſaid Bill was brought in accordingly; and that in the Courſe of the Seſſion it was gradually completed: But in ſuch a Form, with ſuch Circumſtances, and lodging the Powers of it in ſuch Hands, as render'd it wholly unpalatable to the Houſe of Lords.

For, in the firſt Place, it not only continued the Former Commiſſion to ſtate the Army, Ordnance, Tranſport and Prize-Accounts, but alſo ſuperinduc'd another general Commiſſion for taking, ſtating, and examining the Accounts of all Money of the public Revenue of the Crown, and all other Accounts which were by all the Former Acts of the Reign, or any of them, to be ſo taken, ſtated and examind: The Perſons ſo to be employ'd by this Bill, were Sir Godfrey Copley, John How, Eſq; William Bromley, Eſq; Sir Humphry Mackworth, Sir Bartholomew Shower, Anthony Hammond, Eſq; and Dr. Davenant: All of them inexpreſſibly obnoxious to the whole Whig Party; and, conſequently, ſuch as could not expect the leaſt Favour, at ſuch a Time, from the Houſe of Lords.

Heavy Clauſe therein againſt the Commiſſioners of Prizes.

Into this Bill a heavy Clauſe was introduc'd againſt Parkhurſt and Peſchal, Commiſſioners of Prizes, before-mention'd, who were ſtill Priſoners in the Tower: They had enclos'd in a Letter to the Speaker, what They call'd a true Account of the whole Receipts and Diſburſements of the Prize-Office, from the Time of the firſt Inſtitution thereof: Together with a Liſt of all the Prizes taken in the Mediterranean, and by the Packet-Boats, as alſo with the Warrants and Grants thereupon, and by whom counterſign'd; and deſiring the Houſe might be inform'd, That their utmoſt Endeavours having been us'd to comply with their Orders, it had, for ſome Time, interrupted their Compliance with the Scheme of Accounting, preſcrib'd to them by the Commiſſioners. This was accordingly ſignify'd to the Houſe by the Speaker on the 21ſt of March: And on the 11th of April following, They ſet forth in a Petition to the Houſe, That, having deliver'd their general Account to the ſaid Commiſſioners, according to the Precept and Scheme preſcrib'd, and being full of Sorrow for their great Misfortune, in being under the Diſpleaſure of the Houſe, They humbly begg'd Pardon for any Offence they had committed, and pray'd to be enlarg'd: But the ſaid Commiſſioners attending the Houſe, on the Morrow, according to Order, produc'd the ſaid general Account, and gave ſuch a Recital of what had paſs'd, as ſatisfy'd the Houſe, That the ſaid Commiſſioners of Prizes had not ſufficiently conform'd to the ſaid Precepts: For together with ſeveral Letters on both Sides, they preſented to the Houſe a Copy of the Minutes taken from their own Books of April 8, which ſerving to give a general Idea of the Caſe, and not being as yet in print, deſerves to be here inſerted: As follows.

Caſe of the ſaid Commiſſioners as ſtated by the Commiſſioners of Accounts.

" Mr. Proudfoot and Mr. Portman from the Commiſſioners of Prizes, came to the Board, and were acquainted, That tho' the Commiſſioners had had but very few Hours to look into the Books brought on Saturday, yet they had made ſome Obſervations, which led them to aſk ſeveral Queſtions, and deſire to receive Information therein from them. Firſt, they obſerv'd, That in the Letter from the Commiſſioners for Prizes of Yeſterday, they were pleas'd to ſay, That the Books they had ſent, contain'd all that the Precepts requir'd; Whereas, it did appear by the Returns from the High Court of Admiralty, That there had been condemn'd there, about 1295 Ships; whereas in theſe Books, there is an Account of no more than 483 Ships; and the Ladings of 200 and odd more, which is not much more than half. To which they anſwer'd, That ſeveral foreign Ships condemn'd in the Court, were afterwards diſcharg'd; and, therefore, no Notice was taken of them in theſe Grants. They were told, That This did not appear in the Books: And tho' it were ſo, the Names of the ſaid Ships ſhould have been inſerted, and an Account given of them accordingly. They were farther acquainted, That, in one of their Books, they acknowledg'd to have receiv'd 297,686*l.* 14*s.* 0*d.* for the Ladings; and 124,181*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* for the Hulls, Furniture, &c. of the Ships condemn'd as Prizes, making in all 421,867*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.* Whereas it does not appear from theſe Books, that they have paid more than 323,591*l.* 18*s.* 8*d.* So that there ſhould remain in the Commiſſioners Hands, the Sum of 98,275*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.* To which they anſwer'd, That the Payments of their Agents in the Out-ports, would ſupply That, which they did not apprehend was requir'd by the Precept: And that no Balance was remaning in their Hands. They were told, That what they ſaid, did not appear from theſe Books; and the Board conceiv'd, the Commiſſioners were anſwera-

A.D. 1701. ble for their Agents: And that the Payments made by them, ſhould have been brought into this Account, as well as any other. And here it was obſerv'd to them, That had the Inſtructions, which appear in one of their Books to be given by the Principal Commiſſioners to the Sub-Commiſſioners, and other Officers in the Out-ports, been comply'd with, and a proper Regiſter of them made in their Offices, they would have been able, with much leſs Difficulty, than it now appears they have, to have anſwer'd the Schemes in the Precept. They ſaid, in Anſwer, That the ſaid Officers had been often preſs'd to do it; but could never be brought to comply. Then they were acquainted, That Copies were wanting of the Warrants and Orders from the King's Treaſury, &c. for the diſpoſing of any Ships or Goods which were requir'd in the Body of the Precept: And they anſwer'd, That the Originals were with Mr. Jodrell, from whom they would get Copies. Then the ſaid Commiſſioners for Prizes deſir'd the Board would acquaint the honourable Houſe of Commons, That the Books brought in, were perſuant to the Precept and Schemes; and were told, That it was true, the Books did appear to be drawn in that Form: But that, beſides what is before-mention'd, and what might farther appear upon better Examination than it was poſſible for the Board to make in ſo ſhort a Time, and when ſo many other Matters were depending, ſome of the Columns were left wholly blank, and reference made for the filling them to the Accounts of the Receiver-General, who being always under their Direction, and order'd by a Vote of the Houſe to aſſiſt them, they ought to have oblig'd him to do it: And in other Places Blanks were left, the filling up of which was of Conſequence: Particularly, it is not mention'd when, or to whom, ſeveral Ships and Ladings were diſpos'd: And, upon the Whole, they were acquainted, That the Houſe of Commons not having requir'd the Commiſſioners to ſend them any Account of what Return had been made to the Precept, and theſe Defects appearing, they conceiv'd, That what they had, hitherto, enabled them to ſay, could not be of much Service: And, therefore, deſir'd, They would make their Application as they ſaw fit."

With ſo ſtrong a Charge, therefore, of Neglect and Omiſſion at leaſt againſt the ſaid Commiſſioners of Prizes, which reman'd unanſwer'd, the Houſe of Commons thought themſelves authoris'd to introduce the Clauſe above glanc'd at in the Bill of Accounts, by which they were enjoin'd to make up their Accounts in the Manner preſcrib'd: And in caſe of Non-compliance, the Chief-Juſtice of the King's-Bench, on receiving a proper Certificate thereof, ſign'd by any Three of the Commiſſioners of Accounts, was authoris'd and requir'd, to cauſe the ſaid Parkhurſt and Paſchal to be apprehended and committed to the Tower.

And, laſtly, by another Clauſe in the ſaid Bill, the ſaid Commiſſioners of Accounts were authoris'd and requir'd particularly to A.D. 1701. examine the Accounts of Edward Whitacre, Solicitor for the Affairs of the Admiralty, during his being in the ſaid Employment; great Sums of Money having been paid to him, whereby, as it was alledg'd in the Bill, his Majeſty had ſuffer'd great Abuſes and Deceits in the exorbitant Expence of his Majeſty's Treaſure.

This Mr. Whitacre had fallen under the Diſpleaſure of the Houſe, and was order'd into the Cuſtody of the Serjeant, for taking inſufficient Bail for one Bolton, committed for Confederacy with Kidd; it appearing when the Houſe ſent for the ſaid Bolton to confront Kidd, that he had made his Eſcape: And, not content with ſetting this Mark upon him, they order'd a Committee to inſpect the Behaviour of the ſaid Whitacre, and report the ſame to the Houſe.

This was done the 28th of March: And on the 11th of June following, the ſaid Committee made their Report, in which was contain'd the following Preſentment of the Grand Jury, High Sheriff, and Juſtices of the Peace for the County of Southampton, againſt the ſaid Whitacre, dated July 26, 1700, viz.

"At the preſent and late Aſſizes held here for the ſaid County, there have been ſeveral Proſecutions againſt Offenders for notorious Theſts and Embezzlement of his Majeſty's naval Stores; and finding the Proſecutions generally laid, have prov'd very irregular, to his Majeſty's great Diſſervice, and to the Diſſatisfaction of the whole County, We, the under-written attending the ſaid Aſſize, (to diſcharge our Duty) are of Opinion, That the Proſecution and Management of the Trials upon the barbarous Murder of one Harris, and the Theſts that attended that Matter, the laſt Aſſizes, and the Indictments now brought before us for ſeveral Abuſes farther diſcover'd, relating to the notorious Practices of purloining and robbing of his Majeſty's Stores at Portſmouth, and Timber in the New Foreſt, in a Succeſſion of Years laſt paſs'd, are, by the Solicitor, Mr. Whitacre, either manag'd corruptly or ignorantly; whereby Opportunity hath been given for the Guilty to evade Juſtice, and bar the farther Diſcovery of thoſe pernicious Practices, the Conſequences of which, we humbly deſire may be conſider'd; and that the Reflections laid on our County, of want of Vigilance to detect ſuch Crimes, may be remov'd and fix'd in the right Place.

Sign'd by the Grand Jury, High Sheriff, and Seven Juſtices of Peace."

This Preſentment was alſo accompany'd with the Reaſons on which it was founded: After which follow'd the Examination of the ſaid Whitacre, to all the ſeveral Points alledg'd by the ſaid Grand Jury againſt him: And the Report was clos'd with an Abſtract of his Diſburſements for Law-Charges, amounting to upwards of 2,000*l.*

Upon all which, it was reſolv'd by the Houſe, That the ſaid Whitacre had been guilty of diverſ ill Practices, Corruptions, and Breaches of Truſt; and order'd, That Mr. Attorney-

A. D. 1701. Attorney-General do profecute him for the ſaid Offence; taking Care, That he gave ſufficient Security to anſwer the ſaid Proſecution: And that the Office of Solicitor, was a new and unneceſſary Office, which ought to be ſuppreſs'd.

On the 18th of June, the ſaid Bill of Accounts was ſent up to the Lords; and on the 24th following, their Lordſhips ſent it back, with a Meſſage importing, They had given their Conſent to it with ſome Amendments.

Lords Amendments. But theſe Amendments conſiſting, in the total Omiſſion of all that Part of the Bill, which re-eſtabliſh'd a general Commiſſion, to take, ſtate, and examine all the Accounts of all Money of the public Revenue of the Crown; as alſo the two Clauſes in relation to Parkhurſt and Paſchal, and Whitacre, and of an Addition in favour of a Clame made by Colonel Baldwin Leighton, the Commons refuſ'd to agree to them; and aſſign'd the following Reaſons for ſo doing.

Reaſons of the Commons for rejecting them. "Becauſe it is notorious, that many Millions of Money have been given to his Majeſty by the Commons for the Service of the Public, which remane yet unaccounted for, to the great Diſſatisfaction of the good People of England, who cheerfully contributed to thoſe Supplies; and their Lordſhips firſt Amendment, prevents any Account being taken of thoſe Monies by the Commiſſioners appointed by the Commons for that Purpoſe.

Becauſe John Parkhurſt and John Paſchal, Eſquires, have for ſeveral Years been Commiſſioners of the Prizes taken during the late War, and are accountable for great Sums of Money ariſing thereby, which ought to be apply'd to the public Uſe: That the ſaid John Parkhurſt and John Paſchal were frequently preſſed to account for the ſame, by the late Commiſſioners appointed by Act of Parliament, but by many Artifices and Evaſions delay'd and avoided giving any ſuch Account as was requir'd by the ſaid Commiſſioners: That the Clauſe to which their Lordſhips have diſagreed by their ſecond Amendment, requires them to account before the firſt of September next, but by their Lordſhips Amendment, the ſaid John Parkhurſt and John Paſchal are exempted from giving any ſuch Account, which is highly unreaſonable.

Becauſe their Lordſhips have therein directed the Commiſſioners to allow and certify a pretended Debt to Colonel Baldwin Leighton, whereas the Diſpoſition as well as granting of Money by Act of Parliament, hath ever been in the Houſe of Commons, and this Amendment relating to the Diſpoſal of Money, doth intrench upon that Right.

A. D. 1701. Becauſe 'tis notorious that Edward Whitacre mention'd in the Rider, left out by their Lordſhips, hath by Colour of his Employment (as Solicitor to the Admiralty) receiv'd the Sum of five and twenty thouſand Pounds and upwards, of public Money, without producing any juſt or reaſonable Vouchers for the Expence thereof, and therefore ought to be accountable for the ſame.

And that by Reaſon of their Lordſhips diſagreeing to the ſeveral Parts of this Bill, the Supplies provided by the Commons for paying the Arrears due to the Army, muſt of Neceſſity be ineffectual till another Seſſion of Parliament."

To theſe Reaſons a plauſible Reply was ſoon after ſet forth in a Pamphlet call'd Some Remarks on the Bill for taking the public Accounts, the great Drift of which, by the Way, was to draw all ſuch Bills into (r) Diſeſteem and Diſuſe) But then this Reply is to the full as diſingenuous, as it is plauſible: For the Author of it charges the Commons with affirming, That, by the Lords diſagreeing to the Clauſe of Parkhurſt and Paſchal, thoſe Perſons were exempted from accounting; whereas the Commons only affirm, thoſe Perſons were exempted from giving in ſuch Accounts by the 1ſt of September as was requir'd by the Bill; and the Truth of the Matter is, That the ſaid Parkhurſt and Paſchal never did account to the Public, even in the ordinary Way of accounting from that Hour to This; as is manifeſt by the Certificates annually return'd to the King's Remembrancer: And which is more, the ſaid Parkhurſt was notwithſtanding This, appointed afterwards to receive the Arrears of Prizes; and of thoſe Receipts he deliver'd in an Account of no more than 618 l. 18 s. 8 d. ½, accompany'd with ſuch imperfect Vouchers that the ſaid Account could never be proſecuted.

[State Tracts, Temp. Guil. III. Vol. III. p. 308. A printed Argument thereto.]

The Author of the ſaid Pamphlet alſo, in Anſwer to the very laſt Period of the Reaſons aſſign'd by the Commons for diſagreeing with the Commons, ſays, It could not poſſibly be for that Reaſon; firſt, becauſe the Lords agreed to every Word in the Bill, relating to the taking the Accounts of the Army: And ſecondly, becauſe the Commons in Favour, or perhaps in Compaſſion to the forfeiting Perſons, had thought fit to inſert a Clauſe in the Land-Tax-Bill: That none of the forfeited Lands in Ireland (out of the Product of which, theſe Arrears were to be paid) ſhould be expos'd to Sale till after the 28th of December 1701: And a ſecond in the Bill of low Wine, "That none of the Lands of thoſe that had petition'd the Houſe of Commons ſhould be ſold till after the next Seſſion of Parliament."

But

(r) It is, nevertheleſs, admitted by the Author of this Treatiſe, That the five laſt Commiſſioners had made a good Progreſs in ſtating the Debt of the Army; and that they had alſo perform'd one Thing which has not been done before; namely, the making a State of the whole Expence of the War, which amounted to forty one Millions: But then the latter Part of this Acknowledgment is made purpoſely to expoſe Dr. Davenant, who had ſomewhere pretended, that, upon a nice Calculation, the Expence amounted to upwards of fifty Millions: And the Words of the Report are, near forty-two Millions.

A. D. 1701. Remarks thereon.

But the Inſertion of the Clauſe added by the Lords in favour of Colonel Leighton, render'd it impoſſible for the Commons to paſs the Bill, as it was return'd to them by their Lordſhips, for the Reaſon above aſſign'd, and becauſe it was not return'd 'till the laſt Hour of the Seſſion: So that the Commons had no other Choice, than either to acquieſce in the groſs, or to loſe their Bill: And it follow'd from thence, That if the Army Debt was not ſtated, the Arrears could not be paid, whether the forfeited Lands were ſold or not.

Something, however, ought alſo to be ſaid of the Proceedings in Parliament concerning theſe Forfeitures: For the Houſe, finding themſelves peſter'd from Day to Day with Petitions in relation thereto, call'd on the Truſtees for ſuch Informations, as might enable them to form ſome reaſonable and equitable Deciſion concerning them: To which Call the ſaid Truſtees preſented the following Anſwer, May 31.

Anſwer of the Iriſh Truſtees upon Order of the Commons in relation to the Petition before them concerning the Iriſh Forfeitures.

"May it pleaſe your Honours,

In Obedience to your Orders of the 19th of this Inſtant May, requiring us to ſtate Matters of Fact only on the ſeveral Petitioners relating to the Iriſh Forfeitures, And to report the ſame to your Honours; and that we ſhould, with all Expedition from Time to Time, tranſmit our Reports on the ſaid Petitions reſpectively to the Clerk of this honourable Houſe, we have with the utmoſt Diligence and Duty, perſuant to the ſaid Order, examin'd the ſeveral Facts in ſuch of the ſaid Petitions as were deliver'd us, in ſuch Manner as we were capable of examining the ſame, and where the Facts were within our own Knowledge, and whereof we had certain Proof, we have reported the ſame accordingly. As to other Matters whereof the Proof lies in Ireland, and we could only hear ex parte, without adminiſtering the Oath, we have laid before your Honours ſuch Proofs thereof, as have been offer'd us, and have annex'd thereto ſuch Affidavits, and other Papers, as the Petitioners produc'd before us, and affirm'd to be true, which we have made Part of the Report, to the End your Honours may be duly appriz'd of the Evidence, whereon we have grounded our reſpective Reports. We farther crave Leave to acquaint your Honours, that we have given Copies of our Reports to ſuch of the Petitioners as demanded them, that they might have an Opportunity of making farther Proof of the Allegations of their Petitions, and to prevent your Honours receiving any Complaints, That we kept them in Ignorance of the Contents thereof."

This Paper was ſign'd by Anneſley, Trencher and Sheers: And the Report which accompany'd it having been examin'd and diſcuſs'd by the Houſe, the ſame Day, it was upon the Iſſue reſolv'd, That all the Petitions preſented to this Houſe relating to the Iriſh Forfeitures (except ſuch Caſes as are certify'd under the Hands of all the Truſtees and (s) except ſuch of the ſaid Petitions, as the Iriſh Truſtees in England have certify'd the Matter of Fact to be true) be referr'd to the Truſtees in Ireland to examine upon Oath, the Matter of Fact, and repreſent the ſame to the Houſe, at the Beginning of the next Seſſions of Parliament." And it was order'd, That all the ſaid Petitions and Reports ſhould be referr'd to a Committee to ſeparate the ſame according to the ſaid Reſolution. A. D. 1701.

On the 13th of June the ſaid Committee made their Report, but no Reſolution was taken upon it. And the next Day when the Clauſe inſerted in the Bill of low Wines, &c. For reſpiting the Sales of the ſaid Forfeitures was offer'd, it appears by Circumſtance, That it was carry'd by the Court againſt the declar'd Senſe of the Tory-Managers; for the Tellers for the Yeas were Mr. Bridges, and Mr. Waleh, and the Tellers for the Noes, Mr. St. John and Mr. Harcourt: The Numbers being 145 againſt 65.

It is certain, That from the Time of the Kentiſh Petition and the Legion Letter, the Party were at leaſt more cautious in their Proceedings, if they were not leſs powerful: And of This we have a new Proof in the Affair of the old Eaſt-India Company: Which, as we have ſeen, ow'd its Exiſtence by Authority of Parliament, to their Efforts in its Favor: What this Affair was will be explan'd immediately: But firſt we are to recollect, That, according to Mr. Prior's Letter to Lord Manchester, on the Change of the Miniſtry, Endeavours were to be us'd, to unite the two Companies: But if ſuch Endeavours were actually us'd, they were us'd in vain: And inſtead of making reciprocal Advances towards a Compromiſe, they ſeem'd as yet only ſolicitous to procure each others Deſtruction.

The Commons had appointed a Committee to receive Propoſals for paying off the public Debts and advancing the Credit of the Nation: And to this Committee did the ſaid Company on the 28th of April propoſe, by the Interpoſition of their old Factor Sir Thomas Cooke, to pay off the Principal and Intereſt of ſo much of the two Millions as had been advanc'd by the new Company and ſeparate Traders, at an Intereſt of 8 per Cent. Being the Conſideration of their Eſtabliſhment, and amounting in the whole to 1,688,000*l.* for the remaning 315,000*l.* had been advanc'd by the old Company, with what Views, and for what Ends at this Diſtance of Time, can ſcarce be diſcover'd at an Intereſt of 5 per Cent. payable out of the Fund already ſettled by Act of Parliament: The principal Money ſo paid (which was to be at ten Payments, in twenty Months) to be redeemable in a certain Propoſals of the old Eaſt India Company to pay off their Debts.

(s) The Houſe divided on this ſecond Exception, and it was carry'd in the Affirmative by 128 againſt 65.

A.D. 1701. certain Number of Years to be fix'd by the Houſe, and ſubject to ſuch Regulations and Reſtrictions as might be neceſſary for the Good of the Public, and the Preſervation of the Trade: And with an Opening for any Perſons whatſoever to ſubſcribe a certain Sum to be fix'd by the Houſe, and thereby to become Proprietors.

This, if accepted, was laying the Ax to the Root of the new Company, who were ſufficiently aware of their Danger, and anxious to prevent the Conſequence. While, therefore, their Rivals were drawing up their Propoſal in Form, as they were requir'd by the Committee to do, and the Committee deliberated on the Report they were to make to the Houſe, They talk'd and writ in the ſame Strain, as the old Company had formerly done; of the Importance of preſerving the public Faith, and the Impolicy of ſaving 60,000*l.* a Year, by a Meaſure which would diſoblige a thouſand Families, which were concern'd in the new Company, &c. and without any Reſerve expos'd the Perfidy, of reſuming, under any Pretence whatſoever, the Right (the excluſive Right, as they at firſt underſtood it to be) veſted in them till the 20th of September 1711, becauſe the Fund was not redeemable till then, merely for an Omiſſion of three Words in the Act, To Wit, AND NOT SOONER.

With ſuch Succeſs did they alſo talk, write and inſiſt on theſe and the like Arguments, That when the Committee made that Report, which was done May 17. the Houſe did not think fit to take any Reſolution upon it.

General View of the Conduct of this Houſe of Commons.

And now, that we may take our Leave properly of this memorable Seſſion, we ought, in Juſtice to the Majority of this Houſe of Commons, to acknowledge, That, notwithſtanding the Party-Biaſs which on many Occaſions gave a ſiniſter Turn to their Proceedings, they diſcharg'd their Duty to their Country on many more, in a Manner that cannot be too highly extoll'd, or too cloſely imitated: For, over and above that meritorious Reluctance, which they manifeſted to every Meaſure which had a Tendency to engage the Nation as a Principal in a new Continent War, and for which they have been ſo infamouſly abus'd, they made ſuch Enquiries into every Province of public Buſineſs, kept ſo ſtrict a Hand over every Accountant, and took ſuch Precautions in every Grant, as became the Grand Inqueſt of the Nation.

In particular, They call'd for a State of the Navy and naval Stores; for all the Orders and Directions given by the Treaſury, to the Pay-Maſter of the Forces and the Treaſurer of the Navy, as alſo a State of their ſeveral Accounts: For an Account of the Fees paid to the Auditors of the Impreſts, Auditors of the Land Revenue, &c. For an Account of the Expenditure and Debt of the Ordnance for Land and Sea-Service: For a Liſt of all his Majeſty's Embaſſadors, Envoys, and Miniſters in Foreign Courts: For an Account of the groſs and nett Receipts of the Civil-Liſt: For an Account of all the Revenues of the Duchies of Lancaſter and Cornwall, together with the Iſſues and Application thereof: For an Account of the Lands, Rents, and Eſtates belonging to the Crown undiſpos'd of, with the preſent Value of the Reverſions, and of the Improv'd Rents; in which the reſpective Surveyors were to be aſſiſted by the Auditors of England, Wales, and the ſaid two Duchies: For an Account of the Vacancies in the Army, and how they had been fill'd: For an Account of the Proceedings of the Board of Trade, and of what Complaints had been laid before them in relation to the Trade, or Courts of Juſtice in the ſeveral Colonies of America: For the Half-Pay Liſt: For an Account of the Arrears of Taxes: For an Account of the Queen Dowager's Jointure, of the additional Grants thereunto by King James II. and of the Reverſionary Grants made thereon, &c. &c. All which Calls or Orders were punctually comply'd with: And, laſtly, they made ſome Progreſs in a Bill to prevent the tranſlating of Biſhops from one See to another.....But this was ſo many Ways oppos'd, that it could not be brought to Perfection; and if it had ſucceded in one Houſe, would in all Probability have miſcarry'd in the Other.

A.D. 1701.

It has been ſaid, That the Reaſons of the Commons for diſagreeing to the Lords Amendments, were drawn up and approv'd in the laſt Hour of the Seſſion; and ſcarce had the Houſe made an Order, That they ſhould be inſerted in the Votes of the Day, before the King commanded their Attendance in the Houſe of Peers; where, on preſenting the Money-Bill, the Speaker addreſs'd himſelf to the Throne as follows.

The Speaker's Speech to the King.

"SIR,

It is with great Joy and Satisfaction that I attend your Majeſty at this Time, ſince your Commons have comply'd with all your Majeſty was pleas'd to deſire at their Meeting: They have paſs'd the Bill of Succeſſion, which hath ſettled the Crown in a Proteſtant Line, and continued the Liberty of England, which your Majeſty hath reſtor'd and preſerv'd: They have paſs'd a Bill for taking away thoſe Privileges, which might have prov'd burthenſome and oppreſſive to your Subjects: They have given your Majeſty thoſe Supplies, which are more than ever were given in a Time of Peace, to enable your Majeſty when you are abroad, to ſupport your Allies, procure either a laſting Peace, or to preſerve the Liberties of Europe by a neceſſary War."

After which, the King having given the Royal Aſſent to the ſeveral Bills preſented him, his Majeſty was pleas'd to put an End to the Seſſion with the following Speech.

King's Speech.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

The Seſſion being now come to a Concluſion, I muſt return you my hearty Thanks for the great Zeal you have expreſs'd for the public Service, and your ready Compliance with thoſe Things which I recommended to you at the opening of this Parliament: And I muſt thank you, Gentlemen

A. D. 1701. men of the House of Commons, in particular, both for your Dispatch of those necessary Supplies, which you have granted for the public Occasions, and for the Encouragements you have given me, to enter into Alliances for the Preservation of the Liberty of Europe, and the Support of the Confederacy; in which, as it shall be my Care, not to put the Nation to any unnecessary Expence, so I make no Doubt, that whatsoever shall be done during your Recess, for the Advantage of the common Cause in this Matter, will have your Approbation at our Meeting AGAIN in the Winter.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I shall conclude with recommending to you All, the Discharge of your Duties in your respective Counties; that the Peace of the Kingdom may be secur'd, by your Vigilance and Care in your several Stations."

Thus, according to the Outside of Things, we are to understand, That the King and his Parliament parted on the most cordial Terms imaginable: And that his Majesty had bound himself not only to give them another Meeting, but also to communicate to them, as in the Last, the Course of his Negotiations during the Recess.

The bare Mention, That the Convocation was suffer'd to sit as long as the Parliament sat, is all that is necessary in this Work: The Efforts of the lower House, to re-establish the Power of the Church; and the Disappointments they met with, belonging more properly to the Writer of Ecclesiastical History.

It is not to be imagin'd, That, during so obstinate a Struggle in Parliament, and such a corresponding Ferment among the People, where both Parties had their Representatives, and where the Springs were first put in Motion, that the Cabinet was wholly at Peace: B. Burnet is free enough to charge the New Ministers with pressing the King to turn out some of the Whigs that were in Employments, and particularly Lord Haversham, who was one of the Lords of the Admiralty: But then he makes no Mention of the Efforts of the Whigs to expel the Tories, and once more engross the King to themselves.

It is true, he adds, That as the King could not be prevail'd upon to gratify the Tories, so neither did he make any Advances towards the Whigs: The Reason of which is obvious: His Heart was set on his Voyage to Holland; and the Projects to be discuss'd there, engross'd the Whole of his Attention: Besides; by the Turn which Things had taken, he saw himself in such a State of Superiority to both Factions, that he could make his own Use of either: And having the whole Summer before him, he resolv'd to commit no Overt-Act of Preference, till the Necessity of his Affairs requir'd it; that the One might have no Cause to complane, nor the Other to presume.

The King tries between the two Factions. Thus when he came to appoint the Lords Justices, Three were of one Faction; to wit, The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord President and first Commissioner of the Admiralty Pembroke, and the Lord-Steward Devonshire: Three were of the other; to wit, The Lord-Keeper, the Lord-Chamberlain Jersey, and the first Commissioner of the Treasury Godolphin; and the Seventh was the Duke of Somerset, (now for the first Time call'd to the Council-Board) who could scarce be pronounc'd Whig or Tory; not having as yet been employ'd in any Business, nor having listed himself absolutely under any Standard whatsoever. A. D. 1701.

Indeed, in the Case of the Impeached Lords, he had sided occasionally with the Impeachers: But Connections with them, he had none; at least, we ought to conclude so, because in the next Change that happen'd at Court, we find him number'd among the Whigs. If, on the other Hand, his Majesty appointed the Earl of Carlisle to officiate as Earl-Marshal of England, during the Minority of the Duke of Norfolk, he had before given the Command of the Troops sent to the Assistance of the States, to the Earl of Marlborough, together with a Commission to act as Embassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to their High Mightinesses: And as to the Office of Privy-Seal, his Majesty left it to be executed by Commissioners; namely, Edward Southwell, Christopher Musgrave, and James Vernon, jun. Esqrs.

Lastly: His Majesty appointed his Attorney-General Trevor, to be Lord-Chief-Justice of the Common-Pleas; and Edward Northey, Esq; to be Attorney-General.

His Majesty goes to Holland. On the last Day of June, his Majesty left Hampton-Court, accompany'd by the Earls of Carlisle, Romney, Albemarle, M. d'Overkerque, &c. and on the 3d of July he landed in Holland: The Battalions from Ireland, arriv'd there about the same Time; as also the new Levies from England: The Scots Regiments had been there some Time: And if Lamberty is to be depended upon, his Majesty was accompany'd by two Battalions of his Guards, (instead of one) consisting of 1800 Men.

His Speech to the States-General. The next Day after his Arrival, he took his Place in the Assembly of the States-General as usual, and express'd himself on that Occasion in Terms of Zeal, Affection, Concern, and Devotion to the Weal of the State, very different from those he had been accustom'd to deliver from the Throne of England: Having, at last, express'd an Overflow of Joy, in finding them still in a State of Tranquility, and ascrib'd it to their early Care to put themselves in a Posture of Defence, he proceeded to assure them, not only of his own Affection, but of That of the whole English Nation, which, they might depend upon it, was ready to contribute strongly to their Defence, and to whatever else might tend to the common Safety, &c."

Their Answer. The Reply of their High and Mighty Lordships was full of Respect, Acknowledgment, and Gratitude, intermix'd with very strong Declarations, That they would leave nothing undone, for the Preservation of their Country: As also, that they had a proper Sense

of

A. D. 1701. of the Aſſurances his Majeſty had given them, in his own Name, and that of his People: Adding, "That laudable Diſpoſition of the Engliſh Nation in our Favour, and in Favour of the common Cauſe, deſerves the moſt ſincere Acknowledgments: Convinc'd as we are, how much we may rely on their Courage and Valour, which have attain'd ſo high a Character in the World: And we are in debt to your Majeſty for a new Obligation, in exciting this favorable Diſpoſition in your Subjects, more eſpecially as it is accompany'd with ſuch Proofs, as the promis'd Succours, &c."

Iſſue of the Conferences at the Hague.

Before this Time, it muſt be obſerv'd, Mr. Stanhope had prepar'd the Way for the Declaration to M. d'Avaux, before ſpecify'd in one of Mr. Vernon's Letters to Lord Manchester, in the following artificial Manner; to wit: "That a Proviſion having been made in the Partition-Treaty for the Satisfaction of the Emperor, it was reaſonable, tho' the ſaid Treaty was no longer in force, to procede on the ſame Footing: And that as nobody was ſo well inform'd of his Imperial Majeſty's Pretenſions as the Count de Goes, his Miniſter at the Hague, nothing was more reaſonable or more neceſſary than to admit him to the Conferences." And had, afterwards, taken his Opportunity, when M. d'Avaux was making a Viſit to Don B. de Quiros, the Spaniſh Miniſter, to follow him thither; and in the Preſence of both Miniſters, to communicate the Orders he had receiv'd from his Maſter, Not to procede in the Conferences, unleſs Satisfaction was given to the Emperor: M. d'Avaux, ſurpriz'd and a little diſconcerted, ſaid, That was not the Place for ſuch a Declaration: And Mr. Stanhope briſkly reply'd, That his Orders were, To make it, wherever he ſhould find him; and having found him there, he had made uſe of the Opportunity. All This M. d'Avaux reported to his Court, "which appears to be extremely incens'd, (ſays the ſame Lord (Manchester) in a Letter to Mr. Blathwayte, who attended the King as uſual to Holland) both at the Matter and Manner:" And in another Letter to Mr. Vernon, his Lordſhip enlarges on the ſame Subject, as follows.

"I had Yeſterday, (July 28, N. S.) a Conference with M. de Torcy, and I found him not ſatisfy'd with the Procedings at the Hague: And upon my taking Notice, That M. d'Avaux had Orders to return, he did in a Manner own it, and ſaid, That he was ſent only to treat with England and Holland, in relation to their Securities; and that he had nothing to do with the Pretenſions of the Emperor. I enlarg'd on that Subject, as I have often done, ſhewing him the Neceſſity there was of putting an End to the War in Italy, and that I could not ſee elſe how the Peace of Europe could be preſerv'd. His Anſwer was, That he did not doubt but they were able to maintain the Rights of the King of Spain: That as M. d'Avaux had been there near ſix Months, and ſince there was no Appearance that the Conferences could be continu'd, he had nothing to do but to come away. I then took Notice to him, That then there would be no Miniſter of theirs either in England or Holland. He ſaid, They ſhould leave a Secretary; and if we were diſpos'd afterwards to renew a Treaty, Means might eaſily be found out to treat: It is certain, that this Court will not conſent to any Thing concerning the Emperor, ſince that muſt tend to the diſmembring the Spaniſh Monarchy: And I am fully ſatisfy'd, that whatever the Emperor is to have, he muſt gain it by main Force, which they take here to be more honourable for them than the yielding any Thing by Treaty: Beſides, they judge that it is always in their Power, after the worſt that can happen, to have a Peace on ſuch Terms."

A. D. 1701.

And the Event was anſwerable: For ten Days before this Conference, the Moſt Chriſtian King had ſign'd the Letter of Revocation, which M. d'Avaux was to deliver to the States: In which his Majeſty aſſigns the hopeleſs State of the Conferences which their Lordſhips had deſir'd, and yet had ſo frequently interrupted, as the Reaſon of that Revocation: And, nevertheleſs, aſſures them, it is ſtill in their own Power to eſtabliſh the Peace if they pleaſe; his Intentions and Inclinations on that Head, being the ſame as ever.

M. d'Avaux's parting Memorial.

When M. d'Avaux preſented this Letter to the States, he alſo accompany'd it with a long Memorial, importing in Subſtance, "That he was at firſt in hopes, That their Lordſhips Confidence in his Maſter's Affection, and their Conviction of his Sincerity, would have diſſipated the vain Terrors which the Advancement of his Grandſon to the Throne of Spain had inſpir'd them with; and induc'd them to improve the Conferences they had importun'd his Majeſty to admit, for their own Security, and for the Prevention of a new War: That he was confirm'd in theſe Hopes, when their Lordſhips, acknowledging the lawful Rights of the King of Spain, congratulated him on his Acceſſion to the Throne; and by a Meaſure ſo worthy of their Prudence ſeem'd to indicate, That they would for ever avoid the dangerous Embaraſſments they expos'd themſelves to, in intermixing foreign Intereſts with their own: That the Moſt Chriſtian King, upon this, forgetting the long Silence they had kept in relation to his Grandſon's Elevation, all Things appear'd to have a Tendency to Peace, when the Propoſitions made by their Lordſhips, and the Envoy of the King of England, gave Occaſion to conclude, That War, rather than Peace, would be the Fruit of that ſtrict Union, which the Conformity of thoſe Propoſitions manifeſted between that Prince and their Lordſhips: That, if the ſubſequent Proteſtations they made, That their exceſſive Demands aroſe from their juſt Fears of the Power of the King, and not from the Confidence they plac'd in their own Strength, were ſincere; if the Fear, which they ſo ſtrongly expreſs'd in their Letter to the King of England, during the Sitting of Parliament, was real, and if

A.D. 1701. if they had nothing in View but to prevent the Dangers they would have it underſtood they were ſurrounded with, the Means of doing it were in their own Hands: And they were under no Neceſſity to raiſe ſuch a Number of Troops, to purchaſe foreign Alliances at ſo high a Price, to lay their Country under Water, and to make all the Preparations uſual in the greateſt Wars. That as their Lordſhips had demanded the Conferences themſelves, ſo it depended on themſelves to render them effectual: That his Majeſty had no Thought of prolonging the Conferences by ſtarting vain Difficulties, nor of improving thoſe Delays, by preparing for a War under the Maſk of Peace: That his Majeſty, united as he was with the King his Grandſon, had, nevertheleſs, found no Pretext to procure the Admiſſion of the Embaſſador of Spain to the Conferences, nor to retard the Iſſue: That they had been open'd to treat of their Lordſhips Intereſts ſolely; and if They had ſo pleas'd, had been ſoon terminated, to the Security of the Provinces, the Advantage of their Commerce, and with an Aſſurance of eternal Amity from the Moſt Chriſtian King: That, on the contrary, inſtead of making this Uſe of them, they had interrupted the Progreſs of them, by demanding the Admiſſion of the King of England's Envoy: That it was not to be ſuppos'd, the Motive of that Demand had eſcap'd the Penetration of his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty; it being obvious, that the Intervention of a Power who had no Pretext of demanding Security for himſelf, had not been inſiſted on for the Sake of bringing the Conferences to a happy Iſſue: That if his Majeſty had given Way to that Demand at firſt, the ſame Ingenuity would have furniſh'd ſome other Incident of a more embarraſſing Kind: That, indeed, his Majeſty was not aware, that their Lordſhips could have been ſo eaſily induc'd, to inſiſt on a pretended Satisfaction to the Emperor, to undertake the ſupporting that Prince in it, to confound his Intereſts with thoſe of the Republic, and to erect themſelves into Arbiters between the Houſes of France and Auſtria, &c. That, in ſhort, it was ſcarce credible, That a Republic ſo wiſe, ſhould reſolve, in favour of the Houſe of Auſtria, and againſt France, to break thoſe Treaties, which ſhe has hitherto regarded as the Confirmation or rather the Seal of her Sovereignty: That at the Expence of her Provinces, at her Commerce, and her Riches, ſhe ſhould encumber herſelf with the Weight of a foreign Intereſt: That the under-written Embaſſador would abuſe the Confidence of the King his Maſter, if he ſhould, after this, give him any Hope of Succeſs from the Continuance of the Conferences: That his Majeſty was too clear ſighted to be ſo impos'd upon, after the Declaration the Envoy of England had made in the Name of the King his Maſter: That their Lordſhips were inform'd of the Manner in which that Declaration had been made: That the Engagements of their Lordſhips with the King of England, were too cloſe; that it was too well known they ſubmitted themſelves blindly to his Sentiments; and that they took what Meaſures were moſt agreeable to him, to leave any Doubt, That they had not already reſolv'd to make the ſame Declaration: That, indeed, they had, in effect, made it already, in declaring as they had done, Their Deputies could not continue the Conferences, without the Intervention of the Envoy of England: That he having withdrawn himſelf, they were already in fact ſuſpended: That, therefore, his (M. d'Avaux) Reſidence at the Hague was no longer of any Conſequence: That if he had not had the Satisfaction of accompliſhing the Intentions of his Majeſty, in leaving the Peace eſtabliſh'd between him and the United Provinces, he had had the Satisfaction at leaſt of having made it appear, That it was not his Majeſty's Fault if a Rupture follow'd: As, alſo, That his Majeſty was arm'd only for the Defence of the King his Grandſon: And that if it had been his Purpoſe to make Conqueſts, it had been an eaſy Taſk for him, when his Forces came firſt upon their Frontiers, and they were not in a Condition to defend themſelves: That this would excite no Apprehenſions in their Lordſhips now, becauſe it was what they had made public themſelves; and the Truth of the Fact ſo warranted by their own Teſtimony, ought to have convinc'd, That it was always in their own Power, to obtain that Security from his Majeſty, which they believ'd they had loſt when the King's Grandſon ſucceded to the Crown of Spain: That if theſe Reflections, which it was ſtill in their Power to make, could not prevent a Rupture, the Moſt Chriſtian King had reaſon to hope, that God, in recompence of his Majeſty's Solicitude to maintain the Repoſe of Chriſtendom, would continue to beſtow the ſame Bleſſings on the Juſtice of his Cauſe, which he had accumulated on him during the Courſe of his glorious Reign: That Thoſe who dar'd to attack him, might poſſibly learn from the Event, That it was neither Weakneſs nor a Diſtruſt of his Strength, which had till then reſtrain'd his Arms: That they would ſee it was in his Power to avenge the (t) Inſults offer'd to his Flag, protect his Subjects from being ſeiz'd and treated as Enemies by the Engliſh and Dutch Ships, and prevent the ſame Ships from ſounding A.D. 1701.

(t) Several Complaints of this Kind had been made on both Sides: The French had taken the St. Lo Yacht in Canaret Bay, and had thrown the Commander and Crew into Priſon: And when Lord Mancheſter, by Order, made ſuitable Remonſtrances to M. de Torcy, he urg'd, They were founding the Port: That ſeveral Ships had lately done the ſame; and withal deliver'd a Paper to his Lordſhip, containing the Grievances on their Side, which Mr. Secretary Vernon, in return, promis'd ſhould be redreſs'd, as ſoon as the Admiralty could find out by whom they were committed: Adding, That a French Officer who had attempted to take a View of the Dock-Yards at Chatham, had found much better Treatment from the Commander of the St. Leo than he had met with, who allow'd to ſatisfy his Curioſity, he had nevertheleſs been ſurniſh'd with Credit. L. P. 570.

A. D. 1701. founding his Ports and firing on his Veſſels: That, in ſhort, it was ſtill in his Power to poſſeſs himſelf of Places, that remain'd without Defence, and to obtain very conſiderable Advantages towards the Support of a War, which the Conduct of his Neighbours made him foreſee: And that if he had hitherto diſſembled theſe Inſults, neglected the Advantages which he might have deriv'd from the acknowledg'd Superiority of his Forces, he had done ſo but to remove all Poſſibility of charging him, with having departed in the ſmalleſt Article, from the exact Obſervation of the Treaties of Ryſwick."

It is to be obſerv'd, That it was on the 3d of July, Mr. Stanhope made his Declaration to the two Miniſters of the two Crowns: And that it was not till the 26th following, that M. d'Avaux (who had the Day before receiv'd two Couriers from his Court) preſented this Memorial, together with his Letter of Revocation, to the Preſident of the Week.

On the other Hand, tho' the States-General immediately took this Memorial into debate, they did not deliver the Reſolution they had taken upon it, till they had firſt communicated it to their Stadtholder, who had been for ſome Time employ'd in (u) reviewing the Troops of the State, and ſurveying their Fortifications.

The ſaid Reſolution, like all other Replies, was much longer than the Memorial: For M. d'Avaux having caus'd the ſame to be printed, their Lordſhips thought it incumbent on them to follow his Example, and, for that Reaſon, to be as full and circumſtantial as poſſible in their Endeavours to do themſelves Juſtice: In order to which they ſet forth,

Anſwer of the States. "That they were oblig'd to the Moſt Chriſtian King, for ſending thither the Count d'Avaux as his Embaſſador Extraordinary: That they wiſh'd the Conferences might have been conducted by ſuch Means as would have produc'd a general Peace, and reaſonable Security for themſelves; and that M. d'Avaux had ſtay'd till that had been done: That they were troubled he ſhould be recall'd before their Wiſhes had taken effect; and ſo much the more, that the Cauſe of it ſhould be imputed to their Conduct: That, upon his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty's ſignifying to them, That he had accepted the Will of the late King of Spain inſtead of the Treaty of Partition, they gave him their Reaſons why they could not come to a ſpeedier Reſolution in that Affair: And, that, as ſoon as their Conſtitution would allow it, they offer'd to enter into a Conference with any that his Majeſty ſhould think fit to appoint: That they appointed Deputies accordingly to treat with the Count d'Avaux; and, in Compliance with his Majeſty, own'd the new King of Spain, that they might remove all Occaſions of Delays, and give a convincing Proof of their Deſire to preſerve the general Peace: That they could not apprehend, how the Intervention of the King of Great-Britain, who was one of thoſe concern'd in the Treaty of Partition, could obſtruct the ſame; or the Intervention of any other Potentate, that had an Intereſt in preſerving the General Peace: That they had not thereby own'd the Juſtice or Injuſtice of the Pretenſions of a Third Party, nor ſeperated their Intereſts from any who are concern'd in the General Peace: That, ſince his Majeſty's Miniſters had repreſented to them, that the End of the Treaty of Partition might be as well obtain'd by the Acceptance of the Will, they deſir'd the Count d'Avaux might make Propoſals for the General Peace, and their particular Security; and he excuſing himſelf, and deſiring Propoſals from them, they had, in Concert with his Majeſty of Great-Britain, deliver'd him Propoſals: That they could not comprehend, why the Effect of that Union betwixt them and the ſaid King, ſhould be rather War than Peace; ſince his Majeſty of Great-Britain had, on all Occaſions, given ſufficient Proofs of his Inclinations to Peace: That they had been ſtrictly united with him by Alliances many Years ago, for their mutual Security: That he was one of the chiefeſt Parties in the Treaty of Partition; and that they declar'd, before their Propoſals were communicated, they thought his Conſent neceſſary, as well for theſe Reaſons, as for his private Relation to their Republic; and no Objection was then rais'd againſt it: That they were ſorry the King of France had return'd no Anſwer to their Propoſals; which, tho' they had been call'd Exceſſive, no body had undertaken to prove ſuch: That the General Peace could not be preſerv'd, without Satisfaction to the Emperor, whoſe Pretenſions were ſo far own'd by the King of France himſelf in the Treaty of Partition, that it was agreed how the ſame ſhould be ſatisfy'd: That, therefore, there was nothing in this Article of their Propoſal, that could be call'd Exceſſive; and what they had demanded for their own Security, was not equal to what they had before the Death of the late King of Spain, or to what they had acquir'd by the Treaty of Partition: That their Forces had not been rais'd on their own private Sentiments only, but on the opinion of their Allies, who had not ſcrupled to ſend them the Aſſiſtance they were oblig'd to by their Alliances: That had it been in their Power to relieve themſelves out of their Difficulties, without arming, ſeeking new Alliances, or drowning their Country, they would certainly have done it: That the Difficulties rais'd about admitting the Engliſh Envoy, were not from them, but from the Count d'Avaux; conſequently were not chargeable upon them, for the Reaſons before-mention'd: That the King of France had Reaſon to think, they would inſiſt on Satisfaction

A. D. 1701.

(u) His Majeſty having been oblig'd to diſmiſs Lord Galway from his Service in Ireland, had aſſign'd him a Penſion of 1500*l.* a Year, by way of Conſolation, during Pleaſure; and on his Arrival in Holland, gave him the Regiment of Dutch Horſe Guards, formerly commanded by the Earl of Portland.

A. D. 1701. tion to the Emperor, seeing that was the first of their Propofals, which the King of France himself then thought just and neceſſary: That they had given no Cauſe to think that they preſum'd to ſet up as Umpires betwixt France and Auſtria, or to determine which of the two laſt Kings of Spain had a Right to alter the Laws of the Succeſſion to that Crown; but deſir'd his Majeſty to remember, That he himſelf, as well as the King of Great-Britain and the States, thought a War would be unavoidable, if, upon the Death of the late King of Spain, either He or the Emperor ſhould inſiſt upon the Pretenſions of their Families to the Succeſſion; and therefore they enter'd into the Treaty of Partition: That their owning the King of Spain, could not be judg'd to be a Step contrary to this, ſince it did not hinder giving reaſonable Satisfaction to the Emperor: And that the King of France ought to be convinc'd, that they would do nothing to the Detriment of their Provinces, Commerce or Riches, but what was abſolutely neceſſary to their Preſervation: That They had done nothing that could be conſtru'd a Breach of the Treaties which confirm'd and ſeal'd their Sovereignty, and did not well apprehend the Meaning of that Aſſertion: That their Provinces were always Free and Sovereign: That their Anceſtors had ſpent their Lives and Fortunes to aſſert their Freedom, and they were reſolv'd to do the like: That they were ſorry to hear the Count d'Avaux expected no Succeſs from the Conferences, becauſe of the Engliſh Envoy's declaring, that Satisfaction muſt be given to the Emperor: That they own'd, with the King of Great-Britain, they thought it reaſonable to treat of Satisfaction to that Prince; and that the Emperor ſhould, in order thereunto, be invited into the Negotiation: That the States did not blindly follow the King of Great-Britain's Sentiments, but had a great Deference for his Advice, becauſe they were perſuaded, he was wholly inclin'd to preſerve the Peace, and convinc'd he ſought nothing but the Welfare of their Republic: That if the Conferences were ſuſpended upon that Account, they ſhould look upon it as a great Misfortune: But that if the King of France had thought fit to let them continue, and to allow Satisfaction to the Emperor, they had Hopes of a good Concluſion: That they had been oblig'd, indeed, to arm, but did not begin to do it, till they ſaw their Barrier in the Spaniſh Netherlands, which had coſt them ſo much Blood and Treaſure, poſſeſs'd by French Troops, their own Forces detain'd, and great Preparations of War made there: That their Jealouſy was beſides conſiderably increas'd by the ſtrict Union which appear'd every Day between France and Spain; tho' the Treaty of Partition was made for this, among other Reaſons, to prevent Jealouſies from the Union of too many States: That they had endeavour'd, by all poſſible Means, to preſerve his Majeſty's Friendſhip; but if they muſt, contrary to their own Inclination, enter into a War, they ſhould have no Cauſe to blame themſelves for it, and therefore hop'd that A. D. 1701. the Almighty would protect them."

This was the Effect of their Lordſhips Reſolution ſo far: And for the reſt, they proceeded to declare their Ignorance of any Inſult offer'd to the French Flag, or any Violence to the Ships or Subjects of France, either by their own Subjects, or thoſe of England; as alſo, to expreſs their Concern at being ſo accus'd: And they concluded with profeſſing, "It would be a ſingular Pleaſure to them, if the ſaid Count would poſtpone his Departure for ſome Time, in hope ſome Occaſion would offer to reſume the Conferences, and conduct them to a happy Iſſue, for the Eſtabliſhment of the general Peace, and their own particular Security: In Confirmation of which, they had caus'd this Reſolution to be deliver'd to him as an Anſwer to his Memorial, before he had his Audience of Leave, and receiv'd his recredential Letters upon it."

M. d'Avaux, on the other Hand, having firſt communicated the ſaid Reſolution to Don B. de Quires, immediately diſpatch'd it by a Courier to his Court: And the Dutch Secretary ſoon after waiting on M. de Torcy to enquire the Sentiments of his Court concerning it, the ſaid Miniſter told him, It was well underſtood: That a due Reſpect was obſerv'd in it to the King: But that for the reſt, it was conſider'd only as an Expedient to gain Time, in order to prepare for a War: That the inſiſting on Satisfaction for the Emperor, render'd it impoſſible for the King to enter into any Negotiation: And that, upon the whole, there was a Neceſſity to recal M. d'Avaux, his Majeſty's Honour having been already too far engag'd, by the long and fruitleſs Reſidence of that Miniſter in a Country, which had neglected the Offer of his Majeſty's Friendſhip. Sentiments of the French Court thereon.

And, agreeable to this Anſwer, M. d'Avaux, on the 8th of Auguſt, receiv'd his final Orders to return; which he did not, however, communicate to the States till the next Day at Noon; having ſo long kept the Secret, for the Sake of certain Merchants of Amſterdam in his Intereſt, who dealt largely in Actions or Stocks; and whom he warn'd in the Night to make their Market as ſoon as they could on the Morrow, that the Loſs to be expected on ſuch Occaſions, might fall on Others. M. d'Avaux takes his final Leave.

What follow'd, was the Ceremonial of Leave-taking on both Sides, which paſs'd in the uſual Forms, and with the uſual Civilities; and Three, together with the cuſtomary Viſits to the foreign Miniſters, being over, he departed on the 13th, leaving his Secretary behind him; and having paid no Compliment either to King William or any of his Court.

All this while the French, Milaneſe, and Savoyard Troops, under the Command of M. Catinat and the Prince Vaudemont, (for the Duke of Savoy, Generaliſſimo, did not leave Turin till the 24th of July, N. S.) having taken Poſſeſſion of the Mantuan, and poſted themſelves along the Adige to advantageouſly, according to their own Account, Travelling of Prince Eugene to Italy.

to

A.D. 1701. to cover both the Veroneſe and Ferrareſe, that they had nothing to apprehend from the Approach of the Imperialiſts: And by their Orders, they were reſtrain'd to act on the Defenſive only.

The Latter, however, commanded by Prince Eugene of Savoy, and amounting to upwards of 30,000, began to move towards the End of May; and, the French having ſeiz'd all the Boats on the Adige, made it a Pretence for Hoſtilities; which they ſoon after commenc'd with ſo much Bravery, directed by ſo much Prudence, that they gain'd the Paſſage of the Adige, under the Cover of a Feint which they made to paſs the Po: After which they forc'd the French Entrenchments at Carpi, and oblig'd the Enemy to cover themſelves behind the Mincio with conſiderable Loſs.

Nor is it unworthy Obſervation, that every Advance they made, was ſet forth as advantageouſly as poſſible in the London Gazette: And that the Action at Carpi was thought of ſuch Conſequence, as to deſerve a Gazette Extraordinary.

The Duke of Savoy joins the Confederates. And this was in general the Poſture of the two Armies, when the Duke of Savoy took upon him the Command of the Confederates, if that could be call'd a Command, which he could not exerciſe without the Concurrence of his Sub-ordinates.

But finds himſelf a Generaliſſimo without Authority. In the Councils of War that were held upon his Arrival, he gave it as his Opinion, it ſeems, That they ought to paſs the Mincio, and offer Battle to the Imperialiſts: But tho' the French had courted him ſo much, they plac'd ſo little Confidence in him, that his Opinion had not the Weight which perhaps it deſerv'd: It is true, the French preſuming on the Superiority of their Numbers, and the ſuppos'd Impoſſibility of Prince Eugene's being able to paſs their Lines, had behav'd in ſo tyrannical a Manner, that the whole Country was their Enemies: Whence it was rightly concluded, That, in caſe they loſt a Battle, their broken Troops would find it a very hard Matter to make good their Retreat: Whereas, on the other Hand, the Imperialiſts, having, in the general, obſerv'd an exact Diſcipline, having paid for the Proviſions they conſum'd, and behav'd with a due Deference to the Republic of Venice on the one Hand, and his Holineſs on the other, in marching thro' the Territories of Both, had the good Wiſhes and good Offices of every Diſtrict They paſs'd through.

Thus the Latter being Maſters of all the Poſts of Ricoli, and of the Ferrareſe, had an open Communication, by the Means of the Adige, with Tyrol, from whence, in this Interval, they receiv'd a conſiderable Reinforcement: Soon after which, to the great Aſtoniſhment of M. Catinat, who expected no ſuch Thing, they paſs'd the Mincio at St. Leone, and continued their March to Deſenzano: Upon which the Confederates held a Council of War on Horſeback, on the Expediency of advancing in order to give them Battle, which M. Catinat was now in a Diſpoſition to think advisable: But before they came to any Reſolution, they were inform'd the Imperialiſts were no longer within their Reach; having directed their Courſe towards Breſcia: And this they perform'd with ſo much Expedition, that they gain'd two Days March upon the Confederates. A.D. 1701.

And now all that Variety of Expedient which in ſo ſhort a Time Prince Eugene made uſe of, with ſuch almoſt uninterrupted Succeſs, began to excite Conſternation as well as Surprize. As it was believ'd the Milaneſe was his Object; and it began to be apprehended, that every Thing was poſſible to him, the Prince de Vaudemont and the Count de Teſſe were order'd to march with the utmoſt Precipitation into the Cremoneſe; and were follow'd by the reſt of the Army in ſo much Diſorder, that the Country-People took it for a Flight rather than a March.

The Confederates retire to the Cremoneſe.

The next Stand they made, was on the River Oglio: But, inſtead of advancing to diſpute that Paſs with them in the next Place, as they expected, Prince Eugene made an Incurſion into the Mantuan, reduc'd the Fortreſs of Caſtiglione, and laid the Country under Contribution: After which he advanc'd to Ponte d'Oglio, and having taken Poſſeſſion of Chiari, a ſmall, unfortify'd Place belonging to the Venetians, took the neceſſary Precautions to fortify his Lines, and make good the Poſt, till two Regiments of Foot, of 2500 Men each, which were upon their March to join him, came up.

But, in the mean Time, the Marſhal de Villeroy, who had been diſpatch'd with fighting Orders, and a Commiſſion ſuperior to M. Catinat's, (whoſe Credit had faded with his Fortune) being arriv'd at the Confederate-Camp, accompany'd with four Lieutenant-Generals, and four Camp-Marſhals, as alſo a large Reinforcement, conſiſting of ſeveral of their beſt Regiments, the ſaid Confederates quitted their Lines, and attack'd the Prince in his Camp, with a great deal of Bravery and ſome Succeſs: For the Imperialiſts were ſeveral Times forc'd from their Poſts, tho' they rally'd and recover'd them again, and at laſt repuls'd the Enemy with conſiderable Loſs. The Ground, which was encumber'd with Trees, and interſected with Rivulets, Hedges and Ditches, would not ſuffer the Combatants to make uſe of their Horſe on either Side: So that the Action was as far from being general as deciſive.

M. de Villeroy ſent with fighting Orders.

He attacks the Imperialiſts in their Lines.

But is repuls'd.

The reſt of the Campaign was ſpent by the two Armies in little Enterpriſes to harraſs and circumvent each other: As neither would venture to make any conſiderable Motion, ſo neither could ſnatch any conſiderable Advantage; and when Both were in a Manner worn out with Fatigues, Wants, Diſeaſes, and the Inclemencies of the Seaſon, the Confederates decamp'd firſt, in the Night, without Beat of Drum, and made the beſt of their Way to the Quarters aſſign'd them between the Oglio and the Adda; which they effected without any material Diſturbance, tho' Prince Eugene in Perſon, with a conſiderable Detachment of his beſt Troops, and

The French break up their Camp firſt.

A. D. 1701. and ten Field-Pieces, made an Attempt to fall upon their Rear.

The Emperor's Affairs greatly countenanc'd by the Stand made in Italy.

But, inefficient as, upon the whole, the Campaign really was, the Advantages obtain'd over the Confederates in the Beginning of it, and the Stand made againſt their whole Force afterwards, had a marvellous Operation to the Advantage of the Emperor's Affairs: For, over and above the Countenance it gave him in Italy, and the Diſturbances it help'd to excite in Naples and Milan, where a very extraordinary Averſion to the French occaſionally appear'd, and as violent an Inclination to prefer the German Yoke, it contributed greatly to keep the Swiſs Cantons from cloſing with the tempting Offers of the two Crowns, and alſo greatly diminiſh'd the Confidence of the German Princes in the Superiority of France, and that general Coldneſs which ſeem'd at firſt to have taken Poſſeſſion of the Empire, in relation to a Quarrel, which they affected to conſider as a Family-Point, which concern'd the two Houſes of Auſtria and Bourbon only: Thus the aſſociated Circles, which had been induc'd by the Inſtances of France to declare for a Neutrality, by Degrees recover'd Spirit enough to put their own Interpretation on their own Act: For, tho' the French Miniſter inſiſted, that in conſequence thereof, the March of any Troops to the Rhine, belonging either to the Emperor or Empire, or even to reinforce the Garriſon of Philipſburg, would be underſtood by his Maſter as a Rupture, in which Caſe his Majeſty would ſeize on the ſaid Place, as alſo on Fort de Kehl and Briſac, They conniv'd at the March of the ſaid Troops notwithſtanding; and otherwiſe diſcover'd ſuch an Alteration of Sentiment, as caus'd a Suſpicion, that the ſaid Neutrality was not much to be depended on: And perhaps, the Invitation of the Engliſh Houſe of Commons to their Sovereign, to form Alliances in concert with the States-General for the Reduction of the exorbitant Power of France was a more intereſting Conſideration to thoſe Princes than any other Tranſaction.

A. D. 1701.

A Subſidy to them, and in general to all the hungry Princes of the North, is the firſt and laſt Object of Attention: And when France and the Maritime Powers bid againſt each other, they ſeldom fail of a good one from one of the Parties; nor to exact a thouſand Douceurs under ſome Jewiſh Pretence or other, into the Bargain.

In M. d'Avaux's laſt Memorial we may remember the States were keenly reproach'd with the Alliances they had ſo dearly bought: And it is now to be explan'd, That this did not ſo much refer to the Contracts they had made with the Elector-Palatine, the Houſe of Lunenburgh, and the Landgrave of Heſſe, as to the Treaty of Subſidy the Maritime Powers conjointly had juſt made with Denmark.

Subſidiary Treaty of the maritime Powers with Denmark.

The Troops of that Country, as it was obſerv'd by one of our own Miniſters, had been upon Sale, for ſome Time, by Inch of Candle: France was one of the Bidders; and, as Lord Mancheſter aſſures Mr. Vernon, would have had them, in caſe they had bid but 150,000 Livres more: Thus by giving more for them than they were worth, they were knock'd down to England and Holland: And almoſt the ſame Thing happen'd in the former Treaty with Denmark of 1689 for 7000 Men, then negotiated by Mr. Molesworth. For in a (w) Letter to Sir William Dutton Colt, his Majeſty's Envoy to the Courts of Lunenburgh, he makes the following Acknowledgment, "'Tis true, we do give a great Sum of Money for them; and I wiſh our Maſter does not think ſo." And again, "They were juſt upon the very Point here of renewing their Alliance with France, and I was too quick for the French Ambaſſador but by two Hours."

The ſaid Treaty was ſign'd June 15 (Mr. Lamberty erroneouſly ſays January 20;) and, as it was laid before the Houſe of Commons, conſiſted of (x) ſixteen Articles, together with ten

---

(w) Preſerv'd in a large Collection of Originals, to Sir William Dutton Colt, communicated to the Author by the Favour of Francis Stratford, Eſq; of Merevale in Warwickſhire; thro' the Interpoſition of the ingenious and learned Dr. Jones.

(x) An Abſtract of both, for the Reader's better Information, is added as follows.

1. "The defenſive Alliances made between the ſaid Kings and the States General the 3d of November 1690. and the 3d of December 1696, ſhall be confirm'd.

2. The King and the States promiſe to pay the Sums ſtipulated by the Alliance in 1696, (which by the Way were grievouſly enſlam'd on one Side, and yet were allow'd on the other) one half as ſoon as the Troops begin to march, and the other half ſix Months after.

3. The King of Denmark will, in caſe of a War, ſhut all his Ports againſt Privateers and Men of War, unleſs they convoy a Fleet of Merchant-Ships, to the Number of forty or more.

4. The King of Denmark ſhall not longer oppoſe the ninth Electorate.

5. He ſhall not enter into any Treaties that may diſturb the Peace of the North, but prevent them.

6. He ſtipulates Liberty of Commerce for his Subjects, and for the better preventing of Frauds, the Convention of 1691 ſhall be examin'd and alter'd: and 'till that is done, the ſaid Convention ſhall be in force.

7. The King of Great Britain and the States-General promiſe to pay to the King of Denmark 300,000 Crowns a Year during the War: But in Caſe no War happens, and that the Forces are on their March, then to pay three Months of the Subſidy, beſides Levy-Money: and if an Accommodation be made, after the Ratification of this Treaty, but before the Troops are marching, to pay a Year's Subſidy, and a fourth Part of the Levy-Money.

8. The King of Great-Britain promiſes to pay the Arrears due on the Convention in 1689, for the 7000 Danes.

9. The King of Denmark waves all Pretenſions upon the States, they paying to his Majeſty the Sums that the Province of Holland and the Town of Amſterdam claim from him, and returning the Obligation of the late King Frederick the Third.

10. The King of Denmark ſhall ſend 5000 Horſe, 1000 Dragoons, and 8000 Foot to the Aſſiſtance of the King of Great-Britain and the States General, immediately after the Treaty is ſign'd, and they ſhall take the ſame Oath to the King and the States, as the 7000 did to the King, and the ſtanding of vacant Offices, and the Adminiſtration of Juſtice, ſhall alſo be in the ſame Manner. The King and the States ſhall pay Levy-Money, for a Horſeman eighty Crowns of Denmark, and a Footman thirty: one half as ſoon as they are marching, and the other when they are arrived on the Frontiers. Their Pay ſhall be the ſame as that of the States, and be diſtributed by the Danish Commiſſaries, to commence from the Day of their March. If the ſaid Troops are to be tranſported, ſuch Tranſports are to be made at the Charge of the King of Great Britain and the States, who muſt retain them as long as they ſhall ſee it and if to be ſent Home

A.D. 1701. their ſecret Articles: By the former his Daniſh Majeſty was to furniſh 3000 Horſe, 1000 Dragoons, and 8000 Foot to the Aſſiſtance of the King and the States, immediately after the ſigning of the Treaty; and the latter in caſe of Need, 4000 more three Months after Demand, in Conſideration of a 100000 Crowns a Year, for ten Years, on the Suppoſition of a War, Levy-Money, &c. &c.

M. Lamberty does not give the ſecret Articles; but then he adds another Article to the firſt ſixteen, which he ſays was ſign'd by Mr. Greg the Engliſh Miniſter, tho' not by the Dutch: To wit,

[Tome I. p 521]

"For the better underſtanding of all the Clauſes of the preſent Treaty which concern the Expence of the Levies, the Quarters, the March, the Recruits, and the Return of the ſaid Troops, it is expreſly ſtipulated, "That his Britannick Majeſty ſhall defray all the ſaid Expences, when they ſhall be in his Service, and the States General when they ſhall be in the Service of their Lordſhips."

Treaty of the two Crowns with Portugal.

And, ſoon after, as if to balance this Meaſure, Advice came from Mr. Methuen, that the Treaty ſo long talk'd of between the two Crowns and Portugal, had (notwithſtanding all the advantageous Offers he had been empower'd to make, and all the Oppoſition his own Zeal, Activity, and Sagacity had been able to raiſe againſt it) been ſign'd at Liſbon upon the 18th of June: And from M. Schonenberg, That the Ratifications were exchang'd the next following Month.

On the Portugueſe Side, this Treaty and every Thing that regarded it, was conceal'd with all the Caution imaginable; as well becauſe they had great Reaſon to think, it would be extreamly odious to the People, as becauſe they were under ſome Apprehenſions of the Reſentments of the Maritime Powers, which had a conſiderable Fleet then ready to put to Sea, under the Command of Rooke; and what the Deſtination of it was to be, contrary to what was uſual in the like Caſes, remain'd as yet a profound Secret: And, on the other Hand, how ſolicitous thoſe Powers were to be preciſely inform'd, how far theſe Engagements extended, may be collected from the following Letter from Mr. Methuen to Lord Manchester, dated September 27, To wit, A. D. 1701.

"The 19th Inſtant arrived here in Caſcaes Road his Majeſty's Ship the Lyn, diſpatch'd to me by Sir George Rooke, with Inſtructions from his Majeſty; upon the Receipt of which, I preſently demanded an Audience of the King of Portugal, and it was appointed me the next Morning at ten of the Clock. I was almoſt two Hours with the King, during which Time having ſaid every Thing to him that I thought likely to make him ſenſible of his paſt Errors, and true Intereſt; I concluded with acquainting him, that it being abſolutely neceſſary for the King my Maſter to be fully inform'd concerning the Contents of the late Treaties he had made with France and Spain; I deſir'd that a true Copy of them ſhould be communicated to me, together with a Declaration of his final Reſolution, how he intended to act in caſe a War ſhould break out between England and France, adding, that I expected an immediate and poſitive Anſwer, being reſolved not to detain the King's Ship above four and twenty Hours. The Arrival of the Frigate, her remaining at the Caſcaes, my Demands, and the little Time I gave them, put they are to give three Months Notice. If the King of Denmark be attack'd in his own Kingdoms, he may recal them as ſoon as he finds it neceſſary.

---

11. If a Regiment or Company happen to be ruin'd, the King and the States are to recruit them, and to reſtore them to the ſame Condition they were in before, and the Recruit-Money is to be paid to the Daniſh Officers at the End of the Campaign.

12. If the King of Denmark ſhould be in any wiſe attack'd, the King of England and the States-General ſhall ſend his Forces back with Speed, giving them one Month's Pay, and the like Sum when they ſhall be ſent Home after the Peace; and they ſhall ſend the King of Denmark the Succours agreed on by the ſecret Article of the Treaty in 1690.

13. Succours may be demanded by any of the Parties, if he is attack'd by Force of Arms, without his having firſt uſed Force againſt the Aſſailant: But this is to be applicable only to future Occaſions. For the preſent, the 12,000 Men ſhall march, as ſoon as the Treaty is ſign'd.

14. This Alliance ſhall continue ten Years from the ſigning thereof, and the Alliances of 1690 and 1696, are renew'd by this.

15. The Emperor ſhall be invited into this Alliance; and if Pruſſia, Luxenburg, and Heſſe-Caſſel ſhall deſire to be comprin'd in it, the principal Contractants are at Liberty to conſent to it.

16. The Ratification ſhall be exchang'd at Copenhagen in ſix Weeks by England, and in four Weeks by Holland.

Abſtract of the ſecret Articles of the foregoing Treaty.

1. If the Succour, which Denmark is to ſend to the King of England and the States, ſhould not be ſufficient, that King promiſes to ſend 4000 Men more, three Months after Demand. The King and the States may act with theſe 4000 Men, as alſo with the 12000 mention'd in the Treaty, as they ſhall think fit.

2. If Denmark ſhould be attack'd, and the Succour mention'd in the ſecret Articles of the Treaty of 1690 ſhould not be ſufficient, the King of England and the States promiſe to aſſiſt him with all their Forces, as Denmark will in the like Caſe aſſiſt them.

3. His Majeſty and the States will uſe their utmoſt Endeavours that Denmark may loſe nothing of its Pretenſions of Money from the Crown of Spain.

4. The King and the States will uſe their good Offices, that the Emperor may pay the King of Denmark a Debt of a Million of Crowns; and after he has receiv'd it, he will aſſiſt the Emperor with 3000 Foot, if Need be.

5. His Majeſty and the States will endeavour that the Duke of Holſtein may conform himſelf to the Treaty of Travendale, and maintain a good Friendſhip with Denmark, while he ſends ſo many Troops out of his own Dominions.

6. The Allies ſhall endeavour, that the Peace in the Empire ſhall be entirely preſerv'd.

7. His Majeſty and the States are content, that the Emperor ſhall have 2000 out of the mention'd 12000 Men, mention'd in the 10th Article of this Treaty, which Denmark will make good to them, in ſix Months, after the ſigning of this Treaty.

8. The King of Denmark declares, that the Kings and the States Ships of War ſhall at all Times enter his Ports, when they convoy ſuch a Number of Ships, as they ſhall think fit.

9. His Majeſty and the States promiſe, that they will, before the Ratification of this Treaty, agree with the King of Denmark about ſuch a Security for the Payments, as he may be ſatisfy'd with.

10. In caſe of a War, his Daniſh Majeſty ſhall not be oblig'd to enter into it, but be reputed to have made good his Alliance, by ſending the Succours of 16000 Men, and ſo putting this Treaty in Execution." Cont. P. 392, &c.

A. D. 1701. put this King and his Miniſters into a great Conſternation, for they ſuppoſed that our Fleet lay ſomewhere near the Coaſt, expecting the Return of the Frigate with my Anſwer; and this Conſideration made them very uneaſy, which made me hope that they would at laſt take ſome vigorous Reſolution in our Favour. But my Hopes were ſoon defeated by the News I receiv'd by an Expreſs from Caſcaes, the ſame Night, that Monſ. Chateau-Renault appear'd off with his Squadron, which proved too true, for he came into this River the next Day; and the Portugueſe having plucked up their Spirits, the Secretary of State ſent me an Anſwer in Writing, That the King of Portugal lay under no other Obligations by his Treaties with France and Spain, than thoſe which he communicated to me already, as alſo to Mr. Secretary Vernon by his Envoy in England; and that the King had no Reaſon to change any Thing that had been ſtipulated with the Moſt Chriſtian King, who had always been his good Friend and Ally."

And theſe Communications which had alſo been made to the States-General, as well as to the King, were in Subſtance little more than this, That his Portugueſe Majeſty was ſincerely diſpos'd to contribute all that was in his Power to the Continuance of the Peace: But that if a Rupture ſhould, notwithſtanding, happen, his Intereſts would oblige him to take Part with the two Crowns.

But if the Court of Portugal found it convenient not to diſcover the Bottom of their Engagements, the two Crowns had no ſuch Managements to keep; and therefore made no Difficulty to ſuffer the Contents of the Portugueſe Treaty to (y) ſteal into the World; by which it appeared, A. D. 1701. that if the Vaunts of M. d'Avaux at the Hague concerning it were not wholly true, they had too much Truth for their Foundation.

And here it may be expedient to ſhew, in a Word or two concerning the Engliſh and Dutch Fleet, which ſtruck ſuch a Terror into the Court of Liſbon: It conſiſted of forty ſeven Ships of the Line and fifteen Dutch, beſides Frigates, Tenders, &c. ſet ſail firſt about the Middle of Auguſt, but being oblig'd by contrary Winds to put back again, could not get to Sea till the End of that Month: The Advice ſent by an extraordinary Courier from the Court of Verſailles to that of Madrid was, That it was provided and victuall'd for ſix Months, and was bound to the Mediterranean: Upon which the Council of State was aſſembled to deliberate upon what was fit to be done, in caſe they ſhould occupy the Spaniſh Ports with the ſame Freedom as formerly: And the Reſolution taken upon it was, That circular Orders ſhould be ſecretly ſent to all the Governors and Commanders of the ſame, to fire with Ball upon any Engliſh or Dutch Men of War, tho' a ſingle Ship ſerving only for Convoy, that ſhould come within Reach of their Guns. Orders to forbid their Admittance into the Ports of Spain.

But this Fleet, ſtrong as it was, ſerved only to cover a Squadron that was to be detach'd, when out of Soundings, to the Weſt-Indies, with Land-Forces, Ammunition and whatever elſe was neceſſary for the Security of the Colonies in caſe of a Rupture, which now ſeem'd to be unavoidable; and, in coaſting Spain and Portugal could only ſerve to cover our Trade, and to act as a Fleet of Obſervation: For our Merchants

---

(y) In fifteen Articles, to the following Effect, To wit.

1. The Peace concluded between Caſtile and Portugal in 1668, is renew'd and confirm'd.

2. Caſtile renounces for ever all Pretenſions to Portugal.

3. The King of Portugal ſhall remain abſolute Maſter of the Iſlands of S. Gabriel and Nueva Colonia in the ſame Form as he claim'd them in 1681.

4. France relinquiſhes to him all her Pretenſions to Maranon.

5. Satisfaction is promis'd to be given to the King of Portugal, touching the Affairs of the Company of Negroes which are ſent from Cachco to the Spaniſh Indies.

6. The King of Portugal promiſes to acknowledge King Philip V. for lawful and univerſal Heir of the Spaniſh Monarchy, in Conformity to the Will of Charles II. and to maintain the ſaid Will.

7. That if England and Holland ſhall proceed to a Rupture with France or Caſtile, the King of Portugal ſhall allow them no Relief or Shelter in his Havens. He ſhall only receive into them ſix of their Men of War, in caſe they have no more in the Seas or upon the Coaſts of Portugal; but in caſe they have a greater Number, his Portugueſe Majeſty ſhall admit none at all.

8. That his Portugueſe Majeſty ſhall not admit into his Ports, any Prize of any Nation whatſoever; and much leſs the Landing of any Men.

9. That in caſe, that by reaſon of this Treaty, Portugal ſhall be diſturb'd either by England or Holland, then Caſtile and France ſhall ſuccour her with thirty Men of War, and ſhall moreover furniſh her with a Million at one Payment, and 300,000 Crowns a Year, in lieu of which the King of Portugal obliges himſelf to keep twelve Men of War at Sea.

10. And in caſe, that upon a War happening, the Engliſh ſhall refuſe the Queen-Dowager the Payment of her Dowry, France and Caſtile ſhall make it good, and ſhall indemnify his Portugueſe Majeſty from all Abatements that may happen in his Cuſtoms by reaſon of the War.

11. That in Caſe the Enemies of Portugal ſhall in the mean Time make any Attempts upon his Conqueſts, all neceſſary Succour ſhall be given him.

12. His Portugueſe Majeſty ſhall be allow'd ſuch military Officers as he ſhall ſtand in need of.

13. That in Caſe the Hollanders ſhall refuſe to reſtore the Iſland of Ceilon to his Portugueſe Majeſty, the Crowns of France and Caſtile ſhall aſſiſt him to recover it.

14. That in Conſideration of the Peace of Europe, his Portugueſe Majeſty ſhall by no means moleſt King Philip V. in the Succeſſion of Caſtile, for or by reaſon of any Demeans which he is at this Day poſſeſt of.

15. That if any Prince will diſpute with him this Poſſeſſion, and that upon this Occaſion there happens a War, his Portugueſe Majeſty ſhall forbid him all the Havens of his Kingdoms and Dominions where he may come and ride; and the Landing of all Manner of Merchandize as well as warlike Ammunition: And all that ſhall come in the Name of ſuch a Prince ſhall be treated as Enemies."

There was alſo another Treaty between Spain and Portugal: And the Stipulations in relation to the Aſſiento for Negroes was to the following Effect:

"That the King of Spain ſhall pay out of the firſt Money that comes with the Fleet, 300,000 Ducats, Money of Portugal, to the Company in lieu of their Loſſes: That the Company ſhall renounce their Contract of Negroes, notwithſtanding it was to remain two Years longer: and the King of Spain is to do as much making Reſtitution of 200,000 Crowns, with the Rents which the Company were obliged to pay at the Signature of the ſaid Contract. This Money is to be ſecur'd to the Return of the ſecond Fleet of the Indies, which is to come from the Havana to the Bay of Paymeo. That all Negroes and Slaves of the Portugueſe Company's Goods in the Ports and Straights ſhall be taken off: And all the Money Parts of Spaniſh ſhall be paid for the Sale of Negroes, together with, which ought to be paid for the Sale of Negroes, together with, which ought to be paid in two Months Time, and ſhall have Liberty to carry off their Effects in a Term convenient, either to Lisbon or otherwiſe."

A.D.1701. Merchants had not as yet (z) receiv'd Notice to withdraw their Effects; Affairs were not as yet ripe for an Appeal to the Sword; and, consequently it would have been Rashness inexcusable to have begun the Quarrel, before it could be either maintain'd or excus'd: So that all the Censures, which the ignorant have pass'd on the Inactivity of this Fleet, recoil upon themselves.

We must now return to the Hague again, as to the Center of Negotiation; where a new Grand Alliance had all this while been forming: And which was expedited more and more on both Sides, as they were respectively impell'd by their respective Interests.

The Affirmations receiv'd by every Dispatch of the dictatorial Power of France exercis'd in the Spanish Councils; and, consequently in their Distributions, Dispositions and Regulations of every Kind; and, above all the Alterations making in the Channels of Commerce, in consequence of the Union, had their full Effect on the maritime Powers.

[Cole, p. 399.] A French Company established to open a Trade to Mexico and Peru.

"They have here (at Paris, says Lord Manchester to Mr. Vernon) established a Company for the Trade to Mexico and Peru. Their Stock consists of six Millions French. The King of Spain has a fourth Part; the French King two Millions, and the Company the rest. They are to have the whole Trade exclusive from all others; and without doubt little but the Produce of France will be sent on board the Galleons. There is also another Project for engrossing all the Spanish Wool. The first Year or two, it will require a Stock of forty Millions French. They say, that in Languedoc sixteen Millions are subscrib'd; the Merchants in the other Sea-Ports, hope to do the like, and those of Paris twenty. The King is to be concern'd also, and this Company is to have great Privileges granted them".

[P. 408.] "The French (says Schonenberg, August 11) work Night and Day to make themselves absolute Masters of the Trade of the Spanish Islands, in order to ruin entirely that of England and Holland." And again, in another subsequent Dispatch. "M. du Casse, Governor of the Island of St. Domingo, has concluded a new Treaty about the Assiento for Negroes with this Court, in the Name of the Guinea Company, established at St. Malo; which goes into it for an entire half, the other half is for the Account of the two Kings, Grandfather and Grandson, each an equal Portion. The French Vessels design'd for the Transport of the said Negroes, will have free Access to all the Ports of America, without any Exception, not even of that of the famous Port of Buenos Ayres: And this is in effect making France Mistress of all the Trade to the Indies."

[P. 416.] Another French Company obtain the Assiento for Negroes.

A.D. 1701.

Lastly, The French had a strong Squadron of twenty four Men of War, five Fire-Ships, and two Bomb-Vessels in the Port of Cadiz; besides the Squadrons which they kept on the Cruise, as well in the Ocean as the Mediterranean: And as if to demonstrate, that the two Nations were from thence forward to be Two only in Name, the French Fashions of Dress, &c. become the Fashion of the Spanish Court; the Life-Guards were put into the French Uniform, and the Footmen into French Liveries: And by a formal Edict, the Grandees of Spain and the Peers of France were put on the same Footing in each Kingdom.

[P. 450.] French Squadron at Cadiz.

and the French Fashions follow'd at Court.

But then to qualify all these flagrant Proofs of the French Ascendancy in Spain; and the Advantages resulting to France from it, the same Schonenberg, in one of his Dispatches, writes thus, "His most Christian Majesty has demanded to be furnish'd from hence, as soon as possible, with, at least, two Millions of Crowns, for the most urgent Necessities of Italy and the Spanish Netherlands; which Demand has astonish'd the Ministry, as if they were struck with a Flash of Lightning, knowing, that it is absolutely impossible to furnish even a fifth Part of that Sum, tho' they should have a good Space of Time to find it in; for, in effect, and without Exaggeration, the Finances of Spain are at so deplorably low an Ebb, that, if the Court of France were well inform'd of it, they would perhaps, not engage to support a Monarchy, which has not any Vigour left to contribute towards it: It being certain, that, in case of a Rupture, all the Weight of the War, as well by Land as by Sea, will fall wholly upon France, and will swallow up, at least, a Third of its Revenues. All that Spain will be able to do this Year, will be, to equip two Men of War; and to send into Andalusia, for the Security of that Province, about 2500 Men, as well Horse as Foot."

[P. 365.] The miserable Poverty of Spain.

Again afterwards, "There is so general a Want of Money, that they find it very difficult to furnish what is necessary, even for the most common Necessaries: This makes their

---

(z) And how necessary such Notice was, may be discover'd from the following Letter to Lord Manchester from M. Schonenberg.

"My Lord,

I thank your Excellency for the Letter you have honour'd me with of the 10th Instant: and, as it seems that Affairs are at a Crisis, the Event of which gives no less a Subject of Apprehension than of Hope, I have reflected how much it concerns the Subjects of H. M. the King our Master, trading and residing in these Kingdoms, to be advertis'd before hand, in case a Rupture be inevitable and near at Hand: They have also instantly desir'd it of me, and they frequently renew their Instances: and I believ'd, that I ought no longer to defer to give your Excellency Advice of it, as to the Minister, who is most capable to communicate to me good and certain Lights in a Point of so great Consequence. It is therefore, my Lord, that I beg of you to have the Goodness, as soon as you shall observe, that we must no more expect an Accommodation, to give me presently Advice of it by an extraordinary Way, the quickest and securest you can find, that so I may, immediately after receiving it, dispatch secretly extraordinary Messengers to all the Ports in these Kingdoms, that thus the English Merchants may stand upon their Guard, as in Effect they have began to do it, and that they may finish their necessary Precautions for the Security of their Effects: I promise myself this from the Zeal of your Excellency, for the Service of H. M. as also from your Attachment to the Interests of the Nation." Cole, P. 104.

A.D. 1701. them fear, That they ſhall not find enough for the Expence of the King's Journey towards Arragon and Catalonia, (to hold an Aſſembly of the States, and meet his Conſort in her Way from Turin): They have aſk'd the Clergy for a free Gift, and for an Advance from the Farmers and Controllers of the Revenue: But both the one and the other cry out Mercy: In a Word, Scarcity and Miſery reign univerſally, and the Will of the late King Charles II. will coſt France dear: For, unleſs they open their Coffers to ſupply the horrible Emptineſs of thoſe of Spain, this Court cannot ſupport itſelf; and the leaſt War will over-whelm it."

[P 375] And yet again Lord Manchester, "I have inclos'd M. Schonenberg's of the 21ſt paſt: Other Letters do confirm the ſame; and I can aſſure you, They begin to be very uneaſy at this Court, to find themſelves oblig'd to bear the whole Burden, with the Mortification that ours and the States Demands were not there (in Spain) thought ſo unreaſonable, as the French expected they would: And 'twas thought, That it would have made them act with the greateſt Vigour towards the Support of their own Monarchy. Moſt People here alſo murmur, as much as they dare, at the Capitation, &c. &c. and at ſupporting a People that will do nothing for themſelves. It is certain, that Money was never more ſcarce than it is now here; and it muſt infallibly grow worſe, the King being oblig'd to ſend ſuch conſiderable Sums in Specie into Italy, Flanders, and Germany: Beſides, People make a manifeſt Profit, by ſending the Specie out of the Kingdom into other Countries, which is daily done, and which is owing to the Uncertainty they are under, by the King's raiſing and falling of the Money, and their having no Trade to ſpeak of to make it return."

France not in a Condition to ſupport her.

Thus both the preſent ill State of the Two Kingdoms, and the Apprehenſions entertain'd of the Acquiſitions in Proſpect to the French Trade, had an equal Tendency to quicken the Negotiations: To both which Conſiderations ought alſo to be added, the perpetual Encroachments of the French on the Dutch Frontiers, and the Preparations they hourly made, to be every where in a Condition to act either offenſively or Defenſively.

A new Grand-Alliance negotiated.

But then theſe Conſiderations which had ſo much Weight with them, only ſerv'd as ſo many Hints to the Emperor, to inſiſt on higher Terms: He was impatient to drive the French and Spaniards out of Italy; in order to which, and by way of Diverſion, He wanted to have the War kindled in Flanders, and on the Rhine: His Finances were ſo low, that he was forc'd to negotiate a Loan in Holland of 500,000 Crowns on his Quick-ſilver Mines; which nevertheleſs he could not obtain, till the States alſo became Security for the Debt: And yet his Miniſters talk'd and acted, as if the Grifin authoris'd him to inſiſt on his own Terms.

The Emperor forc'd to borrow 500,000 Crowns on his Quick-ſilver Mines.

A. Dorp. London. Treaty.

Thus nothing would ſerve him at firſt, but the Reduction of the whole Spaniſh Monarchy: And for that Reaſon, when England and Holland (For tho' the Latter was to be preſerv'd at the Expence of the Former, both, it ſeems, were to be ſet upon an equal Footing in point of Acquiſition) inſiſted on holding whatever they ſhould take from the Spaniards in the Weſt-Indies, his Imperial Majeſty affected to be as averſe to any Project of Diſmembering, as the Monarch in Poſſeſſion.

The Emperor refuſes to hearken to any Diſmembering of Spain.

The Maritime-Powers, on the other Hand, appear'd reſolute to undertake for no more, than the Recovery of Flanders, to ſerve as a Barrier for the Republic, and alſo the Duchy of Milan.

After many Conferences, however, they at laſt engag'd for Naples and Sicily, as well as Flanders and Milan: And the Imperial Miniſters, finding no more was to be obtain'd, were not only glad to agree on thoſe Terms, but alſo to the Article concerning the Weſt-Indies, under a Proviſo, That no Alteration ſhould be made there in the Point of Religion; which was admitted, tho' not expreſs'd in the Treaty.

England and Holland compound for Flanders, Naples, Sicily, and Milan.

When all was ſettled at the Hague, M. de Goes ſent his Secretary with the Plan to Vienna, who return'd on the 29th of Auguſt with his Imperial Majeſty's Approbation: So that all Difficulties being now remov'd, it was ſign'd on the 7th of September following; being in abſtract, as follows.

An Abſtract of the Treaty.

"1. There ſhall be a perpetual and inviolable Friendſhip between the Emperor, the King, and the States-General.

2. The Allies think nothing more effectual for eſtabliſhing the general Peace, than the procuring Satisfaction to the Emperor in the Spaniſh Succeſſion, and ſufficient Security for the Dominions and Commerce of the Allies.

3. The Allies ſhall employ two Months Time, from the Day of exchanging the Ratifications, to obtain, by amicable Means, the ſaid Satisfaction and Security.

4. But if that cannot be obtain'd within the Time limited, they engage to aſſiſt one the other with all their Forces, according to the Specification to be agreed on, in a particular Convention.

5. The Confederates ſhall, among other Things, endeavour to recover the Spaniſh Netherlands, to be a Barrier between Holland and France; as likewiſe the Duchy of Milan, &c. for the Emperor's Security; as alſo the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, and the Lands and Iſlands upon the Coaſt of Tuſcany, belonging to the Spaniſh Dominions.

6. His Majeſty and the States may (a) ſeize what Lands and Cities they can, belonging

(a) Concerning this Article, Mr. Tindal writes as follows: "This laſt Article to advantageous to England, was owing to the Advice which Lord Somers had formerly given to the King, when the Partition-Treaty was in agitation." But Mr. Tindal might have diſcover'd, if he pleas'd, That the Importance of ſuch an Eſtabliſhment in the Spaniſh Weſt-Indies, as might give us a Share in the Commerce of thoſe Parts, is the firſt Hand, which is the Point recommended to the King in his Lordſhip's Letter, was extremely well underſtood, and as warmly ſolicited, by the Miniſters of King Charles II. And

A.D. 1701. longing to the Spaniards in the Indies, and keep them.

7. In a War, the Confederates ſhall faithfully communicate their Deſigns to one another.

8. No Party ſhall treat of Peace, Truce, &c. but jointly with the reſt: They ſhall prevent the Union of France and Spain under the ſame Government, or the French poſſeſſing the Spaniſh Indies: The Subjects of his Majeſty and the States ſhall enjoy all the Privileges of Trade, which they had before the Death of the late King of Spain.

9. At the making of Peace, the Confederates ſhall provide for the maintaining the Trade of the Engliſh and the Dutch to the Dominions taken from the Spaniards, and likewiſe ſecure the States by a Barrier.

10. They ſhall at the ſame Time agree about the Exerciſe of Religion in the Places acquir'd.

11. They ſhall aſſiſt one the other with all their Forces, if the French King, or any one elſe, ſhould invade any one, on Account of this Alliance.

12. After a Peace, there ſhall remane a Defenſive Alliance, between theſe Allies, for maintaining of the ſaid Peace.

13. All Kings, Princes, and States that pleaſe, may enter into this Alliance: The Emperor to be particularly invited.

14. The Treaty to be ratify'd within Six Weeks."

It is not to be conceiv'd, that France had not an Eye conſtantly fix'd on the Progreſs of this Negotiation, nor that ſhe did not take her Meaſures accordingly: But whether the Incident now to be mention'd, is to be number'd among thoſe Meaſures, let the Reader decide for himſelf.

Remarkable Caſe of Count Boſelli, confin'd in the Baſtile for a Deſign upon the Life of K. William.

While Lord Jerſey was Embaſſador in France, Count Boſelli, an Italian Gentleman, infamous for many Ruffian-like Exploits, together with his Son, had been thrown into the Baſtile, for what Crime, was not then underſtood: But after Lord Mancheſter had been ſome Time at Paris, he was inform'd, it was for being concern'd in a Deſign againſt the Life of King William: And Lamberty affirms, That the Court of France made his Majeſty acquainted with it: Notwithſtanding which, his Lordſhip was, in the next Place, inform'd, That a Perſon was upon his Way to England, with a Letter to his Majeſty from the Duke of Mantua, to ſolicit his Enlargement; which Perſon was alſo to be furniſh'd with a like Letter from the Elector of Bavaria in his Way: And ſoon after M. de Torcy acquainted that Miniſter,

[Cole, p. 83.]

[Ibid. p. 99.]

That M. de Tallard having apply'd to Lord Portland in favour of the Son, his Lordſhip had reply'd, It was an Affair not worth the troubling the King with; He (the Son) being but a Youth; and there being nothing againſt him: And that, thereupon, he was to be ſet at Liberty; tho' not till Lord Mancheſter had been firſt appris'd of it. A.D. 1701.

This paſs'd in January, while the laſt Partition-Treaty was at the Point of ſigning: young Boſelli was ſet at Liberty accordingly; and the firſt Uſe he propos'd to make of it, was to repair to England, in order to ſolicit for his Father: But this was prevented for that Time, tho' not without a good deal of Trouble, by Lord Mancheſter: And thus Matters ſtood till the January following, (before which Time the King of Spain's Will had been accepted, and the Partition-Treaty was become Waſte-paper). But his Lordſhip then writes to Mr. Vernon as follows: "I have little to add, only, that the Son of Signor Boſelli reſolves to go for England: I have done all I can to prevent him, and I have had a great deal of Trouble with him and Others who have ſolicited me in his Favour: This Court tells him, That they can do nothing in relation to his Father, but he muſt apply to the King of England: If you are not acquainted with this Affair, the Lord Jerſey can inform you: I ſuppoſe Boſelli will apply himſelf to him or you: I have had Orders not to concern myſelf in it, which I have punctually obſerv'd." To which Mr. Vernon, in his very next Diſpatch, replies, "The King would be very glad, that young Boſelli's coming over hither ſhould be prevented, ſince there is nobody will have any Thing to do with him here: If his Journey is not to be ſtopp'd, it will be fit to have an Account when he deſigns to come away, and where he is to embark: One would likewiſe know what Company he brings with him, and what his and their Deſcriptions are." And ſome Time afterwards his Lordſhip once more informs the Secretary, That he had prevented this ungrateful Viſit. [287.] [P. 290.]

Boſelli's Mother and Wife are afterwards mention'd as other importunate Suitors for him; but with no better Succeſs than the Former: King William would ſay nothing: King Lewis, without a Word from him, would do nothing: And, after repeated Remonſtrances concerning him, Lord Mancheſter writes to Mr. Blathwayte, Auguſt 26, as follows: "You have often heard of Count Boſelli, who is in the Baſtile, as they ſay, on his Majeſty's Account: He preſſes me as to this particular Stipulation, in a Memorial ſaid to have been preſented to one of Queen Anne's Miniſters, we are told, that the Writer of it having obtain'd Acceſs to King William in the laſt Months of his Life, among other important Matters which he was encourag'd to lay before him, recommended the following to his Royal Conſideration, which makes one of the Clauſes in the ſaid Memorial; to wit: "The ſeiſing upon the principal Ports in the Weſt-Indies, by which he might be enabled not only to carry on the War at the Expence of his Enemies, but open a ſecure and direct Trade for ever, between thoſe rich and vaſt Continents of Mexico and Peru, and this Kingdom: I added, That to ſecure the Spaniſh Monarchy from France, the true Way was to begin with the Weſt-Indies: Since it was more practicable to make Spain and the other Dominions in Europe follow the Fate of the Weſt-Indies, than to make the Weſt-Indies, (if once in the Power of France) follow the Fate of Spain: Beſides; that France would thereby be enabled to carry on the War by the Bullion and other Wealth of the Weſt-Indies."

---

This is to be found in a Book call'd, An Enquiry into the State of the Union of Great-Britain, P. 87. And as to any Advantage ariſing to this Kingdom from the ſaid Stipulation, the War was ſo conducted, that there is not the leaſt Trace of any ſuch Thing to be found in our Story: So that the Inſertion of it in the Treaty, may be juſtly reckon'd, Matter of Amuſement only.

A. D. 1701. me every Day to intercede for him, proteſting his Innocence, and offering to go where I ſhall order him, &c. I deſire to know what Anſwer I ſhall make."

As this Application appears to be merely the Effect of Importunity, ſo it may be ſuppos'd, it was long before his Excellency could be prevail'd upon to make it: And before it could be receiv'd, (on the 28th that is to ſay) the Priſoner made his Eſcape: By the Connivance of the French Court ſay ſome, who ground their Opinion on a Sally made by ſome Perſon at Venice to this Effect, That in caſe of a War, Boſelli would have his Liberty.

He makes his Eſcape.

But in contradiction to this Surmiſe, Lord Manchester informs Mr. Blathwayt, September 2, That a Gentleman had been with him from M. de Torcy, to appriſe him of the Fact; as alſo, That the King had taken all imaginable Meaſures to have him ſtopp'd; Couriers having been diſpatch'd to Calais, Valenciennes, Bruſſels, Straſburg, Lions, &c. for that Purpoſe: And that his Excellency was deſir'd to aſſure his Majeſty, That nothing ſhould be wanting to ſeize him if poſſible.

[P. 417.] And, laſtly, September 10, the ſame Miniſter writes to Mr. Vernon as follows: "As to Boſelli, I muſt do this Court that Juſtice to ſay, They had no Hand in his Eſcape; and the Manner of it does plainly ſhew it, and the Machine he left, which many are curious to go and ſee: His Mother, Wife and Son, are in the Baſtille: His Man attempted to follow him on the ſame (b) Rope; but he was taken, and is in Priſon; as alſo a Poſt-maſter, for giving him Horſes without an Order: He is gone to Italy; and M. de Torcy believes, They ſhall take him."

But neither this frank Opinion of the Engliſh Miniſter, nor the Aſſurances of the Court of France, had Power to diſſipate the Apprehenſions entertain'd at Leo: The Guards there were doubled upon it, and no Stranger was ſuffer'd to have Admittance, till he had firſt undergone a thorough Examination: In Confirmation of which extraordinary Procedure, or rather to ſet a Gloſs on the Suſpicions which occaſion'd it, M. Lamberty [Tom. I. P. 688.] intimates, That an Italian and his Landlord coming from Amſterdam, out of Curioſity, as they ſaid, to viſit the Court, and the Former not returning ſatisfactory Anſwers to the Queſtions put to him, he was put under Arreſt; the Opinion at firſt entertain'd of him being, That he was Boſelli himſelf: But a French Officer in the Dutch Service, who knew Boſelli perfectly well, being brought to confront him, that Impreſſion was remov'd. Notwithſtanding which, the Priſoner was ſent to the Hague, where he was re-examin'd by Lord Rumney and others; and Signor Mocenigo, Embaſſador from the State of Venice to the Court of England, to whom he had appeal'd for a Character, unfortunately for him, declaring, That he was a Banditti and a Bravo, it was concluded, without Remorſe, That he was at leaſt an Accomplice with Boſelli's, and his Errand was, To learn the Ground.

Precautions thereon taken at Leo.

A. D. 1701.

But whether this Incident is to be plac'd to the French Account or not, it is certain, That, about the Time the new Grand-Alliance was perfected at the Hague, France began to take ſuch Meaſures with regard to England, as ſhew'd plainly enough, the two Courts were likely to be more and more eſtrang'd from each other every Day: For in a Diſpatch of Lord Manchester to Mr. Blathwayte, dated September 16, his Lordſhip writes thus: "There is now in the (c) Preſs an Edict to prohibit all Trade with England: But that this may not look like a Declaration of War, they do permit the bringing in of Beer, Syder, Glaſs-Bottles and Wool: Notice is already ſent to all the Sea-Ports: And after the 1ſt of November next, no Perſon is to wear any of the Manufacture of England, under ſevere Penalties."

The Commodities and Manufactures of England prohibited by France.

But this Meaſure, tho' apparently wearing an hoſtile Face, was neither of ſo alarming nor provoking a Nature, as That which was under Deliberation at the ſame Time.

The late unfortunate King (James) had been dying all this Summer; and about this Time, was apparently breathing his Laſt: His Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty had made him ſeveral conſolatory Viſits, while he lay thus languiſhing on the Confines of Life and Death, and had diſcharg'd all the Duties of Conſanguinity, Piety, Hoſpitality, and Generoſity, with regard to him: In which he certainly behav'd moſt meritoriouſly and magnanimouſly. —But on the 13th of September, when he made him his laſt Viſit, he went a Step farther than Policy could warrant; not to inſiſt on the Nature of his Engagements to King William by the Fourth Article of the Treaty of Ryſwick, which had not as yet been formably renoune'd on either Side: For at this Viſit, he aſſur'd the Queen and the P. Prince, That he would own him as ſoon as the King was dead: And at the Inſtance of the Former, he alſo gave the ſame Aſſurances to the King himſelf.

The late King James lying on his Death-Bed, K. Lewis engages to acknowledge his Son.

Theſe are nearly Lord Manchester's Expreſſions: And the ſame Miniſter adds, That before he made this Declaration, he held a Council at Marly, where ſome Time was ſpent in debating, Whether his Majeſty ſhould own him or not? Or if he did, Whether it ſhould not be deferr'd for ſome Time? That M. de Torcy and the reſt of the Miniſters were againſt it, and only the Dauphin and Madam de Maintenon (who had been gain'd by the Queen) for it: And that the ſaid Council was only held for Form-ſake; the Reſolution having been taken before.

[Cole. p. 420, 422.]

On the 16th, King James dy'd at St. Germains, in the 67th Year of his Age; having, almoſt with his laſt Breath, adviſ'd his Son

(b) In his Letter to Mr. Blathwayt, he calls it, A Ladder of a new Invention, which was ſuppoſ'd to come from Italy.
(c) It was publiſh'd the next Day.

A. D. 1701 Son to perſevere in the Faith, as a Point of infinitely more Conſequence to him, than the Acquiſition of a Crown; and in the ſame mortify'd Strain, told the Curate of St. Germains, That he would be bury'd in his Church: And that the Inſcription on his Coffin ſhould be only This J. K. of England.

According to Lord Mancheſter, he was not much regretted at St. Germains: And if not there, how can we ſuppoſe he was regretted any where elſe? The Princeſs Sophia of Hanover, does, indeed, take occaſion to ſay, in a Letter to Sir William Dutton Colt, when a Proſpect of the Throne of England was firſt open'd to that Family, (d) "I wiſh King James was at Rome at any Rate, on the ſame Footing that Queen Chriſtina was: For I have always been greatly concern'd for his Misfortunes." But where Ambition has taken Root, Pity is ſeldom known to thrive: And as he had no Bowels for his Subjects, when they ſtood in the Way of his Paſſions or his Prejudices, ſo Thoſe of his Blood had little or none for him.....And how ſignally ſoever his own Frailties, Prejudices, Abſurdities, and Violences contributed to his Misfortunes, it ought to be acknowledg'd, That the Meaſure would never have overflown in ſo aſtoniſhing a Manner, if it had not been for thoſe fatal Concurrents, treacherous Counſellors, ungrateful Servants, &c. All of whom, inſtead of warning him of the Rocks that lay before him, according to the Obligations which lay upon them, either ſordidly conniv'd at the ruinous Courſe he held, or wickedly flatter'd the Phrenſy which impell'd him, for the Sake of their Share in the Wreck: And whether the Viſitations that befel him and his, will operate moſt, to the deterring other Kings from abuſing their Power, by invading or undermining the Liberties of their Subjects, or to the putting them on ſuch Meaſures as ſhall imperceptibly diſable Thoſe they injure from making the like Effort to work out their own Deliverance, muſt be left to the Obſervation and Experience of Poſterity.

The P. Prince of Wales proclaim'd at St. Germains.

[Cole, p. 419, 420]

What follow'd upon his Death, is thus recounted to Mr. Vernon by Lord Mancheſter: "The P. Prince was immediately proclaim'd King of England, by the Title of James the Third: I do not hear there was any other Ceremony, than, that, after he had taken the Title of King, thoſe of St. Germains kiſs'd his Hand, and treated him with Majeſty: After that the French complimented him, and did the like: What was done in the Town, was in a tumultuous Manner, by crying, Long live James the Third, &c." In his Letter on the ſame Occaſion to Mr. Blathwayt, he adds, "Some ſay there was a Herald an Iriſhman: Lord Middleton, &c. did not appear, becauſe they could not tell, how the Title of France would have been taken there, had they done it in form." In another Letter to Mr. Blathwayt, dated September 23, he alſo makes uſe of theſe Expreſſions: "The French King made the P. Prince the firſt Viſit on Tueſday laſt: He ſtay'd but little with him, but was a conſiderable Time with the Queen: The next Day the P. Prince return'd the Viſit at Verſailles: All the Ceremonies paſs to the entire Satisfaction of thoſe at St. Germains, and in the ſame Manner as it was obſerv'd with the late King:" Again, on the 26th, he procedes with his Intelligence thus.

A. D. 1701. [Ibid. p. 422.] He is viſited by the French King.

"The Will of the late King James is open'd, but not yet publiſh'd; but I hear it is to be printed: What I have learn'd of it is, That the Queen is made Regent, the French King is deſir'd to take care of the Education of the P. Prince: That in caſe he be reſtord, the Queen is to be repay'd all that ſhe has laid out of her own: That all other Debts, which they have contracted ſince they left England, and what can be made out, ſhall be paid: That the new King ſhall not take any Revenge againſt his Father's Enemies, nor his own: That he ſhall not uſe any Force in Matters of Religion, nor in relation to the Eſtates of any Perſons whatſoever."

Having alſo inform'd the ſame Miniſter, That ſince this Event, he had not thought it proper to appear at Verſailles, That his abſenting himſelf, had put the Court on conſidering, whether they ought not to have taken Notice of their intended Declaration to him, before they made it, And that M. de Torcy not only ſeem'd concern'd, but had ſent him a complimental Meſſage, deſiring to wait on him; In another Diſpatch to Mr. Vernon, dated the next following Day, he farther intimates, That they had met: That M. de Torcy's principal Endeavour was to ſhew, There was nothing in what they had done, contrary to the Treaty of Ryſwick: That in his Reply, he ſpoke his Mind ſo freely, and had ſo much to ſay on the Subject, that M. de Torcy could not anſwer: Adding, in a Stile and Manner which ſeems to indicate not a little Perturbation, "It is not neceſſary to repeat all that paſs'd: But when I take myſelf to be in the Right, I am apt enough to ſpeak plain: I found him very calm, and even concern'd; without doubt they expect I ſhall be recall'd, and they will be ſorry if it ſhould happen ſo at laſt: I told him, I would wait his Majeſty's Orders, and till then I could ſay nothing to this Matter: That I ſuppos'd I ſhould have them ſoon, and then I would acquaint him with them. He ſaid, he hoped to ſee me at Fontainbleau: He enter'd on the Subject of the Negotiation, and how the Peace would ſet all right. I told him, that it was viſible what Difficulties there have been in relation to the Emperor, and that there was no Occaſion for creating new ones, which might oblige us to take ſuch Meaſures, as poſſibly

Behaviour of M. de Torcy to Lord Manchester there.

(d) The Words of the Original (which lies before me, together with ſeveral Others, all in her Highneſſes own Handwriting to the ſame Miniſter) are identically theſe which follow; to wit: "Je ſouhaite le Roy Jaques en toute Sorte a Rome, dans la Place de la Reyne Chriſtine: Car les Malheurs me ſont toujours grand Pitie."

A. D. 1701. possibly we might otherwise not take: I know that this King order'd M. de Torcy to soften this Matter to me, as much as he could: I have Thoughts of laying this whole Conference, which lasted an Hour, before his Majesty, tho' there is no relying on what this Court says or does, after what we have seen: I am afraid of even giving my Opinion, and it would be better if I could have the Honour to relate this to his Majesty by Discourse; tho' I fear there never will be any treating with this Court without great Vigour and Resolution, and with Sword in Hand."

Further Evidence of the present ill State of France.

Thus Rashness in one Instance, produc'd Meanness in another: And as female Persuasion occasion'd the first, so the apparent Prospect of Consequences France was not as yet prepar'd for, occasion'd the last, which one Citation more from Lord Manchester's Letters will sufficiently explane.

[P. 421.] "The Scarcity of Money here is such, that you can hardly believe me; and I cannot compare it to any Thing so like, as the Want there was in England, when all the Money was call'd in: There is none in the King's Treasury; and there is scarce a Banker here that can pay 200*l.* We hear daily of Bankrupts, and Letters of Exchange protested: They give 20 per Cent. for Money, and can scarce get it: You must imagine, that it is extreme bad when it comes to be the whole Discourse of Paris: I would have drawn some Bills for England, and the greatest Bankers here could not let me have the Money; and when I desir'd to know, whether they could pay me when I had Bills on any from England, they said, They believ'd they could not: This is what you may rely upon. In short, no body pays, and I am told, That the Law for the arresting People for Debt, is suspended for some Time: The more Appearance there is of War, the worse their Condition will be: I know they are endeavouring to find out some Remedy, but they confess that the Specie is gone out of the Kingdom. A new Edict was publish'd To-day, for the new stamping the Money, which I send you: They talk also of obliging all Persons to carry in their Plate to be coin'd. All this may supply their present Necessities; but I cannot see how the Specie will return, and more must go out, if they pretend to pay their Armies."

But over and above the Apologies made for this hasty Acknowledgment of another King of England, by M. de Torcy to Lord [Tom. I. P. 689.] Manchester, M. Lamberty asserts, That the States-General having complain'd of it by their Embassador, as an Infraction of the Treaty of Utrecht, his Most Christian Majesty gave for Answer the Substance of a Memorial which he caus'd to be dispers'd in all the Courts of Europe, to the Effect following.

"The King of England dying at St. Germains on the 16th of September, 1701, and the Prince of Wales immediately assuming the Title of King, which belong'd to him as Son and Heir of the late King his Father, his Most Christian Majesty made no Difficulty of owning him under that Title; and, even some Time before, had assur'd him he would do so: For having always treated him as Prince of Wales, it was but natural for him to stile him King of England, as soon as the King his Father dy'd. Nor was this contrary to Reason, seeing it was contrary to no Engagement; and it is (e) certain there is no such Engagement in the Treaty of Ryswick: The Fourth Article of which only declares, That his Most Christian Majesty shall not disturb the King of England in the peaceable Possession of his Dominions, nor assist with any Sort of Succours, those who should attempt to disturb him; and this Article his Most Christian Majesty will punctually observe: For as to the Title of King of England, which the Prince of Wales could not avoid taking upon himself, it will procure him no other Assistance from his Most Christian Majesty, than what the late King his Father receiv'd since the Treaty of Ryswick, which was merely for his Subsistance, and the Alleviation of his Misfortunes. The Generosity of his Most Christian Majesty, would not allow him to abandon either that Prince or his Family. He is no Judge between the King of Great-Britain and the Prince of Wales: He cannot determine against the Latter, by refusing him a Title which his Birth allots him: In a Word, if his Most Christian Majesty adheres strictly to the Treaty of Ryswick, at a Time when the Conduct of the King of Great-Britain and the States-General, in sending such great Fleets to Sea, in giving secret Assistance to the Emperor, in declaring so strongly in favour of that Prince, and in procuring Troops from all Parts, might be regarded with great Reason, as a real Contravention of Treaties, it is all that can be requir'd of him. Upon the Whole, it is no new Thing for Princes to give to the Children the Titles of Kingdoms which the Kings their Fathers have lost, tho' at Peace with the Possessors of them. History furnishes many such Examples among the Kings of Naples and those of Navarre: And the Kings of Poland, of the House of Vasa, having lost the Kingdom of Sweden, were treated by France as Kings of Sweden till the Peace of Oliva, tho' France was, all the while, in the strictest Alliance with King Gustavus and Queen Christina."

A. D. 1701. Public Entry of the French Court for a Visit to the King.

What is farther observable concerning this Memorial is, That tho' it procedes thus far in the Stile and Manner of Courts, it concludes in the first Person singular, as if it was the Performance of some private Individual,

(e) The same Thing is asserted in a Pamphlet printed at London in this Interval, under the Title of, Reasons against a War with France: or an Argument shewing, That the French King's owning the P. of Wales as King of England, is no sufficient Ground of a War: And the Author of it also recommends a War with Spain, directed against her Galleons on their Return to Europe, and her Possessions in the West Indies, as the only serviceable Measure we could pursue.

A. D. 1701. vidual, in the Manner following: "I do not believe it neceſſary to cite theſe Exemples. The Juſtice of his Majeſty's Conduct being inconteſtible, worthy of his Generoſity, conformable to Treaties, and to that which he had obſerv'd to the late King of England from the Time he had ſought an Aſylum in France".

It is, beſides, to be doubted very much whether the Dutch Embaſſador at Paris (who, contrary to Expectation, was ſtill living) ever preſented any Complaint upon this Head, to the French Court, as Lamberty ſpecifies: Firſt, becauſe it was no immediate Concern of the States; 2dly, becauſe Lord Manchester makes no Mention of any ſuch Incident; and 3dly, becauſe a Memorial of the ſaid Dutch Embaſſadors, dated September 27, is publiſh'd among that Lord's Papers by Mr. Cole; which Memorial turns upon quite another Subject; namely, the Poſſeſſion which the French Troops had taken of the Village of Hernacel, and the Fortifications they had begun to raiſe there, which had a Tendency to interrupt the Paſſage of the Maeſe, &c.

The States complain that the French Troops were taking Meaſures to interrupt the Paſſage of the Maeſe.

An Aſſertion of Lamberty's concerning an expreſs Stipulation not to acknowledge the P. Prince of Wales.

Lamberty (having admitted, there is no expreſs Engagement in the Treaty of Ryſwick, That France ſhould not acknowledge the P. Prince of Wales) alſo maintains, it was expreſsly ſtipulated, notwithſtanding: Adding, That as M. Lillieroot ought to have made a Minute of this Stipulation in his Protocol, ſo the Parties concern'd, call'd upon him for an Explanation; which he evaded, by ſaying; He had ſent it to the Chancery of Sweden; and at the ſame Time, by way of Palliation, ſignify'd That the ſaid Acknowledgment was a real Infraction of the ſaid Treaty. But ſurely if ſuch a Stipulation had been actually made, the Britiſh Miniſters would never have been guilty of ſo unpardonable a Neglect, as the Omiſſion of it in the Treaty would have been pronounc'd by the whole World.

not to be depended upon.

The ſame Author yet farther ſuggeſts, That M. Pouſſin would have preſented a Copy of the French Memorial juſt recited, to Mr. Secretary Vernon: But he refus'd to accept it: And that the Jacobites having caus'd it to be printed and publiſh'd, both Printer and Publiſher were taken into Cuſtody, which is alſo verify'd by our own Writers.

Lord Manchester recall'd as alſo the Dutch Miniſter, and M. Pouſſin directed to withdraw from London.

Certain it is, That Lord Manchester receiv'd Letters of Revocation the 30th of September; That he communicated the Orders he had receiv'd to M. de Torcy, October 2. That M. Hemeſkerk left Paris November 25, and that Mr. Pouſſin was directed to leave England by a Notice in Form ſignify'd to him, ſays Lamberty, by the Maſter of the Ceremonies, in the Names of the Lords Juſtices.

As to M. Zinzendorff, he turn'd his Back on the French Court, juſt before the Grand Alliance was ſign'd; And thus it is obvious, That the Proviſion made therein of two Months, after the Exchange of the Ratifications, to accommodate the Matter in diſpute by amicable Means, was Matter of Amuſement only. A. D. 1701

The P. Prince of Wales acknowledg'd by Spain.

Laſtly, about the Middle of November Spain follow'd the Exemple of France in acknowledging the pretended Prince of Wales to be King of England: But the other Allies of France could not be brought to do the ſame; and the Court of Portugal in particular expreſs'd ſome Surpriſe and Diſſatisfaction, That ſuch a Propoſal ſhould be made to them. [Lamberty, p. 691, State of Europe for 1701.]

And while Matters were thus gradually proceeding to Extremities the general Drift of every Meaſure concerted at Loo, and adopted at the Hague, was by the Dint of Subſidy to encreaſe the Number of the Confederates, and of the Confederate Forces.

Venality how prevalent among the Princes taken into the Pay of the Confederates.

It is in a Variety of Places manifeſted by Lamberty, That Venality was the only Principle which prevail'd amongſt them, whatever Profeſſions they made, of Zeal for the Liberties of Europe, Concern for the Ballance of Power, or Attachment to a Common Cauſe.

After Bargains had been actually drove, Treaties had been ſign'd and ratify'd, and great Advances had been made on the Head of Conſiderations for them, They ſtarted ſo many new Demands, and they had recourſe to ſo many mean Artifices to delay the March of their Troops till thoſe Demands, exorbitant as they were, had been comply'd with, as, at any other Criſis, or under any other Direction, might in the very Birth, have ſtrangled any Confederacy that was ever projected, if any Door had been open for an Accommodation on the other Side, as in this Caſe there always was.

Conduct of the Elector-Palatine, King of Denmark, Sweden and Holſtein.

The Elector Palatine, and the King of Denmark were particularly obnoxious for theſe and the like dirty Proceedings.

Under the Pretence of being ſufficiently ſecur'd againſt the Practices of the Duke of Holſtein, according to the Proviſion made in the fifth ſecret Article of the Treaty, he would not ſuffer his Troops to move till toward the Cloſe of the Year; and on this Head it muſt be allow'd he had ſomething plauſible to urge: For the Duke of Holſtein was eager to ſnatch all Advantages: And tho' Mr. Creſſet was employ'd, by particular Commiſſion, to keep him within Bounds, he found it the moſt difficult Taſk imaginable to bring him to any Temperament: For tho' inwardly glad to ſee Denmark incapacitated to undertake any Thing againſt him, by ſuch a Diminution of her Forces, he could not bear to think, ſhe ſhould have the Benefit of ſo valuable a Conſideration for them: Hence both he and the King of Sweden made uſe of a thouſand Refinements, firſt to prevent the Treaty, and afterwards the Execution of it: And as to any Trace of Gratitude left on the Mind of either, for the Aſſiſtance they had ſo recently receiv'd from the Engliſh and Dutch Fleets againſt the Danes, not the leaſt was to be found. On the contrary, the Language they us'd when that String was touch'd, was to this Effect, That the Maritime Powers, in ſending thoſe Succours

A. D. 1701. had only fulfill'd their Engagements as Guaranties of the Treaty of Altena. At length however, they were induc'd to give explicite Aſſurances, That they would take no Advantage of Denmark, or give that Court any Diſturbance: But nevertheleſs not without a Proſpect of ſome Conſideration for it. Holſtein had 6000 Men to ſend to Market: Theſe England open'd a Treaty for; tho' it hung long in Suſpence, becauſe Holland could not be brought to place any Confidence in the Duke: And the Swedes were for the preſent gratify'd with 20,000 Pounds worth of Engliſh Cloth for their Soldiers, and 7000 Pounds worth of Salt-Peter; which their Agents in England had contracted for, and the Nation paid for; Holland excuſing herſelf from contributing to that Article, for fear of giving Offence to the Czar.

[Lamberty, Tome 3. p. 522. Com. Journ.]

But this was not all: For, under the Pretence of the War which the Swedes were ſtill proſecuting in Livonia, againſt the Elector of Saxony King of Poland and his Auxiliaries the Muſcovites; and in the Courſe of which they had already obtain'd great and ſignal (f) Succeſſes. They demanded of the Maritime Powers the Succours ſtipulated by the laſt Treaty, knowing they had none to ſpare; and that the Neceſſity of the Times would oblige them to make ſome pecuniary Compoſition for Non-Performance: Accordingly, This was ſo evident to Lord Marlborough, who had the Conduct of the Negotiation with Lillieroot, that the Latter having taken Occaſion to ſay, There was an eaſy Way to ſolve all Difficulties; the Former could not help replying, Yes, nothing was more eaſy than to ſign a Receipt: And this Severity ſo enflam'd the Swede, that he offer'd to cancel at once all Obligations, to convince England and Holland, in effect, ſaid he, That they ſtand as much in need of Sweden, as Sweden of them: Theſe Sharpneſſes did not, however, occaſion an abſolute Breach: For the States took up the Negotiation at the Rebound, and treated for the King of Great Britain as well as themſelves: But what is ſomewhat particular, tho' the Convention they made, is call'd, A Convention between the King of Sweden and the States-General, it was ſign'd by the Earl of Marlborough. As to the Contents, it conſiſted of ſix Articles. By the firſt, all former Treaties were confirm'd: By the ſecond, Great Britain and Holland were to pay immediately to Sweden 200,000 imperial Dollars, to be accounted as Part of the Succours which Sweden might demand on the Faith of thoſe Treaties. By the third, the States were to be reſponſible for 300,000 Crowns, which Sweden was to borrow on ſufficient Security (the Cuſtoms of Riga, that is to ſay.) By the fourth, Commiſſioners were to be appointed on both Sides, to conſider in what Manner the ſaid Confederates might be farther aſſiſtant to each other, in caſe of a new War, and in caſe the War in Livonia ſhould continue, as alſo to adjuſt the Terms of ſuch farther (g) Union. By the fifth, none of the ſaid Confederates were to make any Treaty with any Power whatſoever, contrary to the Treaties already ſubſiſting between them; or that might be prejudicial to any of the Allies. And by the ſixth, the Ratifications were to be exchang'd in ſix Weeks on both Sides.

A ſharp Expreſſion of Lord Marlborough's as ſtrongly reported by M. Lillieroot.

A ſecretary Compoſition with Sweden in lieu of Succours demanded by that Crown.

And now to return to the Danes. If they were really aw'd by Sweden and Holſtein, they took ſufficient Care to find their Account in it: For tho' the Sums they were entitled to by way of advance, had been punctually paid, they had ſtill other Points to inſiſt on, for the Tranſport of their Troops, for the ſupplying them with Cloathing, &c. Impoſt free, and for defraying the Incidents of their March, thro' the Territories of Hanover and Munſter; and all were comply'd with, accordingly, tho' the Corps they ſent were ſhamefully deficient: Their Horſe and Dragoons being no more than 3300 inſtead of 4000, and their Foot but 5490 inſtead of 8000.

By Denm.

As to the King of Poland, diſtreſs'd as he was by the Swedes in Livonia, and embarraſs'd as he alſo was by the Diſſentions and Averſions of the Poles, both the Confederates and France bid for him notwithſtanding; and he gave equal Hopes to Both; but was ſo wild in his Demands, that neither as yet thought it adviſable to come up to his Price: And, it appears, that, notwithſtanding the Part which the Elector of Bavaria had acted, and was ſtill acting, his Majeſty of Great Britain ſtill flatter'd himſelf with Hopes of attaching him once more to his Party: To which Purpoſe he ſent a Swiſs Colonel in the Dutch Service, named Montmollin, to offer him, among other valuable Conſiderations, the Reſtitution of his Jewels, which he had pawn'd at Amſterdam for 500,000 Crowns: But his electoral Highneſs being otherwiſe engag'd excus'd himſelf; and thereby confirm'd all that was before ſuſpected of him. The Confederates alſo, again and again, beſet his Brother, the Elector of Cologne: His Towns on the Lower Rhine were of the utmoſt Importance, and therefore, it was of equal Neceſſity, either to bring him over, or drive him to an Explanation: Accordingly, the King of Great Britain return'd to the Charge firſt, by the Interpoſition of the Lord Galloway; the Emperor next by Count Stirum; and then the King of Great Britain, at two ſeveral Repriſes more, by one of his Dutch Emiſſaries: Neither Promiſes nor Threats were ſpar'd; but neither had any Effect: What remain'd therefore, was to take all poſſible Precau-

Impoſitic Behaviour of the K. of Poland.

[Lamberty.]

tions

(f) See the Military Hiſtory of Charles XII. of Sweden, in which his forcing the Paſſage of the Dunes againſt the Saxons and Muſcovites, poſted there to defend it, and which was the great Exploit of this Year, is fully recounted.

(g) What England and Holland meant by this, was to procure a Body of Swedes to ſerve in their Pay: But Lillieroot, no doubt in order, always found ſome Pretence or other to evade any effectual Proceſs on that Head

A. D. 1701. tions against a Prince so apparently dispos'd, to make Use of the Sovereignty which he deriv'd from the Benevolence of the first Confederacy, to the Detriment of the second, tho' form'd nearly of the same Powers, and for the Sake of obtaining the same Purposes. The Methods they took were to spirit up his Chapters both of Cologne and Leige against him, the former of which made no Difficulty to admit a mix'd Body of Troops, Part belonging to the King of Prussia, Part to the Elector-Palatine, and Part to the Bishop of Munster, in order to reinforce their Garrison against him: His Electoral Highness upon this endeavour'd to seize the Town of Zons which belong'd to the said Chapter (who in return made their Appeal to the Emperor and the Pope) and also re-enforc'd the Garrisons of Nuys, Rhineberg, and Keyserwaert, with his new Levies. But finding what he had done only serv'd to render him more and more odious, he try'd to cajole, and even to corrupt the Chapter into a Compliance with his Measures: And this not obtaining, he resolv'd to lay aside the Mask at once, and to give the French Possession of his Towns. At least, it is so said, and that the Troops of France, did actually make their Advances towards the Province of Juliers accordingly: It is also said, That the States having receiv'd Advice of this Motion in a Letter from the Elector-Palatine, caus'd a Body of their Troops to enter the said Province first, by way of Precaution: Upon which the French, in Quality of Auxiliaries belonging to the Circle of Burgundy, not only took Possession of Nuys, Zons, Keyserwaert, Rhineberg, Leim, Ardingen, and the City and Citadel of Leige, (where the Dean and Chapter had been induc'd to behave, as Those of Cologne had done) but also carry'd off the said Dean in a Manner more outragious than if he had been a Prisoner of War; and in public Manifestos justify'd all, by the Exemple of the Dutch in Juliers.

The Confederates joyn the Chapter of Cologne against the Elector.

The Dutch Troops advance into Juliers.

and the French take Possession of the Towns on the Rhine.

It is farther to be remember'd, That, some Time before these critical Movements were made, his Majesty of Great Britain, in his Capacity of Stadtholder, had, in concert with the States Deputies, settled the State of the War for the ensuing Year; which State the said Deputies in a Body presented on the 4th of November to the States-General: And that upon this Occasion his Majesty thought fit to introduce it, with a short Speech to their Lordships to the following Effect, "That they would perceive, in the Reading of the said State or Estimate, That it was form'd on the Presumption of an approaching War: That it was conformable to the Resolutions taken by their Lordships from Time to Time for the Defence of the Republic: That his Majesty could not help lamenting the Necessity, which, in Time of Peace, impos'd so great a Burden on the Subject: That however it could scarce be call'd a Time of Peace, considering all Prospect of an amicable Accommodation was at an End; considering all the Measures us'd in Time of War were indispensible now; their Frontiers being surrounded with numerous Forces; their Allies being tempted to desert them, and their Commerce either invaded or render'd unprofitable: That the State was in a Manner besieg'd: That in his Opinion an actual War was preferable to a precarious Peace: That, in short, they had no Resource but in Arms, and that both their Religion and their Liberty requir'd them to act with the utmost Vigour and Resolution: That his Majesty did not doubt but they would consider the said Estimate seriously, That they would adopt it expeditiously, and that they would provide for it fully. That his Majesty was on the Point of taking his Leave of them, his Presence being requisite in England: That, however, he should not lose Sight of their Interest, by neglecting, any Thing which depended on him for its Advancement: That his Subjects were dispos'd, to enable him, at his Return, to act vigorously for the common Interest, and the Liberty of all Europe: And that his Majesty hop'd to return early in the Spring, in order to resume his Function, &c."

[Lamberty.]

His Majesty's Speech to the States in presenting the State of the War.

There is no need to recite the Answer of their high and mighty Lordships, which was as courtly as if their Stadtholder had always been a King, and they had been always us'd to take his Measures upon Content. But we must not omit, That, about this Time, Count Wratislaw having obtain'd an Audience of his Majesty, (which it seems, was become no very easy Matter) produc'd a Letter from Prince Eugene, importing, That France pour'd in such Numbers of Troops into Italy, that it would be impossible for him to winter there; and took the Hint, to press his Majesty to come to an immediate Rupture with France, urging, That a Diversion of such Consequence was not to be thrown away: That it could not be maintain'd on any other Terms: That several of the Princes and States of Germany, might in such Case be induc'd to declare for the Confederacy, who now demurr'd, merely, on Account of the present doubtful State of Things, &c. His Majesty could not, however, be induc'd to go such Lengths to gratify the Court of Vienna, till he had settled all the necessary Preparatives in England: And till then their High Mightinesses (whom the same Minister also press'd in the same Manner) were as little to be mov'd as he.

Count Wratislaw presses his Majesty and the States to declare against France.

A. D. 1701.

A great Part of this Time, his Majesty was thought to be dangerously indispos'd; and as the French had formerly disgrac'd themselves by making public Rejoicings on the false Intelligence they had receiv'd, That he was kill'd at the Passage of the Boyne; so the Spaniards upon this Occasion fell into an Indecency, which, in like Manner, serv'd to shew the high Opinion they had of his Importance: For Don B. de Quiros having feed certain Physicians to sit in Judgment on his Case; and they having given it as their Opinion, that he could not Indecent Behaviour of Spain to his Majesty on being inform'd that he was near his End.

A.D. 1701. not live above three or four Weeks, he sent a Copy of it to Spain, where it was left open on the Secretary of States Table, for all Persons to read, who had any Business to transact with that Minister.

Lamberty, however, will not allow, That his Disorder was so dangerous as it was generally apprehended to be: The King, he insinuates, was not over temperate in his Diet; and his Digestion not corresponding with his Appetite, Flatulencies, &c. were frequently the Consequence. But then he also insinuates, That his Majesty was oftener politically sick than really so. Lillieroot, and in general the Ministers of all those Powers that discover'd a Reluctance to enter into his Measures, or who had Points to urge which he was not dispos'd to comply with, he took all Advantages to exclude from an Audience: And it is added, That he hop'd, by suffering a Notion to prevail, That he was really in danger, to obtain a Settlement of the Stadtholderate of Holland in favour of the Prince de Nassau, already perpetual Stadtholder of Frizeland; not so much, perhaps, for his Sake, as that his old Enemies, the Louvestein Faction, or Dutch Whigs, might no more have a Chance to recover their former Superiority.... But of This there is little Probability: For tho' it is true, That he had such a Design at Heart, and that he did make some Advances in it, he could not be insensible, That the nearer he drew to his End, the weaker his Influence would be found, and the more sanguine the Hopes of his Opponents, to be for ever free from the like Controul for the Time to come.

His Majesty's Endeavours to settle the Stadtholderate on the Prince of Nassau, ineffectual.

And the Issue of this Intrigue, in some Sort verify'd this Manner of Reasoning: For his Majesty, being made sensible that his Endeavours would be fruitless, gave them over; saying, When he was dead, and the Importance of the Thing to the Republic was thoroughly understood, they would think better of it.

He embarks for England.

But, however this may be, his Majesty's Presence in England growing every Hour more and more indispensable, on the 14th of November, N. S. he embark'd on his Return, and landed the next Day at Margate.

At the Time of his Departure, a Treaty of Alliance, or rather (as far as Words could make it so) of indissoluble Union, between England and the States, was in great Forwardness: And the same being soon after brought to Perfection by Lord Marlborough, it is expedient to give an Abstract of it in this Place; as also to subjoin a Sketch of such other Continent-Engagements, as were the Growth of this busy Year, for the Sake of viewing the whole Ground of our foreign Affairs at once.

A perpetual Alliance between England and Holland for the Recovery and Security of Flanders.

The said Treaty, then, consisted of Fourteen Articles; together with a Preamble of some considerable Length, signifying, in substance, That the Most Christian King having made himself Master of the whole Succession of Spain, was thereby, according to the Opinion of the whole World, in a Condition to establish an universal Monarchy, and impose the Yoke thereof upon all his Neighbours, unless by an extraordinary Confederacy of other Princes and Powers prevented: That the King of Great-Britain, and the Lords the States-General, having nothing at Heart but the forming such a Confederacy, for the Sake of such a Prevention, by the Means of a safe, general, and permanent Peace, had, in order thereunto, already contracted a firm and solid Alliance with his Imperial Majesty: That, nevertheless, being persuaded that all imaginable Endeavours would be us'd to render the said Alliance ineffectual, either before or after a Peace, and in particular, either by seperating the said King from the said States, or else by putting one of them into such a Condition, as might prevent the giving any Assistance to the Other, the said contracting Parties found themselves under a Necessity to unite as firmly as possible, and to agree upon the Means of putting themselves in a Posture, of having always an Eye on the common Liberty of Europe, of being always in a Condition to protect their Commerce and provide for their Safety; and of depriving their Neighbours of all Hopes of being ever able to seperate them, and thereby render them useless to the Public; in order to which, they had given full Powers, &c. —Such, in effect, was the Preamble: And as to the Articles, the First renew'd and confirm'd the perpetual defensive Alliance between King Charles and the States of 1677-8: By the Second, all Treaties already made by the said Powers, (especially the Treaty of Ryswick) and all they should hereafter make in concert, were to be reciprocally guaranty'd by each other: By the Third, That in order to avoid all Possibility of Disputes, whatever regarded the Preservation or Defence of either Party, should be interpreted according to the Spirit of the Treaty, not the Form. The Fourth is explanatory of This: For it is therein provided, That Preparations to attack either, shall be consider'd in the same Light as a positive Attack, and lay the same Obligation on the other to arm. By the Fifth it is agreed, the last Treaty of Alliance with the Emperor, for the Recovery of the Spanish Low-Countries out of the Hands of France, shall be truly and faithfully executed: Both Parties to be Guaranties of the same; and to use their Endeavours to have it confirm'd and strengthen'd from Time to Time. In the Sixth it is first asserted, That it is not consistent with the Safety of the said Parties, That the said Low-Countries should so remane in the Hands of France; after which, they engage themselves in a special Manner to assist each other with all their Forces to accomplish the said Recovery: And not only so, but after they should be recover'd, it was always to be consider'd as a Case within the said Treaty, whenever the Most Christian King should endeavour, directly or indirectly, to lay his Hands upon them, or make Preparations to do so, or to invade, or make Preparations to invade, any of the Territories belonging to the King of Great-Britain. According to the Seventh, If the said Allies were to fall jointly into a War, they

A. D. 1701. they were to assist each other with all their Forces, as well by Sea as Land, and to act jointly or seperately, as on such Occasion should be agreed. By the Eighth, a Specification of their said Forces, was to be made also by a like seperate Agreement. By the Ninth, They were to act on all such Occasions in concert, according to the Seventh and Eighth Articles of the Treaty of 1677-8, and to enter into no Negotiation, nor agree to any Peace, Truce, or Suspension of Arms, but according to the Ninth and Tenth Articles of the said Treaty. By the Tenth, particular Attention was to be shewn to the Commerce and Safety of the Two Nations, as well in regard to the Netherlands, as the neighbouring Countries. The Eleventh, Twelfth, and Thirteenth are in these Words: To wit, The Eleventh: "As to the Sea-Affairs, they shall govern themselves, in case of a War, provisionally: And, until some other Disposition is agreed on, according to the Treaty made at Whitehall, April 29, 1689, which shall be look'd upon to that Purpose, as renew'd and inserted in this Alliance, as far as it shall be applicable to the present Constitution of Affairs; and, particularly, in relation to Prizes, the Proportion of Ships of War, the Council of War, and what else depends thereon." The Twelfth: "As to what concerns Ships retaken, the Treaty that was made between the said High Allies, October 22, 1689, shall be in force as much as if it was newly made." The Thirteenth: "This Alliance shall be perpetual, as That of the Year 1677-8 above-mention'd is; and shall be look'd upon as a Part of it, so far as it may be apply'd to future Occasions." And, lastly, the Ratifications were to be exchang'd in three Weeks from the Day of signing, which was the 11th of November.

Thus, notwithstanding the Provision made in this Treaty for the faithful and punctual Execution of the Grand-Alliance of September 7, it is observable the immediate Object of it, was, The Recovery and Security of Flanders: And it is yet farther to be observ'd, that tho' England is thereby engag'd in Perpetuity, in the same double Task of rescuing and defending Flanders, for no other Consideration than what is contain'd in the Supposition, That her own Security, as well as the Security of the United-Provinces, depended upon it, yet none of our Historians take the least Notice of a Measure so every way extraordinary.

The several Quotas to be furnish'd by the Confederates.

As to the other Particulars still remaining to be specify'd, the first regards the Quotas to be furnish'd by the several Confederates; which (for a Reason that will be explan'd in the Sequel of our History) it will be proper to give in the very Words of the Paper laid before Parliament by Mr. Secretary Vernon; to wit,

"In relation to the Quotas that are to be furnish'd by his Majesty, the Emperor and the States-General, for making good their Alliances, it was agreed, That the Emperor should furnish 90000 Men to act against France, consisting of 66000 Foot, and 24000 Horse and Dragoons; not reckoning the rest of his Troops that will remain in Hungary or other Parts of the Emperor's hereditary Dominions. The States are to furnish 102,000 Men, consisting of 82,000 Foot, and 20,000 Horse and Dragoons. The Quota promis'd for England is 40,000 Men, (consisting of 33,600 Foot, and 7200 Horse and Dragoons) which are to act in Conjunction with the Troops of the Allies."

A. D. 1701.

And, lastly, tho' the said Allies, or rather England and Holland, had other subsidiary Treaties in agitation at this Crisis, the only one which need be mention'd in this Place (because the only one that was brought to Perfection, tho' not ratify'd, before the Meeting of Parliament) is, a Treaty with the King of Prussia for two Regiments of Horse, consisting of 874 Men, and five Regiments of Foot, consisting of 4255 Men, Half to be paid by Great-Britain, and Half by the States: The said Troops to begin their March in fifteen Days after the signing of the Treaty, or sooner if possible; and to enter into Pay, the Day they enter'd into the Dominions of the States.

And a subsidiary Treaty with the K. of Prussia.

His Majesty of Prussia had stood aloof for some Time, rather with a View of being courted, and from an Apprehension of Sweden, than with any View of making a better Market with France: At length, however, he thought fit to send M. Schmettau with an Offer to his Majesty, of entering into the Grand-Alliance, as also of the said Troops, and of 20,000 more, when his Majesty of Sweden could be induc'd to explane himself satisfactorily on that Head: Notwithstanding which Advance, the Negotiation proceed so slowly, that the Treaty was not sign'd till the 30th of December.

And now it is incumbent on us to change the Scene from Holland to England, where the whole Kingdom had serv'd through the whole Summer, as a Stage for the two rival Factions to play the same detestable Parts, tho' under different Disguises. The two Houses hade made their Appeal to the People, by a Publication of their respective Proceedings: These Appeals had been taken at the Rebound, by the Advocates Venal and Volunteer, conceal'd and avow'd, which had enroll'd themselves on both Sides. Dr. Davenant, as it is said, tho' he never own'd the Piece, set forth a remarkable Half-sheet in Folio, call'd, Parliamentary Authorities, justifying the Proceedings of the Commons against the Four impeach'd Lords; submitted to the Commons in Parliament: Which was answer'd (apparently by Lord Somers himself) in a Folio-Sheet of Observations, in which he charges the Doctor, with having falsify'd and perverted every Record he has cited, and loses no Opportunity of exhibiting him to the Public, as a Profligate that was capable of asserting any Thing for the Service of his Party. Sir Humphry Mackworth publish'd A Vindication of the Rights of the Commons of England, with three several Dedications in the Front of it, to the King, Lords and Commons. A nameless Author set forth, A Vindication of the Rights and Prerogatives of the House of Lords, in Answer to him.....Besides which, the Press produc'd

Account of the Paper-War in England.

A. D. 1701.

several other general Accounts and Justifications, Apologies and Invectives; all equally enflam'd with the Violence of the Times, and visibly calculated to encrease it. Among these the celebrated Tract, call'd, Jura populi Anglicani: Or, The Subjects Right of Petitioning, deserves particular Mention, because the main Drift of it is, to weaken the Authority of the House of Commons, by maintaining, They are not the WHOLE People of England's Representatives, as also to render them as odious as possible, for presuming to commit the Kentish Petitioners, &c. which, according to him, they had not the least Right to do: As also, because of the Countenance it gave to the Legion-Letter, and the Doctrines it contain'd. And de Foe, or Foe, (for it seems he set out with the last of those Names) had the Modesty to address a Performance of his to the King, under the following Title, The original Power of the collective Body of the People of England examin'd and asserted: At the Entrance of which he tells his Majesty, "'Tis not the least of the Extraordinaries of your Majesty's Character, That as you are King of your People, so you are the Peoples King." And having, in the general, maintain'd, That this original Power was the Origin of all Powers; as also, That, notwithstanding all the Powers they voluntarily cede to King, Lords and Commons, they have still a Reserve in their own Hands, which they may and ought to make use of, as a Preservative against any Encroachment from any of their Delegates, he proceeds to inculcate, That parliamentary Power may be abus'd as well as Kingly: And infers, That, in such Case, People have a Right to seek their own Redress their own Way.....The same Author also practis'd on the Passions of the Public in more Shapes than one, as will presently be made appear.

But these Paper-Batteries were not rais'd merely to maintain speculative Points, or to defend or explode the Measures of either Side: On the contrary, as the Dispute grew warm it grew personal too, and that to a Degree of Asperity and Scurrility, never practis'd before. In the Jura populi Anglicani, almost every Man of Eminence in the House of Commons, who had been active against the Impeach'd Lords, or who had demurr'd to an immediate War, were expos'd by Name, or by Initials, which was nearly the same Thing, with as little Mercy as Jack How had been expos'd in the Legion-Letter: Nor were their Adversaries at all backward in making suitable Reprisals: So that if the Evidence on each Side was admitted against the other, it would follow, That there was not a spotless Character of any Significancy left in the whole Country.

Knowing, however, That unless they could write their Adversaries out of the House of Commons, the Blackening of them there would signify but little; the Whigs resolv'd to manage, if possible, the Popularity they had so wonderfully and causlessly recover'd, that it might produce a Dissolution, how premature and how inconsistent with the King's Speech at the Prorogation, soever.

Following, therefore, the Way [illegible] had open'd by the Kentish Petition, they took Advantage of the enflammatory Humour which the Court of France had [illegible] them with, by acknowledging the [illegible] of Wales to inspire the People, with the same turbulent Spirit which had [illegible] the former Case infatuated the County [illegible] which, if the Train had took, was to have been communicated thro' the whole Kingdom: For tho' they had recourse to Addresses instead of Petitions, and it was thought more advisable to struggle for a Parliament, than to carry on the Contest with That in being, they worked on the same Model, and they had the same Purposes to serve.

Addresses from all Parts of England.

The City of London, which led the Way, contented themselves, however, with declaring their Resentment of the Affront offer'd to his Majesty by the French King, and with asserting, it was the apparent Purpose of the said King to destroy his Majesty, extirpate the Protestant Religion, &c. And as soon as the other Party became sensible of the Practice on foot, they not only set forth a Recital of, The several Proceedings and Resolutions of the House of Commons in relation to the Dangers threatning England and the Liberties of Europe, from the late Succession to the Crown of Spain, in order to blast the Intrigue, but also added a remarkable Postcript in the following Words.

" Since these Sheets were prepar'd for the Press, three Addresses from the Grand Juries at the late Assizes have been printed, full of the like Insinuations as the Kentish Petition, and besides are prescribing to the King, and bespeaking a Dissolution of the Parliament: These are farther Efforts of a restless and malicious Party of Men, who are busy, and calling about always to restore themselves and their Friends to that Power and Authority which they have for several Years exercis'd most partially, corruptly, and arbitrarily, almost to the utter Ruin and Destruction of this Nation; by procuring to themselves vast and exorbitant Grants of Monies, Lands and Pensions; by unpotentable and expensive Projects; by diverting and misapplying public Monies, and, as a necessary Consequence from such Practices, by contracting immense Debts, which the most regular, wise, and virtuous Administration cannot soon clear. This is the Case, whatever popular Turn they give it; and such weak, seditious Endeavours must have their due (that is, little) Weight, with all that consider what Artifices have been used for compassing them, by packing Juries, (and they not unanimous), and by a Multitude of Falsehoods and Calumnies that have been rais'd, and with the utmost Confidence and Assurance spread abroad, and reported to mislead and deceive honest and well-meaning Persons: And yet, after all, such is the good Sense of our Gentry and Freeholders, they are not easily to be impos'd on, and therefore these Men have not been able, by all their Artifices and Emissaries, to obtain more than these (Three) Addresses from the Fifty-two Counties of England and Wales, and

A. D. 1701. and them too not without the greateſt Difficulty, as well as Diſingenuity."

The Whigs, on the other Hand, having diſcover'd in the ſame Interval, That Pouſſin, the French Secretary, had been ſeen at a Tavern in Company with Dr. Davenant, Mr. Hammond, and Mr. Tredenham, took the Hint to (b) brand the whole Tory-Party with the Name of Pouſſineers, and to propagate a ſcandalous Inſinuation, That the Buſineſs of the Evening, was to ſettle a criminal Correſpondence between the French Court and its Factors in the Engliſh Parliament, which laid thoſe Gentlemen under a Neceſſity to juſtify themſelves in print, by proving, That the Meeting was merely accidental: That they were together but three Quarters of an Hour, and that the Doors were open all the while. So low will Faction ſtoop, for any dirty Card to forward its Game.

The Addreſſes, however, went on with ſo much Zeal and Rapidity, that every Gazette overflow'd with them; tho' ſuch as were moſt cool and moderate, were but juſt acknowledg'd, to make Room for the inſerting Others at large: For as the Rage of addreſſing had ſeiz'd the Nation, both Parties were at laſt oblig'd to give into it: And yet there being an apparent Difference both in the Matter and Manner of them, it furniſh'd the Handle for preferring ſome and rejecting others.

To particulariſe the Flatteries, Follies, Abſurdities and Extravagances contain'd in them, would be a Work without End..... But it ought not to be forgot, That while France was ſo outragiouſly treated for the impolitic Step ſhe had made in relation to the P. P. of Wales, Vox, the Legion-Letter-Writer, ſet forth a plauſible Pamphlet, under the Title of, The preſent State of Jacobitiſm conſider'd, in Two Queries: 1. What Meaſures the French King will take with reſpect to the Perſon and Title of the P. P. of Wales? 2. What the Jacobites in England ought to do on the ſame Account? And contains, according to the Words of the Preface, a kind Invitation to the Jacobites to come into the Boſom and Protection of the Government: But under an Inſinuation, That in caſe of Refuſal, the (i) Nation would be blameleſs, if a Law ſhould ever be promoted, to exclude them abſolutely from either the Benefit or Protection, of the Government. The Aim of this Proteus of an Author, is to convince the ſaid Jacobites, That their Condition is not at all mended, by the Conduct of the French Court in that Caſe: That the Obligation of their Oath to King James, expir'd with him; and that, therefore, Prudence requir'd, and Conſcience did notwithſtand, an immediate Tranſfer of their Allegiance to King William. But the moſt remarkable Sally which he makes in his Way, is the following notable Apology for the French Court; to wit: "If we muſt argue from French Conduct, we muſt bring French Arguments: 'Tis a ſmall Shift for a Frenchman to ſay, That they diſtinguiſh between a King-Regent and a King-Titular: That the Title, having been once legally the late King James's, may as legally deſcend, as the Title of a Duke, tho' another may be poſſeſs'd of his Eſtate: And this may be no Bar to his Confederate King William, who is King-Regent: That this is a Conceſſion of Honour to the Son of a King, who cannot loſe the Title, tho' he may the Poſſeſſion: That 'tis not his Part to conſider King William's Title, any farther than the Peace of Ryſwick requir'd: But for King James's Title, 'twas not expected nor articled in that Treaty, That he ſhould not be call'd King of England: And it can no more be a Breach of the Peace to call his Son King of England, than it was to call his Father ſo: And, beſides, all this is but the Civility of a Court, and Matter of Honour to Families which no way concerns nor ought to diſturb the Engliſh Court: For while the Article of ſending Aſſiſtance is kept intire, this Trifle need give no Ground of Diſſatisfaction to any Body." A. D. 1701.

But to procede: While the Kingdom ſeem'd to reel with the Violence of theſe Party Convulſions, the Point ſo vehemently preſs'd by the Whigs without Doors, (namely, a Diſſolution of the Parliament) was agitated with equal Warmth in the Cabinet.—B. Burnet ſays, It was the firſt Thing that fell under Debate on the King's Return: And in the ſame Breath he alſo intimates, That ſome of the leading Members of the Houſe of Commons were ſecretly aſk'd (another Expreſſion for Cloſetting it muſt be ſuppos'd) How They thought They would proceed, if They ſhould meet again? Whence we are to infer, That if they would have comply'd with the Court-Terms, the King would have comply'd with the Letter of his Speech at the Cloſe of the laſt Seſſion, and ſuffer'd them to ſit again: But ſome anſwering doubtfully, according to the ſame Author, and others poſitively, That they would begin where they left off, (why, by the Way, is abſolutely deny'd in the (k) Writings of the Party) a Diſſolution was reſolv'd on, and the Parliament was diſſolv'd accordingly, by the ſame Proclamation of November 11, which declar'd, That Writs would be iſſued for the Meeting of another on the 30th of December following: No better Reaſons for this ſudden Turn being therein aſſign'd than the following, "That his Majeſty's loving Subjects having univerſally expreſs'd their Reſentments of the Injuſtice and Indignity offer'd to him and his People by the late Proceedings of the French King, in taking upon him to own and declare the pretended Prince of Wales to be King of England; and alſo their Affection to his Perſon and Government, to his great Satisfaction, his Majeſty, with the Advice The Parliament diſſolv'd.

(b) In a Paper which came to be call'd, The Black Liſt. It contain'd 167 Names of Members, 46 of whom loſt their Elections: It was obſerv'd, one of the Whig Lords was preſent in the ſame Houſe at the ſame Time: And it is alledged, That the Order for M. Pouſſin to leave the King's m. was ſerv'd upon him in that very Company.

(i) The Jacobites ſet forth an Anſwer to this Piece, under the ſame Title, with the Addition of theſe Words, Part the Second; in which they take great Advantage of this Paſſage, as if the Author, notwithſtanding the ſoft Language he makes uſe of, deſign'd to practiſe the ſame Rigors in England, by Law, which were practiſ'd in France, by Deſpotiſm.

(k) See a Pamphlet call'd, Tom Double returned out of the Country, (writ by Dunton, P. 57, 58.)

A. D 1701. Advice of his Privy-Council, had thought it reasonable, at this extraordinary Juncture, to give his Subjects the Opportunity of chusing such Persons to represent them in Parliament, as they might judge most likely to bring to effect their just and pious Purposes."

Remarks on that Measure

And thus a Measure of the same Kind with that of the Year before, which the Lords in a solemn Address had declar'd to be a fatal one, and to the Account of which they made no Difficulty to ascribe all the Dangers which threaten'd this Kingdom in particular, and Europe in general, was now to be esteem'd wise, seasonable, and salutary; tho' a Rupture was apparently at Hand; tho' it seem'd reasonable to think, that the same House of Commons, which had advis'd his Majesty to make Alliances, had, in a Manner bound themselves to make them good; and tho' it was reasonable to fear, that to abrupt a Dismission, would rather stimulate our national Animosities than help to compose them.

Our Historian-Bishop, however, takes Leave to say, "This convinc'd the Nation, That the King was not in a double Game, which had been confidently given out before, and was too easily believ'd by many." Now what double Game his Lordship particularly refers to, cannot be easily ascertain'd. His Majesty, when formerly baited by the Whigs, to employ none but them and their Creatures, and when admonish'd, to give it the softest Name, by the Duke of Devonshire in the Name of the Party, That a contrary Conduct might possibly bring back King James, had reply'd with more Warmth than was natural to him, That if King James was to be brought back, they might depend upon it, he should not be brought back by them: And whether, by way of Precaution against such indirect Menaces as these, he had ever trimm'd between the two Families, who is sufficiently authoris'd to say? But, if we recollect the Language he made use of in his Message to the last House of Commons, in his Answers to their Addresses, and in the Speech, more than once already referr'd to, we shall find it extremely hard to satisfy ourselves, That with respect to them, He did not play a double Game.

The same Author also says, "The new Ministers struggled hard against a Dissolution:" Which, no doubt, is true: And it is altogether as true, That the Friends of the Impeach'd Lords struggled as hard for it; urging, as we are told by another of our Writers, That the present Parliament would neither do its Business, or the Nations. But whether the King shew'd a great Reluctance to follow their Advice, because of the Intimations he had given in his Speech to the contrary, as the same Writer farther suggests, remains to be prov'd: For he subjoins in a Foot-Note, That, according to a Whisper which in those Times prevail'd, the Dissolution was purchas'd in Holland of the King's Favourite, to whom a considerable Sum was given as the Price of it: And the Partizans of the Tories also assert, That the Whigs carry'd their Point by their Emissaries in Holland: Besides which, we have Manuscript-Authority, importing, That the Earl of Carlisle, who attended the King to Holland, in quality of Gentleman of the Bed-Chamber, was the Chief of those Emissaries. And it was notorious, that nobody was more active than he, in spiriting up the People to clamour for a Dissolution: So that in either of these Cases it would follow, That the Resolution was taken before the Point was debated in Council; and, consequently, That if the King did make a Show of Reluctance, it was Show only.

[Life of King William, Vol. III. p. 303.]

The Nation put into a greater Ferment than ever.

But, whatever the true Secret of the Measure was, nothing could equal the Ferment it occasion'd: If the two Parties were incens'd against each other before, they became outragious now: According to the Whig, there was not a Man among the Tories that was not a Traitor both to the King and the Constitution: According to the Tory, there was not a Whig in Office who had not play'd the Vultur in it, and fatten'd on the very Vitals of his Country.

Every Press, both in Town and Country, was engross'd by one Side or the Other; and not only every County and every City, but almost every Corporation had its peculiar Libels and Counter-Libels; besides such as being of a more general Nature, were calculated for a general Use.

To give Abstracts of all of them, is a Task not to be thought of with Patience: But unless some Exemples are given, it will be impossible for such temperate Times as Ours, to have any tolerable Idea of the Rage and Fury of Thete.

Remarkable Influence of Party-Abuse.

The Sheet of Paper, call'd, A plain Proof, That all the Tories are Jacobites, has been already mention'd, as what was either an Original of (l) B. Burnet's, or what he thought worthy to copy into his History. In this Paper, the Tories are charg'd, with having been instrumental, in the late Reign, in all the villanous Designs then on foot for promoting Popery and Slavery at Home, and for depressing of Holland and exalting France Abroad: And in This, with having manifested notorious Disaffection to the Government, created the public Debts, and encreas'd the public Difficulties, by granting Aids on deficient Funds, such as the Land-Bank, &c. by opposing the Abdication and Recognition, refusing to sign the Association, opposing the Recoinage, endeavouring to save that notorious Traitor Fenwick, &c. This makes the first general Article against them. In the next they are charg'd with relinquishing their old Principles, and playing the Commonwealthsmen, only to ingra-

(l) It may not be improper on this Occasion to recollect, that this same Prelate writing to Sir William Dutton Colt, February 22, (1689-90) makes use of the following Expressions, "We have nothing amongst us now but Elections, which put the Nation into a high Fermentation: And it is not possible yet to know which Side will prevail: Those who are call'd the Tories, do now declare very high for the present Government; and have lent Money very considerably: So that it seems rather to be an Animosity of Parties among themselves, than any Thing in which the Government is concern'd: And the King's own Behaviour is so very equal, that it appears, He reckons himself sure of both Hands: For as he neither directly nor indirectly recommended any, so all that he says to those who ask his Directions in that Matter is, That he would have the moderate Men of the Church Party chosen." From the Bishop's original Letter under his own Hand.

A.D. 1701. tiate themſelves with the People; or to facilitate their own wicked Deſigns. Thus their Trial Act was only to ſecure Impunity to themſelves; their Place-Bills were only to throw their Adverſaries out of the Houſe of Commons; their Triennial, (which it is moreover ſaid, they would repeal the next Day, if the Power was in their Hands) was only to get rid of a Parliament which was not for their Turn, and which they could get rid of no other way: Falling then on Perſons, it procedes to affirm, That Party-Zeal paſs'd with them for Righteouſneſs: So that the Man in their Intereſt might cheat the Public as much as (l) Rocheſter, be as deep in the Partition-Treaty as Jerſey and Vernon, and yet be ſafe.

Paſſing ſoon after to their carrying the Power of the Houſe of Commons above its due Bounds in the late Seſſion, by impriſoning the Kentiſh Petitioners, &c. it is ſaid, "Such Proceedings were ſo far from being a real Service to the Commons, that it was a moſt effectual Way to make the People out of Love with Parliaments: Since nothing was more to be dreaded, than a popular Aſſembly taking upon itſelf an executive as well as a legiſlative Power, by puniſhing whom they pleaſe, and for what they pleaſe." The treating the Succeſſion-Bill with Contempt and Ridicule, by placing Sir John Bolles in the Committee-Chair, and conſtantly running out of the Houſe as ſoon as he had taken his Seat in it, makes another Article. The next, which regarded the Conduct of the laſt Seſſion with regard to foreign Affairs, ſet forth in the moſt ample and circumſtantial Manner, That the ſaid Jacobite-Tories, by their Prevalence in the Miniſtry and the Parliament, England had acted in ſuch a Manner, as had exceeded the Hopes of France: That the Penſioner-Parliament, tho' brib'd by their own as well as the French King, had never gone ſuch Lengths in his Service. The next Tranſition was, to the great Quantity of French Louis d'Ors, more than to be accounted for in the Way of Trade: And at the Tail of that Section, a particular Caveat was enter'd againſt the Members found with M. Pouſſin, when he was order'd to depart the Kingdom, if they ſhould be ſo impudent as to ſtand, or any Place could be found ſo infamous as to chuſe them.

The Conduct of Portugal and other States, in embracing the Party of the two Crowns, was in the next Place put to their Account. The Inactivity of our Fleet on the Coaſt of Spain, made another Item, which was moreover enflam'd with an Account of imaginary Feats which might have been perform'd, and Succeſſes which might have been obtain'd, in caſe we had fallen on the Enemy before we had any Pretence for ſo doing: Laſtly, to produce one of the ſtrongeſt Inſtances of Party-Diſingenuity that can be given, this Section is cloſ'd in the following Words: "And all of a Piece with This, was the firſt promiſing in the Spring great Encouragement to the Seamen to come on board; and then turning great Numbers on Shore, without allowing them any Money to carry them home: Could the adviſing this have been fix'd on the former Miniſtry, our Patriots would not have been ſo ſilent." And the But of all is, That all thoſe States which were for maintaining the Liberties of Europe, rejoic'd, that his Majeſty had given his People an Opportunity, by diſſolving his laſt Parliament, of chuſing ſuch Perſons as might bring to effect thoſe juſt and pious Purpoſes mention'd in their Addreſſes." A.D. 1701.

This is in ſubſtance the general Charge of the Whigs againſt the Tories; and we ſhall find the Tories were not at all backward to make ſuitable Reprifals upon the Whigs. —But in the Queries and Counter-Queries with which both Parties pelted each other from Day to Day, ſome particular Bolts were ſhot, which, on the Account of ſubſequent Tranſactions, deſerve a particular Mention. Thus in a Whigiſh Paper, call'd, Queries which may deſerve Conſideration, it is aſk'd, "Whether it be not obvious, that the E. of M. (Marlborough that is to ſay) may have a more decent Excuſe for delivering up his preſent Maſter, than the L. C. (Churchill) for betraying his old Maſter? And whether it be impoſſible, that the ſame Man ſhould take a Fancy to play the ſame Trick twice?" As alſo, "Whether my Lord Sly (for Godolphin) has not acted a very open Part of late? And whether he would have ſo far pluck'd off the Maſk, if his Expectations were not very near, as well as very ſure?" The Tories, on the other Hand, aſk'd in their Turn, "Whether if Lord Marlborough had led the Army in King James's Defence againſt the Prince of Orange, Lord Somers or Mr. Montagu could have defeated it? Whether the Party who brought in the Bills againſt Sir Charles Duncomb, and to erect a new Eaſt-India Company, did not give as high Inſtances of invading Property, as any we can find in the French or Turkiſh Government? Whether it was not happy for Knight and Burton, that they had in the Treaſury a Partner in their falſe Endorſements; and whether the Hiſtory of Exchequer-Bills were not fitter for a Pillory than a Patent? Whether the Houſe of Commons were more to blame who did not expel Sir John Thomſon when he was convicted of drinking King James's Health, and daily taken down for reviling King William, or thoſe who made him Commiſſioner of the Admiralty and Lord Haverſham, when he had no Pretence to either? Whether any Member who would accept of a Place under the late Adminiſtration, if he would come to their Terms, was ever diſappointed? Whether Sir John Bolles was not as fit to ſit in the Chair of the Committee for the Succeſſion-Bill, as the Lord Spencer to propoſe who ſhould be the next Succeſſor? Whether

(l) That Lord had been alſo moſt virulently abus'd in another Folio Sheet, under the following ironical Title: "The true Patriot vindicated; or a Juſtification of his Excellency the E. of Rocheſter, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland."

A. D. 1701. Whether a Houſe of Commons, compos'd of Gentlemen of Quality and Eſtates, guided by their Duty to their Country only, were to be prefer'd to a Band of Court-Slaves and Penſioners, under the abſolute Conduct of ſuch a Leader as Montagu? Whether they were not more dangerous Enemies to Liberty, who ſo often ſuſpended the Habeas Corpus-Bill, than thoſe who committed a few bribed and corrupted Electors? Whether it was not propos'd to the Kentiſh Petitioners, That in caſe they would declare, they were ſorry they had offended the Houſe, they might be immediately diſcharg'd, without the uſual Ceremony of Kneeling, and whether they did not reject the ſame with Scorn and Contempt to the Houſe? To what End have the Houſe of Commons a Power to raiſe Money for the Service of the Nation, if they have not alſo a Power to call thoſe to an Account who cheat the Nation? Who are moſt likely to be brib'd with French Louis d'Ors, They who thought it moſt prudent and ſafe to have treated with the Emperor, in order to have reſtrain'd the Pretenſions of France, or they who thought fit to treat with France to leſſen the Dominions of the Houſe of Auſtria? Why the ſame Perſons who contriv'd the Partition Treaty, and thereby enter'd into ſuch an intimate Friendſhip with France, did, at the very ſame Time, preſs hard for a great ſtanding Army in England, for fear of an Invaſion from that dear Friend, the ſaid King of France? Whether a Declaration of Performance of that Treaty, which oblig'd England, upon the firſt Aſſault made upon the Dutch, to furniſh them with 10,000 Men and twenty Ships; and if an honourable and ſafe Peace were not obtain'd in two Months after, then to aſſiſt the Dutch with all their Strength, were not in effect a Declaration of War, as ſoon as the Dutch were inſulted by the French? Whether there were any other Difference between a Declaration of Performance of that Treaty, and an actual Declaration of War, but only this, that in one Caſe England would engage as an Aſſiſtant, and in the other as Principal in the War? Whether then was moſt for the Intereſt of England, to engage as Principal, and bear almoſt all the Charges of the War (as they did in the laſt, which coſt above ſixty Millions) or to engage as Aſſiſtant upon the Foot of the ſaid Treaty, and bear their Proportion of Charge with the Emperor and the Dutch? Whether it does not now appear, That by the Prudence and Conduct of the Parliament, the Dutch have gain'd Time to put themſelves in a Poſture of Defence, and thereby been ſav'd from ſudden Deſtruction? And whether many Millions of Effects, belonging to the Engliſh and Dutch Merchants, have not been preſerv'd from Seizure: And conſequently, many honeſt Families from utter Ruin and Deſolation? Whether the King was not the beſt Judge of the Time of declaring War? And if a ſpeedy Declaration thereof had been neceſſary at the beginning of the Seſſions, or ſafe for England, in any other Manner than was done, whether his Majeſty would not have been graciouſly pleas'd to have ſignified his Pleaſure to the Houſe in That, as well as in other Matters relating thereunto? Whether the Houſe of Commons did not readily comply with his Majeſty in every Thing? And whether his Majeſty has not frequently acknowledg'd the ſame, and declar'd his Satisfaction with all their Proceedings? Who are moſt likely to be Jacobites, They who ſettle the Succeſſion of the Crown in the next Proteſtant Line, and lay aſide the late King James and his Iſſue, or they who openly curſe them for ſo doing? Whether thoſe who publickly own it to be a grateful Taſk to run down the Power of the Houſe of Commons, do not alſo think it a grateful Talk to preface the Way for arbitrary Government in a future Reign? Whether it will not be an eternal Scandal and Reproach to the Engliſh Nation, That a Houſe of Commons which has done ſo many great Things for England in one Seſſion, ſhould be horribly abus'd and traduc'd by a Set of branded Criminals, and they go off unpuniſh'd? Whether our Confederacies and Alliances abroad are more like to be maintain'd by a Parliament, who deſir'd them to be made, and promis'd to ſupport them, or by a Parliament deſperately provok'd, as far as their own Safety will admit, to diſpute and diſlike them? Whether the Money borrow'd, in order to thoſe Alliances, upon the Aſſurance of that Parliament, without any farther Security, is more like to be repaid by thoſe who are engag'd to do it, or thoſe who are at Liberty to refuſe it? Whether the Diſputes betwixt the two Houſes were more like to be reviv'd by Men who had ſome Time to cool and conſider calmly the Proceedings of the laſt Seſſions, or by Men who are juſtly exaſperated at the unexpected Charge and Trouble of going down into the Country, and will probably come up with an Animoſity, occaſion'd by new Elections? Whether thoſe who prevail'd with the King to diſſolve this Parliament, did it becauſe they were doubtful the Parliament wou'd not ſerve the King and Kingdom as they ought to do, or becauſe they were certain they would? If a Man at a Chocolate-Houſe, who had a ſure Game in his Hand, ſhou'd be adviſ'd to ſhuffle the Cards, and deal again, what ought he to think of the Adviſers?

Theſe, out of a Thouſand, will ſerve to ſhew where the Streſs of the Controverſy was principally laid: But Davenant's Pamphlet call'd, The true Picture of a Modern Whig, ſet forth in a Dialogue between Mr. Whiglove and Mr. Double, two under Spur-Leathers to the late Miniſtry, was the Sheet-Anchor of the Party, and met with a Reception ſuitable to the extraordinary Matter it contain'd, and the lively Manner in which it was treated: For in the Courſe of the Dialogue, Variety of ſecret Ulcers are open'd, or pretended to be open'd, with as much Art as Malevolence, and

A.D. 1701. and no Artifice is left unpractis'd either to recommend the Tories to the Public, as worthy of their higheſt Confidence, or to expoſe the Whigs as the moſt abandon'd Plunderers and Betrayers of the Commonwealth, that ever had the Commonwealth in their keeping. "Under our Miniſtry, (ſays Double, P. 34) all the Officers that handled the King's Buſineſs or Revenue, liv'd in Clover: Every little Scoundrel got an Eſtate——In ſhort, all Men cheated to what Degree they pleas'd, which was wink'd at, in hopes to make and ſecure a Party." And again afterwards, P. 52, ſpeaking of the Bill of Accounts. "If the Bill had paſs'd moſt of the principal Whigs had been utterly ruin'd: Such groſs Cheats, Extortions, Frauds, Briberies and Corruptions would have been diſcover'd, and laid open, as would have expos'd our Party to the univerſal Contempt and Hatred of the Nation, &c." As alſo, P. 34, to blaſt their moral as well as their political Characters. "There are ſtill lifted with us Whig-Pickpockets, Whig-Gameſters, Whig-Murderers, Whig-Outlaws, Whig-Libertines, Whig-Atheiſts; ſuch as in former Reigns have had ſome Note of Infamy, public or private, fix'd upon them, &c." In order alſo to take off the Prejudice which had been artfully excited againſt the Tories, in relation to a Rupture with France, the ſame Double is made to acknowledge as follows. "For, put the Caſe now, That the Intentions of thoſe who govern at preſent be, to make War with the French, unleſs they remove their Troops out of all the Spaniſh Dominions whatſoever, and give the Dutch a ſufficient and ſafe Barrier, and unleſs they give the Emperor reaſonable Satisfaction, and ſuch a Part of the Spaniſh Succeſſion, as may make the Houſe of Auſtria more a Balance to the French Power; If that be the Scheme, let me tell you, the Country Gentlemen will unanimouſly come into it." And laſtly, in P. 35, ſtill in the ſame Character, he pronounces thoſe pretended Neuters, the (m) flying Squadron to be as arrant Rogues as themſelves; as longing only to play the ſame Game; as being equally clamorous againſt the late Houſe of Commons, and active to procure Hands to Petitions for the Diſſolution.

Such were in general the Lines and Features of this extraordinary Piece; and if it ſhould be urg'd, That both were grievouſly aggravated and diſtorted, no Outrage of that Side could be produc'd, which was not equall'd by ſome ſimilar Outrage on the other.

Thus the Proclamation was no ſooner out, than it was follow'd by a new Paper in the Name of Legion, addreſs'd to the Gentlemen of the late Houſe of Commons, A.D. 1701. in which, after a Courſe of Extravagancies, and (n) Inſolencies not to be parallell'd, the Author comes to the following Period.

"We are unanimouſly of Opinion, That the whole Nation ought to keep a Day of Rejoicing and ſolemn Thankſgiving to God, who has put it into the Heart of his Majeſty once more to ſave this Nation from Deſtruction, by diveſting you of that Power which you ſo viſibly exacted to the Ruin of your Country. That his Majeſty has liſten'd to the Voice of Things as well as to the Voice of his People; and having a diſcerning Judgment, has timely diſcover'd your wicked Deſigns, and timely prevented the Confuſion your Procedings would have brought upon us. That his Majeſty has once more put it into the Hearts of the Engliſh Freeholders to chuſe again, That they may, if poſſible, find honeſt Gentlemen enough in this degenerated Nation, who will ſtand up for Religion, and hold the Balance of the State with that Equality between every Branch of the Conſtitution, as that neither may oppreſs the other, &c.—If we are ſtill ſo infatuated and blind as not to ſet a Mark of Infamy on every Man of you: If ſome enſuing Parliament does not diſfranchiſe you as Engliſhmen, and make you for ever incapable of being choſen, or of ſitting in the Houſe; as Traitors in an Army are made incapable to ſerve; If every Borough, City, or Corporation be not depriv'd of its Privilege of chuſing, that ſhall ever ſend up one of you again; If every County be not doubly tax'd that ſhall chuſe any of you to repreſent them again, Then we deſerve to be betray'd to the End of the Chapter; and England will fall unpity'd by all the Nations of the World."

Remarks thereon.

To ſuch an incredible Pitch of Licentiouſneſs had the Rage of Party riſen: So daring and deſperate a Spirit had it kindled! And the Effects were ſuitable: All was Animoſity, Uproar, Rancour and Outrage: Order, Peace, and even Humanity itſelf ſeem'd to be driven out of the Country, and Anarchy ready to take Poſſeſſion.

Nor were theſe external Agitations and Convulſions, the moſt alarming of thoſe national Evils, which had for ſome Time ſpread like a Contagion over the Kingdom: The Wealth, the Power, and the Influence which Numbers of new Men had acquir'd by their Hold of the Government, had excited the Envy, the Ambition, and the Avarice of Others: The Neceſſity of annual Seſſions had diſcover'd the Importance of a Seat in Parliament: Thoſe who had not a natural Intereſt in the Soil, had therefore Recourſe to Bribery. And, in Proportion, as the Trade of a Parliament-Man, as the it

---

(m) And yet we ſhall find the ſaid Squadron, at the Beginning of the next Reign, not only giving a very different Account of them elves; but arrogating a large Share of Merit, for having been on almoſt every ſignal Occaſion the Auxiliaries of the Tories.

(n) Among which it may not be amiſs to remember that which follows. "The Paper does not come intog, as before, but you may ſee it at the Corner of every Street, every Bookſeller can tell it to you; every Engliſhman has it in his Hand, and your humble Servant the Author is to be ſpoken with at his Houſe as conſtantly as a Quack-Doctor, from Eight to Twelve in the Morning, and from Two till Nine at Night."

A.D. 1701. it came to be call'd, became more and more gainful, the Number of Adventurers increas'd. Hence Votes, Boroughs, and Corporations became Staple-Commodities, which were carry'd to Market, and there fold, by their ſeveral Factors, to the higheſt Bidder; at firſt cautiouſly and timidly, but by Degrees, openly and ſhamelefly: Inſomuch that Men of Sagacity and Foreſight ſaw, with Horror, the Approaches of a Time, when the Proviſions of our Anceſtors to render the Conſtitution immortal, would, in all Likelihood, prove its Bane: And a more affecting Repreſentation of the Change which had already taken Place, can ſcarce be given, than that which we are furniſh'd with in the Character of Double, already cited, as follows. "And truly tho' I miſs'd my Election; 'twas to me an infinite Conſolation to behold how the People were corrupted. I was known to be a Pickpocket, a Gameſter, a Fellow of no Sort of Principles: My Electors knew, I had been concern'd with the Clippers, when I was a Receiver of the Taxes; that I was grown rich out of the public Ruins; that my Deſign of coming into the Houſe was only to have an Opportunity of ſelling my Country: All which was made apparent to them; and yet I, an utter Stranger, came within two Votes of throwing out a Gentleman of an unblemiſh'd Reputation, a great Eſtate, and whoſe Anceſtors have maintain'd an honourable Poſt in the Country for upwards of 400 Years. Does not this give a moſt lovely Proſpect? Does not this ſhew, that we have made a Breach upon the Honeſty of the Middle Rank of Men? And that the Infection (begun higher) has ſpread itſelf into all the ſmaller Veins of the Body politic? I own it is to me an unſpeakable Comfort to obſerve ſuch a general Decay of Manners and Virtue in the vulgar Sort; it forebodes that Diſorder in public Affairs, which muſt make Room for ſuch as I am. 'Tis impoſſible to grow very rich in a virtuous Country; and you ſee our Party has increas'd in Wealth, in Proportion to our having corrupted the Morals of the People——If we can but have as good Succeſs in debauching the Freeholders, as we have had in corrupting ſmall Boroughs, the Game is our own."

Succeſs of the Elections.

As to the Succeſs of the Electors at London, Weſtminſter and the Borough of Southwark, it was ſo entirely in favour of the Whigs, that their Rivals were both (o) diſtanc'd and diſgrac'd: And agreeable to the Choice they had made, were the Inſtructions they gave their Members; which, in general, tended to enflame the People againſt France, to aſperſe the late Houſe of Commons, to diſculpate the impeach'd Lords, and to encourage an implicite Confidence in, and a thorough Compliance with, the Demands of the Government. The Tories, on the other hand, to ward this Blow, gave out, That the money'd Intereſt which had been form'd by the public Loans, having their Head-Quarters in the Capital, had form'd an Intereſt there, which was not only diſtinct from but irreconcileable to, that of the Kingdom: That it was not to be wonder'd they were for diſſipating on one hand, and mortgaging on the other, becauſe every new Loan (p) produc'd a new Intereſt to them: That if their Sentiments were to be follow'd, the preſent Debt would be increas'd to thirty or forty Millions, in which Caſe the ſaid money'd Intereſt would become an over-Balance for the Land: And, by Conſequence, that the Nation could never do worſe for itſelf, than in following the Meaſures they ſhould think fit to preſcribe.

A.D. 170

The Whigs, however, did not fail to make the moſt of this Advantage, and every other: Thus their throwing Hammond out of Cambridge, by ſetting up the great Philoſopher Newton againſt him; their excluding Davenant, Shower, &c. and above all their throwing Hoo out of Glouceſterſhire, furniſh'd them with ſo many ſeveral Triumphs: But then the other Party aſſerted, That they carry'd thoſe, and all the Points they did carry, by the Dint of Slander and Libels; no leſs than five Portmanteaus full, each of a different Sort, againſt the laſt of thoſe Gentlemen, having been diſtributed to every Freeholder in the County; and the whole cloathing Intereſt having been ſpirited up againſt him, by Suggeſtions to the following Effect, to wit, "That England, and particularly the Woollen Manufacture would be ruin'd if he was choſen."

Upon the Return, each of the two Parties affected to be confident, the Majority was on their Side: And ſo much was it apprehended, that, in the preſent enflam'd Diſpoſition of both, the Conteſt for a Speaker might occaſion ſome dangerous Fray, That on the 30th of December, being the Day of Meeting, the Deputy Earl-Marſhal (Carliſle) put forth an Order, forbidding all Footmen in the Service of the Nobility and Gentry, to wear any Sword, Hanger, Bayonet, or other ſuch like offenſive Weapon, during their Reſidence in the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, or the Liberties and Precincts of the ſame; many Miſchiefs, it being alledg'd and dangerous Accidents tending not only to the higheſt Breach of the Earl Marſhal's Order that Footmen ſhould not wear Swords.

(o) The contrary of which is ſuggeſted by B. Burnet, and copy'd from him by Mr. Tindal (not indeed by Name, but as an eminent Author, for fear his Authority ſhould conclude too much, in theſe remarkable Words. "Moſt of the great Counties and the chief Cities choſe Men that were zealous for the King and Government; but the richer Part of the Conſtitution, the ſmall Boroughs were in many Places wrought on to chuſe bad Men".

(p) What perhaps might contribute to this, was the Treaty of Union, during this Interval, carrying on between the two Eaſt-India Companies by Lord Godolphin and Mr. Hartley for the old; and Lord Halifax and Mr. Lowndes for the new: Which was completed four Days before the Opening the Seſſion, tho' it did not operate in Form, ſo as to conſtitute a Joint Company, till ſome Years afterwards.

A. D. 1701. the Peace, but also to the Destruction of the Lives of his Majesty's Subjects, having happen'd by their wearing such Weapons.

Struggle for a Speaker. And now That which was esteem'd the decisive Day being come, and his Majesty having order'd the Commons to procede to the Choice of a Speaker, according to Form, never was the House known to be so full on the like Occasion; and never was it so equally divided: Lord Spencer nominated Sir Thomas Littleton, and the Earl of Dysert Mr. Harley; the Former was seconded by John Smith, Esq; and the Latter by Henry St. John, Esq; Both were floridly recommended, and no doubt at each others Expence: Order is at best but ill observ'd in popular Assemblies, and where Heat and Passion are predominant, as they were in This, it was scarce possible to prevent Confusion: Both Parties at last appeal'd to the Question; and the Clerk dividing the House, it appear'd that the Yeas for Sir Thomas Littleton were 212, and the Noes 216; so that the Number of Members present were (q) 428; and the Majority for Mr. Harley four.

Mr. Hutsey chosen.

It is allow'd by All the King inclin'd to Littleton, whom he had last Year set aside; and it is asserted by some, That his Majesty closetted Sir George Rook, Sir Charles Hedges, and Others of the Tories in his Service, in order to induce them, if possible, to throw their Votes and Interest into the same Scale; in which Case, it is clear, the Majority would have been in Littleton's Favour.

[Boyer, Vol. III. p. 594.]

That a Breach should be the Result of these Counter-Proceedings, was not only natural but unavoidable: B. Burnet intimates, That some of the new Ministers left the Service, as soon as the King had resolv'd on the Dissolution: But the Truth is, That no Alterations were made till after the Meeting of the Parliament, when the Earl of Manchester was made Secretary of State, in the Room of Sir Charles Hedges; and the Earl of Carlisle was put at the Head of the Treasury in the Room of Lord Godolphin; soon after which the Earl of Pembroke was made Lord-high Admiral, and the Duke of Somerset, as a Whig, was made Lord-President.

Alterations in the Cabinet.

[Coke.]

There is an Author who also says, the King express'd a Desire to set Lord Somers at the Head of his Affairs, and that his Lordship hesitating, for fear of a new Relapse in favour of the Tories, his Majesty answer'd, Never! Never! Never!

But whether this particular Circumstance is true or not, the Facts already mention'd are sufficient to shew, that he had once more plac'd his Confidence in the Whigs: And whoever reflects on the State of his Majesty's Health at this Time, and the known Prejudices of the Princess against that Party, must conclude, either that he had something farther in view, or that He and They had taken their Measures by halves.

A. D. 1701.

Rumours concerning a Design to exclude the Princess of Denmark.

In the second Dialogue of Davenant's, between Whigbee and Double, P. 89, are the following remarkable Passages.

"Whigbee. I find we have miscarried in one great Design; the Train would not take; we were very hot upon it just before the Parliament met, all the Whig-Coffee-Houses rung how necessary it was to break into the Acts of Settlement, and to exclude.—— Double. Mum, Whigbee, talk no more upon that Subject, I beseech you; fresh Orders are issu'd out, and since we are not strong enough to make it go, and that on the contrary, it has alarm'd and provok'd all Sorts of Men, we are now directed to say, that never any such Thing was intended by our Party, tho', God knows, it was the whole Discourse of all our Clubs. Under the Rose, this was one of those Embrios that prov'd abortive upon the 30th of December last; but tho' it be not seasonable to stir in it now, never fear our abandoning a wicked Design, we never quite lay aside any Mischief."

And what is here and elsewhere surmis'd to the same Effect, B. Burnet endeavours to explode as follows, "The Tories pretended great Zeal for her (the Princess) and gave it out, That there was a Design to set her aside, and to have the House of Hanover to succede the King immediately; tho' it could never be made appear, That any Motion of this Kind had ever been either made or debated, even in private Discourse, by any of the whole Whig Party; great Endeavours were made, and not altogether without Effect to infuse this Jealousy into the Princess, and into all about her, not without Insinuations, That the King himself was inclin'd to it".

Whether Davenant or Burnet, the Party Historian, or the Party-Pamphleteer deserves most Credit, it is yet too soon to decide: The same Topic will again recur: We shall find one Party acting, as if too many Precautions could not be taken against every Opening possible to be made by any Hand or Means whatsoever, in favour of the P. Prince of Wales; and the Other as if the Succession of the Princess could not be too many Ways secur'd: And the Author of this Work has been assur'd by a Gentleman of Understanding and Integrity, That he, the said, Gentleman had seen and read a Letter under B. Burnet's own Hand, not over consistent with the Quotation before taken from his History.

But to procede, the Speaker having been presented to the Throne, and receiv'd the customary Sanction, his Majesty was pleas'd to open the Session with the following Speech to both

(q) According to Kennet, Oldmixon, and Tindal, the Majority for Mr. Harley was 14: And according to the Copy of the Journals, which tho' the Favour of a certain noble Earl, lye open before me, 104. But as it is manifest from the whole Course of the Session, that the two Parties very nearly balanc'd each other, I have chose to impute this last extravagant Difference to the Error of the Transcriber, who has set down 212 for 312, and to follow Boyer, who gives the same Account as that above.

A.D. 1701. both Houſes, which it has been the Faſhion to admire and extol, not only as a Maſterpiece of Royal Eloquence, but alſo as a Summary of all that was worthy the Regard of an Engliſh King or an Engliſh Parliament; to wit.

King's Speech. "My Lords and Gentlemen,

I promiſe myſelf you are met together full of the juſt Senſe of the common Danger of Europe, and that Reſentment of the late Proceding of the French King, which has been ſo fully and univerſally expreſs'd in the loyal and ſeaſonable Addreſſes of my People.

The owning and ſetting up the pretended Prince of Wales for King of England, is not only the higheſt Indignity offer'd to me and the whole Nation, but does ſo nearly concern every Man, who has a Regard for the Proteſtant Religion, or the preſent and future Quiet and Happineſs of your Country, that I need not preſs you to lay it ſeriouſly to Heart, and to conſider what farther effectual Means may be us'd for ſecuring the Succeſſion of the Crown in the Proteſtant Line, and extinguiſhing the Hopes of ALL Pretenders, and their open or ſecret Abettors.

By the French King's placing his Grandſon on the Throne of Spain, he is in a Condition to oppreſs the reſt of Europe, unleſs ſpeedy and effectual Meaſures be taken: Under this Pretence, he is become the real Maſter of the whole Spaniſh Monarchy; he has made it to be entirely depending on France, and diſpoſes of it as of his own Dominions, and by that Means he has ſurrounded his Neighbours in ſuch a Manner, that tho' the Name of Peace may be ſaid to continue, yet they are put to the Expence and Inconveniencies of War.

This muſt affect England in the neareſt and moſt ſenſible Manner, in reſpect to our Trade, which will ſoon become precarious in all the valuable Branches of it; in reſpect to our Peace and Safety at Home, which we cannot hope ſhould long continue; and in reſpect to that Part which England ought to take in the Preſervation of the Liberty of Europe.

In order to obviate the general Calamity with which the reſt of Chriſtendom is threatned by this exorbitant Power of France, I have concluded ſeveral Alliances, according to the Encouragement given me by both Houſes of Parliament; which I will direct ſhall be laid before you, and which I do not doubt you will enable me to make good.

There are ſome other Treaties ſtill depending, that ſhall be likewiſe communicated to you as ſoon as they are perfected.

It is fit I ſhould tell you, The Eyes of all Europe are upon this Parliament; all Matters are at a Stand till your Reſolutions are known, and therefore no Time ought to be loſt.

You have yet an Opportunity, by God's Bleſſing, to ſecure to you and your Poſterity the quiet Enjoyment of your Religion and Liberties, if you are not wanting to yourſelves, but will exert the ancient Vigor of the Engliſh Nation: But I tell you plainly my Opinion is, If you do not lay hold on this Occaſion, you have no Reaſon to hope for another. A.D. 1701.

In order to do your Part, it will be neceſſary to have a great Strength at Sea, and to provide for the Security of our Ships in Harbour; and alſo, that there be ſuch a Force at Land, as is expected, in proportion to the Forces of our Allies.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

I do recommend theſe Matters to you with that Concern and Earneſtneſs, which their Importance requires: At the ſame Time I cannot but preſs you to take Care of the public Credit, which cannot be preſerv'd, but by keeping ſacred that Maxim, That they ſhall never be Loſers, who truſt to a parliamentary Security.

It is always with Regret when I do aſk Aids of my People; but you will obſerve, that I deſire nothing which relates to any perſonal Expence of mine: I am only preſſing you to do all you can for your own Safety and Honour, at ſo critical and dangerous a Time; and am willing that what is given, ſhall be wholly appropriated to the Purpoſes for which it is intended,

And ſince I am ſpeaking on this Head, I think it proper to put you in Mind, That, during the late War, I order'd the Accounts to be laid yearly before the Parliament, and alſo gave my Aſſent to ſeveral Bills for taking the public Accounts, that my Subjects might have Satisfaction how the Money given for the War was apply'd: And I am willing that Matter may be put in any farther way of Examination, that it may appear, whether there were any Miſapplications and Miſmanagements; or whether the Debt that remains upon us, has really ariſen from the Shortneſs of the Supplies, or the Deficiency of the Funds.

I have already told you how neceſſary Diſpatch will be for carrying on that great public Buſineſs, whereon our Safety and all that is valuable to us depends: I hope, what Time can be ſpar'd, will be employ'd about thoſe other very deſirable Things, which I have ſo often recommended from the Throne; I mean, the forming ſome good Bills for employing the Poor, for encouraging Trade, and the farther ſuppreſſing of Vice.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I hope you are come together, determin'd to avoid all Manner of Diſputes and Differences, and reſolv'd to act with a general and hearty Concurrence, for promoting the common Cauſe; which alone can make this a happy Seſſion.

I ſhould think it as great a Bleſſing as could befal England, if I could obſerve you as much inclin'd to lay aſide thoſe unhappy fatal Animoſities, which divide and weaken you, as I am diſpos'd to make all my Subjects ſafe and eaſy, as to any, even the higheſt, Offences committed againſt me.

Let me conjure you to diſappoint the only Hopes of our Enemies, by your Unanimity: I have ſhewn, and will always ſhew, how deſirous I am to be the common Father of all my People: Do you, in like Manner, lay

A. D. 1701. lay aſide Parties and Diviſions: Let there be no other Diſtinction heard of among us for the future, but of thoſe, who are for the Proteſtant Religion and the preſent Eſtabliſhment, and of thoſe who mean a Popiſh Prince and a French Government.

I will only add this, If you do, in good Earneſt, deſire to ſee England hold the Balance of Europe, and to be, indeed, at the Head of the Proteſtant Intereſt, it will appear by your right improving the preſent Opportunity."

In acknowledging this Speech, the Lords diſcover'd a Forwardneſs, which in thoſe Times was not very uſual: For they waited upon his Majeſty the very next Day, being the firſt of the New Year, with an Addreſs, in which, having premis'd, That the ſeveral Particulars recommended to them by his Majeſty were of the higheſt Importance, and they would loſe no Time in proceding to the Conſideration of them, they expreſs themſelves as follows.

Lords Addreſs. 1701-2.

"We cannot defer expreſſing our juſt Reſentments of the Proceedings of the French King, in owning and ſetting up the pretended Prince of Wales for King of England, and other your Majeſty's Realms and Dominions; which we take to be the higheſt Indignity that can be offer'd to your ſacred Majeſty and this Kingdom: And we do aſſure your Majeſty, we are ſo ſenſible thereof, that we are reſolv'd to aſſiſt your Majeſty to the utmoſt of our Power, in defending your ſacred Perſon and Government from all Attempts whatſoever, that ſhall be made either from your open or ſecret Enemies. AND that no Enemies to our Religion and Country may ever hope to proſper in their Attempts againſt us, when, to our great Unhappineſs, it ſhall pleaſe God to deprive us of your Majeſty's Protection, we do further declare our Reſolution to aſſiſt and defend, to the utmoſt of our Power, againſt the pretended Prince of Wales, and all other Pretenders whatſoever, every Perſon and Perſons who have Right to ſucceed to the Crown of theſe Realms by Virtue of two Acts of Parliament, entitled, &c."

To which his Majeſty was pleas'd to Anſwer.

King's Anſwer.

"My Lords,

I heartily thank you for your very ſeaſonable Addreſs, and for all your kind Expreſſions of Duty to me in it: I recommend to you to take into your ſpeedy Conſideration the other Matters mention'd in my Speech, and doubt not but that your Reſolutions will be for the Honour and Safety of the Kingdom."

The next Day the Commons alſo took the Speech into Conſideration, and, upon the Iſſue, came to two Reſolutions, which, tho' carry'd in like Manner Nemine Contradicente, were nevertheleſs the Reſult of two ſeveral Motions, and had their Riſe from the two ſeveral Parties; as will be diſtinguiſhable enough in the Addreſs which was founded upon them: And, both by the Committee nominated to draw it up, (at the Head of which Sir Charles Hedges was plac'd) and by ſome particular Expreſſions inſerted therein, due Care was taken to appriſe his Majeſty, That the Tories whom he had rejected, were ſtill (r) uppermoſt: Notwithſtanding which, the ſaid Addreſs, when reported, was agreed to Nemine Contradicente, as the two Reſolutions had been before; to wit. A. D. 1701-2.

The Commons Addreſs.

"Moſt gracious Sovereign,

We your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Commons of England in Parliament aſſembled, do return our moſt humble and hearty Thanks to your Majeſty for your moſt gracious Speech from the Throne; and humbly crave Leave to aſſure your Majeſty, That this Houſe will ſupport and defend your Majeſty's lawful and rightful Title to the Crown of theſe Realms, againſt the pretended Prince of Wales, and all his open and ſecret Abettors and Adherents, and all other your Majeſty's Enemies whatſoever: And we will enable your Majeſty to ſhew your juſt Reſentment of the Affront and Indignity offer'd to your Majeſty and this Nation by the French King, in taking upon him to declare the pretended Prince of Wales King of England, Scotland and Ireland: And we are firmly and unanimouſly reſolv'd to maintain and ſupport the Succeſſion to the Imperial Crown of this Realm, and the Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging, in the Proteſtant Line, as the ſame is ſettled by an Act declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, and ſettling the Succeſſion of the Crown, and farther provided for by an Act of the laſt Parliament, entitled, An Act for the farther Limitation of the Crown, and better ſecuring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject. AND, for the better effecting the ſame, we will, to the utmoſt of our Power, enable your Majeſty to make good all theſe Alliances your Majeſty has made, or ſhall make, purſuant to the Addreſſes and Advice of your moſt dutiful and loyal Commons of the LAST PARLIAMENT, for the preſerving the Liberties of Europe, and reducing the exorbitant Power of France."

The ſaid Addreſs was preſented on the 5th by the whole Houſe, and his Majeſty's Anſwer was as follows.

King's Anſwer.

"Gentlemen,

I give you my hearty Thanks for this Addreſs, which I look upon as a good Omen for the Seſſion: The Unanimity with which it paſs'd, adds greatly to the Satisfaction I receive from it: So good a Step at your firſt Entrance upon Buſineſs, cannot but raiſe the Hopes of all who wiſh well to England, and to the Common Cauſe: I can deſire no more of you, than to procede as you have begun; and I depend upon it: For when I conſider how cheatfully and univerſally you concurr'd in this Addreſs, I cannot doubt but (r) And This was farther confirm'd by the Choice of a Chairman for the general Committee, which was carry'd by the Tories in favour of Mr. Conyers.

A D. 1701-2. but every one of you will sincerely endeavour to make it effectual, in all the Parts of it."

A Second Address of the Lords.

Their Lordships also, (not to be out-done by the Commons in Professions and Assurances, or in reminding the King of past Services) in this Interval, resum'd the Consideration of these other Matters which they would not give themselves Time to consider before, and made them the Subject of another Address: In which having express'd their Hopes, that the great Work of reducing the exorbitant Power of France, and maintaining the Balance of Europe, was reserv'd for his Majesty, &c. they procede as follows.

"And we esteem it a farther good Fortune, in this Time of public Danger, That the French King has taken those Measures, which will make it impossible for him to impose any more upon the World, by Treaties so often violated: Neither can we hope any longer to cover his ambitious Designs, or justify his Usurpations, under the specious Pretences of PEACE.

Your Majesty hath so justly represented the Danger to which Europe is expos'd, by the French King's placing his Grandson on the Throne of Spain; your Majesty is so justly sensible, that, under that Pretence, he is become absolute Master of the whole Spanish Monarchy; and we are all so well appris'd of the dangerous Consequence of this bold Attempt, that we think it most proper to assure your Majesty in your own Words, That we are under the highest Impatience, that speedy and effectual Measures may be taken against the undoubted Ambition of the French King.

And as the placing his Grandson upon the Throne of Spain is visibly to the whole World, the Cause of all those Dangers mention'd in your Majesty's Speech, and of the Breach of the Balance of Power in Europe, which the People of England are so deeply engag'd to preserve; so we humbly conceive the Remedy is as apparent as the Disease; and that your Majesty, your Subjects and Allies, can never be safe and secure, till the House of Austria be restor'd to their RIGHTS, and the Invader of the Spanish Monarchy brought to Reason.

To conclude, Sir, as we humbly address'd to your Majesty LAST PARLIAMENT, to enter into Alliances with the Emperor, the States of Holland, and all other Princes and States, willing to unite against the Power of France; so we take the Liberty at this Time to assure you, we are all willing and zealous to lay hold of this Opportunity, which the Blessing of God, and your Majesty's Care, have put into our Hands; resolving to make our utmost Efforts for our own Security, and the Support of our Allies; desiring of your Majesty to rest assur'd, That no Time shall be lost, nor any Thing wanting on our Part, which may answer the reasonable Expectation of our Friends Abroad; not doubting but to support the Reputation of the English Name, when engag'd under so great a Prince, in the glorious Cause of maintaining the Liberty of Europe." A D. 1701-2.

King's Answer.

But tho' their Lordships were thus forward to arrogate the largest Share of the parliamentary Merit of last Session to themselves, the King, in his Answer, did not countenance those Pretensions: But, on the contrary, went a Step out of his Way to humour the House of Commons, tho' he did not mention them, by saying, "I hope your joint Endeavours will be successful for restoring the Balance of Europe, and establishing our common Security."

The two Parties vie with each other in forwarding the Purposes recommended in the Speech.

Thus both Houses, and both Parties, by the King's Management and the Disposition of the Times, were led to vie with each other in their Endeavours to facilitate the several Ends propos'd in his Majesty's Speech, tho' they had seperate Views, and their Resentments against each other were at the Bottom as fierce as ever.

Thus also the Vote of the Commons for the Supply was Nemine Contradicente; and the first Step taken upon it, was to authorise the Exchequer to borrow 600,000*l.* at 6 per Cent. for the Service of the Fleet, and 50,000*l.* for the Subsistance of the Guards and Garisons.

States, Estimates, and Accounts of all Sorts they call'd for next; and instead of raising any Objections to the several Treaties laid before them, they resolv'd unanimously, January 10, "That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, that he would be graciously pleas'd to take Care, that it be an Article in the several Treaties of Alliance with his Majesty and other Potentates, That no Peace should be made with France, until his Majesty and the Nation have Reparation for the great Indignity offer'd by the French King, in owning and declaring the pretended Prince of Wales King of England, &c."

They also allow'd all the extravagant Demands of the Court of Denmark, on Account of Arrears, Levy-Money, Waggon-Money, and Contingencies of all Sorts for the Danish Troops in the English Pay; which Demands were laid specifically before them: Nor does it appear that they made any Objections to the several Sums paid to Sweden, by way of Commutation for the Succours which his Swedish Majesty had demanded of the Maritime-Powers: And, what farther demonstrated their Readiness to comply with all that could be reasonably demanded of them, tho' the subsidiary Treaty with the King of Prussia, nor another with the Landgrave of Hesse for 3014 Men, had not been communicated to them, they nevertheless adopted both these Measures as well as the Former, and made Provision for defraying the Expence of them.

Besides; having agreed to the Quota of 40,000 Men, (that is to say, 33,000 Foot, and 7000 Horse) which England was to furnish, the Mercenaries already hir'd amounting but to 21,672, and it being propos'd to make up the Residue, by hiring 10,000 more, and adding 8328 of his Majesty's natural-

A. D. 1701-2. natural-born Subjects to the 10,000 already sent to the Assistance of the States, they also agreed to the Method thus propos'd by the Pay-Master (Lord Ranelagh) of making it up.

Frugal Measures of the House of Commons.

But then, having gone thus far in Compliance with his Majesty, in all the rest of the Way they consider'd nothing but Frugality, for the Sake of the Subject: On which Considerations, they provided, That of the 18,328 natural-born Subjects, 15,000 should be Foot: That every Regiment of Foot should consist of thirteen Companies, and every Company of sixty private Men, including Servants: That every Troop of light Horse should consist of fifty-seven private Men, including Servants: That every Troop of Dragoons should consist of fifty-five private Men, Servants exclusive: That the Levy-Money for Dragoons to be recruited, should be 12*l.* a Man and Horse, exclusive of Servants: That Levy-Money for the Horse should be 20*l.* for a Man and Horse, exclusive of Servants: That 3*l.* a Man Levy-Money should be allow'd for the Foot: And that 700,000*l.* should be granted to his Majesty, for defraying the Charge of the said 40,000 Men till the 25th of December 1702, which was 264,919*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.* short of what was demanded by the Pay-Master's Estimate.

Address in favour of Half-pay Officers.

As Matter of Reason as well as of Oeconomy, they also apply'd by Address to his Majesty, That he would be graciously pleas'd to provide for the Officers upon Half-pay in the first Place, in the Recruits and Levies then to be made: As also, that their Commissions might be made out without any Fees or Charges to them: To both which Applications his Majesty was pleas'd to give favorable Answers.

That they might also be competent Judges of the Half-pay List, they call'd for an Account of the 41,000*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.* provided by Parliament for that Service; and had the Satisfaction to find, That the Difference between the Issue and the Grants, was but Five Pounds.

They also granted 350,000*l.* for the Maintenance of Guards and Garisons, including 5000 Men to serve on board the Fleet: And having voted 40,000 Seamen as well as 40,000 Landmen, they address'd his Majesty, "to interpose with his Allies, that they might increase their Quotas of Land-Forces to be put on board the Fleet, in proportion to the Number his Majesty should have on board his Fleet."

In providing for the Ordnance, it ought to be remember'd to their Honour, that they call'd for the most minute and circumstantial Estimates which could be fram'd of every Article, and the Expence of every Article, arising in that Province: And according to the said Estimates, the Expence of a Train of Artillery of Thirty-four Pieces of Ordnance, amounted to 34,886*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.*: A Years Pay for Officers of all Sorts, two Companies of Gunners, a Company of Pioneers, a Company of Pontoon Men, &c. &c. 10,630*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* Horses for the said Train, Ammunition and Waggons, 16,000*l.* 0*s.* 0*d.* In all, 61,436*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.* To which adding 28,273*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.* for the ordinary Charge of the Ordnance, the Total amounted to 89,710*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*—But, whether the said Estimates were reasonable or not, the House, it seems, could be brought to adopt none but the last: All the rest they contracted most unmercifully: On the first Head they granted but 13,000*l.* on the Second but 3000*l.* on the Third but 12,000*l.* and they threw in 1000*l.* for Contingencies: So that the Total granted, including the Ordinary, was but 57,273*l.* 12*s.* 9*d.*

Ordnance Estimates.

A. D. 1701-2.

Resolving, also, to inspect the State and Condition of the Navy, they call'd for a List of the Ships it was compos'd of, under the following Heads: Rates and Number: In present Pay: In condition to be refitted and put to Sea, or at Sea: Under Repair: Wanting much Repair or to be rebuilt, and where station'd: By which it appear'd, That the said Navy then consisted of Seven First Rates, Fourteen Second Rates, Forty-seven Third, (Twenty-four of which were in pay) Sixty-two Fourth, (Fifty-four in pay) Thirty Fifth, (Twenty-two in pay) Fifteen Sixth, (Fourteen in pay) Eleven Fire-ships, Thirteen Bombs, Fourteen Yachts, and Fifty-eight small Vessels.

List of the Navy Royal.

Ordinary of the Navy, &c.

By the Papers presented to the House at the same Time, the Ordinary of the Navy was stated at 129,314*l.* 10*s.* 3*d.* The extraordinary Repairs of Ships, Docks, Buildings, &c. 163,686*l.* And the Navy-Debt at 1,264,722*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.* ½.

Ways and Means.

Proceeding to Ways and Means, they resolv'd, That 4*s.* in the Pound should be laid on all Lands, Annuities, Pensions, and Stipends; as also on the Profits arising to all Persons of any Profession, from their said Profession; as Professors of Common and Civil Law, Doctors, Surgeons, Teachers of seperate Congregations, Brokers, Factors, &c. Also Two and a Half per Cent. on all Stock in Trade and Money at Interest; and 5*s.* in the Pound on all Salaries, Fees and Perquisites: That every Person, not receiving Alms, or exempted because of their Poverty from Parish-Dues, or being under Age, or Servants, or Day-Labourers, should pay 4*s.* in one Year to his Majesty: That 1 per Cent. should be laid on all Shares in the Capital Stock of any Corporation or Company, which should be bought, sold, or bargain'd for: As also, That a Duty of 6*d.* per Bushel should be laid on Malt, and that a farther Duty should be laid on Mum, Syder, and Perry: All which several Duties were to be continued till the 24th of June, 1703.

And, agreable to these Resolutions, which were the Result of various Debates and Discussions, a Land-Tax-Bill, and a Malt-Bill, were order'd to be prepar'd and presented.

Bill to the Land Tax and the Army Accounts rejected.

Nor was the House unattentive to that Part of his Majesty's Speech, which regarded the Reasonableness of satisfying the Public how the public Money was apply'd, and of enquiring whether the Debt was the Effect of Mismanagement, or the Deficiency of the

A.D. 1701-2. Funds: On the one Hand, they call'd for an Account of the ſaid Deficiencies, which amounted to 2,579,295*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* ¼. And they reſolv'd Proviſion ſhould be made for making good the Principal and Intereſt due on all parliamentary Funds, granted ſince his Majeſty came to the Throne: On the other, they firſt proceeded to revive the Act for appointing Commiſſioners to take, examine, and determine the Debts due to the Army, Navy, and for Tranſport-Service; as alſo an Account of Prizes, and for making the Debentures touching the Iriſh Forfeitures: And afterwards they order'd in another Bill for taking the public (or general) Accounts of the Kingdom.

It is to be obſerv'd, however, That the Former of theſe Bills ſeems to have had its firſt Riſe from an Information given to the Houſe, That Parkhurſt and Paſchal having perfected their Account, according to the Scheme given them by the late Commiſſioners, except in ſome few Particulars, which they were prepar'd to explane, deſir'd Leave to lay the ſame before the Houſe, or otherwiſe to diſpoſe of them, as the Houſe ſhould think fit: For the Houſe having, hereupon, order'd, That the ſaid Commiſſioners ſhould lay their Accounts before the Houſe, the ſaid Order was immediately follow'd by another, for bringing in the ſaid Bill; and the ſaid Accounts were finally referr'd to the Commiſſioners appointed thereby, which were the ſame that had acted in the ſame Commiſſion before.

It is alſo to be obſerv'd, 1ſt, That the ſaid Bill had a ſmooth Paſſage thro' both Houſes, the Lords agreeing to it without Amendments; and the King coming purpoſely to the Houſe, March 10, to give it the Royal Aſſent.

And receives the Royal Aſſent.

And, 2dly, of the Latter Account-Bill, That upon the Reſolution of the Houſe, That it ſhould be committed to a Committee of the whole Houſe, the following Order was made; to wit: "That it be an Inſtruction to the ſaid Committee, That they have Power to receive a Clauſe, to oblige the ſeveral Accountants to make up their Accounts."

With the like laudable Vigilance in Behalf of the Public, they moreover call'd for an Account of the Receivers in Arrear, and under Proſecution in the Exchequer, together with the Names of their Securities, (which Arrears amounted to 80,383*l.* 13*s.* 5*d.* ½) An Account of the Supers upon Collectors, and the Deficiencies in the ſeveral Counties: And, laſtly, an Account of the Debts due from ſeveral Receivers and Collectors of the Cuſtoms: By which it appear'd, That in the Port of London, the Debt in Bonds was 1,080,897*l.* 5*s.* and in Money, 9110*l.* 16*s.* 1*d.* ¼. In the Out Ports, Bonds, 172,073*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.* ½. Money, 12,074*l.* 16*s.* 0*d.* ¼. (excluſive of ſeveral Sums omitted, becauſe the Abſtracts of December and January had not been ſent up): And eight ſeveral Collectors which had been diſplac'd, were, over and above all this, under Proſecution, for ſeveral Sums, amounting in the whole to 14,998*l.* 9*s.* 11*d.* ½. A.D. 1701-2.

Yet farther to their Honour it ought to be remember'd, That they order'd, as the laſt Parliament had alſo done, the Surveyor-General to lay before them, an Account of the Lands belonging to the Crown, both in Poſſeſſion and Reverſion, undiſpos'd of; and afterwards made Proviſion to prevent the farther Alienation of the ſame: That they call'd upon the Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms for an Account of the groſs and net Product of the Cuſtoms for the Year 1700: As alſo of the Money actually paid in to the Exchequer, which in the ſaid Year amounted to 1,637,809*l.* 13*s.* 0*d.* And upon the Commiſſioners of Trade, for an Account of their Proceedings for the Improvement of Trade: So that every public Office being thus publicly call'd on every Year, found itſelf oblig'd to obſerve ſome ſort of Diſcipline, and uſe ſome of thoſe Precautions, which in more remiſs or proffligate Times, are ſuffer'd to fall into total Diſuſe, equally to the Diſgrace of Government and Detriment of the Commonwealth.

Product of the Cuſtoms.

Public Offices kept in Awe by parliamentary Enquiries.

Nor is it unworthy of Remembrance, That the ſaid Commiſſioners of Trade, under the Topic of Trade in general, (for in theſe Times few Topics were overlook'd) refer the Houſe to their Report of January 13, 1698, in which they gave it as their Opinion, That we were Loſers by our Trade with Sweden and the Baltick, about 200,000*l. per Annum.* and by That to Denmark and Norway, about 150,000*l. per Annum.* As alſo, That we had, for ſeveral Years, exported to the Eaſt-Indies above 400,000*l.* in Bullion, beſides what was carry'd out privately or ſhipp'd from Spain, which ſeveral Trades had occaſion'd the Exportation and Decreaſe of our Silver Coin: After which they procede to ſay, That they have ſince been confirm'd in that Opinion, by the Imports and Exports, an Abſtract of which for 1698 and 1699, they annex'd; and by which it appear'd, That the Loſs to England on the Swediſh, Daniſh, and Eaſt-Country-Trade in that Interval, was 563,992*l.* And that the Exportations to Eaſt-India during the laſt of thoſe Years, was 155,235*l.* in Goods, in Silver at 5*s. per* Ounce, 841,881*l.* and in Gold at 4*l. per* Ounce, 29,224*l.* Whereas the Importations from thence in Goods, had amounted to Report of the Board of Trade.

(s) Several Clauſes offer'd in the Progreſs of it were, nevertheleſs, rejected; and among them one, To ſtate the Account of the Arrears of the Dutch Forces in the Engliſh Pay, and to iſſue Debentures in order to the Satisfaction of the ſame: And in the ſame Hour the following Clauſe was agreed to, viz. "That the Commiſſioners ſhould, in the firſt Place, ſtate and determine the Accounts of the Regiments, Troops, and Companies, under the Command of his Majeſty's natural-born Subjects: and alſo, what is due to them for Tranſport-Service, (a Clauſe in favour of the Dutch Tranſports had been receiv'd before) and on Account of Prizes."

Another Clauſe was alſo agreed to and inſerted in the Bill, to oblige Whitaker to account to the ſaid Commiſſioners: And yet another to oblige Vanderaſt, Pay-Maſter of the Dutch Forces in Engliſh Pay, to do the ſame.

(t) Which, at this Time, were the Earl of Stamford, Mr. Blathwait, Mr. Prior, Mr. Meadows, and Mr. Pelleſon.

A.D. 1701-2. to 717,695*l.* To which they ſubjoin'd, That the ſaid Eaſt-Country, Daniſh and Swediſh Trades being chiefly conducted in foreign Bottoms, the Freight, in many Inſtances, amounted to almoſt as much as the Goods: And that as the Exportation of Bullion for India had increas'd on one Hand, ſo the increaſing Conſumption of Wine (no leſs than 21,568 Tons having been imported between Chriſtmas 1698, and Chriſtmas 1699) had in a ſuitable Degree diminiſh'd the Importation of Bullion on the Other.

Proceedings with regard to the Iriſh Forfeitures.

But what the Commons, or rather the Tory Part of them, had principally in View, as one of the great Expedients, to cancel Debts, and replace Deficiencies, was the Iriſh Forfeitures: And yet thoſe Forfeitures had been ſo much over-rated; ſo many real Difficulties had aroſe in the Execution of the Act relating to them; ſo violent and yet ſo artful an Oppoſition had been made to it; ſo many conſiderable Perſons were intereſted in this Oppoſition; ſo repugnant the whole Proceſs was known to be, to the Humour of the Court, and ſo much Offence the imperious if not injurious Behaviour of the Truſtees had given, and ſo much Matter of Clamour to their Adverſaries, that it was become a very dubious Point, whether it would anſwer, in any conſiderable Degree, the Purpoſes of the Undertakers.

So early as January the 7th, the Houſe had order'd two of the ſaid Truſtees to attend them, with a Rent-Roll of all the Forfeitures, and Accounts of every other Particular which ſeem'd neceſſary for the Information of the Houſe: And upon the 3d of February following, Mr. Anneſley and Mr. Hooper, two of the ſaid Truſtees, gave their Attendance accordingly; bringing with them the ſaid Rent-Roll, together with an Abſtract of the ſame: A State of the Incumbrances reported, and not reported: An Eſtimate of ſuch Incumbrances as were not as yet determin'd: A Book of Receipts and Diſburſements, diſtinguiſhing Perſonal Eſtates from Real: An Account of the eſtabliſh'd Charge of the Truſt; and of the extraordinary Charge attending it from the Beginning to the 31ſt of December: A Table of Fees: A Liſt of Houſes forfeited in Dublin, with a Plan of each as to be exhibited for Sale: A Charge upon ſeveral Grantees ſo far as the Incumbrances had been ſtated: A Survey of the private Eſtate, (of the late K. James) with the Number of Acres, Value per Acre, and yearly Value, if to be ſet for a Number of Years: And a Liſt of Perſons outlaw'd in the County-Palatine of Tipperary.

The prompt Obedience ſhewn by the Truſtees to this Order, it is to be ſuſpected was not ſo much the Effect of Zeal for the Service of the Houſe, as to prevent the Purpoſes of their Enemies, who were altogether as active not only in ſpiriting up Clamours, and forming Combinations, but alſo in promoting an Appeal to one or both Houſes of Parliament againſt them: When, therefore, they came firſt before the Houſe, (where they were ſure of being properly countenanc'd by their Friends) they took care to prepoſſeſs the Majority in their own Favour, by complaining of indirect Practices, to defeat the Ends of their Commiſſion; mentioning, in particular, a circular Letter, and the Draught of an Addreſs which accompany'd it, as Proofs, That they did not complain without Cauſe. The Houſe then calling for thoſe Proofs, Both were produc'd and read: And Both are ſo much the more worthy of Inſertion here, becauſe this remarkable Vein has ſcarce been open'd by any Hiſtorian before. A.D. 1701-2.

Copy of a Circular Letter to ſpirit up the Grand Jury of Ireland againſt the Act.

"Gentlemen, Dublin the 23d of December, 1701. 'Tis the Opinion of our Friends in England, who have an Opportunity to make the beſt Judgment of Things, That if the King be rightly apply'd to, it may be in his Majeſty's Power to procure us a Relaxation of the Grievances which the Act of Reſumption has brought upon us: They, therefore, have taken Care to meet frequently to conſult of proper Methods, and have imparted their Thoughts to us: We have follow'd their Advice, and have made it our Buſineſs to have the Senſe of the Nobility and Gentry here concerning the ſame Affair: The Reſult of all the Conſultations both there and here, and our unanimous Opinion is, That the beſt, and, indeed, only way is, for all the Counties in this Kingdom to preſent our Grievances, and implore his Majeſty's Favour and Aſſiſtance. The Parchment that is incloſ'd, is the Tenor of all the Addreſſes that we have ſent to other Places: That which we entreat from you and our good Friends of your County (as we have from worthy Gentlemen and true Lovers of their Country in all the Counties of Ireland) is, That you will, with all your Intereſt, recommend this Addreſs at your next Quarter-Seſſion: The eaſieſt and moſt conciſe Method will be, to have it read publicly, and ſign'd by the Juſtices of the Peace, Grand-Jury, Clergy, Gentlemen and Freeholders of your County: When it is ſent up hither, (which pray do with all imaginable Expedition) due Care will be taken to have it ſent and preſented to his Majeſty by acceptable Hands. The Service you will do your Country, and the Obligations you will lay on the Proteſtants of this Kingdom, will be ſo great, that it will be needleſs to ſay by way of Incitement to you, that your Care in this Affair, will greatly oblige your affectionate Friends, &c."

It was ſign'd by four Peers of Ireland; to wit: Meath, Inchiquin, Abercorn and Bleſſington, and Thirty-ſix Gentlemen.

And Draught of an Addreſs againſt the ſame, and alſo againſt the Truſtees.

And as to the Addreſs, the Preamble of it ſet forth, "That his Majeſty's Proteſtant Subjects of that Kingdom, did humbly fly to him, who had once already been the Reſtorer of their Religion, Rights and Liberties, in hopes he would be pleas'd to take their diſtreſs'd Condition into his princely Conſideration, and by ſuch Methods as ſhould ſeem to him moſt expedient, ſave them from the Ruin which they apprehended the Preſſures of the late Act of Reſumption

A. D. 1701-2. sumption, would otherwise unavoidably bring upon them". After which follow'd several Allegations tending to verify these Assertions, namely, "That the Papists were the Persons chiefly benefited by the said Act, who were thereby confirm'd in their Possessions, restor'd in Blood, &c. whereas most of the Grants made to Protestants were thereby resumm'd. That the Improvers were divested of all their Improvements; That those who had purchas'd of the Patentees, under the Sanction of known and establish'd Laws, were by a subsequent Law put into the Condition of forfeiting Persons. That the ill Consequences of the said Act, affected the Peace and Property of the whole Kingdom: Some of the Trustees having declar'd, They had Power to sell any Lands they thought fit, and the Sales so made, whether of Lands forfeited or otherwise, were so confirm'd by the said Act, that they could never be brought into Question——That the Power given to the Trustees was so unlimited, that every Person in the Kingdom was liable to their Summons, and oblig'd to obey it. That the said Act was to great a Discouragement to all Protestant Proprietors, that it had put a Stop to all Improvements: All Titles, tho' establish'd by Decrees, and Judgments both in Law and Equity, being subject to the Re-examination of the Trustees, consequently precarious; and One, tho' confirm'd by an Act of Parliament (the Parliament of Ireland that is to say) having been defeated by it. That the whole Scheme of the Act and Manner of executing it, depresses the Protestant Interest, and encourages the Papist, which at the present Crisis was so much the more to be apprehended, because the Insolence of their Behaviour throughout the whole Kingdom, shew'd, That either the French King's Acknowledgment of the P. P. of Wales, or some other Dependence had rais'd their Expectation to a great Heighth." What is next asserted is so very remarkable, that it deserves to be given in the very Words of the Draught, To wit, "We are persuaded, That the Parliament of England were in no Sort appris'd either of the Hardships or dangerous Consequence of this Act; and are sensible, That the whole Act is founded upon gross Mis-Informations given them concerning the Value of the Forfeitures which were represented by the Persons entrusted with that Enquiry to be, at least, four Times the Value of what they will be found to amount to: We will not affirm that this was done wilfully, or to serve private Ends; but we must say, and we can make it plain beyond Denial, That all Proofs offer'd to them in their Enquiries, tho' never so plain and evident, were by them disregarded and rejected, when they tended to lessen the Value of the Forfeitures, and deprive them of a Handle for making their exorbitant Report." What follow'd immediately after, was in Substance this, "That the Charges brought on the Kingdom by the Act has exceded the utmost which it could be made to produce, even according to the present Manner of carrying it into Execution: That if a Sum equal to the said Charge had been levy'd on the said Forfeitures, it would not have been thought a Grievance, it would not have occasion'd any Complaint, and might have prov'd some Benefit to the Public. And that something of this Kind might yet be done, tho' not near to such an Amount as might have been obtain'd, before the Country was so impoverish'd by the said Act." And in the last Place, his Majesty was assur'd, That whatever the Malice of their Enemies, might, for private Ends or ill Designs, suggest to the contrary, no Inducements whatever could prevail with them to endeavour to make, or to wish themselves independent of, or not subject to, the Crown of England: And that none of his Majesty's Subjects of any of his Dominions, would, upon all Occasions, shew a more forward and ready Zeal to maintain and defend, against all Persons whatsoever, his Majesty's sacred Person and Government, the Protestant Religion, the Laws, Liberties, and the Rights of the Crown of England, than his Majesty's Protestant Subjects of Ireland. A. D. 1701-2.

Fall into the Hands of the Trustees.

How the Trustees came by these Papers early enough to make this notable Use of them, is also a Matter of some Curiosity: For it is (u) affirm'd with the utmost Assurance, That the Copies of them having been given to a considerable Man in Ireland, who had undertaken to get them adopted by the Grand Jury of the County of West-Meath, where he had a large Estate, he betray'd the Confidence plac'd in him, and not only gave Copies of Both to the Trustees, but so intimidated the Jury, by saying, the Clutches of the House of Commons were so long, that they could reach all the Way from London to West-Meath, that they rejected the Address: In Acknowledgment of which Service, they allow'd six Clames, which he had depending before them, in one Day.

It is also added, That when the said two Trustees presented these Papers to the House. They made a brave Challenge, "That if any Man had any Thing to object to the Execution of the Act, They were ready ex tempore to give a satisfactory Answer. Well knowing, That the Gentlemen employ'd in that Affair, were not as yet got to London:" And again, "That the Day appointed for the Hearing, was a very short one".

who communicate them to the Commons.

But the Truth is, That the Day first appointed

(u) See a Pamphlet call'd, The secret History of the Trust: with some Reflections upon the Letter from a Soldier, written chiefly to expose Mr. Trenchard, who is therein accus'd of having compos'd and publish'd the said Letter, at the critical Minute when the two Trustees were to be heard: So as that the House might just have Time enough to read, but not to consider, it before the Merits of the Case came under Debate.

A. D. 1701-2. pointed was the 12th of February, That the two Truſtees were order'd to attend, in order to be examin'd, to any Thing the Houſe ſhould think fit: That the Earl of Abercorn and James Topham, Eſq; two of the Perſons who had ſign'd the Letter, and who were then in Town, were order'd to attend alſo on the ſaid 12th of February: That the Hearing was put off from the 12th to the 14th, and afterwards to the 16th: That on the 13th, Mr. Secretary Vernon acquainted the Houſe, "That his Majeſty had directed him to inform them, That his Majeſty had lately receiv'd from Ireland ſeveral Addreſſes, of the City of Dublin and divers Counties of that Kingdom, ſetting forth the Hardſhips they lye under by the late Reſumption, which they deſire may be conſider'd in order to their Relief; and that his Majeſty had given Directions that the ſaid Addreſſes ſhould be laid before the Houſe, when the Houſe ſhould think fit to require the ſame." That on the next Day, the ſaid Addreſſes were laid before the Houſe according to Order, by Mr. Stamyan, as Deputy to the Earl of Manchester, Secretary of State: That on the ſaid 16th, the Earl of Abercorne, and Mr. Topham attending, the Copy of the abovemention'd Letter was read to each of them ſeparately; which is all the Specification to be found in the Journals of what paſs'd on that Occaſion: That the ſeveral Addreſſes transferr'd to the Houſe from the Secretary of State's Office being then read, the Queſtion was put on each of them, and the Houſe without one Diviſion, reſolv'd, That they contain'd divers ſcandalous Expreſſions highly reflecting upon his Majeſty's Honour and both Houſes of Parliament: As alſo, that the Adviſers, Promoters and Procurers of the ſaid Petitions were guilty of a high Crime and Miſdemeanor: And that an Addreſs of Thanks ſhould be preſented to his Majeſty for his gracious communicating the ſaid Addreſſes to the Houſe, whereby the Houſe had had an Opportunity of vindicating his Majeſty's Honour, and the Honour of both Houſes of Parliament: That it was not till the 25th that the Conſideration of this Affair was reſum'd, at which Time the ſaid Truſtees preſented a Memorial to the Houſe, ſignifying, That, according to the Report, upon Oath, of the Surveyors and Receivers, they had appointed to make the Meſt of the forfeited Eſtates, the real Value of the ſaid Forfeitures, if to be let for a Term of Years, would amount to 137,496*l.* 5*s.* 0*d.*¼, whereas the preſent Rent amounted to no more than 105,372*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.*¼, and in the Name of the whole Truſt, ſuggeſting, That if they were empower'd to leaſe out ſuch of the Eſtates as were not already leaſed, for a Term of Years accordingly, all the Inconveniencies in the ſaid Memorial enumerated would be remov'd, the Alarms ariſing from falſe Suggeſtions would be quieted, ſuitable Improvements would be made, &c.: That, hereupon they were order'd to lay before the Houſe an Account of the Clames made by Iriſh Papiſts, diſtinguiſhing how many had been allow'd by them, to ſuch Papiſts as were not in Poſſeſſion before the Act took Place, or had been adjudg'd to them by any Court of Law or Equity, That the Houſe then came to a Reſolution. That, notwithſtanding the Complaints and Clamours againſt the Truſtees for the ſaid Eſtates, with relation to the ſaid Truſt, it did not appear to the Houſe, but thoſe Complaints were groundleſs: That after this, ſeveral Petitioners for Relief againſt the ſaid Act, were order'd Relief accordingly: And that on the 3d of March, Sir Charles Hedges, from the Committee, to whom the Conſideration of the Petition of the Officers, Clothiers of the Army, and the Proprietors of the Debt on the ſeveral Tranſport Services had been referr'd, deliver'd in Propoſals, for incorporating ſuch as ſhould purchaſe the ſaid Forfeitures, on certain Terms therein ſpecify'd, according to the Rent-Roll, when verify'd and made good to the Purchaſers.

Meſſage from the King in relation to certain Addreſſes againſt the ſaid Act.

The ſaid Addreſſes laid before the Houſe, and voted to be ſcandalous, falſe, and groundleſs.

Memorial of the Truſtees concerning the ſaid Forfeitures.

Vote of the Houſe concerning the Conduct of the ſaid Truſtees.

Propoſal for making a Corporation to purchaſe the ſaid Forfeitures.

And here the Matter ſtuck during the ſhort Remaneder of this Reign: So that all which need be added in this Place is, That whereas in the ſaid Rent-Roll, the net Value of the Eſtates is eſtimated at 716,700*l.* 5*s.* 11*d.* it is aſſerted in the Name of the Citizens, &c. who undertook to make the ſaid Purchaſe, That they were not worth above 500,000*l.*

Having thus before us a comprehenſive View of the political and oeconomical Parts of the Seſſion, within the Period under Conſideration, our next Tranſition muſt be to That which was more peculiarly the Contraverſial, and which will comprehend all that farther belongs to the ſaid Period.

To procede then: Fuller, the famous Impoſtor, who had undertaken to prove all that had been alledg'd concerning the Spuriouſneſs of the P. P. of Wales's Birth, who had otherwiſe made his Court to the Government in the Year 1691, by undertaking to diſcover a Plot of his own contriving, and who was at this Time a Priſoner in the Fleet, had ſet forth ſeveral Libels, in which he had ſtrain'd his Invention to countenance all that had been ſaid, concerning the Diſtribution of French Money among Members of Parliament; upon which Occaſion the Houſe firſt appointed a Committee, to conſider of Methods for preventing Libels and ſcandalous Papers, and then order'd the ſaid Fuller to be brought to the Bar, in order to be examin'd concerning the Libels he had written, and how he had been ſupported and maintain'd? But, inſtead of ſhrinking under this Examination, with an Impudence peculiar to himſelf, he took upon him to produce in ten Days Time (it was then the 22d of January) two Gentlemen of Fortune and Character (whom he was pleas'd to call Thomas Jones, Eſq; and John Engkfield, Gent.) and who, having the Protection of the Houſe, would make no Difficulty to manifeſt at the Bar of the ſame, That they had in ſuch Manner diſtributed, &c. more than 180,000*l.* by Proceedings againſt Fuller for Reflecting the laſt Houſe of Commons.

He undertakes to juſtify himſelf by the Teſtimony of two Gentlemen.

A. D. 1701. Order of the French King, with their own Hands. All that he requir'd was granted, and more than all; for he was allow'd a Fortnight inſtead of ten Days: And in that Interval, he amus'd the Houſe with no leſs than four Letters; the laſt of which was to ſignify, That the ſaid two Gentlemen were come near the Town in order to attend the Houſe; and that he himſelf deſir'd to be heard on the Morrow, being the 5th of February: And the Reſult was, That he found himſelf entang'ed in his own Snare, without any Poſſibility of an Eſcape: For the Houſe order'd, that he ſhould, at his own Deſire, be brought up, and that he ſhould alſo bring the ſaid two Gentlemen along with him: But this was out of his Power; no ſuch Perſons were in being: All that he aim'd at was to lay ſuch a Story together as might corroborate the Suſpicions already entertain'd, and the Calumnies already propagated, and on the Merit thereof, to quarter himſelf for Life on the Party who had ſet them abroach: And in regard to that Merit, it muſt be preſum'd, all our Hiſtorians have either paſs'd over this Incident in Silence, or elſe have barely mention'd; That he fell under the Cenſure of the Houſe, without the leaſt Hint of his Offence.

But not being able to make that Undertaking good, falls under the Cenſure of the Houſe.

And yet the ſaid Cenſure is one of the moſt remarkable that is to be found in the Journals of Parliament. To wit, "Reſolv'd, Nemine contradicente, That William Fuller, taking no Warning by the juſt Cenſure he receiv'd from the Houſe of Commons the 24th of February 1691, and the Puniſhment he ſuffer'd by Judgment of Law, has, again, repeated his vile Practices, by ſeveral falſe Accuſations in divers ſcandalous Pamphlets by him publiſh'd, and having undertaken to produce Thomas Jones, Eſq; and John Engleſield, Gent. to make good the ſaid Accuſations, and not performing the ſame, this Houſe doth declare the ſaid William Fuller to be a Cheat, a falſe Accuſer, and an incorrigible Rogue."

The Attorney-General was moreover order'd to proſecute him: Even the brazen Dr. Oates, we are told, in Abhorrence of his Villainy, declar'd him to be a lying Raſcal; and Dauenant in his ſecond Dialogue between Whiglove and Double, takes Occaſion to comment on the whole Story, in the following artful Manner. "Whiglove. In ſhort, I could wiſh we had never brought this Matter on the Stage: It will will be a Clog upon other Lies, which we may have occaſion to diſperſe hereafter. Double. What you ſay would hold, if we had any Shame in us; but if this Iniquity ſhould be ever ſo much detected, if it ſhould be made apparent who were at the Bottom of this Contrivance, it ſhould not make us bluſh: For Things are come to that Paſs in England, that there is no Roguery whatſoever which has not its Patrons and Maintainers".

Some remarkable Proceedings in controverted Elections.

Under the Head of controverted Elections, it is further to be remember'd, That on the one Hand, Mr. Secretary Vernon (who ſat for Weſtminſter) and his Son, petition'd againſt Sir Joſeph Tredenham and his Nephew, who, according to the Allegations of the ſaid Petitioners, had been unduly, and illegally return'd for St. Mawes: And that on the other, ſeveral of the Burgeſſes and Inhabitants of Malmſbury, petition'd againſt Sir Charles Hedges, (who was alſo Secretary of State during the Election) and Edward Pauncefoord, Eſq; under Pretence, That one Adey, an Attorney, had corruptly treated and contracted with ſeveral Perſons, in order to their being elected Members for the ſaid Borough; and that by thoſe and other unlawful Practices, they had carry'd their Election accordingly. A. D. 1701

But on better Conſideration, the Vernons thought fit to apply to the Houſe for Leave to withdraw their Petition: And as to the other, it took a Turn upon the Hearing at the Bar of the Houſe, which was altogether extraordinary: For Adey, in Perſon, declar'd his Concern in that Affair had been in behalf of Daniel Park, Eſq; another Candidate for the ſaid Borough, and not for Hedges and Pauncefoord; in Verification of which, he produc'd, and deliver'd to the Clerk of the Houſe, a Bag of Gold, and a Bank Note of 200*l.* which he ſaid, he had receiv'd from the ſaid Daniel Park.

Upon which, and after the uſual Hearing of Council on both Sides, it was reſolv'd, without a Diviſion, that Hedges and Pauncefoord were duly elected: That the Petition of the ſaid Burgeſſes, was ſcandalous, falſe and vexatious: That the ſaid Burgeſſes ſhould be taken into the Cuſtody of the Serjeants: That Park had been guilty of notorious Bribery and Corruption, in endeavouring to procure himſelf elected; and that he alſo ſhould be taken into Cuſtody, and proſecuted by the Attorney-General.

Certain petitioning Burgeſſes of Malmſbury order'd into Cuſtody.

As alſo Counſel, Party, a Candidate for that Borough.

Nor did the Affair end here; for in the Courſe of the Hearing, it had been made appear, that the Earl of Peterborough had interfer'd on the Behalf of Park, which the Houſe being diſpos'd to reſent, as a Treſpaſs upon one of their Fundamentals, his Lordſhip deſir'd to be heard, and was heard with the uſual Ceremonies, accordingly: Notwithſtanding which, and after two ſeveral Motions, the one to adjourn the Houſe, and the other the Debate, had been ſeverally over-rul'd, it was reſolv'd, That it appear'd to the Houſe, That the ſaid Earl was guilty of many indirect Practices, in endeavouring to procure the ſaid Park to be elected a Burgeſs, &c. On every one of theſe Points the Houſe divided, and the Difference of the Numbers ſerves to ſhew in ſome Degree the Agitations of the Day. For the firſt Diviſion was 156 to 76, the ſecond 158 to 144; and the third, by which Time it was very late, 141 to 56.

And a Cenſure paſs'd in the Earl of Peterborough for indirect Practices in favour of the ſaid Park.

Beſides; ſo great the Indignation of the Houſe appear'd to be againſt the Burgeſſes in Cuſtody, that when they petition'd to be enlarg'd, without acknowledging their Fault, no Notice was taken of their Petition; and when they preſented a ſecond Petition, acknowledging that Fault, expreſſing their

Sorrow

A. D. 1701-2. Sorrow for it, and begging Pardon for the fame, the Motion made for their Diſcharge was over rul'd on a Diviſion of the Houſe, by 158 Voices againſt 152: Upon a farther Application, they were, however, enlarg'd; and laſtly, the Money and Bank-Bill depoſited in the Hands of the Clerk, were re-deliver'd by Order, to be made uſe of upon the Proſecution againſt the ſaid Colonel Park.

Caſe of Colepeper the famous Kentiſh Petitioner.

It was alſo the Misfortune of Mr. Thomas Colepeper, the famous Undertaker of the Kentiſh Petition, to be now a Petitioner in his own Caſe, againſt Thomas Bliſs, Eſq; return'd for Maidſtone by a Majority of only two Votes.

In the Hearings before the Committee of Privileges and Elections, the Cauſe has been ſo manag'd that it appear'd wrong on his Side and right on his Adverſaries; ſo that every Point was decided againſt him: Bliſs was declar'd duly elected; and it was reſolv'd, that he had been guilty of corrupt, ſcandalous, and indirect Practices.

Finding, therefore, the Current ſet ſo ſtrongly againſt him, he endeavour'd to beſpeak the Clemency of the Houſe, by a Letter, which was read from the Chair by the Speaker: But all the Effect it produc'd was, an angry Motion, That the Houſe would appoint a Day to take into Conſideration the Rights, Liberties and Privileges of the Houſe of Commons; and a violent Debate thereon; which was ſuſpended only for the ſake of deriving freſh Matter againſt him from the Report, then to be made by Sir Rowland Gwinn, Chairman of the ſaid Committee.

Accordingly, when the Houſe had confirm'd the firſt Reſolution in favour of Bliſs: An Amendment was offer'd to the ſecond concerning Colepeper, in theſe Words. "Who was one of the Inſtruments in promoting and preſenting the ſcandalous, inſolent and ſeditious Petition, commonly call'd the Kentiſh Petition to the laſt Houſe of Commons:" And tho' the ſaid Amendment was liable to many Objections (nothing tranſacted in a former Seſſion; or, at leaſt, in a former Parliament being properly cogniſable by a new one) it was agreed to without a Diviſion: As were alſo the two following Reſolutions, to wit. "That the aſperſing the laſt Houſe of Commons or any Member thereof with receiving French Money, or being in the Intereſt of France, was a ſcandalous, villainous, and groundleſs Reflection; tending to Sedition, and to create a Miſunderſtanding between the King and his People; that Thomas Colepeper, Eſq; is guilty of promoting the ſaid ſcandalous, villainous and groundleſs Reflection upon the ſaid Houſe of Commons." And the two following Orders, "That the ſaid T. C, Eſq; be for his ſaid Offence, committed to Newgate: And that his Majeſty's Attorney-General do proſecute the ſaid T. C. for the ſaid Crimes".

The Aſperſions call'd in the laſt Houſe of Commons votes ſcandalous, villainous, &c.

The ſaid Colepeper committed to Newgate.

A. D. 1701-2.

The adjourn'd Debate on the Motion above ſpecify'd, was then reſum'd; and after much Altercation, a Day was appointed for the Purpoſes therein mention'd. The Day came, to wit, the 16th of February: The Houſe reſolv'd itſelf into a Committee: Colonel Granville had the Chair: Many warm Speeches were made, which were as warmly anſwer'd: And upon the Iſſue, both the Committee and the Houſe broke up without coming to any Reſolution at all.

Proceedings of the Houſe in Committee on the Rights and Privileges of the Houſe of Commons.

On the 19th, however, in Conſequence of a new Motion, to the like Effect, the 26th was appointed for the farther Conſideration of the Rights, Liberties, and Privileges of the Houſe of Commons: And on the 24th, the Marquis of Hartington, by way of Counter-Meaſure, mov'd, for an Inſtruction to the Committee of the whole Houſe, appointed to ſit on that Occaſion; "That they ſhould alſo take into Conſideration, the Rights and Liberties of all the Commons of England; which was agreed to accordingly".

not favourable to the Purpoſes of the Tories.

Thus the two Parties were ſo far ſet upon even Ground; and it was apparent that in this Conteſt neither would be able to obtain any conſiderable Advantage over the other: And, indeed, unleſs a large Body of Tories withdrew before the Houſe was reſum'd, which for want of ſufficient Lights, cannot be aſcertain'd, we ought to conclude, perhaps, that the Party ſplit upon a Meaſure which ſome foreſaw would be unprofitable: For, according to the Journals, the Attendance on that Side, was, by no Means, ſuitable to the Streſs which ſeem'd to be laid upon it: For thoſe who did attend, tho, at firſt, ſo earneſt for having the Day appointed, were ſo ill ſatisfy'd with the Iſſue of it, that they were for poſtponing the Report; while their Antagoniſts, on the contrary, inſiſted on its being made immediately, and upon a Diviſion of the Houſe, carry'd their Point by 102 Voices againſt 62.

The ſaid Report conſiſted of five Reſolutions; (of which the three former belong'd to the Tories, and the two latter to the Whigs) to wit. Reſolv'd, 1. That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That to aſſert the Houſe of Commons is not the only Repreſentative of the Commons of England (alluding to the Jura populi Anglicani) tends to the Subverſion of the Rights and Privileges of the Houſe of Commons, and the fundamental Conſtitution of the Government of this Kingdom. 2. That to aſſert the Houſe of Commons have no Power of Commitment but of their own Members, tends to the Subverſion of the Conſtitution of the Houſe of Commons. 3. That to print or publiſh any Books or Libels,

(a) In a printed Paper, call'd, A Letter to the Freeholders and Freemen of England, which it was proved he had diſtributed great Numbers of, during the Time of the Election.

A. D. 1701-2. Libels, reflecting upon the Proceedings of the Houſe of Commons, or any Member thereof, for or relating to his Service therein, is a high Violation of the Rights and Privileges of the Houſe of Commons. 4. That it is the undoubted Right of the PEOPLE of England, to petition or addreſs to the King, for the calling, ſitting, and diſſolving of Parliaments, and for the redreſſing of Grievances. 5. That it is the undoubted Right of every Subject of England, under any Accuſation, either by Impeachment or otherwiſe, to be brought to a ſpeedy Trial, in order to be acquitted or condemn'd: And all theſe ſeveral Reſolutions were ſeverally confirm'd by the Houſe, without any Amendment, except the ſubſtituting the Disjunctive or in the Place of the Conjunctive and, in the Fourth.

And here it is incumbent on us to obſerve, That this particular Vein of Controverſy was here brought to a Period (at leaſt for the Reſidue of this Reign): Whence we muſt be oblig'd to conclude, That B. Burnet did not thoroughly underſtand his Subject, when, after glancing at this Day's Debate, he procedes to ſay, "Yet they (meaning the Tories) were not diſcourag'd by this, but went on to complain, That the Lords had deny'd Juſtice in the Matter of the Impeachments: This bore a long and hot Debate in a very full Houſe: But it was carry'd, tho' by a ſmall Majority, That Juſtice had not been deny'd them." For if any ſuch Debate, or any ſuch Diviſion did really occur, they occurr'd this very Day, and that in the Committee, not in the Houſe: No Queſtion of that Nature, within the Interval ſpecify'd, being to be found in the Journals.

Progreſs of the Bill to attaint the P. P. of Wales.

The ſame Hiſtorian, with his uſual Ingenuity, alſo ſays, "The Houſe of Commons began a Bill of Attainder of the pretended Prince of Wales: This could not be oppos'd, much leſs ſtopp'd; yet many ſhew'd a Coldneſs to it, and were abſent on the Days in which it was order'd to be read." Now the Motion for this Bill was made January the 2d, by Sir Rowland Gwynn, and, the Queſtion thereon, was carry'd Nemine Contradicente: On the 10th, it was brought in by the ſaid Sir Rowland, and read for the firſt Time: On the 12th it was committed to a Committee of the whole Houſe: On the 13th the ſaid Committee went thro' the Bill, and made ſeveral Amendments: On the 14th thoſe Amendments were reported, and it was order'd, Nemine Contradicente, That the Bill and Amendments ſhould be engroſs'd: And on the 15th, it was reſolv'd, Nemine Contradicente, That the Bill do paſs: And Sir Rowland Gwynn was order'd to carry it up to the Lords.

Thus if Expedition manifeſted Zeal, the whole Houſe manifeſted as much as could have been decently requir'd of them by the moſt zealous Courtier, tho' his Lordſhip does not care to allow them the Merit of it.

On the 23d, the Lords ſent down the Bill to the Commons, with a Graft of their own upon it, (to ſhew, it muſt be ſuppos'd, That the Commons could not go ſo far in that meritorious Walk, but they would go farther) for the Attainder of the (late) Queen, who acted as Regent for the P. P. her Son: To which the Commons demurr'd, in order to ſearch Precedents concerning Bills of Attainder: At leaſt this was the Pretence aſſign'd. On the 29th, however, the Committee to whom the Search was refer'd, made their Report: On the 2d of February this Report was taken into Conſideration; and on the ſame Day, the additional Clauſe for the ſaid Attainder was rejected without a Diviſion: On the 6th, the Reaſons to be offer'd in a Conference with the Lords for their ſo doing, were agreed to in the following Terms; to wit: "That the Commons cannot agree to the Amendments made by your Lordſhips to the Bill, entitled, An Act for the Attainder of the pretended Prince of Wales of High Treaſon, believing, it may be of dangerous Conſequence to attaint Perſons by an Amendment only, in which Caſe, ſuch due Conſiderations cannot be had as the Nature of an Attainder does require." The Lords, on the other Hand, demanded a Conference on the 10th, in which they inſiſted on their Amendments; urging, That ſuch Conſideration as the Nature of an Attainder did require, might be had by that Method; citing a Precedent in 31 Henry VIII. (which, as Burnet himſelf admits, ſeem'd to be a hard one) whereby it appear'd, the Commons themſelves had attainted ſeveral Perſons by way of Amendment: And concluding, upon the Whole, That they had never heard of any ill Conſequence ariſing from it: The Commons, nevertheleſs, adher'd to their Point, and having at a free Conference ſignify'd as much, left the Bill with their Lordſhips; who, thereupon, retracted their former Reſolution, and agreed to the Bill as drawn up by the Commons; but, nevertheleſs, return'd to their Charge againſt the ſaid nominal Queen-Regent, whom they attainted by a ſeperate Bill: And yet, in the Courſe of this Proceding, as much Coldneſs was ſhewn by the Majority of their Lordſhips, and as little Diſpoſition to attend, as is above imputed to the Commons: A ſignal Proof of which appears in the Diviſion on the Queſtion, Whether the ſaid Bill ſhould paſs? For the Contents were but 28; the Not-Contents were 18: And of theſe laſt, Fifteen enter'd their Diſſents, "Becauſe there was no Proof of the Allegations in the Bill ſo much as offer'd before the paſſing it; which is a Precedent that may be of dangerous Conſequence." And after all, the Bill was dropt by the Commons.

B. Burnet's Account of the Abjuration-Bill.

The Account given by the ſame Hiſtorian of the two Abjuration-Bills, which had ſeverally their Riſe in the two Houſes, is, indeed, much fuller than his Account of theſe Attainders: But whether it is fairer or not, will appear by the Sequel.

According to him, the Lords had the Merit of ſtarting the Meaſure firſt; and in point of Form they certainly had: But the Commons, in their Addreſs to the King, had declar'd as ſtrongly for ſome ſuch Meaſure as the Lords had done: And by attainting the

A. D. 1701-2. the P. P. of Wales, had given a ſufficient Proof they were in earneſt. Then as to the Difference between the Bills, That of the Lords, he tells us, was for a voluntary Abjuration of the P. P. of Wales, and a voluntary Oath to the King as rightful and lawful King, and to his Heirs, according to the Act of Settlement, which was to be tender'd to all Perſons, and their Subſcription or Refuſal to be recorded, without any other Penalty, and which he ſtates as a Teſt of Diſcrimination between Party and Party, not only reaſonable but neceſſary, when the Pretenſions of the ſaid young Man had been ſo openly eſpous'd by ſo great a Power Abroad, and were ſecretly favour'd by ſo many at Home: And he adds, That when the Houſe of Commons perceiv'd how the Lords were inclin'd, they reſolv'd to bring in a Bill, which ſhould oblige all Perſons to take the Abjuration.

Reflect'd from the Journals of the Commons.

Now thus it appears in the Journals: "On the 9th of January, exactly a Week after the Houſe had proceeded to Buſineſs, Sir Charles Hedges mov'd for Leave, "to bring in a Bill, for the farther Security of his Majeſty's Perſon, and the Succeſſion of the Crown in the Proteſtant Line, and extinguiſhing the Hopes of the pretended Prince of Wales, and all other Pretenders, and their open and ſecret Abettors." Which Motion having been ſeconded by Mr. St. John, was carry'd Nemine Contradicente: And the preparing and bringing in the ſaid Bill, was left to the ſaid two Gentlemen.

On the 13th the ſaid Bill was brought in accordingly, and read for the firſt Time: And the very ſame Day the Lords ſent down theirs; under the Title of, "An Act for the Security of his Majeſty's Perſon and Government, and for maintaining the Succeſſion of the Crown, according to the two late Acts of Settlement." Which having been twice read, on the next and the following Day, was order'd, without any Diviſion, or, as far as it appears, Oppoſition, to be laid on the Table; nor did their Lordſhips, by Meſſage or otherwiſe, put the Houſe in mind of it again: While, on the other Hand, the former Bill having alſo been read a ſecond Time the ſaid Day, was order'd to be committed to a Committee of the whole Houſe.

On the 20th this Committee was to have ſat, according to Order, for the firſt Time: But the Whigs had, by this Time, bethought themſelves of an Effort which might be previouſly made, to ſuper-induce upon this Bill, the Party-Shibboleth, intended to be eſtabliſh'd by the Lords: And this conſiſted in moving for an Inſtruction to the ſaid Committee, to take Care, That the Oath in the ſaid Bill mention'd ſhould be voluntary: And ſo much Time was ſpent in the Debate on this Refinement, that there was none left for the Purpoſes of the Committee: What was farther remarkable, the Houſe was ſo equally balanc'd on the Diviſion, that the Negative was carry'd but by one ſingle Voice: The Numbers being 187 and 188.

The 22d was appointed for the next Committee Day: And then the Tories came prepar'd to move for an Inſtruction on their Side; which was extremely well calculated to eſtabliſh an Intereſt of their own, at the Expence of their Adverſaries; namely, "That the ſaid Committee ſhould take Care, to make it equally penal to compaſs or imagine the Death of her Royal Highneſs the Princeſs Anne, as it is to compaſs and imagine the Death of the King's Eldeſt Son and Heir, by the Statute of 25 Edward III." But tho' this was carry'd, as B. Burnet ſays, without any Debate, or Shadow of Oppoſition, Fuller's Examination was ſuffer'd to intervene, and ſo another Day was loſt. A. D. 1701-2.

The next Committee-Day was the 24th, which produc'd yet other preparatory Inſtructions; to wit: 1. To empower the ſaid Committee to receive a Clauſe for the Amendment of the Aſſociation, with regard to the late King James, he being dead. 2. That the ſaid Committee do take Care, the Oath mention'd in the ſaid Bill ſhall extend to all eccleſiaſtical Perſons, and to all Members upon Foundations in the Univerſities, and all Schoolmaſters. 3. That they do take Care the ſaid Oath ſhall extend to all Teachers of ſeperate Congregations. And theſe Inſtructions again took up ſo much more Time, that the ſaid Committee, when ſuffer'd to ſit, could make no great Progreſs in the Bill: Nor was this all: For on the Reſumption of the Houſe, the 26th being propos'd for the Committee to ſit again, on which Day the Committee of the whole Houſe was alſo to ſit on the Supply, the Whigs preſent took Occaſion to offer the following Amendment, after the Committee of the whole Houſe upon the Supply granted to his Majeſty, which was over-rul'd on a Diviſion of the Houſe by 61 Voices againſt 46.

The ſaid Committee on the Supply, however, continued to ſit ſo long, that the Other had no Opportunity to ſit that Day: And when they did ſit on the 28th, ſuch was the Claſh of Opinions, and the Obſtinacy wherewith all were maintain'd, that the Diſcuſſion was far from being completed: Notwithſtanding which, the farther Conſideration of the Bill was poſtpon'd till the 5th of February: Upon which Day they went thro' with it; and the Report was order'd to be made on the 10th following.

And here we muſt recur to our Hiſtorian-Biſhop, who ſays, "Finch offer'd an Alteration to the Clauſe, abjuring the Prince of Wales, &c. that it imported only an Obligation, not to aſſiſt him: But tho' he preſs'd this with unuſual Vehemence, in a Debate that he reſum'd ſeventeen Times in one Seſſion, againſt all Rules, he had few to ſecond him in it." But if Finch did preſs this Alteration in ſo earneſt a Manner, he preſs'd it in the Committee; for in the Houſe, if the Journals are to be depended upon, no ſuch Alteration was offer'd: And if ſo, it is not againſt Rule, for any Member to ſpeak to the ſame Point as often as he pleaſes.

A. D. 1701-2. The ſame Author again ſuggeſts, That the Oath was extended as above, to all Clergymen, &c. by the Tories, to palliate their rejecting the Inſtruction for rendering the Oath voluntary: Or, as he expreſſes it, to ſkip the (w) Matter with a Shew of Zeal: But the two Inſtructions relating to Eccleſiaſtics, and the (x) Aſſociation, certainly aroſe from the Whigs: And it is as certain, That the Third, which relates to Preachers and Teachers of ſeperate Congregations, was a Reprifal of the Tories.

He alſo adds, remarkably enough, "The Clauſe [in the Act] of maintaining the Government in King, Lords and Commons, was rejected with great Indignation; for the Government was only in the King; the Lords and Commons being, indeed, a Part of the Conſtitution, and of the Legiſlative Body, but not of the Government. This was a bare-fac'd Republican Notion, and was wont to be condemn'd as ſuch by the ſame Perſons who now preſs'd it." Thus Men may not only outlive their Principles, but even the very Memory of their former Profeſſions: The Propoſition, That the Government of England was veſted in King, Lords and Commons, had ever been the Corner-Stone of Whigiſm; and never had been admitted by the Engliſh Republicans, who had form'd their Plan on the Suppreſſion of the Kingſhip both Office and Name.

But the Truth is, That the Biſhop has ſomewhat diſtorted and miſrepreſented this Clauſe, which was ſo far from being of the Republican Caſt, that very probably it was introduc'd either by way of Precaution again the Republican Spirit, which during the late unſettled State of the Succeſſion, had manifeſted itſelf in print, as we have ſeen, or againſt thoſe Practices which had been try'd of late upon the People, and which had an apparent Tendency to Anarchy on one Hand, or to abſolute Monarchy on the other: For it was clear the general Drift of it was to preſerve the Conſtitution in its preſent Form: And to evince this, all that is neceſſary is to give the very Words, which, by way of amending the Bill, were left out by the Committee; to wit: "I will, to the utmoſt of my Power, ſupport, maintain, and defend the Conſtitution and Government of this Realm in King, Lords and Commons, as it is by Law eſtabliſh'd."

Thus, in the firſt Inſtance, it appears, that the Legiſlative and the Executive were, in the ſtrongeſt and fulleſt Manner, contra-diſtinguiſh'd: And that even in the Latter, the like Contra-diſtinction is to be trac'd in the Words Conſtitution and Government: For to both theſe, the conſequent Words, King, Lords and Commons, equally relate.

Paſſing on to another Clauſe of the ſame laudable Kind, (becauſe it obſerv'd the ſame due Regard to thoſe particular Points, which Difference of Opinion had render'd eſſential A. D. 1701-2. to the Peace and Harmony of the Commonwealth) namely, For the Maintenance of the Church of England as by Law eſtabliſh'd, with Liberty of Conſcience, as tolerated by Law, our Author alſo gives us to underſtand, it was laid aſide, becauſe it was foreign to the Deſign of the Bill, which, in this Place, he tells us, "Was to diſcover to all, both at home and abroad, how unanimouſly the Nation concurr'd in abjuring the pretended Prince of Wales:" Whereas, in treating of the Lords Bill, he ſays, the Purpoſe of That, was to diſcriminate by ſuch a Teſt, between thoſe on whom the Government might depend, and thoſe whom it had juſt Ground to ſuſpect: Or, in other Words, to ſhew, There was no Unanimity amongſt us. Not ſatisfy'd, however, with this Conſideration, he throws in another of a ſtill more extraordinary Kind, conſidering the Perſon who uſes it, and the Party in whoſe Service it is urg'd; in theſe Terms: "But here was a Clauſe, to one Part of which (the maintaining the Church) the Diſſenters could not ſwear; and even the more moderate Men of the Church, who did well approve of the Toleration, yet might think it too much to ſwear to maintain it; ſince it was reaſonable to oblige the Diſſenters to uſe their Liberty moderately, by keeping them under the Apprehenſion of having it taken away, if it was abus'd by them." So that we have the Biſhop's Authority to infer, That the ſame Apprehenſion may be made to operate whatever Way a Government pleaſes.

But to return: When the Bill was reported, a Motion was made for a Recommitment; upon which the Houſe dividing, it was carry'd in the Negative, by 193 againſt 158: The Queſtion for agreeing with the Committee, in leaving out the Clauſe in the Oath, relating to the Conſtitution and Government, produc'd alſo another Diviſion; and was carry'd in the Affirmative, by 187 Voices againſt 166: And all the other Amendment having been agreed to, the Bill was order'd to be engroſs'd.

Laſtly: The Bill having been read for the third Time on the 19th, an engroſs'd Clauſe was offer'd as a Rider, to exempt the Quakers from the Oath, and rejected without a Diviſion: After which another Rider was offer'd, "That Perſons who took upon them Offices, ſhould not depart from the Communion of the Church of England." And this was the great Point of the Day, which having been ſufficiently labour'd on both Sides, was at length decided by the Queſtion; upon which, thoſe who had before rejected the two former Clauſes, for preſerving the Conſtitution in State and Church, were again victorious, by no leſs than 203 Voices againſt 139.

Such

(w) His Lordſhip charitably ſuggeſts, That the Party choſe to have that Oath impos'd rather than left free; becauſe they reckon'd the taking an Oath that was impos'd, was a Part of their Submiſſion to the Uſurpation: But that the taking any Oath that ſtrengthen'd the Government, of their own Accord, did not ſuit with their other Principles. P. 208.

(x) Which inſtead of the Words, againſt the late K. James and all his Abettors, was alter'd thus, Againſt all his Majeſty's Enemies whatſoever.

A. D. 1701-2. Such was the Progreſs of the Bill thro' the Houſe of Commons: And it muſt be allow'd, That the Riſe of it, and almoſt every Step taken in it, were equally problematical. The Tories, whom in a Body the Whigs had ſo confidently branded for Jacobites, bring in a Bill to oblige all Peers, Members of Parliament, Officers Civil and Military, Eccleſiaſtics, Lawyers, Tutors, Schoolmaſters, &c. to abjure the P. P. of Wales, and to take a new Oath of Allegiance to the new Government and the new Settlement of the Crown, in the ſtrongeſt Terms imaginable; that is to ſay, without any Equivocation, mental Evaſion, or ſecret Reſervation whatſoever, heartily, willingly, and truly, on the true Faith of a Chriſtian: The Whigs, on the other Hand, call this a Shew of Zeal, which had no better Source than political Hypocriſy: And tho' the Tories made it their own Choice to be thus bound, inſiſt on their being left free: The Tories make a hard Shift to carry that one Point, which impos'd the Oath: And, except in the Article of the Princeſs of Denmark, which could not be oppos'd with Decency, the Whigs gave the Law to all the reſt.

The Bill carry'd to the Lords.

For what remanes, the Bill was on the ſaid 19th, (after a long Delay, ſays Burnet) carry'd up to the Lords by Sir Charles Hedges; where, according to the ſame Author, the Tories oppos'd it all that they poſſibly could: They firſt mov'd for a Clauſe, excuſing the Peers from the Neceſſity laid upon them of taking the Oath; which having been rejected, not without a Mixture of Indignation, they try'd to have brought it back to be voluntary; which he calls a ſtrange Piece of Inconſiſtence in thoſe who had argued even againſt the Lawfulneſs of a voluntary Oath: Adding, "They next offer'd all thoſe Clauſes that had been rejected in the Houſe of Commons, with ſome very ſtrange Additions, by which they diſcover'd both great Weakneſs, and an inveterate Rancour againſt the Government: But all the Oppoſition ended in a Proteſtation of Nineteen or Twenty Peers againſt the Bill."

Now the Oppoſition thus ſet forth in ſuch forbidding Colours, was of ſuch a Nature, as ſeems to argue, the Tories were divided among themſelves with regard to the Meaſure: It laſted in the whole but three Days; for the Bill was read for the third Time on the 24th; was paſs'd the ſame Day and ſent back to the Commons, with certain Amendments: The Proteſtation he mentions was ſign'd by ten Peers only, not one of whom was a leading Man, except Lord Nottingham: And it was founded on ſuch Reaſons, as ſhew'd, they had Matter enough to keep their Oppoſition in countenance, (tho' the firſt of thoſe Reaſons was expung'd by Order of the Houſe) of which the ſaid Reaſons themſelves will be the beſt Proof.

Lords Proteſt.

"1ſt, We conceive, that no new Oath ſhould be impos'd upon the Subject; foraſmuch as thoſe eſtabliſh'd by an Act made in the Firſt Year of the Reign of his Majeſty and the late Queen Mary, were together with our Rights and Liberties, aſcertain'd in that Act, under the Terms of our Submiſſion to his Majeſty, and upon which his Majeſty was pleas'd to accept the Crown; and which were enacted to ſtand, remain, and be the Law of this Realm for ever; and which, we conceive, do comprehend and neceſſarily imply all the Duty and Allegiance of the Subject to their lawful King. A. D. 1701-2.

2dly, And much leſs ſhould any new Oath be impos'd upon the Lords, with ſuch a Penalty, as to loſe their Seats in Parliament upon their refuſing it; ſuch a Penalty being, in ſome Meaſure, an Intrenchment upon our Conſtitution, and expreſly contrary to the ſtanding Order of this Houſe, made the 30th Day of April, 1675.

3dly, And if ſuch an Infringement of the Rights of Peers might be admitted, yet in a Matter of ſo great Importance to all the Peers, we conceive, that in Juſtice they ſhould all have had Notice of this Matter, and been ſpecially ſummon'd to have attended the Houſe upon ſo great an Occaſion; which has not been done, tho' it was mov'd and humbly deſir'd on Behalf of the abſent Lords.

4thly, And if any farther Evidence of the Subjects Fidelity were, at this Time, neceſſary to be requir'd, we conceive a new Oath is no ſuch Evidence, nor any additional Security to the Government; becauſe thoſe who have kept the Oaths, which they have already taken, ought, in Juſtice, to be eſteem'd good Subjects; and thoſe who have broken them, will make no Scruple of taking or breaking any others that ſhall be requir'd of them: And conſequently this new Oath may be of dangerous and pernicious Conſequence to the Government, by admitting ſuch ill Men, who do not fear an Oath, into the greateſt Truſts, and who, under the ſpecious Pretence and Protection of this new Oath, which is to free them from Suſpicion, will have greater Opportunities of betraying their King and their Country.

5thly, If a new Oath were neceſſary, as we conceive it is not, yet the Words of this Oath are ſo very ambiguous, and have been ſo very differently conſtrued by ſeveral Lords who have declar'd their Senſe of them, that this may become a Snare to Mens Conſciences, or tend to overthrow the Obligation of an Oath, by allowing Men Liberty to take it in their own Senſe; whereas this, as all other Oaths, ought to be taken in the Senſe of the Impoſer, which hath not been declar'd in this Caſe, tho' we earneſtly preſs'd it, and tho' it has been done in other Caſes of the like Nature.

6thly, And, we conceive, that it neceſſarily follows from hence, that this Oath can be no Bond of Union among thoſe who do take it, nor any true Mark of Diſtinction between the Friends and the Enemies of this Government; and therefore repugnant to the very Nature of a Teſt."

Laſtly; on the 3d of March, and not before, theſe Amendments were taken into Conſideration by the Commons, and agreed to; which being all that was requiſite for the

A.D. 1701-2. the Completion of the Bill, it was the ſame Day ſent up to the Lords.

But in this Interval, from the 19th of February that is to ſay, when the Bill was firſt ſent up, to the 1ſt of March, the Face of the Court had undergone a remarkable Change. In the Courſe of the Winter, great Pains had been taken to eſtabliſh a general Belief, That the King was in a fair Way of obtaining a complete Re-eſtabliſhment of his Health: And this Belief had contributed not a little to the Advances which both Parties had made, to have the firſt Place in his Service; for neither had any great Reaſon to expect a Place in his Favour: But in his more familiar Converſations with Lord Albemarle, and, as ſome ſay, with Lord Portland, he had often intimated his own Apprehenſions, That he was near his End: And it is manifeſt enough, That his great Endeavour, from the Time theſe Apprehenſions ſeiz'd him, was, to provide ſuch collateral Securities for the great Projects he had form'd, as might prevent their coming to an End with him. Thus he had once more attach'd England to the Continent by the double Tye of a new Confederacy and a new Settlement of the Throne: The Former of theſe Meaſures was to operate in preſent, and the Latter in perpetuity: And as to the War, (which was to be his Legacy to Europe, and which nothing but the Steadineſs of England could bring to a favorable Iſſue) ſuch was the Cry of the Nation in its Favour, and ſuch the peculiar Circumſtances of the Times, that he found it no difficult Matter, to make the Proſecution of it, equally the Concern of both thoſe Parties, which had hitherto embroil'd and embaraſs'd every Meaſure of his Reign: The Whigs, comprehending alſo the Money'd Intereſt, by their own Clamours to ruſh into it as Principals, at any Hazard, and at any Expence; and by the ſiniſter Motives which gave Riſe to thoſe Clamours: And the Tories, together with the landed Intereſt, by leaving the Conduct of it to the Earl of Marlborough; who at that Time was not ſuſpected of having any Connections but with them; who, by the Means of his Lady, was like to have the ſupreme Direction of all Things in the next Reign; and who, as Captain-General, would be almoſt as much intereſted in the Continuance of the War, as if he had alſo been Stadtholder of the United-Provinces.

The King ſenſible he had not long to live.

The King, as well to confirm the Belief which had been obtain'd of his Recovery, as to gratify himſelf in his favorite Diverſion of Hunting, had made it his Cuſtom to go once a Week, or oftener, to Hampton-Court: On Saturday, February the 21ſt, he had done the ſame; and, tho' his Legs were feeble, his Body infirm, and he had been attack'd that very Morning with a Diſorder in his Head, nevertheleſs put his Horſe on the Gallop; which he had ſcarce done, before the Creature made a Plunge, and not being able to recover himſelf, fell on his Side; by which Accident his Majeſty was thrown ſo rudely out of his Saddle, that his Right Collar-Bone was broke by the Fall. —

He is thrown from his Horſe.

According to his own Obſervation, the Ground was remarkably ſmooth and level where he fell: And Tradition ſays, That He who had remov'd the Land-Marks of Kingdoms, was thrown by an Ant-Hill. But, however, this may be, he was carry'd to Hampton-Court, where the Bone was ſet by his own Surgeon; who, finding his Majeſty's Pulſe feveriſh, hinted the Expediency of Bleeding, which his Majeſty nevertheleſs evaded, by ſaying, He had had a feveriſh Diſpoſition upon him at Intervals for a Fortnight paſs'd: In the Afternoon, contrary to Advice, he return'd to Kenſington, where he was ſcarce arriv'd, before a ſort of Controverſy aroſe in his Preſence, between his Surgeon Ronjat, a Frenchman, and his Phyſician Bidloo, a Dutchman: Bidloo having, in the firſt Place, pronounc'd, There was no Neceſſity for Bleeding, proceeded in the next, to pronounce alſo, That the Bone was ill ſet: Ronjat maintain'd the contrary: This produc'd an Examination: And That diſcover'd the Fracture was again open, either by the Motion of the Coach, or in the Moment of taking off the Bandage: (For Ronjat inſiſted as before, That he had nothing to anſwer for) And the ſame being ſoon reduc'd, his Majeſty was put to Bed, and ſlept well the whole Night.

A.D. 1701-2.

This, in part, diſſipated the Pannic which the Miſfortune of the preceding Day had excited; and no Symptoms ariſing in the Courſe of ſeveral Days, which ſeem'd to indicate any Thing worſe to enſue, a Notion ſoon obtain'd, That his Majeſty was out of Danger: And in the Monday's Gazette of March 2, an Article dated from Kenſington February 28, was inſerted, declaring in expreſs Terms, That his Majeſty was very well again.

But on the ſaid 28th of February, his Majeſty, nevertheleſs, thought fit to ſend the following Meſſage to both Houſes; to wit.

" WILLIAM R.

His Majeſty's Meſſage concerning an Union with Scotland.

His Majeſty being at preſent hinder'd, by an unhappy Accident, from coming in Perſon to his Parliament, is pleas'd to ſignify to the Houſe of Commons by Meſſage, what he deſign'd to have ſpoken to both Houſes from the Throne. His Majeſty, in the firſt Year of his Reign, did acquaint the Parliament, That Commiſſioners were authoris'd in Scotland, to treat with ſuch Commiſſioners as ſhould be appointed in England, of proper Terms for uniting the two Kingdoms, and at the ſame Time expreſs'd his great Deſire of ſuch an Union: His Majeſty is fully ſatisfy'd, That nothing can more contribute to the preſent and future Security and Happineſs of England and Scotland, than a firm and entire Union between them; and he cannot but hope, that, upon a due Conſideration of our preſent Circumſtances, there will be found a general Diſpoſition to this Union. His Majeſty would eſteem it a peculiar Felicity, if, during his Reign, ſome happy Expedient for making both Kingdoms one, might take place; and is therefore extremely deſirous, that a Treaty for that Purpoſe might be ſet on Foot; and does,

A.D. 1701-2. does, in the moſt earneſt Manner, recommend this Affair to the Conſideration of the Houſe."

Whence, it is reaſonable to imagine, That his Majeſty himſelf was already convinc'd, the Hopes given to the Public of his Recovery, were wholly without Grounds. He had been long habituated to neglect Scotland; and he was now, at laſt, become ſenſible, That, unleſs the Succeſſion of that Kingdom was alſo ſecur'd, as well as the Succeſſion of This, the very Baſis of his Plan would be defective, and conſequently the whole Superſtructure might fall to the Ground.

"The Occaſion of this, (ſays B. Burnet) was a Motion that the Earl of Nottingham had made in the Houſe of Lords, when the Act of Abjuration was agreed to: He ſaid, tho' he had differ'd from the Majority of the Houſe, in many Particulars relating to it, yet he was ſuch a Friend to the Deſign of the Act, that, in order to the ſecuring a Proteſtant Succeſſion, he thought an Union of the whole Iſland was very neceſſary; and that, therefore, they ſhould conſider how both Kingdoms might be united: But in order to this, and previous to it, he mov'd, That an Addreſs ſhould be made to the King, That he would be pleas'd to diſſolve the Parliament now ſitting in Scotland, and to call a new one: Since the preſent Parliament was at firſt a Convention, and then turn'd to a Parliament, and was continued ever ſince; ſo that the Legality of it might be call'd in queſtion: And it was neceſſary, that ſo important a Thing as the Union of both Kingdoms, ſhould be treated in a Parliament, againſt the Conſtitution of which no Exception could lye. The Motion was warmly oppos'd; for that Nation was then in ſuch a Ferment, that the calling a new Parliament, would have been probably attended with bad Conſequences: So that Project was let fall."

The very next Day after this Meſſage was ſent, a Defluxion fell upon his Majeſty's Knee, which was look'd upon as a very unfavorable Symptom: And, thereupon, a Commiſſion was iſſued to certain Peers, to give the Royal Aſſent to ſuch Bills as were ready for it: According to which, the Bill to attaint the P. P. of Wales, the Bill to puniſh Officers and Soldiers who ſhould mutiny or deſert in England or Ireland, (which had been diſcontinued ever ſince the diſbanding the Army) and the Bill for continuing the Indulgence to Quakers in relation to Oaths, did receive the Royal Aſſent on the 2d of March.

Bills paſs'd by Commiſſion.

That whole Day his Majeſty was thought to be ſomewhat better, which reviv'd the flattering but deluſive Hopes of thoſe moſt particularly who were moſt particularly intereſted in his Recovery: On the 3d, he was ſeiz'd with a ſhort Ague-Fit, which, as uſual, was follow'd by a Fever; and, theſe Fits returning every Day with more and more Violence, on the 6th his Caſe was eſteem'd deſperate: And on the 7th, as if a Demiſe of the Crown was like to endanger every Meaſure which was ſtill depending in Parliament, the Lords were preſs'd to give immediate Diſpatch to the Abjuration-Bill, and the Malt-Tax-Bill, which were ſtill before them; another Commiſſion was order'd, to give the Royal Aſſent to them; and the King being no longer able to make uſe of his own Hand, a Stamp was made uſe of to ſupply the Defect. A.D. 1701-2.

The Lords preſs'd to paſs the Abjuration Bill, &c.

At five o'Clock this Morning, the 17th that is to ſay, his Majeſty's Favorite, Lord Albemarle, arriv'd from Holland; (whither he had been ſent with a ſpecial Commiſſion, to put Things in Readineſs for an early Campaign, ſays B. Burnet, to take Care of the ſecret Papers and Projects, ſays Lamberty, entruſted with the Grand-Penſionary, that in caſe of his, the Penſioner's, Death, which had been alſo apprehended, they might not fall into bad Hands, as alſo, to procure a fit Perſon to be nominated in his Room) and, after having taken ſome Hours Repoſe by his Majeſty's Direction, was alone with him, according to the laſt of thoſe Authors, for two Hours: But the News he brought, tho' of the cordial Kind, had not a ſuitable Effect: For his Majeſty knowing the Harveſt was not to be his, was no longer curious, what Grain was to be ſown. [Tom. II. P. 64.]

The two Houſes alſo, on the ſame Day, met as uſual; and the Lords, by Meſſage, deſir'd the Commons would continue ſitting, which the Latter readily comply'd with: For if any Thing was mutter'd to the contrary, it was in ſo irregular a Manner, that no Notice was taken of it in the Journals: Notwithſtanding which, B. Burnet ſays, "Some in the Houſe of Commons mov'd for an Adjournment, tho' the Lords had ſent to them, not to adjourn for ſome Time: By this they hop'd the Bill of Abjuration ſhould be loſt: But it was contrary to all Rules to adjourn, when ſuch a Meſſage was ſent them by the Lords: So they waited till the King had ſign'd the Commiſſion and the Bills."

It appears alſo by the Journals, That the Lords having, by another Meſſage, ſignify'd, They had paſs'd the ſaid Bills, the Commons proceeded with the Buſineſs of the Houſe as uſual: That they ſat a conſiderable Time, in Expectation of being call'd up to the Houſe of Lords, to attend the Ceremonial of giving the Royal Aſſent to them: And that, upon ſome private Intimation from Court, That the Commiſſion could not be ſign'd till the King was out of the Fit, which held him for ſome Hours, they adjourn'd till Six o'Clock in the Evening: At or about which Time they met again, and the ſaid Bills receiv'd the Royal Aſſent accordingly.

The ſaid Bills paſs'd by Commiſſion.

By this Time the Court was become ſuch a Scene, as, in the moſt lively Manner, ſhew'd the Vanity of thoſe Poſſeſſions which Men, with the utmoſt Anxiety aſpire to: The Anti-Chamber ſwarm'd with Phyſicians, Courtiers and Stateſmen; all in ſuch Maſks as ſuited beſt with the ſeveral Parts they were to act: The Council was alſo extraordinarily aſſembled, to receive the Reports of the King's Phyſicians from Time to Time, and to back their Opinions, as Neceſſity ſeem'd to require: The King was appa-Aſpect of Things at Court.

A D 1701-2. rently at Extremity: Archbiſhop Teniſon and Biſhop Burnet continu'd in their Duty about him, from Saturday Morning to his laſt Gaſp: And ſome Authors aſſert, "That ſeveral of the Nobility and Gentry who waited in his Anti-chamber, were call'd in at Times, to whom he ſpoke a little, and then they withdrew": But, on the other hand, M. Lamberty is expreſs, That, except the Archbiſhop, not one Engliſh Lord had Admittance to him from the Time he took to his Chamber; and that M. d'Auverquerque and his Son, together with Dr. Bidloo, were the only Perſons who had the Care of him during that Interval: Adding, That Prince George made ſeveral Attempts to wait upon him, and met with as many Repulſes; as alſo, That the Princeſs ſending to know, whether ſhe might have Leave to ſee him, the Anſwer given was, No: And, that the Engliſh, naturally jealous of Strangers, complain'd of the Preference, to the laſt Moments of his Life, ſhewn by him to the Dutch. According to B. Burnet, there was one Exception to this Account of Lamberty's: His Words are theſe, "The Archbiſhop pray'd on Saturday ſome Time with him, but he was then ſo weak, that he could ſcarce ſpeak, but gave his Hand, as a Sign, That he firmly believ'd the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion, and ſaid, he intended to receive the Sacrament——About Five in the Morning (Sunday March 8) he deſir'd the Sacrament, and went thro' the Office with great Seriouſneſs, but could not expreſs himſelf: When this was done he call'd for the Earl of Albemarle, and gave him a (y) Charge, To take Care of his Papers. He thank'd M. d'Auverquerque for his long and faithful Service: He took Leave of the Duke of Ormond, and call'd for the Earl of Portland; but before he came, his Voice quite fail'd; ſo he took him by the Hand and carry'd it to his Heart with great Tenderneſs."

[Boyer, Kennet, Tindal]

The Duke of Ormond then was the one Engliſh Nobleman thus excepted: As to the Earl of Sunderland whom his Majeſty had formerly ſo much confided in; the Earl of Romney, ſaid to have had more of his perſonal Favour than any Engliſhman; the Earl of Jerſey ſtill in his Service as Lord-Chamberlain, and of late ſo deeply engag'd in his moſt ſecret Tranſactions; the Earl of Marlborough, on whom his military Mantle was to fall; not to mention the Lords Somers, Orford, Halifax, &c. who have been repreſented as the very Supporters of his Throne, not one of them appears to have had a Place in his Remembrance.

Death of the King.

But to expatiate no farther, when 'tis Time to drop the Curtain; the Struggle between Life and Death continu'd till about eight o'Clock in the Morning; when his Majeſty, who had been ſupported all Night in his Bed, expir'd in the Arms of one of his Pages. A. D. 1701-2.

It is generally ſuggeſted that he dy'd with great Reſignation: But, according to a Circumſtance mention'd by B. Burnet, on the Credit of Lord Portland, his Majeſty, ſeeing his Affairs had taken ſo favorable a Turn both Abroad and at Home, would have been glad to live a little longer.

This was but natural, and, therefore not to be wonder'd at: But if the Earl of Jerſey acted alſo a natural Part, in making his Court to the Princeſs of Denmark, by ſending perpetually to give an Account of his Majeſty's Breath growing ſhorter and ſhorter, Nature itſelf ſometimes wears an odious Face, and may then be regarded with Horror. [Duch. of Marlborough's Account, p. 120, 121.

Proceeding to the Diſſection of the royal Body, the ſame Hiſtorian ſays, "His Lungs ſtuck to his Side, and by the Fall from his Horſe, a Part of them was torn from it, which occaſion'd an Inflammation, that was believ'd to be the immediate Cauſe of his Death, which, probably, might have been prevented for ſome Time, if he had been let Blood." But the (z) Words of the Report ſign'd by the Phyſicians and Surgeons, do not authoriſe what he ſays, concerning the Violence done to his Lungs by the Fall: And if Bleeding was proper to relieve the Inflammation, the Faculty it muſt be preſum'd, are the beſt Judges whether a Body with ſo little Blood in it, (for in the ſaid Report it is ſaid, Few have ſo little) could have afforded ſuch an Evacuation as the Extremity requir'd.

And farther on he lets fall the following myſterious Expreſſions, "His Death would have been a great Stroke at any Time, but in OUR Circumſtances, as they ſtood at that Time, it was a dreadful one." And as this remarkable Sally is made in the ſame Breath with the Anecdote concerning the King's Deſire to live, becauſe of the favorable Turn his Affairs had taken, which occaſions a ſeeming Contradiction, it muſt be underſtood, The Writer here ſpeaks in the Name of his Party.

Laſtly: He cloſes his Account of this Reign in the following Words. "Upon his Death, ſome mov'd for a magnificent Funeral; but it ſeem'd not decent to run into unneceſſary Expence, when we were entering on a War, that muſt be maintain'd at a vaſt Charge: So a private Funeral was reſolv'd on. But for the Honour of his Memory, a noble Monument and an equeſtrian Statue were order'd. Some Years muſt ſhew, whether theſe Things were really intended, or if they were only ſpoke of, to excuſe the Privacy of his Funeral, which was ſcarce decent, ſo far was it from being magnificent." And it is true, it is call'd

(y) Kennet ſays, he gave him the Keys of his Scrutore; ſaying, He knew what to do with them; and the ſame Author alſo gives ſuch a Detail of a Dialogue between the King and Dr. Bidloo, as ſeems to argue, his Majeſty was under no ſuch Difficulty of Speaking, as is ſuggeſted by B. Burnet.

(z) Thoſe relating to the Lungs were as follow: To wit. "In the Thorax or Cheſt we obſerv'd, That the Right Side of the Lungs adher'd to the Pleura, and the Left much more: from which upon Seperation, there iſſu'd forth a Quantity of purulent or frothy Serum. The upper Lobe on the Left Side of the Lungs, and the Part of the Pleura next to it, were inflam'd to a Degree of Mortification, and this we look upon as the immediate Cauſe of his Death."

A. D. 1701-2. call'd a private Interment in the Gazette. But then the Proceding was from Kenſington: The royal Corpſe was carry'd in an open Chariot royally attended: The Pall was ſupported by ſix Dukes: Prince George of Denmark was chief Mourner, ſupported by two Dukes, and follow'd by ſixteen Earls, &c. &c. In the ſame Manner that King Charles II. had been interr'd by his Brother; except, that the Proceſſion in that Caſe was only from the Painted Chamber: And as to a noble Monument, equeſtrian Statue, &c. Time has ſhewn, That the Imputation here levell'd at Queen Anne, does not faſten upon her only.

As to a Character of this Prince, ſuch extravagant Things have been ſaid both of his good and ill Qualities, that 'tis ſcarce poſſible to give it in a ſummary Way, to the Satisfaction of Poſterity: And a proper Diſſertation upon it would open rather too wide a Field. Beſides; perhaps Impartiality would ſuggeſt many Particulars which the Prejudices ſtill ſubſiſting among us would ſcarce bear; and tho' Truth is to be preſented naked, ſome Modeſty ought to be obſerv'd in removing her Veil. Let then the Profeſſions he made, and the Wonders of every Kind aſcrib'd to him by his Admirers, be compar'd with the Facts that lie before us; and let the Tree be valu'd according to its Fruits: A Tiberius may talk in the Stile, and may be ſet forth in the Colours of a Trajan: But the Actions of a Trajan can alone juſtify that Stile, and render thoſe Colours laſting.

The State of the Kingdom, in conſequence of the arbitrary Proceedings of the Stuart-Family, and of the particular Phrenzies and Violences of King James, was certainly ſuch, as requir'd ſome extraordinary Aſſiſtance: And the extraordinary Aſſiſtance then vouchſaf'd by the Prince of Orange from what Motive ſoever, certainly deſerved the higheſt Acknowledgments, a Kingdom ſo happily reſcu'd, could make.

But, having admitted this, we may be allow'd to wiſh, perhaps, That the Conſtitution, like ſome Ships in like Manner, thus over-ſet, had been able to right itſelf; without being oblig'd to pay ſuch an extraordinary Price for Salvage.

If, by the Lapſe of the Crown, ſome Cheque was put to the Rage of the Prerogative, the Exerciſe of the diſpenſing Power, the immediate Danger of Popery, Slavery, &c. It is not eaſy to prove, that any effectual Proviſion was made againſt the like Exorbitancies for the Time to come. King Charles II. would have reſtrain'd his Succeſſor within any Limits, which the Parliament thought fit to preſcribe; the Prince of Orange would hear of none: And tho' a Clame of Rights, could not be deny'd at ſuch a Criſis, when ſo much Streſs had been laid on the original Contract between King and People, and when the Regal Government was to be renovated in Form, by the free Choice of the People, that Clame was either inſidiouſly contracted to the narroweſt Bounds poſſible, or alſo ſo looſely expreſs'd, that the Interpretation lay wholly againſt the Subject: Add to this, That the Suſpenſion of the Habeas-Corpus-Act, which follow'd ſoon after (and which K. James had never aſk'd of his Parliament, tho' they were ſitting, when the popular Duke of Monmouth was in Arms againſt him) afforded ſuch a Precedent as more than balanc'd, all that was gain'd to the Public by the ſaid Clame. A. D. 1701-2.

But the Meaſures of popular Aſſemblies are ſeldom perfect: So that in opening the Door for good, they, at the ſame Time, let in evil: And thus the Tranſfer of the Crown of England to the Stadtholder of the United Provinces, without any Proviſion firſt made, That he ſhould ceaſe to be a Servant there, the Moment he became Sovereign here, render'd the Kingdom in numberleſs Inſtances ſubſervient to the Republic: In War we had the Honour to fight for the Dutch; in Negotiations to treat for the Dutch; and, on the other Hand, the Dutch had all poſſible Encouragement given them to trade for us.

It, moreover, became a Fundamental of our Policy, That we were to be, on all Occaſions, the Quixots of Europe, and to be for ever in Queſt of Adventures, how intolerably ſoever we ſmarted, or dearly we paid for our Officiouſneſs.

And if this unnatural Biaſs render'd us ridiculous abroad, it had a very ſerious Effect at Home: What could not be juſtify'd by Reaſon, and maintain'd by Argument, was to be carry'd by Applications of another Kind. Hence, as before hinted, that Proviſion which had been made by our wiſe Anceſtors, as a Preſervative for the Conſtitution, began to operate in a quite contrary Manner. Men became ſhameleſs enough to ſolicite a Truſt, only to make their Market of it; to clamour only to be ſilenc'd, and to counterfeit public Zeal with a View only to their own private Profit.

Thus Profuſion on one Hand, neceſſitated Profuſion on the other, and ſo many various Iſſues requir'd a ſuitable Supply: But in thoſe early Times when Taxes, being Novelties, were look'd upon as Grievances, our cautious Repreſentatives, durſt not, within the Year, take out of the Pockets of the People, what the Expenditure of the Year conſum'd: And, by Way of Expedient, they had Recourſe to deficient Grants, and borrowing Clauſes upon remote Funds, &c. In Tenderneſs to themſelves, and for Fear a Notion ſhould obtain among their Fellow-Subjects, That the parliamentary Yoke was heavier than the regal, thus preferring the worſt Huſbandry that ever was put in Practice; and, thereby, furniſhing deſigning Miniſters with an Opportunity, to form Corporations of Extortioners and Uſurers; and, as a Præmium for the Sums anticipated by their Means, to tranſfer to them, the Product of Land and Sea, in Mortgage for ever and ever: As alſo to form ſuch a Coalition between the Servants of the Public, and the Managers for the public Creditors, as might

A. D. 1701-2. might in Money-Matters at leaſt, be able, to give the Law to the Public.

Again, Great and notorious as theſe Evils were, the Conſequences of them to a common Eye were ſcarce diſcernable: For the intrinſic Wealth waſted in Continent-Meaſures of all Sorts, was for the Time being replac'd, not only by ſo much Paper (which both Authority and Opinion had conſpir'd to give an equal Value to) but our nominal Stock increas'd, in exact Proportion to the Increaſe of the public Debt: So that the more we borrow'd the richer we ſeem'd to become, and the better in Condition to ſquander.

Nor was This even the worſt of theſe dangerous Innovations. For what impoveriſh'd and debauch'd the Subject aggrandiſ'd the Prince. The more Money he had annually to diſtribute, and the more Offices he had to diſpoſe of, the more his Influence, if not his Power increas'd: For no (a) Change was made in the Adminiſtration of the Revenue, tho' the Additions made to it by the free Gift of the People, render'd many additional Precautions both reaſonable and neceſſary: The Difference between Vaſſal and Dependent is but nominal: And in finding himſelf Lord of the Caſh of the Kingdom, he found himſelf altogether as conſiderable, as if he had been, as formerly He was, Lord of the Soil.

In proportion alſo, as all the great Ends and Purpoſes of Government were contracted to the narrow Views, of engroſſing Boroughs, managing Parties, purchaſing Majorities, and exploring Ways and Means to raiſe Contributions; or in fewer Words, as a Syſtem of Job-Work, made Way for a Syſtem of Corruption, all Regard to diſtributive Juſtice gradually diminiſh'd: So that a due Senſe of Conſcience and Honour came to be a Diſqualification for the public Service: The moſt pliant Tool was held the fitteſt Inſtrument of Government; and That the moſt meritorious Service, which operated moſt to the Detriment of the Commonwealth.

To enlarge, after this, on the Relaxation of Diſcipline which follow'd in the public Offices, or to ſuggeſt, that the making a ſeparate Proviſion; for the Civil Liſt contributed greatly to that Relaxation, might be thought equally unneceſſary: It being obvious enough: That the leſs the Crown was liable to the ill Conſequences of a negligent and corrupt Adminiſtration, the leſs anxious it would become for Juſtice to the Public: As alſo, that the leſs liable Accomptants were to Government-Scrutinies, the more daring and profligate they would be in the Abuſe of their Truſt. A. D. 1701-2.

It is true, the Suffering the (b) Militia to fall into Neglect and Contempt, was not originally the Growth of this Reign: But the ſuffering it to continue under that Neglect and Contempt, nay, to authoriſe it, by giving the Sanction of Law to a ſtanding Army, in Time of Peace, was: Till then the Parliament of England could never be induc'd, to allow their Sovereign to miſtruſt either the Loyalty or Bravery of his Subjects, or to give the Sword ſo abſolutely out of their own Power, that they could upon no Extremity whatſoever, recover it for their own Uſe. And, ſurely, no Abſurdity was ever more glaring, than to inſiſt on the Right of Reſiſtance in Caſe of Oppreſſion, to found a Government on that Right, and then to part with the Poſſibility of deriving any Benefit from it.

But to cloſe this melancholy Theme, the general Reſult of all theſe Infatuations, Perverſions and Corruptions, was, That the Authority and Dignity of Government itſelf ſeem'd to be in the Wane: That Virtue could no longer keep itſelf in Countenance: That Glory ceas'd to be the Object of Ambition: That public Spirit and Love of Country were in a Manner extinguiſh'd: That Wealth, Power and Titles were thought worth attaining upon any Terms; and the only reſpectable Things howſoever attain'd: That, the Great abandoning themſelves to Luxury and Venality, in Contempt of Opinion, Cenſure, and every moral, political and religious Conſideration, the Little grew corrupt, profligate and worthleſs, by their pernicious Exemples: And that the national Effort which had been made, in concert with the Prince of Orange for the glorious Purpoſe of rendering the Conſtitution immortal, ſeem'd to have worn out every Principle of Strength, Vigour and Virtue, which ſhould have given it the requiſite Solidity.

(a) "Your Lordſhip, I am ſure, ſees at once, how much a due Reflection on the Paſſages of former Times, as they ſtand recorded in the Hiſtory of our own, and of other, Countries, would have deterr'd a free People from truſting the ſole Management of ſo great a Revenue, and the ſole Nomination of thoſe Legions of Officers employ'd in it, to their chief Magiſtrate. There remain'd, indeed no Pretence for doing ſo, when once a Salary was ſettl'd on the Prince and the public Revenue was no longer in any Senſe, his Revenue, nor the public Expence, his Expence. Give me Leave to add, that it would have been, and would be ſtill, more decent with regard to the Prince, and leſs repugnant, if not more conformable, to the Principles and Practice of our Government, to take this Power and Influence from the Prince, or to ſhare it with him: than to exclude Men from the Privilege of repreſenting their Fellow-Subjects, who would chuſe them in Parliament, purely becauſe they are employ'd and truſted by the Prince." Lord Bolingbroke's Letters on the Study and Uſe of Hiſtory. Vol. I. p. 47.

(b) See an excellent Treatiſe on this important Subject, lately publiſh'd in four Letters, by a noble and accompliſh'd Author.

The End of the SECOND VOLUME.

INDEX.

TO THE

SECOND VOLUME.

N. B. The letter n. refers to the notes at the bottom.

A.

ABSENTEES, in Scotland, to lose their seats in parliament 427
Abuses, in the victualling of the navy 177. of offices 313
Action, a brisk one at Steinkirk, where the Allies are repulsed 365. a brave one by a detachment of the Liegois 370. a brisk one between the Imperialists and Turks 676 and 757
Acton, Richard, Mr. examination of 554
Acts of toleration, n. 75, 76. of the estates of Scotland 106. of settlement in Ireland repealed 114. of attainder 115, n. 116. to remove papists, and take away hearth money 147. of grace, and for the queen to exercise the government during the king's absence 200. for reseinding the king's supremacy of the church in Scotland 212. of the lords and commons to the king and queen 246. for doubling the excise 249. to encourage shipbuilding 464. to establish a trading company in Scotland 579. to restrain the exportation of wool 780.
Address, of the lords to the prince of Orange, n. 4. of both houses to the prince 27. to call a convocation 74. of the commons against the French king 80. in favour of Irish protestants 127. of the lords for the arrears due, n. 140. of the bishops 170. on the state of the nation stifled 181. of the navy 217. from Cornish tinners, and the lieutenancy of Middlesex 227. from London 228. of the lords by way of advice 396. of both houses upon the Irish complaints 405. of the city of London 464. of condolence from the lords and commons 542. of the lords concerning the navy 565. of the Scotch parliament on the massacre of Glencoe 575. A joint one against the Scots African company 623. another concerning the plot 632. of the commons and lords, worthy notice, 680. a particular one 767. of the commons against the Irish woollen manufactory 780. of the Irish parliament to the lords justices, an artful one 792. of the commons relating to foreign envoys 809. of the lords concerning the Scotch settlement 842. of the Scotch parliament to the king 896. another, the contents of 898. of the commons on the memorial from the states 914. of the house of lords, upon a letter from France being intercepted 915. of the lords against the partition treaty 932. of the commons against it 934. a particular one of the commons 943, 944. from the grand juries, the contents thereof, 998. of the Irish protestants, against the act o reſumption 1011, 1012
Adey, Mr. his declaration 1014
Admirals, conduct of, screen'd, not justified 470
Aeth, furrenders to the French 734
Affair of Grants, a notable one 613
Aghrim, battle of 299, 300
Albemarle, earl of, the sole favourite, 793
Alehouses licenſed 182.
Alliance, a perpetual one 996, 997
Allies, their difference 753
Alterations in the liturgy inſiſted upon by the diſſenters, n. 168. in the cabinet 1005
Ambaſſador, French, ordered to depart 6
Anderton's remarkable caſe, petition, ſentence, and death 420 to 423
Anecdote, a particular one 863
Anjou, duke of, declar'd king of Spain 877. declar'd at Bruſſels in form 879. prepares to take poſſeſſion of his kingdoms 899. ſee Spain.
Ann, princeſs of Denmark, ſubmits to the prince of Orange 9. allowed a penſion for life 139. her penſion teſtified 180. difference between her and the queen 330. her anſwer to the queen concerning lady Marlborough, n. 331. under diſgrace 391. over-look'd in the regency 568. n. ibid. her amaſing compoſedneſs at the death of her ſon 885. accuſed of ill deſigns 886
——, a ſeventy gun ſhip burnt 226
Annandale, earl of, gives information againſt his party 215. accuſed by them of baſeneſs 216
Anſwers to king James's memorials preſented at the congreſs, n. 730, 731
Apology, remarkable one 758. for France by by the Dutch 760
Argyle, duke of, a friend to the eſtabliſhment 210. created a duke 899
Army, Engliſh, croſs the Boyne 219. agents of, ſeveral committed 545. a ſtanding one eſtabliſh'd 763. a ſupply voted for, and the number of the ſame 769. debt of 771. reaſons for a ſtanding one 804. and againſt it 805. a ſtanding one complain'd of, and the reaſons for ſuch complaint 804
Arran, earl of, his ſpeech 18. ſent to the Tower 63
Articles of grievance 76. between the French king and James, n. 83, 84. agreed upon by the confederates 265. of intelligence remarkable, over look'd by the miniſtry 457. againſt the duke of Leeds 557. between England and France on concluding the peace 754, 755. a ſecret one between England and France 858. a puzzling one 927. ten, againſt the earl of Orford 954. againſt lord Somers 955 to 957. againſt lord Halifax 960
Arnauld, his reaſons for not accepting the crown of Poland 893
Artifice, a court one 352
Aſhley, lord, his diſorder in the houſe of commons of ſervice to his cauſe, n. 613
Aſhton, Mr. ſeiz'd for a plot 254. his trial and defence 259. found guilty, and executed 260
Aſia, nations of, a ſtory concerning them 231
Aſſociation, an, propos'd and ſign'd 632. brought to the king 654
Athlone beſieg'd, and carried by ſtorm 297, 298
Attainders revers'd 142
Attempt, a treacherous one 278
Auguſtus, prince of Hanover, killed by the Turks 278
Avaux, the French ambaſſador of, his artful memorial to the States 911, 912. another 913. his anſwer to Mr. Stanhope's propoſals 927. and memorial to the States, n. 948 his parting memorial 979, 980. and final leave 982
Avignon, given to the church 164
Auxiliaries, Britiſh, ſent to Flanders 154

B.

BADEN, prince of, his juſt reſentment, and repulſe of the French, 436. comes to England 497
Ballymore, ſurrender'd to the Engliſh 297
Bank of England, ſubſcribers of, made a corporation 480. a deſign againſt it 566
Barcelona bombarded by the French 281. and afterwards ſurrender'd to them 951
Barret, captain, his invincible reſolution 437
Bart de, the famous adventurer, his expedition 504
Barton, captain, caſe of, n 117
Baſs in Scotland, ſurrender of, and the men pardon'd 496
Bates, Charles, examination of 554, 555
Bavaria, elector of, made governor of Flanders 337, 338. electoreſs of, miſcarries of a ſon 601. elector of, his conduct and courage 605. his caſe 871. defection of, aſcrib'd to the tories 879. his artful conduct 880
Baxter, the muſti of the preſbyterians, writes againſt the church of England 72
Bearcroft, caſe of, n. 184
Beeſton, governor of Jamaica, his remarkable letter to Nevil 743, 744. and proclamation againſt the Scots at Darien 817
Belcarres, earl of, his account of the convocation in Scotland 91 to 93. impriſon'd 99
Belgrade taken by ſtorm 237. beſieg'd by the Imperialiſts 453. relieved by the Turks 454
Bellomont, lord, impeaches lord Conlugby and Porter, and loſes his place 493
Benbow, commodore, made admiral 665
Bentinck, Mr. the greateſt favourite 21
Berkeley, lord, his fruitleſs attempts 590, 591
Berham, a plotter, depoſition of 635
Beveridge, Dr. refuſes the mitre 269
Bias, a French one to the kingdom of Spain 799
Bill, of toleration to the diſſenters, n. 75. for the ſecurity of his majeſty's perſon, &c. 654. two not carried through 667. to encourage the coinage 613. againſt Sir John Fenwick, committed 708. ſeveral remarkable ones loſt 717. a particular one for regulating elections 718. one relating to the army, particulars of 806. of the land-tax, and reſumption of the forfeited eſtates tack'd together 842. one to prevent the growth of popery 844. to prohibit the wear of India ſilk, and to punish plantation governors 850. of the ſucceſſion, the plan of 921, 922. diſpleaſing to France 924. to attaint the p. prince of Wales its progreſs 1016. abjuration, an account of 1017
Biſhops, eight, decline taking the oaths 67. ſix ſuſpended for refuſing the oaths 166. accuſed of being concerned in the jacobite plot 230. proved of 231, 232. refuſe to ſign the aſſociation 654
Blaire, a plotter, his depoſition 635
Board of trade, report of 1010
Bohim, licenſer, reprimanded by the parliament 400
Bolles, Sir John, made chairman of the committee to name a ſucceſſor to the crown, and why 911
Bonne, city of, beſieg'd 157. taken 161
Boſſu, count, his remarkable caſe 989. and eſcape out of the Baſtile 990
Bouflers, marſhal, arreſted 606
Bouillon, cardinal, refuſed admittance at Liege 498
Bourk, John, Eſq; his agreement 855
Box, Mr. grocer, knighted 165
Boyne, battle of, 219
Brady, ſeiz'd with letters from James 58
Braddom's relation concerning the murder of the earl of Eſſex, n. 14
Bradalbin, earl of, his ſcheme 332, 333. accuſed and pardoned 577
Brandebourg, elector of, his ambition, and character 867
Braſs-money forc'd upon the proteſtants in Ireland, n. 120
Breach, between the royal fiſters, a laſting one 181
Breſt, attempted by the Engliſh, but without ſucceſs, 501 to 504
Brewſter, Sir Francis, narrative of 403, 404
Brokers, and ſtock-jobbers, riſe of 483
Bruſſels, bombarded by the French 601
Burchill, Mr. his behaviour, and honeſt reply 425
Burnet, Dr. his arguments againſt the king 22 to 24. made biſhop of Saliſbury 59. impoſed upon 85. his cloſet-converſation with the king, going to Ireland; alſo, a ſtory relative thereto, 217, n. ibid. his paſtoral letter burnt 309. a ſtory of 536. his account of a council of trade animadverted upon 625.

ceaſeleſs

censur'd 688. complaint of 708. his account of Smith's remarkable case 709. and of lord Monmouth's practice on Sir John Fenwick 711. corrected 712. his reflections on the peace 762. an account of, as tutor to the duke of Gloucester 833. his account of the treaty between England, France and Holland, concerning the succession of the crown of Spain 858. his account exploded 859. a sketch of his character 889. the doctor confuted 901. his account of the new parliament 909. a partial one, and his acknowledgement of purchasing elections 910. his misrepresentation of the proceedings of parliament censur'd and greatly blam'd 914. his dates concerning debates of the commons examin'd and confuted 919, n. ibid. his remarks upon the times 1002. n. ibid. his account of the confuted 1017
Buying of men, the practice unavoidable 192

C.

CABINET, the general state of 767
Caermarthen, marquis of, a design against 252. his mistake 695
Calais bombarded without success 655
Calmet, Mr. his dying words, n. 220
Cambel, James, captain, his marriage made void, n. 253
Campbell, Sir Colin, administred the oaths to laird Glenco 571
———, captain, his perfidy and barbarity 334
Canalles, de marquis, the Spanish resident, his memorial against the Scotch company 817. his insolent remonstrance 830. ordered to depart the kingdom 821
Cannel and Dormer, apprehended, tried, and fined 419, 420
Capel, lord, his character and promotion 580. complimented by the parliament 582. his death 677
Carlisle, deputy earl marshal, his strange order, 1064
Carstairs, a chaplain, his power and character 579
Carter, admiral, amuses the French 349. kill'd 365
Carthagena, plunder'd by the French 741. and the fire-ships 742
Castlemain, earl of, sent to the tower by the Whigs 173
Catinat, the French general, his mysterious letter to the duke of Savoy 660
Cautions to the electors of members 608
Changes at court 192
Charlestoy taken by the French 446
Charnock, a plotter, tried and executed 640, 641
Chichester, bishop of, his death bed declaration 1066
Child, Sir Josiah, complain'd of 316. to be no longer governor of the East India company 317
Chittoghers, St. recovered from the French 244
Church, Scottish, without government 107
———, danger of, from a popish prince 532
———, history, account of, n. 7, 8. see Martyrs
———, Charles, a member, committed 177
Circumstance, a remarkable one 945
Civil list inquired 685
Claims in favour of the Spanish succession 794
Clarendon, earl of, seiz'd, and pardoned 602
Clergy, the Thomas, his objection 172
Clergy added 550
Clergy and nonconformists, rivals 72. pretensions limited their tythes 118. of England severely censur'd, n. 166
Clun, ill use of 564 to 566
Cologne, elector of, chosen prince bishop of Liege 699
Comercio, the prince, sends a challenge to the duke of Savoy 624
Commissioners of the navy, taken into custody 177
———, of hackney coaches accused of bribery 248
———, for the forfeited estates in Ireland, rewarded 840. of prizes, sent to the Tower 926. of prizes, the sale of 975
Committee of articles, rise of, and grievance, n. 100, 101
———, on trade, report of 715, 716. 887. permitted to state facts relating to the partition treaty, who, and their report 950
Common, house of, the grand resolve 35. thanks of to the clergy, &c. 38. not permitted to assist at the coronation 71. appoint a committee of grievances 76. their addresses concerning Ireland 176. unanimity and resolutions of 193. resolutions of, concerning the India company 322. pass'd a vote of thanks to admiral Russel, and other sea officers, with addresses to their majesties 392. representation of, concerning abuses in the army 545. resolutions and addresses of 680. their vigorous resolutions 681. in disgrace with the publick 717. resolution of, concerning the army 891. address of, relating to the foreign troops 899. proceedings of, vindicated 810. their address upon the navy accounts 812. remonstrance of, in the name of an address 830. proceedings of, relating to justices 843. refuse to concur in the address against the Scots 849. divided in their sentiments about peace and war 911. their form of thanks to sir Edward Seymour 926. advice of, to the king 936. affronted, and how 947. severity of, censured, ibid. address of, to remove the impeach'd lords 952. their conference with the house of lords, concerning lord Somers and others 959. answer of, to the message of the lords 960. another to the same 961. answer of, to the demand of the lords 962. the unanimous address of 965. objections of, to the proposal of the lords 964, 965. resolutions of, relating to lord Haversham 966. reasons of, why they can not proceed to the trial of lord Somers 967, 968. their particular order, ibid. the reply of, concerning the impeached lords 969. and resolutions of 970. reasons of, for rejecting the lord's amendments of the bill of accounts 975. conduct of, applauded 977. address of 1007. and compliance in raising supplies 1008. their frugal measures and address, in favour of half-pay officers 1009. laudable proceedings of 1010. proceedings of, on their rights and privileges 1015.
Common-wealth, comparison of 5
Company of trade in Scotland, proceedings of 780. and petitions 790, 791. conduct and defence of 816. relinquish their project and claims 824. their resentment, address and petition 825, n. ibid. their letters to the secretary of Scotland, and lord chancellor 847. also one to lord Basil Hamilton 848
Comprehension bill, the danger of, n. 72
Conditions offer'd Denmark 827
Confederacy against Sweden explain'd 862
Confederate princes, presumption of 276. dispute about the command 432. dilatory proceedings of 437. separate interests of 434. resent the French manifesto 447
Conference between the lords and commons 45, to 49. between the electors of Saxony and Brandenbourg 542
Conferences between Portland and Boufflers 735. the effects of 739. two between the English and French ministers concerning lord Melfort's letter 917, 918
Coningsby, lord chief justice, cruelty of 335
———, lord, and others accused of frauds in Ireland 404. pardoned 492. and impeached by lord Bellomont 493. his fetzures in Ireland 835
Consideration, a worthy one 4
Contests, between the whigs and tories 181 to 184. between Denmark and Holland about the seizing of ships 496. a strong one on the choice of a speaker 803, 804
Conti, prince of, proclaim'd king of Poland 737. refuted admittance into Dantzick 750
Controverfy concerning the succession 151. of the clergy 269
Convention, plan of 21. between Spain and Savoy, substance of 674
Converts, made by new courtiers 44
Cook, Sir Thomas, sent to the Tower 549. obtains a bill of indemnity 550
———, Mr. his trial 650 to 652. banished 653
Coronation-oath, what 97
Courtiers, new, two sorts of 61
Cranborn, a plotter, trial of 647
Crawford, lord, persecutes the presbyterian clergy, n. 107
Crosby, Mr. imprison'd 523
Crown of Scotland tender'd to king William and queen Mary 96
Cullford, Mr. accused and dismissed 406
Customs, the product of, 1010
Cutts, lord, his ruffnels and wound 604
Cyclut reduc'd by the Venetians 515
Czar Peter, his first taking arms 583. reduces Afoph 675. visits England 762. influence of 889.

D.

DALRYMPLE, lord Stairs, made president of the council 59, n. ibid. his false account of the Scottish customs and laws, n. 105. his letters and bloody orders concerning laird Glenco and others 572, 573. exceeded the king's orders 574
Danby, earl of, discontented 58 and 63. saying of 64
Darien, the history of, ordered to be burnt 846, n. ibid.
Dartmouth, lord, sent to the Tower 327
Dathwood, Sir Samuel, subscription of 9
Davenant, Dr. his character of the triumvirate 785, 786. and of a modern whig 704
Dauphin, of France, his remarkable saying 899
Dearth, a great one in France 436
Debates in parliament concerning the regency 35 to 37. about the validity of the parliament 60, 61. relating to duties on tea, &c. 145. on the comprehension project 168. on the case of the earl of Marlborough and others 389, 390. on the naturalization bill 490, 491. on the report concerning the East India company 556. on Sir John Fenwick's case 691. and trial 693 to 700. on committing the bill 905 & feq. of both houses concerning the partition treaty 930
Declaration of rights 54. of the Empire and the states against France 81. in the name of king William by the duke of Schomberg 377
Defence, a desperate one, of three Dutch men of war 459
Deficiencies, an account of, n. 681, 682
Delaware's deposition of the plot 628
Delaval, admiral, knighted 217. burns three French capital ships 357
Demand of the government, an enormous one 674
Denmark, king of, his death 826. king of, rejects the mediation of Lewis 866. endeavors to amuse Sir George Rook 868
Deserted, more proper than abdicated 57
Devonshire, earl of, his fine voted illegal 142
De-witting, an adopted word for murdering 352
Difference between episcopacy and presbytery, n. 274
Dilent of twelve lords to the bill of rights 150
Dillenters espoused by the king 67. struggle against kneeling 73
Disputes about the East India trade 515 to 517
Distillery, English, encouraged 230
Dopping, Dr. his glorious opposition 118
Dorset, earl of, bred'd 719
Drummond, lieutenant, story of, n. 525
Duncomb, Francis, bribes the members 717. sent to the Tower 728, n. ibid.
Dundee, viscount of, threatned to be murdered 92. his letter to the States 98. exploits of 107. his death and character 108
Dunkirk, attempted by the English and Dutch 521
Dutch, the, duke, his barbarous expedition 158
Dutch, their loss at Beachy fight 226 worsted by the French at Fleurus 233. the gallant behaviour of their infantry 234. their memorial to the French king 877. their superiority and benefit. 1023
Dyckvelt, M. his conduct and opinion of the French 821, 822

E.

EARTHQUAKE, a dreadful one 430. a description thereof 431
East India company, vindication of 319. answer to the propositions and resolutions receiv'd from the earl of Nottingham, principal secretary of state, n. 323 to 325. forfeit their charter 485. answer of the merchants petitions 480. get a new charter 480. their conduct enquir'd into 548 case of 772. petition of 773. a new one fet up 774. the old one oppose it 775. two companies establish'd by authority 845. both accused of corruption 910. the old, application of to the commons 976
Edinburgh, bishop of, his allegations 95
Elbing seiz'd by the electors of Brandenburgh 827
Elections, in Ireland, management of 109. in favour of the tories 190
Ellenberger, general, his conduct and death 598
Elliot fein'd on suspicion of a plot 624
———, a master of a ship, his escape and reward 522, 523
Emperor of Germany rejects the offers of the Turks, and prepares for two wars 1, 2. his reply to the pope concerning a peace with France 432. his ulterior paper 723. the [illegible] of his minister at the partition [illegible] 800. declines the treaty 872, 873. his [illegible] and weak condition of the [illegible] described 900. his claim to the Spanish [illegible] 900. forced to borrow money 9[illegible] Empire of Germany divided in itself 937
Engl[illegible]

INDEX.

England had no minister at Vienna at the signing of the partition treaty 860
English, worsted at sea 226. infamy of, in their trade with the subjects of the Great Mogul 317. n. ibid. loss of, near Cadiz, n. 420. 460. loss of, by a storm 484. their real disposition 882
Ernest Augustus, duke of Hanover, made an elector of the Empire 380. n. ibid.
Estates, in Ireland, forfeited, to be sold 247
Exception, a material one 805
Exceptions to the bill of indemnity 135
Exchequer bills, the fall of 919
Excise doubled, with the king's speech thereupon 249. pernicious to the kingdom 384
Expedients concerning the recoinage 679
Expedition, a ceremonial one 208
Expence of disbanding the army 811. n. ibid.
Expression, a familiar one, used in Kent 946
Eugene, prince, his conduct and success 757. 758

F.

FACTION prevails in the naval affairs 662
Falkland, lord, complain'd of publickly 404. reprimanded 470. sent to the Tower 472
Fast, a monthly one, in Scotland 426
Fenwick, Sir John, a plotter, taken 678. his case 686. and practices to bribe the witnesses 687. his informations presented to the commons 688. his answer not satisfactory and the errors of his council 689. brought to the bar, and his charge read 690. his trial 692. debates thereupon 693 to 700. his defence 701 to 704. is executed 714. his paper, which confutes Burnets account 715
Ferment in the council 58. a great one in Edinburgh 896
Ferguson, a malecontent, pardoned and rewarded 216. his character and charge against secretary Trenchard 224. 285
Fight at sea, off Beachy 226. between the English and French 554 to 556
Fines of the smugglers, how applied 782
Firebrace, Sir Basil, examination of 553. re-examined 554. 555
Flag-officers, opinions of 560
Fleets, English, their narrow escape 208. and bad condition 455
Fleurus, battle of 233
Foley, Paul, an account of him 415
France, artful deportment of 356. n. ibid. favoured by the pope 388. memorial of, concerning Savoy 540. her power and conduct 545. and design upon England 546. courts of, annoy'd by the English 804. king of, accused of knowing the conspiracy against king William 631. court of, the general conduct of 659. declaration of 751. intrigues of, at the court of Spain 800, 801. memorial of, to the Spanish 802. conduct of in relation to Sweden 803. their only view 884. a false alarm, and pretence of, to fit out a fleet 865, 866. displeased with the proceeding of the English and Dutch 869. her troops take pollession of the barrier towns 904. and the reasons why 906. court of, the behaviour of 928
France, king of, revokes the edict of Nants 815. his professions and rasollery 861. n. ibid. his reply to the Swedish ambassador 864. his reasons for not assisting Denmark or Sweden 865. and precautions of 866. conduct of, different from England 869. answer of, to the Dutch memorial 877 to 879. disposition of, shewn 880. and of the other side 881. 882
French, intrigues of 152. their horrid cruelties and devastations 155. 156. 158. intrigues of 204. n. ibid. send assistance to king James in Ireland 208. burn Tanmouth, and return to Brest 229. n. ibid. power of 232. and treacherous design upon Mentz 287. the cruelty of 295. n. ibid. attempts of, several 429. and dispositions for opening the campaign 454. cruel behaviour of 456. famous for intelligence 455. ill conduct of 459. barbarity of, at Palamos 505. a spy burnt alive 520. their attempts on Jamaica 522. intractable 723. sentiments of, upon the flatterers memorial 981. arms, break up their camp 813. companies, their several establishments, and grants 987. count of, in distress for money, ibid. 988. n. ibid. prohibit all English commodities, and manufactures 990
Fuller, an impostor, pilloried 527

G.

GAFNEY, hang'd on the carriage of a gun 535
Galway taken by the English 301
Garrisons, Dutch, their importance 902. put under French troops ibid.
George, prince of Denmark, naturalis'd 71. serv'd as a volunteer in Ireland 221. his design of going to sea, and forbid by the queen 330. complies with the king's order unwillingly 829. his debt consider'd by parliament 842
Germanic body united against France 153
Ginkle, general, received the thanks of the parliament for his conduct in reducing Ireland 328. see Athlone
Glencarry, earl of, his case 783
Glencoe, massacre of 332 to 334. and narrative of 571
Glocester, duke of, an account of his death 884. 885
Godfrey, Mr. killed 599. n. ibid.
——, Michael, his project, and arguments for and against 473, 474
Godolphin, lord, made head of the treasury 250. left out of the regency 719. made lord high treasurer 891
Goodman, a plotter, his deposition 659. and escape 688
Goods, raised and seiz'd by proclamation 121, n. ibid.
Goor, colonel, bravery of 297
Gordon, duke of, master of Edinbourg castle 88. his letter to the States of Scotland 89. refuses to fire upon the town 98. surrenders up the castle upon terms 107
Government, justice of, exposed 577
Grafton, duke of, mortally wounded, n. 243
Grandval's conspiracy, account of 368 to 370
Grants of the government called for by the commons 813. and appropriations for the year 1701, 972.
Granville, colonel, his honest declaration 708
Gravelle, Mr. French ambassador, departs privately from Poland 204
Greenwich hospital established 656
Greibe, Courade, his remarkable case 716, 717
Grifin, lord, case of, n. 187
Guy, Henry, a member, sent to the Tower 545
Gwyan, Sir Rowland, disgrac'd and depriv'd of his post 339

H.

HABEAS corpus act suspended 62
Hackney coaches first licensed 481
Halle, taken and pillaged by the French 276
Hallewyn, Mr. his intrigue with France detected 435
Halifax, marquis of, made keeper of the seals, and character of 58. blamed 134. an advocate for war 467
Hamilton, colonel, betrays his trust 15. is taken prisoner in Ireland 221
——, Sir Robert, sent to the Tower 63
——, duke of, his behaviour 16. and portrait of 17. chosen president of the convention 88. his opinion 92. made the king's commissioner 125. takes the oaths 677
Hampden, Mr. address of 80. father and son oppose each other 181
Hampton-court, enlarged by king William 165
Hanover, prince of, his narrow escape 161. court of, its conduct 915
Harcourt, Mr. his brave reply to the solicitor general 705
Harcourt, de marquis, his intrigues, and pretences at the court of Spain 800, 801
Harley, Mr. an account of 415
——, Robert, his speech on Fenwick's case 704. chosen speaker 1605 n. ibid.
Harlow, captain, his over-sight 746
Harris, a plotter, his deposition 637
Hastings, colonel, accused of corruption 546
Haversham, lord, his answer to the charge of commons 971
Hawkers and pedlars to take out licences 586
Hearth-money, duty taken off 65
Heidesdorf, general, conduct of 435. his sentence and death 436
Henry, de Beaumont, his disgrace, n. 828
Henrichment, prince of, taken 374
Herbert William, his protest 43.
Herbert, admiral, his expedition, defeat, and character 86, 87
Hesse, prince of, betray'd 740
Heydelberg, storm'd by the French 436
Highland chiefs accept the king's pardon 338
Highlanders afraid of English dragoons 108. in arms for king James 210. dessated 212.
Hody, Dr. character of, and writings 2170. n. ibid.
Holt, lord chief justice, his upright dealing 425. censur'd 643. refuseth the seals 854
Hooper, Mr. examined 838
Horn, count, his conduct question'd 430
How, Mr. his proposal 703. and speech in behalf of Fenwick 706
How, John, Esq; story of 336. his report concerning the papists 844
Howard, Sir Robert, his observation 47
Hume, earl of, made close prisoner 276. recommitted with others 428
Hungerford, Mr. chairman of a committee, expell'd 547
Hunt, James, his deposition concerning the plot 638
Huy, taken by the French 439. retaken by the confederates 521

I.

JACOBITES in Scotland take the oaths, and why 211. their plot 227. club of, their liturgy and memorial to the French king 230. n. ibid. complaint of, against the new settlement, n. 262. charg'd with being in the French secret 347. discontents of 416, 417. and censure of the court party 425. designs of, as proved by letters 427, 428. discontented, and recommend a peace with France 467. n. ibid. insolence of, and why 885 how many sorts of, and whence deriv'd 892
James, king, his letter to the lords of the council 24. and expedition to Ireland 25. is favourably receiv'd 84. his proclamations in Ireland 85. his remarkable saying 86. and letter to the states of Scotland 91. his plausible speech to the Irish parliament 109. and declaration of 110. his protections useless 117. his arbitrary method of raising money 120. and ingratitude to the clergy 122. unable to redress grievances 125. marches to fight the English 218. his flight and speech to the magistrates of Dublin 222. sails for France 223. invites several lords and ladies to his queen's labour 349. n. ibid. his declaration to the English 350, 351. saw part of the French fleet destroy'd by the English 357. his letter to the French king, n. 361 and declaration to the people of England on a proposition from the disaffected 418. his manifesto to the catholic princes 726 to 728. his memorial to the protestants 728 to 730. protests against the peace 758. his resentment against the Scots 897 his grants called for by the commons 972 not refused 973. his death 900. the cause of his misfortunes 901. his son proclaimed at St. Germains, ibid. his will, ibid.
Jane, Dr. chose prolocutor to the convocation 169. by the anti-court clergy 169
Jeffries, lord, his death, n. 142
Jersey, earl of, made lord chamberlain 856. his error 875. his influence and appellation 890
Jews taxed 175
Imperialists defeated by the Turks in Albania 202. in Transilvania 237. the ultimatum of 752. and remonstrance 752. protest of 753
Incident, a remarkable one 867
Indictment, fraudulent, enquired into 778
Inisfallen man, valour of, and success 127. another exploit of 149
Innocent II. pope, his death and title 164
Inscription over a gate of the castle of Namur 595
Instance for history, a new one 472. of subordination, three 526. an extraordinary one 970
Instructions sent to Mr. Stanhope at the Hague 918, 919
John Sobieski, king of Poland, his death 673
Johnston, Samuel, his arguments against a standing army 765
Johnston, secretary for Scotland, his design against Dalrymple, master of Stairs 570
Jolly, Mr. his answer to the king and regency of Spain 902
Jones, an Irishman, story of, n. 239
Joseph, archduke, chose king of the Romans 201
Jog, Mr. his case 404
Ireland, its independancy on England consured 779
Irish, the insolence of 85. their miserable condition, being plunder'd on all sides 242. 244. totally routed 300. unfortunate under two kings 307. cattle and corn prohibited 429, n. ibid.
Judges ordered to attend the lords to answer for offences 142, n. ibid. not to buy and sell offices 328
Julian, colonel, his valour poorly rewarded 285

KEALING

K.

KEALING, judge, his letter to Sir John Temple 12, 13
Kidd, captain, expedition of 831. proceedings on his affair 845. motion on his grant overruled 942, n. ibid.
Killegrew, captain, kill'd 587
Killikrankie, action at. 108
King and Keys, two plotters, trial and execution of 640, 641
Kingston, a trepanner, his character 525
Knight, Sir John, the younger, his speech against the naturalization bill 491. printed by the tory malecontents, and disown'd by Sir John 492
Knightly, a plotter, his deposition 637. and case 649
Kirk, major general, blamed 126

L.

LAMBERTY, his assertation not to be depended upon 993
Lancashire plot, account of 523 to 528. gentleman's complaint of 560. drop'd 561
Lancaster, dutchy of, annex'd to the crown 313
Land-bank, an account of 658. blamed, and for what 667
Langallarie, de M. fiction of, in relation to Lewis's letter to king William 883. his account of treaties between France, Spain and an elector confuted 899
Lanier, Sir John, besieges the castle of Edinburgh 107
League, a triple one 709. n. ibid.
Leeds, duke of, oppoles the bill against Sir Thomas Cooke 549. his speech to both houses, on being impeached for corruption 556. and defence 558. begs the impeachment might be discharg'd 559. his trial drops with shame to himself 560. continued head of the council 568. his impeachment dismissed 672
Leganez, de, marquis, his apology for a neutrality 674
Legion, a paper so called, an abstract of 1093
Lemster, duke of, his expedition 371
Leopold, emperor, character of 286
Letter, a circular one, concerning the forfeited estates in Ireland 1011
Letters, left by king James, not read 4. a remarkable one, n. 77. from the emperor to the king of Poland, n. 151. upon the dissolution of the parliament, n. 189, 190. to and from the duke of Savoy to marshal Catinat, concerning a separate alliance 669, 670. a ballancing one 763. concerning the East India trade 774. one called legion 952, n. 953. it put the commons into a ferment ibid.
Leving, Sir Richard, his examination 837. committed to the Tower 839
Levington, colonel, accused of barbarity 576
Lewis, king of France, his ambition and pretensions 150. and demands upon the duke of Savoy 265. causes a medal to be struck after the taking of Mons 267. his letter to the archbishop of Paris 363. and his abrupt saying on hearing of the supplies granted king William 398. sends his mandate to the archbishop of Paris 436. his pompous march 437. sends a letter of thanks to the army 520. his generosity to his officers 606. addresses the Dutch for a peace 661. orders a solemn te deum 674. his letter concerning the surrender of Ath 734. his mandate upon the conclusion of the peace with England, &c. 761. his letter to M. Briord, concerning the partition treaty 839. expectations of 870. is jealous of the maritime powers 873, 874. his conduct against them 876. his sentiments of the Dutch and English, and other princes 880, 881. his advice to king James 897. salutes his grandson, king of Spain 899. his answer to the States upon acknowledging his grandson's accession 913. his engagement to king James 990. his apology for acknowledging king James's son 991
Leyton, captain, complain'd of 177
Liege, city of, compell'd to take part against France 535. bombarded by the French 277. a disposition in 438. dean of, carried off by the French 995
Lillington, colonel, vindication of 591
Limerick besieg'd 140. burn'd and bravely defended by the very women 241. siege thereof raised 242. besieged a second time 301. capitulation of, with its articles 303 to 307
Lippa, taken by the Turks 584
Lift, civil, separated from other services 770. an account of it 776
Littleton, Sir Thomas, chose speaker 804. declines the chair 908
Liturgy of the church vindicated 169. a new one 230
Livonia, war in, an account of 888, 889
Lock, Mr. his resignation 891
Lodgment, a large one made by the allies 605
London, city of, lieutenancy thereof restor'd 191. and all its ancient rights and privileges for ever 199. lends the court money 464. complaint of 592. its address wonderfully set aside 948
———, bishop of, his mild reply to Dr. Jane 169
London-derry, a city, siege of 85. miseries of the besieged 124. and resolution 125, 126. siege raised 126 petitions of 778, 779
Lonsdale, viscount, made keeper of the privy seal 814. his death 890
Lords, house of, the enquiry 177. the advice of to the king, and protest against a foreign general 395, 396. protest against Fenwick's bill 709. their proceedings upon the succession bill 923. sixteen, their descent, and protest against the partition treaty 930. their address upon the same 932. their address, in opposition to one of the house of commons 944, 945. address of, concerning the states 951. concession of to the commons 960 demand of 961. their rules at the trial of lord Somers 966. their power 969. and answer to the votes of the commons 971. address of 1007. a second concerning the conduct of the French king 1008. protest of, against a new oath 1019
———, of the regency, their inconsistent conduct 663. protest of, against a new India company 775
Lorrain, duke of, his death 202. an account of him 870
Lothain, earl of, his motion 90. and farther proposal 91
Lottery bill, the first 477
Louvois, Mr. his resentment, projects and death 283
Lovel, Sir Salathiel, observation of 419
Lowick, a plotter, trial of 647, 648. and execution 649
Lowther, Sir John, his speech to the king, and answer thereto, n. 187. promoted 192. his resignation 494. and made a peer 659. see Lonsdale
Ludlow, cafe of, n. 174
Lundie, colonel, charge against him, n. 134, 135
Lundy, the treachery of 86. taken prisoner, n. ibid.
Lunenburgh, princes of, the politic behaviour of 277
Lunt, an Irishman, first informer in the Lancashire plot 523. account of 527. mistaken in the names of the prisoners 530
Lutterel, colonel, his cruelty, n. 121. and speech 123
Luxemburgh, duke of, his policy, and saying in praise of the Dutch foot 254. his great skill in the art of war 279. falls on the rear of the allies, and ends the campaign with glory 280. prevents king William's passing the Scheld 519. his death 582

M.

MACARTY, general, his desire of death 127
Macclesfield, earl of, his errand to Hanover 925
Macdonald, denied the oaths 535. barbarously killed 534
Mace, a debate concerning it 690
Mackenzy, Roderick, escape of 624
Magazine at Givet, burnt by the allies 656
Magna Charta, the new one, blamed, n. 55
Malmsbury, burgesses of, ordered into custody 1014. set at liberty 1015
Maloes, St. bombarded by the English 483, 590
Manchester, lord, his insignificancy, and complaint 819 his speech to the French king 823. his remarks and letters to lord Jersey 803. an account of his conference with M. de Torcy 875, 876. another conference about the Spanish succession 877. his reflections on the French memorial to the Dutch 879. his letters to Vernon upon the death of the duke of Gloucester 886. his account of the Scotch address to king James 897. and letter to Mr. Vernon of the state of the Empire 900. his conference with Mr. de Torcy 906. another concerning the parliament 910. his representation of the behaviour of the French court, and opinion thereupon 928, 929. his letter to Mr. Vernon 987. his opinion of the French court, and it's poverty 992. recalled 993
Manifesto against France, &c. 725. with remarks upon it 726
Manly, Mr. a member, sent to the Tower 689
Marchmont, earl of, made lord chancellor of Scotland 788. ascribes the misfortunes of Scotland to his countrymen 895, n. ibid
Marlborough, dutchess of, her relation of princess Ann 159. her charge against king William 796
———, earl of, his expedition to Ireland 242. and success there 243. disgrac'd, and the reasons why 329. his sharp retort 994. his account of the king's death 1023
Marriot, Reginald, his evidence 778
Marsaglia, battle of 451
Mary, princess of Orange, behaviour of 42. arrives in England and is censur'd 53. crown'd queen 71. made regent during the king's absence 200. sends orders to Torrington to fight the French 226. her conduct and behaviour 228 requires her sister to discard lady Marlborough 330, n. ibid. behav'd coldly to her sister 331. her generosity to the failors 361. is taken ill 435. her character and death 539
Massacre of Glencoe in Scotland 332 to 334
Meese, admiral, exploits of 743
Meesters, Mr. a Dutchman, machines of 521. censur'd 590
Melfort, lord, his letter to his brother intercepted, n. 915, 916. disgrac'd and sent to Angiers 918
Methuen, Mr. his letter to lord Manchester 985
Melvil, lord, made secretary, his character 99. made head of the Scotish affairs 212
Members of parliament retire 61
Memorials of the Danish minister concerning a peace with France 482. a joint one to the emperor by the English and Dutch 721. a very remarkable one, n. 912, 953
Mentz, siege of 160. reduc'd 161
Merchant smugglers, proceeded against and fled 781, 782
———, of London, complaints of 177, 361. and hardships for want of convoy 455. loss of, and expences 461. remonstrance of, to the queen 464. and reply to the East India company 487
Meredith, Mr. precaution of 947
Middleton, lord, character of, and his journey to France 418
Militia neglected, of bad consequences to the subject 1024
Ministers, Scotish, cited before the council 107. English, conduct of, accused 465. Italians, sense of the partition treaty 861 ———, their advantage and superior skill, whence deriv'd 907. new, their disposition 925
Ministry, an alteration of 814
Miscarriages at sea, inquir'd into by parliament 469 to 472
Misunderstanding between London and Madrid, the reasons of 661. and reasons of, against passing a new charter to the East India company, n. 989
Mogul's phirmaund, or refcript to his governor in favour of the English 317
Molino, the Venetian general, defeats the Turks 585
Money, brass, coin'd 119. forced upon the protestants, n. 120. very scarce in France 992
Monkton, Mr. his bold opposition and reply 914
Mons befieged by the French king 266. surrender'd 267
Montague, Mr. chancellor of the exchequer, first undertaker to rectify the coin 614. a panegyrick upon him 680. a vote passed in his favour 772. his character 784 to 786. resigns 827. expoles himself thro' zeal for the king 836. made a lord 891, n. ibid.
Montgomery, Sir James, his cabal and disappearance 187. his cunning and double behaviour 210. receives final instructions from king James 213. his apparent perfidy and treachery to his allies 214. persuricates and abfconds, and is abhorr'd by the king 215. his policy and death 216, n. ibid. his several reflections against king William, publish'd 581, 582. makes his escape 405
Mountmellian, taken by the French 286
Mocenigo, doge of Venice, dies, and names a successor 514
Mortality in the English camp 150
Mosques, two particular ones 853

Motives for regulating grievances 77
Mountjoy sent to king James from Ireland 14. thrown into the bastile 16
Murmur, a strange one 5
Murray, lord, betray'd, and deserted by his men 108. made earl of Tullibardine 677
Muscovites conquer the Tartars 757
Musgrave, a member, character of 414. n. 891
———, earl of, his letter to Dr. Tillotson, n. 137. and speech on the place bill, n. 407, 408
Mustapha, the sultan, conduct of 585
Mutiny and desertion bill, rise of 65
Mutiny in the army 64. suppressed 65

N.

NAMUR, invested by the French 362. and taken 365. besieged by the English 593, 598
Nantes, edict of, revoked by the king of France 815
Narrative of the massacre of Glencoe 571 to 578
Narva, battle of 889
Nation English, character of, 937. in a great ferment, 1000
Navy, its bad state and condition 473, 474. n. sib. conduct of, censur'd 747. debt of 771
Neal, Mr. project of 477
Neerwynden, or Landen, battle of 440
Neglect of the English at sea 209. and in fitting out the navy 455
Nevil, admiral, his expedition and orders 719. his reply to Trumbal 721. his misfortunes and complaint 742. refused admittance into the harbour of Havanna 744. his resentment and death 745
Newfoundland, several settlements at, destroyed by the French 665. loss of, laid before the parliament 716
Newton, sir Isaac, his motion 910
Nice, city of, taken by the French 268
Noailles, duke of, his conquests in Catalonia 505
Noland, a description of 892
Non-jurors, whence called, 166. taxed double 175
Normanby, marquis of, protested against, n. 567
Norris, capt. his misconduct 746
North, sir Dudley, his remedies of the coin 566
Nottingham, earl of, motion of, 48. his hint, 77. blam'd by the commons 303. reproach'd by the public and dismissed 465. made chairman of the committee to state facts relating to the partition treaty 930. his motion 1021

O.

OAth of allegiance, and others 51
Oath-bill, progress of, 68, n. ib.
Obryan, seized, as a plotter, 824. n. ib.
Observation, a remarkable one 813. some necessary ones upon the Swedish treaty 863
Offices, public, kept in awe 1010
Officers of excise, forbid to meddle in elections 480, of the excise and customs, not to sit in the house of commons 842
Oldmixon, his remarks on the legion-letter 953
Oldys, Dr. case of, and opinion 423
Opinion of the leading men of Oxford concerning king William 66
Oppositions, two in parliament, 66
Order, from the earl-marshal concerning footmen 1004
Orders, concerning the massacre of Glencoe to col. Leving stone 572. to Hill, governor of Fort-william, and to col. Hamilton 573. most inhuman to Glenlyon 576. to lord Manchester at the French court 876. relating to the earl of Orford 950
Ordnance estimates 1009
Ordinances, published relating to the army and navy 10. to number the protestants 133
Orford, earl of, squabbles with Rooke 749. his character 754, 780. his accounts of the navy examined 811. his strange behaviour when dismissed from his employments 814. impeached 943. his answer to the articles of impeachment 954

P.

PAmphlets, censured and burnt 681
Paper, a printed one, a curious piece, n 513, to 544. papers, seized in the hands of lord Preston, n. 254 to 257. an officious one of the Londoners to their members 678
Papists, cruelty of, 121. seize the protestant churches 122. excluded from succeeding to the crown, 131. to depart from London 225, 348
Pardon, a general one, 78
Park, Daniel, esq; taken into custody 1014
Parker, col. imprisoned and escapes 523
Parkhurst and Patchal imprison'd 926. why 974
Parliament, dismissed without a speech 853. Scotch, a sudden adjournment of 895. kept often in the dark 907. meet in a bad humour 908. dissolution of, purchased 1000
Parliaments, the end and design of them, n. 787
Partition-treaty, an abstract of 798. resented by the Spanish court 803. n. ibid.
Party, a new one, their creed 925
Party-rage described, with remarks thereupon, 1003
Patents, new, of the East India company 317
Paterson, William, first projector of the bank, 478. ungratefully rewarded 481. his project in favour of Scotland 577. ascribed to foreigners 578
Paterson, Mr. his unguarded expression, n. 816
Pauncefort, his two brothers committed to the Tower 545
Payne Nevil, put to the torture 215. and imprison'd for corresponding with king James 427
Peace, between the emperor and France solicited by the pope, 432. proclaimed 756
Peers, Scotch, advice of, 18
Pembroke, earl of, made the head of the admiralty board 926
Pendergrafs, his speech to the lord Portland 627. the instrument of saving the king's life 628. his delicacy of sentiment 630
Perjury, no sin, 211
Perkins, sir Wm. his trial, defence, and execution 653 to 645. abolved at Tyburn by three non juring priests 646
Persons obnoxious, incapacitated 103. suspected, seized; also their arms and horses 348
Peterborough, earl of, censured, 1014
Petitions of silk-weavers, and against col. Copley 146. of the common-council of London 251. an humble one in the name of king James's adherents 261. of the merchants and others for a free trade to the East Indies 486. n. 488. from Royston against the soldiers 642
Phipps, sir Wm. his adventure and success 244
Picture of k. William by Bp Burnet 165
Pierce de Gaveston, character of n 828
Place-bill, set on foot and rejected 406, 407, 475
Places and preferments, disposition of, 58, 59. publicly sold, 312
Plate, the use of, prohibited, 622. n. ib.
Plot, discover'd, 254
Pointis, admiral, his escape, 746
Poland, dissentions in, 827. king of, his impolitic behaviour, 994
Polish diet, its constitution, 583
Poll-tax, granted, 128. a quarterly one 314
Pollexfen, lord chief justice, his reply 257
Pope, a new one made 888. his mediation rejected 907
Porter, a plotter, his disposition 635. and character 635. his second deposition 636, reflected upon by Burnet 641
Portland, earl of, king of Scotland, in effect, 578. his expedient 630. receives the garter for his policy 716. out of favour 766. his embassy to France, an account of 783. the sole minister 793. a strange account of, 797. his apprehensions, and why, 931. n. ib. impeach'd by the commons 940
Port-Royal in Jamaica, destroyed by an earthquake n. 388
Portugal, the ambitious conduct of 907
Powel, baron, opinion of 422
Power of restraining trade, not in the crown 491
Powle, Mr. speaker, his harangue 27. and speech upon the poll-bill 141. on the close of the sessions 146
Preamble, a remarkable one 185
Precedent, a protestant one, n. 39
Preferments at court 994
Prelacy, in Scotland, abolish'd 102
Preliminaries, offered by France 722
Presbytery, established in Scotland 216
Preston, lord, seized for a plot against the king and queen 254. arraigned 257. tried and found guilty 258. his behaviour at the prospect of death 262
P. Prince of Wales, acknowledged by Spain 793. attainted by parliament 1010
Pretenders, several to the crown of Poland 736
Price, Mr his bold speech 6 9
Priests, three censured for absolving two conspirators at Tyburn 646
Prince, German, their first demand 875
Prior, Matt. exclamation of 828. his account of the heats of the house of commons 853. promoted, with his account of state affairs 891
Privateers, French, destroy the trade of the English 100
Privileges of the lords and commons n. 962
Proceedings of parliament relating to lord Nottingham and admiral Russel 597. against presting for the land-service 400. on the East India trade 411. on the deficient funds 684. of the commissioners for inspecting the Irish forfeitures 835. to 841. at the sessions at Maidstone, remarkable 946
Proclamation preceding lord Somers's trial 968. a particular one 909
Proclamations, form of, n. 56. to suppress the rebellion 65. against libels 272. concerning sailors in the coal-trade, ibid. to forbid all persons to go out of the kingdom of Scotland &c. 276. several relating to the Irish papists, and better government of that kingdom 295. concerning enlisting sailors 346. against libellers and highwaymen 383. for a thanksgiving 461. for apprehending the conspirators 633.
Projects for a new settlement, 29 to 34
Promotions, and alterations at court 891
Proposals of peace said to be made by France 533. a proper one concerning public funds rejected and why 620. of several powers at war 732
Protest, a warm, alarming one 194. another 196. of the lords, against a foreign commander 395. two, upon clipp'd money 618
Protests against taking the test-oath, n. 68. of the lords, against two bills being tack'd together 851, 852. of sixteen lords against the partition-treaty 930. of twenty three against sending their address to the house of commons 932, 933
Protestants in Ireland, outed of their estates 119. goods and money 120. n. ibid. sufferings of, 121, n. ibid. denied meeting in their churches, or elsewhere 123. cruelly persecuted 125, 126. in the empire, the general declaration of 760. and conduct 761
Prussia, king of, how address'd 887. coronation of, a very strange and extraordinary one 888. his royalty protested against, ibid.

Q.

QUAKERS, a bill passed in their favour 1021
Queen of Spain dies, drums silenced thereupon 154. her pretences and scheme 801.
Queen-regent attainted by the lords 1016
Queensbury, duke of, the king's commissioner in Scotland 895. his speech to, and adjournment of the parliament 896. honoured with the garter 899.
Queries concerning the succession 39. sent to M. de Torcy by the imperial minister at Vienna 861. of the whigs and tories 1001, 1002
Question, a notable one, started concerning the parliament, upon the death of Mary, n. 542 to 544
Quiroede, the Spanish minister, his memorial to the states 904, 905
Quotas of the confederates to carry on the war 907
Quotations from a pamphlet call'd, Remarks on the revolution, n. 422

R.

RAMSAY, Mr. case of, n. 275
Ranulphus, bishop of Durham, his character, n. 828
Reasons for crowning the prince and princess of Orange, n. 50, 51
Rebenac de, Mr. his remarkable speech to the pope 339. with his answer 340
Recoinage, arguments for and against it 614. voted 616
Reflections on the dissolution of parliament 188, 189. on king James and his government 582 on the unanimous vote 911
Regulations made by the justices in Ireland 242
Rejoicings, public, in France, upon a false rumour 219, n. ibid.
Remarks on the duke of Leed's speech to the commons 557. one worthy observation 871. on the charge and reply of the lords, Orford and Somers 959
Remonstrance of the Irish to continue the act of settlement, n. 111 to 114. a strong one on the ſtate of the fleet, and hardſhips of the ſailors, n. 563, 564

Renet Halary, why naturaliz'd 782
Repeal act in Ireland, put in force 114
Reply to the imperial general at Bon 936, 937
Reports of grievances 136, 137. concerning the orphan's bill 547
Reresby, ſir John, his account of the times 63, 64
Reſolutions of the houſe of commons concerning the trade to the Eaſt-Indies 522. concerning the place-bill 475, 476
Republic, a temporary one 29
Reſolutions of parliament relating to the ſucceſſion 921, 922. of the houſe of commons, concerning their privileges 1015
Reſumptions not lik'd at court 940
Richardſon, the keeper of Newgate, ordered to be proſecuted 174
Robbers, how call'd 119
Rocheſter, lord, character of, 165. motion of 252. his character and credit with the queen 465. to introduce the tories into the king's ſervice 890, n. ibid.
Roman catholicks excluded from the ſucceſſion 37
Rook, admiral, burns twelve French ſhips at La Hogue 357. his report 359. conduct of, and precaution 459, made admiral 601. compar'd with Ruſſel 661. his ſcheme to attack the French 663. examin'd by the parliament 715. his ſquabble with lord Orford 749. ſuſpects the fallacy of the Danes, and reply to the king of Sweden 868.
Rookwood, a plotter, trial of 627
Rumours propagated to create diſturbances 768
Roſen de Courade, his cruel orders 125
Roſs, lord, betrays his companions 214. denies all again, and is impriſoned 215
Ruſſel, lord, made admiral in chief 273. examined 312. angry with the government 352. his propoſal rejected 353. cenſured and vindicated 358. complained of by the miniſtry 501. diſmiſſed from the navy 414. reſtor'd to the command at ſea 466. rewarded by the king 473. orders ſome French merchantmen to be deſtroy'd 500. his remonſtrance of the Spaniſh affairs 507. takes all, and tranſfers the command to admiral Aylmer 508. his character 512. promotion and conduct of 587. his remonſtrance to Spain 588. returns diſſatisfied 589. why coldly receiv'd 610. made earl of Oxford 719. See Oxford
Ruth, Mr. his ſpeech to the Iriſh army 299. kill'd 300

S.

SAcheverel, Mr. champion for the whigs, on the corporation-bill 182, 183
Sailors, Dutch, prefer'd before the Engliſh 229. ill uſed, and ſome hang'd 473, n. ibid.
Salaries, exceeding 500l. voted to the war, dropt 383
Sancroft, archbiſhop, cenſured 27. oppoſed to Tillotſon, 533
Sarsfield, officer, his gallant refuſal 15 and note 3
Savoy, duke of, betray'd by a monk, n. 205. his difficulties 206. declares againſt France 237. defeated by the French at the battle of Staffarda 238. taken by the French 231. his firmneſs and fidelity 340. accuſed of betraying the allies 378. his conduct and proteſt 580. cenſur'd 588. crown'd king of Poland 750. his myſterious, and anſwer to M. Chamlart, the French general 668. his different letters to different courts 670. offers made him by the emperor in oppoſition to France 671. ſigns a treaty with France, with an account of his unprecedented treachery 672, n. ibid. and 673. his caſe and conduct 871, 872. a ſhort turn of 875. his proteſt againſt the ſucceſſion-bill 924. takes the party of France and Spain 925
Sawyer, ſir Robert, expell'd 178
Saxony, elector of, dies 289
Saying of a Frenchman, a very remarkable one 795. another concerning the houſe of commons 1012
Schlick, count, propoſitions of, to the elector of Cologne 936
Scio, an iſland ſurrender'd to the Venetians 515
Schoening, general, ſeiz'd in Bohemia 372
Schomberg, duke of, ſent to Ireland 133. receives an annual penſion, and compliments of the houſe of commons 134, n. ibid. his advice over-rul'd 147. his honeſt intentions, and hazard of his perſon 148. ſends a meſſage to the duke of Berwick which prevail'd; and declines an engagement 149. oppoſes the king's opinion, and diſguſted 219. kill'd by his own men 221. his character, n. 223.
Schomberg, M. his letter to lord Mancheſter n. 987
Schonenburg, M. the Dutch envoy, character of 610. odious to the Spaniſh court 611. honour'd by king William 801
Schools given to papiſts 121
Scotland, eſtates of, their letters to king William 93. and reſolve 94. ſettle the crown upon king William and queen Mary 96. their inſtrument of government, n. 90, 97. and appeal to the publick, n. 104. remonſtrance of, to the king 105. diviſions among them 211. parliament of, how called, and its proceedings 426. proceedings of, in relation to trade 789
Scots, parliament of, their addreſs to the king 790 diſregarded by the king 824. defence of, in abdicating Darien 846, 847. the national addreſs of 849. complain'd of 894. aſſociation of, and diſgrace 897. the contents of their addreſs, with a vote contradictory to it 898
Scruples about the oath of allegiance 165
Seamen, reduction of 972
Secret-ſervice money, very prevalent 472, n. ibid.
Sedley, ſir Charles, ſpeech of, n. 194.
Servants, and day-labourers, taxed 1009
Seymour, ſir Edward, receives the thanks of the houſe of commons 926
Shales, John, accuſed by the commons 176, n. ibid.
Sherlock, Dr. expreſſion of 21. the firſt nonjuror to take the oaths 230, n. ibid. expoſed by the deprived biſhops, with a review of his conduct 270, n. ibid.
Ships, two large Engliſh ones loſt in a ſtorm 294. ſeveral taken by the French 592. ſeveral Dutch ſhips taken and burnt by the French 665
Shovel, ſir Cloudeſly, takes king James's frigates in his ſight 217
Showers, ſir Bartholomew, his obſervation, n. 963
Shrewſbury, earl of, reſigns the ſeal with agitation of mind 198. declines entering upon the miniſtry 465. accepts the ſeals 466. honoured with the garter, and made a duke 494. letter concerning Smith, n. 713, 714. his reaſons for reſigning his poſts 814. made lord chamberlain 827. reſignation of 856. his journey to France, and other remarks upon him 891, n. ibid.
Siege of London-derry raiſed 126
Sligoe taken by the Iriſh 149
Skirmiſh in Ireland, a ſharp one 297.
Slone, M. his narrative 401
Smith, a ſpy, his memours, and confutation to Burnet's account of the plot 710. introduced to the king 712. receives preſents from the court, with other ſtrange circumſtances 713, n. ibid. 714
Soldiers quartered at public houſes 11, n. ibid.
Preſent, treachery of, diſcovered 150. Engliſh and Danith, plunder the inhabitants 242. diſbanded, the demand of 926. voted for the aſſiſtance of the Dutch 927
Solicitor, office of, unneceſſary 975
Solmes, count, behaviour of 366. cenſured by the houſe of commons 393
Somers, lord, his ſtrong reply concerning the legality of the convention 196. made lord-chancellor 719. his character 784. his letter to the king, upon the ſucceſſion to the kingdom of Spain 796, 797. complained of by the parliament 843. cenſured 842. an account of his diſgrace, and character 854. impeached 942. his anſwer the articles of impeachment 957 to 959. acquitted by the lords 968
Spain, low ſtate of 153, n. ibid. queen of, conveyed by a Britiſh ſquadron 208. conduct of, vindicated 496. king of, his preſent to admiral Ruſſel 566
Sophia, princeſs of Hanover, her letter concerning king James 991
Spain, anſwer of, to a French memorial, remonſtrance of, againſt the treaty of partition 819. council of the revolution 873
Spain, queen mother of, her death and character 665
Spain, king of, ſigns a will in favour of the emperor 173. ſigns another in favour of France 874, his death 875, n. ibid. his acceſſion to the throne, not notified at the Engliſh court 902. the regency of Spain, French all over, and the reaſons for its being ſo, with their requeſt to the French 902, 903. his letter of notification ſent to England 938. denies admittance to the Engliſh and Dutch ſhips into his ports 986. court of, follow the French faſhions, and its power 987. indecent behaviour to king William 995
Spain, queen of, her diſcreet conduct 874
Spaniards, exemplary juſtice of 155. worſted by the French in Catalonia 505. deſtroy the French at Saragoſa, with fire and ſword 506. extravagant demands of 508. worſted by the French 665
Spaniſh ſucceſſion coveted by ſeveral 724
Speaker of the houſe of commons, his ſpeech to the king 977
Speech, an extraordinary one, n. 34. of a lord, without doors, n. 40, 41. a remarkable one 95, 96. of Count de la Tour to king William, n. 263. of ſir John Knights, printed, and burnt by the hangman 492. a notable one, from a ſcarce pamphlet 893, 894
Spice iſland, in India, loſt to the Dutch 318, n. ibid.
Sprat, biſhop, clears himſelf 1371 queſtions the king's commiſſion 168
Standard for money, arguments for, and againſt raiſing it 615
Standiſh, Mr. abſconds from the anger of the court 560
Stanhope, Mr. his exulting letter 861. his remarks on a particular viſit at the Hague 887. his letter to ſecretary Hedges 949, 950
Stamp-office erected 481
States-general incenſed highly 228. the anſwer of, to king William's ſpeech 978. and to m. d'Avaux's memorial 981, 982
Statues of the king and queen, order'd to be put up in the Royal Exchange 542
Stephens, beadle, evidence of 420
Stephens, meſſenger, his inſolent anſwer 421
Stephens, Mr. his ſermons cenſur'd by the commons n. 853, 854
Stock, nominal increaſe of 1024
Strafford, earl of, attainted 118
Subordination, three inſtances of 526
Subſidies, the firſt demand of German princes 870
Sunderland, earl of, moſt in credit with the king 465. procures a reconciliation between the king and princeſs Ann 541. his timorouſneſs 622. his character and promotion 719. a panegyrick upon him 766. blam'd as the inſtrument of a ſtanding army 767. reſigns 770.
Supply for the army and navy, voted 194
Supplies voted 682. how apply'd 777
Sweden, mediation of, accepted by the allies 722. king of, dies 724. demands ſuccours againſt the Danes 862. conduct of its embaſſy 864. demurs to the partition-treaty 869. king of, his conduct cenſured 893 904
Sweetman, caſe of 335
Struggle of parties, about the ſucceſſion 892

T.

TAALE, the prieſt, ſets aſide the evidence of Lunt 530
Tallard, count, his arrival in England, and interview with king William 883. his cold diſmiſſion, and conduct 906
Talmarſh, general, wounded before Brest, 503. his character and death, 604
Tankerville, lord, made lord privy-ſeal, 891
Tarbat, lord, his great power, 211
Tax, upon chimneys in Scotland, 216
Taxes, novelties, 1023
Temple, Sir William blamed, 15. n. ib.
——, ſir Richard, his memorable ſpeech, 707, 708
Tenilon, Dr. made archbiſhop, 539
Thankſgiving day miſapplied 38. for the king's preſervation, 633
Throne, declared vacant, 50
Tillotſon, Dr. eſteem'd moſt by the king, 769. his death and character, 535. compared to the vicar of Bray, n. 536. a further character, n. 537. his allies honour'd with titles, 538
Tyrrel, Mr. robbed by capt. Baker and others, 335

Tilly, his boasting, &c. 717
Titles, bestowed on the nobility. n. 71
Toland, Mr. his remarks upon the succession-bill 922
Tories, their end, 173. and complaints of the whig-party, 184. taken into favour by the king, 890. n. ib. their ascendancy at court, 191. on their good behaviour, 925, the charges against them by the whigs, 1000, 1001. contest of, with the whigs, 1018, 1019
Torrington, lord, his judgment at sea, and cautious procedure, 220. sent to the Tower 229. tried and acquitted, having vindicated his conduct, yet forbid the king's presence 249
Tourville, de Mr. French admiral, exploits of, and personal hazard 461
Trade, a council of, by parliamentary authority, attempted, 624. a private one, the consequence of. 774
Tradition, a remarkable one, 1020
Trant, Sir Patrick, answer of, n. 121
Treaties, between the princes of Zell and Hanover, and the emperor and the king of England, 344. an accommodation between the king of Denmark and the princes of Lunenburgh, 448. between France and the States, 754. between the Imperialists, Poles, Turks, &c. 800. a new one between England, France and Holland, an abstract of, 857. how called, 859. between Sweden and the maritime powers, 862. of Travendale, an account of, 868, 869. a particular one between the emperor and the elector of Brandenburgh, 887. between the kings of France, Spain, and the elector of Bavaria, the contents of, n. 899 the partition-treaty universally odious, 908. a subsidiary one with Denmark, n. 984. of the court of Portugal with France and Spain, its articles n. 986. between England, Holland, and the emperor, abstract of, 988, 989. a subsidiary one, with Prussia, 997
Treby, lord chief justice, surpasses Jefferies, 421. his charge against Cooke. 632
Trenchard, secretary, censured, and escapes unpunish'd 472. accused of subornation, 523. dies 568
——, Mr. his arguments against a standing army 763, 764. examination of, 838, 839
Trevor, Sir John, chose speaker, his character and practice 191. accused of corruption and expelled 547
Triennial bill, arguments thereupon, passed by the lords, 409. and commons. but rejected by the king, 410. preamble of, 534. passed, 535
Triumvirate in power, the characters of, 784
Troops, Dutch, enter Juliers by force, 995
Trumble, Sir Wm. removed, and why, 767
Trustees, Irish. answer of to the house of commons, 976. attend the parliament in England 1011. their conduct approved of 1013
Turks. beaten in three several actions, 162. defeated by the Imperialists 292. resolved to continue the war 295. attack the Imperialists and are obliged to retire 513. worsted by the Poles near the bank of the Neister 514. routed by the Imperialists 757
Tweedale, marquis of, his speed, 596
Tyrconnel, earl of, his oath concerning France 14. throws off the mask 16. rewarded by the papists 117. dies at Limeric 301
Tythes, of the papists given to the popish priests 118

V

Vandemont, prince, his prudent retreat applauded by king William, 597
Van Keppel, raised to honour 766
Venality, prevalent among the princes taken into the pay of the confederates 993
Venetians, surprised by the Turks 585. prudence of remarkable, 907
Vernon, Mr. evidence of, in Fenwick's trial 704. made secretary 767. not in the regency during the king's absence 856. his letter to lord Manchester concerning the Spanish succession 924. his sensible behaviour upon the protest of the duke of Savoy 924. his well grounded suggestion 934. and comment on supplies granted 945.
Vesuvius, a mountain, irruptions of, n. 516
Veterani, general, defeated and slain 585
Victuallers of the Tower-hamlets, the case of. 778
Villeroy, marshal, promotion of, 582, 596, 597. his letter to the governor of Brussels 603. pulled by the imperialists 983
Villiers, col. complained of 716. created earl of Jersey, and made secretary of state 814. see Jersey.
Union-bill approved of 71
Union between France and Spain prejudicial to England 900
Volunteer betrayers, who, 697
Votes against papists 129. an unanimous one to stand by the king 921
Urgel in Catalonia, reduced by the French 285

W.

Walcourt, action at, 159
Waldeck, prince, outwitted by the French general 234
Walker, bravery of 86. rewarded for his valour 126. obtains a grant for the widows and orphans of Londonderry, 177. killed at the battle of the Boyne, n. 223
Walpole, Robert Mr. made first a member of parliament 788
War by land, hurtful to England, with the reasons why, 309
Warrants, a form of, issued out to screen witnesses 527
Warrington, earl of, contends for a naval war, 309. a paper one 997
—— lord, his opinion of the duke of Monmouth, n. 143 to 145
Watch and ward kept to prevent riotous assemblies 146
Waterford, reduced by the English 240
Watson, bishop, case of 832
Ways and means to raise money 175. 682, 683 1009
Weavers of silk assemble in a tumultuous manner 146
Westminster abbey and St. Paul's to be repair'd adorn'd 685
Wharton, lord, his proposal 931
Wheeler, sir Francis, expedition of 462, 463. and unfortunate death 484
Whig and Tory, party names and their ends 173 both make court to the king 181. equally mixed 192. their grievances 415. and jealousies of each other 465
Whigs, stories of, 138. dread the power of the church 173. and oppose the bill of indemnity 175, deserted by the king, and the reasons why 186. complain of the act of grace as well as the tories 201. n. ib. their scandalous conduct 311. n. ibid. in most favour with the king 465. a modern one, the picture of 794. accused by the tories 890. n. ibid. their vindication of the king, and their court to the princess of Denmark 892. n. ibid. their reply concerning a successor 921. their political tender 946. their character, when directors, 947 reproached of 998. and mean artifice, 999. n. ibid. their triumphs 1004. carry their points against the tories 1019
Whitacre, Edward, his case 974. to be prosecuted 975
Whitehall burnt, n. 268. — 785. n. ibid
Whitney, the highwayman his plot 424
Wicket, a volunteer, his exploit 743
Widdrington-castle, plundered by the French 295
William, prince of Orange, his moderation, 4. assembles a parliament 5. accepts of the administration, with his speech thereupon 6. his policy in applies to the city for a loan 9. sends a summons to the earl of Tyrconnel 15. his speech to the Scotish peers 17. and writs of election n. 19, for the favour of the bishops, with his order to restrain the press 20. his letter to the parliament 28. his mysterious behaviour 42. his ambition, jealousy, and artifice 43. his acknowledgment for the crown 56. proclaim'd king ibid. his speech to the parliament 60. and interview with a lady in the residence of James 64. his plausible answer to the parliament's address 65, 66 favours the dissenters 67. crowned 72. recommends a general pardon 78. a friend to the Dutch 79. declares war against France 82. dines on board at Portsmouth 87. his letter to the estates of Scotland 90. proclaimed king in Scotland, and crown'd in England 96. his scruple 98. and in real difficulties 102. his sharp speech 120. and message to parliament 135. displeased with his parliament, with some vehement expressions 138. grows unpopular, his qualities, and great condescensions 165. abolishes episcopacy in Scotland 166. his commission to the clergy 167. and message to the convocation 169. his speech to the parliament, composed by himself 171. his partiality to the Dutch censured. n. 175. his answer to the addresses of the commons, and condescending message 176. his sagacity, and desperate resolution 186. his speech to the new parliament 191. troubled at Shrewsbury's quitting the seals 198 his conduct accounted for 212. sets out for Ireland, affronts prince George, and reviews his army soon after his landing there 217, 218. wounded at the battle of the Boyne 219. marches in front to meet the enemy, and his speech to Hamilton 221. enters Dublin and sets forth a declaration of pardon 224. reduces the brass money 225. offers a pass to the foreign soldiers under the late king, and commands all papists to deliver up their arms, then besieges Limerick 240. his behaviour after raising the siege, and return to England 241. summons a parliament, and his speech to both houses, 244. angry with the earl of Torrington 249. reserves the grants of the forfeited lands, sets out for Holland and his danger at sea 253. makes a publick entry into the Hague 254. his speech to the states general and to the congress, 264. returns to England and fills up the vacant sees 268, returns to Holland, and diverts himself with hunting 276. his efforts to bring the duke of Luxemburgh to an engagement, with his narrow escape 278. leaves the army after a fruitless campaign 279 returns to England, 308. his partiality to the Dutch censured 310. his policy in regard to Scotland, and disliked in both kingdoms 332. censured for fighting orders in a hurry and without enquiry 333. and also for continuing the war against France 337. his speech to the states 342. and conduct at the taking of Namur 364. censured 366. n. ibid. returns to England and affects popularity 386. his speech to the parliament and remarks upon it 387. complained of by the clergy 415. his letter to the parliament in Scotland 426. and conduct to the Scots afterwards 429. and also at the battle of Neerwinden 445. his speech to the parliament on the miscarriages at sea 466. his gift to Sir John Guise 475. and plausible answer to the commons concerning the place-bill 476. n. ibid. arrives in Holland and assembles the army 516. his policy in passing the triennial bill 535. and behaviour on the death of the queen 541. grants great favours to procure Ann 542. his administration severely censured 550. and difficulties to screen the guilty 568. his letter to the parliament of Scotland 569. and instructions to the commander of his forces there, with an inhuman exception 571. excused by the historians of signing such orders 572. censured by others 570. his conduct dangerous, 594. and severely censured 608. his speech to the parliament 609. and answer concerning his grant to the lord Portland 620. complained of by his Scots and English subjects 622. in person two witnesses concerning the plot 630. his speech to the parliament on the discovery of the plot 631. is said to refuse Charnock's discovery of the conspirators 641. refuses to sign the bill concerning elections 657. goes to Holland 659. his arrival and speech in parliament 679. another remarkable speech, with reflections, 718, 719 his great sagacity 729. censured in the management of the navy 750. his act signed at Loo 756. and triumphal entry into London 762. and speech in favour of a standing army 765. compared with two of James's 766. his speech severely censured, 767, 768. n. ibid. disgusted, 769. and why, 770 his proceedings towards the duke of Gloucester 777. his artful speech 782. and letter to lord Galway 784. blamed 786. his letter to the Scotch parliament 788. and a secret one to the lord-chancellor, 793. disliked by Germany and Spain, and why 801. his speech to the new parliament 804. disliked by the people 805. his conduct censured and an intended speech 807. his speech on disbanding the army 10. and letter to lord Galway thereupon 808 his message to parliament about the Dutch guards, 809. his remarkable saying to Shrewsbury 814. his letter to lord Galway at his departure for Holland 815. vain of his royalty 818. and maltreats the Scots 824. his colonels to prince George and speech to the parliament 829. his answer to the remonstrance of the commons 830. his conduct vindicated 841. and letter to the council of Scotland 847. angry with and disliked by the parliament and people 853. prorogueth the parliament without a speech ibid. blamed for dismissing lord Somers 854. his letter to lord Galway, 855. goes abroad, 856. his reply concerning Denmark 863. hated by the elector of Brandenburgh 887. his unconcern at the death of the duke of Gloucester 885. visited by two electoresses 887. receives them coldly, and depart, for England 887. blamed by both Whigs and Tories, n. 890. his ceremonious visit viſit 890. diſſolves the parliament 891. an extract of his letter to the Scotch parliament 895. declines an anſwer to the Scotch addreſs, with his letter to the privy council of Scotland 896. 897. his promiſe to ſir Thomas Littleton and remarkable ſaying, 908. his ſpeech to both houſes, 908, 909. and anſwer to the addreſs of the parliament 911. his meſſage to the commons, 933. and anſwer to their addreſs 934. communicates by a meſſage the anſwer of France to the ſtates 935. his anſwer to the advice of the commons 936 acknowledges the new king of Spain 939. n.ib. his ſilence cenſured, and difficulties increaſe 945. his anſwer to the commons addreſs, and piercing judgment ibid. his meſſage to the commons, 948. thanks to the commons for their aſſurances 950. his anſwer to the addreſs of the lords 951. and artful ſpeech to both houſes 962. his anſwer to the commons addreſs 963. his ſpeech to the parliament 977. trims between the Whigs and Tories, and his ſpeech to the ſtates general 978. another at parting 995. his endeavours ineffectual, and remarkable ſaying 996. his reaſon for diſſolving the parliament and reply to the whigs 1000 and alſo his remarkable reply to Lord Somers 1005. his eloquent ſpeech to the parliament 1006. thrown from his horſe 1020. his meſſage to the parliament concerning an union with Scotland, ib his hand ſupplied by a ſtamp 1021. his preference to ſtrangers complained of 1022. his behaviour in his laſt moments, ibid. and the cauſes of his death, ibid. his character 1023.

William St. Quintin, his raſh expreſſion, 960

Williams ſir William, throws up the proſecution of the plotters, 530

Wilmot Robert, capt. his ill conduct, 591. and death 592

Wirtemburgh, duke of, defeated by the French, 374

Witneſſes, in the Lancaſhire plot, an account of, 526, 527. committed 530

Wratiſlaw, count, his memorial, 954. moves for a war with France, 995

Wright, ſir Nathan, made chancellor, 854

Y

YEomanry of Kent, their petition, and conceſſion, 947. the preſenters of it impriſoned, ibid.

Z

ZEuta, the battle of, 757

@@@HK2 `

Digitized with financial assistance from Observer Research Foundation on 17 May, 2019